[789] The distinction between white and black magic is, nevertheless, difficult to draw the present time, and one can never tell offhand if the small groups springing up nearly everywhere to protect their members against bad luck by using, in addition to remnants of traditional rites, recipes copied from magic manuals printed in France, belong to the one or the other.

[562] To come back tothe traditional associations, we must underline /the fact that/ in them there was a complete separation of the sexes, to such an extent that women were often forbidden to speak the name of a men's society or to show any kind of knowledge, even superficial, of its rites. The prohibition was less stringent for men with regard to women's rites, since the nsem, the breaking of a taboo, was for them punished by physical incapacity or illness rather than by death. /66/

A women's rite like mevungu had both a village aspect, on account of its geographical framework, the jurisdiction of its huts, and an interclan aspect as a result of exogamy. Much less is known of these women's rites than of the men's, for the very good reason that men are not allowed to know anything about them. Missionaries have condemned mevungu as obscene: I have heard that initiates who have gone through the menopause are supposed to play a male role in dances miming coition, without being able to obtain the slightest proof or the least detail (1). What is certain is that this is a rite of

[842 224]

[831]

1. A woman "chosen for her large vagina" presided, seated with legs spread apart. Each initiate would go tickle her and pull the clitoris. (J. B.)

fecundity, of fertility, and also of the hunt: an unlucky hunter may have his wife initiated so as to ward off bad luck.

have his wife initiated so as to ward off bad luck. This is not the only example of the indirect intervention of one sex in a rite of the opposite sex. Allégret points out that it is a "woman who has had bad luck fishing" who "finds the ironwood for making the war fetish." It certainly seems that he has mixed up ngil with sô, but the example remains valuable. Therefore, though traditional rites and the associations of initiates of these rites were strictly masculine or feminine, this does not altogether exclude the intervention of the opposite sex. No more can be said in our present state of knowledge (2).

> 2. The other important women's rite, ngômbô, was more especially limited to old women. The participants built a sort of basin out of four banana trunks and their leaves, in which a vegetable biañ /medicament/ was prepared that gave protection against theft. (J.B.)

Contemporary cults and associations, on the other hand, are open to both sexes, whether religious or politico-religious societies or mutual-aid associations.

The two principal politico-religious associations are the bwiti (or mbuti) and the ngôl, well described by Balandier (no. 175). They have spread to the north from Gabon and the Middle Congo and are not of Pahouin origin. They are beginning to penetrate Boulou country, where they have not been as successful as among the Fang of the south, undoubtedly because of the lesser degree of social destruction.

Bwiti was originally a "tyogo" ancestor cult, comparable to the Pahouin biéri, if one accepts Trilles. It must have first appeared among the Pahouin at the beginning of the century, probably among Pahouin families cut off from their clans and thus from the biéri and sô rites, whose significance is primarily ethnic and familial. Libreville was an important point of contact, not only between African peoples of different stock, but also with European religious systems. Modern bwiti borrows a great deal from Christianity and also from freemasonry, which was fairly widespread in Gabon before the war, especially in half-caste circles and on the periphery of principal towns. In assuming this syncretist character, bwiti appears at the same time as a nationalist—or Africanist—movement and as a progressive movement abandoning the old cults or rather modernizing them. It is the 575 object of official suspicion /67/ and rightly so, since it has free re-

668 course to human sacrifice and to physical liquidation of apostates; it has assumed the traits of a secret, often surreptitious, society. The liberal character of the administration since the 1946 reforms has aided the spread of bwiti by giving emphasis to the frankly political side of its activities: the municipal elections of 1956 were in large measure a bwiti triumph.

575 Bwiti, like the old rites, first of all works to protect its members against the beyem (bearers of évu), and its whole purely African side recalls those ancient rites. As in ngil, members have to bring in to the society the bones of their ancestors; as in prohibited /criminels/ societies, they often have to agree to the putting-to-death or mutilation of a close relative; as in the melan, they drink a brew based on narcotic herbs that enables them to "see the bwiti." There is a sacred musical instrument, the ngomi harp, sculptured figures or reliefs, especially on hut poles, recalling the biéri cult, a special language, prohibitions, etc. But the weekly ceremonies are influenced by the [177] Mass; the progressive degrees of initiation probably derive from free-masonry, as does the lodge organization; finally, the Bible is used and interpreted in a manner, often political, that can only come from Protestant influence.

575 Balandier has shown how bwiti is trying to effect a reorganization of Pahouin society in Gabon, by providing it with an ideological 668 basis, a total collective weltanschauung permitting an integration of customary forms of behavior with those resulting from the colonial situation. It would be interesting to carry his investigation into the Cameroons and into Spanish territory in order to study the reaction of very similar societies in quite different politico-administrative and economic contexts.

177 Ngôl is much more recent than bwiti and represents, perhaps, an even more striking example of politico-religious syncretism. Its 575 source is an African interpretation, a mythology based upon Free
668 French propaganda in French Equatorial Africa from 1940 to 1944. Nzela me Ngol—General de Gaulle—has become a "white" hero, sent to liberate the black man by revealing the white man's (1)

1. "Logically" one might have expected this role to be ascribed to Governor General Eboué.

177 secrets and powers (power-ngul, to be related to ngôl?). There is thus 575 a "cargo-cult" side, already observable in certain traditions and 668 pseudo traditions mentioned by Trilles and Largeau. The mixture of Christian and traditional elements in the ritual suggests bwiti, with definitely a greater ceremonial elaboration in terms of modern technology, such as representations of aircraft, submarines, etc. The liberating-hero cycle involves a putting to death (by his white brothers) and a return by parachute, plane, or submarine—there are different versions, sometimes co-existing. The society's hierarchy copies that of the /68/ administration: the master of the lodge, wearing a kepi with star, is the nzela me ngôl; he is accompanied by "presidents," "presidents in chief," "commanders," "inspectors general," "governors" and "governers general," "militiamen," doctors," etc. (1). There is a parallel female hierarchy, having, in particular, a "douane" /possibly "duenna"?—Tr./, who is supposed to have an eye on good relations between households. The political purpose is clear: the ngôl hierarchy has often replaced that recognized by the administration, sometimes with positive practical results, thus connecting up with the movement for Pahouin regrouping in its Gabonese form.

1. One of the highest officers is the "adjutant of the guard," who is in charge of the police and of carrying out legal decisions.

575 In the Cameroons this regrouping has in fact quite a different 797 aspect. It appears to be essentially a tentative social and political 668 revival of clans rather than a tribal regrouping, which is not felt to be as necessary as in Gabon. It leans especially, on the religious level, more toward disciplinary /sic/ schism than towards syncretism, at least for the time being. Some of its leaders have left or wish to leave the missions to set up national churches that would allow, for instance, polygamy, but they do not oppose Christian dogma, which they proclaim that they accept, constantly maintaining that it is rather the missionaries who have altered it, consciously or not. Here the influence of the American Presbyterian Mission is predominant. It might be said that the Cameroons clans, especially the Boulou ones, have been organized into a pattern of Presbyterian synods. The movement has been less successful among the Beti, where Catholic

575
797
669 influence is stronger, but there too one finds associations influenced by foreign types of ecclesiastical organization.

614 Since 1946 the Boulou clans have formed associations, sometimes 576 proclaimed in conformity with the law of 1901, and since 1950 gathered into the N'Tem-Kribi Tribal Union, which covers primarily Boulou, Fong, Fang, Ntoumou, and Mvaé. Each clan has a central board elected during an annual or biennial ésulan, and local boards. Membership is not automatic: members have to apply for admission, pay subscription and entrance fees. At the core of each clan association there are "societies" of young people of both sexes, of married women, of nonvoters /abstinents/, etc. The young people's "societies" are certainly the most unusual. They were formed with official approbation at the time of the abolition of forced labor recruitment. The "societies" used to bargain with local authorities over projects like road maintenance or the construction of works of art /sic/, the money received being turned into a common account and used, either to help the members meet bride-price payments or other expenses, or—particularly—to arrange festivals and banquets.

575 In large towns Pahouin migrants join de jure and de facto associ-454 ations, generally within a tribal, not a clan, framework. These associations have protective and mutual-aid purposes /69/ and are sometimes quite powerful. To these should be related the tontines or subscription societies consisting of small numbers of laborers, servants, or minor employees, who pay into a common fund the larger part of their monthly wage, each member in turn being able to draw upon the sizable sum thus collected each month. The last two institutions are in no way specifically Pahouin, nor characteristic of the Cameroons or Gabon.

6. Law and Property

a. Source

671 Pahouin law has always been complex. Formerly, it dealt primarily with the status and condition of persons /statut et de l'état des personnes/ upon which the property system was dependent. Under the influence of the economic changes brought about by colonization, the law with regard to property has become definitely independent of the law of persons, the latter being inclined to grow simpler with the dissociation of the old social and family organizations.

671 The sources of law are at present custom and the European legal system brought in from outside. Each obviously affects the other: custom is modified by the written code, while the application of the latter is bent by the influence of custom. Law is continually evolving. It is quite difficult to understand, even though often written. The decisions of courts, the minutes of reconciliation proceedings, the "covenants between natives" established by the 1920 decree, the minutes of discussion sessions (1), and even some private contracts are filed in the administrative archives, but they have only rarely been systematically collated.

1. Bulletin de la Société d'Études camerounaises, 1947, No. 19-20, p. 141, (no. 126).

671 183 The general term for custom is biyem (from yem = to know), connoting at the same time habits and modes of life and the laws that regulate them and qualify them as good or bad. Forms of behavior are rather mebo, from bo, to do. Methods and general practices are mam (sing. jam) or mejô (ajô = speech, from jô = to say), the second also meaning "business" in a litigious sense. One often hears, almost always with a tone of regret: Nnôm éyem, bimvam bi nga wô'ô bo mebo mete, melu mvus; nale a nga'ane kik, "The old ways, as our ancestors used to do things, they don't exist any longer." The whole "Pahouin regrouping" movement is characterized by this antithesis between regret for the biyem bimvam and yearning for progress. The result has been the growth of pseudo traditions attempting to connect contemporary ways with customary norms.

671 178 Since 1944 we have witnessed a trend in public opinion in favor of written codification of the law. Most clan groups /70/ have drafted their customary laws, which are revised periodically at the bisulan and which serve as legal basis for the decisions of the civil courts. It is probably too early for a final codification on a territorial scale, which would most likely involve an intertribal unification of the law (already stimulated by the colonial legal system), but periodic publication of local customary law by a committee of high-ranking men and assessors is often demanded and has already been sporadically carried out, as much by ésulan chairman as by certain government officials

b. Legal Power

692 The contemporary /legal/ organization is, except for a few details, the same in the three territories inhabited by the Pahouin. In the Cameroons and Gabon, criminal law /la justice repressive/ is in the hands of magistrates administering the French penal code; civil law is administered by first- and second-degree courts presided over by an official of administrative rank, sitting with two African assessors. There are also the so-called customary courts composed entirely of Africans and not entitled to deal with questions of personal status /état des personnes/, and a mediation system preliminary to all court action, in the jurisdiction either of chiefs or of first-degree court assessors. The system in Spanish territory is similar, but the first jurisdiction of the penal law is entrusted to officers called jefes de demarcación.

Alongside this official framework may often be noted a semi-official mechanism, sometimes tolerated, sometimes prosecuted as illegal. This consists of courts or arbitrators of the ngôl, of the bwiti or of the meyoñ, and also disciplinary committees of the missions, official or semi-official.

671 The distinction between civil and criminal was undoubtedly less sharp in former times. It did, however, exist, and an organization like the ngil dealt primarily with criminal cases, the major crime from which all others arose being that of ngbwel, sorcery. A homicide /meurtre/ might be a civil matter, when the circumstances precluded the probability of an act of sorcery; a well-planned theft, on the other hand, or even outstanding commercial acumen, could involve a capital charge.

627 Outside the ngil, law was administered in the first instance by the esa or ntol mot of the extended family or the village. This was a matter of disciplinary rather than legal power, at least so long as the ntôl's decisions concerned only his bobenyañ. When the case (étom) 628 went beyond a purely family framework, recourse was had to a judge, ntyi'i mejô, palaver-cutter, chosen within the clan from a kinship level nearer the ancestor. If several allied clans were involved, arbitrators or assessors were taken from among the mintôl not directly concerned in the suit. Finally, a diviner or magician, mvimvi'i or [791] ngengen, could be consulted, either visited in his own dwelling or into consultation.

[575] Suits between members of an association were, and often still are, conducted by an official of the association /71/.

c. Punishments

681 The scale of punishments included death, the paternal curse, putting in chains (mbok), fine, and bastinado. To these were added for women removal of the clitoris and the labia minora, injection of pimento into the vagina and public exposure, naked, with legs held apart by the mimbok /pl./ (ésamele minga).

681 783 The death sentence was carried out so as not to shed blood— which would have made purification necessary—by drowning, strangling, burial alive (the last particularly in certain cases of nsem, like incest), or by burning. If the execution had to be bloody, it was carried out by a captive—a foreigner to the clan—but, in theory, the shedding of blood always had a sacrificial character and was to be avoided on all other occasions.

The death sentence was applied for sorcery and serious minsem (breakings of taboo) such as incest or the killing of a monyañ. For other infractions, compensation was the general rule, either by retaliation or by indemnity, the latter usually being the preferred method. For instance, for a homicide /meurtre/ committed outside the clan, the mintôl arbitrators tried to make the killer's family pay blood money, either in goods or by giving a woman in compensation. To this there might have been added some sort of disciplinary corporal punishment within the killer's clan or family. If compensation was not paid, the victim's clan had recourse to retaliation upon any member of the clan or family of the guilty man: responsibility was individual within the family, collective within the clan and tribe.

A fine must be distinguished from the compensation accorded to the victim: it went, in fact, to the ntyi'i mejô, perhaps to pay for his intervention. It survives today, though illegal, to the benefit of official and semi-official assessors: it is freely called toya, from Coast English tax, to distinguish it from compensation, ngôtô = ransom, redemption.

Placing in chains applied especially to persons considered socially dangerous (it is nowadays used in remote villages for some insane), bastinado to minor crimes committed within the clan. Clitoridectomy was the punishment for adultery and minor incest. The injection of 695 pimento was rather a nkal, test or ordeal, than a punishment; it was applied especially to widows after the husband's death to discover whether or not they had been responsible. The use of ordeals, minkal, 695 was in other respects common. They were administered either by the ntyi'i mejo —esa, ntol, njoo bot, or officer of the ngil or another association—or by a diviner, mvimvi'i, sometimes a specialist in this category of bitom, palavers. The true ordeal had several forms: by a curse uttered over the ancestral grave or the bieti basket; by bitter herbs, alan; by pimento or ants; by boiling water or fire. /72/ Initiations and particularly that for ngil all involved a collective ordeal intended to ward off beyem who might have tried to push their [787] way in. In addition to the ordeal proper, the mvimvi'i could make use of various forms of divining in order to discover presumed culprits. Except for a serious crime, the culprit thus revealed was not forced to undergo an ordeal if he admitted his guilt. Physical ordeals are [671] on the decline; they are considered crimes or delicts in the Penal Code. And ordeal by oath has lost a great deal of its force. Divining remains much in use and is sometimes highly effective (1).

1. An oath may be sworn on a nzo'okak—a little elephant shield containing various medicines, equipped with a strap and worn under the arm. The nzo'okak is not an insignia of authority. Upon the death of its holder it does not pass automatically to the man who becomes head of the family but goes to the one who has a flair for magic. To leap over a nzo'okak laid on the ground means swearing that one has told the truth. The nzo'okak is a guarantee of treaties: [728] after a battle it is placed between the belligerents, who jump over it to vouch for their peaceful intentions. (J. B.)

177 Among modern punishments, fines and imprisonment are well 681 recognized by the Pahouin and have a definite intimidating power. On the other hand, the subtleties of setting up a public prosecutor /la constitution de partie civil/ are beyond many peasants, who thus lose the possibility of receiving damages that custom would have given them. Above all, the Napoleonic interpretation of crimes and delicts remains pretty well foreign to Pahouin norms, for example, in judging an insult as a mere transgression even when directed to an

177 ascending relative. These /factors/ explain the success and persis-681 tence of parallel judicial processes, which are illegal from the point of view of European law, although sometimes tolerated by the administration.

d. Delinquency

674 If the older people are to be believed, delinquency offenses used to be rare: secret societies with their ordeals and swift punishments prevented delicts by the fear they inspired. At present the jail books and the judicial statistics make it possible to gauge the dimensions of the phenomenon, but there is no proof that all delinquents are prosecuted. Some affairs never reach the ears of the law: for instance, fathers of families often deplore the immorality of their sons or their wives, whom they accuse of stealing from them, but since no complaint is lodged, these facts are not recorded.

It is usual in Africa to complain of the rise in juvenile delinquency. The figures at my disposal do show an increase:

	18 yrs.	18 - 20 yrs.	20 - 25 yrs.	25 - 30 yrs.	30 - 35 yrs.	Over 35 yrs.	Total
	Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent
1936	3	3.5	19	32	18	25	100
1946	-	10	21	35	15	14	100
1956	7	7.2	25	22	15	24	100

/73/ But this increase is not as great as might have been feared. A study of the statistics allows another conclusion: delinquency is [369] an urban phenomenon. In fact, only people following city occupations are found in the jails. In a region of primarily agricultural activity, a relatively low number of rural delinquents is remarkable. Admittedly we must recognize that in towns law enforcement is easier, also that the more Westernized townsmen do not hesitate so much to make use of the courts. Nevertheless, the differences between the delin-
674 quency rates of different occupations deserve to be pointed out, al-
463 though the figures below are, of course, only approximate. They were obtained by a study of the census returns for three towns in the southern Cameroons and by a comparison of the jail books for the same localities.

674
463

	Office-holders	Trade Employees	Traders	Butchers	Tailors	Carpenters	Masons	Chauffeurs	Mechanics	Motor Boys	Domestic	Laborers	Chiefs	Planters
Percent of Delinquents	4.8	15	7.5	4	8	5	3	13	10	23	8.3	8	0.8	0.8

Employees in trade, chauffeurs, and apprentice chauffeurs are the social groups with the lowest standard of behavior. The nature of the delicts makes it possible to be precise: in the Beti country of the Cameroons, moral delicts /delit de moeurs/(desertion of the conjugal domicile) make up 47 percent of the cases; theft and swindling, 26 percent; intentional assault and battery come far behind with 16 percent.

These figures enable us to measure the decline of the present-day family. (J.B.)

e. Land Tenure

473 According to early documents land regulations formerly were very simple. There appears to have been no rights over land: "Land belongs to whoever takes it; it has no value. It is not sold, not given as a guarantee for debt, does not enter into inheritance." There is absent not only the notion of private ownership of land but also that of collective ownership: "There is never any conflict between villages over ownership of land. . . . We often see an outside village insert itself between two groups of dwellings belonging to the selfsame Boulou village." (1) In Fang country in Gabon the situation was similar: "In the Woleu-N'Tem region, tradition is unaware of the idea of ownership even by a village." (2)

1. Report to the League of Nations, 1922.

423 2. Sautter, Bulletin d'Études centrafricaines, 1950 (no. 102).

[166] Migrations and conquests still belong to the recent past. Besides, /74/ the movement of peoples was effected without organization or authority: different clans, tribes, and peoples overlap, family by family, so that it is not possible to determine the territorial base of a collective group.

Among the Ewôndo and Eton the situation is slightly different: the clans, probably better organized, preserved a certain amount of cohesion and carried out their conquest without becoming scattered. Therefore we find that they have boundaries between villages and collective rights over land. "Once plots of land have been cleared, they are not abandoned for good. A village looks upon them as a [241] reserve." In fact population density very much limits shifting cultivation.

[178] In the past forty years customs have changed a great deal and, among these peoples where land tenure was embryonic or nonexistent, ideas are arising that approximate Western rights of ownership.

[161] Population is now pretty nearly stable. It would be quite logical for rights over crops within a fixed boundary to arise, and in this direction some development is making itself felt. In certain areas 423 anyone may still cut wood, lianas, gather wild fruits, or hunt, to 241 satisfy his personal needs, but if he makes a profit from the sale of these things, he must obtain the consent of the family /occupying/ the area in which he carries on this activity. Elsewhere, the use of certain produce even for private requirements is subject to permission or to sharing the harvest. Thus the customary principle of the free use of natural goods is being restricted, at least in certain particular cases. With increase in population comes the idea of a virtual right over uncultivated forest lands. Families consider that they alone have the right to clear the land on which they depend. Men with experience state clearly that "formerly everyone cleared forest land without asking anyone's permission. Now that the country is becoming populous, permission must be asked." In less populated cantons clearing in the great forest goes on without restriction.

In conformity with ancestral customs, the harvest belongs to the cultivators: a right over personal property rather than a right over land. Nevertheless, a tendency toward a right of land ownership is 423 241 making itself felt. Indeed, before any sowing, trees have to be cut down and the land cleared. This work has a relatively permanent effect: to clear undergrowth of ten to fifteen years is less difficult than to clear a bit of primary forest. Furthermore, the original clearer of the land is acknowledged to have rights over the fallow. Within a family, each head of a household can put back into cultivation fields which he used to work, and in such a case each wife has the right to go back to her old plot. When collective ownership is involved, the process has not been so clear. This is understandable, for when a village leaves its old site and no one remains in the neighborhood, it means that no return is expected. Therefore, abandoned sites may in general be occupied without difficulty and without explicit agreement.

But in the case of cacao plantations it is obvious that the right arising /75/ from cultivation is transformed into right over land. Right to the harvest has turned into right over the tree that bears it and over the ground in which the tree grows: the duration of a plantation justifies this transition by settling men for two or three generations.

This transition, however, has not been entirely accomplished, and some people want to insure their right over the land by planting trees upon it; and peculiar devices may be observed, such as a competitor's setting out cacao trees between those of an emigrant planter, in order to oust him.

423 609 Development /evolution/ in the direction of ownership has not yet ended. There is now a right of use, but a right of disposal has not been established. Many believe that land cannot be sold. Not, it seems, on religious /sic/ grounds, but because the collective group would /in such a case/ be definitely defrauded. In this connection the attitude toward outsiders /l'attitude des etrangers/ is indicative. In this region of inextricably mingled clans and tribes, the problem of outsiders arises constantly. Those that belong to sister tribes are looked upon almost as members of the group, but others, coming from more distant populations, follow special regulations. They must ask for land from the head of the family near which they settle: he authorizes them to clear a field for a subsistence crop, but forbids them to plant cacao trees. In fact, if making a field of maize gives right of possession to the land for a few months, the establishment of a cacao plantation would lead to long-lasting possession. There is no question of a custom connected with the owning of trees, since the older inhabitants insist that formerly

423 any stranger could plant melen palms (Elaeis guineensis) and sa 601 (Pachylobus edulis), but of a defense reflex to preserve control of a valuable crop and to ward off the wave of immigration it could attract.

An examination of forms of pawning fields leads to a similar con-423 clusion: there is far from a complete right to dispose of property.
426 The harvest rather than the land is pledged. Among the Ewondo, in fact, the creditor may harvest and dispose of the produce. "Should the harvest surpass the debt, he will turn over to the debtor part of the produce. Since the owner runs the risk of having his land go to waste, the creditor may keep it in good heart and thus increase his credit. He may be induced to keep the property for several years: in fact, he keeps it long enough to be repaid out of the harvest. However, there is no assumption that he can keep it perpetually. Here we run into what is probably an important difference between the local land tenure and our own: everything takes place as if the land were inalienable (1)." The trend is similar among the Boulou, though it must be admitted that the question of pawning land does not raise serious economic problems at present. (J.B.) /76/

1. J. Binet, Budgets familiaux dans la zone cacaoyère du Cameroun /Family Budgets in the Cacao-growing Region of the Cameroons/, L'Homme d'Outre-mer, No. 3, 1956 (no. 93).

f. Personal Property

422 This is undoubtedly the only form of property originally recognized. Much of it seems to have been collective, at least as concerns valuable possessions: the ésa was in charge of these possessions, the family patrimony which served mainly to pay the minsuba, "bride prices." There was, however, individual ownership of useful objects, men's weapons, women's gardening tools and household equipment, objects that were buried with the owner. It seems, also, that there
[83] was a sexual differentiation between the various categories of possessions: biôm beyôm were masculine, biôm beyal were feminine, a distinction to be traced not to ownership, but to use and perhaps to origin. I have already mentioned that in the bilaba the njem bilaba of the west contributed imported goods, while his eastern counterpart

422 brought produce of the locality, the system of directions very probably being ascribed to sexual categories, the northeast area, male and the southwest area, female. It would be advisable to know more about the ritual use of different tools and implements in order to throw more light on the subject. We know that the saber, fa, is essentially male, that the hunting bell tied to a dog's neck, angôñ, is essentially female, that the drum-telephone, nkul, is androgynous (though women are not allowed to use it); the rifle, ngal, is probably epicene, and the same is true for a few other objects, but we know almost nothing about the effect of this sexual differentiation upon property and its conveyance.

In any case, since the introduction of a money economy, personal property /propriété mobilière/ has become almost entirely individual. Personal property /meubles/ that remains collective is primarily so by appropriation, like the equipment of associations, the profits of their subscriptions, sometimes objects bought in common by members of a family because of their cost or function—like the sewing machines obtained from Spanish Guinea after the last war, for instance.

Personal property still involves some restrictions for women and 422 young men, although they are less and less accepted. Respectful 513 sons and submissive wives still allow their fathers and husbands to use the objects acquired by the earnings of their labor, but when they rebel the trend of the courts is increasingly in their favor. However, the obligatory aid arising from family ties still holds good, and to refuse to "lend" something to a monyañ is likely to be frowned on, which is a serious matter. Thus there survives a kind of right of collective family use working against individual /ownership of/ personal property.

g. Inheritance, Guardianship

422 These come about from death or disappearance. A paternal curse
578 did not entail loss of civil rights, but the possessions left behind by an accursed son who quit his village were confiscated and divided among his brothers.

The disposal of possessions left by a dead man, called élik from 428 lik = to leave, took place at the end of the period of mourning, 765 meyep, perhaps /77/ a mbu, six months after death. This waiting period tends to become shorter and in towns usually lasts a month, a long enough interval in which to inform and call together the eventual heirs; in villages it remains longer.

The élik includes on the debit side the family debts incurred by the de cujus, but not his purely personal debts, which die with him; the distinction is sometimes hard to make and gives rise to suits between the heirs and creditors of the dead man. The debit side also includes the funeral costs, especially compensation to the diviner called in to determine the cause of death (but the expenses of the final illness are considered to be a personal debt). Assets cover all real and personal property that belonged to the deceased, including his wives. The settlement, akap = distribution, is directed by the nkap élik, distributor of the inheritance, usually a ntôl môt, a kinsman or affinal relative not benefiting from the inheritance and appointed either by the de cujus or by the heirs themselves. Inheritances are more important now than they used to be, not only because there are more, and a greater variety of, objects to be distributed but also because the custom is dying out of destroying or burying part of them during the funeral rites.

There are six degrees of possible heirs: male offspring and their male descendants; full brothers; half brothers on the father's side; paternal first cousins, bobenyam; clan nephews, hence brother's sons, bobendôm; uterine brothers, nephews, and grandsons of the clan, hence bastards, bobengon, and legitimate nephews and grandsons outside the clan, bobekal. Inheritance does not devolve by ascending order except in the complete absence of descending heirs.

The eldest of the heirs of the first degree called to the inheritance, ntôl mon, is privileged; he is the replacement, njian, for the dead man. To him go the hut, the family jewelry, ancestral cult objects, especially the bieti basket, the rifle, and certain valuable possessions like bicycles, sewing machines, etc. The other possessions are divided among the other heirs of the same degree. The njian's right of seniority is beginning to be criticized; it is gradually ceasing to apply to plantations, and now the heirs are demanding a division into portions of equal value along lines similar to those of the Civil Code.

The possessions left by a woman went in the first instance to her daughters, in their absence to her co-wives, and in their absence to her husband. With the present instability of marriage, related to the economic emancipation of women, this order of inheritance is 428 very much questioned: one often sees a woman's family trying to get hold of the inheritance on the grounds of incomplete payment of the bride price.

Oral wills are increasingly being replaced by written wills. The testator may himself kap élik, distribute the inheritance, and favor certain heirs. He cannot entirely disinherit the ntôl mon except by cursing him, unless the latter has left the village in an apparently final manner, in which case a younger brother becomes njian. /78/

Disappearance is a question of fact. When a man has stayed away for a long time without sending news, and no one knows where he is, his elders and his brothers may decide to share his possessions. This division is canceled should he return.

429 Guardianship of a minor, meba'ale or akalé (from ba'ale or kalé = to take care of, watch over) is given to a nya mòtò of a higher age grade, preferably a paternal uncle, ésa (lit., father) or paternal grandparent, émvam; in their absence it is given to an elder brother; in the absence of all these, to a senior member of the family or clan. The maternal uncle, ndomenyan, acts as a kind of deputy guardian with the duty of supervising the guardianship. A ward who is maltreated by his guardian will seek refuge with his maternal uncle.

The guardian, mba'ak mon or nkalé mon, has by virtue of his age and of their kinship tie full power over an orphan, mone nyui or mo'nyui. He cannot, however, have control of his possessions, which must be restored in full, either in kind or in /equivalent/ value, when the orphan reaches majority. In theory a guardian ought to arrange his ward's marriage at his own expense, a tradition that is dying out with the decrease in family property. When the ward grows up he may demand an accounting of the guardianship, provided that there is no insult to the guardian. A family council composed of elders, mintôl, deals with such a case.

The mba'ale mon responsible for the guardianship of a girl is the person who approves her marriage and accepts the nsuba, of which he must reserve the total for the marriage of the girl's brothers if they also are minors. Guardianship of a girl is always given to her eldest brother if he is grown at the time of the father's death; if not, she is handed over to him when he reaches majority by the mba'ale mon, if she has not been married during the brother's minority. Furthermore, even in the latter case, it falls to him to repay the nsuba should the girl be divorced after he has passed out of guardianship.

h. Contracts and Various Quasi Contracts

675 A legal obligation is atiñ, from tiñ = to tie. For a long time no distinction was made between a contract and a quasi /or implied/ contract, but, as the range of independent activity spreads, we may recognize among metiñ the genuine contract, mfañ atiñ, from fañ = to do really, on purpose, by design.

Underlying all metiñ is the idea of compensation, avutan or abutan, which might be interpreted as follows: any effect /atteint/, positive or negative, on the total legal personality of an individual through the act of another must lead to a positive or negative compensation restoring the status quo ante. In other words, whoever enriches another person, has a claim to compensation; whoever deprives another, owes compensation.

Thus arises the distinction between nsenge and avu or avuan which have sometimes been confused by being translated as "gain" or "profit." It /79/ seems that nsenge in fact referred specifically to commercial profit made outside the clan through trade, abom, to which compensation did not apply. Avu or avuan (from vu = to grow rich, to increase in wealth, with an = to grow, to increase) meant the natural increase in property, such as a harvest in relationship to the sowing /or/ the biological increase of a herd. If the avuan was made at the expense of a monyañ, compensation was called for. Nowadays the idea of avuan approximates that of interest, legitimate or illegitimate according to the case. The weakening of the old social structures at the same time tends to allow nsenge even within the clan.

431 675 The verb kuan, to sell, is merely the reciprocal form of the verb kus, to buy; thus kuan means literally, "one person's buying from another," with a now very attenuated implication of exchange. The verbs fol and folan, formerly almost synonymous with kus and kuan, have kept the sense of "exchange"; they are applied to barter, kuan and kus, to money transactions.

At the present time selling is considered to be established with delivery of the merchandise or the payment, while exchange seems to call for a simultaneous delivery of the objects exchanged.

421 675 To lend something for temporary and brief use is señ; it is not strictly speaking a contract, and the borrower may even not be under obligation, for example when he has been loaned a tool to carry out

426 a job for profit and under the supervision of the lender. To lend on 675 long terms with actual deprivation of possession of the object loaned is, on the other hand, a frequent atiñ. The same verbs mean both "to lend" and "to borrow": yôé is used for the loan-borrowing of a specific object, kôlé for something within a class of objects or of a sum of money. The thing loaned is ndôñ or ékôla, according as the case may be, or, more frequently, mvôla, which means any kind of debt or credit (mbi mvôla = creditor; mvômvôla = debtor). The borrower is required to return in good order the ndôñ and what it produces or the ékola, increased by avutan if he has profited from the loan. The borrower is responsible not only for the care but also for [672] the use that he makes of the borrowed object, the lender, however, retaining a sort of joint and several responsibility vis-à-vis third parties whom the borrower may injure by means of the borrowed object (indemnity can be claimed by the victim of an accident from the owner who has loaned his bicycle to the author of the accident), and even vis-à-vis is the borrower, if he comes to harm through the borrowed object.

From loan is derived hiring, indicated by the same word as the 487 loan of a specific object, yôé. /This is/ a recently introduced form
676 of contract, and its legal position is still vague. Like loan, hiring may lead to the giving of a pledge, éban. The éban often involved people until European legislation prohibited the pledging of persons, though it is still practised clandestinely. Today it mainly involves objects that can be returned, either to the lender or to a third person; ownership of the security may /80/ be transferred to the lender when repayment falls due, without extinguishing the debt. The pawning of ungathered harvests or even of plantations is more and more common; with plantations, however, the pledge covers rights over the produce rather than over the land itself. When a girl is pawned, the repayment of the debt, aju, is sometimes considered a sort of nsuba; as long as the debt lasts, in any case, the children of the pawned girl belong to her clan and not to that of the guaranteed creditor.

231 The contract for the loan-grazing of livestock, meyale kabat 675 (yale = to raise, make grow) may seem rather peculiar at first glance. The owner of an animal turns it over to the ñyale, who must look after it and, at the expiration of the contract, return not only the animal but any young. The lender gets rid of the care of a flock—he is often sending it away, moreover, to escape an animal plague—

231 yet takes the risk of a breach of faith on the ñyale's part. The latter 675 is supposed to return the flock intact, but as long as he tends it, he may do what he wants with it, putting it to use like a kind of credit. It is as well to point out that this kind of contract, which at present is falling into disuse, gave occasion to endless litigation.

The trade contract under its old name abom or the newer atiñ kilak 426 or atiñ akus kaka is, on the other hand, becoming more and more
675 widespread. A trader, nkuan biôm or mbi fatyélé, advances to a kilak 441 (from "clerk") cash and goods on the kilak's undertaking to provide the equivalent in a certain tonnage of cacao. The contract is set forth in a written "good for...," which represents recognition of the debt. The kilak exerts himself to collect the promised tonnage, usually by buying from planters of his clan, sometimes by subcontract with "small clerks," bone bekilak. The contract has a due date, with the usual contingencies; in the case of rising prices, the kilak may run into difficulties and not be able to furnish the promised tonnage unless planters of his family give him credit or sell to him below the price. Cacao buying is also done by commission, the agent, nlôman, (envoy), receiving a cash advance with which to buy as much cacao as possible. Both methods give rise to litigation, which is all the more common because the moneylender is usually a European or an African of another tribe, a "Gabonese" in French Equatorial Africa, a Bamiléké, mone galifis (from Coast English "Grassfield") in the Cameroons.

556 In general a commission is always possible, whether in making a 675 contract or in pleading in court. The person giving the commission 431 is called mve ngul, giver of power; the agent is called mbili ngul, possessing power. They are jointly and severally responsible.

The bilaba contract, described about (41, 77), is disappearing. There survives, however, a sort of poor man's bilaba, the meyeñ, from nneñ, guest, which allows a zesé môt, a humble man, to levy a kind of tax on the rich, minkukum, of his clan by the simple procedure of going to visit them, carrying a present /81/ which must be returned by generous hospitality and by a countergift of higher value. This is a quasi contract, sanctioned by public opinion, which is a heavy burden on people thought to be rich; it underlies the family parasitism prevalent in large towns. The reputed nkukum who tries to escape would be accused of being hard hearted, nlem ayet, which could easily lead to a charge of sorcery.

7. The Position of Women(1)

562

1. J. Binet, "Condition des femmes /The Position of Women/, " Cahiers internationaux de sociologie, 20, 1956, Presses Universitaires de France, and "Statut des femmes dans le Sud-Cameroun /Status of Women in the Southern Cameroons/, " to appear in Recueils de la Société Jean Bodin, 1956, Edit. of the Librarie Encyclopédique, Brussels.

If the older people are to be believed, the position of women according to orthodox custom was that of minors. However, there is nothing in traditional theory that justifies such a negative attitude towards women: some clans name women among their eponymous heroes, and there are legends attributing to the creator god (Zambë) a daughter in whose honor certain rites were performed. At the present time the tribal societies making an effort to revive the old clans and to revise their codes of manners and their customary laws always keep a place for women at the core of the executive /état-major/, but very often the role of women is secondary: they are dancers, singers, organizers of dances, or stewards watching over followers—in short they only carry out men's orders. Women are also sometimes associated with men in religious /confessional/ so-[575] cieties (Protestant or, more frequently, Catholic), but mostly they form separate groups, formerly so-called secret societies, today Christian devotional confraternities, which enable women to meet together, to set up a hierarchy and have leaders of their own. Women do not actually participate in the life of the community /cité/ or, better, they form a community among themselves, distinct from that of men.

In law women seem to be at a disadvantage, but it is not clear that they owe this to genuine antifeminism. In fact, no one is perfectly free in customary law; only the patriarchal head of a family [585] possesses full legal capacity. Marriage does not confer majority on a woman, and a girl possesses greater independence than does a [948] married woman. In the sexual sphere this is clear: illegitimate births involve no disgrace; a child is always welcome. If born before marriage, it belongs to the mother's family. And it is not unusual for respectable fathers to wait until a daughter has borne children before marrying her off.

562 children before marrying her off. In the economic sphere a young unmarried woman may freely undertake all sorts of commercial enterprises, whereas a married woman would need her husband's consent. Nor do divorce or widowhood, /82/ any more than marriage, emancipate a woman in theory. Escaping from her husband's guardianship, she falls back under the authority of the head of her family, but from the point of view of custom this is not a detrimental situation, since every person remains subject to his father.

Therefore the liberty women possess in managing their inheritance [459] ought not to appear an anomaly. Besides, individual savings are widespread in Africa. And the division of property into masculine and feminine allows women and girls to own objects which neither [422] husbands nor fathers may take from them. A partition of goods is the logical consequence of these assumptions.

Women theoretically have the right to dispose of the product of their labor—their harvest—but they must provide the basic foodstuffs. Only the surplus is sold, but in the majority of families when large sales take place the proceeds are divided between husband and wife. Women usually control the proceeds of day-to-day sales in a market or to passing travelers: petty amounts comprising only 10 percent of the total family budget. They may invest these profits by joining [457] a tontine (a society in which each person makes a contribution on a fixed date and of which the capital is allotted to each member in turn).

Thus the traditional means for growing rich are limited. But changing customs are allowing women to follow various occupations that will make them independent. Women engaged in trade or dressmaking, for which they pay a license, business trade employees or saleswomen, theoretically have to be authorized by their husbands, who may decide how the earnings are to be spent. In actual fact women seem to be free agents. Even in the customary courts they appear alone, unaccompanied by fathers or husbands.

423 In the sphere of land tenure the trend is the same: women are 562 acquiring a certain amount of property. With stabilization /i.e. settling down/, the growth of collective rights over cleared land or land good for tillage is quite understandable. The idea of allowing a personal right to a woman who is not truly a member of a family, but merely loaned to it, seems an aberration. This, nevertheless, is the situation among the Ewôndo, where a divorced woman

423 continues to have rights over her old garden plots and may gather the 512 harvest from them. Among the Bané and the Boulou the position of divorced women is not the same, but the tendency is so, for when fallow land is cleared, every woman goes back to the plots she used to work four or five years before, and sons may demand plots that have been cultivated by their mothers.

Cacao plantations raise other problems. A man concerned for his children's future may turn over a plantation to a wife or encourage her to make one for their son. In other cases childless women start [513] plantations as a means of providing for old age. Women with children do not have to fear, for their children will look after them. Finally, there is an even more important /83/ change appearing: a matrimonial system of community of property is developing. When a woman has collaborated with her husband to set up a plantation, she has the right upon his death to keep the usufruct. Even if her son inherits the plantation and sells the produce, it is she who collects the proceeds. This is an important development, because it is evidence of a kind of equality between spouses who are keen and efficient in harvesting the produce of the same piece of land. It furthermore shows that the [512] household is a legal reality vis-à-vis the two individuals, on the one hand, the patriarchal family, on the other. (J.B.)

Chapter 6

Principal Elements of Culture

1. Physical and Mental Characteristics

a. Anthropological Data

141 The first travelers describe the Fang as very tall, well built, and with a formidable appearance. This opinion certainly contained a good deal of subjective evaluation, because the figures given, for instance by I. Dugast, some of which are cited below, indicate simply an above-average height:

141

Tribe	Height		Cephalic Index		Trunk Index /Indice cormique/
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female
Mangisa	above average		76.7	76.3	?	?
Eton	167.8	157.9	76.2	76.4	60.8	51.0
Ewôndo	168.4	158.6	77.0	77.6	50.5	50.4
Boulou	165.4	157.6	77.8	79.2	51.2	52.2
Fang	above average		77.0	76.6	51.2	50.9

[143]

Tribe	Blood Group (in %)					Facial Index		Width/Height /Envergure s/taille/
	O	A	B	AB	Index	Male	Female	Male	Female
Mangisa	52	21.9	10.9	15.2	1.44	?	?	?	?
Eton	55.7	13.8	17.5	12.9	0.878	85.1	84.2	104.4	102.5
Ewôndo	55.5	14.1	17.4	11.5	0.885	85.7	85.6	105.3	104.0
Boulou	?	?	?	?	?	86.5	85.1	103.7	102.9
Fang	?	?	?	?	?	83.2	87.0	105.3	103.4

It is inevitable, in any case, that a population of this numerical size should present fairly obvious extreme variations, but my own observation, also subjective, thrown into relief a larger proportion of short and very short persons than of tall and very tall: interbreeding [144] with Pygmies (the Bekoé ayoñ especially) would explain this to a great extent. The Beti in the north, who have had much less contact with Pygmies, seem taller and slenderer.

142 The group as a whole may be considered mesocephalic with a /85/ [141] slight tendency to dolichocephaly (1), with not very obvious Negroid

[304 856]

1. Midwives, bebialé binga, still continue the practice of shaping newborn skulls by lengthening. On the other hand, the custom of binding babies' heads with a bark band is dying out.

facial traits, rather light chocolate brown skin, although some groups have a reddish tinge to the skin and green eyes (the Ndôñ ayoñ of [143 821] Sangmélima). Pectoral hair is common. There is fairly common albinism, some polydactylism (the subjects are supposedly sorcerers).

142 The group displays powerful shoulder girth, rather well-developed calf, pronounced arch, ungual phalanges that cannot be pulled back.

The explorers of the last century were one and all struck by the difference in physical appearance between the Pahouin and their neighbors, much less evident today, particularly to a European (the Pahouin themselves often recognize a stranger from quite a distance). It is possible that at the time of conquest the Pahouin may have had a [24] heavier meat diet than did the coastal populations or do their present-day descendants: the hippopotamus has been exterminated, and the rest of the wild fauna has been greatly reduced, while even animal breeding and rearing is on the decline.

b. Clothing, Ornaments, Body Marks

291 The traditional clothing as described by explorers hardly exists any more. One sometimes meets in remote villages the beaten fig-bark breechcloth, ɔ̂bɔ̂m, and the monkeyskin hat-wig, afɔ̂'ɔ̂lɔ̂, which was the men's everyday dress, with a wide belt of antelope skin, ases, holding a sort of sporran as well as a saber sheath. Battle dress and 292 full dress have become very rare; they included, in addition to a red-dyed ɔ̂bɔ̂m, a tailpiece /séant/ of tiger-cat skin or of drill or any animal with bright fur, fringed leggings of the same fur, and a sort of cloak made of leopard or gorilla skin with the head sometimes forming a hood; there was a headdress of beads hanging down to the shoulders or arranged in the hair, with a tuft of touraco or juggler-eagle /aigle-
411 bateleur/ feathers. Weapons consisted of the saber, fa, the dagger, otyen —both double bladed, the spear, akoñ, or rifle, ngal (the cross-bow, mfan, was more a hunting weapon, and the bow, ngale, a toy). Defensive armor included an oblong shield, ngu or éndeñ, of plaited lianas or of leather, sometimes made of an elephant ear. Even today men do not like to leave home without a weapon, at least in the 301 villages; formerly, they were always armed. Men's jewelry comprised copper bracelets and teeth necklaces—of either animal's or men's [75] teeth—chains of copper, iron, ivory, or elephant hair. Protective 293 "medicaments" mebiañ, were usually carried in an antelope horn (Cephalophus sylvicultrix), nla' zip, hung around the neck or wrist on a strip of leather or snakeskin—a practice that still survives. The 292 ceremonial costumes for the different rites /86/ included masks, mantles of dried grass, beads, or cowries.

301 Women wore only a sort of double apron of grass or leaves, azem [291] or abui, fastened to a belt of cylindrical steatite beads, nsanga; bracelets, mekom, of ivory or copper shaped like spools; ankle chains, bibat, of cast copper, very heavy; and an enormous necklace of cast copper, nkembé, which was put on a little girl when she entered her [764] affinal household and which could not be removed until after death, by cutting apart the body or melting the necklace or awaiting decomposition. All this jewelry belonged to, and remained in, the husband's [422] family, even in case of divorce; the ésa was the person who distributed it among his wives and daughters-in-law. Flat bracelets were made of 306 "neptunes" or "benares" /?/ imported from the coast; later on they made, and still make, rings and bracelets from cartridge cases and telegraph wire. But the origin of the cast minkembé /plural/ is still a mystery; the technique of metal casting is unknown or forgotten; placer or lode copper is very rare, not only in the present Pahouin [325] habitat but also where they seem to have come from. Furthermore, these very old necklaces resist corrosion and have a very pale patina indicating some kind of alloy; moreover, the nearest workers in bronze the Bamum, do not make this kind of necklace.

291 Men's dress at the present time is usually of the European type, [177] from shorts and sports shirt to the surplus American cap; those who wear shoes have European footwear, leather or canvas according to their income, or in the style of the Arabic—silifa, from English "slipper" = babouche, of Hausa or Peul manufacture. Mention should be made of the helmets and kepis of umbrella-tree wood and the fake spectacles of slivers of ráffia "bamboo." In the villages or at home, imported loincloths are rolled around a belt or tied behind the neck.

Women also wear a loincloth, éndelé, tied at the neck or rolled tight above the breasts when they have nothing else on, rolled at the waist when wearing the "mission jacket," éwoman (apparently from "woman"). The favorite head covering is still the kerchief, éyañese (from "handkerchief"). More and more women are also wearing cut and sewn European-style dresses, bizingi; often a kind of slip; no [944] panties except for a few young modernists (who call them caleçons, "drawers"); and internal sanitary napkins made of medicinal plants.
[747] Mission activity has spread notions of prudery; formerly only those past puberty were obliged to cover their sexual parts. Women did so 834 with great care in spite of the casual nature of their clothing; the greatest insult to a woman was to uncover her vulva in public; she never 834 uncovered it except when uttering a curse. Nowadays most women 292 cover their breasts (1) with almost equal vigilance. /87/ In old-

[177]

1. The aesthetic standard in this connection is changing, especially in towns, as a result of European (cinema?) influence; one only rarely sees girls binding their breasts with strips of bark or cloth to make them fall.

fashioned villages widows still go back to the traditional dress after their seclusion: for eight days, sometimes longer, they wear the ébui made of leaves, which is then replaced by an old ôbôm or a jute sack that leaves the head and shoulders and thighs bare, then by a sack or an old khaki dress shaped like a sack with holes for head and arms.

291 Boys and girls used to run around naked until the first signs of puberty appeared, usually the pubic hair (Boulou, afaň /"h." in the text must be a misprint for "b."—Tr./; Fang, avul). Boys wore a special breechcloth of a special vegetable /material/ after circum-
[304] cision while waiting for the wound to heal and afterwards had to wear a covering only if they had already started to grow hair. At present they wear clothes from the beginning of school age and even before that in militant Christian families and the urban bourgeoisie.

304 Body marks have fallen out of use with the exception of circumcision. First the men stopped filing their incisors to a point. Tattooing persisted longer, in Gabon until just before the Second World War. At present tattooing is being revived among urban pickpockets and syncretist associations. The face was tattooed, usually between the eyes but sometimes on the cheeks, with blue markings made of soot mixed with vegetable ash, or in red with padouk /?/ powder, baa. These marks could indicate clan or association affiliation, or even were imposed during or after a course of medico-magical treatment, or even to satisfy aesthetic demands. It was the same for cicatrices engraved in relief on chest or abdomen, which are nowadays described as being "to make nyanga" (!pretty," Coast English—of Hausa origin?). It is quite possible that some of the magic significance has been forgotten. The most important marks were the dorsal scarifications made at initiations: a triple row of incisions along the vertebral column, widening into a v at the nape

304 of the neck for the sô; a (secret) design on the sacrum for the ngil; three horizontal marks on the nape for the ndôngô; a line of "vaccination marks" on the inner surface of the arms, forearms, and thighs, and along the carotid arteries, for the serpent /associations/, etc.

302 Men wore their hair braided, or else they shaved the temples and parietal bones, leaving a sort of comb on the top of the skull, suggesting a gorilla's crest. There were special ways of dressing the hair appropriate for the different initiations. The moustache was worn only by the benya bôtô; the beard, a goatee, by a few aged men, often diviners. In our day men usually wear their hair short and merely combed; a central part, in the Lower Nigerian fashion, was very common around 1948 among factory hands, while former recruits went in for a crew cut with a frill beard /barbe en collier/. Many students wear a little goatee, and this style is now growing among the rest of the younger generation. Since up to now wearing a beard was a sign of mourning, a political implication has sometimes been [765] attributed to this fashion—but mourning beards are not trimmed. /88/

Women have many ways of doing their hair. in plaits, checker [765] board, "horns," etc. As a sign of mourning their heads are shaved, and they are not allowed to comb the hair that grows out before the end of mourning. The growth of beard or moustache that often [145 764] follows menopause is considered a sign of sorcery. Stylish women pluck their armpits, and a few also remove their pubic hair, for reasons perhaps of elegance and hygiene, perhaps of ritual (is there a relationship between the name of the important female rite mevungu and mevul, meaning "female pubic hair?"). Padouk powder, baa, is still used in the way that henna is for both magical and aesthetic reasons, but European make-up, mainly lipstick, has taken its place among young fashionable women.

515 Bodily cleanliness is much in favor: men and women often bathe several times a day with plenty of soap. But it is common to see them put back on their well-scrubbed bodies perfectly filthy clothes, no doubt because bodily cleanliness is a much older practice than that of wearing clothes made of cloth.

c. Psychological Characteristics

181 Like the majority of known peoples, the Pahouin have a very flattering opinion of themselves, and the curious thing is that this 181 opinion is quite widely shared by foreign observers. "Much more intelligent and... more active and harder working than the average Negro... they also have more forethought... they compare with other Negroes as do Aryans with Semites and the red men /Rouges/ ... capable of acquiring a certain amount of intellectual cultivation and of performing all sorts of industries," wrote Largeau in 1900. Before him, Du Chaillu /had written/: "Proud and fierce warriors... clever and industrious... that will supersede... the degenerate tribes (of the Ogooué)," while Horn, who did not like the French at all, thought the "Mpangwe" of 1875 to be the "Prussians of Africa," which, considering his attitude and the period, was a compliment. Later, Trilles favorably compares their moral standards with those of Europeans; his Protestant colleague Grebert speaks of their "individualism," their "fierce love of liberty." The portrait admits, it is true, of some reservations: "brusqueness," "brutal frankness," along with "unreliability," "malice," and "greed for gain" for Largeau, "pride," "tendency to hoard," "stubbornness," for Grebert, "cruelty," "avarice" for Du Chaillu, "superstition" for Horn, while Compiègne thinks they "disappointed Admiral de Langle's hopes (for their ability to become assimilated)." It is a remarkable fact that these "defects" may just as well appear aspects of their "good qualities," just like the strictures on "anarchy" and "rebelliousness" that often turn up in the official reports.

All these evaluations still hold good, clearly subjective and /89/ nonscientific as they are, just as are those I have been able to make myself and which lead me to say that I have actually met among the Pahouin I associated with a large proportion of intelligent, energetic, high-spirited /fiers/ people, endowed with a sarcastic humor well illustrated in many recent novels and also in the giving of nicknames, especially to government officials, and in the celebrated caricatures of Monewoso among the Boulou.

114 153 The only scholarly work on this subject that I know is some research done in the Cameroons by Stoerkel, head of the Service de Psychotechnie et d'Orientation professional /Psychotechnical and Vocational Guidance Service/, which does not seem to have been published. This research was done in 1949-50 at the beginning of the construction of the Edéa dam. The studies revealed, among the Pahouin of the southern Cameroons, motor adaptability, concentration, and capacity for integration superior on the whole to those of other

114 ethnic groups in the same region, the Boulou subjects being classed 153 first on these points among the Pahouin tribes. Intelligence tests and mental-age evaluations made among school children and lycée students gave similar results in comparison with Africans of the same age. On the other hand, a comparison with European children living in the Cameroons showed a certain inferiority, from which it is still impossible to draw definitive conclusions because of the scarcity of "culture-free tests" used at the time. Projective tests administered 114 under the same conditions revealed schizoid tendencies with rather 157 marked aggression and a fairly high frequency of the Oedipus fixation with some transference /assimilation/ from father to white man. The difference in level from neighboring tribes was less clear among the lycée students than among school children, and less clear among the latter than among the laborers at Edéa. It must be emphasized [125] that these tests, especially the projective ones, involved a limited number of persons in particular situations outside the village milieu, that remains the background of the majority of their fellow tribesmen. I am not acquainted with the results of later research.

156 With regard to social psychology, we are also largely restricted to subjective evaluations in the same class as those mentioned at the beginning of this section. Allégret a half century ago remarked upon a defeatism more bitter since the Fang had come in contact with Europeans, and certain legends reported by Trilles and Largeau on the Jacob and Esau theme, with the white man in the role of the usurping younger brother, go some way to confirming this. Balandier has given a good description of contemporary expressions of this feeling of collective frustration, both in his Sociologie actuelle and in various articles, one of them with the significant title, "Les Fang, conquérants en disponibilité" /The Fang, Unattached Conquerors/, (nos. 175 and 173).

One striking trait, also emphasized by Balandier, is that of collective mistrust of successful persons. This may appear to contradict the previous statement about Pahouin individualism, but in fact it is precisely /90/ this individualism that produces a good share of the suspicion of the other individual (cf. in Ezo Boto, Ville cruelle, no. 182, the reactions of the hero Banda vis-à-vis the rebel Koumé).

556 We must also point out the psychological and social importance 156 of akum, wealth, and of biôm, possessions, especially imported possessions. Combined with the as yet little-studied concept of the

556 relations between the sexes, this emphasis to a great extent explains
156 why no true peasantry has developed, but rather a class of nonpeasant planters, comparable in the last analysis to some of the European settlers. The Pahouin remain very much strangers and travelers on the land, whence the importance of personal property (in the legal sense) in their eyes. Nevertheless, a further development is in the making in this connection—described above (p. 96) which is leading to a strengthening of land ownership, /so that/ certain collective reactions in the way of procedure concerning land and domain suggest that we are witnessing, at least in the Cameroons, a genuine putting down of roots.

619 Tribal pride is still considerable, to the point of hostility between different branches of the group, but ethnic cohesion is found vis-à-vis outsiders and gives real unity to the Pahouin as a solid group.

2. The Individual Life Cycle

a. Conception, Gestation, Birth

843 A woman is considered pregnant, a nyoñeya abum, she has got a belly, when she has passed through four menstrual cycles, a nji yene ngon, without seeing the moon. Conception is supposed to be the [842] result of the mixture of sperm, meyôm (with the same root as nnôm, pl. beyôm = male) and of menstrual blood, metyi me ngon, girl's blood or lunar blood; the length of pregnancy is calculated from the date when the last menstruation should have begun. Nowadays a pregnancy of nine months is considered normal, but some of my informants mentioned normal terms of eight or ten ngon (lit., moon or girl), a word that can as well refer to a calendar month as to a lunar month or a menstrual cycle. It is difficult for a man to obtain more precise information on this point since the subject is restricted to women. Besides, longer pregnancies are considered possible, [154] though sometimes suspect; amenorrhea due to a fibroid growth is a proof of sorcery, the tumor being considered an évu. The fetus (for which the term is secret, forbidden, étyi, in any case for men, and probably for women uninitiated into mevungu) is thought at the beginning of gestation to take the form of a lizard, like the first man at the moment of the creation /of the universe/.

843 As soon as pregnancy is recognized, the parents have to observe all sorts of bityi, prohibitions, the first of these being to stop having sexual intercourse, which would bring on a miscarriage or produce a monster. They must not go near a corpse nor attend funerals. The woman must abstain from certain foods /91/, the eating of which would harm the child: fish, which would cause skin diseases; bat and duck, which would mean webbed fingers and toes; snake, which would mean a child born without limbs or with atrophied limbs, etc. The woman must avoid taking long strides and stepping over holes or ditches and must stop wearing drawers if she has done so before. The husband must not nail or tie anything, which would make for a difficult delivery; he must also abstain from certain foods. During pregnancy the woman anoints the belly and breasts with palm oil mixed with baa, wears a special belt of ôkumu liana (a kind of solanaceous plant), and avoids leaving the house barefoted.

"Accidental" miscarriages are generally attributed to the breaking of a taboo (nsem) and entail ritual purification; so long as these have not been carried out, the woman is not allowed to speak to any man except her husband, at least directly, nor to look a man in the face.

[783] "Criminal" miscarriages are attributed to sorcery or, more precisely, to an évu, which may belong to the woman herself; they entail more rigorous purification; the lochia are submitted to a kind of magical "disinfecting" before being buried secretly beneath a road so that

847 passers-by will walk over them without knowing. Voluntary abortion, very rare in former times, is becoming fairly common, particularly among unmarried mothers in Christian families; it is brought about by vegetable emmenagogues (one is extracted from papaya root) or by introducing into the neck /of the womb/ a roll of twisted bark (I could not find out from what tree). Sometimes women induce abortion in one of their co-wives out of jealousy.

844 The first delivery and often succeeding ones usually take place in the woman's native village (jaⁿ). A husband is not allowed to take wife and child back home until after payment of what is really the final installment of the bride price, particularly a substantial present for the mother-in-law, which is repeated at each birth, whence the proverb, "A mother-in-law's basket is never full." The parturient is delivered in a sitting position, with her mother or ntyi (mother-in-law or co-wife of higher rank) holding her from behind, and assisted by a midwife, mbialé binga, formerly an official in

844 one of the women's associations. The child is delivered on a mattress of banana leaves. The umbilical cord is cut with a special knife, perhaps the same used in circumcisions (1), and it is buried under a banana tree, whose fruit will be étyi to people of the opposite sex from the child. The placenta is buried by the mother herself in a secret spot, or in her place by a woman of her own blood; afterward the mother may tell her child, as a mild way of cursing, "I know where your placenta is." The baby is immediately wrapped in a loincloth and laid beside its mother, after being shown to the father if it is a boy. The following day the baby as well as the mother is rubbed with warm oil, and it is given the breast. /92/

1. This is not certain; since the circumciser is a man, we may question whether he would use a woman's knife.

845 Difficult deliveries are quite common, and the midwives' technique extremely uneven. Although some may know how to effect artificial delivery, even version, most of them are limited to massaging and to using magic, like placing an axe between the mother's legs. If the woman dies in childbirth, sorcery is suspected or a grave nsem like incest; in the old days the baby, even if born alive, would have been buried with its mother. A stillborn child also arouses great suspicion about the mother, who may have to go through an ordeal and be forced to confess an offense presumed to have caused the death of the fetus.

Some writers have claimed that baby girls were sacrificed at birth [847] as being of no value to the clan. This seems very unlikely unless the infanticide was the result of an accusation of sorcery, which could also apply to a boy. What is true is that a woman giving birth only to girls would be considered the victim of a spell or a breaking of taboo.

The birth of twins is propitious, for they are thought to be necessarily mie or mmimie, that is, free of évu (the same word mie means "confinement" or, more precisely, the "labor" of childbirth). Twins receive traditional names that vary according to clan.

846 The first coming out of the house /relevailles, "churching"/, ékulu mon, "baby's coming out," takes place three months after birth, if everything has gone well. The woman starts bathing in the

946 river again (until now she has washed in her hut), puts on new clothes presented by her husband, and starts cooking for him again and work-[703] ing in her garden. Special purification has been carried out if the [833] baby has died in the interval. The prohibition against sexual relations 853 lasts as long as the child is at the breast; to break this taboo would make it nyu meyôm, drink sperm, which might lead to its death.

Postpartum care is given by the mbialé binga, then by the woman's mother or aunt or ntyi. This consists of vaginal douches and external and internal napkins of vegetable compresses.

853 The baby may be suckled only by its mother or a woman of the mother's blood, a grandmother or maternal aunt. If this is impossible, the baby cannot live (at least in rural districts where concentrated [278] milk is unknown). Traditional pharmacopoeia possesses, however, extraordinary vegetable lactic stimulants, probably without equivalent in the European pharmacopoeia.

b. Childhood

563 The old custom was not to name (yôlé) the baby until it was taken out of the house; until then it was usually called by the name of a small animal, like "squirrel" or "palm rat." Nowadays the name is
[641] given within a few days of birth, if for no other reason than to comply with citizenship regulations. /93/

551 A name, jôé or jui (also meaning nose, order, command, authority) includes the ɛyôlé, the individual's own name, and the atinan, complementary name chosen from the biyôlé of ancestors according to clan or family traditions, which are on the decline. Formerly, a cognomen was added to these, a mebatan (1) or jôé mebatan (lit.

1. Trilles translates this word as "genealogy": lañ mebatan means both "to recite the genealogy" and "to recite the salutation," simply because this was in fact the formal way of introducing oneself; a newcomer's genealogy determined how his hosts would "greet" him. True genealogy, pedigree, is éndan, related to ndan, tattoo mark, emblem.

salutation name), sometimes conferred at initiation. This mebatan

561 may serve as atinan to the next generation and after that becomes the éyôlé; thus, a chief with the cognomen Atyaminlam, destroyer of villages, will have a son called Mbutu Atyaminlam and grandson Atyaminlam Mbutu.

551 177 Influenced by French customs there has been, since the establishment of regulations for native citizenship, a stabilizing of patronymics, especially in official circles. A new patronymic may have begun as the father's atinan or éyôlé or mebatan systematically given to all his children as an éyôlé. Furthermore, conversion to Christianity has led to adding a Christian name to the jôé, which may serve in place of an éyôlé or be joined with a native éyôlé. Thus, for example, Ze Mvondo, with the cognomen Mebianga (man of drugs, because of a sickly childhood), is baptized Solomon in a Christian mission and becomes by contraction Solomon Mebianga. He may give his mebatan as an atinan to all his children and we should then have Menge Mebianga, Oyônô Mebianga, etc., with a Christian name besides, or he may give them: his mebatan as éyôlé, without atinan, with only a Christian name. There are other solutions besides, often the result of a vogue, from the names of men famous internationally or locally, dead or living (De Gaulle, Pascalet, Victor Hugo) to the orthographic Gallicizing of the jôé chosen as patronymic (Aubame, Minguet, etc.).

551 I have referred to the old rules controlling the choice of elements of a name. The éyôlé could be connected with some event at birth or during gestation; could have been suggested by a dream or a diviner; be deprecatory so as to break an evil spell; could result from a prohibition imposed on the father or mother, etc. It could also reflect the genealogical rank of the bearer, though this function was restricted more to the atinan chosen from the biyolé of the male and female forebears of both lineages. Nowadays the trend is to give as atinan always the father's éyôlé, sometimes the mother's, especially in the case of illegitimate children. According to Trilles, a name also had a totemic significance, also connecting it with genealogy. All this has by now pretty well passed into oblivion.

From the linguistic point of view, the majority of proper names are common nouns, occasionally heightened: mvôm (python), Mvômô; /94/ afan (forest), Afana; zok (elephant), Zo'o, etc.; or else phrases: Ebéndeñ (e bee éndeñ), "shield-bearer;" Atyaminlam (a tyam minlam), "destroyer of villages," etc. They are usually 551 epicene but tend to be attributed more to a particular sex—thus, it is rather rare to find a girl called Ze or a boy Nyangono.

854 In any case a baby, ntyen or nkeñelé, is not considered a human [859] being until it receives a name. After the first going out from the 551] house /the churching/ and until weaning, that is, for eighteen months or two years, the mother carries it everywhere with her, in a fold of her loincloth or in a sling for the purpose, doé or awoé, then, when it can stand by itself, astride her hip. The nkeñelé is given almost no training; the mother gives it the breast whenever the baby cries and does not attempt toilet training; a father occasionally plays with sons, rarely with daughters. Older sisters help the mother to take care of the baby, for instance, watching it in the shade while she is working in the fields or carrying the baby for her when she is overburdened.

862 Weaning often occurs in stages; the child begins to take solid food while still at the breast, sometimes before it is a year old. But it
[859] does not stop being considered a baby, nkenele, and become a child, mongô, until it walks and begins to talk pretty well. From that time
854 on, it must learn to respect its personal prohibitions and clan taboos; often an older brother or sister will be charged to supervise him. Separation of the sexes increases with age; at about the fourth year children are no longer allowed to see adults of the opposite sex naked; around the fifth year, boys and girls, bo'befam and bo'binga, stop [857] playing together.

857 Games are to a great extent mixed with the learning of future tasks:
861 little girls play at housekeeping and sometimes with dolls; little boys hunt rats with the bow, throw small assagais at moving targets, set snares, etc. But there are also "free" games like jacks, cat's cradle, blindman's buff, common to both sexes, ndongo tops made of snail shells for boys, émvala or /a kind of/ dance for girls. Children also have their own dances distinct from those of adults and peculiar to each sex. They start working as soon as they know the taboos, girls helping their mothers, boys beginning to learn masculine crafts by preparing materials; stripping leaves from folioles of raffia "bamboo," barking and pounding lianas to be made into ropes, scraping skins, etc.

The children of a village play in bands, but practical training and the teaching of traditions is carried on at home, under father or 861 mother, according to the /child's/ sex. However, preparation for 861 initiations and now catechism bring all the boys and girls of a village together.

854 Adult surveillance is casual: grown people mainly want /95/ children to know their place and not to be a nuisance. Otherwise, it is mostly the older children who take care of the younger ones.

c. Adolescence

882 Boys and girls share their mother's hut until the beginning of 854 adolescence, at which age the boys go to live by themselves, formerly in the "guardhouse," aba, nowadays in a hut on the paternal "allotment." Formerly, girls were sometimes married off before birth and [582] went to the husband's village at about eight years of age; this is very unusual today, but it is still fairly common for them to go at that age to a paternal or maternal aunt or to a married sister, where they act more or less as servants until puberty, being trained meanwhile. It is also quite common for boys to go to live with a relative whose [871] house is nearer a school than is their own village (1).

> 1. But a motive of proximity to school is not a complete explanation, merely an additional reason for leaving. In fact, a study of urban centers equipped with > [574] schools of a good level shows that 30 percent of the children live outside the paternal household with uncles or grandparents. Whatever a father's personal view, he could never refuse his son to relatives expressing a wish to have the boy for some time. (J. B.)

881 The bongô /children/ become ndôman, a youth, or ngon, a girl, 304 at the onset of puberty. The transition is marked by circumcision 864 among boys, atyi'i atyel, in the past sometimes followed by the first initiation, bekungu. Circumcision is done between the ages of six and twelve, usually around ten. Nowadays it is often done at a dispensary, while it formerly was the occasion of a family and village ceremony. Subjects for circumcision prepared for the ceremony with a relatively short seclusion (of a fortnight) during which they were

931 304 964 limited to a vegetarian diet without salt or spices, to "freshen the blood." They received sexual instruction from the ngengañ, diviner-healer, who performed the operation, while the elders, mintôl, examined /the boys/ in knowledge of the mebatan, "salutations" or genealogies: in actual fact circumcision ended the prohibition against coition by showing the danger of involuntary incest in case relationships were not well understood. Women were not allowed to be present 304 at the operation, which the ngengañ performed with a special razor, cauterizing the wound with a pimento decoction. A boy was held by his father, who pronounced the formula that lifted the taboo against coition. The foreskin was usually buried under a tree, perhaps a banana, perhaps a tree indicated by clan or lineage tradition, perhaps [126] chosen, if we accept Trilles, for totemic reasons. Sometimes the foreskin was preserved for magic use. While the scar was healing, the circumcised boy could wear only a special vegetable breechcloth which was renewed daily; during this time no woman was supposed to speak to him or to touch him or his breechcloth; this he took advantage of so as to steal food and various things. /96/ Once the scar had healed, he could no longer appear in public naked. This whole /procedure/ is only partly followed at the present time; furthermore, since the time for the operation has been generally made earlier, circumcised boys who have not yet reached puberty (1) are often seen going about nude in villages. According to Trilles and Largeau, in the past some youths remained uncircumcised, minsôsôl, until they had killed their first enemy. At the present time all youths are circumcised, even Christians; the missions have only rarely tried to oppose the practice and always unsuccessfully.

> 1. A Protestant Ntoumou chief in Ambam told me that he had had his children circumcised earlier so as to be able to send them to the district school without running the risk of their breaking the sexual and food taboos of the uncircumcised when away from his supervision.

931 863 After circumcision the nsôman was able to have sexual relations and eat certain foods prohibited before. He went to live with other

88| youths in the aba and prepared for further initiations, while beginning
—883 to participate fully in masculine activities, work and games. The bekungu (Fang, bekhun?) initiation that came directly after circumcision was not a general practice. My own impression is that this was not a tribal or clan rite like sô, but that of an association of diviners or seers involving only specially endowed individuals, perhaps related to the ndôngô rite restricted to grown men, which appears to have identical ritual tattoo marks.

881 For the mo'minga reaching puberty there is no stage equivalent to circumcision. In spite of what Trilles says, excision has apparently never been used except as a punishment for certain kinds of adultery or mild incest. It must not be forgotten that a little girl very soon went to live with her affinal family and that she was deflowered as soon as she reached puberty. She very rarely remained ôlenan, that is, pubescent and unmarried, and then for a very short time. One might almost say that her adolescence was telescoped into the period between childhood and the arrival of puberty marked by the mevungu rite.

This adolescent phase is now prolonged by the law fixing the [582] marriageable age at fourteen (puberty usually comes during the [145] twelfth year), by school attendance, and by the change in the bride-price system. Most of my friends of a certain age see in these facts the reasons for a crisis in immorality which they probably to some extent exaggerate.

Nevertheless, first menstruation was apparently acknowledged in a ceremony in which only women took part, but this may have been merely a preliminary to the mevungu initiation, about which hardly anything is known. Otherwise /as regards female adolescence/ coition is forbidden to immature girls, while unmarried girls who have begun menstruating have actually great sexual freedom, even in Christian circles. It must, however, be realized that only too often, especially in schools, there are girls deflowered before puberty, whereas boys seem to wait for circumcision /97/ before their first exploits — there [883] are parents, worried about their sons' "good behavior," who give 884 them aphrodisiacs as encouragement.

d. Transition to Adulthood

882 The ndoman is not yet a real person, nya mô; undoubtedly he participates in men's work, in hunting and clearing the land, but he is not yet admitted to the essential functions of full manhood: ritual, warfare, and marriage. Formerly, he was not until after the great tribal initiation, sô. Sô is the name of a large red antelope, Cephalophus castoneus, found in great quantity in the forest and in the galleries of the park-savanna. The meat is taboo, étyi, to the uninitiated (bibis) and, a fortiori, to women. It may seem strange that Trilles does not mention it in Le totemisme chez le Fang, although the sô seems to be one of the most important tribal totems. It should be observed in this connection that the sô rite, widespread among the Cameroons Pahouin, including the Beti, and among those of the Woleu-N'Tem, seems to vanish somewhere between Mitzic and N'Djolé, while some of its features are to be found in the initiation to the biéri, which is basically merely an adjunct. It would therefore appear to have gone to pieces at the same time as the structure of the meyoñ, to be revived in the extreme south by the bwiti, reported by Trilles, which is at present moving northward. Nevertheless, I must point out that what Trilles describes under the name of bawu may well be sô.

Initiation ceremonies were filmed among the Eton of Saa in 1935; the film is kept at the Musée de l'Homme. Bertaut (no. 110) gives a very full description of the outward forms of the initiation, Stoll (no. 84) an interpretation of its symbolism.

Initiation took place about every three years (every seven mimbu?); Bertaut states that a ceremony might be arranged after some serious happening in a village. It lasted three months (one year, according to Stoll, who counts in the preliminary ceremonies for the initiation proper and the period following) and entailed great expense for sacrifices on the part of the parents of initiates and especially the initiation leader, the nkpwé sô (judge of the sô; lit., butcher of the sô), a senior chosen from the most wealthy and respected. From this point of view, one may believe that the rite coincided with the desire for levelling of wealth which appears to have been so constant in Pahouin society. The nkpwé sô did not himself lead the ceremony; he was the instigator and the person responsible, but the celebrant was a diviner, a mfek sô, "sô wise man" or "sô measurer" or "sô pouch," if the tone is changed (vek = to take aim, to compute, to divine, to measure).

The main theme of the rite, of which the following description is quite incomplete, was the death of the sô, awu sô, afterwards eaten by the initiates (its meat was taboo to all others). The ceremony opened with a general village purification and went on to four successive sacrifices till the death of the sɔ̂ and the communion meat upon its flesh. The candidates, mvɔ̂n, passed through a series of tests /98/ and instruction of a warlike and sexual character, at the end of which they became true persons, benya bɔ̂tɔ̂, as well as true members of the society.

After circumcision youths received preliminary instruction within their families, but this represented preparation for the rite, not the rite itself. Preliminary ceremonies began three months before the initiation took place, with a public confession before the whole village by the nkpwé sɔ̂ standing back-to-back with another official "who sped his movements, moving lips when he spoke and like him trampling an old calabash" (Stoll); pieces of the calabash were used to receive the blood of the first sacrifice, with which the nkpwé sɔ̂ and all the minkpwangɔ̂s (initiates) of the village were sprinkled, and were then thrown away in the bush to the cry of "Gone, gone /effacé/," (andim, related to the form mendim = water). Initiates then came together outside the village to choose the bevɔ̂n who were to ku sɔ̂ (lit., to fell /tomber/ sɔ̂) in this promotion. These beku were then subjected to a first seclusion of twenty days in the forest, during which they built the aba so, a sanctuary containing a platform reached by three ladders, to which access was forbidden to all uninitiated except the bevɔ̂n. The mfek sɔ̂ began to teach them their duties as initiates and proceeded to eliminate those who were "faint-hearted." At the end of this seclusion the bevɔ̂n returned to the village in procession and received from their relatives /parents/ presents in groups of nine, the sɔ̂ ritual number.

The second stage of the initiation then began, étyi'a bilé bi sɔ̂, felling the trees of the sɔ̂. The nkpwé sɔ̂ provided materials for a ritual meal, which included a soup in which the mfek sɔ̂ cooked certain mebiɔ̂ intended to reveal any beyem (bearers of évu) among the bevɔ̂n. Nothing was supposed to be left over from this meal. The bevɔ̂n then lay down in a ditch where they were sprinkled with a special /vegetable/ decoction; then the village women between puberty and menopause strode over them nine times. The minkpwangɔ̂s met together for a secret sacrifice and a meal prepared in the same pot as that used for the bevɔ̂n meal, called nlak sɔ̂ (sɔ̂ horn; according to Stoll, with the esoteric meaning of testicle).

[281] The nkpwé sô then defecated into the pot, which was buried in a secret spot near the sanctuary. The bevôn then took part in a mock battle at the end of which the nkpwé sô gave goats to their families. The initiated now went into the forest to cut a njôm pole, chosen, according to Allégret, by a woman whose husband had no luck at hunting—this pole was placed across two forks planted in front of the sanctuary near the nkal sô. Meanwhile, the bevôn had been cutting raffia "bamboo" to be used in making the ésam sô, an enclosure around the njôm. They returned in Indian file with their group "major" (ôsu zua) at the head; they set up the "bamboos" in a triangle open toward the back of the njôm, fastening them together with plaited raffia leaves the end of which an initiate buried in the nlak sô. During their marching by, which women and unitiated are not allowed to see, they were beaten with sticks by the initiates.

They then proceeded to a "crabbing" which consisted of immersion in water flavored with pimento. /This was/ the commencement of the third stage, which was continued by withdrawal into the forest, where the bevôn painted themselves white and engaged in a ritual hunt.

Meanwhile, initiates closed the ésam sô with two lianas representing a python (mvôm) and a Dendraspis (ayañ). The bevôn then were subjected to the ant-tree test in which they had to climb an angakomo tree on which weaver-ants lived whose bite is very painful. They then spent a night in the ésam sô, lying on thorns and rubbed with pimento juice, while masked initiates beat them and blew trumpets [274] to keep them from going to sleep. The next day they went off on a round of visits through villages related or allied to their own, while the mfek sô and initiates carved and shaped the njôm in keeping with clan traditions. The designs had to be explained to the bevôn during the next stage, abete njôm, the erection, the setting up of the njôm.

[304] Upon their return from the round of visits, the bevôn were tattooed by the mfek sô: three rows of incisions along the spine, the two outer ones spreading apart at the top like the sô's "halter," and a small triangular mark at the nape, perhaps the same as that of the ndôngô. They then put on a sort of skirt of raffia fiber, painted themselves white once more, and did a public dance during which the "major" mounted astride the njôm, the other bevôn after him. Anyone who fell off was rejected by the sô and had to leave the 881 community. After another sacrifice, the bevôn were again confined inside the ésam sô, where initiates had dug a narrow passage and covered it with wattling and earth, the bottom strewn with thorns, crushed pimento, and warrior ants. The bevôn would receive final instructions, then, after taking mud baths, grunting like hogs, they had to crawl through the passage previously filled with smoke, while the minkpwangôs struck and pricked them with assagais through the cover; a mvôn who rose up or tried to escape was immediately killed by prisoners stationed outside the enclosure. This was the third stage, the true "death of the sô," awu sô.

After leaving the esam, the bevôn were supposed to be aggressive, teasing, to worry the other villagers, steal food, fowls, etc., tear down barriers, and in general behave like wild beasts. This period lasted for several days, preceding the sortie of the sô, akui sô, a parade of the group in war dress, carrying spears engraved with the distinctive clan mark, ndem, which had been consecrated during the initiation. A feast followed. For six months (mbu) afterward, the new initiates were still subject to certain sexual and food prohibitions, from which they were freed if they killed a man during the period. At the end /100/ of this waiting time, they went away, painted white, into seclusion for a night and came back painted red, making the rounds of the village nine times in procession. Then they bathed in a stream where fishing was afterward forbidden until the initiation of the next group, apparently.

A young man thus initiated became a mone wôsô, child of the death of the sô (wu = to die; wôé = to kill), thereafter ready for marriage, which would make him a complete man, nya môtô. His [269] father might instruct him in the family cult, which till then he knew only in its externals; he was taught to identify the ancestral skulls kept in the biéti basket and to enter into communication with them [270] by means of the narcotic herb alan. Sometimes the instruction was given collectively in the melan rite, which, according to Stoll, complemented sô, the latter being androgynous, while the former was gynandrous. Sô was to give creative power, melan fecundity and wealth. Melan has a medical aspect lacking in sô; the participation of women is greater. Some elements seem to have survived until the present day, whereas the last sô ceremonies must have occurred about [114] 1940. Stoll gives a pretty full description in La tonétique des langues bantu... du Cameroun /The Tonal System of the Bantu Languages ... of the Cameroons/ (no. 84).

881 The female rite corresponding to sɔ̂ is mevungu, about which little is known, for the reasons mentioned earlier. It was not a clan rite, since the women of a village would, in consequence of exogamy, belong to different clans. Like sɔ̂, its function was to make of the initiates accomplished women, benya bengono or benya binga, fertile, free of évu, and disciplined, and perhaps, in addition, to set up a community bond between the women of a village in place of the missing clan bond among them.

Initiates of both sexes were exempt from numerous general food taboos. They were bound together by an obligation of mutual aid reinforcing and even transcending that of clan fraternity. The dying [178] out of initiations has definitely left a void which contemporary Pahouin are trying to fill; the new syncretist rites seem to have succeeded better in this than the churches and political parties.

e. Old Age

882 The nya mɔtɔ̂ and the nya minga are people in full possession of their faculties, quite capable of fulfilling their social roles. Their prestige is in proportion to their abilities; when they are no longer "true" men or "true" women, society is inclined to lose interest in them and to push them aside. An old man can mitigate his loss of physical power by his wealth or his skill in magic; an old woman owns nothing and easily incurs the risk of an accusation of sorcery. Her decline begins earlier than a man's, when she ceases to bear children or to be physically attractive, while a man reaches his prime when /101/ he has grandsons living with him and accepting his authority. But this authority lasts only so long as a man can "stand up for himself" /se défendre/ in the semi-colloquial sense of the word. Nowadays the ease with which villages and extended families burst their bounds geographically often accelerates this decline, which some minkukum palliate thanks to the polygamy on a large scale that enables them to retain economic power.

Old people without children have a very hard time of it, even in regions converted to Christianity, especially widows, who in their affinal family do not benefit from the clan obligation of mutual aid. In times past old people were abandoned in the forest during migrations; they are still left in bilik, deserted villages, when the main body of the village moves, for instance, to establish itself along a

888 road. The missions have tried, with unequal results, to ameliorate [797] the fate of old people without children; certain clan "societies" have also been active in this direction, but none of it goes very far. Moreover, the old people accept their lot and occasionally joke about it among themselves with the rather biting irony that seems one of the mental characteristics of the group. Some old people kill themselves [762] "from being tired of life." According to Trilles, some used to burn themselves to death voluntarily. According to Largeau, the heirs took the initiative in this so as to make the inheritance available.

888 The least wretched old people are those with children, particularly 593 sons (1), since daughters usually live with their affinal family. There

1. Cf. Eza Boto, Ville cruelle (no. 182), for an illustration of relations between mother and son.

does exist a genuine obligation for children to provide parents with food, which is sanctioned by paternal or maternal curse in case of default.

f. Death and the Afterlife

761 Every death is suspect, but that of a nya mɔ̂tɔ̂ more than another, 763 because a nya mɔ̂tɔ̂ does not die: someone kills him, though it may be none other than himself. Therefore the death of a man of some 763 importance was always followed by an autopsy: the ngengaⁿ would cut open the body and examine the thoracic organs, nlem, the seat of intellect and will, to look for signs of sorcery, the work either of another or of the dead man should his évu have turned against him or been killed by a malignant agency. There also appears to have been a magic process, éwɔ̂mɔ̂lɔ̂, that revived the dead long enough to put questions concerning the cause of death.

766 If the autopsy revealed that the deceased was a sorcerer, nnem, the body was burned or thrown into a large river or perhaps buried at 765 a crossroads far from the village. If he were mie, free of évu, the regular mortuary rites ensued. The body was washed in warm water, massaged and softened, then rubbed with baa dissolved in palm oil, wrapped in a white loincloth, watched over by armed men while the grave was made ready and the relatives /102/ and affinal kin /alliés/

764 in neighboring villages were informed. The dead man's fellow initiates came to lift the corpse onto a stretcher-coffin of bark (1)

[177]

1. The fig-bark coffin recalls the custom, borrowed from the Pygmies, of putting the body of a chief in a hollow tree or between the buttresses of certain large trees.

[824]

The fig has an important magic role. A fig tree was planted at the founding of a new village, and slips were carried away upon migration. (J. B.)

and danced around him the funeral dance proper to their association, at which women were not allowed to be present but were shut into their huts, where they wailed in a shrill key. The grave was narrow and quite deep, with a plank or "bamboo" bed at the bottom on which the dead man was placed on his back, feet toward the west (near a river, the grave was dug parallel to the course and the feet were placed downstream, nké = downstream or west). Above was built a platform of round logs on which were piled — after having been "killed" by breaking — all the personal possessions of the dead man that did not belong to the family patrimony, his weapons, tools, and jewelry. Now and then, only rarely, one of his wives would be sacrificed to keep him company (it is possible that the execution of wives convicted of having killed their husbands has been confused with a sacrifice of this kind). The grave was filled in and covered with a mound, which was sometimes provided with a flue at the head end by which "to feed" the dead man. The graves of prominent men were dug in, or in front of, their huts, those of ordinary people outside the village on the edge of the forest. Graves of family heads were guarded so as to prevent outsiders from carrying off the skull; [778] this was cut off by the privileged heir, njian, the replacement, who placed it with the other ancestral skulls in the biéti shrine, after dye- [386] ing it with baa. A statuette in umbrella-tree wood was carved and painted white, and inside it were enclosed some of the hair and a phalanx of the dead man; this was placed upon the biéti altar. The tibia of the dead man had previously been removed for the ngil rite.

Matrons, benya binga, were buried by mevungu initiates in a ceremony which men did not attend. Ordinary women /femmes du 764 commun/ were buried by their co-wives and the women of their affinal family. Bongô and bikeñelé were buried at home with no other ceremonial than the mother's mourning.

When signs of sorcery were found on a corpse, the ngengañ or 787 mvimvi'i turned to divination to find the presumed culprit, who was subjected to an ordeal of bitter herbs. As a general thing, wives had 695 to submit regularly to the pimento or ant ordeals to make them confess not only the part they might have had in the husband's death but also their adulteries. When no one was found responsible for the death of a mie individual (nonsorcerer), it was decided that he had been the victim of a breaking of taboo, nsem, sometimes unwittingly. Whatever the cause of death, sorcery or nsem or repercussion from 783 an act of sorcery, purification always occurred, generally by a sacrifice at the end of the mourning period (meyep). /103/

765 The duration of mourning was, and still is, a mbu /six months/, but it is now less rigorous. Formerly the wives of the dead man were secluded, naked, for a month in his hut, the first wife lying on his bed; their heads and all their body hair were shaved, and they were painted white with ash and forbidden to wash or do their hair until the end of mourning. The dead man's brothers and sons shaved their heads and let their beards grow without trimming or combing; their foreheads were painted white and they wore only old clothes. They had to observe a series of prohibitions concerning certain ways of hunting, the eating of certain kinds of game (perhaps the dead man's personal totem?), all journeys, the circumcision of the dead man's sons, the use of a bed, etc. The end of mourning was marked by a sacrifice and often by a melan ceremony in order to enter into communication with the dead man.

The strictest mourning was observed for the death of an esa, a man of the father's age grade, less for a monyañ, and hardly any for a mongô. With regard to women, a man observed solemn mourning only for his mother and first wife, and this meant mourning within the family, while a man's death involved the whole village. However, an epidemic was followed by heavy mourning, and when the one presumed responsible was identified, it was not enough that he 766 pay avutan, compensation, he was burned or drowned (his immediate 79 family was constrained to pay the avutan), and then a general 783 purification was undertaken.

177 764 Obviously this has now changed, but perhaps not so much as one would imagine: every year the courts are aware of several ordeals after a death, of mutilations of corpses which are really autopsies, of sums of money extorted which are customary compensation payments imposed on the "person responsible" for a death. And we may assume that in this connection three-quarters of the cases never reach the European courts. Funeral rites have, however, been lightened and colored by Christian influence, even when the deceased had remained to the end attached to the old beliefs: his wives or children usually call in a nkat foé (news-announcer = catechist) to say the prayers for the dead and to sing psalms or hymns. The old-fashioned cylindrical bark litter has been replaced by a European plank coffin, gradually even for women and children. The graves of the well-to-do have masonry walls and are covered with a concrete slab bearing name, date of death, and a pious text, or even with a small flower bed framed with bricks or bottle necks, with a grave stone or cross at the head. The dead man's hut is no longer destroyed, especially if made of "solid" material, nor are his personal effects broken. Often the body is washed and dressed in European clothes instead of being anointed with baa; the white shroud remains. In Christian families women take part in wakes for men and attend their burials; men attend the burials of women but rarely take part in their wakes. In [795] /104/ many villages the different /Christian/ sects have separate cemeteries.

765 177 Mourning is less rigorous and is often expressed by the European black arm band and tie worn by men. In the villages widows are still rather ill-treated (cf. above, pp. 128-129), but their sequestration has been reduced to a week, and they are allowed to wash after a month or two. Most of the prohibitions of the mourning period have fallen out of use, and the end of mourning is marked by a family gathering which has more about it of a certain kind of French provincial New Year's Eve party than of the old purificatory rites.

761 Death in the traditional concept is not so much the cessation of life as the dissociation of the personality. Enyiñ, life, comes from the verb nyiñ meaning "to survive" rather than "to be alive"; /thus life represents/ a kind of dynamism opposed to the static to, tabe = to be, exist, remain, etc.

826 774 The body, nyul or nyôl, is perishable and corruptible; it supports the other elements of the personality, above all the nsisim or nsisiñ, 826 774 the shadow or immaterial duplicate of the body. The heart and lungs, nlem, are the seat of the intellect and sensibility, especially of the consciousness of good and evil, the seat of the moral and mental personality. It is by way of the nlem that a person's mind is struck, that, for instance, he is made mad; through their évur the beyem do di nlem, eat the nlem, of their victims. The nlem for a time survives death; the nsisim seems to be immortal. Breath, avebe (from vebe, to breathe, derived from vee = to be alive, alert) is characteristic of physiological life (1).

> 1. Among the Ewôndo, the breath, ewundu (Boulou, evunulu = wind) is characteristic of the human being, as is nsisim; animals are not provided with either, that is why they can be eaten. (J. B.)

Strength, tye, tyi, kie, or ki, is somehow external to the individual, independent of him, yet that which insures the cohesion of the elements of the personality. It seems to be particularly localized in the nlem (thoracic organs) and the boo, brain, which is evidently the seat of action (the verb bo = to do, to act), whence the importance [769] of skulls in the ancestral cult, biéti. Ngul, which may also be translated "strength," is more "capacity" or "power," the faculty of making use of tyi. It is impersonal, it pre-exists and survives the individual, who during his lifetime can waste or augment it; it is the basis for magic and sorcery, tyi being in itself neither good nor bad. Everything that exists possesses tyi, including the dead, but living beings possess more than inanimate beings, and men more than other living beings. Sacrifices and prohibitions revalue around this notion, as vocabulary well shows: étyi = prohibition, metyi = blood, atyi = egg, tyik = to cut, to kill, to command, etc., (cf. above p. 25). The dead keep a certain amount of strength, which makes them at the same time potentially dangerous and potentially usable.

557 A name, jôé, jui, also pre-exists and survives the person it distinguishes, whence the special ties between bemôé /105/, homonymns, and also the need to know a person's name in order to cast a spell upon him, etc. A dead man keeps his name until it is given to one 551 of his descendants, in whose person he will be repeated rather than reembodied. It should be remembered that jɔ̂é also means "authority," a notion that cannot be dissociated from that of name.

761 The cessation of vital functions, awu (from wu, to die), is not 628 thought of as necessarily final: catalepsy, deep coma, anaesthesia, and real death are confused. It is evident that if the body is hurt during awu, a revival is impossible. A ghost, kɔ̂n (Fang, khun), is 754 not necessarily physically dead: one of the most feared forms of 808 sorcery, at which the Ndɔ̂ñ are reputed to be particularly expert, consists of separating a person from his nsisim, shade or double, by giving him the appearance of physical death, then in awakening the body which will thereafter automatically obey the sorcerer's orders and may be used by him for all sorts of ends, to go kill or steal, or, more prosaically, to work his plantations. Persons thus transformed into bekɔ̂n are recognized by their pallor, jerky movements, and haggard expression; they survive the experience /opération/ for only a few months before dying in great physical and moral agony (1).

[276] 1. I have reason—but no proof—to believe that this is more than a myth: perhaps the criminal use of a narcotic producing effects similar to those of Pentothal. A kɔ̂n, frightful to see, died at the Sangmélima dispensary in 1947. The judicial inquiry revealed nothing.

761 Death in the complete sense does not occur for some time after the cessation of vital functions, and funeral rites seem to have had the purpose of detaching the individual from his mortal shell. There 76 were two abodes of the dead. The bemie, those unblemished by ngbwel (sorcery by évu), crossed the river-of-the-west or the sea to go to the village of Zǎmbe (Zobeyo, Nzame) in a cold country where their nsisim led a life rather like that in a terrestrial village where everything goes well (2). The beyem went down to ɛ́tɔ̂tɔ̂lan, the

2. According to Trilles, this would have been Venus, otya alu, "the night's torch."

775 subterranean abode of the dead, where they were the prey of flames. A tradition reported by Largeau tells of the dead man arriving at the bridge over the river-of-the-west to meet there the judges, Oyem-Bôt (He-Who-Knows-Men) and Oka'Bot (He-Who-Divides-Men /Repartit-les-Homme/), who question him and allow him to cross the bridge leading to Mon-Anen (Great Being), who questions him in the presence of the dead and makes sure that he has "left his name" (that he has forgotten it in the land of the living). He is then turned over to the Divider-of-Men /Partageur-des-Hommes/, who cuts him in two, one half staying among the living, while the other, having been given a new name, goes to the dead. It is difficult to decide what precise part of the person remains with his descendants; in my view it is name-authority; in any case I do not believe it to be the nsisim. It might be the kôn but, in such a case, the result of an accident, for a ghost is a disturbing neighbor, if not a dangerous one, in any case very fearsome, often malevolent. Its appearance is that of a living [143] person, except that it is white /106/, whence the belief that albinos are the children of ghosts. The nsisim, on the other hand, who can turn up during a person's lifetime in a place distant from where he is (witches' and sorcerers' power of bilocation), is immaterial but absolutely identical in appearance with the body. The kôn might be the ghost of a person whose funeral rites had not been correctly performed, of an imperfectly exorcised sorcerer or, if one wishes, one imperfectly sterilized (for instance, if the corpse had not been burned), or even of a person who died without being purified of a nsem (1).

1. Among the Ewôndo, the dead who have not yet crossed the bridge leading to ésam nzigi, the abode of the dead, are called ngudu. (J. B.)

775 825 It also may happen that a dead man becomes embodied in a wild animal living near a village, and that, henceforth, "cannot" be killed. I have not been able to find out exactly whether this is a matter of actual impossibility or of a respect taboo. The animal may be benevolent, like the old gorilla, a former Mvaé chief, who protected the Nyabisaã village gardens against the depredations of "real" gorillas in 1948, or, on the contrary, malevolent, like one Zaman, turned panther, who ravaged his affinal family's flocks in the Boucle

775 825 du Dja region during the same period. This incarnation is probably related to the totemism or the alliance between a man and an animal élañela, which Trilles discusses at length (no. 166). The incarnation is only temporary and ends at the death or disappearance of the animal.

775 787 As a result of mission influence, nlam bekon, the land of the dead, is now divided into heaven and hell, which are none other than Zambe's village and étôtôlan. Souls in purgatory seem to be confused in village minds with dissatisfied bekôn, who are always disturb-[761] ing. The notion of natural death, brought about neither by sorcery nor by breaking a prohibition, has not developed at all: after all, "the wages of sin is death," and "sin' has been rendered as nsem in translations of the Scriptures. Therefore the dead continue to belong to society, even though the decline of the ancestor cult, the biéti, and of the initiations with a probable totemic character like sô, have weakened their bonds with the living.

775 762 This belief in survival perhaps explains a certain scorn of death, which is indicated not only by bravery in war and the suicides of the old, but also suicides for the sake of a point of honor: a woman kills herself in order to take revenge on her husband, a man because he [608] considers himself offended or injured. The "one responsible" for such a suicide is severely judged by public opinion, and must pay compensation and make an expiratory sacrifice.

3. Religion and Magic

797 Aside from a few old people who are known as "children of the old ways" (or "of the old knowledge"), bo' biyem bi nnom, and who are treated as pagans by their children, and, even more uncommon, a few /107/ young people who declare themselves to be agnostics, the great majority if not the mass of contemporary Pahouin claim to be attached to one of the sects that has done evangelical work in the region: French or American Presbyterian, /Roman/ Catholic, /Seventh Day/ Adventist. In fact, and with no intention of arguing over the statistics that give proportions of 105 percent "Christian" in certain districts, the influence of Christianity is indeed considerable, but it is tinged with animist survivals and revivals to an extent and in ways that only a great deal of detailed research could present accurately.

771 The first observers described the Pahouin, especially the Fang, 781 as "less superstitious," "less given to fetishism" than neighboring 114 populations. Trilles and Martrou emphasized their profound religious sentiment, while Allégret (no. 147) gives very interesting information about the feeling of religious destitution they experienced, particularly after contact with Europeans. Often observed also has been the ease with which they would adopt new beliefs and ceremonies, and this refers not only to Christian sects but to cults like bwiti and ngôl and even, before the last war, to freemasonry in the vicinity of Libreville.

All these influences are so intermingled that we must resort to a kind of conjectural palaeontology in order to reconstruct their original beliefs. Without casting any reflection upon the intellectual integrity of observers like Trilles and Martrou, we must recognize—and regret—that a certain professional slant from time to time affected their conclusions, to a point that induces us to turn instead to laymen much less well qualified linguistically, like Largeau, of whom Trilles has shown himself perhaps a little too critical.

a. Concept of God, Creation

776 The Pahouin believe (or used to believe, see later on) in a creator god Mebe'e (Fang, Mebere, Mebeghe), eternal, formerly immanent, becoming infinitely transcendant after the first nsem.

The word Mebe'e seems to be related to the verb be'e, to carry, which has the agent-noun, mbe'e. Mbe'e is a plural form, corresponding to nouns of action and also to the collective plural forms of names of liquids (mendim = water, metyi = blood, meyôm = sperm, etc.). It is usually accompanied by triple apposition: "Mebe'e, Mebe'e menkpwa, sokuma, mbongbwe" (or, according to Trezenem, mba angwe). The meaning of these three qualifiers is as uncertain as that of Mebe'e; menkpwa should probably be connected with kpwaé = to strike down, to judge, to condemn; sokuma with kôm (kum) = to arrange, to direct, sô conveying the idea of generosity, rectitude, balance (Boulou, soso, zoso); mbongbwé would then, according to Grebert, mean "creator of generations" (bo = to make; ngbwé = maternal kinship), but could also be /108/ connected with ngbwa = love, friendship, alliance, with the sense of "he who makes an alliance" or "he who loves."

776 A definition is added to these qualifiers, given by Mebe'e himself in reply to men who asked him what his name was, and reported by Largeau thus, the formula varying slightly in detail according to other writers: Mebe'e me se kôm, ke môt, ke minga, ke nyia, ke ésa, émien étam étam, ke yoo-yoé, a tame mebialé me bôt, which means, more or less, "Mebe'e, with no one, without wife, mother, father, all alone by himself, impenetrable (lit., 'not open,' perhaps in the sense of 'without beginning'), starts the generations."

Largeau gives weight to traditions that run counter to this concept of uniqueness, according to which Mebe'e (he connects the word with a verb meaning "to divide"?) would be none other than the sun and would have begotten man by a union with the female principle Anghe Ndongha, "universal womb" (?). But he himself admits the "vague" nature of these traditions "mumbled by a few old men."

Mebe'e is uncreated and eternal. He declares to the first man: A mon wôm, me se k'asum, me se k'aman, me ne fo'o mbembé, "O my son! I have no beginning (origin), no end, I am in truth he that endures (bembe = to be fixed)."

773 "Feeling lonely by himself," writes Trilles, Mebe'e, "when things were not yet," decides to create man (môt = a person /persona?-Tr./. He creates a lizard out of clay and five days later puts it into a bowl of water (sea water, according to Trilles) where he leaves it for seven full days. On the eighth day he shouts, "Come forth!" Man comes out and gives thanks. Trilles rightly emphasizes the beauty of the scene: Alu mwom ane a nga ke dé'é, nyina: Ku'i! A nga kui, a to môt. Ane, a nga kutubu meboff, nyina: Abotan. "On the eighth day (lit., the eighth night) then, he goes to look, then: 'Come forth! (lit., Emerge!). It emerges; it is a man. And he falls on his knees: Thanks! (lit., Praises!)"

This first man is called Nzame or Zambe (Boulou, Zobeyo) or, more accurately, Nzame Mebe'e. According to the tradition reported by Largeau, he gave himself this name at the time he gave the creator the name Mebe'e. According to others, Mebe'e named Nzame. The name may be related to the Fang verb dzame (Boulou, jame), meaning "to leave," "no longer to be concerned with," and also "to forgive a debt," "to pardon." Nzame would thus be "he who pardons" or "he who abandons," the form Zambe used in the north being a dialectal variant or perhaps a passive derivative. Trilles for his part attributes to Nzame the meaning of "the invisible one,"

773 translating the verb dzame by "to efface oneself, " explainable by Trilles' continually confusing Mebe'e and Nzame, the creator and the created. Nzame and Zambe can apparently be related to a whole series /of words/ with similar meaning in nearby Bantu languages and, perhaps, to the West Indian Creole zombi. But the relationship is less obvious with the Boulou Zobeyo, whose origin, which is obscure, is perhaps connected with the verbs zu, "to arrive" (in Boulou) or zũ, dzũ, "to open" (in Fang) and yoo or yooé, "to be open, " "to open"; /the meaning/ is approximately /109/ "opening of those who open, " in the sense of "first ancestor. "

Traditions differ about the origin of the first woman. Largeau gives two. According to one, Mebe'e, having taught Nzame to clear the forest and plant trees, puts him to sleep and, having cut off a large toe, fashions it into the first woman, Nyingono Mebe'e (Nyingon = mother-daughter). According to the other tradition, he would have fashioned at the same time as Nzame his sister, Oyeme = Mam (she-who-knows-things). My Ntoumou informant, who knew both legends, reconciled them by referring to the Bible, a common attitude among old Protestants in Gabon, who are made very uneasy by discrepancies between the Hebrew and the Pahouin Genesis.

In any event, Mebe'e makes all animals subject to the first man and woman so that they will work for them. But Nzame disturbs this arrangement by fornicating with his sister: this is the great nsem, the breaking of a prohibition, the initial incest that introduces death to the earth. Mebe'e "dies" or, rather, removes himself from mankind and departs, leaving to Nzame, whom the animals have ceased to obey, authority over the world.

Oyeme-Mam then brings forth eight sets of twins, male and female, who are the ancestors of the Pahouin, the white men, Pygmies, gorillas, chimpanzees, red men, and the coastal tribes.

Not much is known of the next bit of the legend because the versions vary greatly according to the reporter. Roughly, Nzame teaches agricultural methods to his children and goes to seek from Mebe'e (by dying, to be resurrected later?) the secrets of the crafts (1).

1. According to some, these were taught by the spider.

Before leaving his children in final "death, " (he does not, in fact, die 773 physically: "His tomb is neither above nor below, neither to the right nor to the left"), he divides his possessions, a division which is disturbed by quarrels, the machinations of younger sons or the negligence of the elder ones. He then departs beyond the river-of-the west, followed by the white men (or the coastal tribes?) who by a ruse have got hold of part of the biôm inherited by the Pahouin. The latter in turn start westward, crossing the Osoe Nnanga, then the niôm adjap (hole in the silk-cotton tree) as described earlier (see p. 19).

776 Nzame (Zambe) is emphatically not the creator god but the ancestor * mentor; all genealogies go back to him. Yet all the Christian 787 missions have taken his name to express the idea of God. This mistake has come about because the word Mebe'e was rarely spoken, while Nzame turned up in all "salutations," in everything that had to do with the ancestor cult. As the original monitor he could be confused with the creator — in fact, he in a way completed "natural" creation by the magical invention of the arts and crafts. As an ancestor he was solicited in prayers (meya'alan) by his descendants, while Mebe'e was not addressed except on rare occasions—in solemn vows, at initiations. Finally, the very fact of having been misled from the first /110/ made it difficult to go back to the first translation. It may well be though that this mistake, the substitution of the creature for the creator, the deification of man, has not been without influence on the social development of the Pahouin. The Mintangan, who actually came from the niam bekôn, the land of the dead, brought with them a genuine theological revolution, a heresy to which their material wealth gave a sure guarantee. The psychological repercussions must have been considerable.

Nowadays one hears it currently said that "Mebe'e is the old name [788] for Zambe," and the latter seems to be permanently established in his usurped role (1); the traditions connected with the two personages

1. Good, the first American missionary among the Boulou, was nicknamed "Ngôô Zambé," Zambe's ransom, which may have been not merely an approximation of his name.

are inextricably mixed with Christian contributions, to such a degree that we may speak of a new theogony being formed in the syncretist cults and in some Christian schismatic movements.

b. Ancestor Cult, Totem, Spirits

769 We have seen that practically no worship was offered to the creator Mebe'e, only to Zambe (Nzame), the first ancestor, who was invoked as the father of all. But resort to Zambe was rather exceptional; people first asked for help, meya'ale, or protection, akam, from the nearest ancestors, bimvam.

The most characteristic form of the ancestor cult was the biéri (biéti), particularly well developed among the southernmost tribes and especially among the true Fang. Its priest was the living ancestor, the father, esa, and it had an acting hierarchy corresponding to the different levels of the social structure and the clan organization, a hierarchy of a religious rather than political character, as the authority which was derived from it being primarily /one of/ reverence. The main cult equipment consisted of the skulls of male ancestors, which the father, the senior, guarded in a basket, évora biéri (évolé biéti), a kind of ark which the family group carried with it during its migrations. It was a fig-bark cylindrical box, decorated with beads and clan emblems (mindem); on the cover was a statuette of the first ancestor. The évora biéri was kept on a sort of altar (the view of which was étyi to women and the uninitiated) placed either in the hut of the head of the family or in a special hut. The évora was transported in a case of delicate basketwork, guarded by armed initiates. The skulls were painted with baa and sometimes decorated with copper or bead inlay.

769 When a younger son established a new village, the founder's skull was the first to be placed in the ark: the village he had left kept the skulls of the preceding ancestors of the lineage. Hence it may be imagined that the custodian of the lineage skulls had a certain amount of authority, delegated by the ancestors of higher rank, over the heads of splinter families, while he himself was somehow /111/ subordinate to the custodian of the ancestral skulls common to the segment, and so, one after the other ascending and descending the genealogical trees, from Zambe, departed and yet alive, to the living émvam of the last generation.

When a family split up without a quarrel, the senior, ntôl, of the new group received from his ésa, in place of the skulls which were supposed to stay with the original segment, a statuette containing fragments of ancestral bones, phalanges, teeth, or cranial bones.

769 The figure was placed on the new group's first family altar, and so afterwards were the skulls of the founder and of the benya bôtô of succeeding generations. A full biéti basket was the sign of a group's [554] antiquity, which doubtless implied prestige more than genuine authority, yet nevertheless represented the nearest approach to political authority that existed in the Fang group, particularly if one takes into account the fact that officials of interclan associations were chosen from among the owners of many skulls, whence prestige extended to a large number of mvôk or meyom. The prestige of the living was exerted through the authority of the dead.

[826] Skulls were, indeed, the seat or receptacle of the individual's capacity for action (we must remember that bo = to make, boo = brain), and the use of skulls in the practice of magic was not confined to ancestral skulls only: the skulls of enemies killed in battle or sacrificed in anthropophagous ceremonies before or afterward were preserved, and so were those stolen from neighbors. In the same way the skulls of the kinds of animals desired were used for hunting rites. However, it seems that a distinction was made between family skulls and outsiders' skulls, only the first having a place in the éwolé biéti and [782] appearing in family rites. The power of the skulls was increased by sprinkling them with sacrificial blood.

769 When a youth reached nya môtô age he had to learn to recognize 869 his ancestors so as to be able to ask for their help when the occasion 881 arose. Their skulls were shown to him until he could identify them individually and put them in the correct genealogical order. When he was able to do this, he was given a brew of the narcotic herb alan, [276] then spent a night in the biéti hut, facing the skulls, which had been removed from the éwolé and placed on the altar on which strongly scented plants were burned. During the night the ancestors appeared and gave him a cognomen and imposed one or more new taboos (at the same time he was relieved of certain prohibitions connected with age). Apparently it was during this initiation that his individual totem was revealed (if it was indeed a totem).

769 This question of the totem is very poorly elucidated, in spite of 614 some 600 pages devoted to the subject by Father Trilles. He dis- 114 tinguishes between clan, segment, individual, family, and society totems, etc. He also distinguishes a tutelary being, mvame, from the "effect of a tutelary being"; akam, an animal totem, from a dedicated animal or an incarnation of a man in an animal, etc. He

789 also discriminates between the ésayoñ, ancestor cult /112/, and the 64 mvamayoñ, totemic cult. It must be admitted that there is now no 114 chance of obtaining a cross-checking of his theories except on points of detail, although that is no formal condemnation of his theories; it is the consequence of a shortage of researchers, lack of respect on the part of the researchers, or loss of traditions of initiation. The following points may be considered as established:

mvam (émvam) connotes ideas of a forefather, dead or alive, lineal and protective.

[784] akam, protection, is sometimes used in speaking of animals, to indicate the reason for a prohibition; the verb kam having a defending-protecting meaning as well as that of forbidding-prohibiting.

All prohibitions are not tied up with these notions, but some are and they may well be individual prohibitions as well as hereditary collective ones, not necessarily involving animals.

Clan markings, mindem, and tattoo marks, mindan, are often connected with a prohibition.

825 There is a whole system of animal symbolism, evident particularly [787] in tales and augury ("zoomancy," divination by spiders).

Certain animals are connected with initiation cults: very definitely the sɔ̂ and snakes (dendraspis and python); probably the porcupine and tortoise (with feminine rites); perhaps the gorilla (njil; ngil, Johnson's tone 4, the ngil rite having tone 5).

[55] There does not appear to be any connection between an animal name borne by a person (Mvɔ̂mɔ̂ = Python, Zo'o = Elephant, Ze = Panther, etc.) and the prohibitions he is subject to.

Moreover, the following, it seems pretty certain, are not specifi-64 cally related to totemism:
825 Alliance, élat or ngbwa, between a person and a particular animal.

A sorcerer's employing an animal, nkuk (observe that nkuk also means "mask") to carry out his sorcery at a distance.

[175] The incarnation of a sorcerer in the body of an animal, élañela (Trilles applies this name to the nkuk).

The temporary incarnation of a dead man in an animal's body.

The first three phenomena often seem to be confused in the minds of present-day Pahouin, and the fourth may be the consequence of this.

773 It is curious that the legend recounted by Trilles about the crocodile, which he considers to be the "national totem," represents 773 the animal pursuing the ancestors of the Fang in order to devour them, while the legendary history of migration collected in the north shows, on the contrary, the crocodile enabling the tribe to cross the Osoé Nnanga (the python performs this service for the Beti).

776 The observation made by the authors quoted on the "unsuperstitious" character of the Pahouin and of the slight development /113/ of "fetishism" among them is to be related to the almost total absence in their mythology of beings intermediary between God and man, genii or demigods.

774 Aside from the bivur, to be discussed in connection with sorcery, there are only the bingungur (Fang)(Boulou, bingôngôt) shown in some 825 legends as kinds of ogres or ghouls haunting forests and attacking travelers. According to another interpretation, these rather are evil animals endowed with intelligence and malevolence beyond that of normal members of their species, perhaps animal sorcerers. The inoffensive aardvark, mvômesila, is thus very much feared; also a sort of very rare Pithecanthropus (Fang, éngure; Boulou, éngu'u) and a mermaid, the mammywôta of the coast, no doubt a lamantin /or manatee/. For Trilles, the éngungure is a "spirit, often transformed into an animal, which sorcers obey"; may there not be a confusion here with the évur (Boulou, évu)?

775 As for ghosts, bekôn, it might be said that there are good ones 769 but no nice ones. One may usually get on with the kôn of a properly buried forebear who was respected in his lifetime and even obtain useful services from him, formerly paid for by sacrifices and libations 772 to his skull and often today by candles, Masses, or prayers (I have 777 known Protestants to go to Catholic missionaries for exorcism). There is more difficulty /in dealing/ with the kôn of a sorcerer or with that of a stranger neither whose name nor whose skull is in one's possession.

266 Lawful /non criminelle/ anthropophagy probably had for an end, among others, that of acquiring power over the bekôn of enemies and perhaps of assimilating the rights they derived from their ancestors. This wartime cannibalism appears to have existed especially on the geographical fringes of the group and particularly along the invasion front, among the Fang proper, the vanguard of the migration. A relative or affinal kin was never eaten, only strangers, and these only by warriors (or sometimes by sons of warriors killed by the enemy). It is worth noting that for the cannibalism of the Fang and Oyéba only the "Gabonese" felt the terror described by all explorers. The 266 Boulou and Ntoumou, who often fought the Fang, do not accuse them of cannibalism, which seems to prove that this /practice/ was restricted to "foreign" wars, to conquests. Intestinal cannibalism was held in horror and practiced only by sorcerers, often called bedi bôt, man-eaters. Di niem, usually translated as "soul eating," means literally "to eat the thoracic organs" and may be applied to outright material consumption of these internal organs. On the other hand, the anthropophagy or "necropophagy" that might be qualified as homeopathic, which consists of swallowing in a biaň (mbiaň) a tiny amount, often as ash, of an ancestor's or an initiate's body, has nothing criminal about it and apparently used to be part of all important rites. /113/ From this point of view, the communion meal of the body of the ań, if this rite is truly totemic, represented perhaps manducation of the ancestor.

As for gastronomic cannibalism, it is a story for the picture papers. Not only man's flesh but even that of anthropoids, aside from the cases mentioned above, is absolutely taboo /the plural bityi is used here. —Tr./, and accidental consumption or consumption enforced 268 by absolute necessity (for instance, if hunters are marooned by a flood) entails rigorous purification.

c. Elements of Cosmogony

272 Our knowledge of the traditional world view is largely conjectural too, for the reasons already pointed out. We may state with reasonable certainty two fundamental concepts:

Orientation of space and time referred to the apparent movement of the sun; perhaps it would be better to speak of space-time, as the two ideas are closely connected.

The principle described by Stoll as "double symmetry," which could also be called "sexual complementarity" and summed up as the equilibrium in tension of all elements of the universe /creation/.

These two concepts are, as things stand, tied together if not inseparable.

Time and space flow from east to west in a declining movement. East is ñim, upstream, high, and male; west, nke, is downstream, low, and female. The earth, si, is surrounded by water, or rather, enclosed by water and darkness, /thus/, ndim = blind; mendim =

[120] water; dim • to terminate, to extinguish, to sink (in connection with [123] a star); dimi • to get lost; dip • to close; dibi • dark, opaque. (According to Trezenem, the world is surrounded by the river ɛ́ndam, a word related to ndam • width, wide.) The darkness of the east is black (cf. the name of the land of origin, mvɔ̂ ɛ́kanga • country of high white clouds; low dark rain clouds are minkut); the darkness of the west is white, the feminine color, white, moreover, being the color of mourning and death. The bekɔ̂n are white, at least those that remain on earth; those admitted to Zambe's village are red.

In relation to the east-west axis, north is on the right, mbo mɔ̂m, male side, south is on the left, mbo ngal, female side. The dividing line between north and south is the Sanaga (Ɔ̂ɔ́ Nnanga • white river, river of the albinos) crossed by the python, mvɔ̂m, who is also the rainbow (though a Fang tradition in eastern Gabon mentions a river, the Evindi, that is, "black"). North is connected with red (1), the masculine /115/ and festival color. South is also noon, midday, zane mos, and the zenith, yɔ̂ne ɔ̂p (yɔ̂p • sky, high, height; ɔ̂p sun, in Fang, dɔ̂); it is the side of light, vian, sunlight, or ɛ́fufup, brightness.

[122]

1. Evindi, ɛ́fumulu, and ɛ́vele, "black," "white," and "red," are the only names of colors in the language. They are applied to the near shades: a grey is "white" or "black," a blue or green is "black," ochre or light brown is "red," light yellow is "white," etc. For greater exactness, similes are used —so'obon, "aquatic moss," for green, ɔ̂p, "sun," "egg yolk," for orange or yellow —or loan words like "blue."

The sky, yɔ̂p, seems to be supported by an iron post (akɔ̂ • post [121] or spear, a masculine symbol) held by the sister-wife of Zambe, Nyingon Mebe'e. The sky appears both masculine and feminine, like the earth; the sun is masculine, the moon feminine.

Thus we come to define two opposing directions or sectors on the compass card: the N/E quadrant is male; the S/W quadrant is female —the two others seem to be neuter. The NE-SW diameter bisects the two opposite angles and would represent the axis of migration, mfa'a maŋ, "toward the sea." The masculine direction seems to have been the place of origin of the ye (feminine?) clans, the feminine direction, that of the ésa clans. Trilles places with the latter the ébi clans, which are, geographically, from eastern clans; I wonder if they ought not rather to be connected with the ye clans since ébi means "hole," "chasm" (yee = valley, ravine). In the bilaba, masculine commodities come from the female sector, and vice versa.

These apparent contradictions would be resolved by applying the principle of double symmetry, or of sexual complementarity, similar to that which makes paternal, nonuterine half brothers called bobenyaŋ, "my mother's sons." This principle might be expressed somewhat as follows: every being capable of life must, in order to exist and be complete, include the opposite sex. In other words, bisexuality, a universal vital principle, should be found in every part of the universe /création/. Stoll finds proof of this in the language, where the tone levels in his view constitute genuine differentiation by grammatical sex genders, and especially in the rites whose purpose appears to be not to make men entirely masculine or women entirely feminine, but rather to give to each sex the necessary complement of the opposite sex.

Whatever may be thought of this theory, it is a fact that, because of the apparent or real absence of grammatical sex gender in the language, the majority of the early writers, even Trilles, did not attach enough importance to real gender, to the sex actually attributed to objects, particularly to magical and ritual materials. We know that spear, akoŋ, saber, fa, and probably the large drum, mbad, are male; calabashes and cooking pots, rattles (mengoŋ), the double bell (nkeŋ) are female; the drum-telephone, nkul, is androgynous; horns for medicaments, minlak, are male at the pointed end, female at the hollow end, and the same with the rifle. As to numbers, my conclusions are diametrically opposed to those of Stoll, who believes even numbers to be male, and odd, female, though admittedly he advances as proof the large part played by odd numbers in feminine rites, which runs directly counter to his theory of double symmetry.

The numerical system is in any event only imperfectly known. Counting is based on 10, with traces of an 8:10, (awom), basis /116/ and of 8, mwom, /having?/ perhaps the same root as different classifiers. The so number is 9. Nyin, 4, seems related to a YI 80 radical with feminine connotations (yi = to wish, also meaning "to need," "to cry"; it conveys an idea of "desiring," in contrast to kɔ̂mbɔ̂, related to kɔ̂m = to arrange, put in order, do properly, and bo = to do, make, conveying an idea of "will"; the passive form of yi, yian, means both "duty" and "to be well," "to suit"). Much research needs to be done while there is still time.

d. Sorcery, Possession

Malignant sorcery, ngbwel, is generally attributed to a sorcerer, 75 nnem (plur: beyem, cf. yem = to know, to dream), being possessed by a malevolent being, an évu (Fang, évur, évus). The évu is not an 85 immaterial spirit but a living being, an animal like a crab or centipede, and lodging in the internal organs of the nnem. At an autopsy it is often found in the form of a polyp or tumor, a fibroid tumor in women. It may even happen that the nnem's body does not show such an indication, because the évu has escaped, but there will be some traces of it, fluids, distention of the stomach, colon, or gall bladder. 76 In such cases, as has been said, the corpse is not buried in the usual manner but is burned, thrown into a river, or buried at a crossroads far from the village, in order to prevent the nnem's kɔ̂n from returning to haunt relatives and neighbors.

The possessed person may be unaware of the possession, but he is held no less responsible for the harm caused by the évu. The latter goes out at night while the nnem is asleep and feeds on the blood, metyi, hence strength, tyi of its victims, who fall ill, grow weak and die, or it eats their nlem (heart and lungs), which brings on madness or mental decay and often death, too. The évu also feeds on eggs, on metyi /sic/, and on milk, preferably women's milk (menyãn, from nyãn = to give the breast, cf. -nyãn = mother, in compound words), food which village people will not touch. When the évu has trouble in getting food, it may turn against the nnem and kill it for nourishment or, if the nnem is a woman, it may attack the children in her womb. Aside from these occasions, ngbwel is an advantage to the nnem, even when it is unconscious; he benefits from the strength accumulated by the évu during its nocturnal hunts; furthermore, the évu assists him, brings a sort of luck to his undertakings, which is natural, since the évu gains from the nnem's intermediation. This 77 kind of luck, asɛ́ɛ́ (from a verb, sɛ́ɛ́, with like meaning: a nga sɛ́ɛ́ 754 777 akum = he has become rich by ngbwel), is to be distinguished from ordinary, accidental luck, ma'a, by its lasting character, which soon arouses public suspicion — this is one of the visible symptoms of ngbwel.

754 683 The involuntary nnem was generally put to death, more easily than the conscious sorcerer, who knew how to protect himself. Nevertheless, it was possible to treat a nnem, by means of a very drastic purification involving physiological as well as psychological catharsis and sometimes by real surgical operations /117/, to which in most cases the patient succumbed. Today the European administration usually prevents the execution of beyem, but their relatives often succeed in persuading them to kill themselves. After an epidemic of meningitis at Ambam in 1948, two men and two young women, [731 762] accused by a bwiti diviner of having caused the death of a dozen children by involuntary ngbwel, threw themselves into the N'Tem within the month. In former times, beyem were burned by being covered with wood in such a way as to prevent both the évu and their nsisim from escaping; they were also drowned or buried alive, preferably in the bed of a stream that had been diverted and was then turned back to its old course after the burial.

754 The conscious nnem is both more and less dangerous. Bound to his évu by a kind of pact, he directs its activity instead of allowing it to kill at random as the unconscious nnem does. Therefore, he is more dangerous to his enemies but less so to his kin, although the concluding and maintenance of the alliance with the évu requires him to sacrifice members of his family.

A nnem with a strong personality, tyi anen a niem ayet, with great strength and a hard heart, can succeed in really controlling his évu and making it a servant that will procure him wealth and power, rid him of his enemies, and confer supernatural powers on him, such as the ability to be in two places at once /bilocation/, to move objects from a distance /telekinesis/, divination, etc. But ngbwel always remains a dangerous art. First of all, the nnem knows that he is condemned after death to be a white kôn, forbidden to cross the ékanga bekôn, the bridge of the dead, to seek the ancestors, mañ ayat, beyond the sea. There are immediate dangers, in addition to that final condemnation. First, the ever present risk that the évu will dominate the nnem and weaken the latter. Next, the risk of a kind of reaction if the évu attacks a stronger nnem or a mie well protected by a bian provided with white magic. Finally, /there is the risk/ of the évu or the animal employed as assistant being killed during a skirmish, which would bring about the nnem's death.

Many people nevertheless regard these disadvantages as weighing little against the immediate advantages which the évu procures. Therefore some bemie (people without évu) have themselves initiated into ngbwel, and some beyem dedicate their children from birth (which has the additional effect of protecting them against the parent's évu). For this purpose beyem organize into secret societies (and these are really secret societies), well described by Trilles and particularly so by Lavignotte (no. 155).

Babies are dedicated by a nnem kinsman in a ceremony, aka'é, before the umbilicus is healed (the évu is believed to enter through the umbilical lesion). A special taboo is imposed on the child, and a part of his body (finger, toe or even foot, hand or whole arm) is symbolically sacrificed to the évu with a slight letting of blood. From that time on, only the shade of the sacrificed part, its semblance, is believed to continue to exist. The child is then nkôman ngbwel /118/, prepared for the ngbwel, but he is not yet a nnem; if he were it would be discovered at the preliminary stage of the adolescent initiation, and he would be put to death. It is only at the time of initiation with the official rites that he becomes a sorcerer, kuli ngbwel, through a further ceremony during which his "godparents" reveal to him that he has been "prepared," dedicated. He must then buy back the bodily part "sacrificed" at the aka'é by offering his "godparents" the body of a member of his family, killed and eaten by the beyem in circumstances about which little is known. What is known suggests some of the sexual aspects of European witches' sabbaths (apparently participants of both sexes, naked, practiced sodomy, biéti, and profaned the ancestral relics, probably fragments of biéti). The initiation of an adult consists only of the akuli ngbwel, the aka'é being resricted to children.

Beyem meet periodically, aside from initiation ceremonies, in order to "feed the bivu" in anthropophagous or necrophagous meals accompanied by obscene rituals. These meetings take place at the new moon in secret places in the forest, usually in clearings on top of hills or on islands in marshes — mmimie are afraid of stumbling by chance on one of these spots which, according to some of my informants, are guarded between meetings by an aardvark, mvômesila. If such a place is discovered, a nnengali is immediately called in to perform a sort of exorcism.

perform a sort of exorcism. Sorcerers seem to be convened to these meetings by secret messages in the form of bundles of sticks notched according to a particular code, or in the form of the quipu. They are believed to reach the meetings by levitation or by sending only their nisim while their bodies remain at home in a state of apparent death. This offers a good chance of getting rid of the sorcerer by burning his body, the disadvantage being that the nisim survives, as does the ɛ́vu, and that they than can be incarnated in an animal, which cannot happen if the sorcerer is burnt alive.

The ɛ́vu may use various methods of moving about outside the nnem's body. Sometimes he leaves it in an invisible and immaterial form, but this method is exceptional. Most often he enters the body of an animal, generally a leopard, but sometimes a black make, civet cat, gorilla, or chimpanzee, or even certain insects; the list is unlimited, but nearly always the animal in question is powerful or dangerous. The carrier-animal is then almost invulnerable, endowed both with human intelligence and with the powers of an ɛ́vu. It is, however, possible to strike at it, with luck and good mebiak, and any injury to the ɛ́vu rebounds on the sorcerer. On the other hand, injury to a sorcerer during the ɛ́vu's absence is not necessarily fatal to the latter, because the ɛ́vu can survive in the body of the vehicle-animal. The latter is called nkuk (1), which can also mean "mask." It is not clear whether there is a confusion /119/ with the ɛ́lɔ̃ɔ̃ɛ́la, as Trilles suggests, or with animal-bekôn, or with those who are beyem on their own account, or even with bingongôt (bingungure).

1. Among the Ewondo, this term also denotes the good bekôn who appear in dreams to give advice to the living. (J.B.)

These seems to exist alongside ngwel a /kind of/ sorcery connected with abé nlem or mbia nlem, malignity of the heart, and having nothing to do with possession by the bivu. Thus practitioners of kôn, which consists of killing a person while leaving his body alive (see above, p. 134), would not necessarily be beyem in the strict sense. Likewise, many malevolent activities are only criminal deviations from permissible magic. Alliance with an animal, or incarnation in the body of an animal, or even the transformation of a magician into an animal, need not be malevolent or only becomes so 754 as a result of the magician's natural spitefulness (ézezam = wickedness, disorder; nielaŋ = malevolence, from élaŋ = an evil act committed expressly and without necessity: a woe bot elan = he who kills for pleasure, ndan of the begôvina* from the German occupation until the present). A protective biaŋ against the beyem can be used against an innocent mie, a magical weapon, a spell against a brother. Such an action may constitute not only an étom, a delict, but also a nsem, a breaking of taboo, when initiation into magical technique included a prohibition against using it for evil ends. The same thing holds for the use of certain methods, illegal or immoral in themselves, even when the purpose is permissible or morally good: this is the case with the biaŋ for /ensuring/ conjugal fidelity, which consists of the husband having his wife drink his sperm; with that for curing an illness by transferring it to another person (transfer to an animal or plant is permissible); with the use of certain mebiaŋ for fertility, etc. The commonest acts of sorcery do not belong in the ngbwel category (and perhaps also in that of the kôn) and would lead simply to a "civil" suit, neither more nor less than a case of assault and battery or a [68] "manual" homicide. Ngbwel, on the contrary, is always a capital crime, provided that the nnem be not too powerful to escape judgment or punishment.

*/No footnote is given to this puzzling phrase, but "begôvina" may mean "government people." —Tr./

e. Permissible Magic, Divination, Medicine

759 The first aim of licit magic is to fight against sorcerers, especially beyem, but that is only one of its aspects. In fact, it extends to all life's activities, and everyone uses it to a greater or less extent, aside from the specialists, ngengaŋ or ngaŋ, magician, mvimvi'i, diviner, mbibian, healer, and nyia bia, singer (1).

[143] 1. Among the Ewôndo there used to be a sort of priest, nzomelo, often a chief, who received the first fruits of maize, blessed sowings, and presided over the ancestor cult. (J.B.)

787 Magic appears to be a technique for making use of the strength, tyi, contained in every element of the universe /création/, which everyone has more or less the capacity, ngul, to employ. Elementary magic is taught within the family, advanced magic /is taught/ in associations, by experienced practitioners and also, nowadays, through /120/ correspondence with European charlatans. All initiations include a course in magic, all associations possess a body of specialists.

787 Divination, mvi'i, and medicine, mboan mebiañ, are to magic in general what in Europe the special branches are to general medicine. [791] Every ngengañ is a diviner and physician, but he may consult a colleague more specialized in one of those branches.

Everyone learns from childhood on to interpret everyday omens, which are mostly taken from "zoomancy:" the flight or song of certain birds, meeting certain animals in certain circumstances, etc. The interpretation of the movements of the victim of a family sacrifice, the abôp spider oracle, asking the advice of ancestors by means of the narcotic herb alañ, (iboga), require that /a person/ be already initiated. Oracles by water, sand or gravel, or conducting minkal tests require much deeper knowledge.

759 The same holds for medicine. Everyone knows the ordinary mebiañ, but for serious cases people must turn to a mbibiañ. The word biañ, usually translated "medicament," "greegree," even "fetish," indicates not only the drug, a pharmaceutical product, but also the whole of a magical act, including the chanting and dancing associated with it for grave illnesses. Pharmacopeoia and therapy proper, to some extent investigated by Baudre, Weber, and Chabeuf in the Cameroons and by Gascón in Spanish Guinea, are or were quite copious. Not only did the mbibiañ know many substances with a mainly vegetable base, but they also knew how to perform several surgical operations [762] —reduction of fractures and dislocations, incision and drainage of deep abcesses, amputations, excision of certain tumors, and perhaps trepanning. But obviously there was a great deal of pure magic mixed up with this practical medicine, and the majority of mebiañ, if they had a therapeutic effect, owed it largely to psychosomatic reactions—which is not peculiar to Pahouin medicine.

791 Aside from medicine and divination and the combating of sorcerers, the essential role of the mingengañ consisted of influencing the shaping of the destiny of the group or of the individuals, if not in controlling their destiny. The powers of high initiates to some extent 791 suggest those of the sorcerers they were fighting, as do some of their procedures. Like them, /high initiates/ were capable of telekinesis and bilocation, etc. Trilles gives numerous examples, some of which he claims to have observed himself. Like /sorcerers, initiates/ could transform themselves into animals or make use of a dedicated animal, élañela. They killed people from a distance, especially by casting a spell on a token /temoin, "witness"/ of the classical type, or by acting directly upon people with their power, ngul, by forcing them to submit to their will. Like sorcerers, also, they could be victims through repercussion.

Considering the circumstances, it is not surprising that /121/ magicians and sorcerers have often been confused, nor that some magicians have been led into making evil use of their knowledge, nor, [754] finally, that contemporary associations, like the mbuti (bwiti), intended to combat sorcery, have borrowed its methods, even in their criminal aspects.

533 789 In addition to the magicians proper, there is the singer, ñyia bia, who plays an important role in all rites, including initiations. Every important rite and ceremony has its musical accompaniment, with a specific orchestra for the occasion, and a choirmaster, who leads the incantations and acts somewhat as a master of ceremonies, without himself participating directly in the sacrifice or the magical act. It is peculiar to the ñyia bia that he is present at the three major rites, sô, ngil, and ndôngô, as at all magic ceremonies, no matter what his affiliation; apparently he is not liable to the prohibitions concerning participation affecting nesé bôt, ordinary or profane people. He [424] buys and sells or inherits his songs, is not assigned to a caste /n'est pas caste/, yet seems to have enjoyed a certain immunity during the wars of former times, but this may only have been the case with the most celebrated of the beyia bia. There are also female beyia bia, who enjoy the same prerogatives in feminine rites.

778 789 Magical equipment consists, first, of the instruments appropriate to each rite, drums, horns, rattles, bells, the ngôma harp of the bwiti, etc., with a great variety of additional diverse objects: fly-[534] whisks, akpwassa, sometimes mutilated; antelope horns filled with mebiañ; human and animal skulls and bones; pots and calabashes; engraved and decorated magician's spears; masks; the bwiti broken mirror; bikpwélé (iron "bride-price money"); shells, etc. Every magical act, every rite, has its own properties, the complete description of which would require a separate monograph for each. We

778 shall merely point out that part of this equipment, permanently assigned 789 to magical use, is étyi, taboo to the uninitiated and sometimes even to other mingengan than the owner, that certain objects become bityi after having once been used for this purpose, while others are returned to ordinary use, and others are destroyed after use.

f. Prohibitions

784 Prohibitions, bityi, assume a large place in Pahouin life. Martrou (no. 159) has devoted a special study to them, which is very well documented but still incomplete, because of their number and diversity.

The word étyi comes from the root TYI/KI, conveying an idea of strength (cf. above, p. 133), of authority, and also of cutting, hence of prohibition; /for example, / tyik = to cut, kill, slice, decide; tyili = to render taboo; tyii = to have a taboo (étyi is the nominal-resulting form of the last verb); tyilan = to be taboo. /122/

A complete listing of the bityi is probably impossible, but a brief classification may be attempted by distinguishing /the following/:

Food prohibitions and prohibitions of actions.

Among prohibitions of actions there are those protecting certain animals, marriage prohibitions, and general sexual prohibitions.

Individual prohibitions and collective prohibitions.

Hereditary prohibitions and personal prohibitions.

Temporary and permanent prohibitions.

Masculine, feminine, and age-grade prohibitions.

Ordinary prohibitions (zesé bityi) and capital prohibitions, bityi awu (mortal ones).

All together they form a sort of network that covers every act, [777] every phase of individual and social conduct. Mission activity and general development have caused some to disappear or have lessened the immediate consequences of infractions, minsem, but enough remain with sufficient sanction to influence the whole of day-to-day life.

[778] A nsem, a breaking of a prohibition, has various consequences, ranging from a slight illness to death, and almost always carrying with it public reprobation. The nsem may be unconscious, the culprit being unaware that his act was taboo for him, either because he had not been taught so or because the étyi had been imposed without his knowledge by a magician.

788 Some bityi appear to be connected with totemism; these are the bityi mekam, protective prohibitions, forbidding members of certain clans to kill certain animals or to eat certain plants. Others are undoubtedly connected with the social structure, like sex or age-grade prohibitions, the breaking of which strike at the family hierarchy. Others may be described as hygienic prohibitions, like those connected with pregnancy, illness, or convalescence. There are prohibitions connected with magic: personal taboos vis-à-vis some animal seen in a dream after a family initiation, or imposed when joining an association; prohibitions pronounced by a magician, often out of revenge; prohibitions undertaken as vows to obtain a specific result. Among the Beti, Binet has known women to impose on themselves certain [489] food etyi for a year, at the end of which time there is a party where [177] they collect many presents from their relatives and friends. This seems to be an innovation and perhaps represents a deviation from certain Catholic practices.

[614] It seems that in former times, following a war or an alliance, or in connection with an awusô relationship, two clans might undertake to respect one another's clan taboo. Besides, married women, although they did not enter the husband's clan, were supposed to some extent to respect its bityi.

783 Minsem can be expiated by redemption, nsôm, according to 787 different rites (étyi, melan among men, évôô among women), including public confession and sacrifice (for women, the sacrifice is made by father or husband, the woman undergoing severe corporal punishment). /123/

Some personal bityi can be raised (kui étyi = to emerge from a taboo) by a process similar to that of redemption for a nsem. This is never possible in cases of general sexual, age-grade, or clan prohibitions.

787 The first Christian converts must have shown genuine heroism in 787 giving up their bityi, since they had to overcome, not only personal fear, sometimes at the cost of real psycho-physiological crises, but also unanimous public obloquy and often the vengeance of their family, which attributed to their minsem all its misfortunes. One might say that only that first generation of Christians succeeded in abandoning the bityi almost completely. The following generations, in much greater numbers, continued to observe quite a few /bityi/, certainly all those that did not openly conflict with the practice of the /new/religion. For several years, exogamic taboos have even been observed to take on new life with a strictness that runs counter to canonical ideas about marriage (cf. above, p. 63).

g. Sorcery and Magic at the Present Time

Even in the areas longest converted to Christianity, contemporary Pahouin continue to believe in magic and sorcery, which is, moreover, not contrary to the teaching of the Scriptures. Mbibiañ compete with European or African bedôkits, mingengañ compete with exorcists, mvimvi'i with the police, and so on. Once in a while beyem still kill in order to feed their évu, and I knew a kôn practitioner who tried to make use of his skill so as to win an election.

However, since the coming of the Europeans, magic and sorcery have developed in the direction of a syncretism that is sometimes baroque. Ecclesiastical schisms do not bring about a complete return to ancient practices, but a sort of grafting of what remains onto a Christian stem, to which is often added a facile /à bon marché/ esotericism borrowed from mages and fakirs of metropolitan France. Talismans, perfumes guaranteed to inspire love, and magical jewelry arrive by the hundredweight in each mail from France. Initiations that had died out are being revived in the form of parodies of the Mass or of ordination, or even of hazings often obscene. What was most valuable in the native pharmacopoeia is being more and more neglected in favor of modern preparations used at random, with only the magical aspect surviving, emptied of its old meaning and therefore of its functional character.

Admittedly, Christianity has "caught on" in the country, just as European medicine has—the question is, just how deeply. In any event it is certain that old practices, overthrown as they may have been, survive nonetheless in new form, fluid and changing and still far from stabilized. The result is a continual uneasiness, a crisis in adaptation, of which the outcome is unpredictable.

Leaving aside any religious or ideological position, /124/ it does, however, seem possible to say as of now that one of the most revolutionary contributions of the missions has been to make women participate in the same religious cult as men.

4. Arts and Literature

531 The principal form of plastic art used to be sculpture, in wood or steatite. Aside from masks for associations, especially for the ngil, figures of ancestors, full-length figures or simply masks, and figures for ritual ceremonies were carved. Drums, seats, crossbows, sometimes imported chests, were decorated in demirelief. The features of a mask were only slightly indicated, the attitude of figures was rather stiff, while subjects in demirelief, particularly animals, were often very lively.

531 177 The sculptors were initiates of the different rites and with the decline of the latter, traditional sculpture has largely disappeared, to be replaced by work in wood or ivory in the Barbes /?/ or Saint-Sulpice style /the implication of the second is of the commercial religious art sold in shops near the St.-Sulpice in Paris. —Tr./, thanks to the work of schools and missions. An interesting project at the professional school in Ebolowa, under the director, Lecoq, between 1946 and 1950, has had no sequel. However, there are a few indications that allow hope for the rise of a Christian art that will perhaps be original, alongside the commercial sculpture for tourists, which is extremely flourishing.

This conclusion holds good for painting, since some frescoes in Catholic chapels, particularly in Ewondo country, appear to be manifestations of a new art. Furthermore, painting is at present the popular art par excellence, in the form of frescoes inside and outside houses. Aside from religious subjects, one often sees paintings of animals, family scenes, portraits of local or world celebrities. A Boulou from Sangmélima, David Monewoso, has established the features of the heroes of the novel Nnanga Mon in numerous frescoes throughout Boulou country. All this constitutes something new, because traditional art made little use of painting in this form. Huts were more likely to be decorated with geometrical figures with an esoteric meaning, in nothing but the three traditional colors, red, black, and white. Drawing was mostly represented by engraved designs, made with burin or red-hot iron on wooden objects, sometimes by charcoal drawings done on walls or rocks.

20 Literature was solely oral until the colonial period. It is not, however, accurate to say that the Pahouin were completely ignorant of writing. Aside from the quipu (biall zezeghe —? —, according to 212 Largeau /sic/) and the mekutu alek, bundles of little sticks making it possible to communicate in code, they had a kind of pictography, ntilan, with tens, if not hundreds, of signs, mindem. These we know (insufficiently) from the counters used in the abia game, a kind of 524 tarots, used as a game as much as for predicting the future; the pieces 787 were made of the seeds, or rather the pods, of a mimosa common in 889 the forest (Tetrapleura /125/ thonningii, according to Trilles). These signs had a surface meaning, understood by all, and an esoteric meaning, restricted to initiates. They made it possible if not to write down traditions as a whole, at least to draw up a kind of aid to memory to be used by the beyia bia. They also enabled scouts to leave messages for a main body of fighters that followed. Each clan, 304 each family had its own ndem, sometimes depicted in its tattoo mark, ndan, which thus constituted a sort of coat of arms.

538 The old literature included stories or tales, minlan, songs, bia, and chronicles, minkañete.

Trilles is responsible for collecting most of the tales (no. 165), which often took the form of fabliaux whose hero was none other than Ol' Br'er Terrapin, Kulu (emphatic or personal form of kul), the earth tortoise (Cinyxis erosa), surrounded by Beme, the wild pig, stupid and gluttonous, Ze, the panther, mean and cunning, its princi- 325 pal enemy; Zo'o, the elephant, the king of beasts; Abûp, the spider, artful and obliging; and the majority of the other forest animals (except, it seems, snakes, which no one ever likes to mention). Kulu, thanks to his shrewdness, always ends by getting out of the holes in which his caustic spirit or the old hostility between him and Ze have put him. Tales of magicians were also told, or stories about the conjugal mishaps of supposed ancestors. All such tales were in the public domain and were recited by anyone who felt competent. This was also the case with the puzzles and riddles that young people put to one another as a kind of flirtation.

533 Songs, however, were performed by specialists, even aside from ritual or magical songs. Some were used to accompany dances; they represented the most complete form of musical expression, with the tone of the words supposed to fit the music while being related to the movements of the dance. There are still beyia bia competent to lead a dance of this kind by improvisation, but they are few and very expensive. There also still exist players of the mvet (harp-guitar), whose repertory includes, beside the old sung legends, some modern 533 skits, often satirical, sometimes to the accompaniment of European tunes that have been adapted to the instrument. Choral song, finally, is very popular, using imported tunes that are often considerably improved by the native interpretation which makes extensive use of fugue and counterpoint. Unfortunately, these modern airs are not suited to the tonal system of the language, which they tend to impair when words are adapted to them.

538 173 527 Chronicles, minkaffete, of which the salutations, mebatan, were in a way summaries, were part of traditional training and were recited only on solemn occasions. They are falling into oblivion because of the considerable demands they made upon the memory and because of the time necessary for learning them by heart, without mentioning the fact that they contained incomprehensible passages, perhaps borrowed from tribes that were neighbors of the Pahouin before their great migration. /126/

177 536 The systems of transcription introduced by missionaries were first used to translate the Scriptures and to compose hymns, which have not always had a good effect upon the language but have nonetheless become classics in spite of the mistakes and improprieties they often contain. After these works produced by Europeans in the native language, there have appeared in rapid succession works composed by Pahouin writing in their own language. The most remarkable is without doubt Nnanga kôn by the Boulou, Jemba Medu, which describes Boulou life at the time of the arrival of the first white men (nnanga kôn = phantom albino). This, to my knowledge, is the only novel composed in one of the languages of the group; its popularity is prodigious, to such a degree that its characters have entered into contemporary Boulou folklore.

204 There is a missionary press in Gabon and in the Cameroons. The papers with the largest circulation are Nleb Bekristen (Christians' Guide) (Ewondo, Catholic) and Mefoé (News) (Boulou, Protestant), which is read as far afield as Gabon. The lay press in French is not of much importance and its publications moreover are usually short lived.

534 A Pahouin literature in the French language is a recent — and significant — phenomenon. Oyono and Eza Boto-Mongo Beti are both from the Cameroons; neither Gabon nor Spanish Guinea have up to now produced a novelist.

535 The dance has lost a great deal in being deprived of its old ritual character. Formerly there was a specific dance for every ceremony,

535 rite, and event in life, of which the orchestral element as well as the dance movements and costumes had a very precise symbolical meaning. Many of these dances have died out, either because they have lost their raison d'être (as with war and initiation dances, etc.) or because they have been prohibited by the administration and especially by the missions as obscene or pagan (fertility, funeral, medical dances, etc.). Those that survive have now a recreational or purely artistic character, which was only secondary before. It is [560 178] significant that the number of dances in which both sexes take part has considerably increased and that nearly all are now open to the public and may be seen by spectators of any age or sex.

In spite of this falling off, there is still a large number and variety of dances. Among the most widespread may be mentioned:

- ôzila, an old fertility dance, especially among the Fang and [534] Nitoumou; an orchestra of vertical drums, mbae and ngom, with "spoken" accompaniment of the drum-telephone, nkul; it is danced by professionals (women initiates of mevungu?) with bare torso, vegetable rattles at the ankles, unewu wildcatskin skirts, wooden masks on the left arm; the leading dancer, ôsua njem, inserts a horn into her vagina during the dance; the dancers [276] apparently drug themselves with a decoction containing (notably) Indian hemp; the missions have forbidden this dance, and this has provoked several incidents.
- menjôk, called thus because the dance is accompanied by an orchestra of balafos; it is widespread except, perhaps, among the Boulou; it is performed by the young girls and little girls of a village; each village has its own tune and special costume consisting of a belt of raffia fiber, skirt and cap in "pastry-cook" style in the village colors, with a brassière worn in Christian villages.
- 535 179 ôyengô, sometimes called njeman fulutita, a Protestant dance (it must have been inspired by Swedish gymnastics used by a German-American M. P. A. /American Presbyterian mission?/ missionary to provide a substitute for "immoral" dances; si non à vero...), found especially among the Boulou but extending into northern Gabon under the aegis of the Movement for Regrouping Pahouin; it is a dance performed by young women and girls with a male leader, nlebe njeman, who conducts with a whistle; an orchestra of drums, nkul, mbae, and ngom, rattles and flutes; chorus sung by the dancers; white dresses, a uniform headkerchief and foulard sash; the musical themes are those belonging to village, association, and clan; it is danced at civil or religious festivals, mebɔ̂k, mevak, and at bisulan (ayoñ meetings), etc.; the words are sometimes satirical.

anyeñ, a men's or (more rarely) a women's dance, similar to the above, perhaps inspired by it, but more lively. The words are often obscene, the gestures scatological (in the men's version); probably of ritual origin; one of the few male dances surviving today.

akɔ̂ma mba, danced by one or two young women; a chorus of women, with the large vertical drum, mbad; raffia fiber skirt and bare torso; an ancient ritual (marriage?) dance; it is looked at askance by the missions and is becoming rare.

asiko, a modern mixed dance, quite erotic; no costumes; percussion instruments and rattles; a mixed chorus; it is forbidden by the missionaries.

In towns, European or American dances are current under the generic name "tangõ," although the rhythm, when they are not danced to a phonograph, is rather that of a /West Indian/ beguine, often fugual.

The theatre, unknown in the past, is beginning to develop, partly under the influence of youth organizations introduced from outside. At bisulan, short farces are often put on, like morality plays, or satirical sketches related to our cabaret revues, in which there is no hesitation in scoffing at the authorities.

Chapter 7

The Process of Change

1. Local Government Organs

The disintegration characteristic of Pahouin clans makes it difficult to establish a coherent organization. The conflict between the system of personal rights and that of territorial rights is clear-cut:

631 177 insofar as he accepts an authority higher than that of the head of the family a Pahouin is dependent upon the head of his ayoñ, who may live several hundred kilometers away. This authority had a sacred character and was based on laws of consanguinity. In addition, there were, even before the coming of the Europeans, other influences at work, tending to group people no longer on a basis of kinship but on that of local relations. Among the Fong of the Cameroons, for instance, as early as 1880, a chief had brought together under his control families that belonged to different clans and involved them in expeditions against Maka villages. From among the conquered he chose some young children for himself, brought them up, and saw them settled, creating thus, outside his consanguineal family, and even outside his tribe, a group of people devoted to his person.

Therefore, upon the power of the clan there was superposed an authority that assumed an interclan and even intertribal character. Among the Beti peoples of the Yaoundé region nearly the same system was in effect. The clans had more coherence than among the Fang or the Boulou. But the chief controlled, in addition to his own mvog, conquered families, beloa or beloa bitoa, to whom he assigned land along the margins of his domain.

The transition from a system of authority based on the law of consanguinity to a territorial one is already apparent.

In the face of Pahouin lack of political order, which nullified all attempts at organization, Europeans unconsciously tried to reinforce the trend toward a territorial system of authority.

[671] Since the period of the great invasions, in fact, the jus soli has been authenticated as a basis of authority, while /the application of/ the jus sanguinis involves a thousand difficulties and makes it almost impossible to govern.

By a curious paradox, nevertheless, the presence of Europeans favored legal principles opposed to those they might have desired. The tribal wars brought about a regrouping around the victor and enabled him to carve out a domain /seigneurie/. The chaotic Pahouin migrations strained clan ties: what family relationships can survive a lengthy separation, /129/ particularly when journeys are rare and dangerous? These factors would have brought about the creation of territorial entities. Peace, on the other hand, which allowed the resumption of relations, improved mobility, and per-[621] mitted individual freedom, favored a return to the law of consanguinity; the individual person, whether young man or head of a

177 621 631 family, had a profound sense of being a member of a community scattered over several thousand square kilometers, whereas he did not feel strongly bound to his neighbor who belonged to another ayoñ.

648 631 The German colonial administration divided the country up into large chiefdoms as a solution to this difficult problem, a possible solution if the country had not been an ethnic as well as a clan maze. If the territory of the large tribes—Boulou, Banê, Ewôndo, etc.—had been a little more homogeneous, it would have been conceivable to entrust each region to a chief, at a higher level than that of clan allotments. But the confusion of peoples and their wide dispersion made any solution precarious. Authority was not always accepted without demur, and among populations with anarchistic tendencies it is not easy to build up a ruling class /aristocratie/ sufficiently sure of itself not to perpetrate abuses. There was no time for the system of large appanages to take root. Chiefs of cantons and village chiefs both rule over more limited but clear-cut territories; as representatives of the principle of jus soli their influence view with that of the clan movements embodying the jus sanguinis.

631 668 In Gabon, Pahouin leaders had the idea of mingling the two tendencies. Starting with the assumption that the villages were too small, they sanctioned a regrouping which would have allowed both stronger chiefdoms and a beginning of reassembling of clans.

The regrouping of the meyoñ does not seem to have been planned as a whole, nor does it seem that a territorial base had been thought of for each clan, which would have resolved, for the time being at least, the conflict between the law of things /droit réel/ and the law of persons /droit personnel/. Only a partial solution was considered: the establishment of large, single-clan villages (1). In fact, and in spite of the endless difficulties connected with the transfer of population, the regrouping was able to give to the chiefdom a new prestige, by confirming its character as a territorial power on the one hand, and by binding it, on the other hand, to the meyoñ traditions. In the present state of affairs, cantons and even villages

1. J. Aubame, Renaissance gabonaise /Renaissance in Gabon/, Brazzaville, 1947 (no. 171); Balandier and Pauvert (no 177).

631 include representatives of all the clans. Who then could exercise
668 authority over such a motley population, if they were to follow purely traditional rules? Various methods are used for selecting chiefs. In one place people adhere to investing the legitimate heir of the lineage of the village founder. Elsewhere, a representative of the largest ayõ is sought. Quite often, particularly in the Cameroons, the choice of chief by /130/ election is believed to allow the population to express their views, whatever the motives of selection may be. Will the village regrouping movement permit the establishment of a new, better-adapted system? A blaze of enthusiasm has gripped the Fang people, convinced that the new system will make it possible to solve all problems as by a magical formula, without sacrificing either traditional forms or individual anarchy.

In the Cameroons a few years ago the movement to regroup the meyõ appeared just as likely to bring an end to all difficulties. More bound up with traditional institutions, the meyõ organization movement set out simply to give some order to the intellectual and moral /behavioral?—Tr./ life of groups by codifying customs, taking note of traditions, and creating a collective awareness, a common clan sentiment, through periodic meetings, dances, and songs. In contrast to the movement in Gabon, the bisulan movement hardly touches upon the concrete, the economic field.

It is worth emphasizing that this movement did not question the administrative division into regions and subdivisions. The bisulan do not in fact seem to have voiced any criticism of this distinction, and the population of Dja-and-Lobo even expressed a lively wish to see Sangmélima raised to regional status and separated administratively from the N'Tem region.

In fact, though local organization at the lowest levels may not have found its bearings, at a higher level it seems to have become thoroughly incorporated in the country. When they reached Pahouin 648 country, the European powers—France, Germany, Spain—set up a 631 network of resident posts for the representatives of authority. In this country without crystallizing centers, the main town of a subdivision has become a town with a town's multiple functions, administrative, judicial, cultural (missions and schools), economic (road station, [169] trade). A study of the journeys made by the rural population of the southern Cameroons shows clearly that these towns are no longer artificial centers but genuine points of attraction. The capital of their subdivision is the goal of 37 percent of travelers. The motives indicated vary greatly: people go there for reasons connected with their jobs (1.3%), for medical care (2%), to attend to matrimonial affairs (9.5%), to visit relatives (10.5%), merely for their own pleasure (23%), to attend to business connected with the public services (civil status /état civil/, law, various public departments, in 45% of the cases). There is no need to underline the importance of contacts with the administration. So in the Cameroons it has been thought necessary to decentralize the administrative machinery further and to place it within reach of the people. The establishment of new subdivisions within the Yaoundé region and of administrative posts in Boulou country demonstrate this attitude. All this takes place as if the Pahouin, in vague resentment /131/ against the inadequacies of their traditional organization, were trying to replace them with new and foreign institutions.

6:Alexandre and Binet--166 G-S (1946-1954) 1958 Fi19 Fang Fi19

In order to prevent the population from totally committing its fate into the hands of the European organization and thereafter refusing to make any personal effort at improving their condition, the French administration has attempted, at the same time as it distributed authority throughout the country, to remove concentration at the center. Though it was beneficial to multiply the agents of the central power in contact with the population, it was even more necessary to give the people or their representatives the opportunity to manage public services and to organize the collective life.

Civil law was, therefore, largely decentralized. In addition to the first- and second-degree courts at which subdivision or regional heads /chefs de... —the implication here is of French colonial officials. —Tr./ made decisions based on custom, assisted by African assessors, there were created a great many "customary" courts whose judges were not officials. In the majority of cases, chiefs were thus appointed as presidents of customary courts, with prominent men and secretaries to help them. The number of cases dealt with allows us to believe that the reform has been beneficial. Though the nature of the suits has no bearing on the local government organization, it should, nevertheless, be mentioned for the light it throws on the points of friction that exist between individuals.

In the Cameroons the distribution was as follows: divorces, 38 percent; liberation of widows, 6 percent; adultery, 9 percent; real property rights, 17 percent. These represent the principal disputes; the probable maladjustment of matrimonial institutions provides the main portion.

Next, the establishment of urban and rural municipal councils permits financial decentralization. Towns under the term "urban communes," cantons, and sometimes whole subdivisions under the term "rural communes," received a legal character, with a domain to manage and a budget to fix. Elected councilors under an appointed mayor had to study plans for road works, to set up construction or maintenance programs, inquire into taxes? /taxes/ and assessments /imports/, and have an eye to a sound financial position.

In towns this was nothing new, but its extension to wide rural areas was an experiment. Boulou or Beti country, where there was no risk of these new methods giving offense to a strong traditional /social/ structure, was the ideal place for trying out a new /kind of/ organization.

Throughout the elections arranged to fill the posts of councilor, we can see crystallizing the most striking traits of the new élite, the characteristics of the aristocracy or oligarchy that will get itself into power.

Pessimism had expressed fear that such elections, based on almost universal suffrage, would overthrow the classical social values and impair the prestige of the present acting élite.

This point of view disregarded the fact that in a country practically without stratification, no one can keep authority without the support of public opinion. /132/ Granting the vote to vassals in a feudal society may unsettle the power of the nobility. It is quite otherwise here, where chiefs of village or canton are most commonly chosen by election.

The older men have preserved a privileged position vis-à-vis the younger generation. A comparison of the age pyramid of councilors with that of the adult male population as a whole readily shows this: (table on following page).

The younger generation is poorly represented. Mature men of thirty to forty are represented in proportion to their ratio in the total population; but men of forty to fifty or of the older age group are heavily represented. Electoral influence has not been seized by the younger men.

Neither does it appear that the poorer class, more numerous than the rich, has benefited from the ballot so as to eliminate the latter. From the point of view of the possession of a certain amount of wealth, we can assert that municipal councilors are much better off than the common people.

Distribution by Age

Age Group	Elected Municipal Councilors	Total Adult Male Population (1) (Nyong-and-Sanaga)
	Percent	Percent
20 to 30 years	9	26
30 to 40	33	29
40 to 50	37	28
Over 50	20	15

1. Evaluation made according to censuses established by the subdivisions; the documentation is not faultless but nevertheless is indicative.

The figures given below for the whole population are not definitive, but as they have been taken from a recent complete census they may be considered good approximations.

Distribution of External Signs of Wealth
(for 100 persons)

	Masonry Houses	Bicycles	Automobiles
	Percent	Percent	Percent
Municipal councilors	27	50	11
Adult male population of Ebolowa	1.4	21	0.3

Not for nothing do the Pahouin use the word nkukuma (rich) to designate a chief. The chosen leaders are the rich men. /133/

A study of the matrimonial situation enables us to be more specific about the personal characteristics of elected men. Polygamy is much more common among them than among the population as a whole.

6: Alexandre and Binet--169 G-5 (1946-1954) 1958 FH9 Fang FH9

595
623

Distribution According to Matrimonial Status

	Municipal Councilors	Sample of the Total Population of the Boulou and Beti Area (1)
	Percent	Percent
Polygamous	43	23
Monogamous	43	63
Unmarried	3	14

1. A random sample taken for the study of family budgets, 1954, op. cit.

[111
556]

That councilors are often polygamous is to be explained in terms of their relatively advanced age and their wealth.

623
463

As elderly possessors of wealth and polygamous, do the elected men embody all the traditional ways in contrast to a progressive younger generation? An examination of occupations, of educational level, and of religion reveals that the actual situation is more complex.

Distribution by Occupation

	Municipal Councilors	Adult Male Population of the Nyong and Sanaga Region (2)
	Percent	Percent
Chiefs	30	1.8
Planters	30	85
Office-holders	14	0.5
Trade employees	3	1
Traders	10	7
Craftsmen	5	7
Catechists, mission monitors	2	2.3

2. According to the annual administrative report; approximations are involved, Yaoundé-Ville being excluded.

G3
K3
871

If we set up an index of electoral power based on the percentage in councils and the percentage in the total population, we come to the conclusion that office-holders are very much on top (70). Chiefs come next (17), then trade employees (3), and traders (1.4). Distribution in terms of educational level confirms the influence of educated people /intellectuels/ that could be guessed at from the occupational table. /134/

G3
871

Distribution by Educational Level

	Municipal Councilors	Adult Male Population of Nyong and Sanaga Region
	Percent	Percent
Illiterate	10	75
Literate in local language	9	?
Literate in French	60	17
Holders of the C.E.P. *	10	8 (1)
Holders of higher diplomas	2.4	0.3
Worthless figures 	8	--

1. The regional statistics give "primary completed," not "C.E.P."; the nuance may mean a great deal. A survey of the urban population of Ebolowa gives a lower rate: 6.4 percent of certificate-holders.

/*Certificat d'études primaires, certificate of primary education./

/Ambiguous: Fiches inutilisables may refer to the quality of the statistics or to the use of meaningless initials after an individual's name. —Tr./

The tremendous influence of holders of higher diplomas is obvious, so that uneducated people are almost eliminated, although they are still numerous.

Thus this new élite crystallizing out of the municipal elections appears to be made up of men who are both traditionalist and modern.

6:Alexandre and Binet--171 G-5 (1946-1954) 1958 Fi19 Fang Fi19

The men who compose it, older men, rich, practicing old-fashioned polygamy, have had an academic training. We must not be deceived —in this country there is no real gulf between office-holders and chiefs.

Thus municipal councils can allow an élite class to rise to the surface and assume responsibilities.

2. The Pahouin and the Future

Shaped by their history, the Pahouin owe to it their positive qualities and their defects.

From having been conquerors, or more accurately, from having been successful in establishing themselves in new lands, they have retained a certain pride and self-confidence. Without being violently xenophobic, they preserve toward foreigners a friendly but the least bit contemptuous attitude, such is their feeling of superiority.

They had the good fortune to have been exposed very early to Christianity and to schools, at least in the Cameroons. Because they are intelligent—tests given to school pupils in the Cameroons show that the Boulou come out on top, along with the Bamoun—they have provided the administration and trade with a large part of their personnel and, when they emigrate, they do not join the unskilled labor force but provide specialized personnel, often salaried workers. This indicates the power of the Pahouin.

Finally, thanks to cacao, they have acquired a certain amount of wealth and live in some degree of comfort. This indicates their basic role in the economy. It also indicates their influence upon local finance. In the Cameroons as in Gabon, the Pahouin country is a rich area, whose exports and imports supply a significant portion of the economy. /135/ The Pahouin, therefore, play an essential role in the life of these territories, and they are able to obtain superior services for their region. There are already many roads, schools, and dispensaries.

But their traditional lack of organization impedes them in certain occupations. They despise trade and are only moderately successful in it, because their natural anarchy does not dispose them toward taking advantage of partnership or of market organization. The absence of urban centers is even more of an obstacle: the town is a new phenomenon, where immigrants are numerous and have been able to create stable situations for themselves, since there were no precedents.

6:Alexandre and Binet--172 G-5 (1946-1954) 1958 F119 Fang F119

It is true that this absence of former organization among the Pahouin leaves them free to adopt modern forms without difficulty or compunction. For them democracy is not a seed of revolution, as it would be for a feudal society. Democracy goes their way. We may, therefore, hope that this system will make possible among them the rise of new elites.

J. B.

6:Alexandre and Binet--173 G-5 (1946-1954) 1958 FH9 Fang FH9

113 In addition to the works indicated below, the following periodicals, 114 among others, should be referred to:

. . . . . .

Bulletin de la Société d'Études camerounaises, at present the Cameroons section of the I.F.A.N. /Institut Français d'Afrique Noir/. (B.S.E.C.)

. . . . . .

And from the local press, among others:

Radio-Presse du Cameroun: has published stories and, in 1949-50, an open debate upon marriage problems.

. . . . . .

For the Cameroons, the Annual Reports to the League of Nations, then to the United Nations, contain a great deal of material, especially on social, political, and economic development; see also the publications of the O.M.S. /?/

Many of the works mentioned contain bibliographies, in part included below; see particularly Trilles (no. 166), Dugast (no. 133), Balandier (no. 175), Baumann and Westermann (no. 5), Leroi-Gourhan and Poirier (no. 25), Encyclopedie de l'Union française (nos. 37 and 38).

The archives of the colonial government, in the /local/ posts as well as in the political offices of /district/ headquarters, constitute a very rich source, partly exploited for Gabon by Balandier, for the Cameroons by Binet, Madame Dugast, and Sister Marie-André of the Sacred Heart. Further, J.P. Nicolas has microfilmed for the I.F.A.N. /Institut Français d'Afrique Noir/ certain material preserved at Yaoundé. /138/

5. Baumann, H., and Westermann, D. Les peuples et civilisations de l'Afrique /The Peoples and Civilizations of Africa/. Paris, Payot, 1948. 605 pp., ill.

In Baumann's view the "Fan" are a people of Sudanese origin who came from the Upper Sangha and mingled with the Bantu inhabitants of the invaded region; linguistically Bantu; culturally placed in the group of "North Congo peoples."

6:Alexandre and Binet--174 G-5 (1946-1954) 1958 FH9 Fang FH9

B 114

13. Compiègne, Marquis de. L'Afrique équatoriale. I. Gabonais, Pahouins, Gallois; II. Okenda, Bangouens, Osyéba. Paris, Plon, 1875. 2 vols. of 360 pp., ill.

Monsieur de Compiègne is ironical about "Duchaillu," the particle of whose name induces in him suspicion of his sincerity. He is mistaken.

17. Du Chaillu, P. Explorations and Adventures in Equatorial Africa. London, John Murray, 1861.

Alongside exaggerations which sometimes come near to being jokes, the book contains very exact and very valuable observations of the Fang invasion.

21. Horn, A. Trader Horn., La Côte-d'Ivoire (sic) aux temps héroïques /The Ivory Coast—sic—in the Heroic Period/. Paris, Stock, 1932. 303 pp.

Old Horn was a much more daring liar than Du Chaillu; nevertheless, his memoirs are interesting just because they are those of a "trader." /139/

25. Leroi-Gourhan, A., and Poirier, J. Ethnologie de l'Union française /Ethnology of the French Union/. Paris, Presses Universitaires de France, 1953.

This has the Fang coming from Bahr-el-Ghazal (following Bowditch, Gautier, and Vallois).

30. Richard-Molard, J. "Groupements ethniques et civilisations nègres d'Afrique /Ethnic Groupings and Negro civilizations of Africa/," Cahiers d'Outre-mer, 1952, no. 17.

A brief and very good analysis of the results of the "ayoli regrouping" movement.

41. Cottes, A. La mission Cottes au Sud-Cameroun (1905-1908). Paris, Leroux, 1911. 254 pp., ill.

Anthropological information and photographs. /140/

46. Grebert, F. Au Gabon /In Gabon/. Paris, Société des Missions évangéliques, 1948. (3rd ed.), 237 pp., ill.

This deals primarily with the Fang of the Ogooué; good illustrations.

48. Largeau, V. Encyclopédie pahouine /Pahouin Encyclopedia/. Paris, E. Leroux, 1911. 700 pp.

In spite of the criticisms of Father Trilles, who accuses Largeau of not knowing the Fang language and of having an uninitiated "boy," the Encyclopédie is still a mine of invaluable information, often more accurate than that of Trilles.

113
114

51. Pedrals, D. P. de. "L'origine des Fang /The Origin of the Fang/." Tropiques, 1952, vol. 50, no. 348.

A version of traditional history collected from prominent persons in the southern Cameroons, some of whom were our own informants. Hard to use because of faulty transcription of certain names.

54. Tessmann, G., and Warmuth, E. Die Pangwé, Volkerkundische Monographie eines westafrikanisches Negerstammes /The Pangwe, An Ethnological Monograph on a West African Negro People/. Berlin, Hansa verlag für mod. Literatur, 1913. 2 vols., 275 and 402 pp., ill.

The summa on the group as a whole, including "Pahouinized" neighbors. It would be worth translating, even after a half century.

55. Trezenem, Edouard. "Notes ethnographiques sur les tribus Fan du Moyen Ogooué /Ethnographic Notes on the Fang Tribes of the Middle Ogooué/." Journal de la Société des Africanistes, 1936, vol. VI.

One of the best recent works on the Fang of Gabon; unfortunately the transcription of certain words makes them unrecognizable. /141/

68. Good, A. I. Bulu Handbook Supplement. Elat, Halsey Memorial Press, 1934. 131 pp.

The only work to give a glossary of exclamatives, descriptives with ne, which play an important role in the oral literature.

70. Greenberg, J. "Etude sur la classification des langues africaines /A Study of the Classification of African Languages/." B. I. F. A. N. P., vol. XVI, nos. 1-2 (Jan.-April, 1954), pp. 83-142; vol. XVII, nos. 1-2 (Jan.-April, 1955), pp. 59-108. Ill.

There is no specific reference to the Pahouin group, which appears to be included in the Nigero-Congo /language/ family.

71. Guillemin, L. "Le tambour d'appel des Ewondo /The calling drum of the Ewôndo/." B. S. E. C., 1948, nos. 21-22, pp. 69-84.

Indispensable to a study of the nkul; it contains many mindan (indicative) notations, words, and music.

113
114

72. Guthrie, Malcolm. The Classification of Bantu Languages. London, Oxford University Press, 1948.

This classes the Pahouin language in Zone A, Group 60 of Bantu. It ascribes as characteristics the absence of size-gender (inaccurate, for there is Class ô/a for small objects, Class a/me for collectives and for large objects) and the absence of the correlation of gender with idea (inaccurate).

77. Homburger, Lysias. Le langage et les langues /Speech and Language/. Paris, Payot, 1951. 256 pp.

This describes the "leapfrog" advance of the Pahouin. It places their languages in a separate family, close to, but different from, that of the coastal Bantu languages of northern Congo.

78. Homburger, Lysias. Les langues négro-africaines et les peuples qui les parlent /Negro-African Languages and the Peoples Who Speak Them/. Paris, Payot, 1941. 350 pp.

Classes the Pahouin languages in a group intermediate between the Sudanese and Bantu.

79. Lejeune, R.P. /Rev. Father?/. Dictionnaire français-fang précédé de quelques principes grammaticaux sur cette même langue. Paris, Faivre & Teillard, 1892. 347 pp.

Like nearly all such works of the period this follows too closely the grammar and syntax of French and Latin. /142/

81. Martrou, L. Lexique fân-francais. Paris, Procure générale, n.d.

A "Catholic Fang" transcription which cannot be reproduced on the universal keyboard; it does not give tone levels; has about 3,500 words.

84. Stoll, A. La tonétique des langues bantu et semi-bantu du Cameroun /The Tone System of the Bantu and Semi-Bantu Languages of the Southern Cameroons/. Paris, n.d. Memorandum No. IV of the I.F.A.N. Center, Cameroon, 1955. 172 pp., 2 tabls.

In addition to a new theory of tone levels, this has interesting suggestions about the so and melan rites, with an account of the theory of double symmetry, which is supposed to underlie Pahouin cosmogony.

93. Binet, J. Budgets familiaux des planteurs de cacao au Cameroun /Family Budgets among the Cacao Planters of the Cameroons/.

113
114

Paris, C.S.R.S.O.M., "L'Homme d'outre-mer" series, no. 3, 1956. 154 pp., ill.

Research done in the southern Cameroons in 1955-56. This is comparable with the work of Sautter and Balandier in northern Gabon.

98. Grebert, F. Monographie ethnographique des tribus Fang, Bantous de la forêt du Gabon /Ethnographic Monograph on the Fang Tribes, Bantus of the Gabon Forest/. Geneva. Manuscript, 36 pls., 719 drawings.

This unfortunately unpublished work constitutes the best pictorial representation of the Pahouin peoples. One of the six copies can be consulted in France, at the library of the Evangelical Missions. /143/

109. Bearth. "Le nsig-n'to, ancienne coutume Bane /Nsig-n'to, An Old Bane Custom/," Togo-Cameroun, January, 1930, pp. 313-332, ill.

The high judge nsig-nto was perhaps a high-ranking ngil dignitary.

110. Bertaut, M. Le droit coutumier des Boulou /Customary Law of the Bulu/. Paris, Domat-Montchrestient, 1935. 308 pp.

In spite of the title this book deals not only with the Bulu but also with their northern neighbors, including the Ewondo; there is a detailed description of the nsâ ceremony, a good study of juridical customs and also of living habits.

119. Koch, H. "Le petit bétail chez les Badjoué et Bikélé de Messamena /Small livestock among the Badjue and Bikele of Messamena/," Bulletin de la Société d'Études camerounaises.

This gives concrete examples of the progressive "Pahouinization" of the border tribes (here under Bulu influence). /144/

120. Mba, L. "Essai de droit coutumier pahouin /Essay on Pahouin Customary Law/," Bulletin de la Société de Recherches congolaises, 1938, no. 25, 46 pp.

An interesting essay by one of the Fang political leaders in Gabon.

122. Panyella, A., and Sabater, J. "Esquema de la antroponimia Fang de la Guinea española desde el punto de vista etnologico /Outline of Fang Nomenclature (?) in Spanish Guinea from the Ethnological Point of View/," A.I.E.A., 1955, VIII, no. 34.

6;Alexandre and Binet--178 G-5 (1946-1954) 958 FH9 Fang FH9

113
114

The most recent study of the anthroponymy /nomenclature?/ and rules for name giving, interesting observations on the designation of segments and lineages by the name of a female ancestor.

125. Zoll'Owambe, Ch. "Visage africain d'une coutume indienne et mélanésienne /An African Aspect of a (North American) Indian and Melanesian Custom/." Bulletin de la Société d'Études camerounaises, 1947, nos. 19-20, pp. 55-60.

A description of the bilaba potlatch, somewhat marred by confusions in the translation of salient points.

126. X.... "Tenue de palabre /Discussion Session/." B.S.E.C., 1947, nos. 19-20, pp. 141-146.

An extract from the archives of the Ambam subdivision; observations by Ntumu and Mvae men of standing on marriage customs and their evolution.

133. Dugast, I. "Inventaire ethnique du Sud-Cameroun /Ethnic Inventory of the Southern Cameroons/." Mémoires of the I.F.A.N. (Cameroons Center), "Populations" Series, no. 1, 159 pp., ill.

The most recent synthesis of the subject. It is to be regretted that the same work could not have been done for Gabon and Guinea. /145/

147. Allegret, E. "Les idées religieuses des Fang /The Religious Ideas of the Fang/." Revue d'histoire des Religions, vol. 50, 1904, pp. 214-233.

An interesting note on the religious "defeatism" which the Fang seem to have experienced especially after contact with Europeans.

151. Garnier, C., and Fraion, N. Le fétichisme en Afrique noire /Fetishism in Black Africa/. Paris, Payot, 1951.

Some notes on the rites of the Cameroons Pahouin.

152. Guillemin, R.P. Le rite "ésye." B.S.E.C., 1948, nos. 23-24, p. 71.

An excellent description of a purification rite among the northern tribes. Interesting notes on practices of divination.

153. Jemba Medu. Nnanga Kon. Elat, Halsey Memorial Press, n.d.

This novel, which is unfortunately out of print, is a mine of ethnological and linguistic information. Written in rather archaic and learned language, it is quite difficult to read nowadays. It is to be hoped that it will be translated by a Bulu of today.

113
114

155. Lavignotte, H. L'évuz, croyance des Pahouins du Gabon /The Evuz, A Belief of the Pahouin of Gabon/. Paris, Société des Missions évangéliques, 1936. 118 pp.

A very full commentary on ngbwel sorcery and methods of protection against it. /146/

156. Leroux, L.G. "Etude sur le ngil, confrérie fan /A Study of ngil, a Fang confraternity/." Bulletin de la Société de Recherches congolaises, 1925, no. 6.

The author, although thoroughly understanding the judicial and warlike functions of ngil, is in favor of its suppression in the interests of public order.

158. Martrou, L. "L'âme fang après la mort /The Fang Soul after Death/." Anthropos, VI, 1911.

This bears comparison with the traditions collected by Largeau; Martrou knew the country and the language better, but, like Trilles, his interpretation seems at times to be influenced by his preoccupations as a priest.

159. -----. "Les éki des Fang /Fang éki/." Münster. Anthropos, I, 1906.

A good study of prohibitions, though far from exhausting the subject.

161. Nassau. Fetishism in West Africa. New York, Young Peoples' Missionary Movement, 1904.

Little information relative to the Fang; the author knew primarily the coastal populations.

165. Trilles, H. "Proverbes, légendes et contes fang /Fang Proverbs, Legends, and Tales/." Neufchâtel. Bulletin de la Société neufchâtelloise de géographie, Vol. XVI, 1905. 247 pp.

Phonetic transcriptions and translations "omitting what is smutty" (sic). In spite of the cuts this is the most complete collection.

166. -----. Le totémisme chez les Fân /Totemism among the Fang/. Münster i. W., Bibliothèque Anthropos, 1912, 653 pp.

This is Father Trilles' magnum opus. As in all his works, there are, along with subtle and accurate observations, somewhat risky generalizations and surprising lacunae, which may come from a certain professional slant. In spite of these, Father Trilles remains the great authority on the Fang.

6:Alexandre and Binet--180 G-5 (1946-1954) 1958 FH9 Fang FH9

113 114 171. Aubame, J. Renaissance gabonaise /Renaissance in Gabon/. Brazzaville, 1947.

A program for clan regrouping of Fang villages put forward by the deputy of the second constituency. /147/

175. Balandier, G. Sociologie actuelle de l'Afrique noire, dynamique des changements sociaux en Afrique centrale /The Contemporary Sociology of Black Africa, The Dynamics of Social Change in Central Africa/. Presses Universitaires de France, 1955, 510 pp.

The first part of this work, which is devoted to the Fang of Gabon, contributes a new explanation of the social malaise afflicting the Fang and of the attempts at social reconstruction based on tribal regrouping and syncretist cults. It is the best book on the Fang since Trilles, Largeau, and Tessmann.

180. Celine, L. F. Voyage au bout de la nuit /Journey to Night's End/. Paris, Denoël, 1932.

The same kind of thing as no. 187 and no. 195.

182. Eza Boto. Ville cruelle /Cruel City/. Paris, Editions africaines, n.d., 219 pp.

A good study of the present younger generation, of the attraction of towns and the fear they inspire, and the conflict between generations.

183. Faure, F. Le diable dans la brousse /The Devil in the Bush/. Paris, Société des Missions évangéliques, "Je sers," 1953. 165 pp.

These edifying tales contain a good deal of information about the social and family organization of the Fang of Gabon.

187. Marie-André du Sacré-Coeur, Sister. La condition humaine en Afrique noire /Man's Fate in Black Africa/, Paris, Grasset, 1953. 260 pp., ill.

Notes on marriage in the southern Cameroons, sometimes a bit farfetched. /148/

191. Mongo Beti. Le pauvre Christ de Bomba /The Poor Christ of Bomba/. Paris, R. Laffont, 1956. 370 pp.

A novel concerned with the consequences of Roman Catholic mission activity; often unjust, but indispensable for an understanding of the most recent developments.

113 114 193. Oyono, F. Le vieux nègre et la médaille /The Old Negro and the Medal/. Paris, Julliard, 1957. 209 pp.

Oyono belongs to the tradition of the mvet players, satirical story-tellers, always harsh and often unjust.

195.. Schweitzer, A. A l'orée de la forêt vierge /On the Edge of the Virgin Forest/. Paris, Payot, 1929. 231 pp.

Interesting though rather abbreviated comments on the social disorganization of the Pahouin of the Ogooué and of their reactions to culture contact.

196. X.... Ekomi, histoire d'un petit Pahouin racontée par lui-même aux enfants d'Europe /Ekomi, The Tale of a Little Pahouin boy, Told by Himself to European Children/. Paris, Société des Missions évangéliques, 1921.

Conveys a moral.

6: Alexandre and Binet
101, 131, 563, 619

Fang FH9

[Chart for sections of end map.]

A	B
C	D

6: Alexandre and Binet-- 182 G-5 (1946-1954) 1958 FH9 Fang FH9

101
131
563
619

The Pahouin Group

[End Map (A)]

6: Alexandre and Binet-- 183 G-5 (1946-1954) 1958 FH9 Fang FH9

The Pahouin Group

101
131
563
619

[End Map (B)]

6: Alexandre and Binet--184 G-5 (1946-1954) 1958 FH9 Fang FH9

101
131
563
69

Neighboring Peoples

B-B : Bassa-Bakoko , B-Y : Bafia-Yambasa , V : Babouté (Vutéré) , B-K
M-O : Mitshogo-Okandé ; BU : Bapounou , NK : Nkomi , B-P : Benga-Pongwé

[End Map (C)]

6: Alexandre and Binet--185 G-5 (1946-1954) 1958 FH9 Fang FH9

101
131
563
619

MBIDA-MBANE BANE BAMVELE BOULOU ZAMAN YEBEKOLO

NTOUMOU MEKAE BADJOUE BAKWELE BIKELE DZIMOU-JEM

...outé (Vutéré), B-K : Baya-Kaka, E-K : Essel-Konabembé, BA : Bakota
...B-P : Benga-Pongwé, BI : Balengi, M : Mabéa, BT : Batenga, N : Ngoumba

[Fld Map(D)]

LE GROUPE DIT PAHOUIN

(FANG — BOULOU — BETI)

[p. i]

6: Alexandre and Binet FH9 Fang

L'Institut International Africain
dont le siège est à Londres, a pour adresse :

INTERNATIONAL AFRICAN INSTITUTE
10/11 Fetter Lane, Fleet Street
LONDON E. C. 4

La présente collection est placée sous la direction du Pr Daryll FORDE, directeur de l'International African Institute, à qui toutes demandes concernant les publications et les travaux de l'Institut doivent être adressées.

[p. ii]

6: Alexandre and Binet FH9 Fang

MONOGRAPHIES ETHNOLOGIQUES AFRICAINES publiées sous le patronage de l'
INSTITUT INTERNATIONAL AFRICAIN

LE GROUPE DIT PAHOUIN

(FANG — BOULOU — BETI)

par

Pierre ALEXANDRE et Jacques BINET

Secrétaire général du Centre des Hautes Études d'administration musulmane de l'Université de Paris

Attaché à l'Office de la Recherche scientifique et technique Outre-Mer

PRESSES UNIVERSITAIRES DE FRANCE
108, BOULEVARD SAINT-GERMAIN, PARIS

1958

[p. iii]

[p. iv not processed]

AVANT-PROPOS

Depuis 1945, l'Institut International Africain s'occupe de la préparation et de la publication d'une série d'études ethnographiques de l'Afrique, ayant pour but de présenter, sous une forme commode, un résumé des connaissances actuelles sur les divers peuples de l'Afrique, concernant l'environnement naturel, l'économie et les métiers, la structure sociale, l'organisation politique, les croyances et rites religieux. Les documents déjà publiés fournissent la base de ces études, mais nombre de documents inédits provenant de rapports administratifs et des archives de sociétés missionnaires sont utilisés ainsi que des observations faites sur place et des communications spéciales par des ethnologues et autres personnes compétentes. Chacun des volumes de cette collection est consacré à un peuple ou à un groupe de peuples apparentés ; il contient une bibliographie détaillée et une carte géographique.

Le Comité de Direction de cette collection a été placé sous la présidence du Pr Radcliffe-Brown ; le directeur de l'Institut est chargé d'organiser la rédaction. La généreuse collaboration de nombreux instituts de recherche et de fonctionnaires des administrations, en Europe et dans des territoires africains, est assurée, ainsi que les services d'ethnologues expérimentés.

Les travaux ont été instaurés avec l'aide d'une subvention des British Colonial Development and Welfare Funds, sur la recommandation du Social Science Research Council. Cette subvention a été employée principalement, mais non exclusivement, pour le financement d'études se rattachant aux territoires britanniques. Une subvention supplémentaire du Gouvernement du Soudan anglo-égyptien a apporté une aide à la préparation et à la publication des sections intéressant ce territoire.

Le ministère de la France d'Outre-Mer et l'Institut Français d'Afrique Noire se sont intéressés à cette étude et grâce à leurs bons offices des subventions ont été octroyées par les Gouvernements de l'Afrique occidentale française et du Cameroun français pour la préparation et la publication des sections se rapportant à ces régions. Ces sections ont été rédigées par des ethnologues français, avec l'appui et les conseils de M. Griaule, professeur à la Sorbonne et du Pr Th. Monod, directeur de l'Institut Français d'Afrique Noire.

La collaboration des autorités belges pour cette étude a été obtenue grâce aux bons offices de feu le Pr De Jonghe, qui s'assura l'intérêt de la Commission d'Ethnologie de l'Institut Royal colonial belge. La collaboration de l'Institut pour la Recherche scientifique en Afrique centrale a été aussi accordée. Le travail concernant les territoires belges est effec-tué sous la direction du Pr Olbrechts, au Centre de Documentation du Musée du Congo belge, à Tervueren, où Mlle Boone, et les membres de son service, s'emploient au rassemblement et au classement d'une documentation considérable concernant les peuples du Congo belge et du Ruanda-Urundi. Ils travaillent en collaboration étroite avec les ethnologues qui sont sur place, auxquels les projets de communications sont soumis pour vérification.

6: Alexandre and Binet FH9 Fang

L'Institut International Africain désire exprimer toute sa reconnaissance aux organisations officielles, dont l'aide financière a permis l'exécution de cette étude, et aux nombreux savants, directeurs d'organisations de recherche, fonctionnaires des administrations, missionnaires et autres, qui ont collaboré à ces travaux, et qui, en accordant des facilités à nos chercheurs, en lisant leurs manuscrits, partagent le mérite qui pourrait être attribué aux auteurs des diverses sections.

Étant donné que la valeur inégale des documents existants, et que la diversité des méthodes employées dans leur recueil ont été parmi les raisons pour lesquelles cette étude a été entreprise, il est évident que ces exposés ne peuvent être considérés comme complets et définitifs. On a l'espoir, cependant, qu'ils donneront une description assez claire de l'état actuel de nos connaissances, qu'ils indiqueront leurs lacunes et les points où des recherches complémentaires sont nécessaires.

[p. vi]

Pierre Alexandre a visité à plusieurs reprises le Gabon et la Guinée Espagnole alors qu'il exerçait des fonctions administratives au Sud-Cameroun de 1946 à 1951. Il est, depuis 1955, détaché à l'Université de Paris comme secrétaire général du Centre de Hautes Études d'Administration musulmane (C.H.E.A.M.).

Jacques Binet, après avoir, lui aussi, assumé des responsabilités administratives au Cameroun, est, depuis 1954, attaché à l'Office de la Recherche scientifique et technique outre-mer (O.R.S.T.O.M.). Il a, sous l'égide du Conseil supérieur de la Recherche sociologique outre-mer, accompli plusieurs missions en pays pahouin, au cours desquelles il a effectué des enquêtes de sociologie juridique et économique.

Les auteurs tiennent à exprimer ici leur reconnaissance aux autorités de l'Afrique Équatoriale Française, dont le bienveillant appui a permis la publication de ce livre.

[p. vii]

TRANSCRIPTION PHONÉTIQUE

Presque tous les mots africains reproduits dans le texte sont des mots bulu transcrits selon l'orthographe dite protestante (Bates et Good), la seule permettant l'emploi d'une machine à écrire à clavier ordinaire. Les valeurs des lettres sont à peu près les suivantes, par rapport au français ou à l'anglais :

a = intermédiaire entre a (mat) et á (mâle).
e = 1° Précédant n final : comme l'anglais ten, men (ɛ) ;
2° Précédant k ou ñ final : comme l'anglais sung ou buck (ʌ) ;
3° Partout ailleurs eu bref comme veuf (ə).
o = comme dans port, mort (ɔ).
ó = comme pôle, mâle, mais plus près de ou.
u = ou.
i, é = à peu près comme en français.

Les voyelles longues sont doublées (aa, uu, etc.). Un l final muet allonge la voyelle qui le précède.

w, y = ou et i consonnes (water, yole).
b, d, k, l, m, n, p, t, v, z = comme en français ; le l final ne se prononce que dans les liaisons.
g = toujours comme gâteau, go.
s = toujours comme son, sabot.
j = comme John (dʒ).
f = légèrement plosif, un peu comme apfel (le p initial des mots européens se transforme souvent en f : police = fulis).
ñ = comme le ng du participe anglais singing (ŋ) ; le tilde est remplacé par un accent circonflexe en dactylographie (â). L'usage moderne est d'omettre le tilde ou accent devant un k ou un g : nkol, ngóé.
ty = intermédiaire entre tchèque (tʃek) et tiers (tier).
h = fortement aspiré comme horse, have (rare).
' = 1° Indique l'élision d'une voyelle par attraction : m'ake = me ake.
2° Indique l'élision du k entre deux voyelles ; se prononce alors comme une attaque vocalique (ʔ) ou un esprit rude (ʼ).

Il existe deux plosives particulières kpw et gbw, différant des plosives labio-vélaires kp et gb par l'addition d'un ou consonne.

Il n'y a pas de r en bulu. L'r des mots européens est remplacé par un l vélaire que je note ł ; l'r fañ est remplacé par un t (biéri = biéti), parfois un k ou x (Mebere = Mebe'e).

Les fricatives vélaires x (allemand, écossais : och) et γ (arabe maugrébin ج) existent en fañ et sont toutes deux transcrites par gh, étant interchangeables suivant les dialectes (on a ainsi une série mebexe-mebeγe-mebe'e).

Le k emphatique (ق) existe dans certains dialectes fañ généralement transcrit kh.

Les tons ne sont pas notés, excepté le glissando du négatif qu'on souligne ou met en italique :

m'ayem = je sais.
m'ayem = je ne sais pas.

CHAPITRE PREMIER

SITUATION GÉOGRAPHIQUE ET CLIMATIQUE

Le pays pahouin couvre environ 180 000 km², de la Moyenne-Sanaga (4° 30′ N) à l'embouchure de l'Ogooué (1° 20′ S) en latitude, de l'Atlantique (9° 30′ E) à la Moyenne-Sangha (14° E) en longitude. Ses habitants ressortissent politiquement au Cameroun, à la Guinée espagnole et à l'A.E.F. (Gabon et Moyen-Congo).

Ce pays se présente essentiellement comme un plateau de roches cristallines au Nord, métamorphiques au Sud, avec des dômes d'intrusion assez effacés, séparé de la mer par une chaîne usée dépassant rarement 1 000 m, coupée par les gorges des fleuves côtiers. L'altitude moyenne varie entre 500 et 700 m, jusqu'à la coupure profonde de la vallée du Bas-Ogooué.

La ligne de partage des eaux entre les bassins du Congo et des fleuves côtiers s'infléchit vers le Sud-Est à partir du massif de Nkolomendim (la montagne-des-eaux) dans la subdivision de Sangmélima. Le principal tributaire du Congo (par la Sangha) est le Dja (Ngoko). Les principaux fleuves côtiers sont la Sanaga et le Nyong, le Ntem (Campo), le Muni et l'Ogooué.

Le climat est de type équatorial humide modifié par l'altitude et caractérisé par une double alternance de saison sèche et de saison de pluies. La mesure du temps chez les Pahouins est le mbu, d'environ six lunaisons (ngon), l'année solaire se répartissant comme suit (1) :

— mi-juin - mi-décembre : ôyôn (petite saison sèche) et su'u (grande saison de pluies) ;

— mi-décembre - mi-juin : ésep (grande saison sèche) où l'on distingue parfois bikone (petites pluies).

Les températures et pluviosités moyennes sont indiquées au tableau de la page 2.

L'humidité favorise sur presque toute la zone considérée une végétation forestière puissante : sur le plateau forêt primaire (afan), en recul devant la forêt secondaire à essences tendres et sous-bois dense (ékôlôk) (2) ; dans la vallée de l'Ogooué, forêt inondée à poto-poto

(1) Dates valables approximativement pour la frontière Cameroun-Gabon ; terminologie bulu. En fan : oyum, sugha ou sughâ.

(2) Pour moi, ékuotola ou ékotok désigne bien la forêt secondaire, mais dans sa variété taillis, et si j'ai bien compris, ékotok caractérise une jachère, terre qui a été cultivée et qui est encore plus ou moins appropriée.

La forêt secondaire se dirait afan — où la nuance de forêt défrichée est perdue. La forêt primaire se dirait mfur afan (J. B.).

TEMPÉRATURES ET PLUVIOSITÉS MOYENNES

Stations (1)	Coordonnées (2)		I		II		III		IV		V		VI		VII
	Latitude	Longitude	T (3)	P (3)	T	P	T	P	T	P	T	P	T	P	T	P
Yaoundé ..	3° 52′ N	11° 32′ E	24,1	35	24,5	44	24,4	122	24,1	173	23,8	182	23,1	129	22,3	37
Ebolowa ...	2° 54′ N	11° 10′ E	24,5	50	24,5	63	24,7	154	24,8	200	24,4	212	24,1	149	23,1	47
Oyem	1° 45′ N	11° 41′ E		75		94		189		202		210		129		41
Ndjolé	0° 11′ S	10° 45′ E		81		138		225		194		215		46		3
Lambaréné.	0° 42′ S	10° 13′ E	26,6	136	26,7	197	27,1	268	27,5	193	26,6	180	24,6	16	23,3	2
Libreville ..	0° 25′ S	09° 27′ E	27,0	206	27,3	291	27,4	264	27,3	395	27,0	244	25,8	40	24,7	1

Stations (1)	VIII		IX		X		XI		XII		Pluviosité totale annuelle (4)	Températures extrêmes (5)
												Maxima		Minima
	T (3)	P (3)	T	P	T	P	T	P	T	P		Mois	Degrés	Mois	Degrés
Yaoundé	22,4	97	22,8	206	23,0	283	23,5	119	23,8	11	1 138	Févr.	29,6	Août	18,6
Ebolowa	23,0	70	23,5	186	23,6	272	24,1	175	24,4	61	1 639	Avril	30,9	Oct.	18,2
Oyem		76		194		338		194		101	1 843
Ndjolé		6		63		334		271		133	1 709
Lambaréné	23,7	5	25,2	75	25,9	363	26,0	404	26,2	142	1 981	Avril	32,2	Juill.	19,7
Libreville	25,2	11	25,9	106	26,4	359	26,5	416	26,9	260	2 593	Mars	31,4	Juill.	21,6

(1) Nom des stations.
(2) Coordonnées géographiques des stations.
(3) T : Températures moyennes mensuelles en degrés (moyenne générale des dix dernières années). — P : Pluviosités moyennes mensuelles en millimètres (moyenne générale des 10 dernières années).
(4) Pluviosité totale annuelle en millimètres (1946-1955).
(5) Températures extrêmes : maxima et minima dans l'année (moyenne des 10 dernières années, mois et degrés) (Oyem et Ndjolé n'ont que des postes pluviométriques).

et mangrove dans l'estuaire. Ce n'est qu'au Nord de Yaoundé, en pays beti, qu'on trouve la savane-parc avec galeries forestières le long des affluents de la Sanaga. Les terres noires à humus épais (évindisi) se trouvent dans les fonds de vallée, la terre rouge en voie de latéritisation rapide (évelesi) prédominant, surtout au Nord.

Minerai de fer latéritique à teneur moyenne assez fréquent ; rutile ; un peu d'or en placers ; peut-être un peu de cuivre.

La faune sauvage reste assez abondante dans les régions les moins peuplées, et très variée : anthropoïdes (Gorille, Chimpanzé, et peut-être une troisième espèce, ébôl, non décrite par les auteurs français, mais cataloguée par Du Chaillu et certains zoologistes allemands) ; Éléphant ; Hippopotame (en voie de disparition), Lamantin (presque éteint) ; Buffle ; nombreuses antilopes, parmi lesquelles le grand Céphalophe (sô) joue un rôle important dans la vie sociale et religieuse ; Anomalures ; Oryctérope ; Pangolins ; Potamochère et Hylochère ; Daman dans le Sud ; Panthères, Chats-tigres, Genette, Loutre et parpassa ; serpents variés, parmi lesquels Python, Dendraspis, Bitis gabonica et naja ; rapaces diurnes et nocturnes nombreux ; touraco, toucan, calao, francolin, Perroquet gris ; hélix géant et bivalves d'eau douce ; Crabes et Crevettes d'eau douce ; Silures abondants ; Crocodiles ; insectes variés dont le Goliath, etc.

Parasites et insectes vecteurs abondants : Amibe dysentérique, Ankylostome, Microfilaire, Plasmodia, Trypanosome (surtout dans l'Est), Puce-chique ; Tiques et Sangsues forestières assez rares.

[p.4]

CHAPITRE II

SITUATION ETHNIQUE ET HISTORIQUE

1) Nomenclature

Le terme de « pahouin » est certainement impropre, mais il est commode. Il n'existe en effet aucune désignation africaine s'appliquant à l'ensemble du groupe de populations étudié ici. Certains auteurs (Martrou, Trilles...) préfèrent parler de groupe Fang ou Fan, terme qui a l'inconvénient de créer une confusion avec les tribus Fang proprement dites, qui ne constituent qu'une fraction de ce groupe. C'est pourquoi, avec Largeau, Tessmann, Mme Dugast et d'autres, je préfère parler des Pahouins.

Il est à noter que ce terme, longtemps pris en mauvaise part par les Africains, tend à être adopté par eux depuis quelques années, à l'occasion du mouvement de regroupement politique des tribus, justement parce qu'il ne donne la prééminence à aucune d'entre elles. C'est ainsi que le Congrès de Mitzic de 1947, réunissant des Fang, des Boulou, des Ntoumou, des Mvaé et des Fong, prit le nom de Congrès Pahouin, Ntoumou, Boulou, Mvaé et Fong se refusant à être englobés dans l'appellation « fang ».

L'origine même du mot « pahouin » est contestée. L'hypothèse la plus plausible à cet égard est celle du R. P. Trilles qui le fait dériver de m-fañ (radical fañ + classificateur singulier m/be) par l'intermédiaire du Pongoué, qui mute le F en P et répugne à terminer un mot par une consonne. On aurait ainsi Mpa'ngwen*, dont les Européens auraient fait mpawen, puis pahouin.

Sur le terme de « Fang » même, il convient de remarquer que la forme régulière m-fañ (classe I ou personnelle, m/be) n'est pratiquement pas employée par les Pahouins eux-mêmes qui préfèrent leur construction habituelle des ethniques, c'est-à-dire le radical précédé de mon (fils, enfant). On dira ainsi mone fañ, bo' be fañ, comme mon ɛwɔndɔ́, mone bulu (1), etc. La signification du mot est obscure. Il ne signifie pas « homme » (vir), qui se dit fam, erreur relevée à bon droit par le

(1) J'emploie le plus souvent l'orthographe bulu courante, sauf pour les mots possédant une orthographe administrative d'usage universel, tels les noms de lieu (Ebolowa, Ambam et non ɛbɔlɔwa'o, mbam), et certains noms de tribus francisés (les Boulou, les Ntoumou, mais le bulu, le ntum ; les Fang, mais le groupe Faŋ).

Il faut noter, en passant, que bulu et ɛwɔndɔ sont des pluriels dont le singulier (mulu*, ɛwɔndɔ*) n'est pas employé.

P. Trilles, qui le rattache cependant à une racine FA, connotant l'idée de virilité, de violence (fa = coupe-coupe, fañe = faire exprès, à dessein, etc.).

2) Groupes divers et répartition territoriale

Il n'est pas aisé de délimiter exactement le groupe pahouin. Les listes données par les divers auteurs comprennent jusqu'à une dizaine de tribus — des milliers d'individus — en plus ou en moins : à la fin du XIXe siècle la pénétration en ordre dispersé a empêché de constater certaines parentés, plus tard au contraire la pahouinisation de tribus voisines, subjuguées ou simplement influencées, a entraîné des assimilations souvent inexactes.

On peut dire, en gros, qu'une masse importante d'envahisseurs, venus du Nord-Est assez récemment — les Pahouins proprement dits — a assimilé par contact d'une part certains des habitants de la zone envahie, d'autre part d'autres envahisseurs qui marchaient dans son sillage. Ce qui est certain, c'est que cette assimilation ou pahouinisation de tribus étrangères se poursuit de nos jours, en partie sous l'influence du fait colonial.

Nous distinguerons dans cette étude d'une part les envahisseurs — Fang, Boulou, Beti —, d'autre part les populations voisines pahouinisées ou en cours de pahouinisation.

A) Les envahisseurs ou Pahouins proprement dits

Les théories concernant leur délimitation sont multiples et contradictoires, trop pour que je les développe toutes ici.

Pour le P. Trilles, ils se divisent en deux branches : b-Osyéba à l'Est, Fang à l'Ouest. Aux premiers se rattacheraient les Mekuk, aux seconds les Méké, Betsi, « Mvègne » (les Mvaé ?) et « Boulé » (Boulou). Largeau, comme Schnee, fonde sur des considérations linguistiques sa répartition entre Bedzi (betschi) et Mekei (makei) ; les premiers, à l'Ouest, commenceraient leurs discours par la formule ma zô na, les seconds, à l'Est, par me ki na. Il semble s'agir ici d'une confusion partielle entre les Pahouins proprement dits et les Maka (mekaé) pahouinisés (1). Mme Dugast fait très justement remarquer que la question se complique à vue d'œil du fait des influences réciproques. Je propose donc, sous toutes réserves, une classification empirique, fondée à la fois sur la position géographique des diverses tribus, les différences dialectales et les éléments conciliables des traditions et généalogies.

On parvient ainsi à distinguer :

— au Sud : un groupe Fañ, au sens un peu étendu ;
— au Nord : un groupe Beti, peut-être plus pahouinisé que pahouin ;
— entre les deux un groupe Bulu.

(1) Il existe bien, en effet, deux dialectes fañ répondant au critère zô /ki (ou jô /ki), mais les gens qui les parlent se disent tous Fang. Par ailleurs, il y a une tribu Maka ou Mekaé, dont la langue se rapproche du fañ de l'est, qu'elle a peut-être influencé.

a) Le groupe Fañ du Sud comprendrait :

— les Fang proprement dits, de la vallée de l'Ogooué au Sud-Cameroun ;
— les Ntoumou (ou Ntum), dans le Nord-Gabon (Woleu-Ntem), en Guinée espagnole et au Sud-Cameroun (subdivision d'Ambam) ;
— les Mvaé, scindés en deux blocs, à l'Est et à l'Ouest des Ntoumou ;
— peut-être les Osyéba de l'Ogooué-Ivindo, de nos jours fondus avec les Fang de l'Est.

b) Le groupe Bulu comprendrait :

— les Boulou des régions de Sangmélima, Kribi et Ebolowa (Cameroun) ;
— sans doute les Zaman de la vallée du Dja ;
— assez probablement les Yengono, Yembama et Yelinda de la vallée du Nyong, et les Okak de Guinée espagnole ;
— peut-être les Yesum, Yebekanga, Yekebolo et Mvélé (1).

c) Le cas des Beti est plus obscur. Ils sont peut-être d'une autre origine que les Pahouins proprement dits, qu'ils auraient suivis dans leur migration vers le Sud-Ouest. On constate dans certaines tribus une identité culturelle et linguistique frappante avec les Fang, dont ils sont cependant séparés géographiquement par les Boulou. Cette identité disparaît progressivement à mesure qu'on remonte vers le Nord. Il pourrait donc s'agir là d'un groupement en quelque sorte intermédiaire entre les Bantu du Centre-Cameroun et les Pahouins.

Quoi qu'il en soit, certaines tribus ne peuvent être étudiées qu'avec les Pahouins proprement dits :

— les Ewôndo, de la région de Nyong-et-Sanaga ;
— les Bané, de Nyong-et-Sanaga, Ntem et Dja-et-Lobo ;
— les Fong, de Dja-et-Lobo et Ntem (ces derniers d'ailleurs influencés par les Boulou) ;
— les Mbida-Mbané et Mvog-Ngenge, à l'Est de Yaoundé, qui descendraient de captifs de guerre des précédents.

Les Elon, de Saa et Obala, peuvent encore, mais déjà plus difficilement, être assimilés aux Ewôndo, par exemple. Par contre, les autres tribus beti doivent être plutôt rangées parmi les Pahouinisés étudiés ci-dessous.

B) Les tribus assimilées ou pahouinisées

Il faut distinguer parmi elles celles qui se trouvaient dans le pays à l'arrivée des Pahouins et celles qui les ont suivis.

a) Tribus ayant suivi l'invasion pahouine. — Ce sont essentiellement, comme indiqué ci-dessus, les Beti. D'après Nekes, certaines des tribus précédemment mentionnées parlaient encore un dialecte ati au moment de la conquête allemande. Actuellement on peut citer comme étant en voie de « pahouinisation » (dialecte éwôndo) :

Les Mangisa, Yekaba, Bamvele, Evuzok, Balchanga (Tsinga),

(1) Ceux-ci, en dépit de la similitude de nom, sont à distinguer des Bamvele ou Bele, à rattacher aux Beti.

Omvang, et Yeludi de la Sanaga. Par contre, les Beti de la rive droite (Bati, Kombe, Bundju, etc.), d'ailleurs peu nombreux subissent plutôt l'attraction des Babouté, Bafia, etc.

b) Tribus aborigènes ou installées avant l'invasion pahouine. — Il y a lieu de mettre à part les groupements pygmées (bibaya, babinga, beye'ele) et métis (bekoé) vivant en symbiose avec les Pahouins sans pour autant être vraiment assimilés.

L'invasion pahouine semble avoir trouvé le pays occupé par deux groupes bantu venus de l'Est quelques siècles auparavant, qu'elle a refoulés soit vers la mer, soit vers l'actuelle frontière orientale du Cameroun.

Le premier de ces groupes serait celui des Maka et Ngoumba, coupé en deux par l'invasion, Maka à l'Est, Ngoumba et Mabéa à l'Ouest. Les Maka (plus exactement Mekaé) ont été très largement assimilés par les envahisseurs, au point d'avoir été confondus avec eux par plusieurs auteurs.

Le second serait celui des Kozimé-Njem (ou Jem), Dzimou, Bajoué, d'origine très voisine et également assimilé au point d'avoir été confondu avec le groupe pahouin proprement dit.

3) Populations voisines

Comme je l'ai déjà indiqué à propos des pahouinisés, les Pahouins baignent littéralement dans une masse bantu.

Leurs voisins du Nord, sur la rive droite de la Sanaga sont ceux que Mme Dugast appelle les Bantu du Centre-Cameroun. Il s'agit d'un groupe extrêmement hétérogène, comprenant à la fois des tribus qui se disent aborigènes et d'autres immigrées, avec un enchevêtrement linguistique, anthropologique et culturel qui empêche en fait toute classification précise. Les deux principales tribus de ce groupe jouxtant les Beti-Pahouins sont les Bafia et Yambasa.

Immédiatement à l'Est des précédents, toujours dans la vallée de la Sanaga, se trouvent les Wuléré (sing. : Wulé), administrativement connus sous leur désignation bantu de « Babouté ». Ce sont des Soudanais et il semble bien que ce soit sous leur pression directe que les Pahouins ont franchi la Sanaga.

A l'Ouest des Yambasa-Bafia, la vallée de la Sanaga est occupée par le groupe Basa-Bakoko, sur les deux rives. Ces tribus sont difficiles à classer. Il s'agit certainement de Bantu. Certains auteurs les groupent sous le nom de Baso. D'autres rattachent les Basa aux Bantu du Centre-Cameroun et les Bakoko aux Beti, voire aux Pahouins, avec lesquels ils présentent effectivement quelques ressemblances culturelles.

Le long de la côte se trouvent des groupes bantu : sur la chaîne côtière, les Ngumba et Mabéa, apparentés aux Mekaé, dont j'ai parlé plus haut ; dans la plaine côtière, le groupe Duala, avec les Duala (Dawala) proprement dits, les Balenga et les Kumbé. En Guinée Espagnole, les Balengi seraient apparentés soit aux Mabéa, soit aux Duala. Au Gabon, les Pongoué (Mpongwé) sont un groupe résiduel Bantu-Myéné, entièrement isolé au milieu des Fang.

A l'Est des Pahouins du Cameroun, sur la rive gauche du Dja, les Mekaé, Badjué, Dzimu et Jem sont, je le rappelle, pahouinisés au point de se voir confondus avec les Pahouins du Moyen-Congo. Cette assimilation progresse encore actuellement parmi les autres tribus du groupe Kozimé et spécifiquement parmi les Konabembé, Esel (1) et Medzimé. Toutes ces tribus, venues du Nord-Est (Mekaé) ou du Sud-Est (Kozimé), de langue bantu, ont eu un habitat beaucoup plus étendu vers l'Ouest et le Nord, d'où elles ont été refoulées vers le Sud par les Baya et Kaka, vers l'Est par les Pahouins.

Les Bakwélé du Moyen-Congo semblent aussi pouvoir être rattachés aux Kozimé et, comme eux, être considérés comme pahouinisés. Ils ont été refoulés sur la rive gauche de l'Ivindo à une date assez récente, comme leurs voisins du Sud, les Bakola et les Okandé. Les Séké et Akélé du Bas-Ogooué leur seraient apparentés.

Enfin les Pongwé, déjà cités, les Ouroungou, Bapounou, Galoa et Nkomi du Bas-Ogooué appartiendraient à un groupe intermédiaire entre les Bantu du Nord-Ouest (Duala et groupe côtier) et le groupe Vili-Kongo du Sud (Baumann), le groupe Myéné. Ces tribus ont occupé naguère la majeure partie du domaine des Fang proprement dits, d'où ils ont été refoulés depuis environ un siècle par l'invasion pahouine, qui n'a atteint la mer que vers 1890-1900. Les Benga (bantu côtiers) et Pongwé de Libreville, isolés au milieu des Fang, les Ouroungou, Séké, Asembé, Galoa et Bapounou de Port-Gentil et Lambaréné sont les derniers peuples non pahouins subsistant sur la rive droite de l'Ogooué. Les Fang ont d'ailleurs une solide tête de pont sur la rive gauche dans le district de Ndjolé.

Rappelons la présence, dans tout le pays pahouin, de groupements pygmées dont nous étudierons le statut plus loin.

4) Aperçu démographique

Aux causes habituelles de l'imprécision des renseignements démographiques communes à tous les territoires africains (absence ou insuffisance d'état civil, faible infrastructure administrative et surtout médicale) s'ajoute en ce qui concerne le groupe Pahouin son appartenance politique à quatre territoires dont un non français.

Nous disposons, pour le Sud-Cameroun, de bons recensements et de documents médicaux périodiques bien faits et régulièrement tenus à jour, en raison de l'obligation de fournir périodiquement des renseignements à la S.D.N., puis à l'O.N.U. Les chefs des équipes mobiles du S.H.M.P., particulièrement étoffé depuis les campagnes du Dr Jamot, recueillent à chaque tournée des renseignements anthropologiques aussi satisfaisants que le permettent la multiplicité de leurs tâches et l'évolution intellectuelle et sociale des zones prospectées. Les effectifs relativement fournis de l'administration territoriale ont permis à beaucoup d'administrateurs, surtout avant et pendant la dernière guerre, de faire des études personnelles souvent détaillées, telles celles d'E. André sur l'évolution démographique des Ntoumou d'Ambam.

(1) Les Esel appellent deux observations. En premier lieu, ils parleraient une langue très proche du duala. En second lieu, ils portent le même nom qu'un des principaux clans pahouins.

La situation est moins satisfaisante en A.E.F. Tout d'abord, l'administration de la Fédération n'a jamais été tenue comme celle du Cameroun à l'établissement de rapports périodiques destinés aux organisations internationales. Ensuite et surtout, ses faibles moyens budgétaires l'ont souvent contrainte à confier les commandements territoriaux, dont le siège et l'assiette ont été maintes fois modifiés, à des sous-officiers ou à des fonctionnaires subalternes ne possédant pas la formation nécessaire pour se livrer valablement à de telles études, gênés qu'ils étaient au surplus par l'étendue même de circonscriptions faiblement peuplées. On n'a longtemps disposé pour le Gabon et le Moyen-Congo que d'estimations très approximatives, péchant le plus souvent par un optimisme de commande, motivé par des considérations qui n'avaient rien de scientifique. La situation s'est considérablement améliorée depuis 1946, mais la fantaisie ou l'insuffisance des données antérieures risque de fausser considérablement les conclusions (1).

Pour la Guinée Espagnole, enfin, les sources sont peu accessibles et de valeur très inégale. Les meilleures seraient les comptes rendus de l'Expédition scientifique de 1948, organisée par la Direction générale du Maroc et des Colonies, dont la Commission d'Anthropologie a, paraît-il, étudié l'évolution démographique en liaison avec le Service de Santé de la colonie : je n'ai pu me les procurer. Les recensements fiscaux effectués par les officiers de la Garde civile commandant les Demarcaciones paraissent considérés comme des secrets d'État, ceux des missions catholiques semblent sujets à caution. Si l'on accepte le chiffre total de la population donné par les statistiques officielles, soit 172 000 âmes, il faudrait estimer le nombre de « pamue » (version espagnole de mpangwé) à environ 50 % de ce total. Les évaluations faites pendant la dernière guerre par les administrateurs et officiers frontaliers du Gabon et du Cameroun sont très sensiblement inférieures, donnant un total d'environ 130 000 habitants, dont cinquante à soixante mille Pahouins. De même, les rapports médicaux espagnols paraissent empreints d'un optimisme peut-être excessif, attribuant, notamment à des causes biologiques un accroissement de la population tenant surtout à l'immigration.

Enfin, les désaccords portant sur la composition même du groupe pahouin font largement varier les chiffres, qu'il s'agisse des estimations

(1) Cf. Sautter, L'utilisation des documents administratifs pour l'étude de la population du Moyen-Congo et du Gabon, B.I.E.C. 1954, nos 7-8 ; Zieglé, Afrique équatoriale française, Berger-Levrault, Paris, 1952, p. x ; Christol, Un essai de fichier démographique au Cameroun, Bulletin mensuel de statistique d'O.M., 1951, n° 20.

SITUATION DÉMOGRAPHIQUE

Territoire		Tribu	Habitat	Nombre	Densité	Renseignements démographiques
	(Beti)	Ewôndo	Région de Nyong-et-Sanaga (S.).	95 000	20,1	I. D. : + 0,2 %. Mortalité infantile : 30 %. C. G. : 3,04.
		Bané	S. Nyong-et-Sanaga. N. Ntem et Dja-et-Lobo.	80 000	21,5	I. D. : + 0,2 %. C. G. : 4,7.
		Fang	N. Ntem-Dja-et-Lobo.	13 000	6,9	I. D. : + 0,77 %. S. : 26,6 %. C. G. : 5,2.
		Eton	N. Nyong-et-Sanaga.	112 000	44,3	Pas de renseignements précis récents. I. D. : > + 1 %. Population en voie d'accroissement.
		Mbéda Mbané	S.-E. Nyong-et-Sanaga.	20 000	12,8	I. D. : + 0,08 %. S. : 7 %. C. G. : 3,20.
		Mvog Nyengé	S.-E. Nyong-et-Sanaga.	7 000	18,8	I. D. : + 0,30 %. S. : 9 %. M. N. : 26,9 %. C. G. : 4,23.
		Mangisa	N. Nyong-et-Sanaga.	15 000	46,2	Pas de renseignements précis récents. I. D. : positif.
		Yebaba	N. Nyong-et-Sanaga.	14 000	9,3	I. D. : — 4,4 %. M. I. : 34,3 %. S. : 33,0 %. C. G. : 4,4. M. N. : 10 %.
	(Beti probable)	Bamvelé (Bété)	E. Nyong-et-Sanaga. W. Lom et Kadei (Nanga, Bertoua).	25 000	10	Pas de renseignements.
		Evuzok	Dispersés (Lolodorf).	5 000	?	Pas de renseignements.
		Tsinga	Dispersés (Mbam, Nyong-et-Sanaga).	18 000	?	I. D. : + 1,4 %.
		Divers		20 000
		TOTAL BETI CAMEROUN		401 000
CAMEROUN	(Bulu)	Boulou	Ntem, Dja-et-Lobo, Kribi.	100 000	9,9	I. D. : + 0,30 %. S. : 7 %. C. G. : 4,12.
		Zaman	E. Dja-et-Lobo (Vallée du Dja).	1 500		I. D. : négatif. S. : > 25 %.
		Yengono	S.-E. Nyong-et-Sanaga (Akonolinga).			I. D. : + 0,03 %. S. : 9 %. C. G. : 3,47.
		Yembama		13 000	7,5	I. D. : 0,70 %. S. : 16 %. C. G. : 3,97.
		Yelinda				I. D. : — 0,1 %. C. G. : 3,4.
	(parentés des Boulou)	Yebekanga		9 000	4,5
		Yebekolo	E. Nyong-et-Sanaga (Akonolinga).	28 000	11,9	I. D. : faiblement positif.

			13 000	7,5	C. G. : 5,97. I. D. : — 0,1 %.
	Yellocla		9 000	4,2	C. G. : 3,4.
(suite des Boulou)	Yebekanga Yebekolo	E. Nyong-et-Sanaga (Akonolinga).	23 000	11,9	I. D. : faiblement positif.
	Mvelé	E. Yaoundé.	27 000	15,3	I. D. : — 0,21 %.
	TOTAL BOULOU CAMEROUN		184 000
(Fang)	Fang	Kribi, Ntem, Dja et Lobe (dispersés).	13 000	2	I. D. : + 0,08 %. S. : 7 %. C. G. : 3,8.
	Ntum		17 000	9,5	I. D. : 1,55 %. S. : 12 %. C. G. : 4,6.
	Mvaé		6 000	5,8	I. D. : + 0,80 %. S. : 15,2 %. C. G. : 4,5.
	TOTAL FANG		36 000
	TOTAL CAMEROUN		623 000	Non compris tribus « assimilées » de l'Est (Mekaé-Kozimé).
GUINÉE ESPAGNOLE	Ntum	Le long de la frontière N. (Ebébiyin).	20 000	4	Estimation approximative sur archives administratives françaises. D'après certains rapports il faudrait y ajouter environ 8 000 émigrants pahouins des territoires français, Gabon surtout. Les chiffres donnés constituent des minima.
	Mvaé	Frontière N. (Mikomeseng).	1 000
	Fang	S.-E.	30 000
	Okak	Centre.	4 000
	TOTAL GUINÉE ESPAGNOLE		55 000
GABON	Ntum	Woleu-Ntem (Bitam surtout).	15 000	5 à 1	I. D. : légèrement positif. Taux de stérilité élevé. Proportion d'enfants : 30 % environ.
	Bakwélé	Makokou.	3 000
	Fang	Woleu-Ntem, estuaire, Ogooué-Ivindo, Ogooué.	110 000
	TOTAL GABON		128 000
MOYEN-CONGO	Assimilés divers	Sanaké. Ouesso.	8 000	2	?
	TOTAL MOYEN CONGO		8 000
TOTAL GÉNÉRAL			814 000	Non compris peuples voisins en voie d'assimilation.

I. D. : Indice différentiel. — S. : Taux de stérilité. — C. G. : Capacité génitale. — M. N. : Morti-natalité. — M. I. : Mortalité infantile.
Les chiffres, donnés d'après I. DUGAST (Inventaire, n° 130), datent d'une dizaine d'années en moyenne.

numériques globales ou des indices démographiques proprement dits. On arrive ainsi à des totaux variant entre 650 000 et 1 500 000 Pahouins, avec un indice différentiel nettement positif ou nettement négatif suivant les auteurs.

Ma propre estimation, environ 820 000, ne tient compte que des Pahouins au sens étroit, en laissant de côté les tribus dont l'appartenance est contestée (1). L'ensemble de ce groupe est en progression légère (indice différentiel un peu inférieur à + 1 %), plus, semble-t-il, grâce à un recul de la mortalité que par une augmentation de la natalité qui tendrait plutôt à diminuer légèrement. Le tableau pp. 10-11 donne un aperçu sommaire de la situation de détail.

Ce tableau appelle quelques commentaires. En premier lieu, les taux de capacité génitale connus, presque tous aux environs de 4, de même que les indices de stérilité, atteignant jusqu'à 30 %, contrastent avec les récits des premiers explorateurs tout comme avec les traditions tribales, qui parlent uniformément d'une fécondité élevée et d'une proportion importante d'enfants. Compte tenu des exagérations certaines qui entachent ces renseignements, il reste probable qu'un fléchissement démographique s'est produit dans le second quart du XXe siècle, compensé par une diminution de la mortalité, dans certaines zones tout au moins. Les difficultés d'adaptation à la vie forestière ne l'expliquent que pour le Sud. Il faut sans doute y ajouter des facteurs comme l'extension de la syphilis (kôlo), le long des axes routiers et autour des agglomérations surtout, et la poussée de trypanosomiase qui semble avoir suivi la pacification et a affecté surtout le Nord et le Nord-Est du pays pahouin. S'y ajoutent dans le Sud la grande famine gabonaise des années 1924-1927, ainsi que les causes sociologiques telles que les grands recrutements pour les chantiers forestiers et peut-être des facteurs psychologiques dus au choc colonial (Balandier). Dans le Nord, où l'apparition précoce d'une économie agricole basée sur le cacao a fixé les villages assez tôt, la transformation de la « dot » et l'appropriation individuelle des terres par les « aînés » (minlôl) ont certainement eu aussi des incidences démographiques défavorables, en bouleversant les structures familiales (41 % d'hommes adultes célibataires dans la subdivision d'Oyem, en 1948). Enfin, l'introduction massive d'alcool de traite avant 1914 et depuis 1946 a très certainement encore aggravé les choses.

Il ne faut cependant pas exagérer l'importance de la crise, qui a atteint surtout les Fang gabonais. L'évolution démographique générale paraît pouvoir se résumer ainsi :

— aggravation momentanée de la morbidité générale immédiatement après la pacification, due à une extension plus grande des épidémies, variole et trypanosomiase en particulier, par suite des nouvelles facilités de circulation ; augmentation possible des taux de stérilité avec légère diminution de la capacité géni-

(1) A titre indicatif l'importance numérique des Mekaé et Kozimé du Cameroun peut être évaluée à environ 80 000 âmes.

tale résultant de la contamination vénérienne, de l'alcoolisme, du recrutement des chantiers (surtout au Gabon) et de la modification des structures économiques familiales et villageoises ;

— en contrepartie diminution rapide et continue de la mortalité générale résultant de la pacification ; depuis 1930 environ, recul des épidémies et amélioration sanitaire générale amorcée ; actuellement, recul de la mortalité infantile. La généralisation des méthodes de prophylaxie antipalustre massive (Cameroun) laisse déjà prévoir une augmentation spectaculaire de la population ;

— dans l'ensemble, la balance des facteurs favorables et défavorables paraît positive, en tout cas, dans les zones non atteintes par la grande famine gabonaise de 1924. La prise de conscience d'un malaise démographique a d'ailleurs dû résulter en partie de l'arrêt du mouvement migratoire qui a permis une sorte d'inventaire. Cette prise de conscience est surtout sensible au Gabon où la situation semble avoir été effectivement plus grave.

5) Histoire et origines traditionnelles

L'histoire connue du groupe pahouin est celle d'une migration en direction de la mer, migration en train de s'achever sous nos yeux.

D'où est-elle partie ? La question est très controversée. Stoll, après Schweinfurth, parle de la Haute-Égypte, de même que Trilles, fondant cette opinion sur des arguments linguistiques et culturels, tels l'usage de l'arbalète de guerre et la forme du sabre (fa). C'est cette même forme qui pousse Tessmann à parler d'une influence romaine. Marche et le marquis de Compiègne, puis Largeau parlent, plus modestement, d'une parenté avec les Zandé et Mangbetu du Haut-Oubangui, ce qui reste du domaine de l'hypothèse.

En fait, la seule certitude raisonnable qu'on possède à ce sujet, fondée sur les traditions, les généalogies (15 à 20 générations devenant plus ou moins mythiques aux environs de la dixième ou douzième) et les observations des premiers voyageurs (notamment Du Chaillu) et missionnaires européens et américains, c'est que la migration qui s'achève a dû commencer vers la fin du XVIIIe siècle, dans la zone de savane située sur la rive droite de la Sanaga, quelque part au Nord-Est de l'habitat actuel du groupe. Était-ce la Haute-Sangha, vers Bouar, la région de Baïbokoum, plus au Nord, ou l'Adamaoua vers Ngaoundéré ? C'est, dans l'état actuel de nos connaissances, impossible à préciser. Les traditions parlent simplement d'une zone « vers l'Est » (mfa' ôku), dans une région élevée où se trouvaient des lacs, où vivaient des lions (ngbwemgbwem) et, d'après Trilles, des rhinocéros (abvi — ?), près d'une population « rouge ».

Les ancêtres des Pahouins furent chassés de cet habitat par une invasion. S'agissait-il des Fulbé d'Othman dan Fodio ou d'un de ses successeurs ? Certains détails des traditions permettent de le penser, mais l'actuelle répartition des tribus du Nord de la Sanaga et leurs propres traditions indiqueraient plutôt qu'il s'agissait des Baboulé (Wutéré) et, peut-être, des Mboum, fuyant eux-mêmes devant les Fulbé.

Quoi qu'il en soit, les ancêtres des Pahouins durent traverser la Sanaga en plusieurs vagues, approximativement entre Nanga-Eboko et le confluent du Mbam, de part et d'autre des chutes Nachtigal. Les premières vagues devaient comprendre les ancêtres des Fang et Boulou qui s'enfoncèrent dans la forêt sous la pression des Beti, dont une petite minorité resta sur la rive droite.

L'avant-garde de la migration semble s'être divisée en trois colonnes, quelque part du côté de Bengbis (subdivision de Sangmélima). C'est peut-être à ce moment que se précisèrent les divisions tribales actuelles. Une colonne Fang se dirigea vers le Sud, pénétrant sans doute au Gabon suivant le Dja, puis l'Ivindo. Une seconde colonne, essentiellement Boulou, se dirigea vers l'Ouest, parallèlement au cours du Nyong, tandis qu'une troisième, Ntoumou et Fang, pénétrait dans le Nord-Gabon, suivant un axe qui formait à peu près la bissectrice entre les deux autres.

Cette pénétration n'avait rien de pacifique : l'écho des batailles livrées aux Bantu de l'intérieur parvenait jusqu'aux postes de traite de la Côte et la terreur répandue par les envahisseurs n'était pas sans gêner les relations commerciales. Du Chaillu rencontre les Fang et Ntoumou vers Mitzik, les Osyéba sur l'Ivindo au début du Second Empire. En 1869, l'amiral de Langle les signale au contact des factoreries du Haut-Ogooué et de la Komo, évaluant leur nombre à une cinquantaine de milliers. En 1875, le marquis de Compiègne et Aloysius Horn les rencontrent à Lambaréné et aux environs immédiats de Libreville. Brazza facilitera leur marche vers la Côte et le Bas-Ogooué qu'ils atteindront en 1893 (Largeau). Depuis cette date, leur progression a continué au ralenti, d'une part sur la rive gauche de l'Ogooué, vers le Sud, à la hauteur de Ndjolé, d'autre part le long de la côte jusqu'à la lagune de Fernan Vaz.

De leur côté, les Boulou ont eu moins de chance, arrêtés par les Allemands dans leur progression vers la mer aux environs de 1890, alors qu'ils ne sont plus qu'à une trentaine de kilomètres de la côte, au Sud-Est de Kribi. Une dernière guerre — l'óban, encore vivante dans les mémoires de nos jours — les oppose, entre 1885 et 1895, aux Bané qui cherchent à gagner vers le Sud. Après 1895, ils sont pratiquement fixés dans leur zone actuelle (mais non aux emplacements précis des villages contemporains), de même que les Beti.

Encore que j'aie parlé de colonnes, il ne faut pas se représenter ces migrations comme l'exode des Enfants d'Israël à travers le désert. Elles se font plutôt par bonds successifs, suivant un axe général, par petits groupes familiaux ou/et villageois. On a pu parler à leur propos de migration en saut-de-mouton : une famille A s'installe ; une famille B fonde un village plus au Sud ; une famille C occupe l'ancien territoire de B ; A essaime alors un village au Sud de B, A' ; puis B pourra en faire autant, alors que A, sous la pression de C, se sera de nouveau déplacé mfa'a mañ, vers la mer, qui reste le but final. Ceci, multiplié des centaines de fois, entraîne une dissémination extrême des groupes familiaux, familiaux-étendus et claniques, en même temps que des remous, des tourbillons qui expliquent l'enchevêtrement actuel. Des groupes entiers sont revenus sur leurs pas, à la suite d'un échec militaire ou pour éviter le contact avec l'administration européenne ; ainsi, les Ntoumou du Nord-Gabon ont en partie été refoulés au Nord du Ntem par un recul des Fang, rejetant vers l'Est et l'Ouest, le long de la vallée, les Mvaé qui s'étaient installés entre eux et les Boulou. Les derniers groupes Beti à franchir la Sanaga, bloqués par ceux qui les avaient précédés, ont dévié perpendiculairement ou obliquement à l'axe général de la migration.

L'ensemble de la migration s'est fait exclusivement par voie terrestre, même quand son axe suivait le cours d'un fleuve navigable. Les Pahouins ne sont pas des piroguiers et les pistes coutumières empruntent plutôt les lignes de crête que les vallées. Le peuplement est essentiellement linéaire, étalé le long des pistes et, maintenant, des routes, en longs rubans séparés par des zones vides.

Les traditions se rapportant à cet exode sont de trois ordres : tradition collective du groupe, variant dans le détail de tribu à tribu, mais se conformant toujours aux grandes lignes d'un même thème ; traditions familiales, consistant en un commentaire des généalogies : la plupart n'ont pas été recueillies et sont en train de se perdre en raison de l'abandon de l'éducation coutumière des garçons ; enfin, une pseudo-tradition d'invention contemporaine, qui n'est pas la moins intéressante. Je ne rapporterai ici que les principaux traits de ces traditions et d'abord de celle du groupe.

D'après celle-ci les ancêtres vivaient autrefois dans un pays appelé mvo' ékanga ou mvo' ékaña'a (Largeau : mvôgh élangha), ce qui signifie à peu près « pays nuageux » ou « pays honorable », suivant le ton, et peut-être les deux à la fois (1). J'ai indiqué précédemment les caractéristiques légendaires de ce pays de l'Est, dont les détails varient suivant les informateurs. Il faut noter, en passant, que ceux-ci diffèrent sur le point de savoir si ce pays était ou non le berceau même des ancêtres ou si ces derniers venaient d'un endroit situé encore plus à l'Est, ce qu'affirme à présent la pseudo-tradition (2).

Chassés de ce pays par des géants rouges (ou par un géant rouge), les ancêtres, fuyant pour sauver leur vie, se trouvèrent acculés à la Sanaga et incapables de la traverser, jusqu'à l'intervention du gardien des eaux, python d'après les Beti et Boulou, crocodile d'après les

(1) a) Radical kañ = honorer, respecter, d'où ékañ'a = honneur, respect, vénération ; b) Radical kañ = marquer, dessiner, d'où ékanga = marque, dessin, nuage ; c) Verbe kañele = brêler, charpenter, d'où ékanga = pont.

(2) Les derniers conteurs ntumu chantent, en s'accompagnant de la guitare, mvet, les exploits des bikañ, ou bo'bikaña, héros surhumains, qui comprennent non seulement des ancêtres mais encore les premiers Européens célèbres : Ngôtô Zambe (Rev. Good), Mendômô (Hauptmann von Hagen), Akôk (Marius Pascalet), etc., qui se trouvent ainsi en quelque sorte naturalisés et incorporés à la tradition.

Fang (1). Celui-ci se mettant en travers du fleuve, forme un pont que les ancêtres traversent famille par famille, par ordre de primogéniture, jusqu'au moment où un enfant (ou une femme) lui blesse le dos en laissant tomber une arme (ou une torche). L'animal plonge, abandonnant sur la rive droite les groupes Beti qui s'y trouvent encore de nos jours.

Osoé Nnanga, d'où les Blancs ont tiré « Sanaga », signifie « rivière blanche » ou « rivière de l'albinos ». Le blanc est couleur de mort, les fantômes (bekôn) sont blancs, les albinos considérés comme enfants d'incubes. Enfin, le pays des morts a toujours été situé au couchant, vers la mer (mañ), alors même que les Pahouins ne devaient connaître celle-ci que par ouï-dire. Rapprochés de certaines légendes recueillies par Trilles, ces faits peuvent faire penser qu'en franchissant la Sanaga, les Pahouins pénétraient, au moins symboliquement, dans le pays des morts.

Parvenus sur la rive gauche, ils trouvent leur chemin barré par une forêt inextricable, l'unique sentier obstrué par un énorme ajap (Mimusops djave), arbre symbolique de la force, de la vigueur physique et spirituelle. Ils le traversent au moyen d'un tunnel étroit, le nlom ajap, et peuvent dès lors avancer librement. Mais, après cette traversée, une querelle éclate entre les frères, pour une question de femmes, d'après certains, de préséance et d'héritage d'après d'autres, et ils se séparent en quatre groupes dont l'un reste sur place, les autres se dirigeant vers la mer par les trois itinéraires décrits plus haut.

A partir de là, il faut se reporter aux traditions familiales pour suivre les pérégrinations de chaque groupe, impossibles à décrire en détail.

L'apport le plus intéressant de la pseudo-tradition récente est sans doute la généalogie recueillie chez les Ntoumou par l'administrateur André et répandue surtout parmi la fraction linguistique fañ du groupe pahouin. Elle part de l'ancêtre Afiri Kara, chef de la migration au moment de la traversée de la Sanaga, mort après celle du nlom ajap. Afiri Kara « qui a donné son nom à l'Afrique » est fils de Kara Kuba, fils de Kuba Ta, fils de Ta Ma'a, fils de Ma'a Ngô « qui est le père de la race nègre ». Les fils d'Afiri Kara sont les ancêtres des tribus actuelles auxquelles ils ont donné leurs noms, noms qui sont en fait des sobriquets fondés sur des calembours. Par exemple, Ntumu Afiri, ancêtre des Ntoumou, marchait avec une canne (nlum), Ewôndô Afiri était amateur d'arachides (ôwôndo) ou avait une postérité aussi nombreuse que celle d'une graine d'arachide ; Bulu Afiri était particulièrement appliqué ou sérieux (bulu : de la racine bo, faire = faire sérieusement, réellement) (2), etc. Largeau et Tessmann semblent ignorer absolument cette légende dont la formation ne remonterait pas au delà de la première guerre mondiale.

(1) Bertaut donne les noms de mot yom et nga medja ou ngan meja. Sous réserve d'une erreur de transcription, les expressions pourraient signifier « être d'imploration », « crocodile d'imploration », de môt (f. môr, mur) = personne ; ngan = crocodile ; ja'é (b.), dzak, dzaghé (é., f.) = demander, implorer ; yom = prier, implorer.

(2) Cf. le verbe fañ = faire bien, faire vraiment, exprès.

La part de la pseudo-tradition est plus difficile à faire dans les légendes recueillies par Largeau, Trilles et Grebert au sujet de l'origine même de l'humanité. Le thème est celui de Jacob et Ésaü : un fils cadet de Zobeyo Mebe'e (fañ : Nzame Mebeghe, Nzame Mebere) profite de la stupidité de son aîné pour devenir héritier des richesses de ce monde (bióm, bium = les biens, les marchandises, par opposition aux produits de la terre) et s'enfuit vers l'Ouest, pays des morts ou des ancêtres, où l'aîné, frustré, le poursuivra (1). Largeau et Grebert font du cadet usurpateur l'ancêtre des Blancs, mais Trilles a recueilli des versions qu'il estime plus anciennes où il est l'ancêtre des Bantou de la Côte, ces versions co-existant d'ailleurs avec celle de Largeau. Il est possible que l'assimilation du cadet aux Blancs date des premiers contacts commerciaux.

(1) Cette assimilation de l'Ouest aux marchandises, de l'Est aux produits du pays se retrouve dans le potlatch (bilaba) décrit plus loin.

[p. 18]

CHAPITRE III

LA LANGUE

1) Diffusion

L'ensemble du groupe se caractérise par une unité linguistique certaine, débordant les frontières culturelles et anthropologiques. J'ai indiqué précédemment l'existence de tribus pahouinisées ou en voie de pahouinisation, groupes Maka et Kozimé notamment. Il faut y ajouter les Pygmées vivant en symbiose avec les Pahouins et qui paraissent en avoir très largement adopté la langue, au point qu'il est difficile de savoir avec certitude s'ils possèdent encore une langue propre.

Au surplus, les dialectes pahouins tendent à servir de langue véhiculaire dans des zones où les Pahouins ne se trouvent qu'en minorité, souvent émigrés, d'une part, et, d'autre part, dans des zones moins avancées économiquement et socialement que leur propre habitat.

Nous avons donc :

a) Une zone linguistique pahouine proprement dite : c'est le pays pahouin, tel que décrit au chapitre premier ; y parlent pahouin, à titre de langue maternelle, les Pahouins eux-mêmes et, très probablement, les Pygmées ; l'y parlent à titre de langue principale, mais non proprement maternelle les immigrés permanents ou quasi-permanents, dont les plus nombreux sont au Cameroun les Bamiléké, au Gabon les « Gabonais » du groupe linguistique myéné.

b) Une zone pahouinisée, comprenant au Cameroun la rive gauche de la Moyenne-Sanaga (pays Beti, chez les Mangisa et Eton surtout), le pays Maka autour d'Abong-Mbang, la rive gauche du Dja, en pays Jem et Dzimou (1) ; au Moyen-Congo, une partie du district d'Ouesso (à l'Ouest), celui de Souanké ; au Gabon, la rive gauche de l'Ivindo, chez les Bakwelé. Les différences entre les langues parlées dans ces zones et les dialectes pahouins s'effacent rapidement ;

c) Des zones où les dialectes pahouins servent de langue véhiculaire, soit entre tribus de langues différentes, soit pour les rapports administratifs et commerciaux, voire pour la propagande politique ou religieuse. Au Cameroun, l'éwôndo remplit cette fonction sur la rive droite de la Moyenne-Sanaga, dans la région du Mbam, ainsi que sur la rive gauche, vers la frontière de l'Oubangui, dans la région de Lom-et-Kadéi, surtout dans la subdivision de Bertoua. Le bulu est devenu la langue commerciale de la région de Kribi. En Guinée Espagnole, fañ et bulu servent de langue commune aux immigrants venant des territoires français. Au Gabon, les dialectes Myéné reculent devant le fañ, de plus en plus utilisé jusqu'au chemin de fer Congo-Océan. Dans les grandes villes — Douala, Yaoundé, Libreville, Port-Gentil et même Dolisie — des dialectes pahouins sont utilisés par des immigrants appartenant à d'autres groupes linguistiques.

(1) KOCH, in Le petit bétail chez les Badjoué et Bikélé de Messaména, B.S.E.C., 13-14, mars-juin 1946, donne des exemples frappants de la pénétration du bulu dans cette zone.

L'essor des grands dialectes — bulu, éwôndo, fañ — tient non seulement au caractère entreprenant des Pahouins mais aussi à l'œuvre des missions qui diffusent une assez abondante littérature dans ces dialectes, alors que les langues de certaines populations voisines n'ont pas été transcrites ou n'ont donné lieu qu'à peu de publications.

2) Dialectes

Guthrie énumère sept dialectes, dont trois principaux : « yaundo, bulu, ntum, meka, zimu, fan, make ». Il vaudrait sans doute mieux parler de trois zones dialectales, correspondant aux trois groupes — beti, fañ, bulu — précédemment définis, chaque zone comprenant un parler dominant, qui est toujours celui qui a été transcrit par les missionnaires. L'importance de ce phénomène sociologique est soulignée par le fait que les dialectes transcrits tendent tantôt à déborder, tantôt à régresser de la zone ethnique correspondante, en liaison avec des facteurs non linguistiques dont le principal est l'appartenance religieuse des sujets parlants. De même, on constate dans certaines zones la co-existence d'un parler maternel avec un dialecte écrit appris à l'école religieuse et parlé par les christianisés.

Le dialecte dominant en zone beti est l'éwôndo, langue de travail des missions catholiques, qui supplante rapidement les dialectes beti (ati) proprement dits de la vallée de la Sanaga. Le dialecte éton, par exemple, plus ati que pahouin à la veille de la guerre de 1914 (Nekes), est aujourd'hui complètement assimilé ; le tsinga et le mangisa sont en voie de l'être. Enfin l'éwôndo, employé comme langue véhiculaire, gagne du terrain vers le Nord et l'Est, comme indiqué précédemment. Au Sud, au contraire, s'il se substitue au bané et au foñ et mord même superficiellement en zone bulu dans les cantons catholiques, il recule devant le bulu dans les cantons évangélisés par la Mission Presbytérienne Américaine. Ainsi les Bané, les Fong et certains Ewôndo de confession protestante sont en fait bilingues, parlant comme langue maternelle un dialecte proche de l'éwôndo, mais écrivant, priant ou chantant en bulu.

Le bulu mord donc au Nord sur la zone linguistique éwôndo. Il gagne vers l'Est chez les Mekaé et Kozimé, a supplanté le fañ parmi les groupes Fang isolés du Nord, sert de langue de culture chez les Ntoumou et Mvaé camerounais (catholiques exceptés) et de langue véhiculaire à Kribi et en Guinée Espagnole. Il concurrence même le fañ comme langue écrite dans le Nord-Gabon. Il résiste assez bien à l'éwôndo dans les secteurs catholiques, sauf dans les zones de contact avec le bané et le foñ.

Le fañ a supplanté le ntum dans le Woleu-Ntem — sauf dans le district de Bitam, où il est en concurrence avec le bulu — et en Guinée Espagnole. Il progresse vers l'Est et le Sud et tend à remplacer le pongwé comme langue véhiculaire. Son progrès reste handicapé par l'existence de plusieurs transcriptions, empruntant simultanément aux divers dialectes, ce qui gêne l'unification dialectale. Il semble cependant que le dialecte de l'Ouest — mazouna ou betsi — soit en train de l'emporter sur celui de l'Est — mekina ou maké — qui a d'ailleurs fourni moins d'éléments aux transcriptions.

Les différences entre éwôndo, bulu et fañ sont bien marquées, mais pas assez cependant pour empêcher l'intercommunication. La syntaxe est pratiquement identique, les différences grammaticales peu importantes. Les distinctions entre les parlers tiennent surtout à la prononciation et au vocabulaire.

Pour ce qui est de la prononciation, on constate une ressemblance frappante entre fañ et éwôndo, assez étonnante puisque les deux groupes sont séparés par l'enclave bulu et n'ont pas, ou n'ont plus, de contacts directs. L'éwôndo est un peu moins rauque, un peu moins guttural que le fañ, alors que le bulu ne l'est pas du tout. Surtout le bulu ignore absolument le r, ordinaire ou fricatif (r, x), le remplaçant par un l ou, plus récemment, par un l vélaire :

arki (Ew.), arigi (F.) = ahlki (B.) ; kalara (Ew.), kalaghe (F.) = kalal (B.).

Il évite généralement les occlusives dures ou emphatiques intervocaliques (g, k, gh, kh) les remplaçant par une attaque vocalique ou un esprit rude :

saghele (F.), sakélé (Ew.) = sa'ale (B.) ; afôghele (F.) = afô'ôlo (B.).

Il omet beaucoup des nasales initiales du fañ :

Nzame (F.) = Zambe (B.) ; et emploie j (ʒ) de préférence à dz :

zé (F., Ew.) = jé (B.) ; ainsi que ty (tʃ) de préférence à, ou concurremment avec k :

ôkeñ (F.) = ôtyeñ (B.).

Au point de vue du vocabulaire, les trois parlers diffèrent surtout par les emprunts aux langues voisines. Guthrie estime que ces emprunts ne dépassent pas 5 % du vocabulaire pour l'ensemble du groupe Pahouin, mais la proportion est plus forte en éwôndo et en fañ, atteignant 20 % pour ce dernier. Les emprunts se font au groupe Myéné pour le fañ, à l'ati pour l'éwôndo. Le bulu fait des emprunts indirects au myéné et à l'ati, des emprunts directs au maka-ngumba, au jemdzimu et au bantu côtier. Les apports européens viendraient plutôt du coast english en éwôndo et bulu, du sabir portugais en fañ, mais le coast english augmente son influence sur l'ensemble du groupe, de même que le français. L'abbé Walker parle d'influences arabes, mais celles qui paraissent certaines sont bien rares : je ne vois guère que banga (chanvre indien) et arki (alcool).

3) Caractéristiques de la langue

La construction des phrases suit l'ordre : sujet, verbe, complément d'attribution, complément d'objet.

Ainsi :

M'abolé ével zel = je mouille chef barbe (je graisse la patte au chef).

Le déterminant, adverbe ou épithète, se place le plus souvent, mais pas toujours, avant le déterminé :

abeñ minga = jolie femme, mbia môl = méchant homme ;
ôbe anen = assez grand ;

mais

anen abui = très grand, bôte bela = trois personnes.

Trilles (in Le totémisme..., n° 166) (1) évalue le vocabulaire à 18 000 mots, comptant sans doute comme mots à part certaines formes dérivées, flexions verbales notamment, qu'on peut aussi bien ranger avec la forme primitive, comme le font Bates et Good ; ces derniers ont procuré un vocabulaire bulu d'environ 7 000 mots, qui est loin d'être complet. Le chiffre exact doit se situer aux environs de dix à douze mille mots au moins. Si la langue s'est enrichie d'apports européens et africains non pahouins, il semble qu'elle se soit en même temps appauvrie de certaines nuances de sens, de termes techniques ou religieux, de tournures littéraires ou poétiques anciennes, ceci en grande partie sous l'influence européenne, à cause de la scolarisation en particulier. L'enseignement de la rhétorique jouait un grand rôle dans l'éducation coutumière des garçons (njôô, nzoé = parleur, orateur = chef) et l'initiation aux divers rites ouvrait aux initiés le droit de se servir de certains mots interdits aux non-initiés (2). La christianisation et l'enseignement scolaire colonial ont, en faisant reculer ou en détruisant l'éducation traditionnelle, entraîné une détérioration certaine de la langue. C'est ainsi que le roman Nnanga kôn (n° 153), écrit après la guerre de 1914, est aujourd'hui d'une lecture ardue pour les jeunes Boulou.

La plupart des mots de la langue sont formés à partir d'un radical

(1) Les numéros entre parenthèses renvoient aux numéros correspondants de la Bibliographie, infra, p. 136.

(2) Je n'ai jamais pu savoir le véritable mot pour « crâne », réservé aux initiés bièri. On ne m'a donné que la périphrase ékokoé nlo môl, « coquille de tête d'homme ».

bilitère (consonne-voyelle) ou trilitère (consonne-voyelle-consonne) auquel s'ajoutent des affixes. On a ainsi des séries, telles que :

KI (fañ) ou TYI (bulu), radical — kié, tyé = force ; éki, étyi = = interdit ; tyik = couper, décider ; tyi = avoir un interdit ; tyili = = frapper d'interdit, défendre ; étyé, ékié = fer, pl. bilyé, bikié = monnaie sacramentelle ; ôtyeñ, ôk(i)eñ = couteau ; metyi, meki = sang, etc.

Les affixes les plus importants sont les classificateurs nominaux, qui permettent de répartir les noms et pronoms en classes nominales ou genres sémantiques, le genre sexuel n'existant pas. Ces classes ou genres sont au nombre de cinq ou six, suivant les auteurs ; l'implication sémantique n'est pas toujours évidente pour les substantifs proprement dits, mais l'est beaucoup plus pour les substantifs verbaux. Je donne ici les classes bulu d'après Bates :

I : classificateurs nominaux m, n, ñ/be, b ; classificateurs pronominaux a, ny, w/be, b. — Classe personnelle, noms de personnes, d'animaux personnisés ; noms d'origine européenne. Dérivés verbaux indiquant l'agent.

Ex. : môt, bôt = personne ; ngal, beyal = épouse, femelle ;
meloa, bemeloa = voiture ;
mbo, bebo = celui qui fait, de bo = faire ; ndi = celui qui mange, de di = manger.

II : m, n, ñ/mi ; ô, w/mi. — Noms divers, sans connotation sémantique particulière ; dérivés verbaux indiquant le résultat de l'action, sous un aspect en quelque sorte passif ; dérivés de noms d'autres classes indiquant une qualité, un état.

Ex. : mbu, mimbu = saison ; nsoñ, minsoñ = pointe ; mboan (1) = action (ce qui est fait), de bo = faire ; ñyeman = sapience, de yem = savoir ;
ndiban (1) = fermé, de dip = fermer ; ñwuan = défunt, de wu = = mourir ;
mbe'e = charge, cargaison, de be'e = porter ;
nkôbo = langage, de kôbo = parler ;
minlaé = peine, souffrance, de laé = faire souffrir ;
ndindim = un aveugle, de ndim = cécité ;
ñwuwup = un voleur, de wup = vol.

III : pas de classificateur nominal ; classificateurs pronominaux é, ny, j. — Les mots de cette classe peuvent s'employer au pluriel avec les classificateurs I et IV (be, b ; me, m), suivant leur sens ; pas de dérivés verbaux : la forme correspondante du verbe est la forme simple ou élémentaire.

Ex. : zok, pl. facultatif bezok = éléphant ;
kal, pl. fac. bekal = sœur ;
fa, pl. fac. mefa = sabre.

(1) Les formes en -ban et -an du verbe correspondant aux aspects passifs et réciproques.

N. B. — Cette classe est peut-être particulière au bulu et à l'éwôndo ; en fañ, la plupart des mots correspondants prennent un classificateur régulier au singulier.

Ex. : ze, zok, kal (b.) = nze, nzok, nkal (f.).

IV : a, d, j/me, m ; e, d/me, m. — Noms quelconques comportant cependant beaucoup de termes anatomiques ; dérivés verbaux, indiquant l'action du verbe en elle-même, pouvant correspondre soit à un infinitif, soit à un infinitif substantivé (le boire, le manger) ; noms d'arbres, dérivés de noms de fruits.

Ex. : jam, mam = chose, sujet, question ;
jôé, môé = nom, nez, autorité ; abo, mebo = patte ;
abum, mebum = ventre, utérus, grossesse ;
ake = le fait d'aller, l'aller ; mevak = réjouissance, de vak : se réjouir ;
ayôñ = chaleur, de yôñ = être chaud.

V : é, j/bi ; é, j/bi. — Des noms d'outils ou d'instruments, se retrouvant souvent dans la classe suivante ; des noms de qualité employés comme adjectifs ; des noms divers, dont quelques mots européens ; dérivés verbaux indiquant l'objet de l'action, son résultat objectif ; des dérivés de noms avec une idée de renforcement ou d'augmentation.

Ex. : jôm, biôm = chose, marchandise ; évele = rouge, le fait d'être rouge, la rougeur ; ébak, bibak = houe ; bidi = nourriture, ce qui se mange, de di = manger ;
élo = état, situation, séance, session, de lo = être assis ;
élik = héritage, reliquat, ce qu'on laisse, de lik = laisser ;
ékolôkol = fourbe, de nkol = courbé ;
éseñ = forêt, boqueteau de parasoliers, de aseñ = parasolier.

VI : ô, vi, w/a, l ; ô, vi, w/e, d. — Des noms divers, comportant des noms d'outils et d'instruments ; des noms de choses élusives, passagères ; des noms de petites choses et des dérivés diminutifs ; des dérivés verbaux, semblant indiquer des qualités intellectuelles.

Ex. : ôdiba'a, adiba'a = clef (existe aussi cl. V : édiba'a) ; ôsoé, asoé = rivière ; ôlila = fumée ; ôyo = sommeil ;
vioé, loé = rire ; viek, lek = marmite ;
ôlé = bâton (élé = arbre) ; ônon = oiseau ; ôbe, abe = petit, un peu de, une petite quantité ;
ôfifis = petit morceau, de éfus = morceau ; ôkukul = sot, de akul = = fou ;
ôsimsan = bonne mémoire, de simsan = se souvenir ; ôvuan = mauvaise mémoire, de vuan = oublier.

Bates ajoute à ces six classes une classe fossile des noms de liquides, bien représentées dans les langues bantu mais ne comprenant guère en pahouin que des mots identiques aux pluriels de la classe IV, sauf rares exceptions. Il faut mentionner également quelques mots appartenant à des classes ou genres différents selon qu'ils sont au singulier ou au pluriel (1).

Les classificateurs pronominaux jouent un rôle important et caractéristique, celui de connectifs entre un nom et son complément ou entre un nom-sujet et son verbe. Toutefois, cette règle ne paraît pas absolue, et le bulu, plus spécialement, se dispense volontiers du connectif au génitif, surtout au singulier :

jôm é nlañgan ou jôm nlañgan, biôm bi nlañgan ou biôm nlañgan = la chose, les choses du blanc ;
mon a fañ, bo' be fañ = un, des Fang ;
alu e ne dibi, melu me ne dibi = la, les nuit(s) est, sont obscure(s) ; mvu j'adi, bemvu b'adi = le, les chien(s) mange(nt).

Les verbes se divisent essentiellement en verbes d'état ou de position et verbes d'action, qui ne se conjuguent pas de la même façon. On passe par dérivation d'un type à l'autre par affixation du radical, ce qui permet de compléter la conjugaison défective des verbes d'état en ayant recours à leurs dérivés actifs. Temps, modes, voix et aspects s'indiquent soit par affixation ou flexion, soit en employant des verbes auxiliaires, dont certains ont un sens par eux-mêmes, alors que d'autres ne peuvent être utilisés qu'avec un autre verbe (ces derniers sont peut-être de simples affixes).

Les pronoms et pronoms-adjectifs sont bien représentés, alors que les adjectifs qualificatifs sont rares, surtout en bulu, et le plus souvent remplacés par des noms de qualité ou d'état qui ne s'accordent pas. Même observation pour les mots-outils : en dehors de quelques adverbes, conjonction et préposition invariables, on se sert surtout de noms :

éyoñ = temps, circonstance = quand ; mfa'a = direction, orientation = = vers ; ajô le = cette affaire = ainsi, donc, par conséquent, etc.

Au point de vue phonétique, la caractéristique la plus importante du groupe est sans doute l'emploi de tons, base de la téléphonie par tambour (nkul), cloche (nkeñ) ou cri modulé (ékiga). Bates et Johnson reconnaissent cinq tons, plus le glissando du négatif. Bertaut, après les auteurs allemands, distingue deux tons fondamentaux — haut et bas — deux tons dérivés — ascendant et descendant — et un ton moyen. Le R. P. Stoll, reprenant la question dans un ouvrage récent, la bouleverse en décrivant deux tons fondamentaux, symétriquement contrastés, deux tons dominants et huit composés ou glissants, le tout groupé en huit principaux (quatre simples et quatre glissants) et quatre secondaires. Il lie ce système symétrique à la cosmogonie, en donnant une démonstration fondée sur le rite sô. La querelle de spécialistes est trop chaude pour que j'exprime une opinion. Je me bornerai à remarquer que nkul et nkeñ ne donnent que deux tons et que dans la transmission d'un message par un de ces moyens le rythme joue un rôle aussi important que les tons (1).

(1) Certaines irrégularités morphologiques ont des implications sémantiques. Ex. : ésa, au sens de « père », fait au pluriel bésa (cl. I personnelle) ; dans sa classe normale (V, augmentative, pl. bisa) il signifie « famille étendue ». Les deux mots (dont les tons diffèrent) viennent de sak, éjaculer, f.... qui aurait dû donner nsak*, besak, géniteur, père.

Dans le langage parlé, et surtout dans le beau langage, le rythme est également important et ceux mêmes des missionnaires qui ont l'oreille assez fine pour éviter les calembours tonétiques involontaires n'arrivent généralement pas à maîtriser le rythme comme savent le faire les derniers conteurs-poètes. Les transcriptions courantes ne tiennent d'ailleurs compte ni du rythme ni des tons, le sens des homographes ressortant du contexte. J'ai cru remarquer, là comme ailleurs, que les jeunes gens tendent à oublier les finesses de la langue et à ne plus distinguer que deux tons, haut et bas, tandis que l'usage du nkul régresse chaque jour.

Un dernier élément important de la langue, surtout dans la littérature orale, est constitué par les exclamatifs-descriptifs, série de locutions à base d'onomatopées ou dérivées de verbes ou de noms modifiés, redoublés et souvent introduits par une particule exclamative ou un click (2). Quelques-uns sont assez courants pour être employés dans les textes écrits, mais la plupart restent usités exclusivement dans le discours parlé, l'orateur ne se privant d'ailleurs pas d'en inventer suivant les besoins du moment.

4) Classification

La majorité des auteurs, de Meinhof à Guthrie, classent les langues du groupe pahouin parmi les langues bantu. Dans sa classification générale des langues bantu (1948), Guthrie les range dans sa zone A, sous la cote décimale 60, en comprenant dans ce groupe l'éwôndo, le bulu, le ntum, le mekaé, le zimu, le fañ (dialecte dit betsi ou mazouna encore qu'il ne le précise pas) et le make (sans doute le fañ oriental, dialecte dit makina). Stoll englobe l'éwôndo dans son ouvrage sur les langues bantu et semi-bantu du Cameroun, sans préciser s'il le range parmi les unes ou les autres (3).

Il apparaît toutefois certain que, si ces langues doivent bien être comprises dans la famille bantu, elles forment dans cette famille une catégorie particulière qui ne peut être assimilée purement et simplement aux langues incontestablement bantu des populations limitrophes. On discute, au surplus, sur le point de savoir si les envahisseurs pahouins ont apporté leur langue avec eux ou s'ils ont adopté, en la déformant, celle des populations installées avant eux sur le plateau camerounais-gabonais. On a, de même, hésité à classer les langues des tribus bordières, mekaé et kozimé notamment, soit avec le groupe pahouin, soit avec les groupes bantu limitrophes. Alors que, par exemple, on s'accorde à ranger le ngumba à côté des langues bantu côtières, le mekaé, qui lui est certainement apparenté, est classé tantôt parmi les parlers pahouins, tantôt parmi les parlers bantu de l'Est-Cameroun.

(1) Mais la batterie de balafon, mejeñ, comporte cinq xylophones de tonalité différente, chacun comportant six notes.

(2) Bertaut est un des rares auteurs, sinon le seul, à signaler ces clicks. J'en connais trois d'usage généralisé : un d'approbation, un de dénégation, un d'avertissement. Il en existe d'autres, employés à la chasse et encore mal connus, qui ont peut-être été empruntés aux Pygmées.

(3) Dans ses rapports à l'O.N.U. l'administration camerounaise qualifie les Pahouins du Sud-Cameroun de « néo-bantu ».

L'existence d'un genre nominal (cl. III de Bates) dépourvu de classificateur empêche de ranger le groupe parmi les « langues agglutinantes à système de classe parfait avec pronom spécial pour chaque classe » où Delafosse place le bantu. Mlle Homburger (Le langage et les langues, p. 69) en fait une famille à part, proche à la fois du bantu côtier et du semi-bantu ; dans le chapitre qu'elle consacre au bantu dans Les langues du monde, elle la rattache au groupe Ouest-Africain de Delafosse, revenant sur son caractère non bantu dans Les langues africaines et les peuples qui les parlent.

Le R. P. Trilles et l'abbé Walker ont cru trouver en fañ des influences sémitiques et hamitiques. Une empreinte soudanaise paraît plus vraisemblable. Westermann classe le « bati » parmi le groupe semi-bantu, en indiquant que le terme de langues soudanaises à classes lui paraît mieux approprié. Or, on sait que le beti (ati), aujourd'hui en recul devant l'éwôndo, lui-même très proche du fañ (betsi-mazouna), s'étendait encore récemment jusqu'à la limite nord du bulu, qu'il a influencé.

On peut donc conclure que le groupe linguistique pahouin, actuellement très proche du bantu, doit très probablement être considéré comme intermédiaire entre les parlers bantu proprement dits et les langues semi-bantu ou soudanaises à classe, les circonstances historiques et le contact avec les peuples voisins ayant accentué ses caractères bantu de telle façon qu'il est expédient, au point de vue méthodologique en particulier, de le classer comme une famille particulière du groupe Bantu (1).

(1) En l'absence de référence spécifique, il semble que GREENBERG (n° 70), le classerait dans son groupe nigéro-congolais.

[p. 27]

CHAPITRE IV

VIE ÉCONOMIQUE

1) Alimentation

Le régime alimentaire des peuples pahouins suffirait à prouver que leur fixation au sol est bien récente. L'importance des produits de cueillette est en effet remarquable. D'après une étude menée en pays Éton (région de Yaoundé) par le Dr Masseyeff, la consommation des champignons atteindrait en moyenne 4,1 g par jour et par personne (1). Des escargots, des termites, des chenilles, des larves de palmier, des criquets sont également consommés. « Si cette enquête s'était déroulée 30 ans plus tôt, la liste des aliments aurait été beaucoup plus considérable. Quantité de feuilles ou de fruits de cueillette ont été négligés, puis abandonnés... De même, le gibier s'est raréfié... (2). » Dans beaucoup de villages, on trouve des hommes qui se disent chasseurs (3). Les revenus tirés de la vente de la viande de chasse apparaissent comme pratiquement négligeables dans les budgets familiaux. Mais, selon l'ouvrage cité plus haut, la chasse fournirait un cinquième de la consommation totale de la viande. La pêche n'est pas inconnue : mais les techniques sont élémentaires. Les femmes

(1) R. MASSEYEFF, A. CAMBON, Enquête sur l'alimentation au Cameroun, Rapport à l'Office de la Recherche scientifique et technique outre-mer, I.R.C.A.M., Yaoundé.

(2) COMPIÈGNE (n° 13), signale déjà en 1875 les ravages causés aux troupeaux d'éléphants par les « compagnies de chasse » faisant mâles, femelles et éléphanteaux sans discrimination.

Les principales techniques de chasse sont actuellement les suivantes :

— à tir : à l'arbalète pour les singes et gros oiseaux, avec flèches de « bambou » empoisonnées au strophantus ; au fusil pour le gros gibier : fusils à percussion centrale au Cameroun, fusils de traite au Gabon (ces derniers, interdits au Cameroun, sont plus propres au tir de la sagaie à éléphants, qui provoque souvent l'éclatement des armes perfectionnées) ; traque et appel ;
— en battue : des chiens munis de grelots rabattent le gibier sur des filets, où il est achevé à la lance ;
— piégeage : collets en crin d'éléphant pour les francolins et petits mammifères (technique employée surtout par les enfants) ; en fil de fer pour les sangliers et antilopes ; piège-à-chute pour l'éléphant ; fosse à pal, fosse simple, fosse à goulot ; quatre-de-chiffre ; nasse terrestre ; cage à porte tombante ; gluaux au latex ; empoisonnement d'appâts (panthère, chat sauvage) ;
— courre : pratiquée surtout par les Pygmées, sans chien. On trouve encore quelques Pahouins qui forcent le buffle et l'hylochère et les servent à l'épieu, mais ils se font rares. (P. A.)

(3) Dans certains villages bulu on rencontre des chasseurs professionnels étrangers, Baya ou Kaka généralement. En outre, les Pygmées chassent en permanence pour leurs « propriétaires ». (P. A.)

barrent parfois des ruisseaux qu'elles mettent à sec pour en attraper les poissons. La pêche au poison est parfois pratiquée, les enfants pêchent volontiers à la ligne. Mais toutes ces méthodes ne sont guère productrices : pas de grands barrages, pas de filets, pas de pirogues. Les nutritionnistes évaluent à 1 g par personne et par jour la ration de poisson pêché localement : c'est souligner simplement les faibles capacités nautiques des Pahouins.

L'agriculture fournit l'essentiel de l'alimentation : le manioc est utilisé dans de multiples plats. Bâtons de manioc fabriqués avec les tubercules écrasés et bouillis, manioc cuit à l'étouffée ou en beignets, les feuilles mêmes sont souvent consommées. La consommation de feuilles est peut-être un trait particulier de l'alimentation éwôndo et des Boulou. Treize espèces de feuilles sont employées dans la cuisine, soit comme condiments, soit en purée, souvent pour rendre les sauces mucilagineuses. Avec le manioc, les bananes plantain constituent la base de l'alimentation. Le macabo, xanthosema sagittefolia, vient ensuite. Diverses variétés d'ignames sont très appréciées. Et cette orientation gastronomique des Fang, et en particulier des Beti, suffirait à prouver leur origine étrangère, puisque les ignames, tropicales plutôt qu'équatoriales, viennent assez mal dans la zone d'extension actuelle des Pahouins.

Le maïs est la seule céréale de consommation courante. Il est souvent offert en pâtes, en bouillies ou même en épis. La bière de maïs, centres urbains mis à part, paraît beaucoup moins employée que le vin de palme (sève d'elaeis guineensis). Le palmier à huile joue d'ailleurs un rôle très important dans l'alimentation. Source de lipides et de vitamines A, l'huile de palme est à la base des sauces et ragoûts mangés avec les tubercules et les céréales. Les arachides sont très employées (n'est-ce pas à elles que les Ewôndô doivent leur nom ?). La pâte obtenue après cuisson et pilage entre dans la confection de multiples plats et fournit l'essentiel de la ration de protéines. Enfin, une denrée mérite d'être mentionnée parce qu'elle est fort appréciée, et aussi parce que son emploi paraît absolument anti-économique : les pépins de courges. Des graines sont conservées, séchées, épluchées une à une, puis mises à bouillir et pilées. L'adresse nécessaire pour l'épluchage et le temps passé à cette opération paraissent soumis à un faible rendement (1).

2) Agriculture

Avant d'aborder la description de l'agriculture actuelle, il faut voir ce qu'elle était et ce qu'elle est toujours, dans certains secteurs traditionalistes. En effet, il semble bien que les méthodes ne se sont guère modifiées : de nouveaux produits cultivés se sont simplement ajoutés aux anciens. Il est probable que sous l'influence de ces productions nouvelles l'ensemble des techniques (techniques matérielles, techniques juridiques, etc.) viendra à évoluer. Mais le mouvement ne fait que débuter et présentement la culture des arachides, du maïs et autres produits connus de longue date reste proche de ce qu'elle était il y a 40 ans, avant l'apparition du cacaoyer.

(1) Mais les beignets à la pâte de graines de courge sont délicieux... Il se fait un commerce assez important de ces graines à destination des villes. (P. A.)

Agriculture traditionnelle

Jadis, chaque famille produisait tout ce qui lui était nécessaire et limitait son effort : aucun produit n'était commercialisé, aucune denrée n'était susceptible d'alimenter un courant d'échanges, mais toutes sortes de produits étaient cultivés. Pour les vêtements, des vieillards bané et éwôndo affirment que la culture et le tissage du coton étaient pratiqués par leurs ancêtres : il n'en saurait être question dans leur habitat actuel et cette tradition mérite simplement d'être apportée comme argument soit à ceux qui estiment que les Pahouins viennent de régions plus septentrionales, soit à ceux qui voient dans les Beti non pas de véritables Pahouins mais des pahouinisés (1). Chaque famille cultive du tabac, des piments ou condiments divers, bref tout ce qu'elle consomme. Chaque parcelle de terre témoigne d'ailleurs de cette polyculture, puisque toutes sortes de plantes y sont semées côte à côte, selon le système dit des cultures associées, opposé à la culture d'Europe où un champ est consacré exclusivement à une récolte.

Ce mélange de plantes diverses, évite probablement d'épuiser le sol d'un de ses éléments constituants. Un pied de maïs, par des racines superficielles, puise la nourriture dont il a besoin, tandis que les tubercules de macabo qui l'entourent vont, plus profondément, se nourrir d'autres éléments, et que quelques pieds d'arachides enrichissent la terre en y fixant l'azote. Et pourtant, par une précaution supplémentaire pour ainsi dire, d'une année à l'autre, le paysan varie ses semis. Procède-t-il consciemment à un assolement véritable ; est-il amené à agir ainsi par la durée des cycles végétatifs ou les exigences des plantes ?

Après nettoyage sommaire du terrain, par brûlis, les femmes sèment et plantent sur les essarts : courges, plantains, macabo qui produiront un an ou dix-huit mois plus tard, maïs qui sera en épis 5 mois après. Après récolte de maïs, une seconde période de culture est entreprise avec des arachides ; lorsqu'elles sont à maturité, macabos, manioc et plantains fournissent leur récolte. Le manioc reste longtemps en place et peut fournir au besoin des tubercules. Le cycle terminé, la terre est laissée en jachère et réoccupée par la brousse. Abandonnées sans espoir de retour aux temps des grandes migrations, les jachères sont aujourd'hui remises en culture après un délai dont la longueur varie avec le besoin de terres dû à la pression démographique, avec la qualité des sols, avec la qualité de leur régénération.

(1) Les Boulou appellent le coton suf et le kapok suf duma ; ni le cotonnier ni le kapokier ne poussent chez eux. (P. A.)

Il n'y a pas, on le voit, de longue période sans récolte.

Sauf le maïs, les arachides, les graines de courges, il n'y a pas de récolte susceptible d'être conservée en grenier : faits aussi importants pour la psychologie populaire que pour les techniques architecturales. Travaillant selon les principes traditionnels, une femme cultive annuellement 0,52 ha pour nourrir sa famille (1). Une autre méthode permet d'évaluer la quantité de vivres nécessaires pour nourrir la population : un recensement des récoltes a été fait en 1948 dans un des cantons de Sangmelima (2). Pour satisfaire aux besoins des 6 249 habitants, il n'y a pratiquement pas « d'exportation ». Le canton produisait 1 635 000 pieds de maïs, 2 049 000 de manioc, 824 190 de bananiers plantains, 687 800 de macabo. Il fournissait en outre 44 t de riz, 200 d'arachides. 85 180 arbres fruitiers fournissaient des fruits divers (Pachylobes, Estulis, oranges, etc.).

L'usage du feu pour le nettoyage des terres et l'absence d'engrais organiques expliquent probablement l'appauvrissement des sols et le nomadisme agricole qui en est la conséquence.

Le petit élevage est pourtant connu et pratiqué ; chèvres, chiens, volailles, cochons étaient et sont encore nombreux dans les villages. Ce bétail paraît n'avoir pas un rôle bien considérable dans l'alimentation, ni dans la vie économique. L'usage, fort peu répandu, de vendre des morceaux de porc date de ces dernières années. En fait, le bétail servait à faire des cadeaux quasi rituels, à payer des dots, et à célébrer des fêtes familiales : à l'occasion d'un mariage, d'un enterrement, d'une levée de deuil, deux ou trois chèvres étaient tuées pour nourrir la parenté.

Bien entendu, les bêtes ne vivent pas dans une étable et ne sont pas nourries. Les troupeaux vont errer aux abords des villages et n'hésitent pas à piller les jardins. Les querelles classiques d'agriculteurs contre éleveurs sont innombrables (avec cette nuance que nul ici n'est uniquement éleveur, ni uniquement cultivateur). L'usage des clôtures de haies s'était-il imposé pour éviter ces déprédations ou pour assurer la protection militaire des hameaux ? Quelle qu'en soit l'origine, cette pratique associée à l'élevage aurait pu permettre d'éviter l'érosion et de protéger la fertilité des sols. Actuellement, il serait nettement excessif de parler d'un système de clôtures, comme on pourrait le faire à propos des Bamiléké de l'Ouest-Cameroun. Ce système a-t-il jamais existé en pays pahouin et les modestes haies que l'on rencontre parfois autour des villages ou des plantations en sont-elles la trace ? Quoi qu'il en soit, cet usage pourrait être extrêmement bénéfique et son développement serait hautement souhaitable.

L'élevage est actuellement en recul, surtout dans les villages desservis par les routes. Les sacrifices pour lesquels les chèvres et poules étaient nécessaires tombent-ils en désuétude ? L'afflux de voitures et le nombre de poules écrasées ont-ils empêché le renouvellement du cheptel ? Ces causes diverses ont pu agir en même temps, mais la cause invoquée le plus souvent est le développement des cacaoyères. Faute de clôtures, l'élevage des chèvres et la plantation de cacaoyers sont choses incompatibles. Pour protéger leurs plantations ou éviter d'avoir de trop nombreux palabres, les propriétaires de troupeaux ont dû limiter leur activité.

(1) Moyenne obtenue avec 27 femmes (Ewôndo, Bané) dont les champs ont été mesurés en 1954 au cours d'une étude de budgets familiaux.

(2) Rapport de l'administrateur J. M. Soupault. Il faudrait pour un individu moyen : 250 pieds de maïs, 330 de manioc, 130 de plantains, 110 de macabo, 7 kg de riz et 32 d'arachides.

Agriculture moderne

Le cacao est, en effet, le symbole et l'élément essentiel d'une économie moderne. A travers cette culture et à travers les pratiques agricoles, juridiques ou économiques qu'elle entraîne, mille progrès ou germes d'évolution apparaissent dans la société entière.

Il serait injuste cependant de ne pas citer les autres activités économiques des pays pahouins, bien que leur influence et leur rendement financier les classent loin derrière le cacao. Le bois, dont l'importance a diminué jouait, il y a quelques décades, un rôle essentiel. Les entrepreneurs africains sont très rares dans ce secteur où l'équipement est complexe et coûteux. Un tonnage assez important de palmistes est commercialisé lorsque les cours sont favorables, bien que le palmier ne trouve pas ici les meilleures conditions de sol et de climat (1).

Mais le cacao reste le produit-roi. Sa culture est entrée dans les mœurs et marque les psychologies. Les planteurs se vantent du nombre de leurs arbres. Cette transformation est-elle profonde ? Balandier estime que non : « L'actuel intérêt attaché à la culture du cacao ne doit pas faire illusion, le Fang n'est pas naturellement agriculteur ; il fait du cacao dans la mesure où celui-ci fait de l'argent et des marchandises (2). »

Depuis 40 ans, des millions d'arbres ont été plantés : quelques chiffres suffiront à indiquer l'ampleur du mouvement. En pays bulu, la moyenne est d'environ 1 500 cacaoyers par homme actif pour Ebolowa, 1 100 pour Sangmelima, 950 pour Djoum. En pays béti, les plantations sont moins vastes, soit parce que la terre y était moins propice, soit parce que la densité de la population ne permettait pas de soustraire aux cultures vivrières de si nombreuses superficies. On compte cependant 413 cacaoyers par homme actif pour l'ensemble de la région de Yaoundé. La répartition par subdivision n'est pas sans intérêt car elle permet de comprendre l'extension des cacaoyers. La subdivision de Mbalmayo vient en tête avec 743 arbres par homme ; puis Djongolo, 655 ; Etse, 415 ; Akonolinga, 401 ; Saa, 378 ; Mfou, 347 ; Okola, 277. Le chiffre de Nanga Eboko ne mérite pas d'être pris en considération, la subdivision étant en partie dans une zone climatique défavorable. Ebolowa est bien le centre de diffusion et la contagion de l'exemple explique bien la densité de moins en moins forte des cacaoyères. A Yaoundé ou à Akonolinga, les plantations sont moins denses parce que l'habitude de planter est plus récente. Mais les chiffres faibles de Saa ou d'Okola s'expliquent vraisemblablement par la difficulté de trouver des terres vides dans des zones où la densité peut aller jusqu'à 100 habitants au kilomètre carré. D'un autre côté, la raréfaction extrême de la population devient défavorable. Djoum (0,8 habitant au kilomètre carré) est moins richement planté que Sangmelima ou Ebolowa (8 à 10 habitants au kilomètre carré).

(1) Les Pahouins du Sud-Cameroun, Boulou et Ntoumou notamment, répugnent à grimper aux arbres et vendent fréquemment les régimes pendants à des Mekaé. (P. A.)
(2) BALANDIER et PAUVERT, Villages gabonais, I.E.C.A., Brazzaville, 1952.

Mesurant l'importance des cacaoyers dans l'économie locale, les chiffres de répartition par homme ne donneront aucune indication quant à la répartition de la propriété des arbres et de la richesse. Toute la production est aux mains des Africains. Chacun tient à honneur de posséder une plantation. Les citadins, fonctionnaires ou employés, que leurs occupations tiennent éloignés de leur village d'origine, s'efforcent de créer une cacaoyère, même s'ils n'en recueillent pas le fruit avant leur retraite. Parmi les Boulou ou les Béti, tout homme marié est planteur. Au cours d'une enquête par sondage portant sur 490 familles rurales, on en a trouvé seulement 43 (moins de 9 %) ne jouissant pas des revenus d'une cacaoyère (1) : 7 vivent de la vente de produits agricoles divers, 15 se livrent à des travaux artisanaux, 9 sont salariés : employés de commerce, de missions, d'administration. Pour les 437 autres familles, le cacao est une ressource essentielle.

Le grand nombre de possesseurs va de pair avec une grande dispersion de la richesse et une certaine égalité des conditions sociales (2). Pourtant, les différences financières sont marquées : à considérer uniquement le revenu en argent et sans tenir compte de l'auto-consommation, 28 foyers disposent en moyenne de 3 720 F C.F.A. par an (3), 113 de 10 000 F C.F.A., 217 de 29 600 F, 87 de 71 500 F, 36 de 152 000 F, 5 de 440 000 F. Les gros revenus vont avec de vastes plantations mais aussi avec des recettes provenant de sources diverses : parmi les 5 familles jouissant des revenus les plus élevés, 2 seulement ont des revenus purement agricoles. Parmi les 36 de la catégorie immédiatement inférieure, 24 ont uniquement des revenus agricoles. La répartition des cacaoyères n'est ni la seule, ni peut-être la principale source d'inégalité. La production de cacao est considérable : 50 000 t environ pour le Cameroun, 3 000 t pour le Gabon (4). On comprend que cette culture joue un rôle essentiel dans l'évolution de la société pahouine.

En droit coutumier, elle a, par exemple, déterminé l'orientation du droit foncier. En donnant à chacun des possibilités de gains per-

(1) J. Binet, Budgets familiaux des planteurs de cacao au Cameroun, O.R.S.T.O.M.
(2) Sautter, Le cacao dans l'économie rurale du Woleu-Ntem, Etudes centrafricaines, 1951.
(3) 1 F C.F.A. = 2 F métropolitains. Les revenus ont été relevés en 1954, année où les cours du cacao ont été particulièrement favorables.
(4) La quasi-totalité de la production gabonaise provient du Woleu-Ntem et, particulièrement, des cantons Ntoumou. (P. A.)

sonnels, elle a accru l'indépendance des hommes et même des femmes à l'égard des patriarches. Permettant la constitution de biens durables et transmissibles, elle a contribué à poser en termes nouveaux le problème de la dévolution successorale.

A ne considérer que le domaine technique, la fixation au sol pour plusieurs générations a vraisemblablement mis fin au nomadisme proprement dit : les villages ne se déplacent plus guère. Mais un certain nomadisme agraire restera inévitable si un mode de régénération rapide des jachères n'est pas adopté.

L'outillage s'est considérablement accru. Une hache dont le fer petit et étroit, terminé par une soie était fichée dans la grosse tête d'un manche en bois, une daba construite de façon semblable, mais au fer plus rond et au manche moins lourd (1), une matchette constituaient les outils essentiels. Il faut maintenant y ajouter le sécateur, l'échenilleuse ou son imitation artisanale, la lance à cacao.

Des caisses ou des paniers servent de bac pour la fermentation des fèves, un toit abrite les claies où celles-ci sont mises à sécher. Certains ont songé à acheter des pulvérisateurs Vermorel pour traiter leurs arbres, d'autres rêvent de moto-faucheuses pour nettoyer le sol.

3) Commerce

Les planteurs disposent de quelques recettes ; outre l'outillage, mille besoins nouveaux sont nés, que le commerce doit satisfaire.

Fait étrange à constater, il n'y a absolument aucune tradition commerciale chez les Pahouins. Pour payer les dots, les anciens se servaient de pointes d'ivoire ou de morceaux de fer façonnés en forme de flèches. Mais était-ce là une monnaie ? Rien ne s'achetait, rien ne se vendait. Et cependant, selon Balandier, la recherche des richesses représentait l'activité essentielle des hommes (2), en dehors du travail régulier, peut-être d'ailleurs parce qu'il n'y avait pas de commerce et d'échanges. A travers les récits, il semble que les ancêtres n'aient pu se procurer les objets venant des pays lointains que par des bilaba, et non par des achats. Le bilaba se rapproche des potlaches par son caractère de lutte. Au cours d'une visite, l'hôte donne à son ami toutes sortes de présents en le défiant de pouvoir en faire autant. Plus tard, celui-ci devra fournir plus encore qu'il n'a reçu. Il s'agit donc à la fois d'un échange et d'une lutte de prestige (3). Les bilaba ont vraisemblablement servi à distribuer les produits en provenance de l'Europe (sel, armes, vêtements) et à les échanger contre l'ivoire récolté dans l'intérieur, la viande de chasse, ou les chiens que certaines tribus consomment. C'est en général à de tels échanges que font allusion les vieux récits. Mais on peut à peine parler de commerce pour des dons et contre-dons aussi ritualisés. Et rien d'autre ne permet de supposer une vie économique comportant des échanges. De Yaoundé à Brazzaville, il n'y a pas de marchés, ou plus précisément ceux qui existent aujourd'hui ont été établis par les Européens ou à leur instigation (1).

(1) La soie de la houe, enfoncée dans une branche en forme de crochet est, en outre, ligaturée sur celle-ci avec une liane. Les vieilles femmes utilisent encore le bâton-à-fouir, qui a, ou a eu, une signification rituelle. (P. A.)

(2) Cf. Largeau (n° 48), pour le rôle mythique de l'araignée dans la fabrication des marchandises « chez les morts ». (P. A.)

(3) J. Guilbot, Journal de la Société des Africanistes, 1951, t. XXI ; G. Balandier, Sociologie actuelle de l'Afrique noire, P.U.F., 1955, p. 182.

Une étude attentive des noms de villages dans plusieurs subdivisions n'a pas permis de trouver un nom qui paraisse lié aux idées de marché, d'échange, de commerce. Les vocabulaires sont d'ailleurs de plus en plus limités sur ces sujets.

Et dans ce pays si peu préparé à une vie économique, l'économie mondiale pénètre avec toute sa complexité, imposant à la production totale un prix d'achat aux variations duquel les planteurs ne peuvent évidemment rien comprendre : leur désarroi est normal puisqu'ils n'ont même pas pu, par des commerces traditionnels, se familiariser avec les idées de prix, de besoin, de marchandage...

Il va sans dire que l'époque où le sel était la marchandise la plus demandée est depuis longtemps dépassée. Le sac de sel figure pourtant dans les cadeaux traditionnels de mariage, et la fabrication de sel avec les cendres lessivées du palmier est encore connue, mais le produit n'est vendu, et bien rarement d'ailleurs, que pour ses propriétés médicales.

Les achats se sont diversifiés à l'extrême, comme on peut en juger par la répartition des dépenses dans un budget familial moyen (2) :

Alimentation	14	%	Ustensiles de ménage	1,9	%
Textiles	17,4	–	Equipement	7,7	–
Dot	13	–	Impôts	8,5	–
Logement et mobilier	7,5	–	Médicaments	1,3	–
Literie	1,5	–	Education	0,9	–
Eclairage et entretien	3	–	Cadeaux et divers	6	–
Voyages	2	–

L'alimentation comporte maintenant, même en brousse, des produits importés comme le stockfish ou comme le pain, les sardines, le sucre ou le lait condensé dont la consommation est plus irrégulière. Les vêtements constituent le principal chef de dépense. L'empressement à suivre la mode parisienne n'est peut-être pas un trait ethnique propre aux femmes pahouines, mais c'est un caractère géographique bien particulier au Sud-Cameroun : aussi les tissus vendus sont-ils pour une bonne proportion ceux vendus en Europe. Les impressions particulières à l'Afrique, les wax-prints, reculent. Lingerie, bonneterie, chaussures, témoignent de ce raffinement qui va avec la richesse. L'achat des objets durables classés sous la rubrique « équipement » (bicyclettes, phonos, lampes à pression) en est un autre symptôme, comme la transformation des besoins pour les ustensiles de ménage.

(1) Cette absence est également signalée par BALANDIER, op. cit., p. 544.
(2) Ces chiffres extraits des Budgets familiaux au Cameroun, p. 150, ne tiennent pas compte, rappelons-le, de l'auto-consommation.

6: Alexandre and Binet FH9 Fang

Si les marmites sont toujours l'instrument de cuisine essentiel, les « émaillés » sont durement concurrencés par la faïence et le verre. On trouve partout des couvertures mais, en outre, l'emploi des draps devient plus fréquent.

La simple liste des marchandises montre bien l'importance actuelle du commerce. Les autochtones ne l'ont pas toujours compris faute de goût pour cette profession ; ils n'ont pas créé d'entreprises commerciales et ont souvent laissé faire des immigrés : gens de la côte familiarisés depuis plus longtemps avec les usages européens, et surtout Bamiléké ou « Haoussa » qui possèdent, eux, des traditions commerciales solides et une grande habileté dans ce domaine. Les Boulou en particulier méprisent le commerce et refusent de s'y adonner. Les autres peuples pahouins ne manifestent pas une antipathie aussi brutale, mais leur activité commerciale reste très limitée.

Est-ce à cette carence des autochtones et à cette mainmise des « étrangers » qu'il faut imputer l'organisation et la localisation du commerce dans la région ? En effet, les villages sont extrêmement mal desservis : les marchés sont rares et les boutiques rurales également. Peut-être faut-il marquer une différence entre les divers groupes pahouins ou pahouinisés : si le commerçant villageois est toujours un personnage rarissime en pays boulou, malgré la richesse, au moins relative, des planteurs, il n'est pas inconnu en pays éwôndô et se rencontre plus fréquemment chez les Éton, où les ressources sont pourtant plus faibles. Faute de commerce local, la collecte des produits, et plus précisément du cacao, posait un problème difficile : l'intervention des acheteurs apportait une solution. Les maisons de commerce leur avancent de l'argent et achètent les tonnages qu'ils peuvent collecter. De case en case, le long des pistes, l'acheteur négocie les achats avec les planteurs. A côté de ces « achats par colportage », le développement des ventes par colportage aurait pu paraître logique. Et pourtant, c'est un phénomène tout récent, lié au développement des transports par auto et bicyclette. Mais, tandis que les acheteurs sont en général originaires du pays, les colporteurs sont le plus souvent des étrangers.

Les achats porte à porte entraînant mille inconvénients, l'administration s'est efforcée de créer des marchés ruraux, afin que la publicité des opérations et la concurrence en garantissent la correction. Ces marchés représentent une tentative pour implanter le commerce en milieu rural : ils ne sont pas limités à l'achat du cacao ou des palmistes ; des commerçants africains s'efforcent d'y vendre tissus, quincaillerie ou produits alimentaires. Mais ils sont encore trop récents pour que l'usage en soit solidement implanté, pour qu'ils aient une existence propre. Peut-être faudrait-il, ici encore, mettre à part certains cantons éton où il existe des marchés ruraux paraissant vraiment indigènes.

Bien qu'ils soient d'origine européenne, les marchés qui se tiennent chaque jour dans les chefs-lieux de subdivisions sont parfaitement entrés dans les mœurs. A l'origine, ils furent créés pour l'alimentation des agglomérations formées autour des postes administratifs ou missionnaires. Puis des commerçants professionnels vinrent y offrir des marchandises importées aux villageois venus vendre les produits de leurs champs. Aujourd'hui, ces marchés sont parfaitement réguliers et attirent le public dans un rayon de 20 km. Leur importance varie avec celle de la subdivision considérée ; on peut retenir à titre d'exemple les chiffres suivants, obtenus par l'étude du marché de Sangmélima : deux cents femmes viennent vendre des légumes, du maïs ou des fruits de leurs jardins. Des revendeuses d'huile de palme, après avoir acheté litre par litre en brousse, viennent y vendre quelque 10 à 20 litres. Des jeunes garçons vendent cigarettes, morceaux de sucre, sandwiches ou verres de café, tandis que des femmes apportent des beignets. A côté de ces commerçants d'occasion, d'autres travaillent à plus grande échelle : une vingtaine vendent des poissons séchés et fumés, préparés sur la côte ou des stockfish (séchés et salés) importés d'Europe, tandis que, dans leurs échoppes, soixante « market boys », vendeurs de tissus, d'émaillés, ou de quincaillerie, attendent les clients.

6: Alexandre and Binet FH9 Fang

Le nombre des artisans groupés autour du marché, le nombre des cars, des camions aménagés ou des bicyclettes qui ont amené les chalands, montrent bien qu'il ne s'agit pas d'une institution artificielle. Le marché tend maintenant à devenir un des éléments de la ville.

Il partage ce rôle avec les boutiques. Commerçants européens et commerçants africains travaillent selon les méthodes occidentales, sont à la fois grossistes et détaillants. Ils s'efforcent de maintenir leurs relations commerciales avec les détaillants africains qui savent fort bien aller de fournisseur en fournisseur pour comparer marchandises, prix et conditions. En même temps, ils vendent directement au public. De telles boutiques sont rares hors des villes : ici, comme pour les marchés, les villages sont peu touchés par la vie économique.

4) Les villes

Ce manque de dynamisme de la brousse se comprend si l'on se reporte aux conditions du peuplement : la dispersion de l'habitat est très nette. Il n'y a pas, à proprement parler, de village, mais une poussière de hameaux. Au Cameroun, les villages sont très petits : 230 habitants en moyenne. Encore s'agit-il d'une unité de commandement : leur village se divise en nombreux hameaux de 5 à 20 cases groupées autour de celle du chef de famille.

Au Gabon, les leaders fang s'inquiètent de cet émiettement de la population et ont lancé des mots d'ordre de regroupement de villages. Chez eux, en effet, la dispersion est peut-être plus marquée encore. « La moyenne des habitants par village varie de 42 (territoire de Mitzic) à 105 sur Oyem et presque à 138 dans le canton fang de Makokou (1). »

Ce n'est pas ici le lieu d'étudier si la dispersion est naturelle dans un pays où aucune autorité ne s'était imposée, où le seul pouvoir

(1) Balandier et Pauvert, Les villages gabonais, Mémoire I.E.C.A., Brazzaville, 1952.

certain était celui du chef de famille, ou si au contraire elle témoigne d'une anarchie nouvelle, d'un individualisme exacerbé. Signalons simplement que les hameaux sont plus gros en pays bulu qu'en pays éwôndô ou bané, alors que les institutions politiques anciennes des Êwôndô et des Bané semblent avoir donné aux chefs de tribus des pouvoirs politiques, des insignes, dont il ne paraît pas avoir été question dans les coutumes bulu. Avec un début de concentration du pouvoir politique coïnciderait une dispersion plus grande de l'habitat.

Il reste qu'aucun point de concentration n'imposait une cristallisation quelconque à une masse amorphe. Ceci, lié à l'absence de commerce, marque bien le caractère nouveau et artificiel des villes. Toutes sont de création récente, et cependant, elles sont devenues nécessaires.

Leur rôle dans le commerce extérieur de la contrée est évident, mais leur activité dans l'économie régionale n'est pas moins essentielle. En effet, jadis, sous l'influence de besoins limités, la population ne pratiquait guère la spécialisation : chaque groupe se suffisait à lui-même. Aucune division du travail, sauf le partage des tâches masculines et des tâches féminines, ne s'imposait. Seuls les forgerons étaient en possession d'une technique spéciale, leur permettant d'exercer un métier. Encore n'étaient-ils pas castés : un forgeron pouvait s'allier par mariage avec n'importe quelle famille et un fils de cultivateur pouvait devenir forgeron.

Chacun pouvait extraire du minerai de fer, mais seul un homme d'art, ayant acquis connaissances et pouvoir magique, pouvait façonner le métal. La différenciation professionnelle, on le voit, est encore rudimentaire. Peut-être coïncide-t-elle avec un niveau technologique médiocre : l'outillage est sommaire : une pierre employée comme enclume, une barre de fer comme marteau, un soufflet de forge. Le forgeron ne paraît pas avoir été ce personnage mystérieux et redouté que l'on rencontre dans d'autres civilisations. Tout au plus peut-on penser qu'il y eut des interdits sexuels pendant certaines phases du travail, ce qui pourrait supposer un aspect magique ou religieux (1).

Le petit nombre des objets utilisés n'exigeait pas une véritable division du travail : un morceau d'ivoire rainuré servait à marteler des écorces pour les assouplir et permettre de les utiliser comme vêtements. Cette technique a évidemment disparu. Quelques poteries, des bols de bois remplacés maintenant par des objets importés. On trouve encore assez fréquemment des tambours d'appel, des louches ou cuillers de bois sculptées par des artisans, des mortiers. Les fers de lance se vendent couramment sur les marchés. Les arbalètes sont de moins en moins employées et les chasseurs fabriquent eux-mêmes leurs filets.

Les besoins, plus variés maintenant, ont donné naissance à de nombreuses spécialisations professionnelles. Certaines sont représentées dans les milieux ruraux, mais la plupart des artisans résident en ville : c'est là qu'ils ont appris leur métier, qu'ils trouvent plus facilement matériaux et outillage, c'est là aussi que l'affluence leur permettra, pensent-ils, de grouper des commandes nombreuses.

(1) Miss KINGSLEY, Travels in West Africa, Londres, 1897 ; notons pourtant « un important art de la poterie, un travail du fer qui mérite une notation spéciale en raison de son excellence, une technique du traitement du latex, un art du vêtement tressé » (in : BALANDIER, Village fang, Etudes centrafricaines, 1951).

Certains métiers sont implantés de longue date, comme ceux de tailleur, de maçon, de menuisier. Mais, si les Pahouins sont nombreux dans les métiers du bois et du bâtiment, ils sont souvent concurrencés comme tailleurs par des immigrés. De nouvelles professions naissent souvent contrôlées aussi par des étrangers : photographes, matelassiers, mécaniciens. Cette simple liste des professions les plus répandues permet de deviner l'amélioration de l'habitat ; portes et fenêtres, tables, chaises, armoires, lits, matelas sont maintenant assez couramment employés.

Les villes remplissent un rôle essentiel et sont parfaitement incorporées au pays, puisque c'est là que les ruraux vont faire exécuter les objets dont ils ont besoin. Le caractère disparate de leur peuplement étonne. Des immigrés venus de toutes les régions du Cameroun, ou de l'A.E.F. leur donnent un caractère cosmopolite, alors que la brousse n'a pas subi un brassage aussi complexe.

Il ne faudrait pas cependant s'exagérer l'opposition entre ruraux et citadins : bien des paysans ont séjourné quelques années dans les centres et y ont conservé des relations. L'émigration a été assez active il y a 30 ans et certaines tribus pahouines étaient très fortement représentées sur les chantiers forestiers. Vers les villes, le mouvement était également marqué : « Le développement des plantations de cacao au Woleu-Ntem, en transformant la condition des villageois, semble bien avoir été la cause principale de l'arrêt de l'émigration en 1930. » Cette remarque de Sautter à propos des Fang est vraie aussi des Boulou et — peut-être à un moindre degré — des Béti et tribus assimilées, plus serrées dans leur territoire.

Béti, Boulou ou Fang constituent une petite bourgeoisie plutôt qu'un prolétariat sans ressources. Les chiffres suivants indiquent la proportion relativement faible de manœuvres (1).

RÉPARTITION PROFESSIONNELLE DES ÉMIGRÉS PAHOUINS A DOUALA

	Manœuvres	Ouvriers	Professions intellectuelles	Commerçants et patentés
	%	%	%	%
Béti	37	55	1,9	6
Boulou		60	40

Une étude sur Dolisie, Baronga et Poto Poto-permet de faire des constatations semblables (2) pour les professions.

(1) M. Sorex, Démographie et problèmes urbains en A.E.F., I.F.A.N., 1954.
(2) D'après J. Guildot, Petite étude sur la main-d'œuvre à Douala, I.F.A.N., Cameroun, 1947.

La proportion d'individus instruits est parmi eux de 40 % et, ce qui est plus important, la proportion d'individus très instruits est relativement forte.

POTO-POTO : NIVEAU CULTUREL DES « FORESTIERS COTIERS »

Illettrés	Instruits	Titulaires du C.E.P.	Titulaires du brevet
610	390	111	56

Après avoir passé une période en ville, des émigrés rentrent dans leurs villages d'origine, diminuant ainsi la séparation entre les deux. De leur côté, les broussards viennent souvent dans les centres (1) et l'on constate alors que chaque chef-lieu de subdivision est un centre d'attraction véritable. Bien que neuves, ces villes ne sont pas artificielles. Un autre fait en témoigne : la répartition socio-professionnelle de la population urbaine est pratiquement constante d'une ville à l'autre : preuve qu'elle répond à des nécessités constantes elles aussi.

Pour 100 habitants, on rencontre en général : manœuvres, 16,5 ; employés de commerce, 12 ; commerçants, 8,3 ; chauffeurs, 6,9 (et motor-boys 4,3) ; employés des services publics, 6,7 ; domestiques, 5,8 ; menuisiers, 4,9 ; maçons, 4 ; cultivateurs, 3,5 ; tailleurs, 3,2 ; mécaniciens, 2,9 ; photographes, 0,8 ; bouviers, 0,5 ; catéchistes, 0,1 ; sans profession, 9, etc.

Telle est dans ses grandes lignes la répartition actuelle. Retenons simplement qu'avec la diffusion d'une culture nouvelle, la société tout entière se modifie. Les techniques et outils employés se sont enrichis et diversifiés, en même temps que les conditions sociales.

J. B.

(1) Un chiffre précise le nombre de ces voyages : pour 480 budgets concernant au total quelque 2 000 individus, 1 116 voyages ont été dénombrés (J. Binet, op. cit., p. 112).

[p. 40]

CHAPITRE V

ORGANISATION SOCIALE

1) Formes d'établissement, habitat

Au groupe social de base, la famille patriarcale (nda bôl = lit. maison des gens) correspond le hameau ou village élémentaire, jal (bulu, pl. mal; fañ, éwôndo : dzal), généralement désigné du nom du patriarche (ésa = père ; ntôl = aîné), mais portant parfois, lorsqu'il est isolé, un toponyme spécial (éyôlé = nom propre, désignation ; le nom d'une personne est plutôt jôé — f. : édzoé). Ces mal sont le plus souvent groupés en villages pluri-familiaux, parfois pluri-claniques, minlam (sing. : nlam), ce dernier terme désignant tout à la fois le groupe d'habitations et le terroir qui en dépend. Le nlam a toujours un toponyme propre qui peut faire allusion à sa situation géographique : nkôlayôp = sur la colline ; à une particularité topographique ou botanique : ako'abele = pierre dressée, ajap = nom d'un arbre, ma'an = carrefour ; à un incident marquant de sa fondation : ébolewo'o (Ébolowa) = chimpanzé pourri, le village ayant été fondé à un endroit où l'on avait trouvé le corps d'un chimpanzé, menjikôm = de me nji kômbo, je n'ai pas voulu, la famille des fondateurs n'ayant pas voulu aller plus loin ; ou d'un sobriquet ou nom fantaisiste : mañ = mer, l'emplacement ayant été jugé « beau comme la mer », kamelôn = = Kamerun « parce qu'un Blanc nous avait dit que le pays s'appellerait ainsi désormais », évuzok = estomac d'éléphant, à cause de l'appétit de ses habitants, etc. Il arrive aussi que le nom d'un village reprenne celui du village d'origine de son fondateur, parfois accompagné d'une indication comme baa = second, mfefé = nouveau, ou du nom de son fondateur ou de son chef : Meyo me Nkulu le Méyo de Nkulu.

On a décrit plus haut l'avance en saut-de-mouton des petits groupes pahouins au moment de l'invasion. Chacun de ces groupes correspondait en général à un hameau — jal — ou à un village — nlam — ou plutôt aux cellules familiales correspondantes : nda bôl ou mvôk. Le groupe en migration conservait des droits sur l'emplacement abandonné (bilik). De nos jours la migration de villages entiers est beaucoup plus rare. On assiste plutôt soit à l'essaimage de villages trop peuplés par rapport à la quantité de terres disponibles pour les plantations (en particulier, au Cameroun surtout, de terres proches d'une route carrossable), soit à une sorte d'explosion ou de désintégration sociale, ce dernier phénomène étant particulièrement sensible chez les Fang, où il a été bien décrit par Balandier. L'action administrative a souvent joué un rôle primordial dans les dernières migrations; au Gabon, par exemple, on a essayé de déplacer des villages entiers, pour des raisons administratives, économiques ou sanitaires, mais, ce faisant, on a « cassé » des collectivités déjà rendues fragiles par la disparition des nécessités défensives anciennes et les transformations de l'économie résultant de la colonisation. Les villages nouveaux, souvent reconstitués sans tenir compte des structures claniques et familiales antérieures, n'avaient plus aucune cohésion et éclataient en petits hameaux mal enracinés et faiblement peuplés, se déplaçant continuellement de façon anarchique et cherchant le plus souvent à échapper au contact de l'administration. Depuis 1946, sous l'impulsion notamment du député Aubame, Fang lui-même, existe au Gabon un mouvement de regroupement des villages par clans, dont les résultats ne semblent pas avoir correspondu aux espérances de ses initiateurs.

La situation est sensiblement différente au Cameroun, où l'introduction précoce de la culture du cacao (avant 1914, en pays éwôndo et dans le Nord du pays bulu) a considérablement freiné le nomadisme villageois, les planteurs répugnant à s'éloigner des plantations. Lorsqu'il y a migration, il s'agit plutôt de l'essaimage d'une partie des habitants qui vont fonder un nouveau hameau dans un emplacement propre aux cultures, sans qu'il y ait désormais de correspondance obligatoire entre structure familiale et habitat : le nouveau jal ne correspondra plus forcément à une famille, mais pourra grouper plusieurs foyers relevant de lignées (mvam) différentes et non apparentées.

Le village pahouin d'autrefois était conçu pour la défense. Situé dans une clairière oblongue, généralement à une portée de nkul, tambour-téléphone, du village le plus proche (3 à 4 km), il comprenait deux rangées de cases rectangulaires, jointives, pignon à pignon, de part et d'autre d'une cour ou rue centrale (nseñ), barrée à chaque bout par un corps de garde (aba, abeñ) ne ménageant qu'une entrée étroite, souvent en chicane, barricadée chaque soir. Toutes les portes ouvraient sur la nseñ, les parois extérieures ne comportant que quelques meurtrières. Le village s'entourait parfois d'un fossé (ésalak) et de chausse-trapes, parfois aussi d'une palanque (akak). Les plantations vivrières (mefup) les plus importantes étaient en forêt, souvent assez éloignées, mais près du village, derrière les cases, se trouvaient des bananeraies et des potagers, alors que les plantes médicinales (bilok bi mebiañ) étaient, de même que le tabac, cultivées dans la nseñ centrale. Les parois des cases étaient faites d'écorce (celle de certains ficus en particulier) détrempée, puis battue à plat et séchée pour former des planches : ce sont les « carbotes » (de l'anglais cardboard) encore en usage sur la Côte. Ces planches étaient fixées au moyen de lianes et de chevilles sur des poteaux plantés en rectangle. Le toit à double pente était en « tuiles » de folioles de raphia (ôbaé, pl. abaé) pliées en deux et épinglées avec des éclats de bois sur des voliges, faites avec les éclats de la nervure maîtresse de la feuille, parallèles à la faîtière. Celle-ci reposait sur des poteaux fourchus, dont les deux centraux avaient une signification magique et étaient en général sculptés ou tout au moins peints. Les dimensions de ces cases d'habitation dépassaient rarement 6 m sur 3, alors que celles des meba (corps de garde) pouvaient atteindre le double. Dans chaque foyer, l'homme avait sa case personnelle où il gardait ses biens (biôm) principaux : caisses contenant les pagnes, etc., armes, tambours, « médicaments » (mebiaň), siège personnel, masques et accessoires magiques... Les cases des femmes, accolées à la sienne, et où couchaient les jeunes enfants, servaient de cuisines et contenaient les paniers de transports, les paniers-greniers (binaan), les poteries (viek) ou « negro-pots » d'importation (minkeň), la claie-séchoir, les haveneaux, mortiers et autres ustensiles féminins. Les jeunes hommes célibataires couchaient dans le corps de garde, les jeunes filles avec les femmes. Un jal habité par une famille de moyenne importance pouvait avoir une cinquantaine de mètres de long. Les grands minlam atteignaient un demi-kilomètre, la nseň étant alors divisée en sections par les meba secondaires de chaque famille. Le chef habitait au milieu et avait une aba plus grande que celle des autres familles.

Les villages de ce type ont à peu près complètement disparu. Il subsiste des cases d'écorce dans quelques villages écartés, au Gabon, mais elles sont de plus en plus rares. Pratiquement, on trouve à peu près partout la case en banco armé (l'armature est en lattes de nervure maîtresse de raphia, improprement appelée bambou), imposée en pays bulu, vers 1925, par un administrateur surnommé Nkulu (= la Tornade), et qui a fait tache d'huile dans tout le pays pahouin. Ces cases sont le plus souvent rectangulaires mais tendent, dans les villages riches, à s'inspirer de formes européennes, avec un plan en T, en U, ou en H, des vérandas, des douchières en appentis. Elles sont souvent crépies au kaolin (fem), parfois mélangé d'ocre rouge ou vert ou de bleu à linge importé. Le toit reste le plus souvent en tuile de raphia, mais il peut être à quatre pentes ou encore plus compliqué, copié sur les toits européens. Chaque famille a son cabinet d'aisances (éduk).

La forme des villages a changé également. Le plan le plus répandu conserve la nseň centrale unique, mais les cases sont sur quatre lignes de part et d'autre, séparées et non plus jointives. Les cases des hommes sont les plus proches de la route, celles des femmes, appelées maintenant kisin (cuisines) rangées derrière ou parfois autour de celle du mari. Le crépi est souvent peint à fresque de sujets variés ; copies d'images de magazines, sujets religieux, illustration, en pays bulu, du roman Nnanga kôn (1), portraits d'Européens célèbres localement ou mondialement. L'aba a perdu son caractère défensif et se présente souvent comme un hangar aéré, avec un toit assez bas pour bien protéger du soleil. Certains villages sont orientés perpendiculairement à la route, d'autres ont un plan en L, en Y, avec plusieurs minseñ. Les « concessions » familiales sont séparées par des haies d'euphorbe, de croton, d'hibiscus, de bougainvillées. On trouve parfois des bergeries, alors que dans les villages d'autrefois (et la plupart des modernes) le petit bétail erre en liberté. Le village comporte souvent une case des hôtes (ayak).

(1) Le meilleur peintre boulou de ces dernières années était David MONEWOSO, Yemfek de Sangmélima qui, non seulement a fixé les types des héros de Nnanga kôn, mais encore est un bon portraitiste et un remarquable animalier.

Dans la construction, l'homme se charge généralement de la charpente et de l'armature, laissant aux femmes la préparation et la mise en place du banco. Mais les cases à l'européenne, avec leurs huisseries compliquées et leur sol souvent cimenté, sont de plus en plus l'œuvre d'artisans spécialisés, payés pour diriger le travail de la main-d'œuvre familiale fournie par le propriétaire. Ils ont cependant conservé, à côté de la désignation anglaise de mason, le vieux nom de nloñ nda = = lit. tisseur de case, qui date des cases en écorce cousue (1).

2) Groupements et parentés

Les grandes divisions de la société pahouine sont à la fois précises, dans l'esprit de ses membres eux-mêmes, et incertaines pour l'observateur européen, toujours tenté de les articuler en organigrammes accessibles à sa « logique » et gêné par les variations ou les confusions dialectales de leur terminologie. Le R. P. Trilles, se fondant sur l'observation des seuls Fang gabonais, parvenait à une sorte de reconstitution paléontologique de la « nation fang », extrêmement théorique, mais cependant non dépourvue de tout fondement, puisqu'on retrouve ses traces dans le mouvement contemporain du Regroupement Pahouin, incarné au Cameroun par le parti de l'U.T.N.K. (Union Tribale Ntem Kribi). De telles constructions restent bien hasardeuses dans l'état actuel de nos connaissances et il vaut mieux se borner à une description pure et simple en ayant le moins possible recours à l'interprétation, laquelle, en tout état de cause, doit être faite au mode dubitatif.

Je me contenterai donc ici de tenter de saisir la société pahouine à trois niveaux de structure importants, en insistant encore sur ce qu'une telle démarche a forcément d'arbitraire et d'incomplet.

Ces trois niveaux sont à la fois les plus aisément perceptibles à l'observateur européen et, semble-t-il, les plus significatifs aux yeux des Pahouins eux-mêmes. Ce sont, ce que je baptiserai, faute de mieux et parce que ce sont les termes retenus notamment par l'administration, la tribu, le clan et la famille-étendue ou famille-villageoise. Il faudra aussi dire un mot des structures intermédiaires, lignées, fractions, groupe villageois, et s'étendre un peu plus sur la famille-foyer ou famille-restreinte, dont l'importance va croissant.

(1) L'habitat continue à évoluer : les huisseries (portes, fenêtres et volets) sont employées couramment. Les dimensions des édifices amènent à construire une véritable charpente. Enfin, la possession d'un toit de tôle est le signe de la richesse. Depuis ces dernières années, un véritable engouement pour l'amélioration de l'habitation est né : au Cameroun, on peut estimer que 10 % des habitations actuellement construites en brousse sont du type le plus moderne. (J. B.)

a) La tribu

Je désigne par « tribu » ce que Trilles appelle « groupe », réservant, avec beaucoup d'observateurs gabonais, le terme « tribu » à ce que je baptise « clan ». C'est qu'en effet, il n'existe guère dans le Sud-gabonais qu'une seule « tribu » au sens où je l'entends, celle des Fang proprement dits, ou Fang-Fang, comme disent les auteurs espagnols.

Je ne connais pas de mot pahouin désignant expressément la tribu. Trilles le rend par mfulane meyoñ, c'est-à-dire « ensemble des clans ». En fait, et c'est sans doute significatif, le terme le plus couramment usité est ayoñ, qui désigne aussi bien ce que j'appelle le clan ; mfulane meyoñ est employé surtout quand il y a lieu de préciser qu'on parle du niveau de structure supérieur, parfois désigné aussi comme ngum ayoñ, « le clan tout entier », ou meyoñ mese, « tous les clans » (1). Cependant, il y a bien une réalité de la tribu, malgré cette incertitude dans sa désignation. Elle est connue sous un nom propre — Fang, Boulou, Ntoumou, Êwôndo, etc. — et ses membres ont un sentiment effectif d'appartenance.

Les tribus ont le plus souvent une zone géographique d'habitat homogène, mais ce n'est pas une règle absolue : les Mvaé sont répartis en deux blocs, séparés par les Ntoumou ; de même, il y a des noyaux fañ isolés au Nord du pays bulu.

J'ai rappelé (supra, p. 16) la légende qui fait remonter la formation des tribus à la séparation des enfants de l'ancêtre Afiri Kara, après le passage de la Sanaga. Chaque tribu se composerait donc des descendants d'un de ces ancêtres mythiques, ayant suivi une route de migration distincte et s'étant plus tard fixé dans une zone particulière de nomadisation agricole. L'explication fournirait une définition satisfaisante, mais elle est en contradiction avec une autre tradition, paraissant mieux attestée, et selon laquelle les mêmes clans se retrouvent au sein de toutes les tribus. Cette dernière tradition s'accorde mieux avec les aspirations à l'unité de la « nation pahouine ». Les tribus seraient alors des groupements de fait, de composition clanique identique, au sein de chacun desquels se retrouveraient des descendants de plusieurs ancêtres mythiques et non d'un seul comme dans la théorie précédente.

Quoi qu'il en soit, il n'est pas contestable que la tribu existe bel et bien, et se manifeste en particulier contre les tribus voisines, alors même qu'il serait admis que celles-ci auraient la même composition clanique : le récit des guerres anciennes, le spectacle des rivalités actuelles sont là pour en témoigner.

Ajoutons que certaines tribus ont une origine traditionnelle non pahouine, encore qu'elles fassent bien partie du groupe. C'est le cas des Mbida-Mbane et Mvog-Nyenge qui descendraient d'esclaves des Pahouins ; des Fong, qui proviendraient du mariage d'un Bané avec une femme pygmée, peut-être d'autres. Nous verrons qu'il est difficile dans certains cas de savoir s'il faut classer certains groupes parmi les « tribus » ou parmi les « clans ».

(1) Les traducteurs américains de la Bible ont rendu par ayoñ aussi bien « peuple » que « tribu » ou « royaume ».

La tribu n'avait autrefois aucune organisation politique d'ensemble : il n'y a pas de mot signifiant proprement « chef ». Les individus désignés pour la mener à la guerre, la représenter dans une négociation commerciale ou politique, n'avaient qu'une autorité temporaire, personnelle et toujours mise en question. Les liens de parenté clanique étaient beaucoup plus forts et marqués que les liens tribaux. Cependant, il existait des associations politico-religieuses, comme le ngil, aujourd'hui très mal connues, qui transcendaient les barrières claniques et donnaient une certaine cohésion tribale. D'autre part, certains individus pouvaient avoir une influence, parfois une autorité, mais jamais un commandement permanent, s'étendant au delà des limites de leur clan. Il s'agissait certainement le plus souvent de dignitaires des associations initiatiques : le nsig nlo, grand juge des Bané, était probablement un initié de rang élevé du ngil. Le njôô bôl (commandeur de gens, chef de guerre), l'ével (« capita », chef de caravane), le nkukuma (1) (rico hombre) n'avaient par contre qu'une autorité de circonstance et dans un cercle restreint.

b) Le clan

J'appelle « clan » ce que la plupart des Pahouins appellent ayoñ (mvôg, mvôk dans certaines tribus du Nord) (2). C'est peut-être la structure fondamentale de la société pahouine, en tout cas, celle que les Fang du Gabon ont essayé de reconstituer en priorité, le regroupement des villages devant se faire, à leurs yeux, en fonction de celui des mayoñ.

L'ayoñ comprend l'ensemble des descendants patrilinéaires d'un ancêtre commun, les enfants naturels des filles qui en font partie, et les adoptés. Il a un nom, une devise tambourinée (ndan) souvent des interdits (bilyi, biki), peut-être un totem. L'exogamie la plus stricte y est de règle. Tous ses membres se disent frères (bobenyañ).

S'il n'y avait pas à proprement parler de division politique correspondant à l'ayoñ, ni de chefferie organisée, ce qui s'explique notamment par l'habitat très dispersé de ses membres, le sentiment clanique était et est encore très fort. Des réunions périodiques, bisulan, rassemblaient les membres de l'ayoñ, sous la présidence de l'aîné (nlôl) de la lignée (mvôk, ayôm) (3) aînée. L'habitude de ces bisulan a été reprise

(1) Forme emphatique de nkukum (riche).

(2) Coupnarie, 1933, Coutumes de Ngong et Sanaga, indique : Ayong fractionnées en mayom (ayom). L'ayom est formé par la réunion de plusieurs mvogo qui, descendants d'un même ancêtre, se considèrent comme issus de la même mère (obligation d'exogamie). Parfois une déférence est marquée au mvogo se rapprochant le plus de l'ancêtre et son chef est nommé nlombe ou nga mvôo nnam ou mol nnam.

La collectivité peut s'assembler : Emol de Nda bol, Ekoan de mvogo. Tous les adultes peuvent parler. Puis anciens et notables vont à l'écart pour une délibération (esok). Ils revviennent exposer la décision. (J. B.)

(3) Ayôm : probablement même racine que nnam, pl. bayôm = mâle ; à noter que l'ayôm est souvent désigné par le nom d'un ancêtre féminin.

récemment, au Cameroun d'abord, où le commandement indigène a été réorganisé de 1945 à 1948, sur des données claniques, puis au Gabon, où les meyoñ sont, surtout dans le Sud, en état de désintégration avancée.

L'ayoñ, dont les villages, séparés les uns des autres par des villages d'autres clans, s'étirent parfois sur plusieurs centaines de kilomètres, se divise en fractions (mvôk), comprenant les descendants des frères ou plutôt des fils de l'ancêtre clanique, puis en lignées (bisa, meyôm), descendant des fils de l'ancêtre de la fraction. Plus la généalogie (mvam, nlañ bimvam; meba'a) s'allonge, plus ces distinctions de catégories deviennent incertaines : on appellera ici mvôk ce qu'on appelle ésa à côté et ayôm un peu plus loin. Mais, sauf dans le Sud du Gabon, ces généalogies sont encore bien conservées et la plupart des adultes savent se rattacher, sinon à l'ancêtre clanique lui-même, du moins à sa lignée. Cet enseignement des généalogies, pièce maîtresse de l'éducation traditionnelle des garçons, recule devant les progrès de la scolarisation, mais les enfants savent encore au moins la généalogie de leur famille-villageoise (jal, dzal; nda bôl).

Trilles dénombrait environ quatre-vingts meyoñ chez les Fang gabonais ; on arrive à des chiffres analogues chez les Boulou ou les Ewôndo, ce qui tendrait à recouper la théorie selon laquelle les liens claniques s'étendent, au delà des divisions tribales, à tout l'ensemble pahouin. La chose ne paraît pas contestable pour ceux des clans qu'on retrouve sous le même nom dans toutes les tribus ou dans plusieurs ; elle l'est peut-être davantage pour certaines fractions gabonaises assimilées plus ou moins arbitrairement à des clans camerounais à l'occasion du « regroupement pahouin ». Même dans ce dernier cas, cependant, il existe à cette pseudo-tradition un précédent réellement coutumier, celui de tribus comme les Yebekolo ou les Yembama, dont le nom peut faire penser qu'il s'agit d'anciens clans, détachés d'une tribu (les Boulou, en l'occurrence) et s'étant mis à pratiquer l'endogamie : on peut concevoir une « clanification » analogue de fractions Fang isolées trop longtemps de leur ayoñ.

Quoi qu'il en soit cette communauté inter-tribale des meyoñ est plus évidente entre les tribus bulu et fañ, c'est-à-dire dans le Sud, qu'entre ces tribus et les tribus beti du Nord, dont certaines, d'ailleurs, appellent le clan mvôg et non ayoñ : phénomène parfaitement explicable si l'on admet que les Eton et Mangisa, par exemple, sont plutôt des pahouinisés que des Pahouins proprement dits.

Chaque ayoñ a son nom propre, qui serait, d'après Trilles, celui du totem clanique précédé du préfixe ésu ou ye (les fractions ou lignées sont désignées par le nom de l'ancêtre). Certains meyoñ, cependant, ont un nom ne comprenant pas ces particules, mais il s'agit généralement de groupes ayant justement une structure particulière sur laquelle nous reviendrons (1). La particule ésu dérive du verbe sak, verbe transitif signifiant colter (sa'minga = copuler avec une femme), par extension féconder ; le dérivé régulier, ésa/bisa, signifie lignée, la forme irrégulière, ésa/beséa, voulant dire père. La particule ye pourrait venir de yee, vallée, creux, fissure, peut-être lié à une racine Y./YI connotant des idées d'humidité, de féminité ou de maternité (yii = pleurer ; yek = faire un barrage de pêche en terre mouillée ; nyia = mère ; nyin = 4 ; ényiñ = vie). On a parfois expliqué la différence d'appellation par l'origine géographique : les clans en ésa seraient ceux de l'Ouest, les clans en ye ceux de l'Est. En fait, on trouve dans toutes les tribus des clans en ye et des clans en ésa, aussi bien à l'Est qu'à l'Ouest. L'explication géographique n'est cependant peut-être pas à rejeter totalement, mais plutôt à relier à une explication sexuelle.

(1) Les clans en ôbi du Gabon se rattacheraient d'après certains auteurs aux clans en dzi ; mais il existe un nom ôbi, ôbé, signifiant trou, fosse.

Les Pahouins, en effet, semblaient bien référer leur système d'orientation au mouvement apparent du soleil ou, peut-être, à l'axe de marche de leur migration. L'Ouest serait alors lié à la droite, mbo nnôm = côté mâle, l'Est à la gauche, mbo ngal = côté femelle (1). Cette polarité marquerait une série d'institutions mal connues et d'abord la parenté-à-plaisanterie, awusô, dérivant elle-même du grand rite national sô ; j'ai cru remarquer, en effet, que la relation d'awusô est presque toujours entre un clan en ésa et un clan en ye : Esakoé-Yekombo, Esaébeñ-Yenjôk, Esel-Yembôñ, etc. Certains indices peuvent aussi faire penser à un lien avec l'ancienne coutume matrimoniale et l'espèce de potlatch appelé bilaba (2).

Le problème n'est pas simplifié quand on sait que certains clans en ésa déclarent s'identifier à des clans en ye d'autres tribus et qu'en outre, il existe des meyoñ n'entrant pas dans le système.

Je citerai parmi ces derniers les Ndôñ et les Bekôé ou Bekwi, qu'on retrouve sous ces noms dans toutes ou presque toutes les tribus pahouines. L'ethnique Bekôé n'est autre que le pluriel du nom commun nkôé, « nain ». Ce sont, semble-t-il, les descendants d'aborigènes, sans doute de pygmées, « adoptés » par les tribus au moment de l'invasion. Bien que considérés comme un ayoñ et s'appelant frères entre eux, ils ne pratiquent pas l'exogamie et paraissent rattacher leurs généalogies à celles d'autres clans, dont ils ne font cependant pas partie.

Le cas des Ndôñ est très différent. Ils ont franchi la Sanaga avec les autres Pahouins et sont bien des Pahouins « de plein exercice ». Mais ils pratiquent l'endogamie entre leurs trois mvôk (Ndôñ Mvu, Ndôñ Bibak et Ndôñ Bikoé), ce que ne fait aucun autre ayoñ pahouin, à ma connaissance tout au moins. En outre, j'ai cru remarquer chez

(1) D'après LARGEAU, le Nord est la droite (mâle), le Sud la gauche (femelle), ce qui se comprend si on s'oriente suivant un axe de marche E.-W. Voir infra.

Dans la description du bilaba par ZOLL'OWAMBE, (n° 125), les marchandises importées (mâles ?) viennent du Nord, les marchandises locales (femelles) du Sud, alors qu'il emploie pour désigner le Sud le terme nsak signifiant « intérieur », « amont » ou « est », signification comparable à celle de nké, ouest ou aval.

(2) Selon une autre explication les clans en ésa seraient, à l'origine, des fractions de clans en ye ; cette explication pourrait, elle aussi, rendre compte de la parenté-à-plaisanterie.

ceux du Sud-Cameroun et du Nord-Gabon des caractéristiques anthropomorphiques tranchant sur celles des clans voisins : coloration rougeâtre de la peau, fréquence des yeux verts ou pers, ce qui pourrait s'expliquer par in-breeding résultant de l'endogamie, mais peut-être aussi par une origine ethnique différente. Autre indice, d'ailleurs aussi insuffisamment vérifié que le précédent, c'est chez les Ndôñ que j'ai rencontré les derniers forgerons et les magiciens les plus redoutés parmi les tribus bulu et fañ du Cameroun.

L'ayoñ Ngoé se rencontre aussi sous ce nom dans presque toutes les tribus pahouines et, d'après Bertaut, chez les Bakoko voisins. Les Esel, également répandus dans toutes les tribus, ont des homonymes non pahouins : la tribu bantu Esel du Sud-Est-Cameroun (Moloundou). Leur nom pourrait cependant être une contraction en ésa (ésa-el?). Ngoé et Esel pratiquent normalement l'exogamie.

c) La famille-étendue ou famille-villageoise

Le terme « famille-villageoise » est sans doute plus préci» que le terme classique de « famille-étendue », d'une part parce que la nda bôl (maison des gens) est le seul groupe social correspondant exactement à une forme d'établissement géographique (le jal ou hameau), d'autre part parce que, en dehors de ce critère géographique, il devient difficile de distinguer entre cette famille et les structures intermédiaires entre elle et le clan, fractions ou lignées (mvôk, bisa). Enfin, c'est à ce niveau que les organes d'autorité, de contrôle social sont le plus en évidence.

Le chef de famille, c'est l'aîné, nlôl ou nlôle môl, des hommes adultes et actifs, benya bôlô, « les vrais hommes ». Ce n'est pas forcément le doyen, car les vieillards impotents subissent une véritable capitis diminutio. Le fondateur du hameau ou son fils aîné peut cependant, même impotent, conserver une certaine autorité morale, comme père, ésa, de la famille, mais l'autorité effective sera alors déléguée à un nya môlô choisi parmi ses frères ou ses fils ou neveux, l'éfo'olo (Bertaut). A l'origine, le jal comprend le fondateur, ses vieux parents, ses jeunes frères, ses enfants, ceux de ses frères, ses sœurs célibataires, leurs enfants naturels et ceux de ses filles. Les épouses ne font pas partie du jal : on emploie pour parler de leur village le mot jañ ; d'une femme divorcée, on dira a keya jañ, « elle est partie dans son village ». L'importance de la nda bôl varie suivant divers facteurs : sécurité, autorité du chef, richesse du terroir, etc. J'ai déjà indiqué comment plusieurs mal peuvent se grouper en un nlam, village au sens propre. De nos jours, les menda me bôl tendent à diminuer d'importance numérique et à ne plus correspondre au jal qui peut désormais en grouper plusieurs. La famille restreinte, ou famille-foyer, prend de plus en plus d'importance, tandis que la chefferie de village d'institution administrative, si elle ne se substitue souvent qu'imparfaitement à l'autorité du nlôl ou ésa, n'en mine pas moins celle-ci. On peut chiffrer l'importance de la nda bôl moyenne à une vingtaine d'âmes (y compris les épouses qui ne font pas partie du jal), moins dans les villes et chez les gens peu fortunés, plus chez les grands planteurs et notables (minkukum).

La nda bôl était autrefois une unité religieuse, militaire et économique. Sur le plan religieux, le père, ésa, était gardien du biëti (fañ : biéri), autel portatif ou arche du culte des ancêtres, contenant les crânes des aïeux ; il décidait des initiations et en faisait les frais : les initiations ont disparu et les missions ont brûlé des dizaines, sinon des centaines de biéri. La sécurité et l'ordre colonial ont ôté tout intérêt à son rôle militaire. Seul son rôle économique subsiste en partie. Il était autrefois seul propriétaire des biens (biôm) de la famille, seul encaisseur des revenus et ordonnateurs des dépenses, au premier rang desquelles venait le paiement des « dots » (minsuba) de ses frères puînés et de ses enfants. Lors de l'introduction du cacao, la culture se faisait collectivement par nda bôl, l'ésa vendant le produit et gardant l'argent ; très vite les jeunes gens se lassèrent de cette situation et quittèrent la famille pour avoir leur propre plantation ; au surplus, la valorisation du terrain par les cultures d'exportation, entraînant son partage à la mort de l'ésa, provoqua le fractionnement de la nda bôl. Celle-ci n'avait jamais été très stable, même avant la colonisation, mais la disparition des nécessités militaires permit des essaimages précoces, alors qu'auparavant ils ne se produisaient que lorsque la nouvelle nda bôl était assez nombreuse pour pouvoir se défendre.

Malgré cet émiettement jal et nda bôl restent les cadres essentiels de la vie du Pahouin, plus encore que l'ayôn. En dépit de l'individualisation de la propriété, il subsiste une communauté juridique avec responsabilité collective et entraide obligatoire des membres. Beaucoup de jeunes s'en déclarent las (cf. Eza Boto, Ville cruelle, n° 182) et quittent le jal en partie pour y échapper, en vain d'ailleurs, car les liens distendus au pays se resserrent loin de lui et que la solidarité de la famille-étendue joue probablement encore plus chez les émigrés que chez les sédentaires.

d) Famille-restreinte ou foyer ; parenté

La famille-restreinte ou foyer, composée d'un homme économiquement autonome, de sa femme, de ses enfants, parfois de vieux parents et de frères et sœurs célibataires, joue un rôle de plus en plus important, soit dans le cadre de la nda bôl, soit en dehors. Les missions y ont beaucoup contribué, surtout au début de l'évangélisation, pour détacher les catéchumènes de leurs minlô mi bôl restés animistes (elles tendent à réagir en sens contraire de nos jours, pour lutter contre l' « individualisme destructeur »), mais les transformations économiques ont joué un rôle aussi important : la famille-foyer est celle du fonctionnaire, émigré, du petit planteur. Il n'y a pas de mot pour la désigner : on dira soit mone nda bôl, petite famille-étendue, soit, tout simplement, nda, maison.

Par simple commodité, c'est à son niveau que j'étudierai la parenté, par rapport à un individu mâle adulte et marié.

Le premier principe qui la règle est celui de la double exogamie, en ligne paternelle, mais aussi en ligne maternelle : on ne peut se marier ni dans son propre clan, ni dans le clan de sa mère. L'inceste dans le clan maternel est à peine moins grave que l'inceste dans le clan paternel, mais l'interdit dans cette ligne n'est pas définitif, héréditaire. Actuellement, il semble disparaître en deux générations : l'arrière-petit-fils peut prendre femme dans les clans de ses arrière-grand-mères maternelles, et même le petit-fils dans celui de sa grand-mère maternelle. Il en va autrement dans la ligne paternelle, celle dont la généalogie est apprise par cœur par les enfants, mais j'ignore les règles précises, en voie d'oubli de nos jours.

Deuxième trait de la parenté, elle est classificatoire et sa nomenclature s'accorde en personne et parfois en genre par rapport au sujet de parenté. Ainsi « père » ou « mère », par exemple, se disent :

A la première personne	A la deuxième	A la troisième tale	éso	ésa
nane	nyua	nyia

suivant qu'il s'agit d'un parent de celui qui parle, de celui à qui l'on parle, ou de celui dont on parle.

Pour « frère » et « sœur », les mots varient, en outre, selon le sexe du sujet de parenté :

— monyañ (contraction de moneyañ (1) = fils de mère) = frère d'un homme ou sœur d'une femme dans le clan ; alors que — la sœur d'un homme est kal ;
— le frère d'une femme est ndôm.

Le fils d'un homme est ndôman, sa fille ngon ; ceux d'une femme simplement bon (s. : mon) « les petits ».

Les génériques de parenté se forment sur ces termes ; par exemple :

— ndômenyañ (3e personne) = frère de la mère, désigne l'oncle maternel et tous les bobenyañ (frères claniques ou consanguins) de celui-ci ; c'est une parenté à révérence ;
— molale, contraction de mone tale = fils de mon père, désigne les consanguins, avec une notion de révérence ;
— monekal = fils de sœur, désigne les neveux et cousins utérins, avec lesquels le mariage est interdit, bien qu'ils soient d'un autre ayoñ ; c'est une parenté à plaisanterie ; le même terme s'applique aux beaux-frères et belles-sœurs ;
— monengon = fils de fille, désigne les parents utérins à l'intérieur du clan, et notamment les enfants naturels des sœurs, membres du clan mais atteints d'une certaine capitis diminutio ;

et ainsi de suite, la parenté se classant toujours par clan, par génération et par sexe. La construction des ethniques le souligne : un Boulou, un

(1) A la 3e personne : — nyañ, de nyia, mère ; à la première personne mojañ : — jañ, même mot que jañ = jal, hameau d'origine de la mère.

Yenjôk, sont mone bulu, mone yenjôk, « un enfant de Boulou », un « enfant de Yenjôk » ; une Boulou est ngone bulu, une « fille de Boulou » ; deux bo'be yenjôk seront donc frères, bobenyañ. Ce qui est curieux c'est que ce terme, le plus usité pour la fraternité germaine ou consanguine, se réfère expressément à une relation utérine, puisqu'il signifie littéralement « fils de mère ».

La relation par rapport à l'ordre des générations (ndaé = petit enfant ; éndil = arrière-petit enfant) jouait un rôle, aujourd'hui mal connu, dans le choix du nom (éyôlé). De nos jours encore la similitude des biyôlé crée entre les homonymes, mimbôm (s. : mbôm) ou bemôé (s. : môé) une sorte de quasi-parenté, avec obligation d'assistance réciproque.

Les beaux-parents sont les belyi (relation possible avec élyi = interdit, etc., ?) ; nous en reparlerons à propos du mariage, mais on peut signaler ici que ce terme s'applique également à la première épouse considérée par rapport à ses co-épouses.

e) Mariage, filiation

La première règle de tout mariage reste la prohibition de l'inceste, l'exogamie clanique déjà signalée : interdiction de prendre femme dans son propre clan, ou dans le clan de sa mère ; interdiction aussi d'épouser les filles des sœurs de lignée, jusqu'à un degré assez éloigné, encore qu'elles soient d'un autre clan, ce qui n'est que l'application de l'exogamie en ligne maternelle, moins bien respectée que l'autre.

Ceci posé, on peut distinguer plusieurs formes de mariage — Bertaut en compte sept — ou estimer, au contraire, qu'elles dérivent toutes du « mariage régulier », mfañ aluk (de fañ = faire bien, correctement, luk = épouser). Ce mariage est fondé sur le paiement de la « dot », nsuba, aujourd'hui essentiellement monétaire et donnant lieu à des abus souvent décrits, mais autrefois sacramentelle, au moins partiellement (il s'y mêlait déjà un élément commercial il y a une centaine d'années). La « dot » ancienne comprenait des produits locaux (ivoire, bétail) (1), des marchandises importées (biôm), notamment des pagnes, des fusils et leurs munitions, du sel et de l'alcool de traite, et enfin une monnaie spéciale de fer, en forme de têtes de flèches plates liées en faisceau (bilyé, biki ; bikpwelé ; l'unité de compte était le faisceau, akulu bikpwelé), cette dernière ne servant qu'à des usages rituels ou magiques (2). Il y a des raisons de penser que la composition des dots en produits locaux et marchandises variait en relation avec la structure clanique, l'appartenance des époux et les mariages conclus antérieurement par le groupe. Rien n'en subsiste aujourd'hui et la dot est devenue marché, parfois assez sordide, voire véritables enchères, l'épousée étant souvent la première à tirer gloire du prix élevé qu'elle a atteint sur le marché matrimonial.

(1) Les moutons-de-dot, bikiga ou bilyiga, au nombre de sept, élevés, en principe spécialement en vue du paiement de la nsuba, et sacrifiés au moment du mariage.
(2) Il est interdit d'en fabriquer ; tous ceux qu'on voit paraissent anciens.

Le mariage était naguère, et reste dans une certaine mesure, affaire de groupe, des deux meyoñ et des deux menda me bôl intéressées, qui se traitait entre le chef de famille du jeune homme et le tuteur responsable de la future épousée, nya ndômô, « vrai frère », c'est-à-dire un ascendant ou oncle paternel ou un frère germain ou consanguin. La coutume subsiste dans les bonnes familles, même si l'accord des futurs est sollicité et si l'initiative de l'union leur revient ; quand c'est impossible, chez des émigrés par exemple, il reste de bon ton pour le prétendant d'avoir recours à un aîné, voire à un supérieur administratif, qui kômesan aluk, arrange le mariage. A la nsuba proprement dite s'ajoutent des cadeaux d'usage à la future belle-mère et à la belle-famille, d'autant plus importants que les versements de la nsuba sont plus échelonnés dans le temps (et ils le sont de plus en plus). Il y a fiançailles après le premier versement et la jeune fille, sexuellement très libre auparavant, est désormais théoriquement tenue à la fidélité ; les relations sexuelles avec le futur commencent souvent à ce moment, si elles ne l'avaient pas déjà fait avant. La cérémonie chrétienne et l'enregistrement à l'état civil ont lieu lorsqu'une fraction de la « dot », pouvant aller du quart à la moitié, a été versée. Autrefois, la mariée faisait retraite avant de se rendre en cortège de son village, où la famille du fiancé venait la chercher, à son domicile conjugal. Après consommation du mariage, elle cuisinait avec l'aide de sa mère le premier repas servi à son mari. Ces pratiques sont en désuétude générale.

Jusqu'à une date récente, par contre, a subsisté l'habitude, officiellement interdite maintenant, de « doter » une fillette impubère, ou même un fœtus ou une enfant non conçue, qui allait vivre dans sa belle-famille presque aussitôt après le sevrage, pour y être élevée soit par sa belle-mère, soit par la première épouse de son mari, qu'elle considérait alors comme sa ntyi (belle-mère). Le mariage était consommé après sa deuxième ménstruation (ayene ngon = voir la lune).

La forme de mariage mfañ aluk est la plus employée de nos jours. Elle donne lieu à de nombreux procès relatifs à la détermination du nya ndômô qui doit percevoir la « dot » : avec l'affaiblissement de l'autorité du nlôl môl, surtout lorsqu'il n'est pas le père réel de la fille, oncles et frères se disputent à qui touchera la nsuba. Certaines filles émancipées, concubines d'Européens notamment, règlent la question en la touchant elles-mêmes, mais c'est extrêmement mal vu.

La « dot » est remboursée au mari en cas de divorce, au fiancé en cas de rupture de fiançailles, résultant, par exemple, de la mort prématurée de la fiancée. Presque tous les tribunaux coutumiers refusent aujourd'hui le remboursement après décès de la femme sans postérité qu'admettait l'ancienne coutume.

Les autres formes du mariage étaient abom, mariage par enlèvement, régularisé par paiement ultérieur de la « dot » (meso ngon = = arrivée de la fille) ; la mise en gage pour dette, consolidée par non-remboursement ; éjian, remplacement d'une fiancée morte avant les noces ou d'une épouse décédée sans postérité (on donnait souvent, dans ce cas, une sœur puînée de la morte) ; lañ abim, prix du cadavre, c'est-à-dire dation en paiement d'une fille pour prix du sang après un homicide ; l'échange de filles entre deux clans, généralement à l'occasion d'une alliance, élal (1).

L'échange de femmes, ou le prêt de femmes, mvia, était peut-être une forme de prostitution hospitalière. Il ne s'appliquait pas, semble-t-il, aux benya binga, les « vraies femmes », en tout cas jamais à la ôsua minga, la première épouse, qui y aurait trouvé un motif de divorce sans remboursement de dot. De même nkuan, la vente, n'équivalait pas à un mariage et devait s'appliquer surtout à des étrangères, peut-être cependant parfois à des filles pahouines mises en gage et non rédimées.

L'héritage des veuves n'équivalait pas automatiquement à un mariage ; il n'était normalement admis que dans la pente chronologique des générations ; de père à fils, d'aîné à puîné ; l'héritage de cadet à aîné paraît de jurisprudence récente. Au surplus, l'héritier jouissait d'une faculté de délaissement, sauf à l'égard de sa mère, qu'il devait entretenir, mais dont il ne faisait naturellement pas son épouse ; il pouvait renvoyer les autres veuves dans leur famille, en gardant leurs enfants, qui étaient de son clan. Exiger, pour la « libération » des veuves le remboursement de leur dot paraît une déviation récente : cette pratique ne devait s'appliquer autrefois qu'aux femmes stériles ou dont les enfants n'avaient pas vécu, mais seulement lorsqu'elles rentraient pour vivre dans leur famille sans se remarier. Dès l'instant qu'une veuve se remariait hors de la famille de son défunt mari, la « dot » était due aux héritiers de celui-ci, et la jurisprudence n'a pas changé sur ce point. « Pas de dot, pas de mariage » : Sa nsuba, ve alu' e se kik. Nous retrouverons ce principe à propos de la filiation légitime.

C'est donc l'absence de paiement de la nsuba qui caractérise l'union libre, ébon, et l'adultère, mejian, et en fait de véritables atteintes à un droit de propriété, justifiant la condamnation que les tribunaux coutumiers se refusent logiquement à prononcer en cas d'ébon si la jeune fille est revenue enceinte dans sa famille (2).

Le mari doit loger sa femme, l'habiller ainsi que les enfants qu'il a eus d'elle, lui défricher le champ qu'elle cultivera, lui fournir les instruments du ménage et, en principe, la viande, la laisser rendre visite à ses parents, qu'il doit honorer, ne pas recourir à la sorcellerie (3) contre elle, respecter les prérogatives qu'elle tient de son rang parmi les co-épouses, coucher avec elle tant qu'elle n'est pas ménopausée ou enceinte, ou qu'elle n'allaite pas, ne pas la battre au delà de ses forces, ne pas exposer sa vulve en public.

(1) Elal : alliance, accord ; bilelal ; parentèle, ensemble des parents et alliés.
(2) Ce qu'ont difficilement compris certains magistrats.
(3) A laquelle sont assimilées la fellatio et la sodomie : d'où nombreux divorces d'anciens tirailleurs.

La femme doit obéissance au mari, à la belle-mère, à la première épouse, respect aux beaux-parents, donc au clan du mari, fidélité, accomplissement du devoir conjugal. Elle a la charge de cultiver les champs défrichés pour elle, de pratiquer la pêche au barrage, de nourrir ses enfants, de cuisiner à son tour de service pour le mari, de tenir propre sa case et celle du mari quand elle y couche et de participer à leur construction (c'est elle qui maçonne le banco dans la charpente), mais non d'entretenir les instruments de ménage et les vêtements importés, qui sont des biôm d'essence mâle (mais les écoles et les missions essaient de l'y amener). Enfin et surtout, elle doit être féconde : c'est le premier de ses devoirs et il lui est beaucoup pardonné si elle s'y conforme.

La femme première épousée en mfañ aluk, en justes noces, appelée ôsua minga ou ékômba jouit en principe d'une situation privilégiée par rapport aux mimbom ou co-épouses. C'est à elle qu'il appartient d'assister ou de remplacer la belle-mère, nlyi, dans son rôle de préfet de discipline des femmes de la nda. C'est, ou c'était elle, qui se chargeait de l'éducation des jeunes épouses impubères qui attendaient l'âge de la nubilité dans sa case ; les co-épouses de rang inférieur la considèrent donc souvent comme leur nlyi. Cette relation de bru à belle-mère existe également entre deux mimbom lorsque la nsuba de la seconde a été payée avec la nsuba reçue pour le mariage d'une fille de la première, ou lorsqu'elle a fait l'objet d'un mariage par échange contre cette fille.

En face de ces prérogatives de droit, on trouve les prérogatives de fait de la favorite, nkpwek ou nlômba (nlômba = brebis), qui peut d'ailleurs être l'ôsua minga, encore que ce cas soit assez rare. La coutume reconnaît les privilèges de fait de la nkpwek en les limitant pour éviter qu'ils ne deviennent privatifs des droits des autres femmes. Je crois, sans pouvoir l'affirmer, qu'il existe, en outre, une nuance entre les termes de nkpwek et nlômba, le premier se référant, comme indiqué, à une préférence de fait du mari, le second à une situation de droit qui serait celle des épouses les plus fécondes ou, peut-être, de meilleure origine.

Je rappelle que le mariage ne fait pas sortir la femme de son clan d'origine pour la rattacher à celui du mari : elle ne se trouve liée à ce clan que par l'intermédiaire de ses enfants, si elle en a, ces enfants et leurs bobenyañ devenant bobekal de leurs cousins en ligne maternelle. Si le mariage est dissous sans que la femme ait enfanté, la relation de parenté entre les deux clans ne se noue pas.

Cette dissolution du mariage peut d'abord résulter de la mort de la femme lorsque celle-ci ne donne pas lieu à un éjian, à une substitution de sœur, rare aujourd'hui. Le lien de parenté entre les clans subsiste si des enfants sont nés du mariage ; il subsistait autrefois en l'absence d'enfants si la nsuba n'était pas remboursée. La mort du mari fait disparaître le lien personnel du mariage mais non le lien collectif en vertu duquel les veuves sont colloquées à l'héritier comme indiqué plus haut.

Une des causes de dissolution les plus fréquentes de nos jours est le divorce. Celui-ci peut être le fait du mari : a suu minga jañ, il renvoie la femme à son village. Les motifs généralement invoqués sont l'inconduite habituelle, la sorcellerie, le « mauvais caractère », la stérilité. Théoriquement, si les faits sont patents, le mari répudiateur devrait obtenir ipso facto le remboursement de la nsuba, réduite toutefois à proportion du nombre d'enfants que lui a donnés la femme répudiée. Dans la pratique, le nya ndômô fait généralement des difficultés et retarde le remboursement jusqu'au remariage de la femme, et à la perception par lui de la nouvelle dot (1).

Celle-ci peut prendre également l'initiative du divorce : a ke jañ dé, elle retourne chez son père, invoquant l'avarice exagérée du mari qui « la garde mal », a ba'ale nye abé, son impuissance, de mauvais traitements ou des pratiques de sorcellerie, ou encore une injure grave à son encontre ou à celui de ses parents. Le remboursement de la nsuba est, là encore, obligatoire, sauf faute très grave du mari, généralement sorcellerie ou mutilation de la femme.

Enfin, le divorce peut être le fait du nya ndômô de la femme : a vaa minga aluk, il retire la femme du mariage, soit qu'il la juge mal traitée ou bien qu'il estime avoir été insulté par son gendre, soit surtout, et de plus en plus souvent de nos jours, que la nsuba n'ait pas été entièrement payée ou même qu'il ait trouvé un nouveau prétendant disposé à en payer une plus élevée ; on assiste alors à un véritable chantage, le nya ndômô exigeant sans cesse du mari de nouveaux cadeaux sous la menace de reprendre sa fille. Les tribunaux répressifs sont à peu près impuissants à sanctionner ces pratiques, très difficiles à qualifier en droit pénal.

Dans tous les cas, les enfants légitimes restent chez leur père, la femme ne pouvant conserver leur garde que jusqu'au sevrage. L'adage pater is est a son équivalent pahouin : Mon ase mone mbiaé, mon ane mone bilyé, « l'enfant n'est pas l'enfant du géniteur, il est l'enfant de la « dot » » (bilyé = monnaie de dot). En principe, n'est réputé légitime que l'enfant né après complet paiement de la nsuba ; en pratique, on admet une sorte de légitimation par paiement postérieur à la naissance, lorsque les versements initiaux de la nsuba avaient déjà été effectués, mais cette pratique ne s'applique que très rarement en cas d'ébon, union libre, même suivie d'un mariage régulier des parents naturels. Les enfants naturels, fruits d'un ébon, bobengon, restent dans le clan de leur mère où, d'ailleurs, ils ne prennent rang socialement qu'après les enfants légitimes.

Il existait une sorte d'adoption, rare aujourd'hui, plutôt politique que familiale, qu'on pourrait presque qualifier de naturalisation. Elle ne pouvait être faite que par un chef de famille-étendue, au profit d'un orphelin, mone nyui, d'un autre clan (les orphelins du clan étant, naturellement, déjà considérés comme les enfants du chef de famille). L'adopté, abiaé môsô (= engendré le jour, les rapports sexuels n'étant licites qu'entre le coucher et le lever du soleil), entrait dans le clan avec une situation analogue à celle du monengon. Il restait tenu par les interdits de mariage de son clan d'origine.

(1) Mais de nos jours il est fréquent de voir le second mari rembourser directement la nsuba au premier, ne versant au nya ndômô que la plus-value éventuelle.

Le pérégrin non pahouin domicilié définitivement dans le village, nlabe, peut bénéficier par mariage d'une alliance, élat, qui n'en fait pas pour autant un membre du clan ; il devient un monekal (fils de sœur, parent utérin), ses enfants, bien que légitimes, appartenant au clan de leur mère.

La filiation peut être rompue par malédiction paternelle ou maternelle, meyo'é ; le parent qui maudit son enfant lui montre son sexe, « l'endroit d'où il est sorti », en prononçant une formule imprécatoire. La malédiction doit entraîner le malheur et la mort de l'enfant maudit, dont tout le monde s'écarte. Il ne peut en être relevé que par un rite purificatoire collectif (élye, lyô) où toute la nda bôl participe.

3) Classes d'âge

Le cycle vital de l'individu est marqué par un certain nombre de passages qui s'accompagnent, ou s'accompagnaient généralement, de rites étudiés plus loin (infra, p. 90). Ces points critiques sont la naissance, le sevrage, la puberté, l'arrivée à l'âge d'homme, le mariage, la mort. Aux phases intermédiaires correspondent les classes d'âge, moins rigoureusement délimitées aujourd'hui qu'autrefois.

J'ignore le mot exact désignant le fœtus : on dit abum, le ventre. Il doit exister un terme plus précis, mais je pense qu'un interdit pèse dessus, en tout cas pour les hommes, interdit qui n'est d'ailleurs peut-être plus de nos jours que de simple convenance, comme certains mots réputés crus en français. A sa naissance et jusqu'à son sevrage, le bébé est nlyen (nken) ou nkeñelé.

Après le sevrage, qui intervient généralement lorsque l'enfant commence à marcher seul, entre dix-huit mois et deux ans, le nken devient mongô (mone fam = garçon, mone minga = fille) ; le garçon incirconcis est appelé plus précisément nsôsôl.

La circoncision a lieu entre huit et douze ans (1), avant les premiers signes précurseurs de la puberté, plus spécialement l'apparition des premiers poils pubiens (afañ ; parenté avec le verbe fañ = faire bien, correctement, exprès, de la racine masculine FA?). L'enfant circoncis, nlyi'an, « coupé », devient adolescent, ndôman, terme qui signifie aussi « fils » (par rapport à un homme ; cf. supra, p. 50). De son côté, la fillette pubère devient ngon (qui signifie à la fois jeune fille, fille d'un homme, et lune : ayene ngon, « voir la lune », c'est être réglée), ou encore élenan.

(1) Autrefois elle aurait parfois été reculée jusqu'à ce que le jeune homme ait tué son premier ennemi. Voir Trilles (n° 166) et Largeau (n° 48).

L'adolescent est encore ébis, non initié. De nos jours les missions ont adopté le terme mvôn, « initié », pour désigner les membres des églises. Autrefois, on devenait mvôn après l'initiation, le plus souvent la grande initiation nationale sô, dont les membres portaient la désignation de monewôsô (probablement « enfant de la mort du sô »; rapprocher de la parenté-à-plaisanterie awusô = le mourir du sô).

Après l'initiation, c'est-à-dire à peu près entre la seizième et la vingtième année, le jeune homme, bien que d'âge militaire, n'était pas encore un nya môlô, une véritable personne. Il ne le devenait que par son mariage, atteignant alors ce qu'on pourrait considérer comme sa majorité juridique et civile, et même économique.

La jeune fille, ngon, devenue ngal ou nya ngal, vraie femme, en perdant sa virginité, était nya minga, dame, après son mariage et ésila ou ékua, matrone, lorsqu'elle avait élevé ses premiers enfants. L'homme qui avait de grands fils était un nlôle môl, un aîné, en général vers la quarantaine; c'était la plus haute position sociale possible. En effet, le nnôm môl, le vieillard, qui vivait trop longtemps perdait son prestige à mesure de sa décrépitude. Il semble bien que, du temps des grandes migrations, des vieillards, vieilles femmes impotentes surtout, aient été abandonnées en forêt lorsque le village changeait d'emplacement. Il est vrai que la mort devait intervenir le plus souvent avant la décrépitude, à la guerre, à la chasse ou à la première maladie grave. Mes informateurs ont été en tout cas unanimes à me dire que le crâne d'un vieillard impotent ou gâteux ne pouvait être utilisé pour le culte du biéri.

Dès la seconde génération de ses descendants, de toute façon, l'homme, vivant ou mort, devient émvam, aïeul, au double sens de grand-père et d'ancêtre.

Une classe d'âge s'étend sur trois ans environ : c'est à peu près le délai maximum pendant lequel deux enfants nés à des dates différentes peuvent s'être trouvés simultanément à la mamelle, c'était approximativement l'intervalle qui séparait deux grandes cérémonies collectives d'initiation. La parenté classificatoire, elle, groupe les gens par génération : tous ceux de la génération sont bobenyañ, frères, comme indiqué précédemment. Au sein d'une classe d'âge, on emploie plutôt le terme éjula, « camarade ». La succession des classes d'âge créait une hiérarchie interne au sein des générations et renforçait le lien clanique et tribal entre les bijula. Ce renforcement était encore plus marqué entre les bo'bewôsô de la même promotion d'initiation.

La vie moderne altère ces liens, tant en raison de la disparition ou de la transformation des initiations que du relâchement des liens familiaux-étendus et aussi que de la mobilité plus grande des individus et des familles-restreintes : le petit Fang né à Fort-Lamy où son père est postier, ne se sentira guère éjula de son monyañ clanique, né le même jour à Libreville. L'évolution économique et politique tend de plus en plus à susciter des hiérarchies fondées davantage sur la fonction, la fortune, voire l'instruction, plutôt que sur l'âge et le rang dans la famille.

4) Esclavage, castes, classes, chefferies

Largeau parlait des Pahouins comme d'un « peuple chez lequel nos mots, roi, maître, serviteur, ouvrier, esclave n'ont pas de synonymes ». La phrase est belle, mais ne correspond que partiellement à la réalité. Largeau lui-même donne au mot « esclave », dans son encyclopédie, la traduction nsagha, terme emprunté, dit-il, au gabonais (mpongwé). Plus au Nord, on parlait d'ôlo (ou mon ôlo) ou d'étu'a, par opposition à nti (nté) ou mo'nti, ce dernier mot désignant l'homme libre, le civis. Tous les auteurs de la fin du XIXe siècle s'accordent cependant à déclarer que les Pahouins ignorent l'esclavage, et, plus près de nous, L. Mba reprend cette assertion, en déclarant que belô ou minsagha n'étaient pas des esclaves, mais des prisonniers de guerre « adjugés comme parts de butin » (n° 120).

Il semble bien cependant y avoir eu de véritables transactions commerciales, des ventes et achats de ces captifs, ou en tout cas des bitu'a, dont la situation devait être différente de celle des bo'belo. Ces derniers étaient plutôt des prisonniers rançonnables (ngôlô = rançon) ou des ôtages ; j'ai personnellement connu de vieux Boulou de bonne famille qui avaient été ainsi prisonniers des Bané après l'ôban de 1885. Ils avaient été traités en hommes et non en choses, participant aux activités masculines nobles, comme la chasse, mais non aux travaux réputés serviles, comme le portage. Certains ont épousé des filles bané à l'occasion du traité qui suivit l'ôban ; d'autres ont été adoptés par des clans bané. Dans leur cas, on ne pouvait donc effectivement pas parler d'esclavage.

Il n'en était pas de même avec les bitu'a (1), qui, je le répète, ont fait l'objet de transactions commerciales, de ventes, et non de simples mises en gage : l'Oberleutnant Dominik avait purement et simplement acheté à des chefs éwôndo une partie de son train d'hommes de somme. C'est que ces bitu'a n'étaient pas des Pahouins, mais des prisonniers étrangers, provenant de tribus voisines, ou d'anciens habitants des territoires conquis. Il est donc peut-être exact de dire que les Pahouins n'avaient pas d'esclaves parmi eux, mais non qu'ils ignoraient l'esclavage. Ils en usaient certainement assez peu, préférant échanger ces captifs contre des marchandises auprès des tribus côtières ou fluviales spécialisées dans la traite. En outre, les enfants de belô ou de bitu'a nés dans un clan devaient être assimilés assez facilement, si un de leurs parents appartenait à ce clan.

Actuellement en tout cas, la distinction entre bo' beti et bo' belo est très atténuée (2), pour ne pas dire effacée, ne fût-ce que parce qu'on tend à oublier les généalogies. Il subsiste cependant une situation qui n'est pas sans rappeler le servage, celle des Pygmées. Ceux-ci, qui appartiendraient à trois « tribus » — Babinga à l'Est, Bibaya au Centre, Beye'ele ou Bajieli à l'Ouest —, vivent en petites bandes familiales, pratiquant un nomadisme de chasse dans une zone déterminée. Ces petites hordes sont réputées « appartenir » à des familles ou à des individus pahouins. Les Pygmées chassent pour leur « propriétaire », le ravitaillent en viande, en peaux, en ivoire, en plantes médicinales, et reçoivent de lui, en échange, du sel, des fers de lance, des sabres, de l'étoffe, et des produits vivriers cultivés ; ils n'ont pas le droit, c'est le point important, de trafiquer ainsi avec un autre « propriétaire », et celui-ci peut poursuivre en justice quiconque enfreindrait son monopole. Mieux, il a un droit de suite si « ses » Pygmées cherchent à s'enfuir et à aller nomadiser dans le territoire d'un autre village. Il peut également céder à un autre Pahouin ses droits sur « ses » Pygmées, mais non ces Pygmées eux-mêmes. Là encore, donc, il n'y a pas esclavage au sens romain du mot. Il semble d'ailleurs, que les droits du « propriétaire » sur « ses » Pygmées trouvent leur source, à l'origine, dans un contrat bilatéral, une sorte d'alliance entre les deux groupes, l'équilibre s'étant rompu par la suite au profit des envahisseurs. Depuis quelques années se dessine une tendance à l'émancipation des Pygmées ; ceux-ci sont actuellement très métissés ; ils usent de la langue de leurs maîtres et ne paraissent avoir conservé de la leur qu'un vocabulaire technique et rituel, dont le peu qu'on connaît semble se rattacher en majeure partie aux dialectes des tribus bantu refoulées par l'invasion pahouine. Les groupes métis sédentarisés depuis quelques générations, les Bekôé, sont maintenant assimilés et considérés comme ayôn pahouin particulier (supra, p. 44). Mais les groupes nomades eux-mêmes commencent à se dispenser de l'intermédiaire obligatoire des Pahouins pour vendre les produits de leur chasse : on en voit sur les marchés, et même dans les bureaux administratifs et les tribunaux.

(1) Parfois appelés bityi'ityi'a, mutilés, tailladés, parce qu'on leur lacérait le pavillon de l'oreille.

(2) Cette distinction du peuple en trois catégories, tribus nobles (beti), tribus vassales mais libres et groupes serviles est encore marquée dans certaines régions frontières : la carte ethnique manuscrite établie par l'administrateur Botti, d'après recensement généalogique en 1954, de la subdivision d'Okola (Nyong et Sanaga, Cameroun) distingue les Eton Beti (seigneurs), les Eton Belon (vassaux) et les Belon Beton (asservis). (J. B.)

Les étrangers, bone bikul (ékul = tribu étrangère), n'avaient de droit que comme invités ou hôtes, beyeñ (s. : nneñ), c'est-à-dire qu'en fait ils devaient acheter leur sécurité. Depuis la conquête européenne on a vu se multiplier les belabe (de labe = rester, demeurer), étrangers privilégiés, admis à résidence par le chef de famille ou de village, souvent alliés par mariage au clan dans lequel ils sont installés. Leurs enfants peuvent être assimilés, mais ne sont pas de véritables bo'beli, en tout cas pas aux premières générations.

La société proprement pahouine était et reste donc très fermée, puisqu'on y entre pratiquement que par le sang. Par contre, elle est peu hiérarchisée intérieurement, en dehors des classes d'âge ; on peut même dire qu'elle répugne aux hiérarchies.

On est assez tenté, au premier abord, d'affirmer qu'elle ne comporte pas de castes. Cette affirmation est peut-être trop absolue si l'on considère que certains clans endogames, comme les Ndôñ, sont peut-être des castes ou d'anciennes castes. La question mériterait une étude plus approfondie.

Comporte-t-elle des classes sociales fondées soit sur la naissance, soit sur la fortune ? En dépit de l'esprit égalitaire et anarchique des Pahouins, je crois que oui. La terminologie le prouve, qui distingue les bo' beti non seulement des captifs, mais encore des zesé bôl, gens de peu : mo'nti est souvent traduit de nos jours par Monsieur. Une véritable bourgeoisie de gros planteurs, de clerks (bekilak), d'artisans et d'ouvriers qualifiés s'est créée sous nos yeux dans les deux dernières générations et tend à s'opposer à un menu peuple de petits paysans, de manœuvres, et même, à présent, de « prolétaires en lunettes noires » — sous-traitants du commerce, etc. — équivalent local de nos « prolétaires en col dur ». Déjà dans la société traditionnelle les minkukum, les riches, se distinguaient du commun, des zesé bôl.

Ils étaient fort mal vus, faisaient l'objet de la suspicion générale de l'opinion publique, toujours prompte à attribuer la réussite matérielle à la possession d'un évu (évur, évus), à la sorcellerie maléfique. Le nkukum devait se faire pardonner sa richesse, essentiellement en la redistribuant, par le moyen de l'hospitalité coutumière, et aussi, par un mécanisme particulier de contrôle économico-social, analogue au potlatch, le bilaba.

Cette pratique paraît avoir été en usage surtout chez les Boulou. Bertaut rattache le mot à une racine ngumba signifiant « parler », « flatter ». Je pencherais plutôt pour un dérivé du verbe lap, « puiser de l'eau » et, par extension, « éclabousser », qui peut, au figuré, connoter également l'idée de raillerie. Il n'est pas impossible que le mécanisme du bilaba ait été en rapport avec celui de la parenté-à-plaisanterie, awusô. Le bilaba commence par un défi d'un nkukum à un autre, chacun se prétendant plus riche que l'autre. Celui qui a lancé le défi se rend chez le défié, emportant avec lui un chargement de marchandises, les mebo me dulu, « jambes du voyage », et accompagné d'une suite nombreuse, de musiciens, de chanteuses, etc. Arrivé chez l'autre njem bilaba (danseur du bilaba), il l'accable de ses cadeaux et de ses railleries ; l'adversaire répond, cadeau pour cadeau et raillerie pour raillerie, jusqu'à ce qu'il ait fourni plus que la contrepartie des mebo me dulu. Le premier njem bilaba, rentre alors chez lui et attend que l'autre lui rendre visite à son tour avec ses propres mebo me dulu. Visites et contre-visites peuvent se poursuivre assez longtemps, chacun des bejem bilaba faisant appel à l'aide de sa famille immédiate, puis de sa lignée ou de son clan pour continuer à fournir. Le bilaba arrive donc à devenir collectif. Il importe de noter qu'on n'échange pas n'importe quelles marchandises : le njem bilaba de l'Est (nku, ôku) fournit des produits locaux — bétail, cacao, ivoire, etc. — celui de l'Ouest (nké) des produits importés — pagnes, sel, poudre etc. (1) ; rappelons à ce propos qu'il y a une implication sexuelle des points cardinaux, d'ailleurs mal connue. Le bilaba crée entre les familles des participants une sorte de parenté-à-plaisanterie qui peut se perpétuer après leur mort.

(1) M. Zoll'Owambe (n° 125), parle d'akum so « marchandises du Nord », importées, et akum nsak « marchandises du Sud », produits du pays. Mais il semble qu'il y ait eu confusion. En effet so = la côte, l'aval, à rapprocher de nké = Ouest, qui signifie aussi l'aval alors que nsak = l'hinterland, l'amont (nku = Est, à rapprocher de kui = sortir de, sourdre, émerger) ; cf. Largeau, pour qui le Nord est la droite (mâle), le Sud la gauche (femelle). Les produits d'importations seraient réputés mâles.

L'institution paraît en voie de décadence ; elle était encore florissante entre les deux guerres et portait souvent sur des sommes considérables (1).

Tout craint qu'il pût être en raison de sa réussite, et peut-être parce que craint, le riche jouissait d'une autorité certaine dans son village et parfois au delà : nkukuma, forme absolue de nkukum, est employé pour traduire « chef » (il signifierait plutôt « notable »).

On emploie également le mot ével, appliqué aussi aux sous-chefs ou capitas administratifs ; nuance juste, si, comme l'affirme Bates, ével est une déformation de headman, appliquée à l'origine aux chefs des caravanes de traite. Ceux-ci étaient choisis pour leur astuce commerciale, leur diplomatie, leur autorité et leur courage, mais ils n'étaient que des délégués d'un clan ou d'un village, non de véritables chefs politiques. Pour rendre cette dernière notion le meilleur terme est encore njôô bôl (fañ = nzoé mur), de jô = dire, ordonner, terme qui exprime un état de fait plutôt qu'une notion juridique. Redisons ici qu'il n'y avait pas de chefs politiques en dehors des aînés, minlôl, des familles-étendues. Encore leur autorité était-elle limitée par la facilité avec laquelle leurs frères pouvaient quitter le village pour en fonder un autre à côté (2). Toute autorité plus étendue se fondait sur un prestige personnel qui suscitait toujours la méfiance : le commandement n'était jamais confié que temporairement, encore était-il fréquent qu'on le retirât avant terme à son détenteur.

Les administrations françaises, allemandes et espagnoles ont tenté d'implanter un commandement hiérarchisé qui n'a jamais pu s'imposer réellement dans le pays. Elles ont toutes trois commis au début l'erreur de vouloir asseoir ces commandements sur une base territoriale, totalement étrangère, ou à peu près, à ce peuple nomade. Seule la chefferie de village ressemblait à une institution coutumière, à condition qu'on choisisse comme chef un nlôl môl, un aîné, authentique, et que ses frères acceptent son autorité. Chefferies de canton et chefferies supérieures n'avaient de cohésion qu'autant que leur titulaire avait d'autorité, ou de soutien administratif. Au début de la colonisation, cependant, ces fonctions furent très souvent confiées à de véritables bejôô bôl,

(1) Balandier (n° 175 et communication personnelle), insiste sur l'importance économique des bilaba qui, dans une société sans économie monétaire ni commerciale, constituaient un des principaux instruments de circulation des biens et, surtout, de diffusion des marchandises d'importation.

(2) Mais chez certains peuples pahouinisés, l'existence d'insignes royaux montre que la chefferie est une institution : chez les Ewôndo et les Yanda le chef de clan désignait son successeur ou, s'il ne l'avait pas fait, le clan choisissait son chef, et les peuples voisins, en signe de reconnaissance, lui faisaient parvenir chacun une lance.

Le pouvoir du chef des Fong est plus personnalisé encore. Le chef transmet ses ordres au moyen d'un tambour énorme. Sa pipe est conservée comme une relique, ses musiciens jouent d'instruments spéciaux, entre autres le nkeñ (cloche double à percussion) assez rare dans la région mais classique dans l'Ouest-Cameroun, chez les Bamileke ou les Bamoum. L'intronisation du chef est marquée par la tradition de lances et l'imposition d'un chapeau de plumes de perroquet. (J. B.)

chefs de guerre connus, grands initiés de sociétés comme le ngil, ou magiciens réputés. Par la suite, il devint beaucoup plus difficile de trouver, même dans l'opposition, des chefs ayant une autorité effective. A partir de 1945, au Cameroun, on entreprit de réorganiser le commandement sur une base clanique (réforme Bourdier-Granier), puis villageoise (système Christol), pour aboutir enfin à un système de type municipal. Étant donné l'intérêt pris par les Pahouins au système politique fondé sur l'élection, qui correspond assez bien et à leur individualisme et à leur méfiance à l'encontre des individus, on peut penser qu'un tel système a des chances de succès si on le laisse se pahouiniser.

5) Associations

Les associations coutumières étaient sans doute moins développées chez les Pahouins que dans d'autres sociétés africaines, plus cohérentes ou pourvues de hiérarchies plus solidement structurées. Les groupes sociaux formés au sein des clans ou des villages se faisaient et se défaisaient au gré des migrations, des essaimages. Ils présentaient un caractère de parenté plutôt que d'association.

Il existait cependant aussi bien dans la parenté qu'en dehors d'elle des associations non fondées sur la filiation, volontaires et non de fait. Elles avaient le plus souvent un caractère initiatique, un fondement magique ou religieux, leurs buts pouvant varier.

Les minsamba, « compagnies », se formaient temporairement, soit pour une opération guerrière (ôban, mvéle), soit pour un voyage commercial vers la Côte ou les trading-posts de l'Ogooué. Les hommes qui y prenaient part, souvent originaires de plusieurs villages ou même de plusieurs clans liés par une élat (alliance), prêtaient un serment de fidélité et d'assistance mutuelle, dont le rite comportait un sacrifice suivi d'un repas communiel ; pour une opération de guerre, la victime pouvait être humaine, spécialement lorsqu'il s'agissait de venger la mort, kun mbim, d'un monyañ (frère) et qu'on disposait d'un prisonnier de guerre à sacrifier. L'association était dissoute une fois son but atteint, mais un lien subsistait entre ses membres.

Des associations temporaires analogues pouvaient être formées pour les grandes battues à l'éléphant ; elles se confondaient d'ailleurs souvent avec la nsamba dulu ou nsamba ayak (compagnie de voyage, de traite) organisée ensuite pour vendre l'ivoire.

Les associations permanentes les plus importantes étaient celles qui se formaient entre les initiés des différents rites. Mais là, il s'agissait le plus souvent d'une sorte de parenté par le rite qui ne constituait pas le but même de ce rite, ou ne le constituait qu'accessoirement : lorsque tous les habitants d'un village participaient, par exemple, au rite de purification ésye, le renforcement des liens fraternels entre eux en résultait bien, mais le but premier était la purification (1).

(1) On rencontre chez les Beti (Eton) un autre rite transcendant les barrières claniques ou tribales : on « plante l'étup » pour faire la paix, clore une querelle familiale, arrêter une épidémie. Les anciens consultent l'oracle de l'araignée, puis rassem-

Pourtant certains rites avaient bien pour but, entre autres, de créer entre les initiés une association génératrice d'une sorte de dialectique d'énergies (lyé, kié) entre le groupe et ses membres. La principale, qui présentait très probablement un caractère national transcendant les barrières claniques, était le ngil (1), malheureusement très mal connu de nos jours. Le ngil paraît avoir été le principal, sinon le seul élément de cohésion tribale sur le plan politique. Il jouait un rôle de contrôle et de protection sociale, chargé notamment de préserver la société dans son ensemble de l'action des sorciers. Rassemblant des initiés de tous les clans, il pouvait trancher les litiges interclaniques en évitant le recours à la guerre ou à la vendetta : il servait, en quelque sorte, de police et de système judiciaire, les initiés de rang inférieur exécutant les sentences rendues par les maîtres. Luttant contre les sorciers, il avait également un rôle médical, qui a survécu quelque temps à son rôle de police : Bertaut (n° 110) paraît ne l'avoir connu que sous cet aspect, qui soulevait moins la méfiance administrative. Allys le considère comme le « fétiche de la guerre », rejoignant ainsi, semble-t-il, Allégret et Largeau. Martrou et Leroux parlent à son propos de « francs-juges », ce qui rappelle la description par Bearth du nsig nlo des Bané.

On sait assez peu de choses sur l'ensemble des rites du ngil et leur symbolisme. L'initiation a certains traits communs avec celle du sô : purification préalable physique et morale, flagellation, confession, soupe d'épreuve à base de matières immondes, représentation d'ancêtres, passage symbolique d'un état épicène ou androgynique à un état monosexuel (2), sacrifices sanglants ; il paraît probable que ces traits se retrouvent dans tous les rites pahouins importants. Le lieu sacré se présentait comme une palanque rectangulaire, ésam, ouverte d'un côté, contenant les statues en terre du ngil et de sa « femme » (3) devant lesquelles était creusée une fosse recouverte d'une claie, dans laquelle se dissimulaient les initiés qui piquaient à coup de lance les impétrants lorsqu'on les amenait devant le ngil après les avoir (comme dans le sô) fait ramper dans la fosse aux fourmis. Il y avait également une liane représentant un python, dont le rôle exact m'est inconnu. Les néophytes devaient apporter des ossements d'ancêtres, qu'on pétrissait dans la terre des statues. La cérémonie comprenait une épreuve destinée à révéler si le néophyte n'était pas nnem (porteur d'évu), ce qui aurait entraîné sa mise à mort immédiate ; une bénébient les hommes. La réunion est dirigée et arbitrée par les mbongengań (faiseurs-de-magiciens : initiés d'un rang supérieur). Les membres des deux groupes commencent par se lancer mutuellement des accusations. Puis on désigne les malchanceux, binwowolo ; on plante alors un arbuste, meyon, et l'on prépare dans une marmite un bińń sur lequel les assistants prêtent serment, s'engageant à ne plus mal agir à l'encontre les uns des autres. Le bińń est ensuite instillé dans les narines des binwowolo pour leur ôter la malchance. (J. B.)

(1) L'origine de ce mot est incertaine ; on l'a rapproché de ngil (njil) = gorille, et des rapports administratifs anciens parlent « d'hommes-gorilles ». On a aussi voulu le rattacher à ngul = capacité, puissance, ce qui paraît moins probable.

(2) Ou au contraire, en suivant Stoll, passage d'un état monosexuel à une complétude bi-sexuelle.

(3) Ou une seule statue androgyne.

diction des lances rituelles, qui, d'après Trilles, portaient des figurations totémiques ; enfin, un symbolisme sexuel, qualifié d' « obscène » par les auteurs cités qui ne l'ont pas autrement décrit.

Les initiés se déplaçaient en cortège, masqués ou maquillés de blanc et de rouge (couleurs de deuil et de fête, respectivement), précédés de tambours et de sonneurs de trompe et d'un garçonnet (non circoncis ?) chargé de tendre en travers de la rue du village une liane que le cortège ne franchissait qu'après sacrifice d'un poulet. Les non-initiés n'avaient pas le droit d'assister à cette entrée. Le maître du ngil, masqué et peint en rouge et blanc, apportait son bidi (bidi) personnel ; il était toujours accompagné d'un orchestre très complet (guitare mvel, tambours mbod et nkul, balafon mejah). La cérémonie d'initiation durait un mois (1).

Les membres du ngil circulaient en petits groupes et masqués, soit pour aller effectuer des enquêtes dans les villages où l'on soupçonnait des cas de sorcellerie, soit pour aller exécuter des sorciers. Dans les cas ordinaires, ils administraient les ordalies courantes (minkol), mais dans les cas graves il fallait organiser une cérémonie d'initiation : ce trait se retrouve dans presque toutes les associations rituelles où l'initiation s'accompagne toujours d'une catharsis collective.

Parmi les autres sociétés initiatiques masculines, il faut citer le rite ndôngô, dont les initiés portent deux incisions sur la nuque. Sa symbolique comprend, elle aussi, une confession, une purification, une réclusion dans l'obscurité, le passage dans un couloir étroit ou sous un portique bas, une liane-serpent, une lance consacrée, un sacrifice (2), un breuvage immonde ; l'animal rituel est la tortue. Le but du rite paraît également la protection contre les sorciers et, peut-être, l'accroissement de la ma'a, la chance. Une initiation pour jeunes circoncis, bekungu, est peut-être une forme juvénile de ndôngô. L'une et l'autre ont survécu jusqu'à la seconde guerre mondiale. Le ndôngô ne paraît pas créer un lien interclanique aussi fort que le ngil. Cependant le maître de l'initiation peut appartenir à un autre clan que les initiés.

Esge (ôtge ou Igo ?) est un rite de purification et de réconciliation, décrit par le P. Guillemin chez les Beti ; il ne dépasse pas le cadre de l'ayôm (fraction).

J'ai rencontré, chez les Boulou de Sangmélima, les Ntoumou d'Ambam et les Fang de Djoum, des initiés d'une société médicale, qui se disent « serpents », utilisant le vrai nom, bengo (s. : ngo) et non l'euphémisme minkol afan (lit. : lianes de brousse). Leur spécialité est le traitement des morsures et la capture et l'apprivoisement des serpents. Les initiés seraient connus dans la société sous le nom de telle ou telle espèce de serpent, reçu au moment de l'initiation. Celle-ci comporterait plusieurs degrés (trois ?) ; les initiés du premier degré

(1) La marque du ngil consistait en un tatouage à la base du sacrum, donc dissimulé par le pagne. Les initiés ne se déplaçant que masqués, il était théoriquement impossible de les reconnaître.

(2) On sacrifiait un chien. Ndôngô effaçait les mixaus graves, meurtre ou inceste, et permettait à ses initiés de manger du porc, du mouton et du porc-épic. (J. B.)

se disent bo' b'ayañ, enfants du dendraspis ; les grands initiés seraient bo' be mɔdm, enfants du python. Leurs connaissances médicales paraissent étendues ; ils prétendent, en particulier, être immunisés contre les morsures, grâce à l'application par scarifications d'un biañ (médicament) spécial, au moment de l'initiation. Cette société aurait son siège chez les Mekaé de Messaména et ne serait donc pas proprement pahouine.

Toutes ces associations rituelles concouraient à l'ordre social, principalement par la défense contre les sorciers malfaisants. Ceux-ci, à leur tour, se groupaient souvent en sociétés secrètes pour joindre leurs forces contre les organes de contrôle et de répression. Ces sociétés sont donc, par définition, très mal connues. Presque toutes devaient grouper des beyem (s. : nnem), c'est-à-dire des porteurs d'évu. En effet, si l'on peut être ainsi possédé involontairement et même à son insu, on peut aussi nyoñ évu, recevoir l'évu, toujours à titre onéreux : celui qui entre dans l'association des beyem doit payer son entrée par le sacrifice d'un proche parent, et aussi se voir imposer un interdit spécial dont la rupture (nsem) entraîne la mort immédiate.

Les ze mimfaka (lit. : panthères des routes), célèbres sous le nom d'hommes-léopards, étaient une association de sorciers anthropophages, une sorte de contre-ngil (1). Il peut même s'agir aujourd'hui d'une dégénérescence pathologique du ngil lui-même ; dans une enquête judiciaire menée à Ambam, en 1948, à la suite d'un raid de ze mimfaka, un vieux chef, de confession protestante et ancien d'église, déclarait à peu près « les Blancs ont affaibli le ngil et les beyem s'en sont emparés ; maintenant, c'est le ngil du ngbwel ».

Les adeptes du kɔn ou kun, forme de magie permettant de s'emparer de la force d'un individu sans tuer son corps, seraient également groupés en une association secrète aux réunions septennales.

Les associations de beyem ne seraient pas mixtes : sorciers et sorcières ne se réuniraient qu'occasionnellement pour des sabbats orgiaques.

La distinction entre magie blanche et magie noire est, au demeurant, difficile à faire de nos jours et on ne sait jamais au premier abord si les groupuscules qui foisonnent un peu partout, pour protéger leurs membres contre les mauvais sorts, en utilisant, outre des reliquats de rites traditionnels, des recettes empruntées à des manuels de magie imprimés en France, ressortissent à l'une ou à l'autre.

Pour revenir aux associations traditionnelles, il faut souligner que la séparation des sexes y était absolue, au point qu'il était très souvent interdit aux femmes de prononcer le nom d'une association masculine, ou de manifester de façon quelconque une connaissance même superficielle de ces rites. La prohibition était moins sévère pour les hommes à l'égard des rites féminins, le nsem, bris d'interdit, étant puni pour eux plutôt par l'impuissance ou la maladie que par la mort.

(1) Il existe aussi des ze mimfaka isolés.

Un rite féminin, comme mevungu, était à la fois villageois par son cadre géographique, le ressort de ses loges, et interclanique comme conséquence de l'exogamie. On sait d'ailleurs encore moins de choses sur ces rites féminins que sur les masculins, pour la bonne raison que les hommes n'ont absolument pas le droit de les connaître. Les missionnaires ont condamné mevungu comme obscène ; j'ai entendu dire que les initiées ménopausées joueraient un rôle masculin dans les danses mimant le coït, sans obtenir la moindre preuve ou le moindre détail (1). Ce qui est certain, c'est que c'est un rite de fécondité, de fertilité et aussi de chasse : un chasseur malheureux peut faire initier sa femme pour écarter la malchance. Ce n'est pas le seul cas d'intervention indirecte d'un sexe dans un rite de sexe opposé ; Allégret signale que c'est une « femme malheureuse à la pêche » qui « trouve le bois de fer pour la fabrication du fétiche de la guerre » ; il semble bien qu'il ait confondu ngil et só, mais l'exemple reste valable. Si donc les rites coutumiers, et les associations d'initiés de ces rites, étaient strictement masculins ou féminins, ils ne devaient pas exclure pour autant toute intervention du sexe opposé. On ne saurait en dire plus dans l'état actuel de nos connaissances (2).

Les nouveaux rites et les nouvelles associations, par contre, sont mixtes, qu'il s'agisse de sociétés religieuses ou politico-religieuses ou d'associations d'entraide.

Les deux principales associations politico-religieuses sont le bwili (ou mbuli) et le ngól, bien décrites par Balandier (n° 175). Elles se sont répandues vers le Nord à partir du Gabon et du Moyen-Congo et ne sont pas d'origine pahouine. Elles commencent à pénétrer en pays bulu, où elles ont moins de succès que chez les Fang du Sud, en raison, certainement, du caractère moins accentué de la destructuration sociale.

Le bwili était primitivement un culte tyogo des ancêtres, analogue au biéri pahouin, si l'on en croit Trilles. Sa pénétration en milieu pahouin doit avoir commencé au début du siècle, probablement parmi les familles pahouines isolées de leur clan et, par là même, détachées des rites biéri et só, dont la signification est d'abord ethnique et familiale. Libreville a été un point de rencontre important, non seulement entre populations africaines de souches différentes, mais encore avec les religions européennes : le bwili moderne emprunte beaucoup au christianisme, mais aussi à la franc-maçonnerie, assez développée dans le Gabon d'avant-guerre, en particulier dans les milieux métis et antillais du chef-lieu. En prenant ce caractère syncrétiste le bwili se présentait à la fois comme un mouvement nationaliste, ou africaniste, et comme un mouvement progressiste, abandonnant les anciens cultes, ou plutôt les modernisant. Objet de la méfiance administrative — à bon droit, puisqu'il a eu volontiers recours au sacrifice humain et à la liquidation physique des apostats — il a adopté des allures de société secrète, souvent clandestine. Le caractère libéral imprimé à l'action administrative depuis les réformes de 1946 a facilité son expansion, en accentuant le côté franchement politique de son action : les élections municipales de 1956 ont été dans une large mesure un succès bwili.

(1) Une femme, « choisie pour son grand vagin », présidait, assise et jambes écartées. Chaque initiée allait la chatouiller et lui tirer le clitoris. (J. B.)

(2) L'autre grand rite féminin, ngómbó, était plus spécialement réservé aux femmes âgées. Les participantes construisaient une sorte de bassin avec quatre troncs de bananier et leurs feuilles. On y préparait un biañ végétal protégeant contre le vol. (J. B.)

Le bwili, comme les anciens rites, sert d'abord à protéger ses initiés contre les beyem (porteurs d'évu), et tout son côté proprement africain rappelle ces anciens rites : comme dans le ngil les initiés doivent faire apport à la société d'ossements de leurs ancêtres, comme dans les sociétés criminelles, ils doivent souvent consentir à la mise à mort ou à la mutilation d'un proche parent, comme dans le melan, ils absorbent une potion à base de stupéfiants végétaux qui leur permet de « voir le bwili » ; il y a un instrument de musique sacré, la harpe ngomi, des représentations sculptées ou gravées, sur les poteaux de cases notamment, rappelant le biéri, une langue spéciale, des interdits, etc. Mais les cérémonies hebdomadaires s'inspirent de la messe, les degrés successifs d'initiation viennent probablement de la franc-maçonnerie ainsi que l'organisation des loges, il y a enfin usage et interprétation de la Bible, dans un sens politique bien souvent, qui ne peut venir que d'une influence protestante.

Balandier a montré comment le bwili tente une reconstruction de la société pahouine gabonaise, en lui fournissant une base idéologique, une wellanschauung collective totale permettant d'intégrer les comportements coutumiers et ceux résultant de la situation coloniale. Il serait intéressant de prolonger son enquête en territoire camerounais et espagnol pour étudier la réaction de sociétés très semblables dans un contexte politico-administratif et économique largement différent.

Le ngôl est beaucoup plus récent que le bwili et constitue un exemple de syncrétisme politico-religieux peut-être encore plus frappant : il trouve son origine dans une interprétation africaine, une mythification de la propagande faite en A.E.F. par la France libre de 1940 à 1944. Nzeia me Ngôl — le général de Gaulle — est devenu un héros blanc, envoyé pour libérer les Noirs en leur révélant les secrets des Blancs (1), leurs pouvoirs (pouvoir = ngul ; à rapprocher de ngôl ?). Il y a donc un côté cargo-cult, déjà observable dans certaines traditions ou pseudo-traditions rapportées par Trilles et Largeau. Le mélange dans le rituel d'éléments chrétiens et coutumiers rappelle le bwili, avec en plus une sacralisation certaine de la technique moderne : représentations d'avions, de sous-marins, etc. Le cycle du héros libérateur comporte une mise à mort (par ses frères blancs) et un retour en parachute, en avion ou en sous-marin — les versions diffèrent, et parfois coexistent. La hiérarchie de la société calque celle de l'administration : le maître de la loge, coiffé d'un képi étoilé, est le nzela me ngôl ; il est assisté de présidents, présidents en chef, commandants, inspecteurs généraux, gouverneurs et gouverneurs généraux, miliciens, docteurs, etc. (1). Il y a une hiérarchie féminine parallèle, comportant en particulier la douane, chargée de veiller à la bonne entente des ménages. L'intention politique est évidente : le ngôl a souvent substitué sa hiérarchie à celle reconnue par l'administration, parfois avec de bons résultats pratiques, rejoignant ainsi le mouvement de regroupement pahouin dans sa forme gabonaise.

(1) On aurait pu « logiquement » s'attendre à voir investir de ce rôle le gouverneur général Eboué...

Au Cameroun, ce mouvement de regroupement a, en effet, une allure très différente : il se présente essentiellement comme une tentative de revivification sociale et politique des clans, plutôt que comme un regroupement tribal, dont le besoin se faisait moins sentir qu'au Gabon. Surtout il tend plutôt, sur le plan religieux, au schisme disciplinaire qu'au syncrétisme, du moins quant à présent. Certains de ses leaders se sont séparés ou veulent se séparer des missions pour constituer des églises nationales admettant, par exemple, la polygamie, mais n'attaquent pas, et déclarent admettre les dogmes chrétiens, soutenant toutefois fréquemment que les missionnaires les ont déformés, volontairement ou non. L'influence de la Mission Presbytérienne Américaine, y est prédominante : on peut dire que les clans camerounais, les Boulou surtout, se sont organisés en régime presbytérien synodal. Le mouvement a eu moins de succès chez les Beti, où l'influence catholique est plus grande, mais là aussi, on trouve des associations inspirées par les structures ecclésiales importées.

Depuis 1946, les clans bulu ont constitué des associations, parfois déclarées conformément à la loi de 1901, groupées depuis 1950, dans l'Union Tribale Ntem-Kribi, qui rassemble essentiellement Boulou, Fong, Fang, Ntoumou et Mvaé. Chaque clan a son bureau général, élu au cours d'une ésulan annuelle ou bi-annuelle, et ses bureaux locaux. L'adhésion n'est pas implicite : les adhérents doivent solliciter leur admission, payer une cotisation et des droits d'entrée. Au sein de chaque association clanique existent des « sociétés » de jeunes gens des deux sexes, de mères de famille, d'abstinents, etc. Les « sociétés » de jeunes gens sont sans doute les plus remarquables ; elles se sont constituées avec l'approbation de l'administration, lors de l'abolition du recrutement forcé de travailleurs. Les « sociétés » passaient marché avec les autorités locales pour l'exécution de travaux tels que l'entretien des routes ou la construction d'ouvrages d'art, l'argent reçu étant versé à une caisse commune et employé soit à aider les membres pour le paiement de « dots » ou autres dépenses, soit, surtout, pour organiser des fêtes et banquets.

Dans les grandes villes, les migrants pahouins se groupent en associations de droit ou de fait, généralement dans un cadre tribal et non clanique ; ces associations ont un but de défense et d'entraide et sont parfois assez puissantes. Il faut en rapprocher les tontines ou colisations, groupant un petit nombre de manœuvres, de domestiques ou d'employés subalternes qui versent à une caisse commune la plus grande partie de leur salaire mensuel, chaque membre disposant à son tour de la somme importante ainsi rassemblée chaque mois. Ces deux dernières institutions n'ont rien de spécifiquement pahouin, ni même de camerounais ou de gabonais.

(1) Un des plus hauts dignitaires est l'adjudant des gardes, chargé de la police et de l'exécution des décisions judiciaires.

6) Droit et propriété

a) Sources

Le droit pahouin a toujours été un droit complexe. Il traitait essentiellement autrefois du statut et de l'état des personnes, d'où dépendait le régime des biens. Sous l'influence des transformations économiques résultant de la colonisation, le droit des biens a acquis une autonomie certaine par rapport au droit des personnes, ce dernier tendant à se simplifier à mesure de la dissociation des anciennes structures sociales et familiales.

Les sources du droit sont actuellement la coutume et la réglementation européenne importée. Elles réagissent évidemment l'une sur l'autre, la coutume étant modifiée par le règlement écrit, tandis que l'application de celui-ci est infléchie par l'influence coutumière. La jurisprudence évolue constamment. Elle est assez difficile à suivre, bien que très souvent écrite : les jugements des tribunaux, les procès-verbaux de conciliation, les « conventions entre indigènes », instituées par le décret de 1920, les procès-verbaux de tenue de palabre (1) et même certains contrats privés sont déposés dans les archives administratives, mais n'ont que trop rarement fait l'objet de recueils systématiques et méthodiques.

Le terme général pour désigner la coutume est biyem (de yem = = savoir), signifiant à la fois les habitudes, les manières d'être et les règles juridiques qui les régissent, les qualifient en bien ou en mal. Les façons d'agir seraient plutôt mebo, de bo, faire. Les pratiques, les affaires en général sont mam (s. : jam) ou mejô (ajô = parole, de jô = dire), ce dernier mot désignant aussi les « affaires » au sens contentieux. On entend dire souvent Nnôm éyem, bimvam bi ngə wô'ô bo mebo mele, melu mvus ; nale a ngə'ane kik, « Manière ancienne, les ancêtres faisaient comme ça autrefois ; ça n'existe plus », presque toujours avec un sentiment de regret. Le mouvement de « regroupement pahouin » est tout entier marqué de cette contradiction entre le regret des biyem bimvam et les aspirations à l'évolution. Il en est résulté la naissance de pseudo-traditions qui cherchent à référer à des normes coutumières les pratiques contemporaines.

On assiste depuis 1944, à un mouvement de l'opinion publique favorable à une codification écrite du droit. La plupart des sociétés claniques ont rédigé des coutumiers, révisés périodiquement lors des bisulan et qui servent de base légale aux jugements des tribunaux civils. Il est sans doute trop tôt pour une codification définitive à l'échelon territorial, qui impliquerait très probablement une unification intertribale du droit (déjà amorcée par la réglementation coloniale), mais la mise à jour périodique des coutumiers locaux par des commissions de notables et d'assesseurs est souvent réclamée, et déjà sporadiquement appliquée tant par les présidents d'ésulan que par certains administrateurs.

(1) B.S.E.C., 1947, n° 19-20, p. 141 (n° 126).

b) Pouvoir judiciaire

L'organisation moderne est, à quelques détails près, la même dans les trois territoires habités par les Pahouins. Au Cameroun et au Gabon, la justice répressive est confiée à des magistrats jugeant selon le code pénal français ; la justice civile est administrée par des tribunaux du premier et second degré, présidés par un fonctionnaire de l'ordre administratif, siégeant avec deux assesseurs africains ; il existe également des tribunaux dits coutumiers, entièrement composés d'Africains, incompétents en matière d'état des personnes, et un système de conciliation préalable à tout procès, cette conciliation étant du ressort soit des chefs, soit d'assesseurs du tribunal de premier degré. L'organisation espagnole est analogue, mais la justice pénale en premier ressort est confiée aux officiers jefes de demarcación.

A côté de cet appareil officiel, on constate souvent l'existence d'un appareil officieux, tantôt toléré, tantôt poursuivi comme illégal : tribunaux ou arbitres du ngôl, du bwiti ou des meyoñ, et aussi commissions de discipline, officielles ou officieuses, des missions.

La distinction du civil et du criminel était sans doute moins rigoureuse autrefois. Elle existait cependant et une organisation comme le ngil avait compétence essentiellement au criminel, le crime majeur, d'où dérivaient tous les autres, étant celui du ngbwel, sorcellerie : un meurtre pouvait être affaire civile, lorsque ses circonstances écartaient la probabilité d'un acte de sorcellerie, un vol astucieux, au contraire, ou même une habileté commerciale exceptionnelle pouvaient entraîner l'accusation capitale.

En dehors du ngil, la justice était administrée en premier lieu par l'ésa ou nlôl môl dans la famille-étendue ou le village. Il s'agissait là d'un pouvoir plutôt disciplinaire que judiciaire, aussi longtemps du moins que les décisions du nlôl n'intéressaient que ses bobenyañ. Lorsque l'affaire, élom, sortait d'un cadre purement familial, on avait recours à un juge, ntyi'i mejô = trancheur de palabres, choisi dans le clan à un niveau de parenté plus rapproché de l'ancêtre ; si plusieurs clans alliés étaient intéressés on prenait des arbitres ou assesseurs parmi les mintôl non impliqués directement dans le litige. On pouvait enfin s'adresser à un devin ou magicien, mvimvi'i ou ngengen, visité chez lui ou appelé en consultation.

Les litiges entre membres d'une association étaient, et sont encore très souvent, réglés par un dignitaire de l'association.

c) Peines

Leur échelle comprenait la mort, la malédiction paternelle, la mise aux ceps (mbok), l'amende et la bastonnade. S'y ajoutaient, réservées aux femmes, l'ablation du clitoris et des labia minora, l'injection vaginale au piment et l'exposition publique, nue, les jambes maintenues écartées par les mimbok (ésamele minga).

La peine de mort s'exécutait de façon à ne pas répandre de sang — ce qui aurait entraîné la nécessité d'une purification — par noyade, strangulation, inhumation (ceci notamment dans certains cas de nsem, comme l'inceste) ou par le feu ; si l'exécution devait être sanglante, on en chargeait un captif — étranger au clan — mais, en principe, l'effusion de sang avait toujours un caractère sacrificiel et devait être évitée en toutes autres occasions.

La peine de mort s'appliquait à la sorcellerie et aux minsem (ruptures d'interdits) graves : inceste ou meurtre d'un monyañ. Pour les autres infractions, la règle générale était la compensation, soit par le talion, soit par l'indemnisation, ce dernier mode étant généralement préféré. Par exemple, pour un meurtre commis en dehors du clan, les mintôl arbitres essayaient de faire payer à la famille du meurtrier un prix du sang, soit en marchandises, soit par dation en compensation d'une fille. Pouvait s'y ajouter, à l'intérieur du clan ou de la famille du meurtrier, une peine corporelle en quelque sorte disciplinaire. Si la compensation n'était pas payée, le clan de la victime avait recours au talion sur un membre quelconque du clan ou de la famille du coupable : la responsabilité, individuelle dans la famille, était collective dans le clan et dans la tribu.

L'amende devait être distinguée de la compensation accordée à la victime ; elle revenait, en effet, au nlyi'i mejô, peut-être pour payer son intervention. Elle subsiste de nos jours, bien qu'illégale, au profit des assesseurs officiels ou officieux : on l'appelle volontiers loya, du Coast English lax, pour la distinguer de la compensation, ngôlô = rançon, rachat.

La mise aux ceps s'appliquait surtout aux individus considérés comme socialement dangereux (de nos jours, dans les villages éloignés, à certains fous), la bastonnade aux fautes peu graves commises dans le clan. La clitoridectomie punissait l'adultère et l'inceste mineur. L'injection de piment était autant une nkal, épreuve ou ordalie, qu'une peine ; on la faisait subir, en particulier, aux veuves après le décès de leur mari, pour déterminer si elles en étaient ou non responsables.

Le recours aux ordalies, minkal, était d'ailleurs fréquent. L'ordalie était administrée soit par le nlyi'i mejô — ésa, ntôl, njôô bôl ou dignitaire du ngil ou autre association — soit par un devin, mvimvi'i, parfois spécialisé dans telle catégorie de bitom, palabres. L'ordalie proprement dite avait plusieurs formes : par serment imprécatoire sur la tombe des ancêtres ou le panier du biéti ; par les herbes amères, alan ; par le piment ou les fourmis ; par l'eau bouillante ou le feu

Les initiations, et d'abord celle du ngil, comportaient toutes une ordalie collective destinée à écarter les beyem qui auraient tenté de s'y introduire. A côté de l'ordalie proprement dite, le mvimvi'i avait recours aux divers procédés divinatoires pour découvrir les présumés coupables : sauf crime grave, on ne soumettait pas à l'ordalie le coupable ainsi décelé qui reconnaissait sa faute. L'ordalie physique est en recul, considérée comme crime ou délit par le Code pénal, et l'ordalie par serment imprécatoire a perdu beaucoup de sa valeur. Les procédés divinatoires restent très employés et sont parfois très efficaces (1).

Parmi les peines modernes l'amende et l'emprisonnement sont bien admis par les Pahouins et ont un pouvoir d'intimidation certain. Par contre, les subtilités de la constitution de partie civile échappent à beaucoup de paysans qui perdent ainsi la possibilité de recevoir les dommages-intérêts que la coutume leur aurait accordés. Surtout la qualification napoléonienne des crimes et délits reste très largement étrangère aux normes pahouines, par exemple lorsqu'elle considère comme simple contravention l'injure, même adressée à un ascendant. C'est ce qui explique le succès et la persistance de juridictions parallèles, illégales au point de vue du droit européen, bien que parfois tolérées par l'administration.

d) Délinquance

Si l'on en croit les anciens, la délinquance était rare jadis : les sociétés secrètes, leurs ordalies et leurs châtiments rapides prévenaient les délits par la terreur qu'ils inspiraient. Actuellement, les registres d'écrou et les statistiques judiciaires permettent de mesurer le phénomène, mais rien ne prouve que tous les délinquants soient poursuivis. Certaines affaires ne viennent jamais aux oreilles de la justice : souvent des pères de famille déplorent l'immoralité de leurs fils ou de leurs femmes affirmant qu'ils sont volés par eux ; mais aucune plainte n'étant déposée, les statistiques n'enregistrent pas ces faits.

Il est d'usage en Afrique de déplorer la poussée de délinquance juvénile. Les chiffres en ma possession montrent évidemment un accroissement :

	18 ans	18 à 20 ans	20 à 25 ans	25 à 30 ans	30 à 35 ans	Plus de 35 ans	Total
	%	%	%	%	%	%	%
1936	3	3,5	19	32	18	25	100
1946		10	21	35	15	14	100
1956	7	7,2	25	22	15	24	100

(1) Le serment peut être prêté sur le nzo'okak — petite défense d'éléphant emplie de médecines diverses, garnie d'une bretelle et portée sous le bras. Le nzo'okak n'est pas un insigne de commandement ; à la mort de son détenteur il n'est pas attribué obligatoirement à celui qui devient chef de famille, mais à celui qui a des penchants pour la magie. Sauter le nzo'okak posé par terre, c'est jurer qu'on a dit vrai. Le nzo'okak garantit les traités : après une guerre, il est posé entre les belligérants. Ceux-ci le sautent pour garantir leurs intentions pacifiques. (J. B.)

Mais cet accroissement est moins fort qu'on ne pouvait le craindre. Un examen des statistiques permet une autre conclusion : la délinquance est un phénomène urbain. En effet, les professions exercées en ville sont les seules représentées dans les prisons. Dans une zone où l'agriculture est l'activité essentielle le nombre relativement faible de ruraux délinquants est remarquable. Certes, il faut tenir compte du fait que l'activité des services de répression est plus facile en ville, du fait également que les citadins plus occidentalisés, hésitent moins à saisir les tribunaux. Cependant, les différences entre le taux de délinquance des diverses professions méritent d'être signalées : certes, les chiffres donnés ci-dessous ne sont qu'approximatifs. Ils ont été obtenus par l'étude du recensement de trois villes du Sud-Cameroun et par la comparaison avec les registres d'écrou des mêmes localités.

	Fonctionnaires	Employés de commerce	Commerçants	Bouchers	Tailleurs	Menuisiers	Maçons	Chauffeurs	Mécaniciens	Motor boys	Domestiques	Manœuvres	Chefs	Planteurs
% de délinquants...	4,8	15	7,5	4	8	5	3	13	10	23	8,3	8	0,8	0,8

Employés de commerce, chauffeurs et apprentis chauffeurs sont les groupes sociaux où la moralité est la moins bonne. La nature des délits permet de préciser les choses : dans les pays béti du Cameroun les délits de mœurs (abandon du domicile conjugal) constituent 47 % des causes ; vol et escroquerie en constituent 26 % ; les coups et blessures volontaires viennent loin derrière : 16 %.

Ces chiffres permettent de mesurer la décadence actuelle de la famille. (J. B.)

e) Droit foncier

D'après les documents anciens, le régime foncier était jadis des plus simples. Il ne semblait pas y avoir de droit sur le sol : « La terre est à qui la prend, elle n'a aucune valeur. On ne la vend pas, on ne la donne pas en garantie d'une dette, elle n'entre pas dans l'héritage. » Ce n'est pas seulement la notion de propriété individuelle du sol qui fait défaut, mais aussi celle de propriété collective : « Il n'y a jamais de conflit entre les villages pour la propriété du sol... On voit souvent un village étranger venir s'intercaler entre deux groupes d'habitations appartenant à un même village de Boulou (1). » Dans les pays fang du Gabon, la situation était analogue : « La tradition ignore au Woleu-Ntem la notion de propriété même par village (2). »

Les migrations et les conquêtes sont encore récentes. En outre,

(1) Rapport à la S.D.N., 1922.
(2) Sautter, Bulletin d'Études centrafricaines, 1950 (n° 102).

le mouvement de peuples s'est fait sans organisation ni commandement cohérent : clans, tribus, peuples divers sont imbriqués, famille par famille, sans qu'il soit possible de distinguer l'assiette territoriale d'une collectivité.

Chez les Éwôndo et les Eton, la situation est un peu différente : les clans, probablement mieux organisés, ont conservé une relative cohésion et ont effectué leur conquête sans s'éparpiller. Aussi, trouve-t-on chez eux des limites entre les villages et des droits collectifs du sol. « Les terrains une fois défrichés ne sont pas abandonnés sans espoir de retour. Le village les considère comme une réserve. » En effet, la densité de la population limite beaucoup le nomadisme agricole.

Depuis une quarantaine d'années, les coutumes ont beaucoup évolué et chez ces peuples dont le droit foncier était embryonnaire ou inexistant, apparaissent des notions voisines de celles du droit de propriété occidental.

La population est à peu près fixée maintenant. La naissance d'un droit de cueillette à l'intérieur d'un périmètre serait assez logique. Une évolution se dessine en ce sens. Dans certaines zones, quiconque peut encore couper du bois, des lianes, récolter des fruits sauvages ou chasser pour ses besoins personnels ; mais s'il en tire profit par des ventes, il doit obtenir le consentement de la famille dans la zone d'extension de qui il se livre à cette industrie. Ailleurs, l'utilisation, même à des fins personnelles de certains produits, est soumise à autorisation ou partage de récolte. L'ancien principe coutumier du libre usage des biens naturels se trouve donc limité, au moins dans certains cas particuliers. Avec l'accroissement de la population naît la notion d'un droit virtuel sur des forêts non cultivées. Les familles estiment qu'elles seules ont le droit de défricher les terres situées dans leur mouvance. Des hommes expérimentés précisent bien : « Jadis, chacun défrichait dans la forêt sans demander à personne. Maintenant que le pays est peuplé, il faut demander. » Dans les cantons moins peuplés, les défrichements en grande forêt se font librement.

Conformément aux coutumes ancestrales, la récolte appartient aux cultivateurs : droit mobilier plutôt que droit sur le sol. Cependant, la tendance vers un droit de propriété foncière se fait sentir. En effet, avant tout ensemencement, il a fallu abattre les arbres et défricher. Ces travaux sont relativement durables : défricher un taillis de 10 ou 15 ans est moins pénible que défricher une parcelle de forêt primaire. Aussi reconnaît-on à l'ancien défricheur un droit sur ses jachères. A l'intérieur de la famille, chaque chef de ménage peut remettre en culture des terres qu'il utilisait précédemment et dans ce cas, chacune de ses femmes a le droit de retrouver son ancien champ. Lorsqu'il s'agit de propriété collective, l'évolution est moins nette. Cela se comprend : lorsqu'un village abandonne son emplacement ancien, si personne ne reste aux alentours, c'est qu'aucun retour n'est envisagé. Aussi les emplacements abandonnés peuvent-ils être occupés en général sans difficulté ni accord explicite.

Mais c'est évidemment dans le cas des cacaoyères que le droit né du travail se transforme en droit sur le sol. Du droit sur la récolte, on passe au droit sur l'arbre qui la porte et sur le sol où il est enraciné : la pérennité de la plantation justifie ce passage en fixant les hommes pendant deux ou trois générations.

Le passage cependant n'est pas parfaitement accompli et certains veulent assurer leur droit sur le sol en y plantant des arbres et l'on voit des procès étranges, où pour évincer un planteur émigré, un concurrent plante d'autres cacaoyères dans les intervalles.

L'évolution vers la propriété n'est pas encore terminée : nous sommes en présence d'un droit d'usage mais le droit de disposer n'est pas bien établi. Beaucoup estiment qu'il n'est pas possible de vendre la terre. Non point, semble-t-il, pour des motifs religieux mais parce que la collectivité se trouverait frustrée de façon définitive. L'attitude à cet égard des étrangers est caractéristique. Dans cette zone où clans et tribus se mélangent de façon inextricable, le problème des étrangers se pose tous les jours. Certains appartenant à des tribus sœurs, sont à peu près considérés comme le seraient les membres du groupe. Mais d'autres, venus de peuples plus éloignés vivent selon un statut spécial... Ils doivent demander une terre au chef de famille auprès de qui ils s'installent. Celui-ci les autorise à défricher une parcelle pour leurs cultures vivrières. Mais il leur interdit de planter des cacaoyers. En effet, si la création d'un champ de maïs donne droit de posséder le sol pour quelques mois, la création d'une cacaoyère amènerait à une possession de longue durée. Il ne s'agit pas d'une coutume liée à la possession des arbres, puisque des anciens affirment que naguère l'étranger pouvait planter des palmiers melen (elaeis guineensis) et des sa (pachylobus edulis), mais d'un réflexe de défense pour conserver le contrôle d'une culture intéressante et repousser l'afflux d'immigration qu'elle pourrait attirer.

L'examen des modalités de mise en gage des terres amène à une conclusion analogue : le droit de disposition est loin d'être total. Ce sont les récoltes plutôt que les terres qui sont engagées. Chez les Ewôndo, en effet, le créancier peut récolter et disposer des fruits. « Si la récolte dépasse la dette, il remettra à son ancien débiteur une part du produit. Comme le propriétaire risque de laisser sa terre à l'abandon, le créancier peut entretenir le fonds et ce faisant mériter un accroissement de sa créance. Le créancier peut être amené à conserver le bien en mains plusieurs années : en fait, il le conserve assez longtemps pour être remboursé par les fruits. Cependant, on n'envisage pas qu'il puisse le garder perpétuellement. On saisit là une différence vraisemblablement importante entre le droit foncier local et le nôtre : tout se passe comme si la terre était inaliénable (1). La tendance est analogue chez les Boulou, mais il faut convenir que le problème de la mise en gage ne paraît pas poser de gros problèmes économiques actuellement. (J. B.)

(1) J. Binet, Budgets familiaux dans la zone cacaoyère du Cameroun, L'Homme d'Outre-mer, n° 3, 1956 (n° 93).

f) Propriété mobilière

C'est sans doute la seule connue à l'origine. Elle paraît avoir été en grande partie collective, en tout cas en ce qui concerne les biens de valeur : l'ésa était gérant de ces biens, patrimoine familial qui servait principalement à payer les minsuba, « dots ». Il y avait cependant propriété individuelle d'objets fonctionnels, armes des hommes, instruments de travail ou de ménage des femmes, objets qu'on enterrait avec leur propriétaire. Il semble bien, également, y avoir eu une distinction sexuelle des différentes catégories de bien : biôm beyôm masculins, biôm beyal féminins, cette distinction ayant trait non à la propriété mais à l'usage et peut-être à l'origine. J'ai déjà mentionné que, dans les bilaba, le njem bilaba de l'Ouest apportait des objets d'importation, celui de l'Est des produits du pays, l'orientation se référant très probablement à des catégories sexuelles : aire Nord/Est, mâle ; aire Sud/Ouest, femelle. Il faudrait mieux connaître les usages rituels des différents outils et instruments pour préciser cette notion. On sait que le sabre, fa, est essentiellement mâle, que la clochette de chasse attachée au cou des chiens, angôñ, est essentiellement femelle, que le tambour-téléphone, nkul, est androgyne (mais les femmes n'ont pas le droit de s'en servir), le fusil, ngal, probablement épicène, et ainsi de quelques autres objets, mais on ignore à peu près totalement quels effets a cette sexualisation sur la propriété et sa transmission.

Quoi qu'il en soit, depuis l'introduction de l'économie monétaire, la propriété mobilière s'est à peu près intégralement individualisée. Les meubles qui restent collectifs le sont d'abord par affectation : matériel des associations, produits de leurs cotisations, parfois objets achetés en commun par les membres d'une famille, en raison de leur prix ou de leur usage, par exemple les machines à coudre qu'on allait chercher en Guinée Espagnole après la dernière guerre.

La propriété mobilière comporte encore quelques restrictions appliquées aux femmes et aux jeunes gens ; encore les supportent-ils de moins en moins. Les fils respectueux, les épouses soumises laissent encore leurs pères et maris utiliser les objets acquis avec le produit de leur industrie, mais lorsqu'ils s'y refusent la tendance des tribunaux est de plus en plus en leur faveur. Cependant, l'obligation d'assistance résultant des liens familiaux est toujours effective et refuser de « prêter » un objet à un monyañ risque d'être mal vu, ce qui est fort grave. Il subsiste ainsi une sorte de droit d'usage collectif, familial, grevant la propriété mobilière individuelle.

g) Successions, tutelles

Elles s'ouvrent par la mort ou la disparition. La malédiction paternelle n'emportait pas la mort civile, mais les biens abandonnés par le fils maudit qui quittait le village étaient confisqués et partagés entre ses frères.

La liquidation des biens laissés par le défunt, appelés élik, de lik = laisser, avait lieu à la fin de la période de deuil, meyep, soit un mbu, six mois après le décès., Ce délai tend à se raccourcir de plus en plus et est généralement d'un mois dans les villes, période suffisant à prévenir et convoquer les héritiers éventuels ; il demeure plus long dans les villages.

L'élik comprend au passif les dettes familiales du de cujus, mais non ses dettes purement personnelles qui meurent avec lui ; la distinction est parfois malaisée et donne lieu à des procès entre héritiers et créanciers du mort. Le passif comprend également les frais de funérailles, notamment la rétribution du devin appelé à déterminer la cause du décès (mais les frais de dernière maladie sont considérés comme dette personnelle). L'actif comprend tous les biens meubles et immeubles ayant appartenu au défunt, y compris ses femmes. La liquidation, akap = partage, est dirigée par le nkap élik, partageur de succession, généralement un nlôl môl, parent ou allié, non appelé à la succession, et désigné soit par le de cujus, soit par les héritiers eux-mêmes. Les successions sont plus importantes de nos jours qu'autrefois, non seulement parce que la quantité et la variété des objets à partager sont plus grandes, mais encore parce que l'habitude se perd d'en détruire ou d'en enterrer une partie lors des funérailles.

Il y a six degrés de successibles : enfants mâles et leurs descendants mâles ; frères germains ; frères consanguins ; cousins germains en lignée paternelle, bobenyañ ; neveux du clan, donc fils de frères, bobendôm ; frères, neveux et petits-fils utérins du clan, donc bâtards, bobengon, et neveux et petits-fils hors du clan, légitimes, bobekal. La succession n'est dévolue en ordre ascendant qu'à défaut absolu de successibles en ordre descendant.

L'aîné des héritiers du premier degré appelé à la succession, nlôl mon, est privilégié : c'est le remplaçant, njian, du mort. Il prend sa case, les bijoux de famille, les objets du culte des ancêtres et notamment le panier du biéli, le fusil et certains biens de valeur tels que bicyclette, machine à coudre, etc. Les autres biens sont partagés entre les autres successibles du même degré. Le droit d'aînesse du njian commence à faire l'objet de critiques ; il cesse de plus en plus de s'appliquer aux plantations et l'on voit maintenant des héritiers réclamer un partage en lots d'égale valeur suivant un mode analogue à celui du Code civil.

Les biens laissés par une femme allaient en premier lieu à ses filles, à défaut à ses co-épouses, à défaut de co-épouses à son mari. Avec l'instabilité matrimoniale actuelle, conjuguée à l'émancipation économique des femmes, cet ordre successoral est très discuté : il est fréquent de voir la famille d'une femme tenter de s'emparer de la succession en arguant du paiement incomplet de la dot.

Le testament oral est de plus en plus remplacé par le testament écrit. Le testataire peut lui-même kap élik, partager la succession, et avantager certains héritiers. Il ne peut guère déshériter complètement le nlôl mon qu'en le maudissant, sauf si celui-ci a quitté le village de façon apparemment définitive, auquel cas c'est un puîné qui devient njian.

La disparition est une question de fait : lorsque quelqu'un est resté longtemps sans donner de nouvelles et sans qu'on sache où il est, ses aînés et ses frères peuvent décider de partager ses biens, le partage est annulé s'il revient.

La tutelle d'un mineur, meba'ale ou akalé (de ba'ale ou kalé = = prendre soin, garder) est confiée à un nya môlô d'une classe d'âge supérieure, de préférence un oncle paternel, ésa (lit. : père) ou grand-parent paternel, émvam ; à défaut, à un frère aîné ; à défaut de l'un et de l'autre, à un aîné de la famille ou du clan. L'oncle maternel, ndômenyañ, sert en quelque sorte de subrogé tuteur, chargé de veiller à la régularité de la tutelle. C'est chez lui que se réfugiera un pupille maltraité par son tuteur.

Le tuteur, mba'ale mon ou nkalé mon, a, du fait même de son âge et du lien de parenté qui les unit, pleine autorité sur l'orphelin, mone nyui ou mo'nyui. Il ne peut, toutefois, disposer de ses biens, qu'il doit lui restituer intégralement, en nature ou en valeur, dès que l'orphelin est parvenu à l'âge d'homme. Il devrait même, en principe, se charger de marier son pupille à ses frais, tradition qui se perd avec le recul de la propriété familiale. Le pupille devenu majeur peut se faire rendre des comptes de tutelle, à condition de ne pas insulter le tuteur ; c'est le conseil de famille, composé des aînés, minlôl, qui est compétent dans ce cas.

C'est le mba'ale mon chargé de la tutelle d'une fille qui donne son consentement au mariage de celle-ci et touche la nsuba, dont il doit réserver le montant au mariage des frères de la fille s'ils sont mineurs aussi. La tutelle d'une fille est toujours confiée à l'aîné de ses frères s'il est majeur au décès du père ; sinon, elle lui est transférée par le mba'ale mon dès qu'il a atteint l'âge d'homme si la fille ne s'est pas mariée pendant sa minorité. Même dans ce cas, d'ailleurs, c'est à lui qu'incombera la responsabilité du remboursement de la nsuba si la fille divorce lorsqu'il est sorti de tutelle.

h) Contrats et quasi-contrats divers

L'engagement juridique est atiñ, de tiñ = nouer ; on a longtemps ignoré la distinction entre contrat et quasi-contrat, mais, à mesure qu'augmente le domaine de l'autonomie de la volonté, on distingue parmi les metiñ le mfañ atiñ, contrat véritable, de fañ = faire vraiment, faire exprès, à dessein.

A la base de tous les metiñ se trouve la notion de compensation, avulan ou abulan, qu'on pourrait énoncer approximativement ainsi : toute atteinte, positive ou négative, à la personnalité juridique totale d'un individu du fait d'un autre individu doit donner lieu à une compensation négative ou positive qui remette les choses en l'état. En d'autres termes, quiconque enrichit autrui a droit à compensation, quiconque appauvrit autrui doit compensation.

De là dérive la distinction entre nsenge et avu ou avuan, qu'on a parfois confondus, sous la traduction de « gain » ou « bénéfice ». Il semble qu'en fait nsenge désignait expressément le profit commercial fait à l'extérieur du clan à l'occasion de la traite, abom, et pour lequel la compensation ne jouait pas. Avu ou avuan (de vu = s'enrichir, augmenter sa richesse ; forme en an = s'accroître, être augmenté) désignait l'augmentation naturelle d'une fortune, par exemple la récolte par rapport aux semences, le croît biologique d'un troupeau ; si l'avuan se faisait aux dépens d'un monyañ, il y avait lieu à compensation. Aujourd'hui, la notion d'avuan se rapproche de celle de l'intérêt, légitime ou illégitime selon les cas d'espèce ; l'affaiblissement des structures anciennes tend simultanément à faire admettre le nsenge même dans le clan.

Le verbe kuan, vendre, n'est autre que la forme réciproque du verbe kus, acheter : kuan signifie donc littéralement « s'acheter l'un à l'autre », avec une idée d'échange, très affaiblie aujourd'hui. Les verbes fol et folan, autrefois presque synonymes de kus et kuan, ont conservé le sens « échanger » ; ils s'appliquent au troc, kuan et kus, aux transactions monétaires.

On considère aujourd'hui que la vente est nouée dès la tradition de la marchandise ou du prix, alors que l'échange semble exiger la remise simultanée des objets échangés.

Prêter un objet pour un usage momentané et assez bref est señ ; ce n'est pas à proprement parler un contrat et la responsabilité de l'emprunteur peut même n'être pas engagée, par exemple lorsqu'on lui a prêté un outil pour effectuer un travail au profit et sous la surveillance du prêteur. Prêter à long terme avec dépossession effective de la marchandise prêtée, est, par contre, un atiñ fréquent. Les mêmes verbes signifient simultanément « prêter » et « emprunter » : yôé s'applique au prêt-emprunt d'un objet déterminé, kôlé à celui d'une chose de genre ou d'une somme d'argent. La chose prêtée est ndôñ ou ékôla, suivant le cas ou, plus généralement, mvôla, qui désigne toute dette ou créance (mbi mvôla = créancier ; mvômvôla = débiteur). L'emprunteur est tenu à restitution en bon état du ndôñ et de ses fruits ou de l'ékôla, augmenté d'avulan s'il s'est enrichi du fait de l'emprunt ; il est responsable non seulement de la conservation, mais encore de l'usage qu'il fait de l'objet prêté, le prêteur ayant toutefois une sorte de responsabilité solidaire vis-à-vis des tiers auxquels l'emprunteur aurait pu nuire à l'aide de l'objet emprunté (une indemnité peut être réclamée par la victime d'un accident au propriétaire qui a prêté une bicyclette à l'auteur de l'accident), et même vis-à-vis de l'emprunteur si celui-ci vient à méchef du fait de l'objet emprunté.

Du prêt dérive le louage, désigné par le même mot que le prêt d'objet déterminé, yôé, contrat d'introduction récente, dont la jurisprudence est encore imprécise ; comme le prêt de louage peut donner lieu à constitution de gage, éban. L'éban portait fréquemment sur des personnes, jusqu'à ce que la législation européenne ait prohibé la mise en gages de personnes, qui se pratique cependant encore clandestinement. Il porte surtout de nos jours sur des objets, qui peuvent être remis soit au prêteur, soit à un tiers ; la propriété du gage peut être transférée au prêteur à l'échéance du remboursement, sans pour autant éteindre la dette. La mise en gage de récoltes pendantes ou même de plantations est de plus en plus fréquente ; dans le cas des plantations, cependant, le gage porte plutôt sur le droit aux fruits que sur le terrain même. Dans le cas de mise en gage d'une fille, la remise de dette, aju, est parfois considérée comme une sorte de nsuba ; tant que la dette subsiste, en tout cas, les enfants de la fille mise en gage appartiennent à son clan, et non à celui du créancier gagiste.

Le contrat de prêt-embouche de bétail, meyale kabal (yale = élever, faire pousser), peut paraître assez singulier au premier abord : le propriétaire du bétail le confie au ñyale qui doit le soigner et rendre à l'expiration du contrat non seulement le bétail reçu mais aussi le croît : le prêteur se débarrasse du souci du troupeau (très souvent, d'ailleurs, il l'envoie ainsi en garde pour le soustraire à une épizootie), mais prend le risque d'une infidélité du ñyale ; celui-ci doit rendre intégralement le troupeau, mais tant qu'il l'a en garde, il peut en faire ce qu'il veut, l'utiliser comme une sorte de crédit. Il est bon de signaler que ce contrat, actuellement en voie de désuétude, donnait lieu à de multiples contestations.

Le contrat de traite, sous son ancien nom d'abom ou sous la désignation plus récente d'atiñ kilak ou atiñ akus kaka, est, par contre, de plus en plus répandu. Un commerçant, nkuan biôm ou mbi falyélé, remet à un kilak (anglais : clerk) une avance en argent et en marchandise, le kilak s'engageant à fournir en contrepartie un certain tonnage de cacao ; le contrat est constaté par un écrit, le « bon pour », qui tient lieu de reconnaissance de dette. Le kilak s'efforce de recueillir le tonnage promis, généralement en l'achetant à des planteurs de son clan, parfois en sous-traitant avec des « petits clerks », bone bekilak. Le contrat est à terme, avec les aléas des contrats de ce type ; en cas de hausse des cours, le kilak risque de se trouver en difficulté et de ne pouvoir fournir le tonnage promis, à moins que les planteurs de sa famille ne lui fassent crédit ou ne lui vendent au-dessous du cours. L'achat du cacao se fait aussi par le procédé du mandat, le mandataire, nlôman, envoyé, recevant une avance d'argent avec laquelle il doit acheter le plus de cacao possible. Les deux procédés donnent lieu à des litiges d'autant plus fréquents que le bailleur de fonds est généralement un Européen ou un Africain d'une autre tribu, « gabonais » en A.E.F., Bamiléké, mone galifis (du Coast English : Grassfield) au Cameroun.

D'une façon générale, le mandat est toujours possible, que ce soit pour passer un contrat ou pour ester en justice. Le mandant est appelé mve ngul, donneur de pouvoir, le mandataire mbili ngul, ayant pouvoir. Ils sont solidairement responsables.

Le contrat bilaba, décrit plus haut (supra, pp. 33 et 60) est en voie de disparition. Il subsiste, par contre, une sorte de bilaba du pauvre, le meyeñ, de nneñ = hôte, qui permet à un zesé môl, homme de peu, de lever une sorte de taxe sur les minkukum, les riches, de son clan, par le procédé très simple d'aller les voir en leur apportant un cadeau auquel ils doivent répondre par une hospitalité généreuse et un contre-cadeau de valeur plus élevée. C'est un quasi-contrat sanctionné par la contrainte sociale et qui pèse très lourdement sur les gens considérés comme riches ; il est à l'origine du parasitisme familial souvent constaté dans les grandes villes. Le réputé nkukum qui voudrait s'y soustraire serait accusé d'avoir le cœur dur, nlem ayel, ce qui peut assez facilement mener à une accusation de sorcellerie.

7) Situation des femmes (1)

Si l'on en croit les anciens, la situation des femmes, selon la coutume orthodoxe, serait celle de mineures. Pourtant, rien dans les principes traditionnels ne justifie bien une telle misogynie : certains clans citent des femmes parmi leurs héros éponymes et des légendes attribuent au Dieu créateur (Zambē) une fille, en l'honneur de qui étaient accomplis certains rites. Actuellement, les sociétés tribales, qui s'efforcent de revitaliser les anciens clans et de repenser les règles morales et juridiques coutumières, réservent toujours au sein de leurs états-majors des places pour les femmes, mais bien souvent leur rôle est assez secondaire : danseuses, chanteuses, organisatrices de ballets ou commissaires chargées de surveiller les adhérentes, elles ne font en somme qu'exécuter les ordres des hommes. Elles siègent parfois aussi avec des hommes dans les associations confessionnelles (protestantes ou plus souvent catholiques), mais le plus souvent, elles forment des groupes distincts de ceux des hommes, sociétés dites secrètes hier, pieuses confréries chrétiennes aujourd'hui permettant aux femmes de se retrouver entre elles, d'avoir leur hiérarchie, et leurs chefs. Les femmes ne participent pas réellement à la vie de la cité, ou plus précisément, elles forment entre elles une cité, distincte de celle des hommes.

En droit, les femmes paraissent avoir une situation défavorable. Il n'est pas certain pourtant qu'elles doivent cette situation à un anti-féminisme véritable. En effet, nul n'est parfaitement indépendant en droit coutumier ; seul le chef de famille, le patriarche jouit de la pleine capacité. La femme n'est pas rendue majeure par le mariage et la jeune fille jouit d'une indépendance plus grande que la femme mariée. Dans le domaine sexuel, cela est évident. Les naissances illégitimes ne comportent aucune honte : un enfant est toujours bien accueilli. S'il naît avant le mariage, il appartient à la famille de la mère. Et il n'est pas rare que de respectables pères de famille attendent que leur fille ait donné des enfants avant de la marier. Dans la vie économique, la fille non mariée peut entreprendre librement toutes sortes d'affaires commerciales, alors que la femme mariée aurait besoin du consentement de son mari. Pas plus que le mariage, le divorce ou le veuvage n'émancipent théoriquement la femme. Échappant à la tutelle du mari, elle retombe sous l'autorité de son chef de famille, mais dans l'esprit de la coutume ceci n'est pas une situation défavorable : chaque individu reste soumis à son père.

(1) J. Binet, Condition des femmes, Cahiers internationaux de sociologie, XX, 1956, P.U.F., et Statut des femmes dans le Sud-Cameroun, à paraître in Recueils de la Société Jean Bodin, 1956, Edit. de la Librairie Encyclopédique, Bruxelles.

La liberté dont jouissent les femmes pour la gestion de leur patrimoine ne doit donc pas faire figure d'anomalie. En Afrique, d'ailleurs, l'usage du pécule individuel est très répandu. Et la division des biens en biens masculins et biens féminins permet aux femmes et aux jeunes filles d'avoir la propriété d'objets que ni maris, ni pères ne peuvent leur prendre. Une séparation des biens est la conséquence logique de ces données.

La femme dispose en principe du produit de son travail — de ses récoltes — mais elle doit fournir l'essentiel de la nourriture. Le surplus seul est vendu, mais dans la plupart des familles, lorsque des ventes importantes sont faites, le produit en est partagé entre mari et femme. La femme dispose seule en général du produit des ventes courantes faites sur un marché ou au passage de voyageurs : faibles sommes n'atteignant que 10 % du budget total de la famille. Elle peut investir ses bénéfices en participant à des tontines (société où chacun fait à date fixe un apport et où le capital est réparti à tour de rôle entre les différents associés).

Les moyens d'enrichissement prévus par la coutume sont donc faibles. Mais l'évolution des usages permet aux femmes d'exercer divers métiers assurant leur indépendance. Commerçantes, ou couturières, payant patente, employées de commerce ou vendeuses sont théoriquement autorisées par leur mari, qui pourrait décider de l'emploi des bénéfices. En fait, les femmes semblent agir librement. Devant les tribunaux coutumiers même, elles se présentent seules, sans être accompagnées de leur père ou de leur époux.

Dans le domaine du droit foncier, la tendance est la même : les femmes accèdent à une certaine propriété. Avec la stabilisation, la naissance d'un droit collectif sur des terres défrichées ou susceptibles de l'être est assez compréhensible. L'idée d'un droit personnel accordé à une femme qui n'est pas vraiment membre de la famille mais lui est simplement prêtée paraît aberrante. Telle est pourtant la situation chez les Ewôndo, où la femme divorcée continue à avoir un droit sur ses anciennes cultures et peut y faire la récolte. Chez les Bané et les Boulou, cette situation des divorcées n'est pas la même. Mais la tendance est la même : lorsque les jachères sont défrichées, chacune retrouve les champs qu'elle avait cultivés quatre ou cinq ans plus tôt, et les fils peuvent réclamer les terres qui ont été cultivées par leur mère.

Les cacaoyères posent d'autres problèmes. Certains hommes, soucieux de l'avenir de leurs enfants, confient une plantation à leur épouse ou l'incitent à en créer une pour leur fils. Ailleurs, ce sont des femmes sans enfants qui plantent pour assurer leur subsistance dans leur vieillesse : celles qui sont mères sont sans inquiétude, leurs enfants les soigneront. Enfin, une transformation plus importante encore se laisse pressentir : un régime matrimonial de communauté des biens est en gestation. Lorsqu'une femme a collaboré avec son mari à établir une plantation, elle a le droit, à la mort de celui-ci, d'en conserver l'usufruit. Même si son fils en hérite et effectue les ventes, c'est elle qui percevra les recettes. Évolution importante, car elle témoigne d'une sorte d'égalité entre les époux qui ont vocation et aptitude à recueillir les fruits d'une même propriété. Elle montre, en outre, que le ménage est une réalité juridique en face des deux individus d'une part, de la famille patriarcale, d'autre part. (J. B.)

[p. 84]

CHAPITRE VI

PRINCIPAUX ÉLÉMENTS DE LA CULTURE

1) Caractéristiques physiques, mentalité

a) Données anthropologiques

Les premiers voyageurs décrivent les Fang comme très grands, bien bâtis et d'aspect redoutable. Cette appréciation comportait certainement une bonne part de subjectivité, car les chiffres donnés, par exemple, par I. Dugast, dont nous reproduisons quelques-uns ci-dessous, indiquent une taille simplement sur-moyenne :

Tribu	Taille		Indice céphalique		Indice cormique
	H.	F.	H.	F.	H.	F.
Mangisa ...	Sur-moyenne		76,7	76,3	?	?
Eton	167,8	157,9	76,2	76,4	50,8	51,0
Ewôndo ...	168,4	158,6	77,0	77,6	50,5	50,4
Boulou	165,4	157,6	77,8	79,2	51,2	52,2
Fang	Sur-moyenne		77,0	76,6	51,2	50,9

Tribu	Formule sanguine (en %)					Indice facial		Envergure s/taille
	O	A	B	AB	Indice	H.	F.	H.	F.
Mangisa ...	52	21,9	10,9	15,2	1,44	?	?	?	?
Eton	55,7	13,8	17,5	12,9	0,876	85,1	84,2	104,4	102,5
Ewôndo ...	55,5	14,1	17,4	11,5	0,885	85,7	85,6	105,3	104,0
Boulou	?	?	?	?	?	86,5	85,1	103,7	102,9
Fang	?	?	?	?	?	83,2	87,0	105,3	103,4

Il est obligatoire, d'ailleurs, qu'une population de cette importance numérique présente des variations extrêmes assez accusées, mais mes propres observations, subjectives également, font ressortir une proportion plus forte d'individus petits et très petits, que de grands et très grands : le métissage avec les Pygmées (ayoñ Bekoé, notamment) l'expliquerait en grande partie : les Beti du Nord, qui ont eu beaucoup moins de contacts avec les Pygmées semblent plus grands et plus élancés.

L'ensemble du groupe serait mésaticéphale tendant vers une doli-chocéphalie modérée (1), avec un faciès à caractéristiques négroïdes peu accusées, une peau brun chocolat assez claire et des groupes à peau tirant sur le rouge et yeux verts (ayoñ Ndôñ de Sangmélima). Pilosité pectorale fréquente. Cas d'albinisme assez fréquents, quelques polydactiles (souvent réputés sorciers). Ceinture scapulaire forte, mollet assez développé, cambrure accusée, phalangettes non redressables vers le haut.

Les explorateurs du siècle dernier ont été unanimement frappés par une différence d'aspect physique entre les Pahouins et leurs voisins, beaucoup moins évidente aujourd'hui, en tout cas pour un Européen (les Pahouins eux-mêmes reconnaissent souvent un étranger de fort loin). Il est possible que les Pahouins de l'époque de la conquête aient eu un régime plus riche en viande que celui des populations côtières et que celui de leurs descendants actuels : l'hippopotame a été exterminé, la densité du reste de la faune a beaucoup diminué, l'élevage même est en recul.

b) Vêtement, parures, marques corporelles

Le vêtement traditionnel tel que l'ont décrit les explorateurs n'existe pratiquement plus. On rencontre encore parfois, dans les villages reculés, le cache-sexe d'écorce de ficus battue, ôbôm, et le chapeau-perruque en peau de singe, afô'ôlô, qui constituaient la tenue quotidienne des hommes, avec la large ceinture de peau d'antilope, oses, soutenant une sorte de sporran, ainsi que l'étui du sabre. Les tenues de guerre et de parade sont devenues très rares ; elles comprenaient, outre un ôbôm teint en rouge, une séant de peau de chat-tigre, de drill ou autre animal à fourrure brillante, des franges molletières de la même fourrure et une sorte de cape faite de la peau d'un léopard ou d'un gorille, dont la tête formait parfois capuchon ; coiffure de perles, pendant sur les épaules ou tressées dans les cheveux, avec bouquet de plumes de touraco ou d'aigle-bateleur. L'armement comportait le sabre, fa, le poignard, ôtyeñ, à double tranchant tous les deux, la lance, akeñ, ou le fusil, ngal (l'arbalète, mfan, était plutôt une arme de chasse, l'arc, ngale, un jouet). L'armement défensif comprenait un bouclier oblong, ngu ou éndeñ, en lianes tressées ou en cuir, parfois fait d'une oreille d'éléphant. Même de nos jours les hommes n'aiment pas sortir sans arme, du moins dans les villages ; autrefois, ils étaient toujours armés. Les bijoux masculins comprenaient des bracelets de cuivre et des colliers de dents — dents de fauves, ou dents d'hommes — des anneaux de cuivre, de fer, d'ivoire ou de poil d'éléphant. Les « médicaments » de protection, mebiañ, étaient le plus souvent portés dans une corne d'antilope (céphalophus sylvicultrix), nla' zip, attachée au cou ou au poignet par un lien de cuir ou de peau de serpent, habitude qui subsiste encore. Les costumes de cérémonie des différents rites comprenaient des masques, des capes d'herbes sèches, de perles ou de cauris.

(1) Les sages-femmes, bebiali binga, conservent souvent l'habitude de modeler en l'allongeant le crâne des nouveau-nés. Par contre l'usage de la bande d'écorce comprimant la tête des bébés tend à se perdre.

Les femmes ne portaient qu'une sorte de double tablier d'herbe ou de feuillage, azem ou abui, fixé sur une ceinture de perles cylindriques en stéatite, nsanga ; bracelets, mekom, d'ivoire ou de cuivre, en forme de bobine, anneaux de cheville, bibal, en cuivre fondu, très lourds, énorme collier de cuivre fondu, nkembé, mis en place sur la fillette à son arrivée dans la belle-famille et qu'on ne pouvait retirer qu'après sa mort, en découpant les chairs, en chauffant le collier ou en attendant la décomposition. Tous ces bijoux appartenaient à la famille du mari et y restaient, même en cas de divorce ; c'était l'ésa qui les répartissait entre ses femmes et ses brus. Les bracelets plats étaient fabriqués avec les « neptunes » ou « bénarès » importés de la côte ; plus récemment on a fait, on fait encore, des bagues et bracelets avec des étuis de cartouche et du fil télégraphique. Mais l'origine des minkembé fondus reste mystérieuse ; la technique de la fonderie est inconnue ou oubliée, le cuivre, placérien ou filonien, très rare non seulement dans la zone d'habitat actuel des Pahouins, mais encore dans celle d'où ils semblent venir ; au surplus ces colliers, fort anciens, présentent une résistance à la corrosion et une patine très pâle qui semblent indiquer qu'il s'agit d'un alliage ; or, les bronziers les plus proches, les Bamum, ne fabriquent pas de colliers de ce type.

Le vêtement masculin actuel est le plus souvent de type européen, depuis le short et la chemisette jusqu'à la capote des surplus américains ; ceux qui portent chaussure l'ont européenne, de cuir ou de tennis suivant la fortune, ou bien à l'arabe — silifa, de l'anglais slipper = babouche, de fabrication haousa ou peul. A signaler des casques et képis en bois de parasolier, de fausses lunettes en éclats de « bambou » raphia. Dans les villages ou chez soi, pagne d'importation, roulé à la ceinture ou noué derrière le cou.

Les femmes portent, elles aussi, le pagne, éndelé, noué au cou ou roulé au-dessus des seins quand elles n'ont rien d'autre, roulé à la taille quand elles portent le « caraco-mission », éwoman (de l'anglais woman, semble-t-il). Le couvre-chef favori reste éyañese (anglais : handkerchief), le mouchoir de tête. De plus en plus, elles mettent également des robes coupées et cousues, à l'européenne, bizingi, souvent une sorte de combinaison ; pas de culotte, sauf quelques jeunes modernistes (qui les baptisent « caleçons ») ; garnitures périodiques internes faites de plantes médicinales. L'action des missions a considérablement étendu la notion de pudenda ; autrefois, seuls les individus pubères étaient astreints à dissimuler leur sexe. Les femmes le faisaient avec un soin particulier en dépit du caractère sommaire de leur costume ; la plus grande insulte qu'on pouvait leur faire était d'exposer leur vulve en public ; elles ne l'exposaient d'elles-mêmes que pour prononcer une malédiction. Aujourd'hui, la plupart d'entre elles dissimulent leurs seins (1) avec une vigilance presque égale ; toutefois, dans les villages traditionnalistes, les veuves reprennent le costume d'autrefois après leur réclusion ; pendant huit jours, parfois plus, elles portent l'ébui de feuilles qu'elles remplacent ensuite par un vieil ébém ou un sac de jute, laissant le buste et les cuisses nues, puis par un sac, ou une vieille robe kaki en forme de sac, avec un trou pour la tête et deux pour les bras.

(1) Le critère esthétique en la matière est en train de changer, dans les villes surtout, sous l'influence européenne (cinéma ?) : on ne voit plus que rarement les jeunes filles se les serrer avec une bande d'écorce ou d'étoffe pour les faire tomber.

Garçons et filles allaient nus autrefois jusqu'à l'apparition des premiers signes de la puberté, généralement des poils pubiens (h. : afañ ; f. : avul). Les garçons portaient un cache-sexe végétal spécial après la circoncision, en attendant la cicatrisation, mais n'étaient obligés de s'habiller ensuite que s'ils étaient déjà velus. Actuellement, ils sont vêtus dès l'âge scolaire et même avant dans les familles de chrétiens militants et la bourgeoisie urbaine.

Les marques corporelles sont tombées en désuétude, à l'exception de la circoncision. Les hommes ont cessé d'abord de se limer les incisives en pointe, les tatouages ont persisté plus longtemps, au Gabon jusqu'aux années précédant immédiatement la seconde guerre mondiale. Ils réapparaissaient actuellement dans la pègre urbaine et dans les associations syncrétistes. On tatouait sur la figure, le plus souvent entre les deux yeux, mais parfois sur les pommettes, des marques colorées en bleu avec un mélange de noir de fumée et de cendre végétale, ou en rouge à la poudre de padouk, bou ; ces marques pouvaient indiquer l'appartenance à un clan ou à une association, ou encore être apposées au cours ou à la suite d'un traitement médico-magique, ou enfin répondre à des considérations esthétiques. Il en allait de même des cicatrices en relief gravées sur la poitrine et l'abdomen, dont on dit aujourd'hui qu'elles étaient « pour faire nyanga » (joli, Coast English — origine haoussa?) : il se peut qu'on ait oublié certaines de leurs significations magiques. Les marques les plus importantes étaient les scarifications dorsales des initiations : une triple ligne d'incisions le long de la colonne vertébrale, s'élargissant en V à la nuque, pour le sé ; un dessin (secret) sur le sacrum pour le ngil ; trois traits horizontaux sur la nuque pour le ndéngé ; une ligne de « vaccins » sur la face intérieure des bras, des avant-bras et des cuisses et le long des carotides pour les serpents ; etc.

Les hommes portaient autrefois les cheveux tressés en nattes ou bien se rasaient les tempes et pariétaux en conservant une sorte de crête au sommet du crâne, rappelant le cimier du gorille ; il existait des coiffures spéciales propres aux différentes initiations. La moustache n'était portée que par les benya bélé, la barbe, en bouc, par quelques hommes âgés, souvent devins. De nos jours, les hommes portent généralement le cheveu court, et simplement démêlé ; la raie au milieu, à la mode de basse Nigéria, se portait beaucoup, vers 1948, chez les commis de factorerie alors que les anciens tirailleurs affectaient une coupe en brosse avec la barbe en collier. Beaucoup d'étudiants ont un petit bouc dont la mode gagne actuellement le reste de la jeunesse. Comme le port de la barbe était jusqu'à présent signe de deuil, on a parfois attaché une signification politique à cette mode (mais la barbe de deuil n'est pas taillée).

Les femmes usent d'une grande variété de coiffures : nattes tressées, damiers, « cornes », etc. En signe de deuil, on leur rase le crâne et elles n'ont pas le droit de peigner les cheveux qui repoussent avant la fin du deuil. La poussée de barbe et de moustache qui survient parfois à la ménopause est considérée comme un indice de sorcellerie. Les élégantes s'épilent les aisselles ; l'épilation du pubis est pratiquée également par quelques-unes, peut-être par élégance ou hygiène, peut-être pour des raisons rituelles (parenté entre le nom du grand rite féminin meungu et meul = toison pubienne de la femme ?). La poudre de padouk bou est encore employée, à la façon du henné, pour des raisons à la fois magiques et esthétiques, mais les fards européens, rouge à lèvres d'abord, l'ont supplantée chez les jeunes élégantes.

La propreté corporelle est fort en honneur : hommes et femmes se baignent souvent plusieurs fois par jour à grand renfort de savon ; mais il est courant de voir remettre sur le corps bien savonné un vêtement parfaitement crasseux : c'est sans doute que l'habitude de la propreté corporelle est bien plus ancienne que celle du port du vêtement d'étoffe.

c) Caractéristiques psychologiques

Comme la plupart des peuples connus, les Pahouins ont fort bonne et flatteuse opinion d'eux-mêmes ; ce qui est plus curieux, c'est que cette opinion est assez largement partagée par les observateurs étrangers : « Beaucoup plus intelligents et... plus actifs et laborieux que le commun des Nègres... ils sont aussi plus prévoyants... ils sont par rapport aux autres Nègres ce que les Aryens sont aux Sémites et aux Rouges... aptes à recevoir une certaine culture intellectuelle et à exercer toutes les industries », écrit Largeau, en 1900. Avant lui, Du Chaillu : « Proud and fierce warriors... clever and industrious... that will supersede... the degenerate tribes (of the Ogowe) », tandis que Horn, qui n'aimait guère les Français, considère les « Mpangwe » de 1875, comme les « Prussiens de l'Afrique », ce qui, dans son esprit et à cette époque, était un compliment. Plus tard, Trilles compare favorablement leur moralité à celle des Européens ; son collègue protestant Grebert parle de leur « individualisme », de leur « farouche amour de la liberté ». Le tableau comporte, il est vrai, des restrictions : « brusquerie », « brutale franchise », en même temps que « mauvaise foi », « rancune », « âpreté au gain » pour Largeau, « orgueil », « tendance à la thésaurisation », « entêtement », pour Grebert, « cruauté », « avarice » pour Du Chaillu, « superstition », pour Horn, alors que Compiègne considère qu'ils ont « déçu les espérances que mettait l'amiral de Langle (dans leur capacité d'assimilation) ». Il est frappant de constater que ces « défauts » peuvent tout aussi bien apparaître comme un aspect de leurs « qualités », tout de même que les accusations d' « anarchie » et d' « esprit frondeur » qui reviennent souvent dans les rapports administratifs.

Toutes ces appréciations restent, évidemment subjectives et non scientifiques, autant que celles que j'ai pu faire moi-même et qui me font dire que j'ai effectivement rencontré, parmi les Pahouins que j'ai fréquentés, une forte proportion de gens intelligents, actifs, fiers et souvent dotés d'un humour sarcastique dont on trouve un excellent témoignage dans plusieurs romans récents, tout comme dans les surnoms donnés, notamment, aux administrateurs, et chez les Boulou, les célèbres portraits-charges de D. Monewoso.

Je ne connais comme travaux scientifiques sur ce point que certaines enquêtes faites au Cameroun par M. Stoerkel, chef du Service de Psychotechnie et d'Orientation professionnelle, qui ne paraissent pas avoir été publiées. Ces enquêtes avaient été menées en 1949-1950, à l'occasion de la mise en chantier du barrage d'Édéa. Elles faisaient ressortir, chez les Pahouins du Sud-Cameroun, une adaptabilité motrice, une attentivité et une capacité d'intégration supérieures dans l'ensemble à celles des autres groupes ethniques de la même région, les sujets boulou se classant au premier rang des tribus pahouines sur ces points. Des évaluations de Q.I. et d'âge mental faites sur des écoliers et lycéens donnaient des résultats analogues en ce qui concerne la comparaison avec des Africains du même âge ; par contre la comparaison avec des enfants européens vivant au Cameroun laissait apparaître une certaine infériorité, dont il était cependant impossible de tirer des conclusions absolues, en raison de l'insuffisance des culture free tests employés à l'époque. Des tests projectifs passés dans les mêmes conditions décelaient des tendances schizoïdes avec une agressivité assez marquée et une fréquence assez importante de fixation œdipienne avec une certaine assimilation du Père au Blanc. La différence de niveau avec les tribus voisines était moins nette chez les lycéens que chez les écoliers, et moins nette chez ces derniers que chez les manœuvres d'Édéa. Il faut souligner que ces tests, et surtout les tests projectifs, portaient sur un nombre restreint d'individus placés dans une situation particulière, en dehors du milieu villageois, qui reste celui de la très grande majorité de leurs contribules. Je n'ai pas eu connaissance des résultats des enquêtes ultérieures.

En ce qui concerne la psychologie sociale, on est également réduit en grande partie aux appréciations subjectives, qui rejoignent celles mentionnées au début de ce paragraphe. Allégret signalait déjà, il y a un demi-siècle, un sentiment d'abandon, plus amer depuis que les Fang étaient au contact des Européens : certaines légendes rapportées par Trilles et Largeau, sur le thème de Jacob et Ésaü, les Blancs jouant le rôle du cadet usurpateur, viennent le confirmer. Balandier a bien décrit les réactions contemporaines à ce sentiment de frustration collective, tant dans sa Sociologie actuelle, que dans divers articles dont un portant le titre significatif de Les Fang, conquérants en disponibilité (nos 175 et 173).

Un autre trait frappant, également bien souligné par Balandier, est celui de la méfiance collective à l'égard des individus qui réussissent. Cela peut paraître contradictoire avec la constatation faite précédemment de l'individualisme des Pahouins, mais en réalité, c'est justement en bonne part de cet individualisme que doit résulter la méfiance à l'égard de l'autre individu (cf. Eza Boto, Ville cruelle, n° 182, les réactions du héros, Banda à l'égard du révolté, Koumé).

A signaler aussi l'importance psychologique et sociale d'akum, la richesse, et de biôm ; les biens, et, spécialement les biens d'importation : combinée avec la conception, encore mal étudiée, des rapports entre les sexes, elle explique dans une large mesure qu'il ne se soit pas constitué de véritable paysannat, mais bien plutôt une classe de planteurs non paysans, assez comparables, finalement, à certains colons européens. Les Pahouins restent très largement étrangers et voyageurs sur la terre, d'où l'importance des meubles (juridiques) à leurs yeux : il se produit toutefois sur ce point une évolution, décrite plus haut (supra, p. 74) qui mène à la consolidation de la propriété foncière : certaines réactions collectives, en matière de procédure foncière et domaniale, indiquent que nous assistons, au moins au Cameroun, à un véritable enracinement.

L'orgueil tribal reste très grand, allant jusqu'à une certaine hostilité entre les divers rameaux du groupe, mais la cohésion ethnique se retrouve face aux étrangers et donne sa véritable unité au bloc pahouin.

2) Cycle de la vie d'un individu

a) Conception, gestation, naissance

Une femme est considérée comme grosse, a nyoñeya abum, elle a pris ventre, lorsqu'elle a passé quatre cycles menstruels, a nji yene ngon, sans voir la lune. La conception étant supposée résulter du mélange du sperme, meyôm (même racine que nnôm, p. beyôm = mâle), et du sang menstruel, metyi me ngon, sang de fille ou sang lunaire, la durée de la grossesse se calcule à partir de la date où auraient dû commencer les dernières règles. La durée de neuf mois est considérée de nos jours comme normale, mais certains de mes informateurs m'ont indiqué des durées normales de huit ou dix ngon, ce mot (lit. lune ou fille) pouvant se rapporter aussi bien à un mois civil, qu'à une lunaison ou à un cycle menstruel ; il est difficile à un homme d'obtenir des précisions sur ce point, le sujet étant réservé aux femmes. Au surplus, des grossesses plus longues sont considérées comme possibles, bien que parfois suspectes : une aménorrhée due à un fibrome est une preuve de sorcellerie, le fibrome étant regardé comme un ésu. Le fœtus (dont le nom est secret, interdit, élyi, en tout cas pour les hommes, et probablement pour les femmes non initiées au mesungu) est censé prendre au début de la gestation la forme d'un lézard, tout comme le premier homme au moment de la création.

Dès que la grossesse est reconnue, les parents sont soumis à toutes sortes de bilyi, d'interdits, et d'abord doivent cesser d'avoir des rapports sexuels, qui provoqueraient soit l'avortement, soit la naissance d'un monstre. Ils ne doivent plus approcher d'un cadavre, ni assister à des funérailles. La femme doit s'abstenir de certains aliments, dont la consommation porterait tort à l'enfant : poisson, qui causerait des dermatoses, chauve-souris et canard, qui lui vaudraient les doigts palmés, serpent, qui le ferait naître sans membres ou avec des membres atrophiés, etc. Elle doit éviter de marcher à grands pas, d'enjamber des trous ou des fossés, cesser de porter un caleçon, si elle le faisait auparavant. Le mari ne doit rien clouer, ni lier, ce qui rendrait l'accouchement difficile, il doit également s'abstenir de certaines nourritures. Pendant la grossesse, la femme s'oint le ventre et les seins d'huile de palme mélangée de bon, porte une ceinture spéciale en liane ôkumu (sorte de solanée) et évite de sortir pieds nus.

Les fausses-couches « accidentelles » sont généralement attribuées à la rupture d'un interdit (nsem) et donnent lieu à des purifications rituelles ; tant que celles-ci ne sont pas accomplies la femme n'a pas le droit d'adresser la parole à un homme autre que son mari, au moins directement, ni de le regarder en face. Les fausses-couches « criminelles » attribuées à l'action des sorciers, ou plus exactement à un évu, qui peut appartenir à la femme elle-même, donnent lieu à des purifications plus rigoureuses, les lochies étant soumises à une sorte de « désinfection » magique avant d'être enterrées en secret sur un chemin où les passants les enjamberont à leur insu. L'avortement volontaire, extrêmement rare jadis, devient assez fréquent, en particulier chez les filles-mères de certaines familles chrétiennes ; on le provoque soit avec des emménagogues végétaux (on en extrairait un de la racine de papayer), soit en introduisant dans le col un laminaire d'écorce roulée (je n'ai pu savoir de quel arbre). On voit parfois des femmes provoquer l'avortement d'une de leurs co-épouses par jalousie.

Le premier accouchement, et souvent les suivants, ont lieu en général dans le village d'origine de la femme (jaß). Le mari ne peut remmener chez lui épouse et enfant qu'après paiement d'un véritable complément de dot, comportant notamment un cadeau important à la belle-mère, répété à chaque naissance ; d'où le proverbe « le panier de la belle-mère n'est jamais rempli ». La parturiente accouche assise, tenue par derrière par sa mère ou sa ntyi (belle-mère ou épouse de rang supérieur), assistée par une sage-femme, mbialé binga, autrefois dignitaire d'une association de femmes. L'enfant est reçu sur un matelas de feuilles de bananier. Le cordon est coupé avec un couteau spécial, peut-être le même que celui des circoncisions (1), et enterré sous un bananier dont les fruits seront ôlyi pour les gens du sexe opposé à celui de l'enfant. Le placenta est enterré par la mère elle-même, ou à son défaut par une femme de son sang, dans un endroit secret : plus tard, elle pourra dire à son enfant, comme une sorte de malédiction mineure, « Je sais où est ton placenta ». L'enfant est immédiatement enveloppé dans un pagne et couché près de sa mère, après avoir été présenté à son père si c'est un garçon. Le lendemain on l'oint d'huile tiède, ainsi que la mère et on lui fait prendre le sein.

(1) Ce n'est pas sûr : le circoncireur est un homme, on peut se demander s'il utiliserait un couteau de femme.

Les accouchements dystociques sont assez fréquents et la technique des sages-femmes extrêmement inégale : si certaines savent pratiquer la délivrance artificielle et même les retournements, la plupart se bornent à des massages et à des pratiques magiques, telles que placer une hache entre les jambes de la parturiente. Si celle-ci meurt en couches on soupçonne une conséquence de la sorcellerie ou un nsem grave, tel que l'inceste ; il arrivait autrefois que l'enfant, né viable, soit enterré avec elle. Un enfant mort-né fait également peser de graves soupçons sur sa mère qui peut être soumise à l'ordalie et contrainte à avouer la faute présumée avoir provoqué la mort du fœtus.

Certains auteurs ont prétendu que les fillettes étaient parfois sacrifiées à leur naissance comme sans intérêt pour le clan. Cela paraît très improbable, à moins que ces infanticides n'aient eu pour cause une accusation de sorcellerie, qui pouvait aussi bien s'appliquer à un garçon. Ce qui est exact, c'est qu'une femme qui n'enfanterait que des filles serait considérée comme victime d'un sort ou d'une rupture d'interdit.

La naissance de jumeaux est de bon augure : on considère qu'ils sont obligatoirement mie ou mmimie, c'est-à-dire, dépourvus d'évu (le même mot, mie, signifie l'accouchement, ou, plus exactement, le « travail » des couches). Les jumeaux recevaient un nom traditionnel variant avec les clans.

Les relevailles, ékulu mon, sortie de l'enfant, ont lieu trois mois après les couches, si tout s'est bien passé. La femme retourne se baigner à la rivière (jusque-là elle s'était lavée dans sa case), met des vêtements neufs offerts par son mari et recommence à cuisiner pour lui et à cultiver son champ. Il y a lieu à purification spéciale si l'enfant est mort dans l'intervalle. L'interdit des relations sexuelles subsiste tant que l'enfant est au sein : le rompre serait lui faire nyu meyôm, boire du sperme, ce qui pourrait provoquer sa mort.

Les soins post-parturiaux sont donnés par la mbialé binga, puis par la mère ou tante de la femme ou par sa ntyi. Ils consistent en injections vaginales et en garnitures externes puis internes au moyen de compresses végétales.

L'enfant ne peut recevoir de lait que de sa mère ou d'une femme du sang de sa mère, grand-mère ou tante maternelle ; si c'est impossible, il est condamné (tout au moins dans les milieux ruraux où l'on ignore l'usage du lait concentré). La pharmacopée traditionnelle possède d'ailleurs d'extraordinaires galactogènes végétaux, probablement sans équivalent dans la pharmacopée européenne.

b) Enfance

L'usage ancien était de ne nommer (yôlé) le bébé qu'au moment des relevailles ; jusque-là on le désignait généralement par le nom d'un petit animal, écureuil ou rat palmiste, par exemple. De nos jours, le nom est donné dès les premiers jours qui suivent la naissance, ne fût-ce qu'en raison des règlements d'état civil.

Le nom, jôé ou jui (signifie aussi nez, et ordre, commandement, autorité), comprend l'éyôlé, véritable nom propre à l'individu, et l'atinan, nom complémentaire, choisi parmi les biyôlé des ancêtres, selon des traditions claniques ou familiales en voie de disparition. S'y ajoutait autrefois un cognomen, mebalan (1) ou jôé mebalan (lit. : nom de salutation), parfois imposé au moment d'une initiation. Ce mebalan pouvait passer comme atinan à la génération suivante et devenir ensuite éyôlé : ainsi de tel chef surnommé Atyaminlam, destructeur de villages, dont le fils aîné s'appelle Mbutu Atyaminlam et le petit-fils Atyaminlam Mbutu.

Sous l'influence des habitudes françaises on assiste, depuis l'instauration d'une réglementation de l'état civil indigène, à une fixation des patronymes, notamment dans les milieux de fonctionnaires. Le patronyme nouveau peut être à l'origine l'atinan ou l'éyôlé ou le mebalan du père systématiquement donné comme éyôlé à tous ses enfants. En outre l'évangélisation a fait ajouter au jôé un prénom chrétien, qui tient parfois lieu d'éyôlé, ou est joint à un éyôlé indigène. On aura ainsi, par exemple, tel Ze Mvondo, surnommé Mebianga (l'homme aux drogues) à cause d'une enfance maladive, baptisé Salomon dans une mission chrétienne et devenant, par contraction, Salomon Mebianga ; il pourra soit donner son mebalan comme atinan à tous ses enfants, et l'on aura alors Menge Mebianga, Oyônô Mebianga, etc., avec en outre un prénom chrétien, soit le leur donner comme éyôlé, sans atinan, avec seulement un prénom chrétien. Il y a d'ailleurs d'autres solutions, question de mode bien souvent, depuis les noms d'hommes mondialement ou localement célèbres, morts ou vifs (de Gaulle, Pascalet, Victor Hugo) jusqu'à la francisation orthographique du jôé choisi comme patronyme (Aubame, Minguet, etc.).

J'ai fait allusion plus haut aux règles anciennes qui présidaient au choix des éléments du nom. L'éyôlé pouvait se rapporter à une circonstance de la naissance ou de la gestation ; avoir été indiqué par un songe ou par un devin ; être déprécatoire, pour rompre un mauvais sort ; résulter d'un interdit imposé au père ou à la mère, etc. Il pouvait aussi refléter le rang généalogique de celui qui le portait, encore que ce rôle ait été plutôt réservé à l'atinan, choisi parmi les biyôlé des ancêtres mâles et femelles des deux lignes ; de nos jours, la tendance est de donner toujours comme atinan l'éyôlé du père, parfois celui de la mère, notamment dans le cas des enfants naturels. D'après Trilles, le nom avait également une signification totémique, liée elle aussi, à la généalogie. Tout ceci est en grande partie oublié actuellement.

Au point de vue linguistique, la plupart des noms propres sont des noms communs, parfois emphatisés : mvôm (python), Mvômô ;

(1) Trilles traduit ce mot par « généalogie » ; lait mebalan signifie à la fois « répéter la généalogie » et « répéter la salutation », simplement parce que c'était effectivement la façon de se présenter protocolairement : c'est la généalogie du nouvel arrivant qui déterminait comment ses hôtes devaient le « saluer ». La généalogie proprement dite, le pedigree est ôdan, à rapprocher de ndan, indicatif tambouriné, devise.

afan (forêt), Afana ; zok (éléphant), Zo'o ; etc. ; ou encore des locutions : Ebéndeñ (e bee éndeñ) = porteur de bouclier ; Atyaminlam (a tyam minlam) = destructeur de villages ; etc. Ils sont généralement épicènes, avec des fréquences d'attribution plus grande dans l'un ou l'autre sexe : ainsi, il est assez rare de voir une fille s'appeler Ze ou un garçon Nyangono.

En tout cas le bébé, ntyen ou nkeñelé, n'est vraiment considéré comme un être humain que lorsqu'il a reçu un nom. Après les relevailles et jusqu'au sevrage, c'est-à-dire pendant dix-huit mois ou deux ans, sa mère l'emporte partout avec elle, dans un pli de son pagne ou sur la bandoulière ad hoc, doé ou awoé, puis, quand il peut se tenir seul, à califourchon sur sa hanche. Il n'est donné au nkeñelé à peu près aucune éducation ; la mère le met au sein dès qu'il pleure et ne cherche pas à discipliner ses excreta ; le père joue parfois avec les garçons, plus rarement avec les filles. Les grandes sœurs aident la mère à s'occuper du bébé, par exemple en le gardant à l'ombre pendant qu'elle travaille aux champs, ou en le portant à sa place quand elle est trop chargée.

Le sevrage est souvent assez progressif, l'enfant commençant à prendre de la nourriture solide alors qu'il est encore au sein, parfois avant l'âge d'un an. Il ne cesse toutefois d'être considéré comme un bébé, nkeñelé, pour devenir un enfant, mongô, que lorsqu'il marche et commence à parler couramment. A partir de ce moment, il doit apprendre à respecter ses interdits personnels et ceux du clan ; c'est souvent un grand frère ou une grande sœur qui sera chargé d'y veiller. La séparation des sexes s'accentue avec l'âge ; vers leur quatrième année, les enfants cessent de pouvoir contempler la nudité des adultes du sexe opposé ; vers la cinquième année, garçons et filles, bo'befam et bo'binga, cessent de jouer ensemble.

Les jeux se confondent en bonne part avec l'apprentissage des tâches futures : les filles jouent au ménage, parfois à la poupée, les garçons chassent le rat à l'arc, lancent de petites sagaies sur des cibles mobiles, posent des collets, etc. Mais il y a aussi des jeux « gratuits » : osselets, cal's craddles, colin-maillard, communs aux deux sexes, toupies-billes ndongo, en coquilles d'escargots, des garçons, émvala ou danse touche-pied des filles. Les enfants ont aussi leurs propres danses, différentes de celles des adultes et distinctes selon le sexe. Ils commencent à travailler dès qu'ils connaissent les interdits, les filles aidant leurs mères, les garçons commençant à apprendre les techniques masculines par la préparation des matériaux : effeuillage des folioles de « bambou » raphia, écorçage et pilonage des lianes destinées à la fabrication des cordes, grattage des peaux...

Les enfants d'un village jouent en bandes, mais l'apprentissage des techniques et l'enseignement des traditions se font surtout dans la famille, auprès du père ou de la mère, selon le sexe. Cependant, la préparation aux initiations et, de nos jours, le catéchisme réunissent tous les garçons ou toutes les filles du village.

La surveillance des adultes est assez légère ; ils exigent surtout que les enfants se tiennent à leur place et ne les dérangent pas. Au reste, ce sont principalement les enfants les plus âgés qui s'occupent des plus jeunes.

c) Adolescence

Garçons et filles partagent la case de leur mère jusqu'au début de l'adolescence, âge auquel les garçons vont habiter à part, autrefois dans le « corps de garde », aba, de nos jours dans une case de la « concession » paternelle. Jadis, les filles, mariées parfois avant leur naissance, rejoignaient le village de leur mari vers leur huitième année, ce qui est beaucoup plus rare aujourd'hui ; il reste assez fréquent de les voir aller vivre à cet âge chez une tante paternelle ou maternelle, ou chez une sœur mariée, à qui elles servent plus ou moins de domestiques jusqu'à leur nubilité, tout en continuant leur éducation. Il est également fréquent de voir des garçons aller vivre ainsi chez un parent domicilié plus près d'une école qu'ils ne l'étaient dans leur village (1).

Les bongô deviennent ndôman, jeune homme, ou ngon, jeune fille, aux approches de la puberté. Le passage est marqué chez les garçons par la circoncision, alyi'i alyel, parfois suivie autrefois de la première initiation, bekungu. La circoncision est pratiquée entre six et douze ans, le plus souvent autour de la dixième année. De nos jours, elle se fait souvent au dispensaire, alors qu'autrefois elle donnait lieu à une cérémonie familiale et villageoise. Les futurs circoncis se préparaient à la cérémonie par une retraite assez brève (une quinzaine) au cours de laquelle ils étaient astreints à un régime alimentaire végétarien, sans sel ni condiments, pour « rafraîchir le sang » ; ils recevaient des leçons d'éducation sexuelle données par le ngengañ, devin-guérisseur, chargé de l'opération, tandis que les minlôl, aînés, vérifiaient leur connaissance des mebalan, « salutations » ou généalogies : c'est qu'en effet, la circoncision levait l'interdit du coït, faisant apparaître le danger d'un inceste involontaire s'ils avaient mal connu leurs liens de parenté. Les femmes n'avaient pas le droit d'assister à l'opération, que le ngengañ pratiquait à l'aide d'un rasoir spécial, cautérisant la plaie avec une décoction de piment. Le garçon était tenu par son père qui prononçait la formule levant l'interdit du coït. Le prépuce était généralement enterré sous un arbre, tantôt bananier, tantôt arbre fixé par la tradition du clan ou de la lignée, peut-être, si l'on suit Trilles, pour des raisons totémiques. On le conservait parfois pour des usages magiques. Tout le temps que durait la cicatrisation, le circoncis ne pouvait porter d'autre vêtement qu'un cache-sexe végétal spécial, renouvelé tous les jours ; pendant cette période, aucune femme ne devait lui adresser la parole ou le toucher, ou toucher son cache-sexe ; il en profitait pour chaparder de la nourriture ou de menus objets.

(1) Mais le motif de la proximité de l'école n'explique pas tout : c'est seulement une cause supplémentaire d'absences. En effet, une étude faite dans des centres urbains munis d'écoles d'un bon niveau montre que 30 % des enfants vivent hors du foyer paternel, chez des oncles ou des grands-parents. Le père, quelle que soit son opinion personnelle, ne pourrait guère refuser son fils à certains de ses parents qui exprimeraient le désir de le garder quelque temps avec eux. (J. B.)

La cicatrisation achevée, il ne pouvait plus rester nu en public. Tout ceci n'est plus que partiellement en usage ; en outre, l'âge de l'opération ayant été assez généralement avancé, on voit souvent des circoncis impubères circuler nus dans les villages (1). D'après Trilles et Largeau, certains jeunes gens restaient autrefois minsôsôl, incirconcis, jusqu'à ce qu'ils aient tué leur premier ennemi. Actuellement, tous les jeunes gens sont circoncis, même les chrétiens ; les missions n'ont d'ailleurs que rarement essayé de s'opposer à la circoncision, et toujours sans succès.

Après la circoncision, le ndôman pouvait avoir des rapports sexuels et manger de certains aliments qui lui étaient interdits auparavant. Il allait vivre dans l'aba avec les autres jeunes gens et se préparait aux initiations ultérieures tout en commençant à participer pleinement aux activités masculines, travail et jeux. L'initiation bekungu (fañ : bekhun ?) venant juste après la circoncision n'était pas d'usage général. Mon impression personnelle est qu'il s'agissait non pas d'un rite tribal ou clanique comme sô, mais d'une association de devins ou voyants ne s'adressant qu'à des individus doués, peut-être en rapport avec le rite ndôngô, réservé aux adultes, dont les tatouages rituels paraissent identiques.

Pour la mo'minga qui devient pubère, il n'existe pas d'étape analogue à la circoncision. En dépit des dires de Trilles, l'excision n'a jamais été, semble-t-il, utilisée autrement que comme une peine frappant certains adultères ou certains incestes bénins. Il ne faut pas oublier que la fillette allait vivre très tôt dans sa belle-famille et qu'elle était déflorée sitôt nubile ; elle ne restait élenan, c'est-à-dire fille pubère et non mariée que très rarement et très peu de temps. On peut presque dire que son adolescence était télescopée entre son enfance et son accession à la féminité, marquée par le rite mevungu.

Cette phase d'adolescence est prolongée actuellement par la réglementation fixant l'âge nubile à quatorze ans (la puberté paraissant survenir généralement pendant la douzième année) par la fréquentation scolaire et par la transformation du système de la « dot ». La plupart de mes amis d'un certain âge voient là la raison d'une crise d'immoralité qu'ils s'exagèrent peut-être un peu.

Il semble bien, pourtant, que les premières règles aient été marquées par une cérémonie à laquelle ne prenaient part que des femmes, mais il ne s'agissait peut-être que d'un préliminaire de l'initiation mevungu, dont on ne sait à peu près rien. Reste que le coït est interdit aux filles impubères, alors que les célibataires déjà réglées jouissent d'une liberté sexuelle de fait très grande, même dans les milieux christianisés. On doit, toutefois, reconnaître qu'il n'est que trop fréquent, surtout dans les écoles, de rencontrer des fillettes déflorées avant la puberté, alors qu'il semble bien que les garçons attendent encore d'être circoncis pour faire leurs premières armes (on voit des parents, inquiets de la « sagesse » de leur fils, leur faire prendre des aphrodisiaques pour les y encourager).

(1) Un chef Ntoumou protestant d'Ambam m'a déclaré avoir avancé la date de circoncision de ses enfants pour pouvoir les envoyer à l'école régionale sans qu'ils courent le risque, loin de sa surveillance, de briser un interdit sexual ou simplement des incirconcis.

d) Passage à l'âge adulte

Le ndôman n'est pas encore une vraie personne, nya môlô ; sans doute prend-il part aux travaux des hommes, à la chasse et aux défrichements, mais il n'est pas encore admis aux fonctions essentielles de l'homme fait : culte, guerre et mariage. Il ne l'était autrefois qu'après la grande initiation tribale, le sô. Sô est le nom d'une grande antilope rouge, cephalophus castoneus, abondante en forêt et dans les galeries de la savane-parc. Sa viande est élyi, interdite, aux non-initiés, bibis, et, a fortiori, aux femmes. Il peut sembler curieux que Trilles n'en parle pas dans Le totémisme chez les Fang, alors que le sô paraît bien être un des plus importants totems tribaux. Il faut noter, à cet égard, que le rite sô, répandu chez tous les Pahouins du Cameroun, Beti compris, et chez ceux du Woleu-Ntem, semble disparaître quelque part entre Mitzik et Ndjolé encore qu'on en retrouve des détails dans l'initiation au biéri, qui n'en est, au fond, qu'une annexe. Il se serait donc désintégré en même temps que la structure des megoñ, pour être relevé, dans l'extrême-Sud par le bwiti, déjà observé par Trilles, et qui remonte actuellement vers le Nord. Il faut, toutefois, signaler que ce que le même Trilles décrit sous le nom de bawu pourrait bien être le sô.

Les cérémonies d'initiations ont été filmées en 1935 chez les Eton de Saa ; le film est conservé au Musée de l'Homme. Bertaut (n° 110) donne une description très complète des formes extérieures de l'initiation ; Stoll, une interprétation de sa symbolique (n° 84).

L'initiation avait lieu tous les trois ans environ (tous les sept mimbu ... ?) ; Bertaut affirme qu'on pouvait organiser une cérémonie après un événement grave dans le village. Elle durait trois mois entiers (un an d'après Stoll, qui compte les cérémonies préparatoires à l'initiation proprement dite et la période qui la suit) et coûtait fort cher en sacrifices aux parents des initiés et surtout au chef de l'initiation, le nkpwé sô (juge du sô, lit. : abatteur du sô), aîné choisi parmi les plus riches et considérés : à ce point de vue, on peut penser que le rite concourait à ce désir de nivellement des fortunes qui paraît avoir été une constante de la société pahouine. Le nkpwé sô ne dirigeait pas lui-même la cérémonie ; il en était l'initiateur, le responsable, mais le célébrant était un devin, le mfek sô, « sage du sô » ou « mesureur du sô » ou « sac du sô », si on change de ton (vek = viser, calculer, deviner, mesurer).

Le thème général du rite, dont la description donnée ci-dessous est très incomplète, était la mort du sô, awu sô, mangé ensuite par les initiés (sa viande était interdite à tous autres). Les cérémonies commençaient par une purification générale du village et procédaient par quatre sacrifices successifs jusqu'à la mort du sô et à la communion à sa chair. Les impétrants, mvôn, passaient par une série d'épreuves et d'instructions à caractère guerrier et sexuel, à l'issue desquelles ils étaient devenus de vraies personnes, benya bôlô, en même temps que de vrais membres de la société.

Les jeunes gens recevaient une instruction préliminaire dans leur famille dès la circoncision, mais il s'agissait là de préparation au rite et non du rite lui-même. Les cérémonies préparatoires à l'initiation commençaient trois mois avant celle-ci, par la confession publique du nkpwé sô, faite devant tout le village, le nkpwé sô se tenant dos à dos avec un autre dignitaire « agissant comme lui, remuant les lèvres pendant qu'il parle et piétinant comme lui une vieille calebasse » (Stoll), dont les morceaux, après avoir servi à recueillir le sang du premier sacrifice dont on aspergeait le nkpwé sô et tous les minkpwangôs (initiés) du village, étaient jetés dans la brousse au cri de : « Effacé, effacé » (andim, à rapprocher de la forme mendim = eau). Les initiés se réunissaient ensuite hors du village, pour désigner les bevôn destinés à ku sô (lit. : tomber sô) dans cette promotion. Ces beku étaient alors assujettis à une première retraite de vingt jours en forêt, au cours de laquelle ils construisaient l'aba sô, sanctuaire contenant une estrade où l'on accédait par trois échelles, et dont l'accès était interdit à tous les non-initiés autres que les bevôn. Le mfek sô commençait à leur enseigner leurs devoirs d'initiés et procédait à l'élimination de ceux qui avaient « le cœur faible ». A l'issue de cette retraite, les bevôn revenaient en procession au village où ils recevaient de leurs parents des cadeaux par séries de neuf, chiffre rituel du sô.

Commençait alors la seconde phase de l'initiation, étyi'a bilé bi sô, l'abattage des arbres du sô. Le nkpwé sô fournissait les éléments d'un repas rituel, comprenant une soupe dans laquelle le mfek sô faisait cuire des mebiañ destinés à révéler s'il ne se trouvait pas de beyem (porteurs d'évu) parmi les bevôn ; aucun relief de ce repas ne devait subsister. Les bevôn étaient ensuite couchés dans un fossé où ils étaient aspergés d'une décoction spéciale, puis enjambés neuf fois par les femmes nubiles et non ménopausées du village. Les minkpwangôs se réunissaient ensuite pour un sacrifice secret et un repas préparé dans la même marmite qui avait servi au repas des bevôn, appelée nlak sô (corne du sô — ésotériquement testicule, d'après Stoll). Le nkpwé sô déféquait ensuite dans cette marmite qui était enterrée dans un endroit secret près du sanctuaire. Les bevôn se livraient alors à un combat simulé, à l'issue duquel le nkpwé sô distribuait des chèvres à leurs familles. Les initiés partaient alors en forêt couper la perche njôm, choisie, au dire d'Allégret par une femme dont le mari n'avait pas de chance à la chasse, et la plaçaient sur deux fourches plantées devant le sanctuaire, à proximité du nlak sô. Pendant ce temps, les bevôn allaient couper les « bambous » de raphia destinés à la confection de l'ésam sô, enceinte entourant le njôm. Ils en revenaient en file indienne, le « major » de promotion (ôsu xua) en tête, et plantaient des « bambous » en triangle ouvert vers l'arrière du njôm, les reliant entre eux par une tresse de feuilles de raphia dont un initié enfouissait l'extrémité dans le nlak sô. Pendant leur défilé auquel les femmes et les non-initiés n'avaient pas le droit d'assister, ils étaient battus de verges par les initiés.

Ils allaient ensuite à la « pêche au crabe » qui consistait en une immersion dans l'eau pimentée, début de la troisième phase qui continuait par une retraite en forêt au cours de laquelle les bevôn se livraient, peints en blanc, à une chasse rituelle.

Pendant ce temps, les initiés fermaient l'ésam sô de deux lianes, représentant le python, mvôm, et le dendraspis, ayañ. Les bevôn étaient alors soumis à l'épreuve de l'arbre aux fourmis, où on les faisait grimper à l'arbre angakomo sur lequel vivent des fourmis tisserandes dont la piqûre est très douloureuse. Ils passaient ensuite la nuit dans l'ésam sô, couchés sur des épines et frottés de jus de piment, pendant que les initiés masqués les battaient et sonnaient de la trompe pour les empêcher de dormir. Ils partaient le lendemain pour une tournée de quête dans les villages apparentés ou alliés aux leurs, pendant que le mfek sô et les initiés gravaient et sculptaient le njôm suivant les traditions du clan. Les dessins devaient être expliqués aux bevôn pendant la phase suivante, abele njôm, le dressage, l'érection du njôm.

Au retour de la tournée de quête, les bevôn étaient tatoués par le mfek sô : trois lignes d'incisions tout le long de l'échine, les deux externes s'écartant vers le haut, à la façon du « harnais » du sô, et une petite marque triangulaire à la nuque, peut-être la même que celle du ndôngô. Ils revêtaient alors une sorte de jupe en fibres de raphia, se peignaient de nouveau en blanc et participaient à une danse publique, pendant laquelle le « major » montait à califourchon sur le njôm, suivi par les autres bevôn. Celui qui tombait était rejeté par le sô et devait s'expatrier. Après un autre sacrifice les bevôn étaient à nouveau enfermés dans l'ésam sô où les initiés avaient creusé un boyau étroit, recouvert d'un clayonnage et de terre, et dont le fond était rempli d'épines, de piment écrasé et de fourmis guerrières. Les bevôn recevaient les dernières instructions, puis, après s'être baignés dans la boue en grognant comme des porcs, devaient traverser en rampant le boyau, préalablement enfumé, pendant que les minkpwangôs les frappaient et les piquaient avec leurs sagaies à travers le plafond ; le mvôn qui se redressait ou tentait de fuir était immédiatement assommé par des captifs placés à l'extérieur de l'enceinte. C'était la fin de la troisième phase, la « mort du sô », awu sô, proprement dite.

Une fois sortis de l'ésam les bevôn devaient se montrer agressifs, taquins, houspiller les autres villageois, voler de la nourriture, des poulets, etc., arracher les barrières, et, généralement, se conduire comme des bêtes sauvages. Cette période durait quelques jours, précédant la sortie du sô, akui sô, procession de la promotion en costume de guerre, et portant les lances gravées de la marque distinctive, ndem, du clan consacrées au cours de l'initiation, suivie d'un banquet. Pendant le mbu (six mois) qui suivait les nouveaux initiés restaient soumis à certains interdits sexuels et alimentaires dont ils pouvaient être relevés s'ils tuaient un homme pendant cette période. Au bout de ce délai, ils partaient, peints en blanc, pour une retraite d'une nuit d'où ils revenaient peints en rouge, faisant neuf fois le tour du village en procession, après quoi ils allaient se baigner dans un ruisseau où la pêche était ensuite interdite, jusqu'à l'initiation de la promotion suivante, semble-t-il.

Le jeune homme ainsi initié devenait un mone wôsô, enfant de la mort du sô (wu = mourir ; wôé = tuer), apte désormais au mariage qui en ferait un homme complet, nya môlô. Il pouvait être initié par son père au culte familial, dont il ne connaissait jusque-là que des aspects extérieurs : on lui apprenait à reconnaître les crânes des ancêtres, renfermés dans le panier du biéti, à entrer en rapport avec eux au moyen de l'herbe stupéfiante alan ; cet enseignement était parfois donné collectivement dans le rite melan, qui, d'après Stoll serait complémentaire du sô, celui-ci étant androgynique, alors que melan serait gynandrique. Sô donnerait la force créatrice, melan la fécondité, la richesse. Melan présente un caractère médical absent de sô. La participation des femmes y est plus importante. Certains de ses éléments paraissent avoir subsisté jusqu'à nos jours, alors que les dernières cérémonies de sô ont dû avoir lieu vers 1940. Stoll en donne une description assez complète dans La tonétique des langues bantu... du Cameroun (nº 84).

Le rite féminin correspondant au sô est mevungu, très mal connu pour les motifs indiqués précédemment. Ce n'était pas un rite clanique, puisque les femmes d'un village, en raison de la règle d'exogamie, appartenaient à des clans différents. Il servait, comme sô, à faire des initiées des femmes accomplies, benya bengono ou benya binga, fécondes, exemptes d'évu et disciplinées, et, peut-être, accessoirement, à créer un lien communautaire entre les femmes d'un village, destiné à suppléer l'absence de lien clanique entre elles.

Les initiés des deux sexes étaient relevés de nombreux interdits alimentaires généraux. Ils étaient liés entre eux par une obligation d'entraide renforçant et même transcendant celle de la fraternité clanique. La disparition des initiations a certainement laissé un vide que les Pahouins contemporains cherchent à combler : les nouveaux rites syncrétistes paraissent y arriver mieux que les églises et les partis politiques.

e) Vieillesse

Le nya môlô, la nya minga sont des gens en pleine possession de leurs moyens, pleinement aptes à remplir leur rôle social. Leur prestige est à la mesure de leurs aptitudes ; quand ils cessent d'être de « vrais » hommes ou de « vraies » femmes, la société tend à se désintéresser d'eux, à les mettre à l'écart. Un vieillard peut pallier la diminution de ses forces physiques par sa richesse ou par son art magique ; la vieille femme, elle, ne possède rien et court facilement le risque d'une accusation de sorcellerie. Son déclin est plus rapide que celui de l'homme : il commence quand cessent sa fécondité et son attrait physique, alors que l'homme atteint l'acmé de sa carrière lorsqu'il est père de grands fils, vivant avec lui et acceptant son autorité. Mais celle-ci ne dure qu'autant que l'homme est capable de « se défendre », au sens quasi argotique du mot. De nos jours, la facilité d'éclatement géographique des villages et des familles-étendues tend souvent à accélérer ce déclin que certains minkukum pallient grâce à la grande polygamie qui leur permet de garder une puissance économique.

La condition des vieillards sans enfants est extrêmement dure, même dans les zones christianisées, surtout celle des veuves qui, dans leur belle-famille, ne bénéficient même pas de l'obligation d'entraide clanique. On a vu jadis des vieillards abandonnés en forêt au cours des migrations, on en voit encore laissés seuls dans les bilik, villages désertés, lorsque le gros du village va, par exemple, s'installer sur la route. Les missions religieuses ont essayé, avec des résultats inégaux, d'améliorer le sort des vieux sans enfants ; certaines « sociétés » claniques ont agi aussi dans ce sens, mais tout cela ne va pas très loin : les vieux acceptent d'ailleurs leur sort et se plaisantent parfois eux-mêmes avec cette ironie assez sarcastique qui paraît une des caractéristiques mentales du groupe. Il arrive que des vieillards se suicident « par lassitude de vivre ». D'après Trilles, certains se faisaient brûler volontairement. D'après Largeau, ce sont les héritiers qui en prenaient l'initiative, pour ouvrir la succession.

Les moins malheureux des vieillards sont ceux qui ont des enfants, et surtout des fils (1), les filles vivant généralement avec leur belle-famille. Il existe une véritable obligation alimentaire d'enfant à parent, sanctionnée par la malédiction paternelle ou maternelle en cas de non-exécution.

f) La mort et l'au-delà

Tout décès est suspect, mais celui d'un nya mölö plus qu'aucun autre : un nya mölö ne meurt pas, quelqu'un le tue, qui peut n'être autre que lui-même. La mort d'un homme considéré était donc toujours suivie d'une autopsie : le ngengañ ouvrait le corps et examinait les viscères thoraciques, nlem, siège de l'intelligence et de la volonté, pour y rechercher des traces de sorcellerie, soit du fait d'autrui, soit du fait du mort, son évu s'étant retourné contre lui ou ayant été tué lors d'une opération maléfique. Il semble avoir existé aussi un procédé magique, ówömölö, permettant de ressusciter le mort le temps de l'interroger sur les causes de sa mort.

Si l'autopsie révélait que le défunt étant nnem, sorcier, on brûlait son corps, ou bien on le jetait dans un fleuve important, ou encore on l'enterrait à un carrefour loin du village. S'il était mie, dépourvu d'évu, on procédait aux funérailles normales. Le corps, lavé à l'eau chaude, massé et assoupli, puis oint de boa délayé dans l'huile de palme, et enveloppé dans un pagne blanc, était veillé par des hommes armés pendant qu'on préparait la fosse et qu'on alertait les parents et alliés des villages voisins. Les compagnons d'initiation du mort venaient enlever le cadavre sur un brancard-cercueil en écorce (1) et dansaient autour de lui la danse funèbre propre à leur association, à laquelle les femmes ne devaient pas assister : enfermées dans les cases, elles se lamentaient sur le mode aigu. La fosse était étroite et assez profonde, le fond garni d'un plancher ou d'un lit de « bambou », sur lequel on déposait le mort, couché sur le dos, les pieds tournés vers l'Ouest (à proximité d'un fleuve la fosse était creusée parallèlement au courant, les pieds vers l'aval — nké = aval ou Ouest). On construisait au-dessus un plafond de rondins sur lequel on déposait, après les avoir « tués » en les brisant ceux des objets personnels du mort, armes, instruments et bijoux, qui ne fasaient pas partie du patrimoine familial. On sacrifiait parfois, assez rarement, une de ses femmes pour l'accompagner (il se peut qu'on ait confondu l'exécution de femmes convaincues d'avoir tué leur mari avec un sacrifice de ce genre). La fosse était comblée et recouverte d'un tumulus, parfois en ménageant une cheminée à la tête pour « nourrir » le défunt. Les tombes de notables étaient creusées dans leur case ou devant elle, celles des gens du commun en dehors du village, en lisière de la forêt. On montait la garde sur celles des chefs de famile pour empêcher des étrangers de s'emparer de leur crâne ; celui-ci était détaché par l'héritier privilégié, njian, remplaçant, qui le plaçait avec ceux des autres ancêtres dans l'arche du biéti, après l'avoir tint au baa et avoir sculpté une statue en parasolier peinte en blanc, renfermant des cheveux et une phalange du mort, qu'on plaçait sur l'autel du biéti. Les tibias étaient prélevés pour le rite ngil.

(1) Cf. pour un exemple de relations entre mère et fils, Eza Boto, Ville cruelle, n° 182.

Les benya binga, les matrones, étaient enterrées par les initiées du mevungu, au cours d'une cérémonie à laquelle les hommes n'assistaient pas. Les femmes du commun l'étaient par leurs co-épouses et les femmes de leur belle-famille. Les bongô et bkeñelé étaient enterrées en famille, sans cérémonie autre que le deuil de leur mère.

Lorsqu'on trouvait sur le cadavre des traces de maléfices, le ngengaß ou mvimvi'i recourait à la divination pour trouver le coupable présumé qu'on soumettait à l'ordalie par des herbes amères. D'une façon générale, les femmes étaient systématiquement soumises à l'ordalie du piment ou des fourmis pour leur faire avouer non seulement la part qu'elles pouvaient avoir prise à la mort de leur mari, mais aussi leurs adultères. Lorsqu'on ne trouvait pas de responsable à la mort d'un individu mie (non sorcier), on concluait qu'il était victime d'un nsem, bris d'interdit, parfois inconscient. Quelle qu'ait été la cause du décès, maléfice, nsem, choc en retour d'un acte de sorcellerie, il y avait toujours lieu à purification, généralement par un sacrifice à la fin du deuil, mepep.

(1) Le cercueil en écorce de ficus rappelle la coutume, empruntée aux Pygmées, de placer le cadavre des chefs dans un arbre creux, ou entre les contreforts de certains grands arbres.

Le ficus à un rôle magique important. On en plantait un à la fondation d'un nouveau village, dont on emportait les boutures en cas de migration. (J. B.)

La durée de celui-ci était, et même est encore, d'un mbu, mais aujourd'hui il est moins rigoureux. Les femmes du mort étaient autrefois recluses nues dans sa case pendant un mois, la première épouse devant coucher sous son lit ; on leur rasait la tête et tous les poils, on les peignait en blanc avec de la cendre et on leur interdisait de se laver ou de se coiffer jusqu'à la fin du deuil. Les frères et enfants du mort se rasaient la tête et laissaient pousser leur barbe sans la tailler ni la peigner ; ils se peignaient le front en blanc et ne portaient que de vieux vêtements ; ils étaient astreints à une série d'interdits : certains modes de chasse, la consommation de certains gibiers (peut-être le totem individuel du défunt ?), tout départ en voyage, la circoncision des enfants du mort, l'usage d'un lit... La fin du deuil était marquée par un sacrifice et, souvent, par une cérémonie melan, pour entrer en communication avec le défunt.

Le deuil le plus rigoureux était observé pour la mort d'un ésa, d'un homme de la classe des pères ; il l'était moins pour un monyañ et à peine pour un mongó. En ce qui concerne les femmes, un homme n'observait de grand deuil que pour sa mère et sa première épouse ; encore s'agissait-il de deuil familial, alors que la mort d'un homme entraînait un deuil villageois. Toutefois, une épidémie était suivie d'un deuil renforcé ; quand son auteur présumé était identifié, on ne se contentait pas de lui faire payer l'avulan, compensation, on le brûlait ou le noyait (sa famille immédiate restait tenue de l'avulan) et on faisait ensuite une purification générale.

Tout ceci a évidemment changé aujourd'hui, mais peut-être moins qu'on ne le pense : les tribunaux connaissent tous les ans de plusieurs affaires d'ordalies après décès, de mutilations de cadavres qui sont en réalité des autopsies, d'extorsions de fonds qui sont le paiement de compensations coutumières imposées au « responsable » d'un décès ; or, en ces matières, on peut estimer que les trois quarts des causes ne parviennent jamais devant les tribunaux européens... Les rites funéraires se sont pourtant allégés et colorés d'influences chrétiennes, même lorsque le défunt s'était accroché jusqu'au bout aux croyances anciennes : ses femmes ou ses enfants appellent généralement un nkal foé (annonce-nouvelle = catéchiste) pour dire les prières des morts et faire chanter psaume ou cantique. L'ancienne civière cylindrique d'écorce est remplacée par le cercueil européen de planches, même, de plus en plus, pour les femmes et les enfants ; les fosses des gens riches ont des parois maçonnées et sont recouvertes d'une dalle de béton portant leur nom, la date du décès et une inscription pieuse, ou bien d'un petit parterre fleuri, entouré de briques ou de culs de bouteille, avec une stèle ou croix au chevet. On ne démolit plus la case du mort, surtout si elle est « en dur », et on ne brise plus ses affaires personnelles ; le corps, souvent, est simplement lavé et vêtu de vêtements européens au lieu d'être oint de baa ; le suaire blanc subsiste. Dans les familles chrétiennes, les femmes participent à la veillée des morts masculins et assistent à leur enterrement ; les hommes assistent aux enterrements de femmes mais participent rarement à la veillée. Dans beaucoup de villages, on trouve des cimetières confessionnels séparés.

Le deuil est moins sévère et se porte assez souvent à l'européenne avec crêpe et cravate noire pour les hommes ; dans les villages, les veuves restent assez maltraitées (cf. supra, p. 102), mais leur séquestration est réduite à une semaine et elles sont autorisées à se laver au bout d'un mois ou deux. La plupart des interdits de la période de deuil sont tombés en désuétude et la fin du deuil est marquée par une fête de famille qui tient plus du banquet de bout-de-l'an de certaines provinces françaises que des anciens rites purificatoires.

La mort, dans la conception coutumière, n'est peut-être pas tant la cessation de la vie que la dissociation de la personnalité. Enyiñ, la vie, vient du verbe nyiñ qui signifie plutôt « survivre » qu' « être en vie » : une sorte de dynamisme opposé au statique lo, labe = être, exister, rester, etc.

Le corps, nyul, ou nyôl, est périssable et corruptible ; il est le support des autres éléments de la personnalité et d'abord du nsisim ou nsisiñ, ombre ou double immatériel du corps. Le cœur et les poumons, nlem, sont le siège de l'intelligence et des sentiments, et d'abord du sentiment du bien et du mal, de la personnalité morale et mentale ; c'est par le nlem qu'on porte atteinte à l'esprit d'une personne, qu'on la rend folle par exemple ; les beyem font di nlem, manger le nlem, de leurs victimes par leur éeur ; le nlem survit passagèrement au mort. Le nsisim semble immortel. Le souffle, avebe (de vebe, respirer, dérivé de vee = être vivant, éveillé) est caractéristique de la vie physiologique (1).

La force, tyé, tyi, kié ou ki, est en quelque sorte extérieure à l'individu, indépendante de lui, mais c'est elle qui assure la cohésion des éléments de la personnalité ; elle paraît localisée spécialement dans le nlem (viscères thoraciques) et dans le boo, cerveau, qui serait le siège de l'agir (verbe bo = faire, agir), d'où l'importance des crânes dans le culte des ancêtres, biéti. Ngul, qu'on traduit également par « force » est plutôt la capacité ou le pouvoir, la faculté d'utiliser la tyi. Celle-ci est impersonnelle, préexiste et survit à l'individu qui peut, pendant sa vie la dépenser ou l'augmenter : c'est la base de la magie et de la sorcellerie, la tyi n'étant ni bonne ni mauvaise en soi. Tout ce qui existe a de la tyi, y compris les morts ; mais les êtres vivants en ont plus que les êtres inanimés et les hommes plus que les autres êtres vivants. Sacrifices et interdits tournent autour de cette notion, ce qu'indique bien le vocabulaire : élyi = interdit, melyi = sang ; alyi = = œuf ; tyik = couper, tuer, ordonner, etc. (cf. supra, p. 22). Les défunts conservent une certaine quantité de force, ce qui les rend à la fois potentiellement dangereux et potentiellement utilisables.

Le nom, jôé, jui, préexiste et survit lui aussi à l'individu qu'il caractérise en le distinguant ; d'où les liens spéciaux entre bemôé, homonymes ; d'où la nécessité de connaître le nom d'un individu pour pouvoir l'ensorceler, etc. Le mort garde son nom jusqu'à ce qu'on le donne à un de ses descendants, en la personne duquel il sera plutôt répété que réincarné. Rappelons que jôé signifie aussi autorité, notion indissociable de celle de nom.

(1) Chez les Ewôndo le souffle éwundu (bulu : éwuhulu = vent) est caractéristique de l'être humain, comme le nsisim : les animaux sont dépourvus de l'un et de l'autre, c'est pourquoi on peut les manger. (J. B.)

La cessation des fonctions vitales, awu, de wu, mourir, n'est pas considérée comme obligatoirement définitive : catalepsie, coma profond, anesthésie et mort véritable sont confondus. Il est évident que si le corps est endommagé pendant l'awu, le retour à la vie est impossible. Un fantôme, kôn (fañ : khun), n'est pas forcément physiquement mort ; un des maléfices les plus redoutés, auquel les Ndôñ passent pour exceller particulièrement, consiste à séparer un individu de son nsisim, ombre ou double, en lui donnant l'apparence de la mort physique, puis à réveiller son corps qui obéit désormais mécaniquement aux ordres du sorcier et peut être utilisé par celui-ci à toutes fins, soit pour aller tuer ou voler, soit, plus prosaïquement, pour travailler ses plantations. Les individus ainsi transformés en bekôn se reconnaissent à leur pâleur, à leurs gestes saccadés et à leur expression hagarde ; ils ne survivent que quelques mois à l'opération, avant de mourir dans une angoisse physique et morale épouvantable (1).

La mort totale ne se produit qu'un certain temps après la cessation des fonctions vitales et les rites funéraires semblent avoir eu pour but d'achever de détacher l'individu de sa dépouille mortelle. Il y avait deux séjours-des-morts. Les bemie, purs de ngbwel (sorcellerie par évu), franchissaient la rivière-de-l'Ouest ou la mer pour aller au village de Zambe (Zobeyo, Nzame) dans un pays froid où leur nsisim poursuivait une vie assez semblable à celle d'un village terrestre où tout aurait bien marché (2). Les beyem descendaient à l'élôlôlan, séjour souterrain des morts, où ils seraient la proie des flammes. Une tradition rapportée par Largeau montre le mort arrivant au pont de la rivière-de-l'Ouest pour y rencontrer les juges Oyem-Bôl (Connaît-les-Hommes) et Oka'Bôl (Répartit-les-Hommes) qui l'interrogent et lui font passer le pont menant chez Mon-Anen (Grand-être) qui l'interroge en présence de tous les morts et s'assure qu'il a « laissé son nom » (qu'il l'a oublié sur la terre des vivants) ; on le livre alors au Partageur-des-Hommes qui le coupe en deux, une moitié restant auprès des vivants, tandis que l'autre, ayant reçu un nouveau nom, va chez les morts. Il est difficile de déterminer quelle est exactement la partie de l'individu qui reste auprès de ses descendants ; à mon avis, c'est le nom-autorité ; en tout cas, je ne crois pas que ce soit le nsisim. Ce peut être le kôn, mais alors à la suite d'un accident : un fantôme est un voisin gênant, sinon dangereux, en tout cas très craint, souvent malveillant. Son apparence est celle d'un vivant, mais sa couleur

(1) J'ai des raisons, mais pas de preuves, de penser qu'il y a là plus qu'une légende : peut-être l'utilisation criminelle d'un stupéfiant produisant des effets analogues à ceux du pentotal. Un kôn, effrayant à voir, est mort au dispensaire de Sangmélima en 1947. L'enquête judiciaire n'a rien révélé...

(2) D'après Trilles ce serait Vénus, alpe alu, « flambeau de la nuit ».

est blanche, d'où la croyance que les albinos sont fils de fantômes ; le nzisim, au contraire, qui peut apparaître du vivant de l'individu dans un endroit éloigné de celui où il se trouve (bilocation des magiciens et des sorciers), est immatériel mais d'apparence absolument identique à celle du corps. Le bên serait le spectre d'un individu dont les rites funéraires n'ont pas été correctement célébrés, celui d'un sorcier mal exorcisé, ou, si l'on veut, mal stérilisé (dont on aurait, par exemple, omis de brûler le cadavre), ou encore d'un mort décédé sans s'être purifié d'un nsem (1).

Il arrive aussi qu'un mort s'incarne dans un animal sauvage, vivant à proximité d'un village, et que, désormais, on « ne peut » tuer, sans que je puisse préciser s'il s'agit d'une impossibilité de fait ou d'un interdit révérentiel ; l'animal pourra être bienveillant, tel ce vieux gorille, ex-chef mvaé, qui protégeait les plantations du village de Nyabisañ contre les déprédations des « vrais » gorilles vers 1948, ou, au contraire, malfaisant, comme tel Zaman, devenu panthère, qui ravageait les troupeaux de sa belle-famille dans la Boucle du Dja à la même époque. Cette incarnation est probablement en rapport avec le totémisme ou l'alliance entre un homme et un animal diañela, sur lesquels Trilles s'étend longuement (nº 166). L'incarnation n'est que temporaire et cesse à la mort ou à la disparition de l'animal.

Sous l'influence des missions nlam bekôn, le pays des morts se divise maintenant en Enfer et Paradis, qui ne sont autres que l'ôlôlôm et le village de Zambe, les âmes du Purgatoire paraissant bien se confondre dans l'esprit des villageois avec les bekôn insatisfaits, toujours aussi inquiétants. La notion de mort naturelle, non provoquée par un maléfice ou une rupture de l'interdit n'a guère progressé : après tout « le salaire du péché c'est la mort » et « péché » a été rendu par nsem dans les traductions des textes sacrés. Les morts continuent donc à faire partie de la société, même si le recul du culte des ancêtres, bôti, et des initiations à caractère probablement totémique comme sô ont distendu leurs liens avec les vivants.

Cette croyance à la survie explique peut-être un certain mépris de la mort, qui se marquait non seulement dans le courage guerrier et les suicides de vieillards, mais encore, et même de nos jours, par des suicides par point d'honneur : une femme se tue pour se venger de son mari, un homme parce qu'il s'estime offensé ou lésé. Le « responsable » de ce suicide est sévèrement jugé par l'opinion publique, et doit payer compensation et faire un sacrifice expiatoire.

3) Religion et magie

Hormis quelques rares vieillards qui se reconnaissent « enfants des vieilles coutumes » (ou des « vieilles connaissances »), ba' bôgum bô nnôm, et que leurs enfants traitent de païens, et quelques jeunes, plus rares encore, qui se disent agnostiques, l'immense majorité, sinon la quasi-totalité des Pahouins contemporains prétend se rattacher à l'une des confessions qui ont évangélisé la région : presbytériens français et américains, catholiques, adventistes. En fait, et sans vouloir polémiquer sur les statistiques indiquant des proportions de 105 % de « chrétiens » dans certains districts, l'emprise du christianisme est effectivement considérable, mais se mêle de survivances et de résurgences animistes dans des proportions et selon des modes que de multiples études de détail pourraient seules préciser.

(1) On désigne du terme ngudu chez les Eviondo les morts qui n'ont pas encore franchi le pont menant à l'ekom ngôl, séjour des morts. (J. B.)

Les premiers observateurs ont qualifié les Pahouins, spécialement les Fang, de « moins superstitieux », « moins adonnés au fétichisme » que les populations voisines. Trilles et Martrou ont insisté sur leur religiosité profonde, alors qu'Allégret (n° 147) donne une indication très intéressante sur le sentiment d'abandon religieux qu'ils ressentiraient, surtout depuis qu'ils sont au contact des Européens. On a également souvent noté la facilité avec laquelle ils adopteraient les croyances et rites nouveaux, ce qui vaut non seulement pour les religions chrétiennes mais aussi pour des cultes comme le bwiti et le ngôl, et même, avant la première guerre mondiale, autour de Libreville pour l'enseignement maçonnique.

Toutes ces influences sont tellement mêlées qu'il faut se livrer à une sorte de paléontologie assez conjecturale pour tenter de reconstituer leurs croyances originelles. Sans vouloir mettre en doute la probité intellectuelle d'observateurs tels que Trilles ou Martrou, on est obligé de reconnaître, et de regretter, qu'une certaine déformation professionnelle ait parfois infléchi leurs conclusions, au point que pour bien des détails on se voit amené à leur préférer des laïcs beaucoup moins qualifiés au point de vue de leur connaissance de la langue, tels Largeau, pour lequel Trilles s'est montré peut-être un peu bien sévère.

a) Conception de Dieu, création

Les Pahouins croient (ou croyaient, voir plus loin) à un dieu créateur Mebe'e (Iaâ : Mebere, Mebegbe), éternel, autrefois immanent, devenu infiniment transcendant après le nsem initial.

Ce mot, Mebe'e, semble se rattacher au verbe be'e, porter, dont le nom d'agent est mbe'e. Mebe'e est une forme plurielle, correspondant aux noms d'action, et aussi à la forme des pluriels collectifs des noms de liquides (mendim — eau, melpi — sang, mepém — sperme, etc.). Il est habituellement accompagné d'une triple apposition : « Mebe'e, Mebe'e menkpem, sekuma, mbongbue » (ou, d'après Trezenem, mbo engue). Le sens de ces trois qualificatifs est aussi incertain que celui de Mebe'e; menkpem doit probablement être rattaché à kpumé — faire tomber, juger, condamner ; sekuma à kôm (kum) — arranger, ordonner, se donnant l'idée de générosité, de droiture, d'équilibre (bulu : soso, suse) ; mbongbué serait, d'après Grebert, « créateur des générations » (bo — faire ; ngbué — parenté maternelle), mais pourrait aussi se rattacher à ngbwa = amour, amitié, alliance, avec le sens de « celui qui fait alliance » ou « celui qui aime ».

A ces qualificatifs s'ajoute une définition, donnée par Mebe'e lui-même en réponse aux hommes qui lui demandaient son nom, et rapportée ainsi par Largeau, la formule variant légèrement dans le détail selon d'autres auteurs : Mebe'e me se kôm, ke mâl, ke minga, ke ngia, ke ésa, émien étam étam, ke poo-goé, a tame mebialé me bêl, soit, à peu près : « Mebe'e, sans personne, sans femme, sans mère, sans père, lui-même tout seul, impénétrable (lit. « pas ouvert », peut-être au sens de « sans commencement »), il commence les générations. »

A l'encontre de cette unicité, Largeau fait bien état de traditions d'après lesquelles Mebe'e (nom qu'il rattache à un verbe signifiant « répartir » ?) ne serait autre que le soleil et aurait engendré l'homme en s'unissant à un principe féminin Anghe Ndongha, « matrice universelle » (?), mais il reconnaît lui-même le caractère « vague » de ces traditions « balbutiées par quelques vieillards ».

Mebe'e est incréé et éternel ; il déclare au premier homme : A mon mêm, me se k'asum, me se k'aman, me ne fa'a mbembé, « O mon fils, je n'ai pas de commencement (d'origine), pas de fin, je suis vraiment celui qui dure (bembé = être fixé). »

« S'ennuyant d'être seul » (Trilles), Mebe'e, « quand les choses n'étaient pas encore », décide de créer l'homme (mâl, la personne). Il fait un lézard d'argile et cinq jours après le place dans un bassin d'eau (de mer, d'après Trilles), où il le laisse sept jours entiers. Le huitième jour, il lui crie : « Sors ! », l'homme sort et remercie. Trilles souligne à juste titre la beauté de la scène : Alu mnom ane a npa ke dê'é, ngina : Ku'i ! A npa kui, a le mâl. Ane, a npa kulukù mebeû, ngina : A bolan, « Le huitième jour (lit. : la huitième nuit), donc, il va voir, puis : Sors ! (lit. : Émerge). Il émerge, c'est un homme. Et il tombe à genoux : Merci ! (lit. : Louanges !). »

Ce premier homme s'appelle Nzame ou Zambe (bulu : Zebege), ou, plus exactement, Nzame Mebe'e. D'après la tradition rapportée par Largeau, il s'est nommé ainsi lui-même, en même temps qu'il donnait au créateur son nom de Mebe'e. D'après d'autres, c'est Mebe'e qui aurait nommé Nzame. Ce nom pourrait se rattacher au verbe fañ dzame (bulu : jame), signifiant à la fois « laisser », « ne plus s'occuper de » et « remettre une dette », « pardonner » ; Nzame serait alors soit « celui qui pardonne », soit « celui qui abandonne », la forme Zambe, utilisée dans le Nord, étant une variante dialectale ou peut-être un dérivé passif. Trilles, lui, donne à Nzame le sens de « l'invisible », en traduisant le verbe dzame par « s'effacer », traduction qui s'explique par la constante confusion qu'il fait de Mebe'e et de Nzame, du créateur et du créé. Nzame et Zambe semblent pouvoir être rapprochés de toute une série de sens analogue dans les langues bantu voisines, et, peut-être, du créole antillais zombi. Mais la parenté est moins évidente pour le bulu Zebege, dont l'origine, obscure, est peut-être à rattacher aux verbes zu, « arriver » (bulu) ou zû, dzû, « ouvrir » (fañ) et poo ou pooé, « être ouvert », « ouvrir » : approximative-ment, « ouverture de ceux qui ouvrent », au sens d' « ancêtre primitif ».

Les traditions diffèrent sur l'origine de la première femme ; Largeau en rapporte deux. D'après l'une, Mebe'e, ayant appris à Nzame à défricher la forêt et à planter des arbres, l'endort et, l'ayant amputé d'un gros orteil, fabrique avec lui la première femme, Ngingono Mebe'e (Ngingon = mère-fille). D'après l'autre, il aurait fabriqué en même temps que Nzame sa sœur Ogume-Mam (celle-qui-sait-les-choses). Mon informateur ntumu, connaissant les deux légendes, les concilliait en se référant à la Bible : attitude très fréquente chez les vieux protestants gabonais qui rend parfois extrêmement malaisé de faire le départ entre la Genèse hébraïque et la Genèse pahouine.

Quoi qu'il en soit, Mebe'e soumet tous les animaux au couple original afin qu'ils travaillent pour lui. Mais Nzame trouble cet ordre en forniquant avec sa sœur : c'est le grand nsem, le bris d'interdit, l'inceste initial qui introduit la mort sur la terre. Mebe'e « meurt », ou plutôt se sépare des hommes, s'éloigne en laissant à Nzame, auquel les animaux ont cessé d'obéir, le commandement sur la terre.

Ogume-Mam met alors au monde huit couples de jumeaux, mâles et femelles, qui sont les ancêtres des Pahouins, des Blancs, des Pygmées, des gorilles, des chimpanzés, des hommes rouges et des tribus de la Côte.

Ce qui suit est mal connu, les versions variant largement suivant les auteurs. En gros, Nzame enseigne les techniques agricoles à ses enfants et va chercher chez Mebe'e (en mourant pour ressusciter peu après ?) le secret des techniques artisanales (1). Avant de quitter ses enfants pour sa « mort » définitive (en fait, il ne meurt pas physiquement : « Sa tombe n'est ni en bas ni en haut, ni à gauche ni à droite »), il fait le partage de ses biens, partage faussé par les querelles, les ruses des cadets ou la négligence des aînés. Il s'en va alors au delà de la rivière-de-l'Ouest, suivi par les Blancs (ou les tribus côtières ?), qui se sont emparé par ruse de la part des biôm qui revenait aux Pahouins. Ceux-ci se mettront à leur tour en route vers l'Ouest, franchissant Osé Nzange puis le nôm adjap (trou du fromager), comme indiqué précédemment (supra, p. 16).

Il faut souligner que Nzame (Zambe) n'est pas le dieu créateur, mais bien l'ancêtre-moniteur ; c'est à lui que remontent toutes les généalogies. Or, toutes les missions chrétiennes ont pris son nom pour traduire la notion de Dieu. L'erreur s'explique : le nom de Mebe'e était rarement prononcé, alors que celui de Nzame revenait dans toutes les « salutations », dans tout ce qui touchait au culte des ancêtres ; comme moniteur original, il pouvait être confondu avec le créateur — en fait, il complétait en quelque sorte la création « naturelle » par l'invention magique des arts et techniques ; comme ancêtre, il était sollicité par ses descendants dans les prières, mego'ôlon, alors qu'on ne s'adressait à Mebe'e que dans de très rares occasions — serments solennels, initiations ; enfin, le fait même de s'être trompé au départ rendait difficile de revenir sur la première traduction. On peut penser que cette erreur, substitution de la créature au créateur, déification de l'homme, n'a pas été sans influencer l'évolution sociale des Pahouins : les Minlangue, venus précisément du niam bekón, du pays des morts, apportaient avec une véritable révolution théologique, une hérésie à laquelle leur richesse matérielle donnait une caution certaine. Les répercussions psychologiques ont dû être considérables.

(1) Enseignées, selon certains, par l'araignée.

Aujourd'hui, on entend dire couramment que « Mebe'e est l'ancien nom de Zambe », ce dernier paraissant définitivement installé dans son rôle usurpé (1) ; les traditions relatives aux deux personnages sont inextricablement mélangées aux apports chrétiens, au point qu'on peut parler d'une nouvelle théogonie en formation dans les cultes syncrétistes et dans certains schismes chrétiens.

b) Culte des ancêtres, Islam, esprits

Nous avons vu qu'on ne rendait pratiquement pas de culte au Créateur Mebe'e, mais seulement à Zambe (Nzame), ancêtre original, invoqué comme père commun. Mais ce recours à Zambe restait relativement exceptionnel : on demandait d'abord aide, mego'ale, ou protection, akam, aux ancêtres, bimoam, les plus proches.

La forme la plus caractéristique du culte des ancêtres était le biéri (biéli), particulièrement développé dans les tribus les plus méridionales, et d'abord chez les Fang proprement dits. Le prêtre en était l'ancêtre vivant, le père, ésa, avec une hiérarchie de fait correspondant aux différents niveaux de la structure sociale et clanique, hiérarchie à caractère plus religieux que politique, l'autorité qui en découlait étant d'abord révérentielle. Le matériel cultuel essentiel était constitué par les crânes des ancêtres masculins, gardés par le père, l'aîné, dans le panier aux crânes, évuru biéri (évulé biéli), sorte d'arche que le groupe familial transportait avec lui au cours des migrations. L'évuru biéri était une boîte cylindrique en écorce de fleus, ornée de perles et d'emblèmes claniques (mindem), dont le couvercle portait la statue du premier ancêtre. Elle était conservée sur une sorte d'autel, dont la vue était éfyi pour les femmes et les non-initiés, placé soit dans la case du chef de famille, soit dans une case spéciale. L'évuru était transportée dans un étui en vannerie fine, sous la garde d'initiés armés. Les crânes étaient teints au bon et parfois ornés d'incrustations de cuivre ou de perles.

Quand un nouveau village était créé par un cadet, le crâne du fondateur était le premier à prendre place dans l'arche, le village d'où il était parti conservant ceux des précédents ancêtres de la lignée. On conçoit dès lors que le gardien des crânes de la lignée ait eu une certaine autorité, déléguée par les ancêtres de rang supérieur, sur les chefs des familles ensemblées, lui-même étant en quelque sorte subordonné au gardien des crânes des ancêtres communs de la fraction, et ainsi de suite en montant ou descendant les arbres généalogiques, de Zambe, parti mais vivant, à l'ômoam vivant de la dernière génération.

(1) M. Green, premier missionnaire américain chez les Boulou, fut surnommé Ngolé Zambe — rangon de Zambe, ce qui n'est peut-être pas seulement un à-peu-près sur son nom.

Lorsque l'essaimage d'une famille se produisait sans querelle, le ndâl, aîné, du nouveau groupe recevait de son ôsu, à défaut des crânes qui devaient rester dans la fraction d'origine, une statue contenant des fragments d'ossements des ancêtres, phalangettes, dents ou éclats d'os crâniens. La statue était placée sur le premier autel familial du nouveau groupe, où la rejoignaient plus tard le crâne du fondateur et ceux des bengo bôlî des générations suivantes. Un panier du biéri bien rempli était un signe d'ancienneté du groupe, qui impliquait sans doute plus de prestige que de véritable autorité, mais n'en restait pas moins l'approximation la plus proche d'un commandement politique existant dans le groupe fang, surtout si l'on tient compte du fait que les dignitaires des associations interclaniques étaient choisis parmi les possesseurs de nombreux crânes, dont le prestige s'étendait par là à un nombre important de mabê ou de mayem. Le prestige des vivants s'exerçait par l'autorité des morts.

Les crânes étaient, en effet, le siège ou le réceptacle de la capacité d'action de l'individu (rappelons : be = faire, boo = cerveau), et leur utilisation magique n'était pas restreinte aux seuls crânes d'ancêtres : on conservait également les crânes d'ennemis tués à la guerre ou sacrifiés dans les cérémonies anthropophagiques qui la précédaient ou la suivaient, ou bien des crânes volés à des voisins, de même qu'on utilisait pour les rites de chasse des crânes d'animaux de l'espèce qu'on désirait chasser. Il semble, toutefois, qu'une distinction ait été faite entre crânes familiaux et crânes étrangers, les premiers seuls ayant place dans l'ômôl bôlî et prenant part aux rites familiaux. On augmentait la force des crânes en les asperges du sang des sacrifices.

L'adolescent arrivant à l'âge de nge mâlê devait apprendre à connaître ses ancêtres pour pouvoir demander leur aide à l'occasion. On lui montrait les crânes jusqu'à ce qu'il sache les nommer individuellement et les placer dans leur ordre généalogique exact ; quand il le savait, on lui faisait prendre une décoction d'herbe stupéfiante alan puis passer la nuit dans la case du bôlî, en face des crânes sortis de l'ômôl et placés sur l'autel où brûlaient des herbes odoriférantes. Au cours de la nuit, les ancêtres lui apparaissaient et lui imposaient un surnom et un ou plusieurs nouveaux interdits (il était, en même temps, relevé de plusieurs interdits d'âge) ; il semble que c'est au cours de cette initiation que lui était révélé son totem individuel (si vraiment c'en était un).

Cette question du totem est très mal élucidée en dépit des quelque six cents pages que lui a consacrées le P. Trilles. Celui-ci distingue totem de clan, de fraction, individuel, familial, de société, etc. Il distingue encore l'être tutélaire, mamma, de l' « effet de l'être tutélaire », ekum, l'animal-totem de l'animal voué ou de l'incarnation d'un homme dans un animal, etc. Il sépare aussi le culte de l'ésqué, culte de l'an-être, du culte du mommugué, culte totémique. Il faut bien avouer qu'on ne parvient guère aujourd'hui à obtenir de recoupements de ses théories, sauf sur des points de détail, sans d'ailleurs que cela les condamne formellement : il peut s'agir d'une insuffisance des enquêteurs, de respect humain chez les enquêtés, ou bien de traditions initiatiques perdues. Peuvent être tenus pour acquis les points suivants :

— mmam (ômmam) connote les idées d'aïeul, mort ou vif, de lignée et de protection ;
— ekum, protection, est parfois employé en parlant d'animaux, pour indiquer la cause d'un interdit, le verbe kum ayant le sens de défendre-protéger aussi bien que de défendre-prohiber ;
— tous les interdits ne sont pas liés à ces notions, mais certains le sont et il peut s'agir aussi bien d'interdits individuels que d'interdits collectifs héréditaires, ne portant pas obligatoirement sur des animaux ;
— les marques, mindem, et les indicatifs tambourinés, mindan, des clans ont souvent un rapport avec un interdit ;
— il existe toute une symbolique animale, visible surtout dans les contes et les présages (zoomancie, divination par l'araignée) ;
— certains animaux sont liés à des cultes initiatiques : très certainement le sô et les serpents (dendraspis et python) ; probablement le poro-épic et la tortue (rites féminins) ; peut-être le gorille (ngil, ngil, ton 4 de Johnson, le rite ngil étant du ton 5) ;
— il ne semble pas y avoir de rapport entre le nom d'animal porté par un individu (Mokoé = Python, Ze'e = Éléphant, Ze = = Panthère, etc.) et les interdits auxquels il est soumis.

Il semble à peu près certain, par ailleurs, que ne sont pas exactement rattachables au totémisme :

— l'alliance, ôlal ou ngbua, entre un individu et un animal particulier ;
— l'emploi par un sorcier d'un animal, nkuk (noter que nkuk signifie aussi « masque »), pour exécuter ses maléfices à distance ;
— l'incarnation du sorcier dans le corps d'un animal, ôlatala (Trilles donne ce nom au nkuk) ;
— l'incarnation momentanée d'un mort dans le corps d'un animal, les trois premiers phénomènes paraissant souvent se confondre dans l'esprit des Pahouins contemporains, le quatrième pouvant en être la conséquence.

Il est curieux de noter que la légende rapportée par Trilles à propos du crocodile, qu'il considère comme « totem national », montre celui-ci poursuivant les ancêtres des Fang pour les dévorer, alors que l'histoire légendaire de la migration, recueillie plus au Nord, le montre, au contraire, faisant franchir Ossé Nsonge à la tribu (chez les Beti c'est un python qui rend ce service).

L'observation faite par les auteurs précités du caractère « peu superstitieux » des Pahouins, du moindre développement du « fétîchisme » parmi eux est à rapprocher de l'absence presque totale dans leur mythologie d'êtres intermédiaires entre Dieu et l'homme, génies ou demi-dieux.

En dehors des bieur, dont il sera traité à propos de la sorcellerie, on ne rencontre guère que les bingungur (fañ ; bulu : bingéngôl), que certaines légendes présentent comme une variété d'ogres ou de goules hantant les forêts et attaquant les voyageurs. Selon d'autres explications, il s'agirait plutôt d'animaux maléfiques, doués d'une intelligence et d'une malveillance dépassant celle des individus normaux de leur espèce, peut-être d'animaux sorciers. L'inoffensif oryctérope, mademvila, est ainsi très redouté ; on parle également d'une sorte de pithécanthrope, très rare, éngure (fañ ; bulu : éngu'u), et d'une sirène, la mammgudia de la Côte, qui est sans doute le lamantin. Pour Trilles, l'éngungure est un « esprit, souvent transformé en animal, auquel obéissent les sorciers » : on peut se demander s'il ne s'agit pas là d'une confusion avec l'éeur (bulu : éeu).

Des bekén, fantômes, on pourrait dire qu'il en est de bons, mais point de délicieux. On peut, le plus souvent, s'entendre avec le kén d'un ancêtre convenablement enterré et respectable de son vivant, et même obtenir de lui des services utiles, rétribués autrefois en sacrifices et libations à son crâne, et bien souvent aujourd'hui en cierges, messes ou prières (j'ai vu des protestants s'adresser aux missionnaires catholiques pour un exorcisme). C'est beaucoup plus difficile avec le kén d'un sorcier ou avec celui d'un étranger dont on ne possède ni le nom ni le crâne.

Il est probable que l'anthropophagie non criminelle avait pour but, entre autres, d'acquérir un pouvoir sur les bekén des ennemis et peut-être d'assimiler les droits qu'ils tenaient de leurs ancêtres. Cette anthropophagie guerrière paraît avoir existé surtout sur les franges géographiques du groupe, et, particulièrement, sur le front d'invasion, chez les Fang proprement dits, avant-garde de la migration. On ne mangeait jamais un parent ou allié, mais seulement des étrangers, et seuls les guerriers en mangeaient (ou, parfois, des fils de guerriers morts à l'ennemi). Il est remarquable que seuls les « Gabonais » aient éprouvé en face de l'anthropophagie des Fang et Osyéba la terreur rapportée par tous les explorateurs : les Boulou ou les Ntoumou, qui se sont souvent battus contre les Fang, ne les accusent pas de cannibalisme, ce qui paraît confirmer que celui-ci était réservé aux guerres « étrangères », aux conquêtes. L'anthropophagie intestine est considérée avec horreur et pratiquée par les seuls sorciers, souvent appelés bedi bôl, mangeurs d'homme ; di nlem, généralement traduit par « manger l'âme », signifie littéralement « manger les viscères thoraciques », et peut s'appliquer à une consommation tout à fait matérielle de ces viscères. Par contre, l'anthropophagie ou nécrophagie qu'on pourrait qualifier d'homéopathique, celle qui consiste à absorber dans un biat (mbiat), une parcelle très réduite, souvent sous forme de cendre, du corps d'un ancêtre ou d'un initié n'a rien de criminel et entrait, semble-t-il, dans le cérémonial de tous les grands rites.

A ce point de vue, la communion au corps du sô, si ce rite est bien totémique, représentait peut-être la manducation de l'ancêtre.

Quant à l'anthropophagie gastronomique, c'est une légende pour journaux illustrés : non seulement la viande d'homme, mais encore celle des anthropoïdes sont, en dehors des cas cités plus haut, absolument bilyi, tabou, et leur consommation accidentelle ou due à une nécessité absolue (cas de chasseurs isolés par une inondation) donne lieu à une purification rigoureuse.

c) Éléments de cosmogonie

Nos connaissances sur la conception traditionnelle du monde sont largement conjecturales, elles aussi, pour les raisons précédemment indiquées. On peut faire état avec une certitude raisonnable de deux concepts fondamentaux :

— l'orientation de l'espace et du temps référée au mouvement apparent du soleil ; peut-être vaudrait-il mieux parler ici d'espace-temps, les deux notions étant étroitement confondues ;
— le principe qualifié par Stoll de « double symétrie », qu'on pourrait appeler aussi « complémentarité sexuelle » et résumer comme un équilibre en tension de tous les éléments de la création.

Ces deux concepts sont, au demeurant, liés de près, sinon indissociables.

Le temps et l'espace s'écoulent d'Est en Ouest, suivant un mouvement descendant. L'Est est ôku, amont, haut, et mâle ; l'Ouest, nké, aval, bas et femelle. La terre, sî, est entourée d'eau, ou plutôt enclose d'eau et d'obscurité : ndim = aveugle, mendim = eau, dim = = terminer, éteindre, se coucher (en parlant d'un astre), dimi = se perdre, dip = fermer, dibi = obscur, opaque (d'après Trezenem, le monde est entouré du fleuve éndom, mot à rapprocher de ndom = largeur, large). L'obscurité de l'Est est noire (cf. le nom du pays d'origine : mat' ékunga = pays des nuages hauts et blancs ; les nuages pluvieux, bas et sombres, sont les minkuf), celle de l'Ouest blanche, couleur féminine, le blanc étant en outre teinte de deuil et de mort : les bekôn sont blancs, du moins ceux qui restent sur terre ; ceux qui sont admis au village de Zambe sont rouges.

Par rapport à l'axe de référence Est-Ouest, le Nord est à droite, mbo ndom, côté mâle, le Sud à gauche, mbo ngul, côté femelle. La limite entre le Nord et le Sud est la Sanaga (Oubé Nnanga =rivière blanche, rivière de l'albinos), franchie sur le python, modm, qui est aussi l'arc-en-ciel (mais une tradition fang de l'Est gabonais parle d'une rivière Évindi, c'est-à-dire noire). Le Nord est lié au rouge (1), couleur masculine et couleur de fête. Le Sud est aussi le midi, nañe mâa, et le zénith, gêbe jêp (gêp = ciel, haut, hauteur, jêp = soleil ; fañ : dzê) ; c'est le côté de la lumière, vian, lumière solaire, ou êfufup, clarté.

(1) Evindi, ôyamba et ôvulu, noir, blanc et rouge, sont les seuls termes de couleur dans la langue. Elles s'appliquent aux nuances proches : un gris sera « blanc » ou « noir », un bleu ou un vert, « noire », un ocre ou un brun clair « rouge », un jaune clair « blanc », etc. Pour plus de précision on a recours soit, à des comparaisons (ni'ôkon = mousse aquatique pour vert ; ôlip = soleil, jaune d'œuf pour orange ou jaune) soit à des emprunts (bleu).

Le ciel, gêp, serait soutenu par un pilier de fer (akoñ = pilier ou lance, symbole masculin) que tient l'épouse-sœur de Zambe, Nyingon Mebe'e. Le ciel paraît à la fois masculin et féminin, de même que la terre ; le soleil masculin, la lune féminine.

On arrive ainsi à déterminer sur la rose des vents deux aires ou secteurs opposés : le quadrant Nord/Est, mâle ; le quadrant Sud/Ouest, femelle, les deux autres paraissant neutres ; le diamètre N.E.-S.W. formant bissectrice des deux angles opposés donnerait l'axe de la migration, mfa'a mañ, vers la mer. L'aire masculine serait le lieu d'origine des clans en ge (féminins ?), l'aire féminine, celui des clans en êsa. Trilles assimile à ces derniers les clans en êbi, qui, géographiquement, sont des clans orientaux ; je me demande si ces clans ne doivent pas plutôt être rattachés aux clans en ge, êbi signifiant trou, creux (gee = vallée, ravin). Dans le biloba, les marchandises masculines viennent du secteur femelle et vice versa.

Ces contradictions apparentes se résoudraient par application du principe de double symétrie, ou de complémentarité sexuelle, de même que celle qui fait appeler bobengañ, fils de ma mère, les frères consanguins et non les utérins. Ce principe pourrait s'énoncer approximativement comme suit : tout être viable doit pour être existant et complet comporter en lui le genre sexuel opposé au sien. En d'autres termes, la bi-sexualité, principe vital universel, se retrouverait dans chaque partie de la création. Stoll en trouve la preuve dans le langage, où les tons constitueraient d'après lui, une véritable différenciation en genres sexuels grammaticaux, et surtout dans les rites dont le but serait non pas de masculiniser totalement les hommes et de féminiser totalement les femmes, mais bien de donner à chaque sexe son complément nécessaire du sexe opposé.

Quoi qu'il faille penser de cette théorie, il est certain que, sans doute à cause de l'absence, apparente ou réelle, de genre sexuel grammatical dans la langue, la plupart des premiers auteurs, et même Trilles, n'ont pas attaché suffisamment d'importance au genre réel, au sexe effectif attribués aux objets, en particulier au matériel magique et rituel. On sait que la lance, akoñ, le sabre, fa, probablement le grand tambour mbôl sont mâles ; les calebasses et marmites, les grelots, mengañ, la double cloche, nkañ, femelles ; le tambour-téléphone, nkul, androgyne ; les cornes à médicaments, minlak, mâles sous leur aspect pointe, femelles sous leur aspect creux, de même que le fusil. Pour les chiffres, mes conclusions sont diamétralement opposées à celles de Stoll qui considère les nombres pairs comme mâles, les impairs comme femelles ; il est vrai qu'il donne comme preuve l'importance des chiffres impairs dans les rites féminins, ce qui irait tout justement à l'encontre de son principe de double symétrie.

La numérologie est d'ailleurs très imparfaitement connue. La numération est basée sur la dizaine, avec des traces d'une base 8 : 10, mdém, et 8, mnom, ont peut-être la même racine avec des classificateurs différents. Neuf est le chiffre du sé. Nyin, quatre, paraît lié à un radical YI à connotations féminines (yi = vouloir, signifie aussi « avoir besoin de », « pleurer » ; il donnerait l'idée de désir, par opposition à kémbé, apparenté à kém = arranger, mettre en ordre, faire bien, et ke = faire, qui donnerait l'idée de volonté ; la forme passive de yi, yien, signifie à la fois « devoir », et « aller bien », « convenir »). L'exploration reste largement à faire, pendant qu'il en est encore temps.

d) Sorcellerie, possession

La sorcellerie maléfique, nghwé, est attribuée très généralement à la possession du sorcier, nnem (pl. bepem ; cf. pem = savoir, rêver) par un être maléfique, l'évu (fém : évur, évus). L'évu n'est pas un esprit immatériel, c'est un être vivant, un animal, ressemblant à un crabe ou à un scolopendre, et logeant dans les viscères du nnem. A l'autopsie, on le trouve souvent sous forme de polype ou tumeur, de fibrome chez les femmes. Il arrive d'ailleurs que le corps du nnem ne présente pas cet indice, l'évu s'étant échappé, mais on en trouve des traces : sérosités, distension de l'estomac, du côlon ou de la vésicule biliaire. Dans tous ces cas, nous l'avons dit, le cadavre n'est pas enterré selon les formes habituelles, mais brûlé, jeté dans un fleuve ou inhumé sous un carrefour loin du village, pour empêcher le kón du nnem de revenir hanter ses parents et voisins.

La possession peut être inconnue du possédé, qui n'en est pas moins responsable du mal causé par l'évu. Celui-ci sort la nuit, pendant le sommeil du nnem et va se nourrir en buvant le sang, metyi, donc la force, fyi, de ses victimes, qui tombent malades, s'affaiblissent et meurent, ou bien en mangeant leur nlem (cœur et poumon), ce qui entraîne la folie ou la dégénérescence mentale, et souvent aussi la mort. L'évu se nourrit aussi d'œufs, metyi, et de lait, de femme de préférence (mangué, de ngué = téter, cf. -ngué = mère, dans les mots composés), nourritures qui répugnent aux villageois. Lorsqu'il éprouve des difficultés à se ravitailler, il arrive qu'il se retourne contre le nnem et le tue pour s'en repaître, ou, si c'est une femme, qu'il s'attaque aux enfants dont elle est grosse. Hors de ces cas, le nghwé, même inconscient, profite au nnem : il bénéficie de la force accumulée par l'évu au cours de ses chasses nocturnes ; en outre, l'évu l'aide, lui porte une sorte de chance dans ses entreprises, ce qui est naturel puisqu'il en profite par l'intermédiaire du nnem. Cette chance, osé (d'un verbe sé, sens analogue : o ngu sé ésum — il s'est enrichi par nghwé), se distingue de la chance ordinaire, accidentelle, ma'a, par son caractère permanent qui a tôt fait de soulever la suspicion publique : c'est un des symptômes visibles du nghwé.

Le nnem inconscient était très généralement mis à mort, plus facilement même que le sorcier conscient, qui savait se défendre. On pouvait cependant le soigner, au moyen d'un traitement purificatoire extrêmement rigoureux, comportant une catharsis physiologique autant que psychique, et parfois de véritables opérations chirurgicales : le patient y succombait dans la plupart des cas. De nos jours, l'administration européenne empêche généralement l'exécution des bogem, mais leurs parents arrivent souvent à les convaincre de se suicider : après une épidémie de méningite à Ambam en 1948, deux hommes et deux jeunes femmes, accusés par un devin bwiti d'avoir causé par nghwel inconscient la mort d'une douzaine d'enfants, se jetèrent dans le Ntem au cours du même mois. Autrefois, on brûlait les bogem, en les recouvrant de bois de façon à empêcher à la fois l'évu et leur nsisim de s'envoler ; on pouvait aussi les noyer ou encore les enterrer vifs, de préférence dans le lit d'un ruisseau préalablement détourné puis renvoyé dans son lit après l'inhumation.

Le nnem conscient est à la fois plus et moins dangereux. Lié par une sorte de pacte à son évu, il dirige l'action de celui-ci, au lieu de le laisser tuer au hasard, comme le nnem inconscient. Il est donc plus dangereux à l'égard de ses ennemis et moins à celui de ses proches, encore que la conclusion et le maintien de l'alliance avec l'évu exigent qu'il lui sacrifie des membres de sa famille.

Un nnem doué d'une forte personnalité, lyi anen a niem ayel, d'une grande force et d'un cœur dur, peut arriver à bien contrôler son évu, à s'en faire un serviteur qui lui apporte richesse et puissance, le débarrasse de ses ennemis et lui confère des pouvoirs surnaturels : bilocation, télékinésie, divination, etc. Mais le nghwel reste en tout temps un art dangereux. D'abord, le nnem se sait condamné à rester après sa mort un bôn blanc, à qui il est interdit de franchir l'ékanga bebôn, le pont des morts, pour aller retrouver les ancêtres mañ ayel, au delà de la mer. A cette condamnation à terme s'ajoutent des périls immédiats. En premier lieu le risque, toujours possible, de voir l'évu dominer le nnem, à la faveur d'un affaiblissement de celui-ci. Ensuite, celui d'une sorte de choc en retour, si l'évu s'attaque à un nnem plus puissant ou à un mie bien protégé par un bôañ ressortissant à la magie blanche. Enfin, celui de voir l'évu, ou l'animal qu'il emploie comme support, tués au cours d'une sortie, ce qui entraîne la mort du nnem.

Beaucoup de gens cependant estiment que ces inconvénients pèsent peu en face des avantages immédiats procurés par l'évu. On voit donc des bemie (personnes dépourvues d'évu) se faire initier au nghwel, et des bogem y vouer leurs enfants dès leur naissance (ce qui a pour effet, en outre, de les protéger contre l'évu de leurs parents). Pour ce faire, les bogem se groupent en sociétés secrètes (et il s'agit là de sociétés vraiment secrètes), bien décrites par Trilles et surtout par Lavigouille (n° 156).

Les bébés sont voués par un nnem de leur parenté au cours d'une cérémonie, aba'á, avant cicatrisation de l'ombilic (l'évu est censé pénétrer par la plaie ombilicale). Un interdit spécial est imposé à l'enfant et une partie de son corps (doigt, orteil ou même pied, main ou membre entier) sacrifiée symboliquement à l'évu, avec une petite effusion de sang : désormais, seule l'ombre de la partie sacrifiée, son apparence, est supposée subsister. L'enfant est alors nkômon nghwel, préparé pour le nkgnel, mais pas encore nnem : s'il l'était, en effet, on le découvrirait au moment de la phase préliminaire de l'initiation d'adolescence et on le mettrait à mort. Ce n'est qu'une fois initié aux rites officiels qu'il kuli nglnel, devient sorcier, au cours d'une nouvelle cérémonie pendant laquelle ses « parrains » lui révèlent qu'il a été « préparé », voué. Il doit alors racheter le membre « sacrifié » lors de l'aku'é en offrant à ses « parrains » le corps d'un membre de sa famille, assassiné et mangé par les beyem dans des conditions mal connues, dont ce qu'on sait rappelle certains aspects sexuels des sabbats démoniaques européens (les participants des deux sexes, nus, se livreraient à la sodomie, bidê, et profaneraient des reliques ancestrales, fragments de bidi probablement). L'initiation d'un adulte ne comprend que l'akuli nglnel, l'aku'é étant réservé aux enfants.

Les beyem se réunissent périodiquement, en dehors des cérémonies d'initiation, pour « nourrir les bisu » au cours de repas anthropophagiques ou nécrophagiques accompagnés de rites obscènes. Ces réunions ont lieu à la nouvelle lune dans des endroits secrets de la forêt, généralement des clairières en haut des collines ou des îlots dans les marais ; les maimie redoutent de pénétrer par hasard dans un de ces endroits, qui, d'après certains de mes informateurs, seraient gardés entre les réunions par un oryctérope, mômesila. Lorsqu'on en découvre un on fait immédiatement appel à un ngengoh pour une sorte d'exorcisme. Les sorciers seraient convoqués aux réunions par messages secrets, sous forme de faisceaux de bâtonnets entaillés selon un code particulier, ou de quipou. Ils sont supposés s'y rendre par lévitation ou n'y envoyer que leur nzisim, le corps restant au village en état de mort apparente, ce qui offre une bonne occasion de se débarrasser du sorcier en brûlant son corps, l'inconvénient de la méthode étant que le nzisim subsiste, ainsi que l'évu, et qu'ils peuvent alors s'incarner dans un animal, ce qui ne se produit pas si on brûle le sorcier vivant.

L'évu peut adopter divers modes de circulation hors du corps du nnem. Quelquefois, il sort invisible et immatériel, mais c'est là un mode peu courant. Le plus souvent, il entre dans le corps d'un animal, en général un léopard, mais parfois aussi un serpent noir, une civette, un gorille ou chimpanzé, ou encore certains insectes : la liste n'est pas limitative, mais il s'agit presque toujours d'animaux puissants ou dangereux. L'animal porteur est alors presque invulnérable, étant doté à la fois d'une intelligence humaine et des pouvoirs de l'évu ; on peut cependant en venir à bout, avec de la chance et de bons mobiah, et toute atteinte qu'on lui porte se répercute sur le sorcier. Au contraire, une atteinte au sorcier pendant l'absence de l'évu n'est pas forcément fatale à celui-ci, qui peut subsister dans le corps de l'animal véhicule. Celui-ci est appelé nkuk (1), mot qui peut aussi signifier « masque » ; il n'est pas certain qu'il se confonde avec l'élañela, comme l'indique Trilles, pas plus qu'avec les animaux-bekôn ou avec ceux qui sont beyem par eux-mêmes, ou encore avec les bingôngôl (bingungure).

(1) Chez les Eviénoudo on lorsque désigne aussi les bons fétiches, qui apparaissent en songe aux consultants les vivants. (J. B.)

A côté du ngbwel, il semble exister une sorcellerie liée à l'abé nlem ou mbia nlem, malignité du cœur, et ne recourant pas à la possession par les bisu. Ainsi les praticiens du kôn, qui consiste à tuer un individu en laissant vivre son corps (supra, p. 105), ne seraient pas obligatoirement des beyem au sens étroit. De même nombre de pratiques maléfiques ne seraient que des déviations criminelles de la magie licite. L'alliance avec un animal, ou l'incarnation dans un animal, ou encore la transformation d'un magicien en animal peuvent n'être pas maléfiques ou ne le devenir qu'à la suite de la méchanceté naturelle (ésezam = méchanceté, désordre ; nlelañ = malveillance, de élañ = = acte mauvais commis exprès et sans nécessité : a woé bôl élañ = celui qui tue par plaisir, ndan des begôeina depuis la colonisation allemande jusqu'à nos jours) du magicien. Un biañ de protection contre les beyem peut être employé contre un mie innocent, une arme magique, un envoûtement contre un frère. Une telle action peut constituer non seulement un élom, un délit, mais encore un nsem, bris d'interdit, lorsque l'initiation à la technique magique comprenait l'interdiction de s'en servir pour faire le mal. Il en est de même de l'emploi de certaines techniques, illicites ou immorales par elles-mêmes, encore que leur but soit licite ou même moral : ainsi du biañ de fidélité conjugale consistant pour le mari à faire boire son sperme à la femme, de la guérison d'une maladie par transfert à une autre personne (le transfert à un animal ou plante est licite), de certains mebiañ de fécondité, etc. Le plus souvent les actes de sorcellerie n'entrant pas dans la catégorie du ngbwel (et peut-être aussi du kôn) donneront simplement lieu à un procès « civil », ni plus ni moins qu'une affaire de coups et blessures ou un meurtre « naturel ». Le ngbwel, au contraire, est toujours crime capital — à condition que le nnem ne soit pas trop puissant pour échapper au jugement ou au châtiment.

e) Magie licite, divination, médecine

Le premier but de la magie licite est de lutter contre les sorciers, spécialement les beyem, mais ce n'est qu'un de ses aspects. En fait, elle s'étend à tous les actes de la vie et tout le monde la pratique plus ou moins, en dehors des spécialistes, ngengañ ou ngañ, magicien, meimei'i, devin, mbibiañ, guérisseur, et ñgia bia, chantre (1).

La magie apparaît comme une technique d'utilisation de la force, fyi, enfermée dans chaque élément de la création, dont chaque individu a plus ou moins la capacité, ngul, de se servir. La magie élémentaire est enseignée en famille, la magie supérieure dans les associations, chez les praticiens éprouvés et aussi, de nos jours, par

(1) Il y aurait eu chez les Evindo une sorte de prêtre, nsumala, souvent un chef, qui recevait les prémices du maïs, bénissait les semences et présidait au culte des ancêtres. (J. B.) correspondance auprès de charlatans européens. Toutes les initiations comportent un cours de magie, toutes les associations un collège de spécialistes.

La divination, mvi'i, et la médecine, mboan mebiaŋ, sont à la magie en général ce que sont les spécialités à la médecine générale en Europe. Tout ngengaŋ est devin et médecin, mais il peut consulter un confrère qui s'est attaché plus spécialement à l'un de ces points.

Chaque individu apprend dès son enfance à interpréter les présages courants, qui relèvent en majorité de la zoomancie : vol ou chant de certains oiseaux, rencontre de certains animaux dans telle circonstances, etc. L'interprétation des mouvements de la victime d'un sacrifice familial, l'oracle de l'araignée abóp, la consultation des ancêtres au moyen de l'herbe stupéfiante alaŋ (iboga) réclament déjà d'être initié. Les oracles par l'eau, par le sable ou les graviers, l'organisation des épreuves minkal exigent une science beaucoup plus approfondie.

Il en est de même pour la médecine. Tout le monde connaît les mebiaŋ courants, mais dans les cas graves, il faut avoir recours au mbibiaŋ. Le mot biaŋ, généralement traduit par « médicament », « grigri », voire « fétiche », désigne non seulement la drogue, le produit pharmaceutique, mais encore l'ensemble de l'acte magique, y compris l'incantation et la danse qui l'accompagnent dans les cas graves. La pharmacopée et la thérapeutique proprement dites, partiellement étudiées par de Baudre, Weber et Chabeuf au Cameroun, par Gascón en Guinée Espagnole, sont, ou étaient, assez riches. Non seulement les mbibiaŋ connaissaient de nombreuses préparations à base surtout végétales, mais encore ils savaient pratiquer quelques opérations chirurgicales — réductions de fractures et de luxations, incision et drainage d'abcès profonds, amputations, exérèse de certaines tumeurs et peut-être trépanation. Mais, évidemment, il se mêlait beaucoup de magie pure à cette médecine pratique et la plupart des mebiaŋ, s'ils avaient une action thérapeutique effective, la devaient sans doute à des réactions psychosomatiques, ce qui n'est d'ailleurs pas particulier à la médecine pahouine.

En dehors de la médecine et de la divination et de la lutte contre les sorciers, le rôle essentiel des mingengaŋ consistait à influer sur le déroulement de la destinée du groupe ou des individus, sinon à diriger leur destin. Les pouvoirs des grands initiés n'étaient pas sans rappeler certains de ceux des sorciers contre lesquels ils avaient à lutter, de même que certains de leurs procédés. Comme eux, ils étaient capables de télékinésie, de bilocation, etc. : Trilles en donne de nombreux exemples, dont certains qu'il aurait constatés de visu. Comme eux, ils pouvaient se transformer en animal, ou utiliser les services d'un animal voué, elaŋela. Ils tuaient les gens à distance, notamment par envoûtement sur « témoin » de type classique, ou agissaient directement sur eux par leur pouvoir, ngul, en soumettant leur volonté à la leur. Comme les sorciers, toujours, ils pouvaient être victimes de chocs en retour.

Il n'est pas étonnant, dans ces conditions, qu'on ait souvent confondu magiciens et sorciers, ni que certains magiciens se soient laissés aller à faire mauvais usage de leur science, ni enfin que les associations contemporaines comme le mbuli (bwili), destinées en principe à lutter contre la sorcellerie, lui empruntent ses techniques, même dans ce qu'elles ont de criminel.

A côté des magiciens proprement dits, un personnage qui joue un grand rôle dans tous les rites, y compris les initiations, est le chantre, ñgia bia. Chaque rite, chaque cérémonie importante a son accompagnement musical, avec un orchestre particulier dans chaque cas et un chef de cœur qui entonne les incantations et joue un peu le rôle de maître des cérémonies, sans personnellement participer directement au sacrifice ou à l'acte magique. Ce ñgia bia a la particularité d'assister aux trois grands rites, sé, ngil et ndôngô, comme à toutes les cérémonies magiques, quelle que soit l'appartenance du magicien : il semble ne pas tomber sous le coup des interdits de participation frappant les zeze bôl, gens du commun ou profanes. Il vend et achète ses chants, ou en hérite, n'est pas casté mais semble avoir joui autrefois d'une certaine immunité pendant les guerres, qui ne s'appliquait peut-être qu'aux plus réputés d'entre les begia bia. Il existe aussi des begia bia féminines jouissant des mêmes prérogatives dans les rites de femmes.

Le matériel magique comprend d'abord les instruments propres à chaque rite, tambours, cornes d'appel, grelots, cloches, harpe ngôma du bwili, etc., à quoi s'ajoute une très grande variété d'objets divers : chasse-mouches, akpanaza, parfois tronqué, cornes d'antilope contenant les mobiah, crânes et ossements humains et animaux, marmites et calebasses, lance gravée et décorée du magicien, masques, miroir brisé du bwili, bikpwôlé (« monnaie de dot » en fer), coquillages, etc. : chaque acte magique, chaque rite a les siens, dont la description complète nécessiterait autant de monographies. Indiquons simplement qu'une partie de ce matériel, affectée en permanence à des usages magiques, est ôlgi, interdite aux non-initiés et même parfois aux mingengeñ autres que leur propriétaire, que certaines pièces deviennent bilgi après avoir été utilisées une fois à cet usage alors que d'autres retombent dans l'usage commun, que d'autres enfin sont détruites après usage.

f) Interdits

Les bilgi, interdits, occupent une place considérable dans la vie des Pahouins. Mgr Martrou leur a consacré une étude spéciale (n° 159), très documentée mais encore incomplète tant ils sont nombreux et divers.

Le mot ôlgi dérive de la racine TYI/KI donnant l'idée de force (cf. supra, p. 104), d'autorité, mais aussi de coupure, et par là d'interdiction : lgik — couper, tuer, trancher, décider ; lgili — rendre tabou ; lgil — avoir un interdit (ôlgi est la forme nominale-résultante de ce dernier verbe) ; lgilan — être tabou.

Une énumération complète des bilyi est probablement impossible, mais on peut tenter une classification sommaire, en distinguant :

— les interdits alimentaires et les interdits d'action ;
— parmi les interdits d'action, les interdits protégeant certains animaux, les interdits de mariage et les interdits sexuels généraux ;
— les interdits individuels et les interdits collectifs ;
— les interdits héréditaires et les interdits personnels ;
— les interdits temporaires et les interdits permanents ;
— les interdits masculins, féminins et de classe d'âge ;
— les interdits ordinaires, zesé bilyi, les interdits capitaux, bilyi ewu (mortels).

L'ensemble constitue une sorte de réseau enveloppant tous les actes, tous les comportements individuels et sociaux. L'action des missions et l'évolution générale en ont fait disparaître certains ou ont atténué les conséquences immédiates des infractions, minsem, mais il en reste suffisamment et suffisamment sanctionnés pour que toute la vie courante en soit influencée.

Le nsem, rupture d'interdit, a des conséquences variées qui vont de l'indisposition légère à la mort et comportent presque toujours la réprobation sociale. Le nsem peut être inconscient, le coupable ignorant que l'acte accompli lui était interdit, soit qu'on ne le lui ait pas appris, soit que l'ôlyi lui ait été imposé à son insu par un magicien.

Certains bilyi paraissent liés au totémisme ; ce sont les bilyi mebum, interdits de protection, qui défendent aux membres de tel clan de tuer tel animal ou de manger de telle plante. D'autres sont sans doute liés à la structure sociale, comme les interdits de sexe ou de classe d'âge dont la rupture porte atteinte à la hiérarchie familiale. D'autres encore peuvent être qualifiés d'hygiéniques : interdits de grossesse, interdits de maladie et de convalescence. Il en est de magiques : interdits personnels sur tel animal apparu en songe après l'initiation familiale, ou imposés à l'entrée dans une association ; interdits lancés par un magicien, souvent par vengeance ; interdits-vœux pour obtenir un résultat déterminé. Binet a vu chez les Beti des femmes s'imposer l'ôlyi de certaines nourritures pendant une année, à l'issue de laquelle on organise une fête qui leur vaut de nombreux cadeaux de leurs parents et amis ; ceci paraît récent et serait peut-être une déviation de certaines pratiques catholiques.

Il semble qu'autrefois, à la suite d'une guerre ou d'une alliance, ou de l'existence d'une relation d'amitié, deux clans aient pu s'engager à respecter chacun l'interdit classique de l'autre. D'autre part, les femmes mariées, bien que n'entrant pas dans le clan de leur mari, étaient, dans une certaine mesure, tenues d'en respecter les bilyi.

Les minsem peuvent être expiés par un rachat, ngôlô, selon des rites divers (ôlya, mekon pour les hommes ; ôdôlô pour les femmes), comportant une confession publique et un sacrifice (pour les femmes, le sacrifice est offert par le père ou le mari, la femme subissant des sévices corporels).

Certains bilgi personnels peuvent être levés (kui ètyi — sortir d'interdit) par une procédure analogue à celle du rachat d'un nsem. Ce n'est jamais possible pour les interdits généraux de sexe, d'âge ou de clan.

Les premiers prosélytes chrétiens ont dû faire preuve d'un véritable héroïsme pour renoncer à leurs bilgi, ayant à surmonter non seulement leurs craintes personnelles, parfois au prix de véritables crises psycho-physiologiques, mais encore la réprobation sociale unanime et souvent la vengeance de leur famille qui attribuait à leurs mimsem tous les malheurs qui pouvaient la frapper. On peut dire que seule cette première génération de chrétiens est parvenue à abandonner à peu près complètement les bilgi. Les générations suivantes, beaucoup plus nombreuses, ont continué à en observer une quantité, tous ceux en tout cas qui ne gênaient pas ouvertement la pratique du culte. On voit même depuis quelques années les interdits exogamiques reprendre une sévérité qui va à l'encontre des conceptions canoniques du mariage (cf. supra, p. 56).

g) Évolution actuelle de la sorcellerie et de la magie

Même dans les zones les plus anciennement christianisées, les Paholuins contemporains continuent à croire à la magie et à la sorcellerie, ce qui n'est d'ailleurs pas contraire aux enseignements des Écritures. Les mbibiat concurrencent les bedikèlè européens ou africains, les mingengut les exorcistes, les mòmòl'i les gendarmes... Les begem tuent encore parfois pour nourrir leur âme et j'ai connu un praticien du bòn qui tenta d'utiliser son art pour briguer un mandat électoral.

Mais magie et sorcellerie ont évolué depuis l'arrivée des Européens dans le sens d'un syncrétisme parfois baroque. Les schismes ecclésiastiques n'entraînent pas un retour intégral aux anciennes pratiques mais une sorte de greffe de ce qui en subsiste sur un support d'inspiration chrétienne, à quoi s'ajoute souvent un ésotérisme à bon marché emprunté aux mages et fakirs de la métropole. Les talismans, parfums d'amour et bijoux magiques arrivent par quintaux à chaque courrier de France. Les initiations disparues ressuscitent sous l'apparence de parodies de la messe ou de l'ordination, ou encore de brimades souvent obscènes. Ce qu'il y avait de plus valable dans la pharmacopée locale est de plus en plus oublié au bénéfice des spécialités modernes utilisées à tort et à travers, l'aspect magique survivant seul, vidé de sa signification ancienne et par là de son caractère fonctionnel.

Certes, le christianisme a « pris » sur le pays, comme a « pris » la médecine européenne. La question est de savoir jusqu'à quelle profondeur. Il est certain, en tout cas, que les pratiques anciennes, pour bouleversées qu'elles aient été, n'en subsistent pas moins, sous des formes nouvelles, floues et changeantes et qui sont encore loin d'atteindre à la stabilité. Il en résulte un constant malaise, une crise d'adaptation dont l'issue est imprévisible.

En écartant toute prise de position religieuse ou idéologique, il semble cependant qu'on puisse dire dès maintenant qu'une des révolutions les plus importantes apportées par les missions a été de faire participer les femmes au même culte que les hommes.

4) Arts et littérature

La principale forme d'art plastique était autrefois la sculpture, sur bois ou sur stéatite. Outre les masques des associations, du ngil notamment, on sculptait des statues d'ancêtres en pied ou en simple masque, et des statues destinées aux cérémonies rituelles. Les tambours, les sièges, les arbalètes, parfois les coffres d'importation étaient décorés en demi-relief. Les traits du masque étaient peu accusés, les attitudes des statues assez figées, alors que les sujets en demi-relief, animaux en particulier, étaient souvent très vivants.

Les sculpteurs étaient des initiés des différents rites ; avec le recul de ceux-ci la sculpture traditionnelle a très largement disparu, remplacée, grâce à l'œuvre des écoles et des missions, par des travaux sur bois ou ivoire en style Barbès ou Saint-Sulpice. Une intéressante tentative faite à l'école professionnelle d'Ébolowa, de 1946 à 1950, par le directeur Lecoq, n'a guère eu de suite. On constate cependant quelques signes laissant espérer, à côté de la sculpture commerciale pour touristes, extrêmement florissante, la naissance d'un art chrétien qui sera peut-être original.

Cette constatation vaut pour la peinture : certaines fresques décorant des chapelles catholiques, en pays éwôndô spécialement, paraissent être des manifestations d'un art nouveau. La peinture est d'ailleurs actuellement l'art populaire par excellence, sous forme de fresques à l'intérieur et à l'extérieur des cases. Outre les sujets religieux, on voit fréquemment des peintures animalières, des scènes familières, des portraits de célébrités locales ou mondiales. Un Boulou de Sangmélima, David Monewoso, a fixé les traits des héros du roman Nnanga kôn dans de multiples fresques en pays bulu. Tout ceci constitue une nouveauté, car l'art traditionnel usait peu de la peinture sous cette forme : les cases étaient décorées plutôt de figures géométriques à sens ésotérique, n'utilisant guère que les trois couleurs traditionnelles, rouge, noir et blanc. Le dessin se manifestait surtout par des gravures, au burin ou au fer rouge, sur les objets en bois, parfois par des dessins au fusain sur les murs ou rochers.

La littérature a été uniquement orale jusqu'à la colonisation. Il n'est cependant pas exact de dire que les Pahouins ignoraient absolument l'écriture. Outre les quipos (biat nzephe — ? —, d'après Largeau) et les mekuta ekôt, faisceaux de petits bâtons entaillés, permettant de correspondre suivant un code, ils possédaient une sorte de pictographie, ndilon, avec plusieurs dizaines, sinon plusieurs centaines, de signes, mindem. Ceux-ci nous sont connus (mal) par les jetons du jeu d'ekôn, sorte de tarot, servant aussi bien à jouer qu'à prédire l'avenir, dont les lames sont faites avec les graines, ou plutôt les coques des amandes d'une mimosée commune en forêt (Intrapiours thonningii, d'après Trilles). Ces signes avaient une signification apparente, connue de tous, et une signification ésotérique, réservée aux initiés. Ils permettaient, sinon de transcrire intégralement les traditions, du moins de dessiner des espèces d'aide-mémoire à l'usage des beyia bia. Ils permettaient également à des éclaireurs de laisser des messages au gros qui les suivait. Chaque clan, chaque famille avait son ndem particulier, parfois décrit dans son indicatif tambourinné, ndan, qui constituait ainsi la devise d'une sorte de blason.

La littérature ancienne comprenait les histoires ou contes, minlaß, les chants, bia, et les chroniques, minkußele.

Les contes (dont le principal recueil est dû à Trilles, n° 165) prenaient souvent la forme de fabliaux dont le héros n'était autre qu'Ol'Br'er Terrapin, Kulu (forme emphatique ou personnalisée de kul), la tortue de terre (cinguis erosa), entourée de Beme, le cochon sauvage, bête et glouton, Ze, la panthère, méchante et sournoise, son ennemie principale, Ze'o, l'éléphant, roi des animaux, Abép, l'araignée, rusée et serviable, et la plupart des autres animaux de la forêt (sauf, semble-t-il, les serpents, qu'on n'aime jamais nommer). Kulu finit toujours par se tirer, grâce à son astuce, des mauvais pas où l'ont mis son esprit caustique ou la vieille inimitié qui l'oppose à Ze. On racontait aussi des histoires de magiciens, ou des contes sur les misères conjugales d'ancêtres supposés. Tous les contes de ce genre étaient dans le domaine public et récités par qui s'en sentait capable. Il en allait de même des devinettes et énigmes qu'échangeaient les jeunes gens en manière de flirt.

Les chants, au contraire, étaient affaire de spécialistes, même en dehors des chants rituels ou magiques. Certains accompagnaient les danses ; ils constituaient l'expression musicale la plus complète, les paroles devant, par leur ton, suivre la musique tout en ayant un rapport avec les figures de la danse ; on trouve encore des beyia bia capables de diriger ainsi une danse en improvisant, mais ils sont rares et se font payer très cher. Subsistent également les joueurs de mesé, harpe-guitare, dont le répertoire comprend, outre de vieilles légendes chantées, des à-propos modernes, souvent satiriques, parfois sur des airs européens adaptés à l'instrument. Le chant choral, enfin, est tout à fait à la mode, sur des airs d'importation, souvent considérablement améliorés par l'interprétation locale, qui use largement de la fugue et du contrepoint. Malheureusement, ces airs modernes ne sont pas appropriés à la tonétique de la langue qu'ils tendent à détériorer lorsqu'on leur adapte des paroles.

Les chroniques, minkußele, dont les salutations, mebulan, étaient en quelque sorte les digestes, faisaient partie de l'éducation traditionnelle et n'étaient récitées que dans des circonstances solennelles ; elles tendent à tomber dans l'oubli, en raison de l'effort de mémoire considérable qu'elles exigeaient et du temps qu'il fallait consacrer à les apprendre par cœur, sans parler du fait qu'elles contenaient des passages incompréhensibles, peut-être empruntés aux tribus qui voisinaient avec les Pahouins avant leur grande migration.

Les systèmes de transcription introduits par les missionnaires ont servi d'abord à des traductions des Écritures et à la composition de cantiques, qui n'ont pas toujours amélioré la langue, mais n'en sont pas moins devenues classiques, en dépit des erreurs ou des impropriétés qu'elles contiennent souvent. Après ces œuvres, rédigées par des Européens en langue du pays, on en a vu rapidement apparaître rédigées, elles, par des Pahouins écrivant leur propre langue. La plus remarquable est sans doute le Nnangu kôn du Boulou Jemba Medu, qui dépeint la vie des Boulou au moment de l'arrivée des premiers Blancs (nnangu kôn = albinos fantôme) ; c'est, à ma connaissance, le seul roman rédigé dans une des langues du groupe ; sa popularité est extrême, au point que ses personnages sont entrés dans le folklore bulu contemporain.

Il existe une presse missionnaire au Gabon et au Cameroun ; les plus forts tirages sont ceux du Nlob Bekristen (Guide des Chrétiens) (évondô, catholique) et de Mefoé (Les nouvelles) (bulu, protestant), ce dernier étant lu jusqu'au Gabon. La presse laïque en langue française est sans grand intérêt, ses titres étant d'ailleurs généralement éphémères.

L'apparition d'une littérature pahouine de langue française est un phénomène récent, et remarqué. MM. Oyono et Eza Boto-Mongo Beti sont tous deux Camerounais, ni le Gabon, ni la Guinée Espagnole n'ayant fourni de romancier jusqu'à présent.

La danse s'est considérablement appauvrie en perdant son ancien caractère rituel. Jadis, à chaque cérémonie, à chaque rite, à chaque circonstance de la vie correspondait une danse particulière, dans laquelle la composition de l'orchestre comme les mouvements des danseurs et leur costume avaient une signification symbolique très précise. Beaucoup de ces danses ont disparu, soit qu'elles aient perdu leur raison d'être (danses de guerre, d'initiation, ...), soit qu'elles aient été interdites par l'administration et surtout par les missions comme chrétiennes ou païennes (danses de fécondité, de funérailles, médicales, ...). Celles qui subsistent ont maintenant un caractère récréatif ou purement artistique, qui n'était que très secondaire autrefois. Il est significatif que le nombre des danses mixtes ait considérablement augmenté et que presque toutes soient publiques, les spectateurs pouvant être de tous âges et de tous sexes.

En dépit de cet appauvrissement, les danses restent nombreuses et assez variées. Parmi les plus répandues, on peut citer :

— ésila : ancienne danse de fécondité, surtout faû et ntum ; orchestre de tambours verticaux, mbol et ngom, accompagnement « parlé » au tambour-téléphone, ekul ; dansée par des professionnelles (initiées mevungu ?), torse nu, grelots végétaux aux chevilles, jupe de peaux de chat sauvage non cousues, masque de bois attaché au bras gauche ; la première danseuse, deux ngom, s'enfonce une corne dans le vagin au cours de la danse ; il semble que les danseuses se dopent avec une décoction contenant notamment du chanvre indien ; cette danse est interdite par les missions, ce qui a provoqué plusieurs incidents ;

— mangat, ainsi appelée parce qu'elle est accompagnée par un orchestre de balafons, très répandue partout, seul, peut-être, chez les Boulou ; danse des jeunes filles et fillettes d'un village ; chaque village a son air particulier et son costume spécial pour le corps de ballet : ceinture en fibre de raphia, jupe et bonnet, style pâtissier, aux couleurs du village, soutien-gorge dans les villages chrétiens ;

— dogengé, parfois appelée njoman fulufilu, danse protestante (elle aurait été inspirée, en partant de la gymnastique rythmique suédoise, par un missionnaire germano-américain de la M.P.A., désireux de remplacer les danses « immorales » ; si non è vero...), surtout bulu, mais tend à se répandre dans le Nord-Gabon, sous l'égide du Mouvement de Regroupement Pahouin ; danse de jeunes femmes et jeunes filles, avec maître de ballet masculin, nlebe njoman, qui dirige au sifflet ; orchestre de tambours, nkul, mbut et ngom, hochets et flûtes ; chœur chanté par les danseuses ; robes blanches, mouchoir de tête uniforme, ceinture en foulard ; thèmes musicaux de village, d'association et de clan ; dansée dans les réjouissances, mebik, mesuk, civiles ou religieuses, les bisulan (réunions d'ngut,) etc. Paroles parfois satiriques ;

— ngut : danse d'hommes ou de femmes (plus rarement), ressemble à la précédente, qui s'est peut-être inspirée d'elle, mais plus gaillarde : paroles souvent obscènes, gestes scatologiques (dans l'ngut des hommes) ; origine probablement rituelle ; c'est une des rares danses masculines subsistant de nos jours ;

— akôma mbo : dansée par une ou deux jeunes femmes ; chœur de femmes et grand tambour vertical, mbut ; jupe en fibre de raphia, torse nu ; ancienne danse rituelle (mariages ?) ; mal vue des missions, devient rare ;

— ezilo : danse mixte moderne, assez érotique ; pas de costume ; instruments à percussion et hochets ; chœur mixte ; interdite par les missions.

Dans les villes les danses européennes, ou américaines, se répandent sous le nom générique de « tango », encore que le rythme, du moins lorsqu'elles ne sont pas accompagnées au phonographe, soit plutôt, en général, celui d'une biguine, souvent fugué.

Le théâtre, jadis inconnu, commence à faire son apparition, en partie sous l'influence des mouvements de jeunesse importés. On voit souvent jouer dans les bisulan des sayynètes en forme de moralités, ou des sketches satiriques s'apparentant à nos revues de chansonniers, où l'on ne se prive pas de brocarder les autorités.

[p. 128]

CHAPITRE VII

L'ÉVOLUTION

1) Organes de gouvernement local

L'émiettement caractéristique des clans pahouins rend difficile la mise sur pied d'une organisation cohérente. Le heurt entre le système du droit personnel et celui du droit territorial est net : dans la mesure où il accepte une autorité supérieure à celle du chef de famille, le Pahouin dépend du chef de son ayuè, qui réside parfois à plusieurs centaines de kilomètres. Ce pouvoir était de caractère sacré et basé sur les lois du sang. Aux côtés de lui, dès avant l'arrivée des Européens, d'autres influences agissaient et tendaient à grouper les hommes non plus en raison de leur parenté mais en raison de relations de vicinité. Chez les Fang du Cameroun par exemple, dès 1880, un chef avait réuni sous ses ordres des familles appartenant à divers clans, et les avait entraînées dans des expéditions contre des villages maka. Parmi les vaincus, il se réservait de jeunes enfants, les élevait, les établissait, se créant ainsi, en dehors de sa famille par le sang, en dehors de sa tribu même, un groupe d'hommes dévoués à sa personne.

Au pouvoir clanique, il superposait donc une autorité qui prenait un caractère interclanique et même intertribal. Parmi les peuples beti de la région de Yaoundé, un système voisin fut employé. Les clans avaient plus de cohérence que chez les Fang ou les Boulou. Mais, le chef, outre son propre meng, commandait des familles conquises, beloa ou beloa bilen, qu'il allotissait de terres à la limite de sa mouvance.

Le passage du commandement basé sur la loi du sang au commandement territorial est déjà perceptible.

En face de l'anarchie pahouine qui annihilait tous leurs efforts d'organisation, les Européens essayèrent inconsciemment de renforcer la tendance vers un commandement territorial.

Depuis l'époque des grandes invasions, en effet, le jus soli s'est avéré être un principe d'ordre, alors que le jus sanguinis entraîne mille difficultés d'application et ne permet guère de gouverner.

Mais par un paradoxe singulier, la présence des Européens favorisait des principes juridiques opposés à ce qu'ils auraient pu souhaiter. Les guerres tribales amenaient un regroupement autour du guerrier victorieux et lui permettaient de se tailler une seigneurie. Les migrations désordonnées des Pahouins distendaient les liens claniques : quelles relations familiales peuvent survivre à un éloignement durable, surtout lorsque les voyages sont rares et dangereux ? Ces facteurs auraient amené la création d'entités territoriales. Au contraire, la paix, qui permettait la reprise des relations, l'amélioration de la circulation, la liberté individuelle, favorisait un retour au droit du sang, et l'individu, jeune homme ou chef de famille, se sentait profondément membre d'une communauté, éparse sur plusieurs milliers de kilomètres carrés, alors qu'il ne se sentait pas profondément lié à son voisin, d'un autre ayoñ.

L'administration coloniale allemande, pour résoudre ce problème difficile, avait découpé le pays en très grandes chefferies, solution possible si le pays n'avait pas été un puzzle ethnique en même temps qu'un puzzle clanique. Si le terroir des grandes tribus (Boulou, Bané, Ewôndô, etc.) avait été à peu près homogène, il eût été concevable de confier chaque région à un chef, au-dessus du morcellement clanique. Mais l'enchevêtrement des ethnies et leur extrême dispersion rendaient toute solution précaire. L'autorité n'était pas toujours acceptée sans difficulté et, parmi des populations de tendance anarchique, une aristocratie suffisamment maîtresse d'elle-même pour s'imposer de ne pas commettre d'abus n'est pas facile à recruter. Le système des grands apanages n'eut pas le temps de s'enraciner profondément dans le pays. Les chefs de cantons et chefs de villages gouvernent également des territoires plus limités mais bien précisés. Représentants du principe du jus soli, leur influence est combattue par les mouvements claniques, qui incarnent le jus sanguinis.

Au Gabon, les leaders pahouins avaient songé à mélanger les deux courants. Partant de la constatation que les villages étaient trop petits, ils préconisaient un regroupement qui eût à la fois permis des chefferies plus fortes et un début de rassemblement des clans.

Il ne semble pas que le regroupement des meyoñ ait été envisagé dans son ensemble et que l'on ait songé à l'attribution d'un terroir à chaque clan, ce qui aurait réglé, au moins provisoirement, le conflit entre le droit réel et le droit personnel. Une solution fragmentaire était seule envisagée : la constitution de villages importants et claniquement homogènes (1). En fait, et malgré les mille difficultés d'un transfert de population, le regroupement pouvait permettre de donner à la chefferie un prestige nouveau, en confirmant son caractère de pouvoir territorial d'une part et en la liant de l'autre aux traditions des meyoñ. Dans l'état actuel en effet, les cantons et les villages mêmes renferment des représentants de tous les clans. Qui donc pourrait, si l'on s'attachait à suivre les règles purement traditionnelles, exercer une autorité sur une population aussi bigarrée ? Divers systèmes sont employés pour choisir les chefs. Ici, on s'attache à investir l'héritier légitime de la lignée du fondateur du village. Ailleurs, on cherche un représentant de l'ayoñ le plus nombreux. Assez fréquemment, au Cameroun en particulier, on estime que la désignation du chef par élections permet à la population de manifester son opinion, quelles que soient les motivations de son choix. Le mouvement de regroupement des villages pouvait-il permettre la création d'une structure nouvelle, mieux adaptée ? Une flambée d'enthousiasme a soulevé la population fang, persuadée que le système nouveau permettrait de résoudre tous les problèmes comme une formule magique, sans sacrifice ni des formules traditionnelles, ni de l'anarchie individuelle.

(1) J. Aubame, Renaissance gabonaise, Brazzaville, 1947 (n° 171) ; Balandier et Pauvert (n° 177).

Au Cameroun, quelques années auparavant, le mouvement de regroupement des mayuñ avait paru également susceptible de régler toutes les difficultés. Davantage lié aux institutions traditionnelles, le mouvement d'organisation des mayuñ se proposait simplement de réglementer la vie intellectuelle et morale des groupes, en codifiant les coutumes, en notant des traditions, et en créant par des réunions périodiques, des danses et des chants, une conscience collective, une âme commune du clan. Contrairement au mouvement gabonais, le mouvement des bisulan ne rentra guère dans le domaine du concret, de l'économique.

Il est intéressant de souligner que ce mouvement ne mettait pas en cause la répartition administrative en régions et subdivisions. Les bisulan, en effet, ne semblent pas avoir élevé de critique contre ce découpage et le public du Dja-et-Lobo manifesta même vivement son désir de voir Bangmélima érigée en région et séparée administrativement de la région du Ntem.

En effet, si l'organisation locale, aux échelons les plus élémentaires, n'a pas trouvé son assiette, il semble qu'à un niveau plus élevé elle soit bien incorporée au pays. Lors de leur arrivée en pays pahouin, les puissances européennes, la France, l'Allemagne, l'Espagne ont installé un réseau de postes où résidaient les représentants de l'autorité. Dans ce pays, qui manquait de noyaux de cristallisation, le chef-lieu de subdivision est devenu une ville avec ses multiples fonctions, administrative, judiciaire, culturelle (missions, écoles), économique (gare routière, commerce). Une étude sur les voyages de la population rurale dans le Sud-Cameroun montre bien que ces villes ne sont plus des centres artificiels, mais constituent véritablement des points d'attraction. C'est vers le chef-lieu de leur subdivision que se dirigent 37 % des voyageurs. Les motivations indiquées sont extrêmement variées : les voyageurs se rendent à la subdivision pour des raisons professionnelles (1,3 % de cas), pour s'y faire soigner (2 %), pour y régler des affaires matrimoniales (9,5 %), pour y visiter leur famille (10,5 %), pour leur simple agrément (23 %), pour y régler des affaires avec les services publics (état civil, justice, bureaux divers, 45 % des cas). L'importance des contacts avec l'administration n'a pas besoin d'être soulignée. Aussi a-t-on pensé, au Cameroun, qu'il était nécessaire de déconcentrer encore l'appareil administratif, de le mettre plus à la portée de la population : des créations de nouvelles subdivisions dans la région de Yaoundé, des créations de postes administratifs en pays bulu ont marqué cette orientation. Tout se passe comme si les Pahouins, ressentant confusément les insuffi-sances de leur organisation traditionnelle, cherchaient à les remplacer par ces institutions nouvelles et étrangères.

6: Alexandre and Binet FH9 Fang

Afin d'éviter que la population ne remette totalement son sort aux mains de l'organisation européenne, et ne refuse ensuite tout effort personnel pour l'amélioration de ses conditions de vie, l'administration française s'est efforcée, en même temps qu'elle déconcentrait l'autorité, de la décentraliser. S'il était utile de multiplier les agents du pouvoir central au contact avec la population, il était plus nécessaire encore de donner à la population ou à ses représentants l'occasion de gérer des services et d'organiser la vie collective.

La justice civile fut ainsi largement décentralisée. A côté des tribunaux de 1er et 2e degré, où les chefs de subdivision, de région jugeaient selon la coutume, entourés d'assesseurs africains, de nombreux tribunaux « coutumiers » furent créés où aucun des juges n'était fonctionnaire. Dans la plupart des cas, les chefs furent ainsi nommés présidents de tribunaux coutumiers et se firent assister de notables et de secrétaires. Le nombre des affaires traitées permet de penser que la réforme a été utile. Si la nature des litiges n'a aucun intérêt quant à l'organisation du gouvernement local, elle mérite pourtant d'être indiquée par les lumières qu'elle apporte sur les points de friction existant entre les individus.

Au Cameroun, la répartition est la suivante : diverses, 38 % ; libération de veuves, 6 % ; adultère, 9 % ; droit immobilier, 17 %. Tels sont les principaux litiges : les institutions matrimoniales probablement mal adaptées forment le contingent essentiel.

La création de conseils municipaux urbains et ruraux permit ensuite une décentralisation financière. Des villes, sous le nom de communes urbaines, des cantons et parfois des subdivisions entières sous le nom de communes rurales reçurent la personnalité juridique, eurent un domaine à gérer, un budget à établir. Des conseillers élus, sous la présidence d'un maire nommé, durent étudier des plans de travaux routiers, établir des programmes de construction ou d'entretien, discuter de taxes ou d'impôts et veiller au bon équilibre financier.

Dans les villes, la chose n'était pas neuve, mais son extension à de vastes zones rurales était une expérience. Les pays bulu ou béti, où aucune structure traditionnelle solide ne risquait de se trouver offensée par ces méthodes nouvelles, étaient le lieu idéal pour expérimenter une organisation nouvelle.

A travers les élections organisées pour pourvoir ces postes de conseillers, on voit se dégager les traits les plus saillants de la nouvelle élite, les caractéristiques de l'aristocratie ou de l'oligarchie qui se fera porter au pouvoir.

Des esprits chagrins avaient manifesté la crainte que de telles élections, faites à un suffrage quasi universel, ne bouleversent les valeurs sociales classiques et n'entament le prestige des élites actuellement dirigeantes.

C'était oublier que dans ce pays pratiquement sans hiérarchie, nul ne peut conserver une autorité si l'opinion publique ne le soutient.

6: Alexandre and Binet FH9 Fang

Dans une société féodale, l'octroi du bulletin de vote à des vassaux peut ébranler le pouvoir des seigneurs. Il en est autrement ici, où les chefs de village ou de canton sont désignés le plus souvent par élection.

Les hommes d'âge ont conservé en face des jeunes gens une position privilégiée. La comparaison de la pyramide d'âge des conseillers avec celle de l'ensemble de la population mâle adulte le montre facilement.

RÉPARTITION PAR AGE

Classe d'âge	Conseillers municipaux élus	Ensemble de la population mâle adulte (1) (Nyong-et-Sanaga)
	%	%
20 à 30 ans	9	16
30 à 40 —	23	39
40 à 50 —	37	28
Plus de 50 —	30	15

Les jeunes gens sont faiblement représentés. Les hommes mûrs de 30 à 40 ans ont une représentation proportionnée à leur importance dans la population totale. Au contraire, les hommes de 40 à 50 ans ou de groupes plus âgés sont fortement représentés : l'influence électorale n'a donc pas été confisquée par les jeunes.

Il ne semble pas non plus que les pauvres, plus nombreux que les riches, les aient éliminés à la faveur du scrutin. En se basant sur la possession de certaines richesses, on peut affirmer que les conseillers municipaux sont beaucoup plus riches que le commun.

Les chiffres présentés ci-dessous pour l'ensemble de la population n'ont pas une valeur absolue. Mais, extraits d'un recensement complet et récent, ils peuvent être considérés comme de bonnes approximations.

RÉPARTITION DES SIGNES EXTÉRIEURS DE RICHESSE
(pour 100 individus)

	Maisons en maçonnerie	Bicyclettes	Automobiles
	%	%	%
Conseillers municipaux	27	50	11
Population mâle adulte de la ville d'Ebolowa	1,4	21	0,3

Ce n'est pas en vain que les Pahouins emploient le mot nkukuma (riche) pour désigner le chef. Les leaders choisis sont des riches.

(1) Evalués d'après les recensements établis par les subdivisions — documents qui ne sont pas parfaits mais qui donnent néanmoins des indications.

L'étude de la situation matrimoniale permet de préciser encore la personnalité des élus : les polygames sont beaucoup plus nombreux parmi eux que dans l'ensemble de la population.

RÉPARTITION PAR STATUT MATRIMONIAL

	Conseillers municipaux	Échantillon de la population totale de la zone Bondoro et Beti (1)
	%	%
Polygames	43	23
Monogames	43	63
Célibataires	3	14

Les conseillers sont souvent polygames, ce qui s'explique compte tenu de leur âge relativement élevé et de leur fortune.

Vieux détenteurs des richesses, polygames, les élus incarnent-ils toutes les façons traditionnelles, en opposition avec la jeunesse évoluée ? L'examen des professions, du niveau d'instruction, de la religion montre que la réalité est plus complexe.

RÉPARTITION PAR PROFESSION

	Conseillers municipaux	Population mâle adulte de la région du Nyong-et-Dondge (2)
	%	%
Chefs	30	1,8
Planteurs	30	85
Fonctionnaires	14	0,5
Employés de commerce	3	1
Commerçants	10	7
Artisans	5	7
Catéchistes, moniteurs des Missions	9	2,5

Si l'on établit un indice de la puissance électorale tenant compte du pourcentage dans les conseils et du pourcentage dans la population totale, on constate que les fonctionnaires viennent en tête de fort loin (70). Les chefs viennent ensuite (17), puis les employés de commerce (3) et les commerçants (1,4). La répartition par degré d'instruction confirme cette influence des intellectuels que l'on pouvait pressentir à travers le classement professionnel.

(1) Échantillon pris au hasard pour l'étude des budgets familiaux, 1954, op. cit.
(2) Selon rapport administratif annuel. Il s'agit d'approximations, Yaoundé-Ville est exclue.

RÉPARTITION PAR DEGRÉ D'INSTRUCTION

	Conseillers municipaux	Population mâle adulte du Nyong-et-Sanaga
	%	%
Illettrés	10	75
Lettrés en langue locale	9	?
Lettrés en français	60	17
Titulaires du C.E.P.	10	8 (1)
Titulaires de diplômes supérieurs	2,4	0,3
Fiches inutilisables	8

L'énorme influence des titulaires des diplômes supérieurs est évidente, et les illettrés sont pratiquement éliminés, bien qu'ils restent nombreux.

Ainsi cette élite nouvelle, qui se dégage des élections municipales, paraît constituée d'hommes à la fois traditionalistes et modernes. Les hommes qui la composent, hommes âgés, riches, tenants de l'ancienne polygamie, ont reçu une formation scolaire. Il ne faut pas s'y tromper, en effet, dans ce pays il n'y a pas entre fonctionnaires et chefs un véritable fossé.

Ainsi les conseils municipaux peuvent permettre à une élite de se dégager et de prendre des responsabilités.

2) Le Pahouin et l'avenir

Modelés par leur histoire, les Pahouins lui doivent leurs qualités et leurs défauts.

D'avoir été conquérants, ou plus précisément d'avoir pu s'installer sur des terres nouvelles, ils ont gardé un certain orgueil, une certaine confiance en eux-mêmes. Sans être brutalement xénophobes, ils gardent devant les étrangers une attitude amicale mais un tantinet méprisante, tant ils ont l'impression d'être supérieurs.

Ils ont eu la chance d'être évangélisés et scolarisés très tôt, du moins au Cameroun. Intelligents (les tests faits au Cameroun sur la population scolaire montrent que les Boulou viennent en tête, avec les Bamoun), ils ont fourni à l'administration et au commerce une fraction importante de ses cadres et, lorsqu'ils émigrent, ils ne fournissent pas une main-d'œuvre non spécialisée mais du personnel qualifié, souvent des employés. C'est dire leur influence.

Enfin, grâce au cacao, ils ont acquis une certaine richesse et vivent dans un certain confort. C'est dire leur rôle essentiel dans la vie économique. C'est dire aussi leur influence sur les finances locales. Au Cameroun comme au Gabon, le pays pahouin est une région riche dont les exportations et les importations alimentent une fraction impor-

(1) La statistique régionale indique « primaire complet » et non pas « C.E.P.». La nuance peut être grande. Une étude de la population urbaine d'Ebolowa donne un taux inférieur : 6,4 % de certifiés.

6: Alexandre and Binet FH9 Fang

tante des budgets. Les Pahouins jouent donc un rôle essentiel dans la vie des territoires et peuvent obtenir pour leur pays un équipement privilégié. Routes, écoles, dispensaires sont déjà nombreux.

Mais leur défaut traditionnel d'organisation les gêne dans certains métiers. Ils méprisent le commerce et y réussissent médiocrement parce que leur anarchie naturelle ne les prédispose pas à saisir l'intérêt de l'association, de l'organisation du marché. L'absence de noyaux urbains est plus gênante encore, la ville est une nouveauté où les immigrés sont nombreux et ont pu se créer des situations solides puisque rien n'existait avant eux.

Il est vrai que leur défaut de structure ancienne les laisse libres d'adopter sans gêne et sans remords les structures modernes. Pour eux, la démocratie n'est pas comme pour une société féodale, un germe de révolution. Elle va dans leur sens. On peut donc espérer que ce système pourra permettre chez eux la naissance de nouvelles élites.

J. B.

[p. 136 is blank]

BIBLIOGRAPHIE ANALYTIQUE SOMMAIRE

Outre les ouvrages signalés ci-dessous, se reporter, entre autres, aux périodiques suivants :

Africa.
African Abstracts.
Anthropos.
Archivos del Instituto de Estudios Africanos (A.I.E.A.).
Bulletin de l'I.F.A.N., série « Populations » (B.I.F.A.N.P.).
Bulletin de la Société d'Études camerounaises, actuellement section Cameroun de l'I.F.A.N. (B.S.E.C.).
Bulletin de la Société de Recherches congolaises (B.S.R.C.).
Bulletin de l'Institut d'Études centrafricaines (B.I.E.C.).
Journal de la Société des Africanistes (J.S.A.).
Journal de la Société des Missions évangéliques de Paris.

Et à la presse locale, entre autres :

Radio-Presse du Cameroun : a publié des contes et, en 1949-50, une tribune libre sur les questions matrimoniales.
Cameroun catholique (Le).
Guinea española (La).
Journal des villages de Nyong-et-Sanaga.
Journaux officiels du Cameroun, du Gabon et de l'A.E.F., Notices officielles, espagnoles.
Mefoé.
Niob Bekristen.

Pour le Cameroun, les Rapports annuels à la S.D.N. puis à l'O.N.U., contiennent de nombreux renseignements, en particulier sur l'évolution sociale, politique et économique ; voir aussi les publications de l'O.M.S.

Beaucoup des ouvrages cités contiennent des bibliographies, partiellement reprises ci-après : voir notamment Trilles (n° 166), Dugast (n° 133), Balandier (n° 175), Baumann et Westermann (n° 5), Leroi-Gourhan et Poirier (n° 25), Encyclopédie de l'Union française (n°s 37 et 38).

Les archives administratives, tant dans les postes que dans les bureaux politiques des chefs-lieux, constituent une source très riche, partiellement exploitée au Gabon par Balandier, au Cameroun par Binet, Mme Dugast et la sœur Marie-André du Sacré-Cœur. En outre, J.-P. Nicolas a pu microfilmer pour l'I.F.A.N. certains documents conservés à Yaoundé.

I. — Bibliographie

1. Bibliographie ethnographique du Congo belge et des régions avoisinantes, Musée royal du Congo belge, Tervueren, Belgique (dernier volume, 1953, paru en 1956).
2. Bruel (G.), Bibliographie de l'A.E.F., Paris, Larose, 1915, 326 p.
3. Sanner (P.), Bibliographie ethnographique de l'A.E.F., Paris, 1949.

[p. 137]

6: Alexandre and Binet FH9 Fang

II. — Géographie, explorations ouvrages généraux sur l'Afrique

4. Baguena Corella (L.), Manuales del Africa española : I. Guinea, Madrid, C.S.I.C., 1950, 176 p., ill., cartes.
5. Baumann (H.) et Westermann (D.), Les peuples et civilisations de l'Afrique, Paris, Payot, 1948, 605 p., ill.

Pour Baumann, les « Fan » sont un peuple d'origine soudanaise, venu de la Haute Sangha et fondu avec les habitants Bantu de la région envahie. Linguistiquement bantu. Culturellement rangés dans cercle « Congolais du Nord ».

6. Bonifacce (G.), Géographie du Cameroun, Yaoundé, Imprimerie du Gouvernement, s. d., 80 p.
7. Bouchaud (J.), Histoire et géographie du Cameroun sous mandat français, Douala, Mission catholique, 1944.
8. Briault (M.), Dans la forêt du Gabon, études et scènes africaines, Paris, B. Grasset, 1920.
9. Briault (M.), Sous le zéro équatorial, Paris, Bloud & Gay, 1928, 247 p.
10. Brunel (G.), La France équatoriale africaine, Paris, Larose, 1935, 545 p., ill.
11. Chavannes (Charles), Les origines de l'A.E.F. Avec Brazza, souvenirs de la mission de l'Ouest africain (mars 1883-janvier 1886), Paris, Plon, 1936, 380 p., ill., cartes.
12. Chazelas (V.), Les territoires africains sous mandat de la France, Paris, Société d'Éditions géographiques, maritimes et coloniales, 1921, 240 p.
13. Compiègne (marquis de), L'Afrique équatoriale : I. Gabonais, Pahouins, Galloia ; II. Okanda, Bangouens, Ogyéba, Paris, Plon, 1875, 2 vol. de 360 p., ill.

M. de Compiègne ironise sur « Duchaillu » dont la particule lui fait soupçonner la sincérité. Il a tort.

14. Curnau (Ad.), Les sociétés primitives de l'Afrique équatoriale, Paris, A. Colin, 1912, 420 p., ill.
15. Delafosse (M.), Les civilisations négro-africaines, Paris, Stock, 1925, 142 p.
16. Delafosse (M.), Les noirs de l'Afrique, Paris, Payot & Cie, 1922, 180 p.
17. Du Chaillu (P.), Explorations and adventures in equatorial Africa, Londres, J. Murray, 1861.

A côté d'exagérations, parfois proches de la galéjade, contient des observations très précises et très précieuses sur l'invasion fang.

18. Froelich (J. C.), Cameroun-Togo, Paris, Berger-Levrault, 1956, 217 p., ill.
19. Froelich (J. C.), Carte des populations de l'Afrique noire (A.O.F. et A.E.F.), Paris, Documentation française, 1955, 1 carte avec catalogue de 113 p.
20. Haug (Ernest), Notice géographique et ethnographique sur le Bas Ogooué, Annales de Géographie, mars 1903, 12 p., carte.
21. Horn (A.), Trader Horn. La Côte-d'Ivoire (sic) aux temps héroïques, Paris, Stock, 1933, 303 p.

Le vieux M. Horn était un menteur beaucoup plus audacieux que Du Chaillu ; ses souvenirs restent cependant intéressants parce que ce sont, justement, ceux d'un « trader ».

22. Kingsley (M. H.), Travels in West Africa, Londres, McMillan & Co., 1897, 541 p.
23. Kingsley (M. H.), West african studies, Londres, 1901 (3e éd.).
24. Lembezat (B.), Le Cameroun, Paris, Éditions coloniales et maritimes, 1954, 350 p., ill., cartes.
25. Leroi-Gourhan (A.) et Pucheu (J.), Ethnologie de l'Union française, Paris, P.U.F., 1953.

Font venir les Fang du Bahr-el-Ghazal (d'après Bowdich, Gautier et Vallois).

26. Mauvis (Casimir), A travers l'Afrique centrale. Du Congo au Niger (1892-1893), Paris, Hachette, 1895, 307 p., cartes.
27. Nassau, My Ogowe, New York, Neale Publishing Co., 1914.
28. Nicod (H.), Sur les sentiers de l'Afrique équatoriale, Paris, Société des Missions évangéliques, 1921.
29. Passarge (S.), Gababrika und Kamerun, in Meyer (H.), Das Deutsche Koloniale Reich, Leipzig, Verlag des Bibliographischen Instituts, 1909, vol. I, pp. 419-450, ill.
30. Richard-Molard (J.), Groupements ethniques et civilisations nègres d'Afrique, Cahiers d'Outre-Mer, 1952, n° 17.

Brève et très bonne analyse de la réaction de « regroupement des ayang ».

31. Roche (J. B.), Au pays des Pahouins, du rio Mouny au Cameroun, Paris, Lavauzelle, 1904, 198 p., ill.
32. Schweinfurth (G.), Im Herzen von Afrika, Leipzig, 1878.

Rapprocherait les Fang des Zandé et Mangbetou.

33. Trezenem (Édouard), L'A.E.F., Paris, Éditions maritimes et coloniales, 1955, 208 p., cartes.
34. Valdi (F.), L'homme et la forêt : le Gabon, Paris, Rodier, 1931.
35. Wilbois (J.), Le Cameroun, Paris, Payot, 1934, 254 p.
36. Zeigle (H.), L'Afrique équatoriale française, Paris, Berger-Levrault, 1952, 199 p., ill.
37. X..., Encyclopédie de l'Union française, tome A.E.F., Paris, Encyclopédie coloniale et maritime, 1950, 300 p., ill.
38. X..., Encyclo...ie de l'Union française, tome Cameroun-Togo, Paris, Éditions de l'Union française, 1951, 574 p.

III. — Ouvrages d'ensemble

39. Alvès, Monographie des Dzem, B.S.R.C., 1930, n° 11.
40. Avelot (R.), Recherches sur l'histoire des migrations dans le bassin de l'Ogooué et la région littorale adjacente, in Bulletin de géographie historique et descriptive, vol. XX, 1905, n° 3, pp. 357-412, ill.
41. Cottes (A.), La mission Cottes au Sud-Cameroun (1905-1908), Paris, Larose, 1911, 254 p., ill.

Quelques renseignements anthropologiques, photos.

42. Cottes (A.), Pahouins et Pygmées, La géographie, 1908, t. XVIII, pp. 64-72.
43. Curault (capitaine), Monographie du secteur de N'Djolé au Gabon, Revue des troupes coloniales, 1908, pp. 186-209.
44. Dark (Ph.), Notes on the Eton of the southern French Cameroons, Man, 56, n° 132, sept. 1956.

6: Alexandre and Binet FH9 Fang

45. Faure (F.), En plein pays pahouin, Paris, Société des Missions évangéliques, 1931, 15 p., ill.
46. Gerbert (F.), Au Gabon, Paris, Société des Missions évangéliques, 1948 (3e éd.), 227 p., ill.

Concerne surtout les Fang de l'Ogooué ; bons dessins.

47. Gomez López (E.), En el país de los Pamues, Madrid, C.S.I.C., 160 p., ill.
48. Largeau (V.), Encyclopédie pahouine, Paris, E. Leroux, 1911, 700 p.

En dépit des critiques du P. Trilles qui reproche à Largeau d'ignorer le fang et d'avoir un key non initié, L'Encyclopédie est encore une mine de renseignements précieux, parfois plus exacts que ceux du R.P.

49. Lorcerreux, Notes sur les Pahouins, Paris, Bulletin de l'Agence générale des Colonies, février 1925, pp. 167-178.
50. Maunan (lieutenant), Études sur le pays Pahouin (1912), Revue des troupes coloniales, 1912, pp. 547-562 et 697-715.
51. Perrault (D. P. pères), L'origine des Fang, Tripiques, 1952, 50 vol., n° 348.

Versions de l'histoire traditionnelle recueillies auprès de notables du Sud Cameroun — dont certains ont été parmi nos propres informateurs. Difficilement utilisable en raison de la transcription fautive de certains noms.

52. Perrault (G.), Les Fang du pays Yaoundé, Cahiers d'Outre-Mer, 1949, n° 8.
53. Tessmann (G.), Die Völker und Sprachen Kameruns, Gotha, Petermann's geogr. Mitteilg., 1932, nos 5-6 et 7-8.
54. Tessmann (G.) et Wagner (E.), Die Pangwe, Volkerkundliche Monographie eines westafrikanischen Negerstammes, Berlin, Hansa verlag für mod. Literatur, 1913, 2 vol., xxi + 275 et 402 p., ill.

La grande somme sur l'ensemble du groupe, y compris les « pahouinisés » voisins. Vaudrait la peine d'être traduit, même après un demi-siècle.

55. Trilles (Édouard), Notes ethnographiques sur les tribus Fan du Moyen Ogooué, J.S.A., 1936, t. VI.

Un des meilleurs travaux récents sur les Fang gabonais ; malheureusement, la transcription de certains mots les rend méconnaissables.

56. Trilles (H.), Au pays Isu, Bulletin de la Société de Géographie de Lille, 1901.
57. Trilles (H.), Les Fan, où ils vont, d'où ils viennent, Bulletin des Missions catholiques, 1906.
58. Trilles (H.), Les Fang, croyances et religions, Bulletin de la Société de Géographie de Lille, 1907, XLVIII.
59. Trilles (H.), Quinze ans au pays Fan, Paris, Desclée, 1912.
60. Zenker (G.), Das Jaundeland, Mittel. v. Forschungsr. Gel. Deutsche Schutzgeb., 1895, pp. 149-157.
61. X..., Les tribus du Gabon, B.S.R.C., 1924, n° 3, pp. 55-101.

IV. — Linguistique

62. Alexandre (P.), Manuel élémentaire de langue bulu, Paris, Peyronnet, 1956, 237 p.
63. Baguena-Corella (L.), Toponimia de la Guinea continental española, Madrid, C.S.I.C., 500 p.

6: Alexandre and Binet FH9 Fang

64. Bates (G. L.) et Johnson (S. F.), Handbook of Bulu, Elst, Halsey Memorial Press, 1926, 176 p.

65. Echegaray (L. G.), Bibliografía lingüística de los territorios españoles de Guinea, A.I.E.A., 1958, VI, n° 27.

66. Echegaray (L. G.), Hacia la unificación ortográfica de la lengua pamúe, A.I.E.A., 1956, V, n° 19.

67. Echegaray (L. G.), Los sistemas de numeración y los numerales en los pueblos de la Guinea española, A.I.E.A., 1956, IV, n° 12.

68. Good (A. I.), Bulu handbook supplement, Elst, Halsey Memorial Press, 1934, 131 p.

Seul ouvrage à donner un glossaire des exclamatifs — descriptifs en ne qui jouent un rôle important dans la littérature orale.

69. Grappin (R.) et Pichon (F.), Grammaire ewondo, Paris, Procure des Pères du Saint-Esprit, s. d., 215 p.

70. Greenberg (J.), Étude sur la classification des langues africaines, B.I.F.A.N.F., t. XVI, n°s 1-2, janvier-avril 1954, pp. 63-142 ; t. XVII, n°s 1-2, janvier-avril 1955, pp. 59-108 ; ill.

Aucune référence spécifique au groupe pahouin, qui semble entrer dans la famille nigéro-congolaise.

71. Guillemin (L.), Le tambour d'appel des Ewondo, B.S.E.C., 1948, n°s 21-22, pp. 69-84.

Indispensable pour l'étude du nkul ; contient plusieurs notations de mindan (indicatifs), paroles et musique.

72. Guthrie (Malcolm), The classification of Bantu languages, Londres, Oxford University Press, 1948.

Classe les langues pahouines dans la zone A, groupe 60 des parlers bantu. Les caractérise par l'absence de genre de taille (inexact : classe di/a pour les petits objets, a/me pour les ensembles et objets de grande taille), et l'absence de corrélation des genres avec une idée (inexact).

73. Haarpaintner, Grammatik der Jaundé sprache, Anthropos, IV, 1909, pp. 684-701, 919-930.

74. Herpe (M.), Jaundé texte von K. Atangana und P. Messi, Abhandl. des Hamburg Kol. Inst., Hamburg, 1919, XXIV, 335 p.

75. Herpe (M.) et Nekes (P. H.), Jaundé Wörterbuch, Hamburg, Abhandl. des Ham. Kol. Inst., XXII, 1926, 257 p.

76. Homburger (Lysias), Les langues bantou, in Meillet, Les langues du monde, Paris, E. Champion, 1924, pp. 561-589.

77. Homburger (Lysias), Le langage et les langues, Paris, Payot, 1951, 256 p.

Décrit l'avance en « seul de mouton » des Pahouins. Classe leurs langues dans une famille à part, proche mais différente de celle des parlers bantu côtiers du Nord-Congo.

78. Homburger (Lysias), Les langues négro-africaines et les peuples qui les parlent, Paris, Payot, 1941, 350 p.

Classe les langues pahouines dans un groupe intermédiaire entre les langues soudanaises et bantu.

79. Lejeune (R. P.), Dictionnaire français-fang, précédé de quelques principes grammaticaux sur cette même langue, Paris, Faivre & Teillard, 1892, 347 p.

Comme presque tous ceux de cette époque, suit de trop près la grammaire et la syntaxe française et latine.

80. Martrou (L.), La langue fan et ses dialectes, J.S.A., 1936, vol. 6, n° 2.
81. Martrou (L.), Lexique fân-français, Paris, Procure générale, s. d.

Transcription « fân catholique », impossible à reproduire sur clavier universel ; ne donne pas les tons ; 2 500 mots environ.

82. Mathieu (Ch.), Petit vocabulaire français-boulou, Paris, Geuthner, 1931, 81 p.
83. Nekes (P. H.), Lehrbuch der Jaunde Sprache, Berlin, G. Reimer, 1911, 303 p.
84. Stoll (A.), La tonétique des langues bantu et semi-bantu du Cameroun, Paris, s. d., Mémorandum n° IV du Centre I.F.A.N., Cameroun, 1955, 172 p., 2 tabl.

Outre une nouvelle théorie des tons, intéressantes indications sur les rites sô et mvôan, avec exposé du principe de double symétrie, qui serait à la base de la cosmogonie pahouine.

85. Tessmann (G.), Sprichwörter der Fangwe, Anthropos, 1913, VIII, pp. 402-436.
86. Trilles (H.), Au sujet de la langue des Fang et de ses lointaines origines, Revue d'Anthropologie, juin 1935, t. LIII.

Toujours l'Égypte...

87. Trilles (H.), Exercices de lecture et d'écriture fân-français, Libreville, Mission catholique, 1902.
88. Tronje von Hagen (G.), Lehrbuch der Bulu Sprache, Berlin, Radetzki, 1914, VII + 402 p.
89. Walker (A. R.), Les idiomes gabonais, similitudes et divergences, B.I.E.C., 1955, n° 10, pp. 211-236.
90. X..., English-Bulu vocabulary, Elat, Halsey Memorial Press, s. d., 181 p.

V. — Économie, technologie, art

91. Balandier (G.), Problèmes politiques et économiques au niveau du village Fang, B.I.E.C., 1950, n° 1, pp. 49-64.
92. Binet (J.), Budget familial du planteur de cacao, Archives inédites du C.H.E.A.M., 1954.
93. Binet (J.), Budgets familiaux des planteurs de cacao au Cameroun, Paris, C.S.R.S.O.M., collection « L'Homme d'outre-mer », n° 3, 1956, 154 p., ill.

Enquête faite au Sud-Cameroun en 1955-1956. A comparer avec les travaux de Sautter et Balandier sur le Nord-Gabon.

94. Brunhes (J.), Exploitations de primitifs : type complexe de dévastation végétale et animale dans la forêt équatoriale : les Fang, in La Géographie humaine, édition abrégée, Paris, P.U.F., 1947, pp. 199-204.
95. Delaroziere (S.) et Luc (G.), Une forme peu connue de l'expression artistique africaine : l'abbia, jeu ou dé des populations forestières du Sud-Cameroun, B.I.E.C., n°s 49-50, sept.-déc. 1955.
96. Perves (M.), Parmi les Fang de la forêt équatoriale : le jeu de l'abbia, Revue de géographie humaine et d'ethnologie, Paris, 1948, n° 3, pp. 26-41.
97. Grebert (F.), L'art musical chez les Fang du Gabon, Genève, Archives suisses d'Anthropologie générale, 1928, t. V, n° 1, pp. 75-86.
98. Grebert (F.), Monographie ethnographique des tribus Fang, Bantous de la forêt du Gabon, Genève, manuscrit, 36 pl., 719 dessins.

Cet ouvrage, malheureusement inédit, constitue la meilleure iconographie sur les Pahouins. Un seul des six exemplaires peut être consulté en France, à la Bibliothèque des Missions évangéliques.

99. Mouoo (Th.), L'industrie des pêches au Cameroun, Paris, S.E.G.M.C., 1958, 509 p., ill.
100. Panyella (A.), Notas de tipología cultural : la casa y el poblado « fang », A.I.E.A., 1951, V, n° 16.
101. Pavá (J. E.), Algunos aspectos de la casa en la Guinea continental española, A.I.E.A., 1950, IV, n° 15.
102. Sautter (G.), La casa dans l'économie rurale du Woleu-Ntem, B.I.E.C., 1956, n° 1, pp. 7-24.
103. Sautter (G.), Les paysans noirs du Gabon septentrional. Essai sur le peuplement et l'habitat au Woleu-Ntem, Cahiers d'Outre-Mer, 1951, n° 14.
104. Tafay (R.), Casa menor y mayor in Guinea, A.I.E.A., n° 24.
105. X... (O.R.S.T.O.M.), L'habitat au Cameroun, Paris, Éditions de l'U.F., 1952, 166 p., phot.
106. X..., Resumenes estadísticos del censo general de población de Guinea al 31 de diciembre de 1950, Madrid, C.S.I.C., 157 p.
107. X..., Resumenes estadísticos de Guinea, 1945-1949, 1950-1951, Madrid, C.S.I.C., 2 vol., 250 et 248 p., ill.

VI. — Organisation sociale, droit

108. Alcobe (S.) et Panyella (A.), Estudio cuantitativo de la exogamia de los Pamúes (fang) de la Guinea continental española, A.I.E.A., n° 18, 1951.
109. Beaute, Le neig-n'lo, ancienne coutume Bane, Tego-Cameroun, janvier 1950, pp. 215-222, ill.

Ce neig-nlo, grand juge, était peut-être un haut dignitaire du ngil.

110. Bertaut (M.), Le droit coutumier des Boulou, Paris, Domat-Montchrestien, 1935, 208 p.

En dépit de son titre, concerne non seulement les Boulou mais encore leurs voisins du Nord, Éwondo compris ; description détaillée du cérémonial du Sé ; bonne étude des coutumes juridiques, mais aussi des genres de vie.

111. Binet (J.), Aspects actuels du mariage dans le Sud-Cameroun, Paris, Recueil Penant, 1952, 29 p.
112. Binet (J.), Droit foncier coutumier au Cameroun, Le monde non chrétien, 1951, n° 18.
113. Binet (J.), Le mariage dans le Sud-Cameroun, Archives inédites du C.H.E.A.M., 1952.
114. Binet (J.), Problèmes fonciers africains : trois groupes d'intérêt s'affrontent, Archives inédites du C.H.E.A.M., 1953.
115. Corella (L. B.), Algunas costumbres pamúes, A.I.E.A., 1949, III, 11.
116. Delafosse (Maurice) et Poutrin (M.), Enquête coloniale... sur l'organisation de la famille indigène, etc., Paris, S.E.G.C.M., 1930.
117. Evita (L.), Cuando los combes luchaban (novela de costumbres de la Guinea española), Madrid, C.S.I.C., 101 p., ill.
118. Gerbert (F.), La famille pahouine en 1931, Africa, 1932, 2.
119. Koch (H.), Le petit bétail chez les Badjoué et Bikélé de Mouamédza, B.S.E.C., 1946, 13-14.

Donne des exemples précis de la « pahouinisation » progressive des tribus bordières (ici sous influence bulu).

6: Alexandre and Binet F319 Fang

120. Mba (L.), Essai de droit coutumier pahouin, B.S.E.C., 1958, n° 25, 46 p.

Intéressant essai d'un des leaders politiques Fang du Gabon.

121. Marchou (L.), Le nomadisme des Fang, Revue de géographie, n. s., III, 1899, pp. 497-524.

122. Pantella (A.) et Sabater (J.), Esquema de la antroponimia Fang de la Guinea española desde el punto de vista etnológico, A.I.E.A., 1955, VIII, n° 34.

La plus récente étude sur l'anthroponymie et les règles d'imposition du nom; observations intéressantes sur la désignation des fractions et lignées par le nom d'un ancêtre humain.

123. Sautter (G.), Le régime des terres et ses modifications récentes aux environs de Brazzaville et au Woleu-Ntem, B.I.E.C., 1954, n°s 7-8.

124. Zimmermann (Alfred), Das Gebiet der Ntem und Mwer, Deutsches Kolonialblatt, 1914, pp. 439-441.

125. Zoll'Owanne (Ch.), Visage africain d'une coutume indienne et mélanésienne, B.S.E.C., 1957, n°s 19-20, pp. 55-60.

Description du potlatch « bilaba », peut être entachée de confusions dans la traduction des points cardinaux.

126. X..., Tribu de palabre, B.S.E.C., 1957, n°s 19-20, pp. 141-146.

Extrait des archives de la subdivision d'Ambam; opinions de notables mâles et mixtes sur les coutumes matrimoniales et leur évolution.

VII. — Anthropologie physique, démographie

127. Alcobe (B.), Los pamúes en el complejo racial del Africa negra, A.I.E.A., 1950, IV, n° 13.

128. Bayodo (Dr), Le nouveau-né et la femme enceinte aux environs d'Ayos, B.S.E.C., 1948, n°s 21-22.

129. Cabrera (F.), La persona pamue desde el punto de vista biotipológico, Madrid, C.S.I.C., 111 p., ill.

130. Capelle (Dr), Notes sur l'état sanitaire des populations métisses du Woleu-Ntem (1924-1932), B.S.E.C., XII, octobre 1938.

131. Chenevol (J.), Un essai de fichier démographique au Cameroun, Paris, Bulletin mensuel de statistique outre-mer, série « Études », n° 20, 1951, 39 p., et annexes.

132. Dugast (Idelette), Essai sur le peuplement du Cameroun, B.S.E.C., 1948, n°s 21-22, pp. 19-24.

133. Dugast (I.), Inventaire ethnique du Sud-Cameroun, 1949, Mémoires de l'I.F.A.N. (centre Cameroun), série « Populations », n° 1, 150 p., ill.

La plus récente synthèse sur le sujet. Il est regrettable que le même travail n'ait pu être fait pour le Gabon et la Guinée.

134. Iradolla (B.), Aportación al estudio del nivel mental de los indígenas de Guinea, A.I.E.A., 1951, V, n° 18.

135. Olivier (G.), etc., Documents anthropométriques pour servir à l'étude des principales populations du Sud-Cameroun, B.S.E.C., 1946, 15-16, pp. 17-86, 1 carte.

136. Olivier (G.), Étude anthropologique comparée des principales tribus de la région de Yaoundé, B.S.E.C., 1945, n° 10, pp. 55-76.

137. Olivier (G.) et Aujoulat (L. P.), L'obstétrique en pays yaoundé. Étude d'ethnologie médicale et d'anthropologie somatique, B.S.E.C., 1945, n° 12, pp. 7-71.

6: Alexandre and Binet F319 Fang

138. Pandaan (D. P. H. ed), Contribution à l'établissement d'un inventaire ethnique du Cameroun, B.S.E.C., 1946, n°s 15-16.

139. Pons (J.), Hueles dentifores en negros de la Guinea española, A.I.E.A., 1951, V, n° 18.

140. Pons (J.), Impresiones dermopapilares en indígenas de la Guinea ecuatorial : I. Muestras dentifores ; II. Impresiones palmares, Madrid, C.S.I.C., 1951-52, 2 vol., 68 et 57 p., ill.

141. Poutrin (M.), Esquisse ethnologique pour servir à l'étude des principales tribus des territoires du Cameroun sous mandat français, B.S.E.C., 1943, n° 3.

142. Poutrin (M.), Esquisse ethnologique des principales populations de l'A.E.F., Paris, Masson, 1944, 139 p., ill.

143. Poutrin (M.), Notes anthropologiques sur les négres africains du Congo français, Bulletin et Mémoires de la Société d'Anthropologie de Paris, t. I, série VI, 1946.

144. Sautter (G.), L'utilisation des documents administratifs pour l'étude numérique de la population en Moyen-Congo et au Gabon, B.I.E.C., 1954, n°s 7-8, pp. 23-32.

145. Thiery (Y.) et Delaroche (R.), Densité de population au Gabon, Paris, 1944, Mémoires inédits de l'I.N.F.O.M.

146. X... (Poutrin, etc.), Esquisse ethnologique pour servir à l'étude des principales tribus du Cameroun sous mandat français..., B.S.E.C., 1943, n° 3, pp. 9-66.

VIII. — Religion, magie, traditions

147. Allegret (R.), Les idées religieuses des Fang, Revue d'histoire des Religions, vol. 50, 1904, pp. 214-232.

Note intéressante sur le « sentiment d'abandon » religieux qu'auraient éprouvé les Fang surtout après la rencontre des Européens.

148. Alvarez (R. H.), Leyendas y mitos de Guinea, Madrid, C.S.I.C., 177 p., ill.

149. Atangana (Ch.), Abem So (le rite So) chez les Yaoundé-Beane, Anthropos, XXXVII-XL, 1942-1945, pp. 119-137.

150. Courbaris (P.), Notes sommaires sur les pratiques divinatoires des populations de la circonscription de Yaoundé, J.S.A., VI, 1936.

151. Gardier (C.) et Fallon (N.), Le fétichisme en Afrique noire, Paris, Payot, 1951.

Quelques notes sur les rites des Pahouins du Cameroun.

152. Guillebeau (H. P.), Le rite « Seye », B.S.E.C., 1948, n°s 23-24, p. 71.

Excellente description d'un rite de purification dans les tribus du Nord. Indications intéressantes sur les pratiques divinatoires.

153. Jemba Mbou, Nsango Kôn, Eliot, Halsey Memorial Press, s. d.

Ce roman, malheureusement épuisé, est une mine de renseignements ethnologiques et linguistiques. Rédigé dans une langue plutôt archaïque et savante, il est assez difficile à lire aujourd'hui. Il faut souhaiter qu'un jeune Boulou en donne la traduction.

154. Lamblin, Contes fang, B.S.R.C., 1935, n° 7.

155. Lavignotte (H.), L'âme, croyance des Pahouins du Gabon, Paris, Société des Missions évangéliques, 1936, 118 p.

Note très complète sur la sorcellerie ngbwel et les moyens de protection contre elle.

134. Lebouc (L. G.), Étude sur le ngil, coutume fan, B.S.R.C., 1925, n° 4.

L'auteur, tout en ayant bien compris la fonction judiciaire et guerrière du ngil, conclut à sa suppression, dans l'intérêt de l'ordre public.

137. Maguan (lieutenant), Notes sur le fétichisme pahouin, B.S.R.C., 1925, n° 8.

138. Martrou (L.), L'âme fang après la mort, Anthropos, VI, 1911.

A comparer avec les traditions recueillies par Largeau ; Martrou connaissait mieux le pays et la langue, mais, comme Trilles, il semble parfois avoir interprété sous l'influence de ses préoccupations sacerdotales.

159. Martrou (L.), Les éki des Fang, Münster, Anthropos, I, 1906.

Bonne étude sur les interdits, mais qui est loin d'épuiser le sujet.

160. Moreno Moreno (J. A.), Formas de antropofagia en los territorios españoles del Golfo de Guinea, A.I.E.A., 1951, V, n° 17.

161. Nassau, Fetishism in West Africa, New York, Young Peoples' Missionary Mvt., 1904.

Peu de renseignements intéressant les Fang. L'auteur connaissait surtout les populations côtières.

162. Tessmann (G.), Ritzel der Pangwe, Anthropos, 1915-16, X-XI, pp. 675-725.

163. Tessmann (G.), Religiöse formen der Pangwe, Zeitschrift für Ethnologie, 1909, XLI.

164. Tessmann (G.), Ueber das Verhältnis der Fangnegur zur umgebenden Tierwelt, Zeitschrift für Ethnologie, 1907, XXXIX.

165. Trilles (H.), Proverbes, légendes et contes fang, Neufchâtel, Bulletin de la Société neufchâteloise de géographie, t. XVI, 1905, 247 p.

Transcriptions phonétiques et traductions « écartant le gravelleux » (sic). Malgré cette castration reste le recueil le plus complet.

166. Trilles (H.), Le totémisme chez les Fân, Münster i. w., Bibliothèque Anthropos, 1912, 453 p.

C'est le magnum opus du P. Trilles. Comme dans tous les ouvrages de cet auteur, on y trouve à côté d'observations fines et exactes, des conclusions parfois hasardeuses et des lacunes inattendues, provenant peut-être d'une certaine déformation professionnelle. En dépit de quoi, le P. Trilles reste la grande autorité sur les Fang.

167. X..., Le bouiti, B.S.R.C., 1924, n° 3.

IX. — Sociologie, évolution

168. Alexandre (P.), Le mouvement Fang ou regroupement pahouin, Archives inédites du C.H.E.A.M., 1955.

169. Alvarez (H. R.), Enseñanza en la Guinea, española, A.I.E.A., n° 22 (1954).

170. Alvarez (H. R.), Historia de la acción cultural en Guinea española, Madrid, C.S.I.C., s. d., 556 p., ill.

171. Aubame (J.), Renaissance gabonaise, Brazzaville, 1947.

Programme de regroupement clanique des villages fan préconisé par le député du 2e collège.

172. Balandier (G.), Aspects de l'évolution sociale chez les Fang du Gabon, Cahiers internationaux de Sociologie, IX, 1950.

173. Balandier (G.), Les Fan, conquérants en disponibilité, Tropiques, décembre 1949, pp. 23-24.

174. Balandier (G.), Rapport préliminaire de la mission d'information scientifique en pays fang, inédit (ronéotypé), Archives de l'A.E.F., 1948.

175. Balandier (G.), Sociologie actuelle de l'Afrique noire, dynamique des changements sociaux en Afrique centrale, Paris, P.U.F., 1955, 510 p.

La première partie de cet ouvrage, consacrée aux Fang du Gabon, apporte une explication neuve du malaise social qui les frappe et des tentatives de re-structuration sociale fondées sur le regroupement tribal et les cultes syncrétistes. C'est le meilleur livre sur les Fang depuis Trilles, Largeau et Tessmann.

176. Balandier (G.), Afrique ambiguë, Paris, Plon, 1957, 293 p., ill.

Complète en partie le précédent.

177. Balandier (G.) et Pauvert (J. C.), Les villages gabonais, Brazzaville, Mémoires de l'Institut d'Études centrafricaines, 1952, 86 p., ill.

178. Binet (J.), Condition de la femme dans le Sud-Cameroun, Cahiers internationaux de sociologie, 1956, XX.

179. Bonelli (J. M.), Diferencia del concepto económico en la colonización de Fernando Poo y Guinea continental, A.I.E.A., 1949, VII, 7.

180. Céline (L. F.), Voyage au bout de la nuit, Paris, Denoël, 1932.

A rapprocher de 187 et 195.

181. Ebouna (Y. R.), Le Wolou-Ntem veut se regrouper, Bulletin d'information de l'A.E.F., n° 63, mai-juin 1950.

182. Eza Boto, Ville cruelle, Paris, Éditions africaines, s. d., 219 p.

Bonne étude sur la jeunesse contemporaine, l'attrait et la crainte des villes et le conflit des générations.

183. Faure (F.), Le diable dans la brousse, Paris, « Je sers », 1953, 165 p., Société des Missions évangéliques.

Ces contes édifiants contiennent d'assez nombreuses observations exactes sur l'organisation sociale et familiale des Fang gabonais.

184. Iglesias de La Riva (A.), Politica indígena en Guinea, Madrid, C.S.I.C., 264 p.

185. Lancrey-Laval (L.) et Pauvert (J. C.), Problèmes socio-économiques dans le « pays du cacao » (Cameroun-Gabon), Information, 3, janv. 1955.

186. Lopez-Morin (C.), Aspectos de la lucha sanitaria en Guinea, A.I.E.A., 1949, III, n° 9.

187. Marie-André du Sacré-Cœur (sœur), La condition humaine en Afrique noire, Paris, Grasset, 1953, 260 p., ill.

Notes sur le mariage au Sud-Cameroun, parfois forcées.

188. Marie-André du Sacré-Cœur (sœur), Évolution juridique et sociale de la famille africaine, Archives inédites du C.H.E.A.M., 1951.

189. Marie-André du Sacré-Cœur (sœur), La loi d'airain du mariage dotal au Cameroun français, revue Études, octobre 1950.

190. Matilla (V.), Pasado, presente y porvenir de la sanidad en Guinea, A.I.E.A., 1949, III, n° 11.

6: Alexandre and Binet FH9 Fang

191. MONGO BETI, Le pauvre Christ de Bomba, Paris, R. Laffont, 1956, 370 p.

Roman sur les résultats de l'action des Missions catholiques. Souvent injuste mais indispensable à la compréhension de l'évolution contemporaine la plus récente.

192. OYONO (F.), Une vie de boy, Paris, Julliard, 1956, 183 p.

193. OYONO (F.), Le vieux nègre et la médaille, Paris, Julliard, 1957, 209 p.

M. Oyono est dans la tradition des joueurs de mvet, conteurs satiriques toujours cruels, souvent injustes.

194. ROLLAND (Pierre), Le mouvement fang au Moyen-Congo, Archives inédites du C.H.E.A.M., 1955.

195. SCHWEITZER (A.), A l'orée de la forêt vierge, Paris, Payot, 1929, 231 p.

Notations intéressantes, mais assez sommaires, sur la désorganisation sociale des Pahouins de l'Ogooué et leurs réactions au choc d'acculturation.

196. X..., Ekomi, histoire d'un petit Pahouin racontée par lui-même aux enfants d'Europe, Paris, S.M.E., 1921.

Édifiant.

[p.149]

INDEX DES NOMS CITÉS

Allegret : 63, 89, 98, 107.
Allys : 63.
André : 9, 16.
Aubame : 41, 129.

Balandier : 12, 31, 33, 36, 37, 41, 61, 66, 67, 89, 129.
Bates : viii, 21, 22, 23, 24, 61.
Baudre (de) : 120.
Baumann : 8.
Bearth : 63.
Bertaut : 16, 24, 48, 51, 60, 63, 97.
Binet : 32, 39, 75, 81, 122.
Botti : 58.
Bourdier : 62.
Braeza : 14.

Cambon : 27.
Chabeuf : 120.
Christol : 9, 62.
Compiègne (de) : 13, 14, 27, 88.
Cournarie : 45.

Delafosse : 26.
Dominik : 58.
Du Chaillu : 13, 14, 88.
Dugast : 4, 7, 84.

Éboué : 67.
Eza Boto : 49, 90, 101, 126.

Gascon : 120.
Gaulle (de) : 67, 93.
Good : viii, 15, 21, 110.
Granier : 62.
Grebert : 17, 88, 107.
Greenberg : 26.
Guilbot : 33, 38.
Guillemin : 64.
Gutherie : 19, 20, 25.

Hagen (von) : 15.
Homburger : 26.
Horn : 14, 88.

Janot : 8.
Jemba Medu : 126.
Johnson : 24, 112.

Kingsley : 37.
Koch : 18.

Langle (de) : 14, 88.
Largeau : 4, 5, 13, 14, 15, 17, 33, 47, 56, 58, 60, 63, 67, 88, 89, 96, 101, 105, 107, 108, 124.
Lavignotte : 117.
Lecoq : 124.
Leroux : 63.

Marche : 13.
Martrou : 4, 63, 107, 121.
Masseyeff : 27.
Mba : 58.
Meinhof : 25.
Monewoso : 42, 89, 124.
Mongo Beti : 126.

Nekes : 6, 19.

Oyono : 126.

Pascaley : 15, 93.
Pauvert : 31, 36, 129.

Sautter : 9, 32, 38, 73.
Schebe : 5.
Schweinfurth : 13.
Soret : 38.

Soupault : 30.
Stoerkel : 89.
Stoll : 13, 24, 25, 63, 97, 98, 100, 115.

Tessmann : 4, 13.
Trezenem : 107, 114.
Trilles : 4, 5, 13, 16, 17, 26, 43, 44, 46, 56, 64, 66, 67, 88, 89, 93, 95, 97, 101, 105, 106, 107, 108, 112, 113, 115, 117, 119, 120, 125.

Walker : 21, 26.
Weber : 120.
Westermann : 26.

Zieglé : 9.
Zoll'Owambe : 47, 60.

[p.151]

TABLE DES MATIÈRES

	Pages
Avant-propos	v
Transcription phonétique	viii
Chapitre Premier. — Situation géographique et climatique	1
Chapitre II. — Situation ethnique et historique	4
1) Nomenclature	4
2) Groupes divers et répartition territoriale	5
A) Les envahisseurs ou Pahouins proprement dits	5
B) Les tribus assimilées ou pahouinisées	6
3) Populations voisines	7
4) Aperçu démographique	8
5) Histoire et origine traditionnelles	13
Chapitre III. — La langue	18
1) Diffusion	18
2) Dialectes	19
3) Caractéristiques de la langue	21
4) Classification	25
Chapitre IV. — Vie économique (J. Binet)	27
1) Alimentation	27
2) Agriculture	28
3) Commerce	33
4) Les villes	36
Chapitre V. — Organisation sociale	40
1) Formes d'établissement, habitat	40
2) Groupements et parenté	43
a) La tribu	44
b) Le clan	45
c) La famille-étendue ou famille-villageoise	48
d) Famille restreinte ou foyer, parenté	49
e) Mariage, filiation	51
3) Classes d'âge	56
4) Esclavage, castes, classes, chefferies	58
5) Associations	62
6) Droit et propriété	69
a) Sources	69
b) Pouvoir judiciaire	70
c) Peines	71
d) Délinquance (J. Binet)	72
e) Droit foncier (J. Binet)	73
f) Propriété mobilière	76
g) Successions, tutelle	76
h) Contrats et quasi-contrats divers	78
7) Situation des femmes (J. Binet)	81

6: Alexandre and Binet FH9 Fang

PAGES

CHAPITRE VI. — Principaux éléments de la culture 84
1) Caractéristiques physiques, mentalité 84
a) Données anthropologiques 84
b) Vêtements, parures, marques corporelles 85
c) Caractéristiques psychologiques 88
2) Cycle de la vie d'un individu 90
a) Conception, gestation, naissance 90
b) Enfance 92
c) Adolescence 95
d) Passage à l'âge adulte 97
e) Vieillesse 100
f) La mort et l'au-delà 101
3) Religion et magie 106
a) Conception de Dieu, création 107
b) Culte des ancêtres, totem, esprits 110
c) Eléments de cosmogonie 114
d) Sorcellerie, possession 116
e) Magie licite, divination, médecine 119
f) Interdits 121
g) Evolution actuelle de la sorcellerie et de la magie 123
4) Arts et littérature 124

CHAPITRE VII. — L'évolution (J. BINET) 128
1) Organes de gouvernement local 128
2) Le Pahouin et l'avenir 134

BIBLIOGRAPHIE ANALYTIQUE SOMMAIRE 137
Périodiques 137
I. — Bibliographie 137
II. — Géographie, exploration, ouvrages généraux sur l'Afrique 138
III. — Ouvrages d'ensemble 139
IV. — Linguistique 140
V. — Economie, technologie, art 142
VI. — Organisation sociale, droit 143
VII. — Anthropologie physique, démographie 144
VIII. — Religion, magie, traditions 145
IX. — Sociologie, évolution 146

INDEX DES NOMS CITÉS 149

1958. — Imprimerie des Presses Universitaires de France. — Vendôme (France)
ÉDIT. N° 24 893 IMPRIMÉ EN FRANCE IMP. N° 15 211

LE GROUPE PAH

ɔUPE PAHOUIN

[End map B]

PEUPLES VOISINS :

B-B : Bassa-Bakoko ; B-Y : Bafia-Yambasa ; V : Babouté (Vutéré) ; B-N
M-O : Mitshogo-Okandé ; BU : Bapounou ; NK : Nkomi ; B-P : Benga-Pongwe

[End map-C]

uté (Vutéré) , B-K : Baya-Kaka , E-K : Essel-Konabembé , BA : Bakota
I-P : Benga-Pongwé , BI : Balengi ; M : Mabéa ; BT : Batenga ; N : Ngoumba

[End map-D]

7: Trilles M-5 (1893-1912) 1912 FH9 Fang FH9

Totemism Among the Fang
[Le Totémisme chez les Fân]

R. P. H. Trilles

Bibliothéque-Anthropos, Vol. 1

Münster i. W., 1912

Translated from the French by Isabella Athey

Human Relations Area Files

1959

[title page]

[11] Chapter I

The Fan Tribe

000 1. Divisions of the Fan Nation. "Fan" and "Pahouin" are two words not only synonymous but identical. The four Fan groups. Tribe, clan, and family (elementary cell).

2. Allied Tribes. Likenesses and differences between the Fan and related and so-called related tribes.

3. Size of Population. Errors in official statistics.

1. Divisions of the Fan Nation

101 Before beginning this study, a word ought first to be said about the Fan [Fang] nation and its divisions into groups, tribes, and clans. [Footnote omitted. --Translator]

The Fan or Pahouin [Pàhuin] or Mpawin [Mpangwe] (2) --

101 197 2. The word "Fân" is the truly native word to designate this tribe. Strange as it may seem at first glance and in spite of the great change, "Pahouin" is another form of the same word. The first tribes on the coast with whom we were in contact called the Fân "Mpân," or mu-pân (pân, man), abbreviated to mpân by a process common among these African languages. Thus mpira, powder, in Mpongwé becomes efira in Fan; mpilato, tray, becomes filato; epélé plate, from Spanish "plata," becomes mfil by way of plata, epilata, épila, épèle, efèl, mfèle, mfil, etc. Out of "Mpân," a word which only the tribes of the Nsex branch pronounce this way, the northern tribes -- Kombé, Banoko, and others belonging to the Mpongwé branch -- have made "Mpangwé, as none of the languages of the Gabon or Mpongwé group let a word end with a consonant but always require a vowel. "Mpangwé" became "Mpangwen" for the French and soon thereafter "Mpangwin"; it has now turned into "Mpawin," "Pawin," and finally "Pahouin," in which form it is indeed difficult to recognize the original.

101
197

101 because these three words [12] refer to the same people -- are the most important tribe of the French Congo and the German [now French] Cameroons.

101 The Fan proper are divided into four distinct families
197 with respect to dialects: Bétsi [Betsi], Méké [Mekei], Fôn, and Bulé [Boale] (in manners and customs they are all absolutely alike). These four groups do not speak such different dialects that they cannot understand one another unless at first meeting; they certainly do so after several days of association.

[Five paragraphs in pp. 12-13 deleted here. --Translator]

101 [13][Of the four groups] the first two are by far the best known, having made the first migrations or at least having been the first in contact with the white man. Everything that has been written about the Fan relates to these [two], particularly to the Bétsi.

The Bulé group is often considered to be connected with either the Fan or the Yaundé, through whom it would form the intermediary link with the Méké. The Fôn (1), or people of the interior, as the etymology of their name indicates, have remained up to the present time altogether inland beyond the Bétsi and [197 194] Méké. Their dialect relates them to the Bétsi, differing in being more guttural. The tribes live closely intertwined in the same 101 territory, though each keeps its own autonomy without intermingling.

1. Fôn, bamboo pith, dark depths of the forest.

101 Each of the four Fan groups are divided into tribes, each 619 with its own chief, territory, and autonomy; none is subordinate 727 to another, all the more so because slaves are not taken in war, 266 for unredeemed captives are promptly eaten.

619 The tribes vary in importance according to the level of 614 development, the kind of chiefs they have had, and the size of 174 their territory. Thus, the Yenkwax possess no more than three sparsely populated villages, and at the most they can muster 300 warriors; the Yengon, [14] though a long-established tribe, have only one village and a few warriors; while the Yemvi, on the contrary, inhabit several hundred villages and number thousands of warriors. But about this term "tribe," let me here mention a very important point: at present, and since a migration which, according to my own research, should be dated 32 or 33 generations back, no more tribes are being formed, only clans. Existing tribes (and we shall see in a moment how they may be distinguished from clans) may be said to have been established about ten centuries ago in our reckoning, which clearly does not mean that they did not exist before that time. Their origin must certainly go back much earlier.

619 A tribe rarely remains homogeneous for long. Many factors
614 contribute to its splitting up, such as a series of migrations, family disputes, and the activities of heads of families who are ambitious or eager to throw off excessive authority. The steady growth of a tribe at the same time leads to the overpopulation of villages and the necessity of looking elsewhere for new hunting and agricultural lands; hence, after an indefinite period, a tribe splits into clans composed of an unspecified and highly variable number of families. Some clans are very large, such as the Esingi, and make up hundreds of villages, while others, either because they are very recent or because of the same disintegrating forces as exist for the tribes, number only a few families.

Clans in turn, as a result of the same circumstances that made tribes split into clans, split into subclans, also of varying importance.

From what I have just said, a fact may be immediately deduced which runs counter to the usual generalizations accepted by Europeans and superficial observers. In the view of the latter the 619 distribution of the nation and its division into tribes and clans is 614 based upon an arbitrary and highly variable standard; the number of individuals.

In my view on the contrary -- and this is certainly that of the Fan -- the different concepts of nation, tribe, clan, and subclan have a unique, immutable basis, the family, [15] which constitutes the kernel or, of one prefers, the primary cell or even the pivot on which the whole organization turns.

Thus we have the following structural table:

Family or Ndzǎn	Family
Clans and subclans (phratries) or Ayum	Clans and subclans
Tribe or Ayǒn	Tribe
Group or Mfulana méyon	Group

Fan Nation

This structure has an important consequence, one whose development will not, however, be dealt with here but must be postponed until after discussion of the idea of the totem. The consequence is this: among clans some bear the totem name, others do not. Although some, in fact nearly all, writers consider that bearing the totem name is a condition sine qua non of totemism in clans, we shall see that this idea is exaggerated and that clans, with or without a totem name, are all totemic.

2. Allied Tribes

101 Not only do these four large divisions -- Bétsi, Méké, 619 Bulé, and Fôñ -- make up the Fan nation proper, but a certain number of other tribes revolve within their circle and are connected to the same branch. I say "a certain number" because the interior of the German Cameroons and the hinterland lying between the Woleu, N'tem, and upper Sanga rivers has been little explored. Before our arrival the existence of the Dzèm [Njem] was barely known; the Dzandzama had never been mentioned. These tribes form the intermediary link connecting the Fan to the Batéké branch and through this to the Kanioka and other central Congo tribes, [16] whose folklore has analogies with that of the Fan as I recently pointed out. (1)

1. See Anthropos, Vol. 4, pp. 945-971; Vol. 5, pp. 163-180.

A Yaundé grammar was published not long ago in Anthropos; (2) these people are without doubt an offshoot of the

2. See Anthropos, Vol. 4, pp. 684-701, 919-930.

Bétsi branch. The Bosyéba dialect is somewhat different and is nearer that of the Bubi of Fernando Po; the group also belongs to the Fan nation. Finally, deviating from the primitive stock in progressive order, there are the Dzèm, Dzimu [Ndsime], and Dzandzama, nowadays scarcely leaving the jungle and the country of the Nyamnyam [Niam-Niam, Azande]. In spite of what has 197 been said of them in the past, their language is only distantly related to that of the last tribe. (3)

3. Since certain observers and explorers -- such, for instance, as Allegret, a former Protestant missionary in Gabon, who connects them with the Nyamnyam, Fulah,

197

Azande groups -- insist on this relationship based only on apparent ethnographic characters, let me simply give this table of the four languages, Fan, Osyeba [Osieba], Dzèm (unpublished), and Nyamnyam (after Schweinfurth and Colombaroli):

	Fan	Osyeba	Dzèm	Nyamnyam
Man	Mur	Muri	Murum	Combâ
Woman	Munga	Mura	Muma	Dè
Girl	Ngon	Šyè	Lêsi	Dégudè
Old man	Ntôl	Ntôli	Tuma	Binzâ
Sister	Kal	Kali	Kalo	Bèwili
Father	Sa	Sôn	Da	Ba (éba in Fan méké)
Name	Džu	Džina	Ndžè	Limô
Body	Ñul	Mulé	Ñulo	Kuô
Skin	Eko	Kundé	Kuro	Kuôto
Head	Nlô	Nlô	Nlô	Li
Forehead	Mvabal	Bandé	Nbalopum	Vu
Tongue	Dèm (pl. Mèm)	Gimi	Gyèm	Mirassè
Village	Džal	Kware	Kwor	Lingara
Door	Mbi	Mbié	Lébaa	Ngwadumo (lit., house door; duma, nest in Fan)

As the footnote shows, the differences between Fan and Nyamnyam are tremendous. Scarcely 150 words could be found with the same root, and even those would prove nothing, for the Fan have certainly [17] been in contact with the Nyamnyam during their migrations and therefore could, and must have, borrowed a number of words.

101 619 To sum up, the Fan may be divided as follows:

197 The Fan, Bosyéba, Bésèx, Dzèm, Dzandzama, and Guma tribes may be assumed to speak separate languages not dialects of one. These languages are, however, closely related; they have very nearly the same principles and are cognates.

Bétsi, Méké, etc., merely represent dialects.

[One paragraph deleted, repititive. --Translator]

101 619 161 The Dzèm, whose hitherto unpublished language I hope to make known soon, are grouped in the upper N'tem region; their population should not be more than 100,000.

The Dzandzama border them on the southeast and provide a linguistic link to the Batéké, southern neighbors; their population is about that of the Dzèm.

The Bésèx, or Bulu, who occupy a large part of the region to the north of the Ogooue, are a widely dispersed tribe, formerly very powerful, now almost extinct through poison, practitioners [feticheurs], and pressure from the Pahuoin. Their population is not likely to be greater than a few thousand. [18]

101 The Bosyéba ... are no more numerous than the Bésex.
619 They have been classed perhaps wrongly as a separate people
161 and in my opinion are basically only tribes long detached from the Méké branch, whose distinctive tattooing and little altered language they have preserved. In 1889 when Fourneau reached
[114] the Bosyéba country to the north of the Campo, he saw his porters, recruited in Méké country on the banks of the Ogooué, immediately fraternizing with the Bosyéba and delighted to discover their own tongue after crossing through Bétsi territory. (1)

1. Cf. A. Fourneau, "De l'Ogooué au Campo" [From the Ogooué to the Campo], Bull. Ste. Geogr. Vol. 12 (1891), pp. 190-215.

[One paragraph deleted about an etymology which author considers "incorrect."--Translator]

The Guma, nowadays very few in number, have been driven back towards the Cameroons; they also are related to the Méké branch. Europeans often refer to the people of this whole group by the term "Makina" from ma ki na, "I say that..."; they have, in fact, a habit of starting all their remarks with these words. The Bétsi are called "Mazuna" for the same reason.

3. Size of the Fan Population

161 The Fan are by far the most important branch. It is extremely difficult to estimate their number. Officially they are only a few hundred thousand. But the official figure is far from accurate, for government statistics only count the man who pays taxes. Furthermore, more than half of the French Congo is unexplored except by a few, infrequent

161 travelers. Thus in 1901-02 we were the first to explore the whole of the north Congo, which Crampel had only crossed before, and then the Dzèm and Dzandzama country; after us the boundary commission for the Cameroons came into a small part of the same country, and that was all. Thus a recent publication [19] gives the number of Fan warriors at about 40,000, a figure that is not even worth discussing. (1) What is certain is that the total population of the French Congo, of which the Fan possibly compose half, may be estimated at a figure varying from three to ten million, and it is impossible to be more accurate at the present time. In my view we should estimate the Fan at five million at least, tehito twelve at the most. The Woleu basin alone, where we have determined the location of all the villages, includes more than a million Fan.

[614]

1. One clan, the Amvom, exceeds this figure. The Bulé are larger; there are more than 400 Fan clans, at least that we know of. In terms of the official estimate each clan would have only about 100 armed men. In many cases this would barely be the number of villages.

144 The Fan belong to the great Bantu family, but they represent an outer link or, rather, they are situated at the boundary separating the Bantu from the populations and languages of the northeast, those of Libya, Sudan, etc. They are, as Reclus says, the least Bantu of all the Bantu.

[pp.20-397 not translated. -Analyst]

Chapter XII

The Ministers of the Mvamayôn

[Summary omitted. --Translator]

779 The mvamayôn, or totem, has "rights" by the very fact of its existence.

779 These rights may be summed up in the three following points: the totem has a right to ministers, to rites or a cult, to laws. These last include duties, prohibitions, and penalties. ...

The first problem that arises concerns the totem's ministers. Who is the minister of the mvamayôn, that is, what sort of person has the right, first to choose it, then to assign it [399] either to an isolated individual or to an organized collectivity, then to decide on its cult and observances, to see that its rites are respected, to declare penalties or at least to impose them?

According to the structure of the tribe and the formation of the family ... this role falls by right to the father of a family to the exclusion of all other persons whatsoever, but the father of a family taken in the most general sense, that is, as father of a clan or, better, of a tribe.

[One paragraph omitted. --Translator]

The individual person, as a single and isolated individuality; the father of a family; the chief of a clan or tribe; the council of warriors, who have gone through initiation tests and have been admitted to the assembly that regulates vital village interests; the practitioner [feticheur] entrusted with public and recognized worship; the sorcerer [sorcier] with whom he is often confused -- these are the only distinct categories to which this role could be ascribed.

We must immediately exclude "the individual person," who has no rights over the mvamayôn, which belongs to the whole tribe and existed before him; the same applies to the clan and family totem.

[400] [Five paragraphs omitted. --Translator] [401]

...It is easy to understand that the guardians of the totem's authority, and only they, are entitled to decide where, when, how, and in what circumstances or with what preliminaries, the totem must be found. It is for them to say what marks it ought to show and for them to reject it if the necessary conditions are not existent. Finally, it is they who set up and preserve the cult and the form of ancestral traditions.

The role can only belong to the sole guardian of totemic authority, that is, to the chief or, if one prefers, to the existing esayôn, the living representative and trustee of the spirit of the founding ancestor of the tribe or clan.

779 [Two paragraphs omitted. --Translator] [402]

791 Sometimes in very important tribes, especially in those that make up large, compact groups, this role of minister to the mvamayôn has developed temporarily upon the practitioner.

Sometimes practitioners take on the role themselves and hold it by their personal importance or ability.

In both cases a kind of usurpation is always involved or a mixing up of powers, rarely a substitution. The practitioner then acts not in his own name by virtue of his role and his own authority, but as a delegated power. ...

[One paragraph omitted. --Translator] [403]

[Two paragraphs omitted. --Translator]

779 Thus in certain specific cases the political chief of the clan 791 leaves the exercise of religious worship to the practitioner even 614 with regard to the totem. Yet this is only a delegated role to the 769 extent that when the totem has to be questioned in a critical situation, the practitioner disappears and the chief resumes his rights: it would then be up to him to carry out ritual acts and make sacrifices. A chief may not be able to do this, [404] for instance, if he were very ill. A sacrifice is then offered to the totem directly concerned. Does the practitioner now come to the fore? Not at all. He first sacrifices to the tutelary spirits and spirits of the dead, and then he interrogates the spirits in order to find out what evil influences have caused the illness and to discover the person who, in the sacred phrase, has "made a fetish" against the sick man. The consanguineous heir appears in his turn to invoke the family's guardian spirits in favor of the sick man and to invoke his totem. In this case, invocations and sacrifice have a dual purpose: first, to invoke the direct ancestors represented by their skulls preserved in the biéri box -- this is the cult of the esayôn; secondly, to invoke the totem represented by a real or symbolic fragment -- this is the cult of the mvamayôn.

[Four paragraphs omitted. --Translator] [405]

791 There are two distinct characters: practitioner [feticheur] 757 and sorcerer.

The practitioner takes several forms: he may be soothsayer, physician, priest -- all different manifestations of the same ministry and all legal. In a word, the practitioner is the agent of the acknowledged cult.

791 754 The sorcerer also assumes several forms: he may be soothsayer, physician, priest, etc., but none of these different manifestations are either legal or accepted; they will always operate in a secret manner, and the sorcerer will be the agent of the secret and unacknowledged, the extralegal, cult. [406]

575 754 791 Just as we find two distinct persons nearly always in opposition, so we observe them presiding over two distinct types of association. And, unfortunately, just as practitioner and sorcerer have almost always been confused, so have the true secret societies directed by the former been confused with the secret societies (organized also within the tribe) that are quite different, often antagonistic, and under the authority of sorcerers, who create them and without whom they do not operate. The former are established to work for the well-being of the tribe, at least they were so originally and they still are on the whole at the present time. The others, on the contrary, are set up for the specific benefit of members and against the tribe.

[One paragraph omitted. --Translator]

The principal point at issue here is that the totems of secret societies directed by practitioners and the totems of secret societies directed by sorcerers are utterly different. We shall see later on how incorrect the term "totem" is in connection with sorcerers. While the first kind of totem are chosen entirely for the benefit of the individual who acquires them with no concern about the effect on others, the second are chosen by the owner with a view to the evil he can do with them to others. [407] Hence a profound difference in their selection: the first, like the totems of clan and tribe, can legally be any kind of living thing and are in fact, animals, birds, insects, trees, but only useful things, because the point is to benefit from their good qualities. There is nothing of this in connection with the second kind of totem: to injure others is the point, the unique purpose, the raison d'être; therefore, harmful animals like panthers, reptiles, and wild boars will be the first choice.

[Three paragraphs omitted. --Translator] [408-414 omitted]

[415] The practitioner's business is to have an effect upon good and bad "spirits." To call up good spirits as we see for

515 instance in the invocations of marriage songs; to fend off bad
757 spirits, departed shades, ghosts, or apparitions and force them
791 out of the village so they they will go far away and leave the living in peace; in brief, to protect in some manner those who invoke them -- this is the practitioner's role. The end is achieved through appropriate homage and sacrifices, either directly, by protecting the suppliant from bad luck and accidents, or indirectly, by making it impossible for the enemy -- whether spirit, shade, man, or object -- to do harm. All this is worship, religion, the practitioner's role.

But, on the other hand, to be master of these spirits, preferably of the malevolent ones, to seize the spirits, and to force both to do evil, is no longer worship or religion, but magic, and this is the sorcerer's business.

[Four paragraphs omitted. --Translator] [416]

We make the following generalizations:

The practitioner is the agent of the acknowledged cult, which is sometimes public, sometimes secret.

The sorcerer is the agent of the unacknowledged cult, which is always secret.

Both practitioner and sorcerer are leaders or members of secret societies. (1)

1. In place of "secret societies," which leads to confusion, it would be better to reserve this term, as has been proposed, for the societies set up by sorcerers and to use "confraternities" for those directed by practitioners.

Secret societies controlled by practitioners are within the tribe.

Secret societies controlled by sorcerers are marginal to, or directed against, the tribe.

791 Finally, the practitioner is priest, physician, healer, seer, according to whatever function his rank has him perform. Under this title he consults the fates, calls up spirits, etc. In ceremonies of the public cult, for instance, he is priest, seer, rain maker, the acknowledged intermediary between the world of the living and the other world. To sum up, he acts for the welfare of the tribe or of some of its members. In the last capacity he is seen as sacrificer at a child's birth, and as the principal agent in circumcision and in the ceremonies connected with puberty, the initiation of warriors, marriage, and death. He is called in for all illnesses so as to drive away the malevolent spirits who alone cause disease. [419] As physician he first uses magical formulae designed to liberate the good "influences" contained in the remedies he will administer. Next, he dispels evil "spirits" and calls upon favorable spirits, the ancestors of the race, to help him. Only after this does he proceed to give the remedy; then he again calls upon the aid of propitious spirits and dispels the bad ones. ...

Our Fan give the practitioner a special name; he is the ngâǹ, a name common to the whole of Bantu Africa, where the phoneme [sic] may be found throughout the tribes, variously modified as m-gâna, n-gâna, m-hâna, gâna, ngâǹ. ...

[Last paragraph on p. 417 omitted; pp. 418 to mid-420 omitted. --Translator] [420]

754 The sorcerer's social position is easily defined; not only does he have neither rank nor position in the tribe but even to apply the word "sorcerer" ... to a native is more than an insult, it is extremely imprudent. To call a Fan ngâǹ or ngenngâǹ is doing him an honor; if he is not a practitioner, he will give you credit for your good intentions and courtesy. Call him nlèm [he who casts bait] and the situation is quite different. First, he will peer around to see if anyone has overheard. If you are alone with him and [421] the stronger, or if he fears retaliation, you will be lucky to escape the gunshot or knife stab he will gladly give you, or the poison he might give you as soon as he has a chance. If there are people around in the village, it [683] would constitute a serious accusation, which might cost him his life....

754 In fact, the sorcerer is the person hated and feared above all others, the evildoer, whom one consults only when forced to it, because he controls occult forces and his power is recognized. ...

Nevertheless, in spite of this, sorcerers exist and will continue to do so for a long time for two reasons:

1. their social position in the tribe, not as sorcerers -- for I have just said that they have none on that score -- but because of their own personalities;

2. the fear they inspire, which will eventually lead to their death, but which does help them to maintain their positions.

754 791 Clearly, in everyday life and through the course of events, practitioner and sorcerer are often combined in the same person. A certain man, a religious minister respected by his family, a physician, and practitioner esteemed publicly, may also be a sorcerer, but then in the greatest secrecy, unless his position allows him to proclaim this attribute. In that case he will be universally feared and hated and will only keep going through terror and murder, and he will always fear for his life.

[Pp. 422, 423, omitted. --Translator] [424]

791 The practitioner carries on the cult and is the totem's minister only by a sort of delegation, a handing over of power from the head of a family. He has been seen in this capacity performing his part in important totemic ceremonies alongside the tribal chief, regulating ritual under his direction, in short, acting as his organizer, master of ceremonies, sacrificial assistant. In practice he often comes to supplant the chief and afterwards to transmit to his descendants the religious power usurped.

Even this predominant role will not be thought sufficient by the ngâña [practitioner]. He wants complete ascendancy and he attains it through the secret societies in which he alone is master, which have little by little encroached on the tribal organization and tend to supplant the family power of former times. In this way he is the true and sole minister of the totem of these societies.

754 But alongside the ngâña and the secret societies he organizes and controls, hidden as it were in their underworld, are the sorcerers, or bɛ̂yèm, who are similarly ministers of totems which they have given to the secret societies they control -- ministers, 754 societies, and totems that are basically actually spurious copies of the first.

From this we are led to a study of the secret societies
754 directed by both and of the very different, though often undif-791 ferentiated, role that practitioners [bəŋgan] and sorcerers [bəyəm] play in them.

Chapter XIII

Practitioners and Sorcerers

Their Secret Societies

[Pp. 425-433 omitted, being mainly taken up with the theories of others. --Translator]

[434[[Three paragraphs omitted. --Translator]

575 In my opinion the secret society is derived from the tribal organization itself. The dominating position which the practitioner has been able to assume [in the secret society] comes from the role he has necessarily been called upon to play in the ordinary course of events. Similarly, the new totems given to initiates after initiation are only imitations of those bestowed upon them by their fathers at birth.

[One paragraph omitted. --Translator]

575 Before youths are admitted to membership with warriors, 791 it seems quite natural to put them through a series of tests designed to prove whether they are really fit to play their part and to perform the services which the tribe demands of them. Consequently, girls and women are immediately eliminated, for the benefit of the male population. The series of tests cannot take place in the village in front of everyone; the compulsory elimination of some would, aside from other considerations, arouse violent resentment against the leaders and be followed by inevitable revenge. Hence the necessity for withdrawing to the background. The chief may appoint a representative, for instance an outstanding warrior, but there is no one better [435] fitted than the practitioner for this role and for taking a leading and soon

575 exclusive position. Religion must, in fact, be an important 791 and necessary element in these gatherings. For is it not necessary for the ancestral spirits to be consulted, to be made interested in their young descendants and their spirits made to enter into them; and is it not necessary to attract good influences and keep away harmful ones? All this is the work of the agent of worship, who alone is proficient. Also, throughout the time during which the young warriors are under his supervision, he has complete control over them, and this power he will indeed want to keep. But with their return to the village, the youths, now warriors, fall back under the authority of the tribal chief. But this is no obstacle. The practitioner easily recruits neophytes from among those who have been most devoted to him, and with these he forms a society more closed than the previous one and which is, above all, permanent, because of its objective and the manner of its establishment. The tribal chief will have to bow to and obey this group whose control has inevitably escaped him. He almost always agrees to enter it himself, mistakenly hoping therein to recapture his partially lost authority. . . .

575 Such, reduced to the simplest terms, is the origin of the secret society. It has gradually become legal and, in the natural course of things,one of the tribe's most lively organizations. Obviously, it has been greatly modified through time and as a result of changing forms. It has nevertheless remained just as it was in its general structure.

In imitation of the tribe, clan, and family, from which it has been copied, the secret society also has totems: totems of society, of subdivisions, [436] of chiefs, and of individuals. Having taken over the tribal chief's role, the practitioner has replaced him in everything that has to do with these particular totems. Yet it must be observed that since the principal power of these totems lies in secrecy, they will not encroach upon the tribe nor fight against either tribal or other totems. A person entering a secret society is simply seeking additional strength and power or a further guarantee of personal security.

Not only do individuals have totems, but just as the tribe is subdivided into clans and families, so the secret society is divided into classes, each of which has its totem.

[Three paragraphs omitted. --Translator]

575 We are dealing here with a recognized though secret cult,
769 an accepted cult, addressed to spirits and -- of especial importance -- to the spirits of ancestors. On this subject the practitioner is entirely in agreement with the chief and the tribal traditions.

154 But in addition to natural magic to which the practitioners
575 are confined, so to speak, "there is another," says Mgr. Le Roy, (1) [437] "which claims to borrow its power and methods from beings of the invisible world, from the disembodied ancestral spirits of men and even of animals, from independent spirits ....

1. La Religion des Primitifs [The Religion of Primitive Peoples], p. 340, "La Magie [Magic]."

"This anti-Religion has, like Religion, its worship, incantations, evocations, rites, fetishes, offerings, sacrifices, ministers, feast days, places of assembly."

First of all, it has its ministers, who are none other than the sorcerers. For this reason in the preceding pages [cf. Chap. 12--Translator] I have already tried to give a sketch of the sorcerer and to make a clear distinction between him and the practitioner by, describing the main traits of his personality, by sorting out a complicated whole in which many points meet and many lines cross and interpenetrate.

[Three paragraphs omitted. --Translator]

Leaving out everything not directly bearing on the subject under discussion, let us examine only the following points, which will show both the great similarities and considerable differences that, from the totemic point of view, exist between these two orders of phenomena.

1. Like the practitioners ... [438] sorcerers have united in secret societies for the purpose of assuring their vitality and power.

2. The feast days and initiation ceremonies have numerous points of resemblance. However, those of the sorcerers' cult exhibit a much more marked character of horror, cruelty, and especially an extreme immorality, and a hideous obscenity, dominated by a perverted cult of blood descent and procreation.

515
791
754

3. The practitioners' secret societies all have their own totems. Each group has a guardian totem which carries out for them the role of the étotore or the mvame of tribe, clan, or phratry. Yet, while tribal, clan, or phratry mvame may belong to any of the three kingdoms, animal, vegetable, or mineral, or even occasionally to the sidereal or the spiritual world, the secret society's totem is always an animal, a real animal, sometimes a reptile or fish, often a bird.

Sorcerers' secret societies, however -- and this constitutes an essential difference -- never have this kind of totem. Their mvame or guardian is always a spirit, a being that belongs to the spiritual or disembodied world. That spirit may, and often does, manifest itself (we are speaking from the native's point of view) in animal form, though it will not be a true animal, a fact about which sorcerers unanimously agree. The "spirit" manifests itself, they all will say.

4. Every "practititioner" on the day of his initiation and admission into the secret society, receives a particular, individual totem, usually an animal or a bird. But no physical link connects them; as with the personal mvame received at birth, there is simply a spiritual, mystical kinship between the two.

575
754
825

Every "sorcerer," on the day of his initiation and admission into the secret society, also forms an alliance with an animal, but that union has quite a special character. There is a real, physical kinship acquired by an exchange of blood, and a real alliance so that from that day onward the animal obeys the man and the man the animal: their lives are bound together. [439]

Strictly speaking, that animal is therefore not really a totem in the sence I have defined. The natives give it a special name: the élâñéla. European writers, ethnographers, and others, have referred to it as a nagual, and all the phenomena connected with the nagual is called nagualism. It has almost always been confused with the individual totem; nothing could be more unsuitable or actually more untrue.

[Two paragraphs and tables omitted on pp. 439-450. --Translator] [451]

[One paragraph omitted. --Translator]

575
754

1. Sorcerers, following the example of practitioners, have and still do set up secret societies:

a) throughout the entire Fan tribe;

b) in neighboring Bantu tribes.

I might here point out that I have never come across such associations among other African peoples, such as the Pygmies.

2. These secret societies meet at night in very mysterious fashion.

[786] 3. They are always essentially licentious to such a degree that, according to many writers, unbridled obscenity is the main objective. In my opinion, it is primarily an accompanying circumstance, aimed at controlling and binding the initiates by means of highly erotic and degrading pleasures.

However -- and this is my final point here -- there is one fact which has many a time misled the most conscientious observers, the most eager to learn the truth, and which, combined with the rule of secrecy, curiously complicates the problem. Just as practitioners have ranks and a hierarchy in their secret societies, so sorcerers have instituted ranks and a highly organized hierarchy. Hence there are several kinds of gatherings. Sometimes there is a sort of general assembly for all who belong to the association, in which case the purpose is a celebration, almost always of revolting obscenity and cruelty. All the witnesses clearly agree on this point.

But beside these "general" celebrations for the whole membership, there are others of a much more secret character to which only sorcerers, the true and sole leaders of these assemblies, are invited. Notified by a password to which I shall shortly refer, they gather at the appointed place and there [452] a very particular kind of feast takes place about which it is difficult to give precise details. It can well be imagined that those who belong to these associations keep silent. The rule of secrecy is absolute and inexorable; moreover, their own interest is at stake. It will always be very hard, if not impossible, to throw light on many facts and factors whose disclosure would nevertheless be extremely valuable from the religious point of view.

[Two paragraphs omitted. --Translator]

754 575 828 Sorcerers meet on certain days at a specified place. In most cases this meeting has been decided upon in advance at the previous gathering. But it may also happen that the high chief wants to convene his followers unexpectedly. How then is this done?

The manner is most mysterious.

A chief whom I once questioned on this subject told me that he heard the call during his sleep, that a "voice" informed him of the day, hour, and spot, and that this happened quite often. What is to be made of this reply? I must admit that I do not know. It can be stated definitely that certain sorcerers [453] are very clever at thought transmission even over long distances; such difficulties do not bother them.

One day I observed the following: I was chatting freely in a hut with a Fan who considered himself a friend of ours and who did, in fact, do us many services. I was sitting on his bamboo bed and he on a stool facing me. Suddenly I noticed a little bundle of sticks, some painted red, the others white, a few pointed, the rest not. What was most astonishing was that it seemed to me that the fairly large bundle had not been there a moment before. I hastily called it to our friend's attention because he could not have seen it, having his back turned. ...

[Two paragraphs omitted. --Translator]

"It's nothing, don't pay any attention," he said. He picked up the bundle and hid it carefully, adding, "Above all, don't mention it to anyone -- you would do me a great deal of harm!"

As his reply did not satisfy me, I wanted a further explanation.

"No, no!" he kept repeating, "It's a deep secret (endzǎ̂ndzǎ̂n ɛki, lit., the forbidden mystery)."

754 575 828 203 At last after much urging, he decided to admit, after making me promise never to say anything to anyone, that he was a sorcerer of the Ngil rite and that this was the way of convening the next meeting.

"According to the color painted on the sticks," he said, "I know where I'm to go; the number of sticks tells me how many days until my departure for the meeting; the white ones indicate 754 the leaders who will be there, as each has his private mark.

575 That's all."

828 "But why are some pointed and others not?"

203 "Oh, that! No, that's a deep secret. If I were to tell you that I'd be punished by death at the next meeting."

[Pages 454-462 omitted. --Translator] [463]

[Two paragraphs omitted. --Translator]

791 All practitioners' societies recognize ritual sacrifice. In 754 many cases a human victim is slain and eaten. These sacrifices 575 are often characterized by what seems to us revolting cruelty and 782 horror. I shall have occasion to deal with this point more fully 266 when discussing sacrifice.

These are ritual sacrifices: immolation is not done for the pleasure of killing any more than consuming the victim is for the pleasure of eating human flesh. This is so much the case that a woman is never sacrificed: "Munga ké dzamadzam, ké kie ve [562 nsissim: A woman is of no importance (from the sacrificial point 774] of view)," runs a Fan proverb, "She has no power over spirits because she has no soul."

At sorcerer's feasts, on the contrary, and in the societies they organize, men are eaten for the pleasure of eating human flesh.

754 According to all the Fan and all Africans, sorcerers leave their boeies in order to go and feed on the hearts of other men while asleep. Hence their name, bendzi bur, eaters of men. Sometimes they do this themselves, sometimes it is done by a spirit that possesses them. I willingly admit, of course, that there is nothing true in these accusations, at least as regards the way in which the sorcerers work. But one thing is undeniable, the fact of cannibalism.

[One paragraph omitted; p. 464 omitted. --Editor]

Chapter XIV

Totems of Sorcerers and of their Secret Societies

The Nagual and Nagualism

[Summary omitted--Translator] [466]

754 The foregoing pages have shown the close connections and also the great differences between practitioners and sorcerers. The connections arise from what is often identity of person; the differences are due to entirely unlike and often contrary purposes.

[One paragraph omitted. --Translator]

... A major cause of confusion ... derives, it seems to me, from the various totems that can belong to the same sorcerer, for several different reasons. Furthermore, the transformation of a sorcerer into an animal, often attributed to him, rightly or wrongly, plays a large part.

Hence the following points may be usefully made:

The different totems of any sorcerer belong to three distinct categories corresponding to:

1. his being a member of a tribe;

2. his ability to be a practitioner at the same time as a sorcerer;

3. his being a real sorcerer.

1. In belonging to a tribe, like any warrior each sorcerer has the following totems: a) tribal, b) clan, c) phratry, d) family, e) individual.

I have dealt with these different totems and pointed out that they can be, and often are, embodied in one and the same totem. [467]

2. From his ability to be a practitioner, a sorcerer possesses two totems: an individual totem and a class totem.

There is nothing to prevent these totems from being similar, or even the same as, the totems of the first category. In such a case they reinforce one another; power is thereby increased and, though the totemic prohibitions may be more strict, their observance is also easier. In fact, practitioners often give the clan or family totem as individual totems to novices provided that it be an "animal" totem. The class totem, already in existence, is thus independent of the particular will of the "admitting" practitioner or initiator, as well as of the "candidate."

3. As a sorcerer:

a) The sorcerer has no individual totem but a "dedicated animal." I shall indicate the great differences between "totem" and "dedicated animal."

154 b) Imitating the classes of practitioners, the classes of initiates controlled by sorcerers have class totems. These classes are recruited each within his own tribe.

154 515 c) The societies composed only of sorcerers are recruited from many different tribes, as the need arises, whatever may be the political relations, hostile or not. The societies embrace the whole nation. A sorcerer is always allied to every other sorcerer, at least from the point of view of organization, for often their struggle for influence is implacable.

These sorcerer's societies do not have totems but obey a spirit.

154 825 I have already mentioned the various changes of form assumed by sorcerers, and I shall return to this briefly in order to show that the different forms must not be confused, as has often been done, with the nagual, or sorcerer's "dedicated animal."

[Two paragraphs omitted. --Translator]

[Page 468 and three paragraphs on p. 469 omitted. --Translator] [469]

Having eliminated all totems that do not belong to the sorcerer as such, the following points confront us:

1. At first glance each sorcerer appears to have his totem -- animal, bird, reptile -- to which he pays particular tribute. [470]

The majority of writers apply the word nagual, nyarong, etc., to this familiar animal, and the group of facts connected with the nagual is naturally called nagualism. Now these writers see in the nagual, nyarong, etc., and in nagualism nothing but a special form of totem and totemism. Is this opinion justified -- is the nagual a totem?

[Three paragraphs omitted. --Translator] [471] [Three paragraphs omitted. --Translator]

The nagual, according to Van Gennep, following Lang, is the local name of the individual totem.

As regards the Fan I should not agree, and all the investigations we have been able to make among neighboring tribes as well as in Madagascar (to whom Van Gennep refers) bear out this opinion. The nagual is not the local name of the individual totem but of "an" individual totem, or better still -- for I do not admit to there being a "totem" involved -- of an animal "dedicated" to certain persons, few in number, who, in the case in point, are the sorcerers. I therefore make the following proposals:

757
825

1. The nagual is not the local name of the individual totem but the local name of the animal guardian of "certain" individuals -- two different conceptions corresponding to different purposes. And I write, not "totem," but -- which is not the same -- "animal guardian." ... [472]

2. Nagual and nagualism closely "approximate" totem and totemism in the sense that in both there is an animal guardian and a group of facts connected with this guardian, but they are differentiated completely in the sense that:

a) The totem in its basic form, that is, as a family or tribal totem, is not alive at the present time, but had lived formerly and handed down its attributes and especially the efficacy of its alliance to all its descendants, but actually only to its descendants now alive.

The nagual, on the other hand, has no existence as a family or tribal nagual. The nagual that would seem to be the protector of a group (like a secret society) is the protector of "the chief" of the group and not the whole group.

[Two paragraphs omitted. --Translator]

b) Since the nagual constitutes a unit not a group, it could not be a totem, and therefore nagualism is entirely different from totemism.

Finally, in line with what has been said, individual totems cannot disappear: the actual death of such or such panther [473] may or may not affect tribe, clan, family, or individual, of which it is, not the but a totem. But the death of that panther will in no way be the death of the totem, since the panther totem is a group just as much for the tribe as for the individual.

On the other hand, the death of such or such panther, the nagual of a certain sorcerer, will profoundly affect him, because, not a collective group, but an individual unit is concerned. A dead nagual can never be replaced. It is bad luck for the sorcerer, who loses by the death of his dedicated animal the most active agent of his authority and power. His own life is often linked with 757 that of his nagual and vice versa. If he is ill or if he dies, his 575 nagual suffers or dies; if the nagual dies or suffers, so the man dies or suffers.

[Pp. 474-480 omitted. --Translator] [481]

Initiation of the Practitioner

575 The practitioner at the time of his initiation undergoes a 791 different kind of test from that which young [ordinarily] men do. These tests are distinguished by a more marked degree of cruelty and especially by the offering of a victim. The victim will first be dedicated in special rites. After the tests and when the neophyte has been judged fit to enter the priestly company, then only is the totem chosen. But the choice is not left to the candidate; the "admitting" practitioner gives it to him. He must first of all undergo a severe fast of at least seven days. During this time he is forbidden absolutely, under any pretext, to leave his hut, which is set apart in a portion of the forest reserved to practitioners and called éli bengan. No person is allowed to ap-
[362 proach. Any intercourse with women, even a mere glance, 688] would bring about permanent exclusion. Moreover, the woman would be put to death, and her father or husband would have no right to compensation, pecuniary or other.

During the neophyte's seclusion his "admitting" [practitioner] has chosen the totem; avoiding many complications, he almost always chooses the class totem to which the confraternity is already dedicated.

What kind of totems are they? They never belong to the mineral realm, nor are they ever celestial phenomena, nor spirits of any sort, materialized or not, as happens with clan or tribal totems.

575 The class totem is usually a bird [or] a swiftly moving 791 animal, rarely a fierce one when the choice would be made be-
825 cause of the animal's positive qualities and not for its power to harm. Indeed the secret society prefers to seek as protecting totems, those that will guarantee swift and sure retreat in case 515 791 825 of danger. Hence the symbolic choice of fast birds: the river swallow, the koulyebe that flies like an arrow, the eagle or the vulture whose powerful flight protects it from enemies, the turtledove or the wood pigeon that knows how to conceal a nest so as to escape all attention. Or it might be an antelope with nimble legs and acute hearing, [482] which is especially difficult to capture. Finally, the crocodile sometimes appears as a totem not because it is bad tempered and devours men, but because it is always on the watch and at the slightest disturbance submerges itself and disappears in the river or because its scaly covering makes it invulnerable to arrows and javelins.

Such are the qualities that a secret society demands for itself.

515 791 782 The "consecrator" has chosen the totem, generally that of a class. He must now procure one himself but catch it "alive." He brings it into the hut of the "consecrated" one, who keeps it, at least as much as possible, on his chest throughout a whole night. In the morning the totem is led with great ceremony to the middle of a clearing and sprinkled with lustral water: the attending practitioners dance around it, then sing the hymn to the totem; the candidate sings it along with them. This hymn extols the totem's strength, valor, and swiftness, and especially thanks it for the protection given the society. Then, after this hymn, the candidate fetches the victim, whom he must offer, and leads him [567 562] before the totem. Ordinarily, the victim is a foreign slave, because he should not belong to the Fan nation, in order to avoid any possible ritual offense. (1) It is, however, permissible -- and this often happens -- to take a Fan woman. The slave or [278] woman is tightly gagged. Usually no resistance is offered, especially since the victim is given alewané to drink the evening before, a decoction of herbs and woody mushrooms that have the property of suppressing memory. The neophyte forces the victim to walk in front of him, or pushes him, going around the totem

> 1. A foreign slave or a woman is chosen because neither possesses a totem and therefore no ritual offense is to be feared.

575 791 782 three times. He then pulls him down to the ground, binds him in front of the totem, and with one stroke of the mfor cuts the carotid arteries. The blood is collected in a clay pot, which is carefully broken after the ceremony and buried. When the blood has stopped flowing, the practitioners approach. The leader, the others next, and the neophyte last, dip their hands into the pot and sprinkle the totem while they dance around it. [483]

575 791 782 266 Right after this the head practitioner approaches the totem and smears its neck with the victim's blood, then with one stroke cuts its arteries. The spouting blood is collected with care because no drop must fall on the ground, to avoid any profanation. The victim's blood is mixed with the totem's, and everyone dips his hand into the pot and stirs; when the contents have been thoroughly mixed, the pot is put on a fire that has been prepared and, as soon as the blood starts to coagulate, each person present approaches and drinks a bit. The neophyte takes his turn last and has to drink all that is left no matter how much.

The victim and the totem are then placed on a special pyre. Often the victim's body is opened and the heart removed and the totem's body put in its place. When the fire has pretty well roasted both bodies, they are taken off and the victim's is put aside for eating. The totem is put back on the fire and entirely consumed, except that its burnt and pulverized bones are preserved. The victim's bones are also kept and reduced to ash so that they may be mingled with the totem's. These ashes are eventually divided among all those present; the larger share going to the new practitioner to form his "totemic" fetish, which he will make use of whenever he appeals to his totem. In particular, when he takes part in the "consecration" of a new practitioner, he will, after the immolation of the totem as just described, put a pinch of these ashes on the totem's body: all his colleagues will do the same, in order to mystically unite all the totems in a common sacrifice.

[789]

At the end of the ceremony, the new practitioner must get rid of all signs of it before he returns to the village. He must see to it that no drop of blood, no trace of ash, be profaned. He breaks up the pyre, buries the pot for blood at a distance, and goes home only then, invested with a new dignity.

515
791
688

The ceremony is altogether secret in the sense that no layman may be present, but it remains a legal ceremony, and [484] everyone in the village -- if only through having had to stay away -- knows where and when it takes place. However, it must not be mentioned by anyone. Anyone doing so would have to pay a fine, usually of a fowl or its equivalent in value.

Thus the totem initiation of practitioner belongs to the ordinary scheme of things.

That of the sorcerer is quite different.

Initiation of the Sorcerer; the Nagual

154
515

In a book (1) published several years ago, the author, Mgr.

1. Sous le Ciel d'Afrique, Recits d'un Missionaire [Under the African Sky. A Missionary's Account], by the Rev. Father Buléon, Congregation of the Holy Ghost, pp. 88 ff.

Buléon ... gives an eyewitness account of the sorcerer's initiation. ...

[Footnote omitted. --Translator]

"To be initiated as a sorcerer means being initiated by secret ceremonies into certain rites through which one may gain some signal favor from a spirit whose power one recognizes. ...

"Motivated by revenge, avarice, or ambition, an African one day leaves his village, to which he only expects to return when armed with the mysterious and terrible power that will allow him to satisfy his desires. His journey's end may be distant; often he has excellent reasons for seeking, far away and usually outside his tribe, someone who will confer marvelous privileges upon him. His absence sometimes lasts [485] several months. ...

[Two paragraphs omitted. --Translator]

"The candidate is seated on the ground, wearing only a loincloth and tattooed more than the others. Undermined by severe privations made more hazardous by being uninterrupted,

515 subjected to skillfully graduated demands, participating in cere-
154 monies that arouse his imagination while exhausting him by their length, he gradually grows weaker and feels overwhelmed by the somber and mysterious aspect of initiation and falls into a kind of hallucination.

"In the depths of the hut [where the initiation takes place], there is a crudely sculptured image. Beneath that has been put a bundle containing the bones of a man long dead, and in front a mirror has been hung with its face towards the spectators. In all initiation proceedings the candidate is brought before the mirror and asked: 'What do you see?' For a long time he has to reply: 'I don't see anything.' As long as the reply is negative the initiation has not been successful. But finally the expected sign appears; he sees the likeness of a man in the mirror. Then he is led aside and made to describe the man whose face he has just seen. He had never seen him before [486] and cannot have known him, yet he describes him with great precision, giving all the facial traits. No cheating is possible in this. From the description given, the initiator, who is able to judge the likeness, identifies the man whose bones are beneath the image. This proof allows him to decide that the initiation is proceeding on the right track.

"Sometimes the initiator demands more personal and more active cooperation from the person seeking initiation. ... he may require that he bring the skull and a few bones of a relative of the first degree. ...

"Only when he brings in the material proofs of his crime are the final rites carried out. The bones are thrown into a [266] cauldron with herbs and other ingredients that are unsavoury. When the horrible mixture has been sufficiently cooked, the unfortunate man is made to drink a cup while the audience sings. Then what is left in the pot is divided, and everyone has a share.
[789] The small bones are wrapped in old rags, and this bundle is given to the initiate: it constitutes his talisman, which he will wear and which will protect him from the dangers he fears and obtain for him the favors he desires.

575 "There would seem to be nothing further except to pay 757 the initiator and to carry away the treasure so dearly and 825 criminally bought. But there is still a final ceremony. Initiator and initiate both are actors and witnesses in a strange scene which I should not describe were it not as authentic as it is apparently unbelievable. The new initiate's life is to be united through a bloody rite to that of an animal, who will thereafter be his personal animal, not a domestic or tame animal, but a wild beast living in the depths of the forest or the bed of a river. The initiator has made the necessary arrangements; he gives a signal: [487] at first no sound is heard in reply but soon in the bright moonlight an unknown participant is seen approaching the spot in the forest where it is awaited -- sometimes an enormous mass with a monstrous head, sometimes a feline form that crawls rather than walks, sometimes a long body that unwinds and undulates. Whatever the animal -- hippopotamus, panther, or snake -- it forgets the timidity or ferocity felt in the presence of man and submits docilely to the desired operation. Then the exchange of blood takes place. How this is done is not our concern. But what is beyond any doubt is the fact that blood is let, of the animal and of the initiate, and that each is inoculated with the other's blood. The animal's ear is slit (a corresponding cut is made upon a snake) as a mark
[304] of the link established with the man, in whose arm an incision is made so that he in turn is marked with the sign of the beast. (1)

1. [The footnote, referring to mediaeval witchcraft practices, is omitted. --Translator]

A real link henceforth exists between them. The animal will be at the beck and call of the person who has been made his master. I could name ... a certain Black man who at night receives a vulture or a panther with slit ear, and another who allows into his hut and even his bed (ikoko) a python that recognizes his authority. When day comes, and the tasks have been 575 754 825 performed, the animals return to lake or bush, just as dangerous, often more so, to all whose blood they have not received.

"This union is so close between animal and man that the life of one depends upon that of the other.

"How many examples I could give! Should you kill a panther that bears the mark, you will not long afterwards learn of the death of some sorcerer. Should the sorcerer be the first to die, don't be surprised at finding near the village the dead body of his personal animal."

[One paragraph omitted. --Translator] [488]

[One paragraph omitted. --Translator]

In contrast [to the position with regard] to totems, both men and women can have a nagual, since both can be sorcerers. Yet those naguals are not the same for both sexes.

Among the Fan, the naguals that belong to men, with rare exceptions, are:

1. panther, incorrectly called tiger, nze; and by far the most frequent.

2. black snake, elom, sometimes the python, mvom.

3. crocodile, nkôm, rarely the ngân or cayman, never the earth saurians.

4. hippopotamus, ngube or nguve.

5. wild boar, ngü.

6. vulture, nkôn, but very rarely.

[One paragraph omitted. --Translator]

The naguals belonging to women are:

1. black snake, kagélakagéla, different from the mvom.

2. vulture, nkôn. [489]

3. earth saurians; rarely the crocodile.

4. a kind of owl or night bird, akûn.

5. green snake found in banana trees, fôl.

6. a kind of horned viper, fî.

[Nine paragraphs omitted on p. 489. --Translator] [Page 490 omitted. --Translator] [491]

[One paragraph omitted. --Translator]

The élânéla, may quite well also belong to the animal clan to which individual, clan, or tribal totems are related, and this 575 754 825 can lead to much confusion. Sorcerers are people particularly eager to conceal themselves and at the same time to assert their power, and they are often clever at doing so. They succeed in disguising the real nature of their nagual: "It's my totem," they will say, if someone surprises them with their ɛlầnɛ̂la. To be able to make their supposed totems appear at will often gives them special authority, which they can make good use of in certain circumstances. Indeed, one can imagine the prestige gained by a sorcerer who during a ritual ceremony thus calls on his totem, in reality his nagual. But ordinarily he restrains himself, for he would then unmask his sorcerer's character, and, unless he is all-powerful and protected from revenge, that is not at all what he has in mind. ...

[614] According to certain chiefs, especially among the Bɛ̂kwɛ, the totem of the founder of the race or clan was originally his ɛlầnɛ̂la. This is perfectly admissible. If by one or another means the founder of tribe or clan was able to bind an animal to his will, to make it obedient, or at least to persuade his followers that this was so -- which amounts to the same thing -- these men may very readily, after his death, choose his ɛlanɛ̂la for their totem. But this choice, which is determined by circumstances or the wish of the dying chief, does not imply that it remains an ɛlầnɛ̂la. On the contrary, this characteristic [492] disappeared by the very fact of its becoming a totem and ceasing to be a unit in order to become a collective group through its descendants.

[Two paragraphs omitted--Translator]

In a certain number of cases it has happened that the nagual is confused with the sorcerer himself. In fact, according to the Africans, sorcerers often transform themselves into animals. ...

[Three paragraphs omitted. --Translator] [493]

[Three paragraphs omitted. --Translator]

Almost always, I am convinced, these [phenomena] may be attributed to men being disguised as animals, either to safely satisfy their murderous impulses or to obtain victims for feasts of human flesh.

In some cases these men act under the mysterious influence of unknown agents. This perhaps involves a kind of unconscious 675 754 825 possession. They believe and declare themselves to be really transformed into animals. ...

Finally, when it is not a question of the [sorcerer] in disguise (which is nearly always the case), one often deals with his nagual, obedient to his instructions and prompting, at least in the beginning. After the animal has tasted human flesh [494] it is eager to return of its own accord. I remember that in a village in the interior, a panther had devoured 37 persons within a year. A sorcerer was accused of having the animal under his command and, as a result, after confession he was killed. The next day the panther was found dead in the forest. A coincidence? Perhaps the sorcerer had made use of the panther the first time, but in connection with the other killings, I have my doubts. In any case, this panther had an ear slit by human hand, as I was able to verify. Without passing judgement on the outcome, this was an obvious sign that it was "dedicated."

In their main outlines, the sorcerers' confraternities [sic] are modeled on those of practitioners. Both, therefore, possess two distinct categories of confraternity, or secret society, one set composed of initiates directed and controlled by practitioners and sorcerers, the other composed solely of practitioners or sorcerers.

1. Societies composed of initiates directed by sorcerers each has its totem, as do the similar societies directed by practitioners. This totem is always an animal -- a custom found almost universally and made necessary by the very concept of the totem.

575 754 776 2. Secret societies composed solely of sorcerers do not have totems; they obey a spirit.

[Two paragraphs omitted. --Translator] [495]

[Two paragraphs omitted. --Translator]

This spirit bears the name, engungure. It is also the name of the khun, or ghosts, or even of the souls of the dead after the postmortuary exercises and the final transformations.

Chapter XV

The Totem in Fan Life: General Rites

000 Summary: Religion gives form to Fan life.

1. Totemic claim to worshipping rites. Sir Harry Johnston's view.
   The totem's rights as mvamayôñ, eponymous father
   This cult derived from that of the esayôñ, real father and founder of the race.
2. General totemic rites, or rites of the mvamayôñ.
   Common factor in all totemic rites of worship.
   1) Totemic sacrifice. Views of Smith, Hubert, and Mauss. a) Sacrifice of the totem: In principle the totem may not be killed. When is sacrifice allowed? How is the sacrifice made? What constitutes sacrifice? Immolation and exchange of blood, communion through the victim. b) Sacrifice to the totem. The various sacrifices.
   2) Lustral water: its qualities. How to consecrate it. Its totemic uses.
   3) Fasting: practices. Duration. Reason for fasting.
   4) Totemic dances. Religious dances, for circumcision, funerary, totemic. Their common characteristic of decency.
   Rhythm.
3. General totemic rites: details.
   1) Circumcision. a) Is it a religious rite? Circumcision not to be attributed essentially to hygienic causes. View of Renan. Medical views. b) Is circumcision a totemic rite? Frazer, Father Lagrange, Abbé Bros. Relevance for the Fan.
   c) The circumcision itself. Fan view of it. (1) Event and name. 2) Age of circumcision. 3) Time of the ceremony. 4) Preparations. 5) The ceremony.

* [Obvious misprint here: au for du. --Translator]

7: Trilles--36 M-5 (1893-1912) 1912 FH9 Fang FH9

000

d) Consequences of circumcision. Mgr. Le Roy's opinion of circumcision. The writer's view. [497]
2) Initiation of the young man. Tests before admission to warrior rank. Consecration and song connected with the rifle, the hymn to the sun.
3) Consecration of the chief. a) The ceremony. The consecration song. Sacrifice and victim. b) Rite of the spear among Marundi and Fan. Purpose of these ceremonies. c) Rites of initiation and consecration of the chief compared with the religious role of the Pharaoh. d) Mistakes made by European administration in appointing chiefs outside the main lineage.
e) Change of the clan totem. Examples.
4) War and palavers. War sacrifice and the victim. The ceremony. The sacrificer. Communion through the victim.
5) Large hunting expeditions. Sacrifice; the motive.
6) Founding a new village. Reasons. Preparatory rites.
Establishment.
7) Ordeals. Various kinds. Occasions for ordeals. Fire and boiling water tests. The poison test.
8) Blood exchange. How it is practiced among the Fan and among various African tribes.

[Beginning of Text]

111 The whole of the Fan's life, like that of every African, whether Bantu or other, is deeply imbued with religion.

Sometimes it gives form to and determines the principal actions of family and social life, sometimes it constitutes their very essence and raison d'être. It is then, strictly speaking, religious life.

These acts of worship are performed by special ministers, by the father of the family in the case of family rites, by the clan or tribal chief for public phenomena, and by the practitioner

T71 or true minister for religious life. Often, however, the practitioner actually, though not lawfully, replaces the father and especially the clan or racial chief. Alongside the practitioner, struggling against him in the background, appears the sorcerer, the agent of the extra- or contra-legal cult.

The religious act is addressed to spirits, to souls of the departed, to ancestors, to unknown forces of nature, etc. It is also addressed to the totem, as we have defined it. The totem is connected with religion by close ties which, at least for the Fan, link it inseparably with ancestor worship and determine the worshipping rites that are its due. [498]

1. Totemic Claim to Worshipping Rites

T19 The claims of the true totem to worshipping rites is clearly defined by virtue of its being the father of the tribe and founder of the race.

In using these two words, "father" and "founder," as I have pointed out before, I in no way mean that the eponymous animal is the real father of the face, the actual progenitive founder. I am using these words as the natives do, so as to adopt their own terms. Frequently, they have been misunderstood. (1)

1. Cf. S. Reinach, Orpheus (under the word "totem"), p. 20 and passim.

Real kinship has often been confused with kinship based on sentiment, mode of speech, or custom. Moreover, some writers have been in doubt, even with firsthand evidence:

"I have never been able to ascertain from Banyoro or Baganda that their forefathers at any time believed the clan to be descended from the object chosen as a totem. The matter remains very obscure. It may be remotely connected with ancestor-worship, which is certainly the foundation of such religious beliefs as are held by the Banyoro, as by most other Negro races." (2)

2. Sir H. Johnston, The Uganda Protectorate, Preface.

779 As may be seen from these remarks of Sir Harry Johnston, the resemblance between mvamayôn and esayôn was more the consequence of a writer's preconceived idea or of a native's misinterpreted statement than of the words themselves and the crux of the matter.

What, then, are the totem's rights, according to this view of kinship; are they real in the exact sense of the word or simply the result of blood exchange?

As father of the tribe, mvamayôn, and founder of the race, the totem has a claim to a cult and, consequently, to special rites, determining the circumstances, place, and manner of worship.

But the mvamayôn may and should be considered from two points of view: it is the protector of clan and tribe, and thereby, strictly speaking, the mvamayôn; it consequently has a right to public worship, national or tribal. But it is also the protector of the family [499] and the individual, and thereby, the étotore; it consequently has a claim to family and individual worship. In order to apprehend and understand the significance of many totemic phenomena, it is absolutely necessary to make this distinction.

The mvamayôn therefore ought to receive ritual worship, and not just any kind; this presupposes the intervention of a practitioner representing the chief, or the head of the family or even the tribal chief. And not only does the mvamayôn have a right to collective public worship in special circumstances laid down by law, such as the establishment of a new village, but further, as étotore, to private, individual worship, which requires the intervention of a private person and a head of a family, not of a practitioner or tribal chief.

779 But, let me emphasize that this totemic worship, whether 771 private and individual or tribal and general, does not in certain respects fit into the wider framework of religious life per se, or, if one prefers, does not constitute the religion of the nation or tribe. Indeed the practitioner is the rightful representative, guardian, and recognized sacrificial ministrant of religion, not by choice but by his function itself.

770 In totemic worship, on the other hand, which is not re-
771 ligion but a collection of religious phenomena, this role belongs to the family or tribal head and if, in an exceptional case, it is performed by the practitioner, he does so as a delegate only.

The cult of the mvamayôn is in fact a derived cult, pri-779 marily based upon the esayôn cult without which it would have no
769 raison d'être. Indeed, the esayôn is the true father of the tribe and without the esayôn there could be no mvamayôn; one evidently cannot exist without the other. But the esayôn, or ancestral worship, is independent of what is strictly a religious cult or recognition of the divine being and worship of spirits. The esayôn cult is connected with religion per se in the sense of drawing upon it as a source and, according to the Fan, of deriving from it its ultimate origin and fundamental rationale. The esayôn cult is therefore primarily and in principle a family cult, if one takes each tribal ancestor separately. It is national if the first ancestor or ancestors of the tribe are viewed together. The cult, then, is definitely connected with the genuine religious cult of deities, [500] in the sense that in many Bantu tribes, and probably among the Fan, the first ancestor or ancestors of the tribe are now deified and raised to the rank of national gods, or at least, spiritual protectors of the tribe.

779 Totemism therefore has only relative importance as a basis
[771] for Fan religious conceptions and takes, one might say, only third place, after the leading cult of spirits and then after ancestor worship, of which it is but a derivative.

Totemic rites will, as I have said, be general or particular according to whether they are connected with the mvamayôn or the ètotore. The first rites relate to the race itself and what bears upon its continuance and preservation, the others relate to the individual, not as a particular person but as a member of the race. From this we come quite naturally to recognizing among them those of the family and those of society, with religion entering to a greater or lesser extent into the second.

779 2. General Totemic Rites, or Rites of the mvamayôn

To list and then discuss all the general rites connected directly or indirectly with Fan totemism, and those in which traces of totemism might be discovered or questioned, would carry us far beyond the necessary limits set for this study. Moreover, I shall take up later, in a work on Fan religion, those rites that are more closely connected with religious phenomena and that could not be separated without some previous explanation of the latter.

Among general totemic rites, I shall refer briefly to those that primarily concern the continuation and preservation of the race. These are:

1. Circumcision, by which a person is received into tribal life

2. Initiation, which places him among the warriors

3. Consecration of the chief, which links the tribe with its ancestors [501]

4. Warfare, which preserves the tribe

5. Hunting and fishing expeditions, which provide subsistence

6. Establishment of a new village, which is a part of the tribe's social life

7. Ordeals and the poison test, which eliminate and punish rebellion against the tribe

8. Exchange of blood, which admits a stranger into the tribe and enlarges the family or links two tribes in common alliance through the chiefs who personify them

In all general totemic rites, and often in particular ones, there are several elements to which we should first pay attention so as to avoid repetition. These are:

1. Sacrifice, which appears to be basic to all rites, general and particular

2. Fasting, which takes place before major sacrifices

3. Lustral water, which is associated with almost every sacrifice

4. Totemic dances, which are an integral part of the rites

119 Of these, sacrifice is by far the most important. It is required; without it, in one form or another, there would be no rite, no cult ceremony.

I. Totemic Sacrifice

119 182 Sacrifice is the basis of all totemism. Totemic activities, whatever they may be, depend upon sacrifice, as do all the religious activities of the African.

At first glance, there appears to be considerable variety in sacrifices. Various authors have attempted to classify them. (1)

1. Cf. Hubert and Mauss, Le sacrifice, Mélanges d'histoire des Religions [Sacrifice, Miscellany on the History of Religion] (Paris, 1909), pp. 16 ff., Lagrange, Études sur les Religions sémitiques [Studies in Semitic Religion], pp. 249; Reinach, Cultes, Mythes, Religions [Cults, Myths, Religions] Vol. 1, pp. 2-3 ff.; Bros, op. cit. [Religion des peuples non civilisés (Religion of Noncivilized People)], p. 143; Le Roy, op. cit., [La Religion des Primitifs (The Religion of Primitives), (Paris, 1909), pp. 322 ff. [502]

We shall discuss only two kinds here, without being concerned about distinctions:

1. Sacrifice to the totem
2. Sacrifice of the totem (1)

1. W. R. Smith (article on "Sacrifice" in the Encyclopedia Britannica) acknowledges sacrifice as a totemic rite; in his opinion, it is a blood covenant, a communal meal at which the faithful eat their totem god so as to assimilate his power, to make or renew their covenant with him. The slaughter has no other purpose except to permit communion. This is not found in all sacrifice, because, through the evolution of ideas, the notion of the "sacred" has acquired such importance that the god is merely a surviving rite, whose origin is inevitably explained by mythology.

779
782

In the view of Hubert and Mauss, sacrifice is based on belief in a vague, divine power which one can master by magical sacrifices. The purpose of sacrifice is to establish communication between the sacred world possessing these powers and the profane world, through a victim, that is, an object destroyed in the course of the ceremony. To fulfill this purpose, the victim is consecrated; by means of magic all the divine powers are concentrated in the victim and they are increased by being liberated by the immolation. The religious agent, the person offering the sacrifice, and the faithful are made partakers of this power. The victim's approach must be prepared for, hence the purifying rites.

Father Lagrange's theory acknowledges animism and gods, instead of magical forces.

a) Sacrice of the totem

The totem is "sacred" in itself. Mvame a ne éki. It is forbidden to offend it, even in speech, and that under severe penalties, all the more so to wound and, above all, to kill it. Should this happen, the act always entails punishment and expiation, two completely separate things, to which we shall return when discussing the sacrifice made to the totem.

779 How can these facts be reconciled with the sacrifice of 782 the totem itself?

Sacrifice of a totem animal belongs to a special order of ideas. First of all, observe that we may use the term "animal." In fact, a totem is generally a living being. When this is not the case, the practitioner or religious agent of the sacrifice, the "sacrificing one," has the right to make a substitution, that is, to "animalize in another living being" the totem that is a spirit, a celestial phenomenon or a mineral, etc. [503]

779 "The totem animal is the one with whom, or rather with 782 whose tribe, a man, representing his own person and his 675 descendants, has made a covenant, in order to obtain services in return. This agreement usually (and we have seen that this was always the case among the Fan) "was sealed by an exchange of blood in such a way that animal and man, the family of the one and of the other, the tribe uof the first and the tribe of the second, are individuals, families, or tribes of the same blood. They are allied. From time to time it is a good thing to renew this covenant, and that is done by sacrificing a representative of the animal family, a sacrifice in which man takes part as a communicant: there is a new blood exchange, a revival of the first covenant. In addition, it is a reinforcement of the special virtues of the totem, virtues which are perhaps strengthened by the presence or influence of the ancestral spirit in the animal or vegetable so consecrated, sacrificed, and eaten." (1)

1. Le Roy, op. cit., pp. 324-325.

779 In what circumstances, how and why, will the totem ani-
782 mal be thus sacrificed? For it is probably not enough to say, with the distinguished author just quoted, "From time to time it is a good thing to renew this covenant."

There will be a sacrifice of the totem:

1. Whenever a new totem is to be chosen.

This happens, first, at each "birth" in the most inclusive sense of the word or, again, at each "beginning of a new life." Such would be the establishment of a new clan, at which time the chief's totem becomes the clan totem instead of merely the 719 family one. Likewise, in the case of an individual, there will 782 be sacrifice of the totem after birth, when the child has been accepted by his father and admitted for the first time into the tribe and receives his personal totem. And there will be another sacrifice of the totem upon his initiation as a warrior, his entry into a secret society, at each stage in initiation, in short, upon each change of totem or introduction to a totem.

2. Whenever the tribe, the clan, or the secret society, sometimes the family and even the individual, undergoes a critical experience [504] involving danger to life and needs to call upon totemic aid in a special way. The religious head of the group in danger, after the necessary sacrifices, will have to decide whether or not this offering and new exchange of blood is expedient.

3. In certain cases it may happen that the "materialized" totem has been lost: if, for instance, in battle or any kind of fighting, the akaméyôn, (1) the materialized totem representing the actual covenant of the tribe with its real totem, falls into the enemy's hands. Sometimes the victors may even demand the surrender of the akaméyôn. Or the loss may be casual, the result of accident, shipwreck, etc. In all such cases, the akale or materialized totem will have to be replaced, whether it pertains to the nation, clan, family, or individual. The ceremony will vary in elaborateness according to the occasion or the organized group. It will not be very important when a single person is involved, but more so for a clan or tribe, and especially so when there is danger or when the totem has fallen into enemy hands.

1. Akaleméyôn and akaméyôn are both used.

Whatever the case may be, the ceremony follows the same broad lines. First of all, there will be an offering or sacrifice to the totem, sometimes a simple gift of fruit, oil, or first fruits, sometimes the sacrifice of an animal, occasionally even the sacrifice of a human being. We have given several 779 examples. After the victim has been offered to the totem, 782 the latter will itself be immolated, with all the prescribed ritual; then comes the eating or partaking of the totem itself. In this way the ancient covenant is renewed, though on a new basis. It means binding the present to the past and making certain in clear and recognizable fashion, the continuance of the totemic agreement concluded by the first ancestor of the race.

The sacrifice of the totem therefore gives us the basic idea which must have guided primitive sacrifice. First of all, it was an "offering," not a "tax" granted to a recognized master, as Le Roy puts it, for totemic sacrifice does not admit of this notion at all, but rather as the expiation of ritual but necessary murder. This notion is confirmed [505] by the fact that the [682] sacrifice offered "beforehand" to the sacrificed totem is the same as that which ought to be offered as ritual compensation for accidental murder. The totem having been appeased in advance, the "offering" proper is then made. After a series of consecutive consecrations, the "sacrificing person," the chief or practitioner representing the organized group over which he presides, calls "into himself" the genius of the race, the power of the ancestors. But this power rests in, and inhabits, an invisible world, the world of spirits; the actual totem must be carried into that world and put to death in order that it may penetrate it. So, before the ceremony, the "sacrificing person," as representative of that world of spirits, will take care to paint himself with liturgical colors; [with] red, the color of sacrifice, and white, the color of funerals but especially of spirits, deified souls of the dead, ghosts, of all disembodied forces.

Thus totem and victim will be adorned in the same colors, and only then will the "immolation" take place.

After the immolation comes the exchange of blood.

The totem's blood has been carefully collected; those taking part make slight incisions in their arms, squeeze out a little blood, put some on a leaf, take a few drops of the totem's blood and mix it with their own on the leaf. Finally, they apply the leaf to the cuts on their arms and rub energetically so as to make the mixture of bloods penetrate to the depths of the wound. Only after this ceremony do the "participants" renew their covenant by drinking the totem's blood.

719
782

"Communion" follows the exchange of blood. This does not always take place; often only the victim that has been offered is shared by everyone, after it is roasted. If the totemic animal is very small, only the future possessor of this totem will receive it as a sacrament. Sometimes, instead of communion based on the totem, the participants only divide the ashes. The totem is burnt to a cinder, but the large bones are preserved intact, pulverized and mixed with the ashes of the previous sacrifice. Then each participant carefully takes [506] the portion due him and keeps it for himself. The sacrificer's portion is always much the largest.

Finally, "substitution" of totems occasionally takes place. It may be that some kinds of totem are very hard to procure, especially in an emergency. This would be the case with a panther, an elephant, or certain rare plants. The procedure, then, is one of substitution, either by simply making a figure in clay or wood, an effigy roughly reproducing the totem, or by making merely a head. But with this image the consecrator will use the same formulae and ritual and will represent symbolically those that cannot actually be performed, like blood exchange. The effigy is always first painted with the symbolic colors, then, after an offering is made, sprinkled with the victim's blood.

b) Sacrifice to the totem

These are of various kinds.

German writers often place sacrifices in different categories, such as expiation (Sühnopfer), thanksgiving (Dankopfer), and petition (Bittopfer). This division is more specious than real, at least as far as totemic sacrifice is concerned. Therefore, with Max Müller [Footnote omitted. --Editor], I prefer to look upon them as regular and occasional sacrifices.

Occasional sacrifices I consider, with Mauss [Footnote omitted. --Editor], to be, first, the sacramental sacrifices associated with the solemn events of life, votive sacrifices, and finally curative and expiatory sacrifices.

779 782 Regular or periodic sacrifices are associated with certain fixed occasions, independent of man's will and of chance. These are: the daily sacrifice, that to the new moon, and that of first fruits.

Occasional sacrifices are usually blood offerings, accompanied by rites that have earned the name "communional." [507] In almost all these, there is communion through the victim, and all present partake in the sacrifice.

Periodic totemic sacrifices are, on the other hand, rarely bloody or "communional."

In general, the African considers his own interests first. He usually pays rather little attention to his totem, except for certain rites laid down by custom, from which he would not dare to deviate. Thus, every morning, the first wife or most [788] important woman, in the name of the head of the family, anoints with oil the figure upon the box (évora biéri) that contains both the ancestral skulls and the materialized totem. Also, at the time of the new moon, an offering is made to this same Biéri, to the ancestors and totem together, the two cults being united in a common gift.

But when a Fan has some favor to ask, wants to acquire something, like a wife, an object, etc., he will hasten to make a sacrifice to the totem. The more urgent the need, and the more important the object, the more substantial will be the sacrifice, ranging from a hen to a human victim, sometimes even to the ritual sacrifice of the chief himself or at least of one of his children.

The sacrifice of thanksgiving does not exist for the Fan; he would view it as "give and take" and he would be astonished if asked to give thanks: he has offered a sacrifice to his totem, the latter has granted his prayer, which means that the totem is satisfied. Why do any more? If a new need arises, then only will it be time to have recourse again to his totem. Meanwhile he had best leave things alone. Each is satisfied with the other.

As for expiatory sacrifice, it is one of the most common. Every time an African has an accident, a misfortune, a calamity, perhaps merely lack of success, he attributes it to his totem's

779 having been offended by some nsem or ritual impurity, by the 782 violation of an éki, etc., whence the necessity of appeasing the totem. The greater the misfortune, the more serious must have been the cause or the fault, even though involuntary, and the more to be expiated by a larger sacrifice. [508]

At the basis of all general rites concerned with the race, we find sacrifice in one form or another, either bloody "communional," or bloody and not "communional," or not bloody, or simply as an offering.

In these sacrifices the victim is often the totem itself. But in that case there will always have been a previous offering of another victim. That victim may sometimes be the officiant himself, as in circumcision, when the sacrificer or operator is but an agent.

II. Lustral Water; médzim akum

779 In almost all totemic sacrifices, lustral water is used. The 782 practitioner boils water in a clay pot, making an infusion with 783 various plants. The most commonly used are: ava, a sort of [824] fragrant labiate; asèp, a strong-smelling mint; esun (hua gabonensis), a tree with a garlicky smell; esèp (monodora myristica), with an equally strong scent; and in addition, the leaves of elun, ombien, and several others. Nearly always eleven plants are used, which must have been picked at the new moon. To these are added a few pieces of meteorite and the remains of a sacrifice offered to the tribal totem, consisting of ashes, bone, and a few bits of horn or hoof, also a little dried blood.

Before beginning, the practitioner or head of the family dips his hands in the lustral water. With this he sprinkles the participants, using a dè, (1) a kind of fly swatter usually made [442] 1. The dè is the insignia of chiefs. In former times, only they were allowed to use an elephant's tail as a fly swatter, when they themselves had killed the animal.

779 from an elephant's tail. He then sprinkles the victim, the 782 ancestral skulls, and finally the totem.
783 Upon returning from battle, warriors wash their weapons in lustral water so as to ward off the malevolent spirits of the dead.

Lustral water is also used in sacrifices made in expiation of violations of éki.

Afterwards the water is emptied in a remote spot. The chief often carries it back to the village and uses it to water the [824] tree, usually a fig tree, that was planted over the remains of his umbilical cord. This tree is an emblem of his own life, and the lustral water is in this case a sort of sacrifice. [509]

III. Fasting; nzè akhu

779 All important totemic ceremonies are preceded by fasts.
785 They are very strict, and the least infraction entails grave penalties.

They always take place in seclusion: those who are fasting are kept apart in the forest far from the village, shut up in small huts. During the fast it is strictly forbidden to drink or eat before sundown and to wash with water, although rubbing one's body with ashes is allowed. Furthermore, certain meats and fruits are prohibited, such as boiled food or fruit; fermented drinks, except on certain sacred days and before initiations, when, on the contrary, it is obligatory; and drinking from any kind of pot. If someone takes a drink inadvertently, the pot must be broken right away; nevertheless this act involves a ritual fault and requires expiation. One is supposed to drink from a brook, using [834] a leaf rolled into a cone (oké ésaga). Finally, throughout the fast all intercourse with women is absolutely prohibited (évek).

779 The duration of the fast varies with the ceremony and the 785 initiation. For circumcision, for instance, it lasts usually a 821 lunar month (ngon). Other initiations rarely exceed seven days, let us say a lunar quarter, aŝôñ ngon; the last quarter is usually chosen (mété méngon). The moon plays an important role in all

779 totemic ceremonies, or in even just religious ones. None may 785 be performed while the moon is dark or when it is full (ngon 821 éto ndzuge: the moon is closed). In the ceremonies at which the chief performs alone, the fast lasts three and a half days, a half lunar quarter; the fast begins at nearly full moon (nsolo ngon) and ends at full moon (nduge ngon).

IV. Totemic Dances: adzém ba dzém akhu

779 Dance plays such a large part in Fan life, as it does in 535 that of every African, that it would be very unlikely to be absent from religious and totemic life. Besides, we know that dancing has always been associated with [510] religious phenomena among all peoples and in all epochs. David danced before the Ark of the Covenant; Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans had their sacred dances; and even in our day, in quite recent times, have we not seen in Madrid the seises, the altar boys of Seville, performing their graceful dances before the blessed sacrament?

The Fan have their religious dances, and special ones for each rite. We may divide them into several classes: purely religious dances, with which we are not concerned; those that accompany totemic rites; and, finally, purely totemic dances.

Among the dances accompanying totemic rites, the principal ones are dances of sacrifice and of circumcision and mortuary dances.

779 As the name indicates, dances of sacrifice accompany all 782 sacrifices and are danced before and after, and each has it 535 characteristic features.

The dance taking place before a sacrifice is serious. The chief, then all the participants, circle slowly around the victim to a tom-tom beating out a solemn rhythm. The movements of this dance are all slow and restrained, knees are bent slightly, elbows pushed back, with hands near the hips. It is more a rhythmic march than a true dance.

The dance taking place after a sacrifice is of quite another character. The rhythm is very fast, arms are raised into the air,

779
782 legs are flung to right and left alternately; two very lively steps, 535 a pause, two successive jetés to the right and left, and a swaying of the body above the hips make up this dance, which has real beauty and does not lack a certain style.

779
881 The circumcision dance is entirely different. The young 535 candidates, painted white from head to foot and dressed in garments of leaves, are led by the initiator before the assembled 304 participants, as soon as the preparatory rites have ended and the operation is to be performed. Grown, circumcised men stand on one side, the ritual experts in the middle, those to be circumcised [511] on the other side. The dance begins. First of all, it consists of an immense circle, which spreads out and turns around the area; then the movement quickens, hands are dropped, and each person leaps and shimmies about on his own, still keeping time, which is marked out by the tom-tom. Moreover, in spite of what appears to be disorder, one soon sees that all movements are regular, perfectly conceived and executed without a hitch, without mistake, without getting out of step. Soon sweat is pouring down the dancers' arms and legs; one after another they go back to their places; only the candidates continue and their dance turns into a spinning in almost one place, on the toes, with hands stretched horizontally. Then, suddenly, at a signal from the tom-tom, the dance stops abruptly: the young dancers rush to their places, sit down, and the operations begin.

Each time the practitioner circumcises a boy, he stands up, holding in his hand proof of the operation, then does a quick dance step consisting of a few merry leaps, to the accompaniment of a special song, which everyone sings together.

When the operations are over, the youths who have been circumcised perform a short dance intended to show their fortitude; it is of just a few steps, done any old way. Then the boys quickly return to their huts, held up by their friends.

764 The funeral dance is much more beautiful. Far from 535 being dignified and solemn, the fanki is exceedingly lively and complicated, representing, theoretically, the soul of the dead man leaving his body and later reaching the world of spirits.

764 The soul looks everywhere for a new dwelling; it is repulsed on 535 all sides, but at last finds its rightful place. This dance has only a distant connection with totemic performances and so we do not need to be concerned with it.

Genuinely totemic dances are infrequent and are only TA performed on important occasions, such as war and above all 535 after a victory. However, they are also part of burial rites and are put on after the fanki at the death of a chief. [512]

The totemic dance expresses the link between the head [chef] of the race and his totem. It depicts the totem, sometimes in a symbolic, sometimes in a representational, manner. If, as often happens, the totem is an animal, the dance will be really lively; these are the finest examples. In addition, the dancer's talent should go to copying as closely as possible the animal's pace, habits, way of life, in a word, to mime it as accurately as possible.

I have seen some of these totemic dances performed with extraordinary skill. Out of many occasions, there was once one, among the Yemvi, whose totem is a kind of flower called mvi: the dancer, moving to a very fast tempo, first outlined the shape of the flower, imitated its appearance by gestures, by an extraordinary swaying of the hips, which involved sometimes bending so far backward that his head would touch the ground without for a second losing the rhythm; from time to time, his arms and head would sweep the ground to the right and the left with incredible swiftness. Then came the blossoming: growth from bud to flower, soon to full bloom. Finally he portrayed the symbolic covenant between the father of the race and the flower, which was brought to him by a spirit. The same dancer presented a really striking contrast between the slow, weighed down, ponderous bearing of the racial chief and the light, elusive, airy, as it were, movements of the spirit approaching, retreating, and approaching again. This entirely symbolic dance has sometimes been quite erroneously interpreted by explorers as being erotic.

When the totem is an animal, the dance is obviously much simpler and more representational. The dancer mimes an animal

779 that everyone will recognize by its gait, pace and typical 535 mannerisms; then, one by one, he will act out scenes of pursuit and capture, of alliance, finally of actual assistance. Some dancers thus acquire a great reputation, which they certainly deserve.

These totemic dances have much in common with certain character dances at which the African excels, representational dances. For example, I remember having seen the dance of the bees, of the wild boar, and of the elephant, done with truly remarkable agility and realism.

Totemic dances are distinguished above all by the fact that they are accompanied, one might say rhythmically measured, by the totemic song. Furthermore, while character dances depend to a great extent upon the dancer's inspiration, totemic dance steps are more regulated and have certain invariable features. [513]

779 A common trait of all religious dances is decency, at 535 least relative decency. They are performed only by men, and 831 women are not admitted except at circumcisions, and even then they do not mingle with the men. There is rarely any sex in them, in contrast to the purely recreational dances, especially those performed in the evening, at which at times license seems to be given to the greatest obscenity.

779 Religious dances always have a very marked quality of 831 antiquity, and the majority are very beautiful, in the precise meaning of the word.

In order to give an approximate idea of totemic dances, I have transcribed two of them which seem the most expressive, that of the flower, mvi, and that of the elephant, nzoǒ.

These dances are sung, danced, and mimed at the same time. Each note represents a tom-tom beat, a different bodily position and foot movement, whether a glissade, a leap, a heavy beat, or a rapid weaving in and out.

Totemic dance of the mvi flower:
Musical score, pp. 513-514 of text.]

[515] 3. General Totemic Rites: Details

779 In order to establish some logical order for totemic rites, we may take a man at his coming into the world, follow him through his principal activities, and leave him only at death. In this way we shall include the complete series of general or particular rites which he must observe. However, we shall obviously have to discuss them from the totemic point of view only.

By general rites I mean those concerned with the race or tribe. Among particular rites, on the other hand, I place all those concerned more specifically with the individual.

General rites are as follows:

1. Circumcision, akèle
2. Initiation, evôm
3. Consecration of a chief, elôga
4. War, abal
5. Hunting or fishing expeditions, miyèn
6. Establishment in new territory, edzal mfifi
7. Ordeals, elun, ému mélan
8. Covenants or blood exchange, abvuna

Particular rites to be noted are:

1. Birth and name giving, abiené, edzü
2. Adoption, anôn mohè
3. Marriage, ahüx
4. Hunting, fishing, farming, mveñe, ayü kos, bifax
5. Trade, okira
6. Death, awu

The totemic character is sometimes strongly marked in these rites, sometimes it is almost obscured, barely perceptible. At times that character is underlined merely by a gesture, a call, a prayer. But it is never absent. [516]

I. Circumcision

881 304 Circumcision cannot be considered a universal rite among Bantu tribes: some practice it, some do not, either because they have never done so or because the custom has been lost in the course of centuries and repeated migrations.

881
304

The Fan and all the tribes of their group have preserved it. In all clans, at a time decided upon by the chief, youths must be circumcised. This rule is also accepted by all the related tribes, Dzèm and Dzandzama, Bulu, Shéké, Batéké, etc.

During my many journeys I never met a single Fan who had [583] not been circumcised. No young girl would agree to marrying an uncircumcised man, under any conditions. This by the way indi- [584] cates the value, even in terms of Fan custom, of the temporary marriages contracted with Europeans. The Fan look upon these unions simply as concubinage and designate them by the same word, évex.

Although the Fan group has kept circumcision, others have not, so that it cannot be said to now be a general rite among the Bantu. The custom is not the result of Semitic infiltration; some Bantu tribes like the Kavirondo, among whom the Arabs have penetrated, do not practice it, while the Fan, who have never been in contact with Moslems, do so.

a) Is circumcision a religious rite?

We shall take up the subject [circumcision] first from the general, then from the particular, point of view.

The first question to be raised is: Is circumcision a religious rite by nature and origin, consecrating a person to a deity, as by a sort of sacrament? (1)

1. Cf. Lagrange, Études sémitiques [Studies in Semitic Religion], p. 242.

According to certain writers, Renan in particular, circumcision is a purely hygienic custom: "In the beginning," he says, "this custom had neither the widespread character nor the religious significance that was given it later. Without the operation, certain Oriental peoples would be condemned to semi-impotence and dangerous impurities."

Arcin also wrote: "Circumcision is the most important religious ceremony of the black peoples. This practice has probably been made necessary by a special physiological structure. (2) But at present any memory of this cause has been

881
304

2. From the medical point of view, this statement is a complete invention.

entirely effaced and these rites are seen only as an offering to fertility gods."

Let me say right here that, as regards the Fan and the Bantu tribes, this physiological rationalization appears of slight value. In fact, though the Fan and other tribes of their group have adopted circumcision, this is far from being the case among all Bantu, certain of whom, like some in Uganda, have even a horror of it. Yet physiological requirements are identical among tribes of the same race and habitat.

We do not have to discuss here the natural advantages of circumcision. Were they even more considerable, it would be wrong to give a rationalistic explanation derived from hygiene, without taking into account the sum of institutions of which it is a part and of which it represents the moderate component, a very temperate practice compared with others. These institutions are the consecration rites of youths at puberty, and it is precisely because circumcision had a hygienic and moderating quality that it spread so widely and prevailed over other, more barbarous, practices. Circumcision has in fact [518] been practiced throughout the whole world among the greatest variety of populations and races, mostly as part of the initiation ceremonies that link a youth more closely with his tribe and his god or gods.

I agree with the majority of writers that this is an operation that is essentially religious in origin; necessary from the hygienic point of view, (1) but never for physiological reasons.

1. From the purely hygienic point of view: "It is impossible to give a raison d'être for circumcision, except as a religious requirement. It is in no way indicated anatomically (in spite of what Niebuhr, Déscription de l'Arabie [Description of Arabia] and Winer say); and from the point of view of sexual activity, it has no effect upon a man's potency; hygienically, circumcision is insufficiently effective." Colonial Despatch, Medical Report, Sept. 3, 1907.

881
304

I should also say, with Father Lagrange -- adding to circumcision the tribal mutilations to be discussed, such as the knocking-out or filing of teeth, scarifications, etc. -- "the religious character of these ceremonies cannot any longer be disputed."

881
304
779

b) Is circumcision a totemic rite?

Granted that circumcision is a religious rite, is it also a totemic one?

According to Frazer, (1) circumcision is part of the initiation rites.

1. Totemism, p. 47

tion rites that link a youth with his tribe and his god; these initiations have a specific character, that of uniting the young man and the animal life of the totem through an exchange of souls. (2)

2. In Australia the neophyte is anointed with blood drawn from a warrior's arm or may even drink some of it. A few magical passes are added, which convey to the candidate the corresponding spiritual powers and gifts. He must sleep on the tombs of his ancestors so as to absorb their virtues. Sometimes he is reputedly killed by a certain Thurembul, who returns him to life, and removes one of his teeth. In this, says Frazer, there may have been an idea of rebirth, or of the neophyte's starting a second life; that is why he acquires a new name as soon as he is circumcised, or when the tooth is removed or when he sheds the blood of his family.

881
304
779

I am quite ready to admit with Father Lagrange that circumcision is not restricted to totemic tribes. Among fully totemic tribes, like the Baganda, it is not only not permitted but is even viewed with disgust. [519] I look upon it as basically a religious rite, derived from ancestor worship, and what Frazer says confirms me in this opinion. Nevertheless, I freely admit and even believe that alongside these rites connecting circumcision with ancestor worship there are others, which, coming from the same source, also connect circumcision with the totemic cult; for in many religious phenomena the mvamayɔ̀n cult and that of the esayɔ̀n are closely and inseparably related.

In outlining below the practice of circumcision among the Fan, we shall point to the rites that derive from the mvame. Our reply to the initial question will then be:

Circumcision among the Fan is certainly a religious rite; it is not a purely totemic phenomenon, but the totem enters into it.

Bros agrees with these conclusions, at least in part. In his opinion, circumcision is a test of puberty, a first-fruits offering to the gods; a purification made to release an evil spirit which vanishes with the blood: above all, it is a pact by which a part of one's blood is given to the tribal god (1) and

1. In my opinion, the term "tribal god" ought not to be used; the Bantu tribes recognize only a single Creator, under different names, and not a god for each tribe.

881 304 779 one thereby becomes incorporated in him and in the tribe. Finally, the taboo surrounding this organ of the body, to which the origin of circumcision may be traced -- either because of the social function of the organ or of the danger of its premature use, or even because of its independence of volition -- allows circumcision to be considered as a desecration that has to precede the stage of virility, in order that use may be made of it. (2)

2. Bros, Religion des peuples non-civilisees [Religion of Non-civilized Peoples], "Circoncision" [Circumcision].

881 304 779 778 [844] Some of these statements hold good for the Fan; some are less applicable. Let me use as an example one of the things that illustrates very well the close connection between circumcision as a religious rite and childbirth rituals, the fact that pieces of cloth used to staunch blood are in both cases carefully kept to be used for the same purpose. [520]

Ordinary warriors place them with their personal totem in the mfek or pineapple-fiber bag which never leaves them. These pieces of cloth,or fragments of them, are always part of totemic sacrifices. The sons of chiefs, on the contrary, are not allowed to keep them; they bury them deep at the base of the sacred fig tree planted when they were born over the remains of the umbilical cord. This custom certainly goes back to remote antiquity. Among the Egyptians, the fig tree was considered sacred and dedicated to the Egyptian Venus, Hathor. From this perhaps comes the word éthu, designating a garment made from the bast of the fig tree. The same word, éthu, has remained in the Fan language with the same meaning, "garment," and the [287 inland Fan always make vegetable-fiber cloth from the fig tree, 822] which they still dye red; this was formerly the color dedicated to Hathor, and it has remained the color of betrothal garments. For the same reason, before marriage, young men and women stain themselves red from head to foot. It is a color "set apart."

881
304
779

c) The Circumcision Itself

The Fan use the term akéla for circumcision, at least as regards boys. The root of the word is clearly in the verb ekèl, of which the radical element expresses the idea of "cutting" and "removing." For girls the word atsingéla is used, which denotes at once ligature, extension, and excision.

We shall examine:

1) The phenomenon itself
2) The age of the candidate
3) The operation
4) The participants -- patient and operator
5) The instrument

1) The phenomenon itself

Circumcision is universal throughout the Fan nation and no male is exempt. Besides, he would be disgraced, and he would not be able to enter into marriage without having first had this operation. Even children brought up in missions do not escape; as soon as they go back to their villages, [521] they submit with good grace if they have remained uncircumcised.

If old people are questioned about the "why" of the ceremony, it is hard to get an answer from them, and they nearly always fall back on custom, "We've always done it," or propriety, "It's better that way." Both answers, especially the second, are of real value. Yet one day I got a much more interesting reply from a chief in the interior, who told me, "It marks the beginning." And when I insisted on further explanation, he replied, "It is the mark that sanctifies manhood; afterwards one is no longer an animal, one is 'sacred.'" ("E ne ndèm ǒsu, ndèm a bo fam: ni vale, tsit é séra, mur a ne éki," lit., "It is the mark of the first beginning, the mark which sanctifies virility; after the operation, the animal has disappeared, and there is a man, and he is sacred.") As the chief did not want to say anything more, he fell back upon the rules of secrecy. It was difficult, if not impossible, in the tribe with which I then was, to attribute a Christian or Moslem origin to this reply; the chief has never heard of either of them. It would be much simpler to 881 look at it as a vestige of primitive tradition.

304 To the Fan mind, circumcision is altogether a religious, 779 never a secular, act; everything that I shall have to say about it will illustrate this further.

2) The age of circumcision

The age at which Fan boys are circumcised usually varies from seven to ten. I have never seen a baby circumcised. However, there is nothing prescribed by law or custom on this point. Yet in the interior, the age of ten is far exceeded, and it is not unusual for the operation to take place between sixteen and twenty. Old men are unanimous in saying that this was the ancient custom, and that the time for the operation was made earlier in recent times because of the many casualties that occurred. It is impossible to determine precisely what they mean by "recent times." However, according to all the evidence I could gather, one should hardly go back [522] more than 200 to 300 years, that is, to the time of the great Fan migrations. We can see how unlikely it would have been during that period of confusion to perform the operation successfully at so late an age.

Formerly, circumcision must have closely preceded entering the warrior stage. Certain Fan songs seem to indicate this, and many African tribes have preserved the custom.

All the children of a village are circumcised at the same time at the tribal chief's command; the operation only takes place at certain times, when there appear to be enough children, yearly in some villages, at longer intervals in small ones.

[291] Until circumcision, children may go naked; afterwards a bit of cloth bark of the fig tree will always be worn.

The seven-to-ten-year limit is appreciably exceeded in 881 the following case: a father may, out of pride, make a solemn 304 vow to his akaméyôn that his son will not be circumcised until 779 he [the son] has killed an enemy. Under those conditions the 782 youth may go naked for a long time; nor can he have any relations with a woman or even live with the one his father may have bought for him as a future wife. Consequently, he will

881 do all he can to end this state. As soon as he has killed an 304 enemy, he hurries with the victim's hand to his father. Cir-779 cumcision then solemnly takes place before all the warriors, and 782 his marriage is celebrated as soon as the wound has healed.

3) Time of the ceremony

881 The chief first decides upon the date, which is almost 304 invariably in the eight days before a full moon.
779

As soon as the chief has announced that circumcision will shortly take place, he indicates all the children who are to be included; they, under his direction, go off into the forest not [342] far from the village. After a large space has been cleared, they build open little huts or mere shelters, where they live all together.

Their food is left at the beginning of the path leading to the huts, for no one is supposed to approach; access [523] is above all strictly forbidden to women. The food is plentiful, [264] and nothing must be thrown away or hidden; everything must be eaten, and the chief supervises this rigorously. (1)

> 1. One of our missionaries observed the same custom among the more advanced populations of the interior. He even mentions this fact: the rule is so strict that one of the candidates was forced three times in succession to swallow the food that his stomach persistently rejected.

4) Preparations

[351] All around the place where the boys are confined, a fence of reeds (1) is erected, which no one dares jump over. This seclusion

> 1. The place of circumcision shows well enough that the rite is like a consecration, by blood sacrifice, of the sexual life to which the young man is thereafter admitted. Lagrange, op. cit., p. 244.

881
304
779
[82]

does not usually last longer than eight days, a lunar quarter. Every evening songs and dances are performed in honor of the moon, which is looked upon as a source of fertility. (2) In Fan,

> 2. The same belief exists in almost all African tribes; just as in Egypt, the moon presides over rain, which is the earth's source of fertility and thus of human fertility.

the same word, ngon, denotes "girl" and "moon," an ambiguity to be found nearly everywhere among African tribes, in varying degrees. These songs and dances are very special and repetition [533] of them is strictly prohibited outside the sacred enclosure. (3)

> 3. All I could discover on the subject from my young Christian converts who had already gone through the ceremony was that these songs were "bad" and had as their purpose procreation. There is no doubt that the Fan say things "crudely" in their songs. That is all I can say.

According to Lang, (4) this is the time when a youth is taught about the existence of a beneficent god, a defender of morals, who condemns egoism and adultery. This is so among the Fan. In fact, it is during their retreat the chief teaches the children the mébara, or wisdom of the ancestors, and narrates the great deeds of the race. This is as much as we have been able to learn, for the rule of secrecy is scrupulously observed. During the final days the chief makes a point of mixing into the 881 During the final days the chief makes a point of mixing into the 304 boys' food certain aphrodisiac stimulants, cardamon seeds [524] 779 (Amomum citriodorum), a wonderful red fruit (Lavigeria), and 832 onzakôn̂ (Antrocaryon klaineanum) which, apart from these oc-

> 4. The Making of Religion, Art.: "Circumcision."

824 casions, only women may eat. They are even forbidden to say the name of that tree, because the word nkôn̂ denotes the male genital organ; they must say onzabili, the onza tree. In addition the fruit of the onzakôn̂ has a slight resemblance to a phallus.

Throughout their seclusion the children sleep stretched out 881 on the ashes of the hearths. They must tell the chief what they 304 have dreamt about; the family totem ought, in fact, to re-
779 veal itself to them at this time. Since the chief speaks to the 828 children frequently and since they know that they are supposed to have the totem in mind, the suggestion, intimate and strange at the same time, leads easily to the desired result. If, however, a different object from the family totem, animal or other, appears more vividly and repeatedly in their imaginations, it would be a sign that the totemic guardian spirit wants to adopt another medium and, consequently, the child's totem, if he has a personal one, has to be changed.

5) The ceremony

881 On the day of the operation, the practitioner, who has 304 been forewarned, goes to the enclosure, accompanied by the 779 fathers. Each child is questioned in turn; then there is a big dance performed in honor of the ancestors and guardian spirits of the clan. Each head of the family has brought along his mvamayôn̂ and now explains it to the child. A new dance is done after this initiation. Each father then stretches his son out on the ground, sits down beside him, and slips his legs beneath the child's body in such a way as to raise the middle of the body. The practitioner has a knife in hand kept specially for this purpose and carefully wrapped in a little sheath. The [413] knife used to be made of stone, but that kind has become very rare. Knives are now usually made of copper and are curiously worked, one end being beak shaped, the other pointed; they are not hafted. These knives are called ekèlokèn̂.

881 304 779 The practitioner operates quickly, assisted by the chief of the tribe. Before operating on each child, he hands the knife [525] to the chief, without a word, and the latter accepts it, also in silence, without saying the usual "thank you" or "very good," abora or mvè.

With girls none of these ceremonies are observed. An experienced matron performs the operation, usually when the child is very young. It is nevertheless a religious act, accompanied by songs and dances, but since only women are present, it was impossible for me to learn the slightest detail.

The tribal chief immediately returns the knife to the practitioner, saying, "Take it and do what has to be done." (Nôñe n'ébo dzam ma yia n'ébo, lit., "Take it so as to do the deed which 'I' ought to do.") This proves that the practitioner is but the chief's delegate. Usually it is the latter who holds the penis firmly. First of all, the father pulls out the foreskin as far as possible and ties it with a bit of string. The penis, thus prepared, is then stretched out on a special board, and the practitioner cuts quickly. This is the most painful part of the operation. Ashes are then rubbed on the open wound. The head [778] of the family carefully collects the blood, which will constitute a powerful fetish after it has been offered in sacrifice to the mvamayôn and to the ancestors.

It is a point of honor for the children not to cry out, no matter what the pain. Besides, the pain must be very much lessened by the fact that the chief squeezes the flesh firmly and the operator works quickly. As soon as it is over, the child is taken to be bathed and is then laid on a bed of ashes. His scanty clothing is removed, if that has not already been done during the preceding days, and he is now dressed in a loose garment or a belt from which hangs a thick pad of raffia fiber or thin strips of finely cut banana tree bark, so as to protect him from being hurt. After the operation every father offers [431] the practitioner a present, often a sheep or at least several hens. [782 The latter then, according to the customary rites, offers one of the sheep to the spirits and has part of it burnt. The ashes of the 778] sacrifice, mixed with the collected blood, will constitute the child's fetish. Anything left over is carefully buried in a place apart, and everyone then avoids letting them be seen. [526] The rest of the sheep is eaten by the children the next day.

881
304
719

They remain in seclusion for a few more days. At the end there is another ceremony, also accompanied by dances and songs. They show the reassembled heads of families that the operation has been successful. They then remove the circumcision belt, put back the ordinary loincloth, and return to the village, where they are feted.

d) The consequences of circumcision

"Everything that has to do with procreation," writes Father Lagrange (1) of these ceremonies (and I quite agree with his conclusions), "is eminently taboo, surrounded with restrictions and precautions imbued with a religious character and sanctioned by strict laws. Through circumcision a person is really affianced by blood. This may perhaps have been one condition which entitled the begotten child to become in turn a member of the both national and religious association, the community." (We have just seen that this is definitely so among the Fan, for an uncircumcised boy would neither be admitted to the first initiation tests for warriors nor be able to marry: both tribe and future wife would be opposed to it.) "Every time blood is shed, one might wonder whether it is in order to make use of its intrinsic power, in the sense of magic, or for expiation, or to link one person to another by exchange of blood and vitality. Here it would seem to be a question of union, since the rite is initiatory: life is to be transmitted by an organ linked to god through blood letting; at the same time, it represents the ending of a very sensible taboo, which saves the youth from premature indulgence, comparable to that which protects growing fruits and cereals and which ends with the first-fruits sacrifice."

1. Études sur les religions sémitiques [Studies in Semitic Religion], pp. 244 ff.

Mgr. Le Roy (1) differs somewhat from Father Lagrange

1. La religion des primitifs [The Religion of Primitive Peoples], pp. 235 ff.

881 on the subject of circumcision: "Circumcision, in our view, is 304 connected with the institution of the taboo; it was originally the 779 lifting of a prohibition. Before having gone through this ceremony, a young man cannot marry; he is not acceptable [527] to any woman and he has no right to nuptial relations. And if these should nevertheless, occur -- and they do! -- the child of this forbidden intercourse is accounted 'bad' and must disappear."

848 Among the Fan such a child, without being considered exactly "bad," is thought of as not belonging to the tribe. Since the father has not the right to be a father, he cannot give the child a name; and if the child escapes the first vicissitudes of babyhood, it will soon die of neglect and hunger, scorned by all. This is especially the case with mulattoes, whose birth in itself places them outside the tribe. They are found on the coast and near European settlements, where, along with the decline in moral standards, the family has to a great extent disappeared, with the laws that used to guarantee its integrity and corresponding moral code. In the interior, in spite of the passage of numerous traders and explorers whose morals are no better than those of the coast, mulattoes are very rare, to say the least. We have just given the reason for this.

000 "Here," continues Mgr. Le Roy, "we have a typical and interesting illustration of the principle set forth above. The transmission of human life takes place in a mysterious realm where the activity of the Lord of Creation is manifest, or at least taken for granted, and to which man cannot be admitted except by a sort of authorization from God and with the help of an appropriate ceremony. At the indicated time the prohibition may be removed, but as always in such cases the 'use permit' must be bought back by a blood sacrifice, hence circumcision, the moral purpose of which is obvious, because the taboo or prohibition that it ends is a rigorous obstacle to sexual relations between children who have not reached puberty.

"This institution can be found everywhere; to be so widespread it must have a widely applicable raison d'être; this is 000 none other than the sacred prohibition in the interest of the family's moral welfare, which is lifted, when necessary, in the same interests."

304 881 779 Circumcision for Mgr. Le Roy is, therefore, in short, only "the lifting of a prohibition in the interest of family welfare." [528]

Although this explanation is neat and seems to satisfy all requirements, it still does not appear to me altogether correct. It takes the effect for the cause. Undoubtedly, a lifting of a prohibition in the interest of family welfare does follow circumcision, but the lifting, and the prohibition itself, seems to me very much an effect, a consequence, not the cause, and I believe that the objective is above all the sacrifice, admittedly a sacrifice for the welfare of the race. As Father Lagrange points out, "this system" (initiations, tests, and especially circumcision) "implies a close religious relationship within a social group at a low stage of development. It would seem to be a matter of religious unity. In the great Assyro-Babylonian civilization, there is no evidence of circumcision, but then, as now, among widely scattered peoples, some had adopted it, some had not." Is it then enough to say, as for the Bantu tribes, that those who no longer have it have either abandoned it or never possessed it? If in fact all Bantu tribes come from a single stock, as we believe, all have been familiar with circumcision, and we are dealing with a much more ancient rite.

177 304 881 We have already mentioned the Egyptian infiltration into Fan manners and customs and the influence of their beliefs. Therefore circumcision might go back to them. Herodotus had already pointed out that circumcision came from Egypt and had, by way of Egypt, spread throughout the Mediterranean world (Her. II, 104). "It may well be," writes Father Lagrange on this subject, "that circumcision among Egyptians was not exactly borrowed from an ethical system, but was a tradition from their origins, going back to the time when they started coming down the Nile Valley, according to contemporary opinion.

177 We also find the tradition among the Arabs as far back in their 304 history as we can go."
881 Therefore -- and Johnston is of the same opinion -- circumcision is not a rite devised to meet specific needs but one that dates back to the origins of the human race. From the beginning, man has offered first fruits to God. From this to offering the first fruits of human beings and of life, the step was inevitable, and it was quickly made. [529]

304 In the Fan group at least, circumcision is thus based upon 881 the idea of sacrifice itself and not, as Mgr. Le Roy says, upon 779 the simple lifting of a prohibition that is very useful and very moral. It is based not only on the idea of sacrifice itself but on that of an offering by desecration, which is the very foundation of sacrifice. "Especially at the first use of things it is important to give the gods their share," to renew the covenant with the Master of life. From the beginning, man presented the "first fruits" of things to the deity, above all in order to truly acknowledge his realm. Is not man's life that which is most precious? And the basis of life is certainly the procreative act. Furthermore, the basic concept of clan and tribe is based on the family, so that again from that point of view, procreation is the most important act of life. It is the first fruits of the generative process that will be offered to the Lord of the clan and to the ancestors, deified or not, but supposedly standing by. Therefore this will be a religious act, carried out by the practitioner with the help of the tribal chief and the head of the family, that is, the three clan authorities. So that the ceremony may be more solemn, the remains of the ancestors and of the eponymous animal will be included; finally, as in every sacrifice, blood will be shed. These terms make the sacrifice totemic.

But so that the first fruits may be pure and the shed blood acceptable and effective, they must be truly first fruits. It is therefore very important that they be preserved as such; the means is simple and effective and consists of the éki, that is, the prohibition of certain foods and especially of sexual relations before the set time. The law is not even concerned with the 881 "fruit" that might result from transgressing the prohibition. The 304 fault, nsem, must be expiated ritually as a fault, but the law

779 would not consider the child as "bad" or guilty; the law does not take it into account at all, but ignores it: the child is "outside the law," res nullius, and is not killed but left to die. It is therefore important that they be really first fruits. Then, too, when the appointed time comes, when a Fan begins to feel himself ready to procreate in his turn, when he can take his place along with the young warriors, the sacrifice will be performed with all formality; once this has been accomplished, [530] but only then, will the prohibition be lifted. The sacrifice ought to be not only carried out but accepted too, because if, for one reason or another -- and this happens -- after circumcision has been performed according to the rules, the practitioner still considers that the spirits of the real or totemic ancestors are not satisfied, an additional sacrifice will be necessary in order to make the first acceptable.

Thus it is clear in what ways our notion of circumcision differs considerably from that of Mgr. Le Roy. In his opinion, it consists of the lifting of a prohibition in the interest of the family's moral welfare a "use permit," that must be bought back by a sacrifice; in our opinion, in agreement with Father Lagrange's, the lifting of the prohibition is not the cause but a natural consequence. The prohibition's objective is circumcision, the "use permit" is the inevitable result, not the cause, of the sacrifice, and circumcision (1) is the very sacrifice of the procreative first fruits, the most important act from the point of view of clan unity and the perpetuation of the family.

1. Lagrange, Études sur les religions sémitiques [Studies in Semitic Religion], "Le Sacrifice" [Sacrifice"], pp. 255 ff.

II. Initiation

779 The second totemic rite that we come upon in the life of 884 a Fan youth is his initiation.

779 This rather complicated rite includes, first, the tests I 884 have already mentioned, which make a warrior of the young man, then initiation into the rites, and finally the consecration of weapons.

The young warrior's years of childhood and adolescence have been entirely carefree and completely outside any religious cult. He may have just been taught the name of his personal totem, and perhaps not even that. All he knows is that he is forbidden under rather severe penalties to do certain things, to eat certain kinds of food. He observes these prohibitions rigidly, because he is sure that any infringement will be immediately punished, for isolated éki are never pardoned and must always be expiated. [531]

a) Tests

779 When he has reached the age for taking his place among 884 the warriors, a young man has first of all to undergo tests designed to show his strength and courage. Severe as they may be very 626 few youths evade them. Besides, it would mean utter dishonor, and the young man who out of weakness or cowardice is either overcome by or doesn't dare face them, would have no choice but to exile himself. This does happen, though rarely, and especially among those few young people who have grown up from childhood as servants of the Europeans. The Fan stigmatize them by a special phrase meaning "men-women good-for-anything," and this expression tells a great deal about the special role they play and the peculiar morals of too many Europeans.

b) Initiation into rites

779 After he has passed these preliminary tests, a young man
884 undergoes totemic initiation along with initiation into the ancestor cult. He is first taught the name of the family, clan and tribal totem. For this purpose, on a day chosen as favorable by the practitioner during the initiation already described above, the candidate is conducted in front of a sort of platform covered with dry leaves. First of all, the head of the family brings his évora biéri, which, as we know, encloses the ancestral skulls and the materialized totem. The neophyte will learn to distinguish the various objects and to identify the different skulls without a moment's hesitation being permitted.

779 Only then will he be allowed to know about the laws and 887 rights of the totem. He will then receive his personal totem, 778 as we have described it, will make it the prescribed sacrifice, and will preciously keep the remains of this offering on his own person, enclosed in an antelope horn. Already as a child he wore this horn which now contain the ashes of this sacrifice; it used merely to hang around his neck on a cord or, more often, before his genital organs. After the youth becomes a warrior, he hangs the horn among the other fetishes attached to a leather baldrick which crosses his chest and is hardly ever taken off. [532]

c) Consecration of weapons

779 A youth's childhood ends after the initiation. A whole 884 new era opens up before him, an era of work and fighting and 411 also of quite different pleasures from those of childhood. He is henceforth admitted to a place among warriors after these painful initiations the proof and marks of which are slashes cut into the back of his neck. Henceforth he may carry a gun; as a boy he had often tried to fire one so as to be ready when the time came. As a warrior with the right to fire it and to go to war, he must first "dedicate" the rifle to a spirit so that he may always shoot straight.

For an African all objects whatever they may be, have a life of their own; therefore, a rifle is a being. Alive with its own life, it will be dedicated to the spirit with the influence most favorable to it, that is, in the realm of space the sun, whose light and whose clear rays will enable it to hit the mark every time and will at the same time dissipate the shadows so that they will fail to conceal the enemy it is aimed at. The weapon will be dedicated to the sun and also to the clan's totemic guardian; in battle it is indeed important to be able to distinguish enemy from friend and not to run the risk of committing a totemic sacrilege. The rifle must be dedicated to both the totem and the sun.

However, it is worth noting that if nowadays a rifle is the only weapon to be dedicated, it is because it has become the 779 principal weapon and because there are very few Fan who do not 884 possess one. Actually, the word for "rifle" in the consecration 411 song mentioned below is sometimes nzali, which really means "gun," and sometimes mbène, which denotes the "crossbow." The crossbow used to be the Fan national weapon. One of the words has changed, but the song is no less ancient for that.

In the middle of the village, the young man, accompanied by an older friend, places his rifle so that the first rays of the rising sun will strike it; he arranges around the rifle his totemic fetishes, that is, his childhood totem, which he will hereafter abandon, and his new warrior totem. In order to cast a spell [533] on his rifle, he then performs the necessary incantations, [533] among them a hymn or invocation to the sun, of such real beauty and poetic quality that it should be quoted here.

Hymn to the Sun

539

Sun, you who see all things,
You, whose radiant splendor
Pierces the dark mist,
Sun, to you this homage!

To you, sun, king of the sky, divine hunter,
Sun, to you this homage!

Before your flashing glance
And the swift arrows of your fiery quiver,
Into somber depths
Fearful night sinks aghast,
Beneath your blows sparkling with light,
You tear night's mantle,
A black cloak trimmed with fire,
Sprinkled with bright stars,
You tear night's black mantle.

Sun, you who see all things,
You, whose radiant splendor
Pierces the dark mist,
Sun, to you this homage!

779 When the required offerings have been made, before the 884 rifle is lifted, the actual consecration takes place. The tune and 441 words seem to me sufficiently remarkable to warrant quotation.
533 This song, in its melody and structure, recalls the antique airs which have come down to us from the Greeks and Romans. It is always sung by several voices:

539 Song of the Rifle

Anthem: Oh, all of you, listen, listen to the song,
the song of the rifle!
Chorus: Oh, let us all listen, listen to the song,
the song of the rifle!
Solo: For you, alone, O rifle! for you alone,
Far into the woods,
Far, far have I tramped long in the forest,
No longer hearing the barking dogs,
No longer hearing them,
No more than the noise-loving cocks,
No more than the cocks,
Leaving behind the chattering women,
Leaving them in their dark huts. [534]
Refrain: Yes, for you alone, O my rifle!
For your sake only, into the woods,
Into the woods have I gone,
O my rifle, for you alone.
Anthem: All of you, come, listen to the song of the fetish,
The beloved song of the fetish!
Chorus: Let us all come, listen to the song of the rifle,
The beloved song of the rifle! (Refrain: Yes, for you alone . . .)
Anthem: Come all of you, come, listen well and without noise, Listen!
Chorus: And silently, heedfully, let us listen.
Solo: For you alone, O rifle! for you alone,
Deep in the woods,
Leaving the village behind,

539

I took the men's large knife
With no one seeing me
The knife that hangs from a post hook,
I took the knife,
Fastened it at my side,
Hung it from my baldrick,
With no one seeing me.
I went into the woods,
O my rifle, for you alone.

Anthem: All of you, come, listen to the song of the fetish,
The beloved song of the rifle!

Chorus: Let us all come and listen,
He has taken the knife,
Without anyone seeing him.

Solo: For you alone, O rifle! for you alone,
On the paths of the hunt,
I've wounded my foot on the path,
I've climbed mountains, hills,
I've crossed the streams,
Struggling through a day, a whole day,
I've sought the eǩoñ,
The eǩoñ, evin, and vyo;
Then, laying bare their flesh,
Taken away their clothing,
Their bloody garments.
There the spirit of the forest dwells.

Anthem: Come, all of you, let us mix the eǩoñ, the evin, and vyo,
Let us put a spell on the rifle.

Chorus: Let us all come and mix the eǩoñ, the evin, and the vyo.
And put a spell on the rifle,
Stripping bare their flesh,
Stealing their clothes,
Their bloody garments,
So as to clothe this weapon.
Let us put a spell on the rifle. [535]

884 779 411 The young man is armed. He has undergone the initiation of the bawu and henceforth he has a right to speak in the council. He will not take advantage of this until the day he brings in the hand of an enemy he has killed and he is able to testify to his bravery in the presence of all by this striking proof of a daring exploit, yet often carried out by surprise.

[Pp. 535-536, 18 lines of music.] [537]

III. Consecration of the Chief

766 779 622 a) The ceremony

A tribal chief has died. After the customary lamentation and funeral feast, he has been buried in a temporary grave. Thirty days afterwards the warriors again reassemble for the solemn funeral dance, the fanki. Then the eldest son, surrounded by leading warriors, opens his father's grave, climbs down beside the corpse, and with the consecrated knife detaches the skull, which will soon be added to the skulls of earlier ancestors in the évora biéri. Then the corpse is carefully replaced in the grave, and the totemic sacrifices are completed. We shall go back to these sacrifices when discussing individual mortuary rites. The eldest son or the heir removes the akaméyòn or tribal totem, if he has not already done so. He then throws the earth back onto the corpse and everyone helps him in this dismal task, after he has thrown the first handfuls. All these rites belong to the social mortuary ceremonial.

622 779 The new chief returns to the village. Then begins strictly speaking, the totemic rite of consecration, which takes place at night, without any female observers.

Escorted by all the warriors, to the beating of a tom-tom, the chief takes the évora biéri containing the ancestral skulls and carries it into the forest. The ceremony is secret only as regards women; young boys may be present.

[824 778] The box of skulls is put on a sort of platform made of newly cut poles. These must come from a special tree, the éfirfira, and must all be alive and green. A bit of dead wood 779 would lead to a ritual offense. These branches are embedded 778 in the earth; they must also be straight, cut from the actual 622 trunk of the tree and not from a branch; upon these poles stuck into the ground, the chief arranges pieces of bamboo (1) which

[342 824]

1. Bamboo is the usual term given by analogy to the palm stems or raffia used in all Fan building, in place of real bamboo, which is unknown or a recent importation into Gabon.

[284] make a platform. They are tied together, not with the lianas usual for huts, but with lashings [538] made of mattan palm. When that work has been done, the chief places his évora biéri on the upper tier; the other family heads put their bivora bibiér to the right and left in order of precedence. When all the boxes of skulls have been lined up, each man, after having danced and sung around the altar, then approaches it again, opens his box, removes the ancestral skulls, and places them on the lower tier below the boxes. Upon his family skulls he places the family totem, then his own personal totem. There is another series of dances, accompanied by songs. The chief then advances again, alone, and puts the skull of his immediate ancestor above all the others, dances and sings, then puts the skull inside that of the first ancestor. He also takes his family totem, which by the very fact of his birth is the tribal or clan totem, and places it upon the two superimposed skulls, his father's and that of the clan father. Then there begins a special 533 song called the Song of Union. The archaic words are nowadays 622 for the most part very hard to understand, the general meaning, 779 on the other hand, is easy to grasp: it deals with the uniting of all the heads of families in direct line and consists of an invocation to the Spirit of the Race, who has passed down through all descendants from the first ancestor so as to produce a united and indivisible whole. The final words of the song express this idea quite clearly:

539

In you the last returns to the first,
The first returns to the last.
And in common accord,
Your breath that does not die reunites them all,
Your breath reunites them without ever wearying.

It makes an unending whole,
And future children, offspring of our race,
Will also be your children, O father!
As I today am your child.

The éfirfira grows and continues to grow.
New branches start from its gnarled trunk,
One after another,
They grow, yet remain always the éfirfira.

In you the last returns to the first,
The first returns to the last. [539]

779
622
782

A gelded goat or often a gelded dog is then brought to the wooden altar; it is immolated, and the blood is collected in a clay pot. The chief dips a green palm branch in the blood and then puts it on the altar in such a way as to cover both the totems and the ancestral skulls.

779
622
533

After this first "recognition" comes a second, which consists of a song called "Song of the Visit." The chief sings it, and all the participants repeat the refrain. Thus the Yendun tribe, for instance, the refrain is:

[539]

Bi'ne bibône bi Ndun,
Bi'ne fogo bisésé bibône bi Ndun
Ndun a ne Esa bie,
Ndun ve Esa bie bisé.

We are the children of Ndun,
Yes, we are all the children of Ndun,
And Ndun is our father,
Yes, Ndun is the father of us all.

779 622 At the same time, the chief has taken his father's and his first forefather's skulls; he approaches successively the évora biéri of each of the other heads of family and touches their ancestral skulls against those in his hands. He returns to the middle, takes the pot holding the victim's blood, dips his father's de, fly swatter, or into it, and then sprinkles the totems placed near the skulls. He takes his own totem, moves it alongside the clan or tribal totems, fastens them together with a liana and touches them successively against the totems of the other heads of family, while singing the totem song, everyone repeating the refrain after him:

[539] We are the children of Ndun,
And Ndun is our totem (mvamayôn),
Yes, we are the children of Ndun,
And Ndun is totem for us all.

After this ceremony there are several more dances and songs. Finally at the end, the tribal chief is the first to put the skulls back into the évora biéri, and everyone follows his example. He does the same thing with the totems, again followed by all the others. [540] All the boxes are then carefully put aside in a spot cleared in advance.

[778] All return to the open space. The rude altar, where the boxes, skulls, and totems had lain, is destroyed; the boxes are all heaped one upon the other; and great care is taken that no drop of the victim's blood that might have fallen on the ground be profaned by any touch at all. As soon as the victim itself has been immolated, it is laid on freshly cut green banana leaves -- it must never touch the ground -- and placed upon a pyre made from the altar wood, which is lighted. This task always falls to the new chief, never the practitioner. As soon as the victim has been cooked enough, it is put back on the banana leaves and cut up by the chief himself into as many pieces as there are persons present. No piece may be left over; no piece may be carried away. That would be a ritual offense of the gravest kind, and the Fan are convinced, or at least appear to be so, that the totem never fails to punish the wrongdoing by actual death of the 779 perpetrator. If necessary, the chief would take this upon him-

622 self. Such a case has sometimes occurred, according to certain legends.

The large bones are then again placed upon the pyre, for which the necessary wood has been carefully kept, because to cut or to add more is forbidden. When everything has been consumed, the bones and wood that are left in the form of cinders (1) are pulverized as finely as possible, and the chief [137] 1. Éfirfira is a rather resinous wood, which burns up completely, leaving hardly any cinders.

scatters the powder on the recently covered grave of his father, accompanied by all the heads of family. The banana leaves that had been used to wrap up the victim are carefully folded into a bundle and thrown to the bottom of a spring or stream below the spot where water is usually drawn, so as to avoid profanation.

In contrast to all the other sacrifices, nothing must remain of this victim nor may anyone keep the slightest trace of it.

Before carrying the ashes of the sacrifice to his father's grave, the chief still has to go through another ceremony just as important, the rite of the spear.

779 The rite of the spear, or better of the assagais, asume 622 mékôn, the salute to the assagais, only occurs at the enthrone-411 ment of tribal chiefs and then only if they have come of age, that is, have already been received as warriors bearing the marks or bawu.

779 b) The rite of the spear or the assagais. Asume mékôn.
776 From the other side of Africa, Father Van den Burgt, (1) 411
171

1. Dictionnaire français-rundi [French-Rundi Dictionary], article, "Kirâna."

of the White Fathers, recently pointed out a curious rite among the Barundi, the rite of the spear, the emblem of Kirâna, the 779 second high spirit. Among the Fan, we have found the same 776 emblem, consecrated to the spirit Ki-ndâña, he also being chief 411 of the lower spirits, of material things, and thus master and chief 171 of all beings on the earth. He is also invoked in time of war. This is the only information I have been able to obtain on the subject. But in comparing this fact with what we have seen among the Barundi, it certainly appears that a totemic rite is involved. Indeed among them, Imana, the Creator, is the lord of departed souls as, among the Fan, Nzame is also the Creator. Consequently he is foremost of all the ancestors and thus the keystone of the whole religious system. The Fan know this perfectly. When discussing genealogies I have already pointed out that a child or any warrior, when asked what his mébara is, will always end by invoking Nzame, saying: "And he (the first of the race) was created by Nzame, and before that I didn't belong to it, neither I nor anyone else." (Nge mur éto (the father of the race) Nzame émièn a nga bo ñe, ve 'sim ñi, mê mbe dia ve, ve ma, ve muramure.)

Among the Barundi the great rite of the spear consists of homage rendered to the sacred spear of Kirâña, the higher spirit of the Rundi triad, Imana, Ri-Kiramba, and Riangombi. Among the Fan, Kindâña does not belong to the divine triad, which they also recognize: Nzame, Mébère, Nkwa. Kindâña, lit., victorious Power, is chief of all beings under Nzame, and considered only as the principle of the power that animates everything and that is self-perpetuating. He is the opposite of inert matter. [542]

"The neighboring Pygmies," writes Mgr. Le Roy (1) in connection with this Rundi rite, "have the same ceremony, which they appear to have originated." Perhaps, however, we ought to go further back to the very beginnings of the race, since we find the ceremony also among the Fan.

1. Op. cit., p. 314.

Among the Barundi the rite of the spear takes place in all critical situations. uThe usual form of that spear has one white and one black facet and it is said to bear the spirit Kirâña on its 779 point. At the time of the ceremony the guardian of the spear 776 appears with two assistants; he wears a sort of crown made of a 411 panther skin, part of which hangs down his back. The participants 171 form a semicircle around him, carrying small hollow calabashes filled with hard seeds (2) that rattle. Then a hymn is begun,

> 2. The seeds of the annata tree are used or, even more often, the round hard seeds of canna (canna spec.).

sung in an oddly impressive tone, deeply convincing and creating indescribable melancholy. During this evocation, each one picks up a bit of straw, bows down and presents it to the sacred spear, claps his hands together and asks the spirit dwelling on the spearhead for various favors. He then says: "To thee, Father, I make these demands, I offer my homage." Everyone then leaves the hut singing and goes to the resting place of the ancestral spirits.

Among the Fan the salute to the spear thus takes place at 779 the enthronement of the chief. After the victim has been divided 622 and eaten, the chief rises and plants his assagai in the earth, point
411 upwards; the point has been made to gleam by thorough careful 171 burnishing. The choice of spear is not unimportant: it must have the totemic tribal emblem incised in its hollow and must have already "drunk" enemy blood. The spear is thus planted in the ground so far as possible just where the altar stood; shortly after, at its foot, the chief places his baldrick usually of leopard-skin, holding the materialized totem, the akaméyôn. [543]

Having done this, he circles around the spear, singing, then picks up the baldrick and hangs it upon the lance, which usually has several small sharp hooks at the base.

The chief again circles the spear, sings a hymn in honor of Kindâña, then stands still. All the others then go to fetch their boxes of ancestral skulls and circle around the spear, singing. As each man passes the chief, he bows, puts his box on the ground, and claps his hands.

At the end of the ceremony the chief removes the spear, puts back the baldrick at his side, and takes everything to his hut.

779
622
411
171

He then returns to collect the remains of the sacrifice and carry them to his father's grave.

It is evident that the Fan ritual of the spear salute has many analogies to the Rundi ritual, and the same impulse would seem to motivate both.

174
171

c) Rites of initiation and consecration of the chief compared with the religious role of the Pharaoh

In all this it is easy to see a whole embryonic system or rather, as our linguistic research bears out, the vestiges, very corrupt and gradually shriveling away, of a religious system that is very old and goes back to the very beginnings of the race.

The legends, customs, and especially the language make it possible for us to see, with all the reservations necessary to such a hypothesis, a pale reflection, perhaps a decadent reminder, of Egyptian religion.

It would be of great interest in the first place to try to find out if the Fan word denoting "chief," nzue -- from n for agency and zue, to command, to order -- is not related to Egyptian (sy), to pray, adore,

> 1. There are other resemblances between the two languages, to which I shall refer later: kha (Eg.), crown, and khu (Fg.), chief; khala, a fortified place, and dzal, fortified village (kraal); ka, to leave, and ka, to go away, etc.; ko, hook, and lko, hook, whence akôñ, hooked, barbed spear.

sua, to pray, adore, which was originally the chief's main function, or again to Suten, meaning "king," which comes from the word seten [544], to determine by knife, which means "to kill." The king is thus in theory he who slays the sacrificial victim, the sacrificer.

The Pharaoh formerly acted in a general way as a Fan chief still does today, without, one must admit, any of the trappings of majesty -- as I have said, he is a pale reflection.

He used to go himself, at least fictitiously, to capture the victim, a wild bull. He immolated it, cut it up, and offered it to the deity whose son he was. He was not only the sacrificer who offers the victim but also the priest who alone was authorized to make an offering, and without his intervention, his subjects could not expect heaven to accept their offerings, even the most modest. "Suten don hotep" -- The king gives the offering, can be read on innumerable votive monuments, from the most imposing to the humblest. The deity would not pay attention to the offering if it did not come from the king. I recall the prince of Khéta's words which I have already quoted: "God would not accept any offering of Khéta that had not been seen by Pharaoh, the emanation of heaven."

174
171

Mediator between heaven and earth, Pharaoh alone is qualified to give to the Deity or to receive His gifts. If another priest takes his place, as for practical reasons nearly always happens, that priest will be acting as a delegate of the king and will announce the royal order by which he has access to God: "It is the king who sends me to see the deity," says he upon opening the gates of naos [sic]. Even a priest of the highest rank may present himself only by virtue of that delegation. To penetrate all the way to the temple sanctuary is in fact like penetrating heaven, (1) for the deity is there as much as in heaven: to approach the deity one must be divine oneself, like a son of Pharaoh or at least a representative of this divine Son. God's house, the temple, was built by Pharaoh himself, (2) the sole owner of Egyptian soil by a divine gift made at his coronation. (3)

1. An inscription at Edfou, quoted by Rochemonteix, reads: "He who penetrates the temple penetrates heaven."

2. Virey: Religion de l'ancienne Égypte [The Religion of Ancient Egypt] (ed. 1909), p. 125.

Cf. Lefébure, Rites Egyptiens [Egyptian Rites], where one will find numerous points of comparison with the rites I have mentioned. [545]

171 We find further confirmation of the foregoing in the
174 following lines: "In archaic times, before the unification of Egypt into a single kingdom, it was no doubt the tribal chiefs who, as Pharaoh did later for the entire country, declared war, dispensed justice, and offered the sacrifices." (1)

1. The Life-Work of Sir Peter Le Page Renouf (Paris, 1902-07), Vol. 2, p. 351, "The Priestly Character of the Earliest Egyptian Civilization."

As religious leader the]Fan] tribal chief can thus delegate his authority only to the practitioner; as totemic chief, only to his direct consanguineal heir.

614 This is true to such a degree that if, for instance, the family should die out, the tribe would not come to an end or be destroyed, for the elders of the clan or of the mother tribe would trace genealogies back to the beginning or source of the race and find a secondary family related more closely to the founder of the race; that secondary family would in turn become the main lineage. This transfer comes about quite naturally, without hitch or conflict, merely by force of circumstances. In some cases, especially with a small clan, families will attach themselves to other clans; again, according to the formative law given earlier, new clans will be created, filials of the mother branch. If a mother clan is involved, then, on the contrary, families will attach themselves more willingly to the filial branch (branch in esa), where they will find the family totem (esamvèn, esamvùn, etc.).

d) Mistakes made by European administration in appointing 648 new tribal chiefs from outside the main lineage
622

Clearly the chief mistake, and hence the lack of success, of civil administrators or military leaders who for one reason or another depose the legitimate chief of a tribe and appoint another is clear from the totemic laws just enumerated and the very structure of the race. I willingly admit that sometimes such depositions and appointments may, and often should, be made,

648 622 [546] for perfectly legitimate reasons, in the interests of the conquering country and even of the administered peoples. Nevertheless, if European administrators knew more about the customs of the country, (1) as would be very desirable, they would not leave themselves open to certain failure and sometimes to humiliating defeat by picking out a man who, though perfectly worthy, cannot be appointed chief according to the laws of the land.

> 1. Especially since the law permits native customs "in so far as they are not contrary to decency and morality."

As I myself have seen, it often happens that the legitimate chief, tired of endless trouble, reproaches, and quite justifiable fines, in some way agrees to the new state of affairs, which henceforth relieves him of responsibility and shelters him from the conqueror's laws, ordinances, and capriciousness, or what he takes to be such. Thus, in certain villages, there will be a chief "at the disposal" of Europeans, just as there are certain women, always supposedly virgins, at their disposal. Actually, these chiefs will have only factitious authority, dependent entirely upon the power of the white man. They will also be in constant danger of being poisoned or of disappearing in more or less occult fashion. They are obeyed out of fear, but only in matters that have to do with government, such as forced labor, requisitioned foodstuffs, auxiliary workers, and hardly mentionable favors, but as concerns everything else, their authority is nil, not only in fact but in principle. How, for instance, could they, when there is danger to clan or tribe, invoke a general totem which is not theirs and of which they are neither representatives nor custodians?

Thus we can see the source of the mistake of European administrations, who are very little concerned anyhow with the ideas underlying the indigenous structure and hence the very existence of the tribe, and who want to give it a code made up for Europeans, an impossible task. To apply the Napoleonic

648 Code to indigenous tribes, as has been decreed in Gabon, is one
622 of those governmental aberrations that reveals as profound an ignorance as possible of the people to be governed and the principles of government. [547]

For the same reasons, one can understand how impossible it is to elect a chief outside the established rules of succession. A chief appointed from outside the main lineage has not, and cannot have, authority.

e) Change of clan totem

779 When, for the above reasons, authority have passed to 622 another clan family, the public cult remains the same. But it 614 must be emphasized as of the greatest importance that the ancestral totem disappears, since it has no longer an eponymous representative of its own blood. It will be replaced by the family totem of the new chief, which then becomes the totem for the whole tribe or clan. Far from being hypothetical, this is, on the contrary, a repeated occurrence, of which the following is a typical illustration.

A certain Mba-Alame, of the Yebiken or Banana clan, left the tribe after a dispute with his clan chief and went to establish a village on a hill facing his old village. While remaining on fairly good terms with the people of his former clan, his first concern was to create a new family of his own and to cut himself off distinctly from his former companions. He therefore changed his name and took another, which happened to be Nzoge Nze, Elephant-son-of the Panther. The panther became his new totem and from then on, that of his sons and of the future clan. He was in the full sense of the term, the new father of the tribe, able to say more justifiably than Marshal Lefebevre once did: "We are the forefathers!"

In order to undertake this sort of action, a man must have a very resolute character, capable of breaking with his kin, friends, and clan without fearing the always fatal reprisals.

Moreover, such a happening is only possible if the tribe is small enough, because in a large tribe the chief would be very 719 622 614 [515] unlikely to allow such a flouting of his authority. It is also feasible if the chief is old and feeble, and the rebel held in awe for his physical strength and especially his notorious bad temper, based on substantial proof. Also the "deserter" or "uprooted" man must not belong to any secret "clan" society, because the initiates never pardon [548] desertion, this is a primary and always inviolable law.

And that is not all. It is imperative for the new founder to find a willing totem. The choice cannot be at random, as some people may imagine, and there must be a series of sacrifices during which the chosen animal indicates its acceptance. In such a case, the personal totem will receive this honor, for it cannot be changed and not to select it would be a gross insult that would unfailingly lead to significant revenge. But the personal totem must agree to become the tribal totem. In so doing, the spirit -- much more intelligent than man -- knows that it is agreeing to become his actual and titular guardian and it is not always anxious to do so. In similar circumstances, Nzoge Nze admitted to me one day that before finally acquiring an accepting totem he had had to wait for several months and to sacrifice a good many fowls and even kids. The practitioner also had to be satisfied.

It should be observed that following this acceptance all panthers did not become Nzoge Nze's totems, but only those who inhabited the country and were the offspring or descendants of his nze or particular totem panther. This proves the truth of our system. Furthermore, these panthers were sacred only to Nzoge Nze, for each particular totem is particular only to its owner, not to his next of kin. Thus, one of Nze's sons had the anteater, avil, for a totem: he was therefore not supposed to eat it, although his brothers and sons did so with impunity. But once Nzoge Nze's totem, nze, becomes the family and, therefore the tribal totem, his children will avoid killing any panther, on the chance that one might be related to that nze. However, should they happen to kill and eat one, the offense would be only hypothetical and before expiating it, they would make the 779 necessary investigation by sacrifices. And the totem, under 622 penalty of not receiving any expiation, should reveal its rela-

614 tionship. But as Nzoge Nze becomes more of a remote ancestor, the risk of relationship with every panther grows, for each panther may be related to the eponymous ancestor and consequently the law becomes more stringent. Should a panther enter villages and kill a few innocent people, [549] such as women and children, The men of the eponymous clan would be permitted to kill it, and only in such a case, but they would still be forbidden to eat it. When after a series of sacrifices for this purpose, it has been duly established that revenge for some unexpiated totemic offense is not involved, that is proof that the panther in question does not belong to the eponymous panther clan. It is a "foreigner" or "deserter", the latter being quite common in certain animal species, one of whose members may leave the group to go off on his own and become a "solitary," as do elephants, panthers, wild boars, gorillas. It is then perfectly lawful to attack it and kill it if possible. A trifling ritual expiation will suffice, proportionate to the very small likelihood of having killed an ally, an extremely slight probability, since actions are never taken without previous assent of the totem chief of the tribe. The responsibility will be his in case of mistake.

IV. War and Palavers

511 Life is easy for the Fan.

Close to his village, the great forest begins; it abounds in game, and he has not far to go to be able to shoot, at point-blank range, monkeys, antelopes, wild boars, even elephants. There are innumerable streams and rivers swarming with fish, especially carp; traps, weirs, nets, everything is good to catch them with -- everything succeeds. A Fan hunts and fishes when he feels like it; there are no laws interfering with his inclinations. Banana and manioc plantations, which provide the basic subsistence, give hardly any trouble. At the start of each season there are a few days of work at slashing-and-burning, the ashes providing fertilizer. After that, all the labor and care of the crops falls 517 upon the women. The Fan is therefore idle most of the day and 517 from this comes about the endless palavers about everything and nothing, for lack of anything else to do.

721 However, if for one reason or another war threatens the tribe or has to be declared, the Fan then seems to awaken from his lethargy.. Before the decision to fight, [550] there must be lengthy palavers. The totem has but a small part in these palavers, but no warrior would put in his word without having first taken his totem in hand and given it a brief scolding, often just one word, an exclamation, which only the most attentive would hear.

721 When all the warriors have had their say, the chief rises
537 and sums up everything that has been said, before beginning his own speech. During this report, he usually remains at his place. He then goes to the middle of the assembly, his chief's baton in his hand and across his chest the baldrick from which the akaméyòn always hangs. "I am so-and-so," he begins, "son of so-and-so, and my father was chief of the race. We are the sons of such-and-such totem, and our akaméyòn protects us." After [201] these words, he stamps on the ground with his foot, or more often, with his baton, as if to testify to the truth of what he has said, and then gives his own opinion. When he has finished he holds up the tribal totem to bear witness to his words, then returns to his place.

779 If war is declared the totemic ceremonies are more pro-
721 nounced. At first they will be nearly like those described for the initiation and consecration of the chief. The same altar is 782 put up in the forest with the same rites; wood of the éfirfira is again used for construction. On the appointed day, all the warriors make their way into the forest, each head of a family carrying his évora biéri. The skulls are set out on the altar, and each totem at its place. The victim is then brought forward.

The scene at this point changes completely. Neither a dog nor a kid is immolated -- it must always be a man, either a prisoner of war or some captive bought back from a neighboring tribe. A woman may never replace a man. Nor may a man or child belonging to the tribe, nor one whose mother belonged either to the tribe or to an allied tribe, be used as victim; for 779 that would be against totemic law and would mean sacrilege.

721 In order to avoid this ritual offense, which would necessitate ex-
782 piation and would necessitate expiation and would furthermore wipe out all the efficacy of the sacrifice, the chief first of all approaches [551] the victim, and asks his name, race, and tribe. Is there no obstacle to the sacrifice? "A ne mvè," he cries, "a ne nwuba (he is good, he is 'dedicated')!" The man is then tied to the foot of the altar and very rarely does he re-
[76] sist. All Africans resign themselves to death with almost unconscious ease, when they see that it is inevitable. (1)

1. In certain villages I have sometimes met such men destined for sacrifice, because they are often kept for many weeks. They walked around in the villages, apparently free, well fed, and well treated; the only sign of their captivity was a rather light block of wood well fastened to one of their feet, which they dragged along. Within the village this shackle was not much of an encumbrance, but in the forest it would have been an almost insurmountable obstacle to flight. Countless times, I have offered either to help them escape or to have the colonial authority free them. "What for?" they used to reply; "I'm well fed and treated; death is going to come anyway. Awu nzu mbèmbè! (What's the use!)"

So as to prevent any possible struggle, the evening before, [276] the victim is given an intoxicating beverage, containing mostly the juice of ebè and of yam (hemp). As soon as he has been 779 tied to the altar, and the chief has pronounced the ritual words, 721 the warriors start putting on their war dress. First they paint 782 their bodies red with baza (1) dye, and upon this first layer they 302
386

1. Pterocarpus angolensis: the wood is 779

721
782
302
386

mashed and mixed with oil and produces a splendid, very lasting red dye.

draw white horizontal lines with white clay (mfem). A wide black circle is traced around the eyes; on the forehead each one draws the likeness or symbol of his tribal or clan totem, or instead, they sometimes draw it on their temples or cheeks. Thus the "axe" of the Amvom, actually the likeness of a boa, their totem serpent, winds over their cheeks and temples and ends near the eyes. To enliven this image, the juice of a grassy lily, the chlorophyton (ayǎn é si), is used, which gives a long-lasting, bluish color. On the chest each one then draws his individual totem in black with gardenia juice.

721
779
782

Once they have finished these preparations, the warriors pick up their weapons and fetishes and begin the war dance, which consists of two parts: a totemic dance and then the real war dance, [552] which has a stronger beat and is more lively. I have already described this before in connection with the war song, which here accompanies the dance.

After the war dance the chief approaches the victim. He is forced to his knees; the practitioner draws a white line on his neck, then violently pulls his head forward, while an assistant twists his arms behind his back. The practitioner cuts off his head at one quick blow with the sacrificial knife, and tosses it onto the altar. The chief collects the spouting blood in a pot kept for the purpose, a new pot which will afterwards be broken. As soon as the blood stops, the corpse is laid on fresh banana leaves and the practitioner, helped by the chief, opens his chest, taking care to use only two knife strokes: one across and one up and down. The heart is taken out and placed beside the skulls; then the lungs and liver are removed. According to the body's [787] last twitching and the position of the organs, the practitioner predicts the outcome of the war. It will either be fortunate or cause the death of many warriors. "The funeral songs will last a long time," he may say, and the crowd will raise a cry of distress! If on the contrary the auguries are favorable, there will be shouts of joy, a song of triumph and gladness.

721 Everyone then comes near, the chief first, and dips a finger 779 into the pot of blood and tastes it. The practitioner also dips in 782 his finger and with it touches each warrior's totem to make the 266 so-called racial mark (ndem ayôb). "Adopted" warriors are ex-
608 cluded from this ceremony, perhaps the only occasion when a distinction is drawn between them and the tribe; in some smaller clans they are not excluded from this ceremony.

721 When a tribe is populous and a single victim would not be 779 enough, two, three, and sometimes ten or more are provided.

As soon as each warrior has thus "renewed the mark," the 782 sacred dances start again. During that time the chief joins in at first, then takes what remains of the blood, smears his ancestral skulls with it, and then sprinkles the tribal totems while the warriors sing the totem song. [553] The practitioner, helped by his acolytes makes a kind of large sticky ball from the sap of cer-
[824] tain rubber creepers (1) and a kind of gum (2) and knead it inside

1. Landolphia Klaineana and Thollonii of the Apocyneceae.

2. This gum is produced by the Acacia erubescens Wildm. of the acacia family.

the victim's thoracic cavity so that it becomes soaked with blood. At the end of the ceremony he takes a bit from this ball and ap-[787] plies it to each warrior's chest. According to how long it sticks, it will give an augury about the warrior's life, death, and the wounds he will receive.

721 As soon as the ceremonies are completed the victims are 782 cut into thin strips, and each person receives his share. The feast 266 begins. This is the end of the actual totemic ceremony, to be followed from then on by purely religious and fetishist rites. I therefore need say no more on the subject.

721 After the meal, the dance, and the songs, the skulls and totems are put back in the évora biéri and carried back to the huts.

721 Everyone then prepares for battle.

V. Large Hunting Expeditions

224 Apart from war, the principal event in Fan life consists of large hunting and fishing expeditions, organized by the whole tribe, which are always an abundant source of riches. Since an event of this sort concerns the clan or tribe as a whole, the totem plays a part, but to a rather limited degree.

For individual, private hunts only the individual totem is invoked. The ceremony is very brief, if it can even be called such. It consists, not of homage rendered, but rather of what might be called a preventive ritual. In no case does the hunter want to kill his totem, for that might draw down upon him the gr gravest dangers and greatest misfortunes. Before going off to hunt, while loading his rifle, he will see to it that his totem is touched against the rifle. Furthermore, if he is undertaking a more important hunt, as for elephant, or a more dangerous one, as for panther, he will mix with his powder a bit of the ashes [554] from his totemic sacrifice. He will then invoke his hunting fetish, often merely by touching it. The main object of these ceremonies is to ask the totem's help and also to keep the totem out of the way so as not to be exposed to any ritual offense, either by unwittingly failing to respect it or by wounding or killing it.

For large hunts the ceremonies will be quite similar, though a bit more complicated. This, in brief, is how big hunting expeditions are arranged: The Fan begin by hemming in a whole forest. Several hundred -- sometimes many more -- men come together and begin by surrounding the chosen forest with a belt of rattan wattles; a creeper winds above the wattling, following the same route, and to the creeper the hunters tie here and there dry leaves of light reeds whose slight rustling when disturbed is enough to frighten the game. There is a break in the barrier at each path into the forest, where a deep ditch is dug and carefully camouflaged by boughs and sometimes so well covered with earth that even the most wary are deceived. A pointed stake is set in the bottom of the 224 ditch, its point in the air, so that any animal falling in will almost certainly be pierced. Having finished with these preliminaries, the hunters make ready to actually beat for game. First there will have been a large sacrifice. Suppose a tribe has the scaly anteater (ye-mvil) for its totem. The tribal chief is the first to start on the hunt after a preparatory fast of three days. During that time he has remained apart in a small reed hut in the midst of the forest, eating only the food he brought with him, which he must first have placed on the évora biéri. He drinks only from an aromatic leaf folded into a cone; further-

[834] more, he abstains from any relations with his wives, because contact with women is supposed at such times to be an offense against the totem (nsem éki). After these three days he makes a [782] fetish, that is, a sacrifice to the tribal or clan totem, according to the usual practice; it consists of a goat at least or better a sheep. Formerly always and nowadays even occasionally, it was [567] always a slave. After the sacrifice [555] the chief takes part of the victim -- the rest belongs to the practitioner -- and throughout the hunt, he must eat no other meat. He then leaves and returns to the village only when he has met with, captured alive if possible, or if not, slain, the totem animal. If he kills it he must take care that none of the animal's blood drips onto the path, thus risking being profaned, for that would be another ritual offense. Therefore the chief carefully closes the wound with dry leaves and the fluff from a banana tree.

While returning to the village the chief must be seen by no [201] woman; he therefore takes care to announce his arrival by a special call, which is answered by a tom-tom, and then dashes into his hut. The women who happen to be in the village, outside their huts, must go inside quickly.

The totem animal is then placed on the évora biéri. If it is too large to fit, the chief opens it and puts on the évora the [714] brains, lungs, and heart, the three parts which contain the life principle and the various souls. The carcass is offered in sacrifice in the accustomed manner and then divided among all the hunters.

224 Should the animal be inadvertently killed during the beat for game, it cannot take revenge for the offense, nor can the clan totem do so. By sacrifice and communion all the clan members have become sharers of the totem, which therefore would be taking revenge on itself:

"A séra né ki édjéze émièn émièn nièm wuia (He cannot eat his own heart)."

After the meal the hunters get on with the job. They leap over the wattles, then gradually tighten the circle around the forest by means of strong cords so as eventually to drive all the encircled animals into a large clearing, prepared in advance, where they are killed one by one. Sometimes also at this place, an enormous pit has been dug in advance, and the bewildered (1) animals fall into it.

1. This beat for game is called ngol, especially when it is for elephants.

When they have all been killed, the flaying and disemboweling begins. However, first the chief makes sure that [556] no totem animals have by mischance got into the pit. If so they are carefully removed, placed on banana leaves, and tied up so as to be disguised; the next night they are secretly carried to a distant spot and deeply buried. Yet one animal may be kept out, taken back to the village by the chief, and offered in a further sacrifice. All the hunters partake of it so as to be protected from any ritual offense.

226 Large fishing expeditions are occasions for almost the same ceremonies. Before beginning to dam a river or change the course of a of a stream, a totemic sacrifice is first undertaken; a victim is offered and then the actual sacrifice is made. If by chance the clan totem is a fish, the ceremonies would be identical to those described above.

After the fishing another totemic sacrifice is performed with the customary rites; to neglect this prescription might lead to grave dangers for the tribe.

VI. The Establishment of a New Village

361 Various circumstances may lead to the setting-up of a new 621 village. Worked-out land, denuded hunting anf fishing grounds, 166 decaying huts, a disease decimating the children, the chief's 787 death, a defeat in war, sometimes merely the wish to push on, are the principal reasons.

The spirits are consulted before departure is considered. [Footnote omitted.] There is a triple sacrifice; to the spiritual guardians of the village, to the ancestors, and to the totem. If the three replies are favorable, plans may go ahead. Otherwise, a sacrifice producing an ill-omened interpretation will be undertaken again, after a few days, until a favorable result is obtained.

361 After this first test a suitable location is sought. As this 621 choice is made by delegates, the practitioner is called upon and he, with all the male inhabitants, combs the [557] surroundings of the new village, singing and dancing so as to drive away malignant spirits or any that might be injurious to the new establishment.

361 All the men then come together in the middle of what will 621 be the future village, and the chief picks out the spot where he 769 will build his own hut. A sacrifice is offered there, first to the 782 totem and then to the spirits of the ancestors. To do this a roof of leaves is hastily erected and roughly placed on a few stakes. The évora biéri is carried underneath the roof and the chief puts in front of the unopened box a black hen and a kid.

Before slaughtering the two victims, the chief removes the akaméyǒn from his baldrick and blows three times in the oviara, turning in three different directions. The objective of this ceremony is to dispel evil spirits. He then drags the akaméyǒn behind him over the entire site of the new village. After one round he does another, holding the akaméyǒn in his hand. Thus malignant spirits of earth and air will be dispersed. The akaméyon is then put on the évora biéri. The chief slaughters the hen by cutting off its head, grasps it by the feet, and sprinkles the akaméyǒn and box. He again traverses the village, sprinkling 361 the sites of future huts with blood. The hen is then opened up 621 and divided among the principal warriors and the chief's relatives.

769 This strictly, speaking, constitutes the totemic sacrifice. The 782 kid or sheep is then offered to the spirits of departed souls and to the ancestors.

After the sacrifice to ancestors the chief puts the akameyôn 361 back at his side. From the mfex or pouch, which is never re-621 moved, he draws forth a small bundle of dirty material wrapped 769 around a bit of red wood, ashes, and a few bones. All this 778 comes from a sacrifice to the totem like that already described. To these he adds the remnants of the recent sacrifice and buries it all deep in a hole in which he drives a strong stake of élun
[824] or éfirfira wood; sometimes a young ebony tree is also used. At the top of the stake he fixes a ball of paste made of red wood, [822 842] white chalk -- the colors of sacrifices and spirits, and manioc, the symbol of fertility. A part of the clan or tribal totem is also inserted. The practitioner, with many gestures, songs, and dances imprisons within it all the evil spirits of the air. [558]

The practitioner sows maize in the middle of the village, then plants a manioc root and particularly a euphorbia (euphorbia antiquorum), and puts a small fence around, so that the plants will not be desecrated. The village's prosperity depends upon their [787] rapid growth. Should they wither, the chosen spot will be abandoned. Euphorbia has the power of averting thunder and evil [824] spirits by means of its bristling points. Amaryllis and immortelles are often planted at the foot of the euphorbia, along with a few stalks of sugar cane. The amaryllis and immortelles ought to come from the old village, having issued from those which the chief's first wife had formerly brought from her [842] native village at her marriage. Sugar cane is a symbol of fertility.

241 The women plant maize everywhere after these preliminaries, and its rapid growth ensures basic subsistence. Mean-361 while the men build the huts. The first ears of maize will certainly be offered to the guardian totem. Dried and preserved in the form of a coronet, they will provide seed for the following year.

VII. Ordeals

695 In ordeals (1) or judicial tests the appeal to the totem's intervention plays a fairly large part.

> 1. Ordeals, from the Anglo-Saxon ordaal [ordál -dél], in modern German, Urteil, judgement.

[171] These tests are very common in Bantu tribes; and we find the same thing on the other side of Africa, among the Jaluo at Kiviri.

The form of ordeal among these peoples is as follows and closely resembles that of the Fan. "A small pot of water is placed on the fire. A little wimbi-flour and a bit of 'medicine' are put into the water. If the water boils over, the man is guilty, if not, he is innocent.

"A gourd basin with a large hole cut in the bottom is placed on a flat stone. Water is poured into the calabash, the bottom of which being, of course, not close-fitting to the stone would permit ordinarily of a leakage [I have emended an obvious misprint here, "bakage."--Translator] But the medicine man who attends puts into the bottom of the calabash crushed-up leaves of a kind of mimosa [559] which, for a time at least, stop the leakage and enable the calabash to be filled up with water, the retention of the water by the calabash proving the man to be innocent.

"Dry flour is given to the suspected persons. If innocent, he can swallow it; if he is able to moisten the flour with his saliva and swallow it, he is shown to be guilty." (1)

> 1. Sir Harry Johnston, op. cit., "The Jaluo."

The Fan often resort to ordeals, especially in the following circumstances: accusations of theft, adultery, murder, sorcery, "sins" against the clan or village totem. Without going into details, I shall point out merely the part played by the totem.

[Errata; should be "unable". — Analyst]

685 If the offense is admitted, punishment follows immediately. With theft, for instance, the person who has committed larceny must make a restitution of double the value. In some tribes, the thief if condemned to lose an ear, a finger, a hand, sometimes a foot. Often he may be sold into slavery. Among the Fan he has merely to return twice the amount stolen.

684 In case of adultery, the culprit pays the value of the woman and is also often kept prisoner for a long time in the plaintiff's village; his head is shaved and he is exposed to the sun, covered with spices. If payment is not made, and even if it is, the woman's father or husband has the right -- and makes use of it -- to cut the joints of the culprit's fingers so that he is made almost powerless. Women are cruelly beaten and spices are rubbed into her wounds. She is also chastised with the [413] nkôn éki, (2) a kind of long iron shears used to pinch deeply and cruelly burn the genital organs. At the second offense her nose and ears are cut off; a third brings death.

2. This is the name of certain villages where the blacksmiths are found who are skilfull in making these instruments of torture.

682 In case of murder, the murderer, when captured, is killed and eaten. Furthermore, his family must pay compensation with a woman or the equivalent value, that is, two lives for one.

695 For all other charges and for those just mentioned, when the acknowledged or presumed culprit denies his guilt, judicial trial is required. [560]

Whatever the ordeal, they may all be considered from two points of view, or even are of two degrees. The first ordeal is intended to "indicate" the likely culprit; the second, to decide whether or not he is really guilty. Punishment is immediate and strikes simultaneously at body and soul.

The first step is therefore to discover the culprit. With theft, murder, or sorcery, the ordeals vary according to the case.

695 The following are some of the principal kinds:

A man is accused of murder. He will first have to be 694 seized; if that is impossible, it does not much matter. Since 672 members of the tribe stick together, another man will be 619 seized, no matter whom. If this cannot be done, the Fan may 682 even take a man belonging to another tribe, who will be kept prisoner until his family and tribe, taking up the cudgels in their turn, capture either the culprit or a member of the culprit's tribe. One can see to what degree such solidarity may lead to retaliation.

Once a man has been caught, guilty or not, he undergoes 695 one of the following tests:
682 The dzismébiân is the eye ordeal. A person is brought before the chief, gagged and with his head pulled back. The practitioner takes a little pot made from the hard shell of a small gourd called ngon, which is filled with a certain liquid
[278] consisting of vegetable poisons with an atropine base. The presumed culprit has the right -- and often takes advantage of it -- to require his own totem to be dipped in the liquid. The contents of the pot are then poured into his eye. If the eye stays in its socket, the man is innocent; if the eye is destroyed or raised out of the socket, he is guilty. (1) In the latter case he is immediately killed by a knife stroke. He may nevertheless ask to drink the test poison, provided that he is buying back his life for the first time. This is often permitted.

[171] 1. The same test occurs among the Bangala and Barundi.

A second and more generally used ordeal is the following, called médzim mé ne ayôn, burning water. [561]

The practitioner boils water in a pot. When it comes to a boil, he throws in a wire ring, and the presumed culprit must retrieve it without burning himself; if his hand is injured, he is declared guilty, but if not, he is adjudged innocent and is dismissed. In such a case, the plaintiff himself is punished and must drink the test poison. The accused man has the right to 695 boil his own totem in the pot, but so has the practitioner, in 682 order to counterbalance the power of the accused man's totem.

The red-hot iron test, éki biâǎ or biâǎ éki biâǎ, is the third ordeal.

The accused man's knife is heated red hot, then pressed to his cheek; if the cheek is burnt, he is guilty; otherwise, he is declared innocent. He has the right to throw into the fire, in which the iron is heated, the ashes of his individual totem; he also has the right to rub with this same totem that part of his body to which the red-hot iron will be applied.

There is no need to dwell on how easy subterfuges would be, all the more so since before each ceremony the presumed culprit is allowed to apply a few strong poultices or substances to harden his skin. The totem would then be only more effective!

If declared innocent, the accused man nevertheless owes a sacrifice to his mvane, a debt that will be readily discharged.

685 In case of theft there are also three tests used, as follows:
695 for the otura biâǎ, the practitioner lights a large fire in 787 the middle of the village, fed with special kinds of wood. When the fire has caught well, he throws an armful of wet leaves on it; he then moves back, having pronounced above the rising smoke certain magical words. The column of smoke at first rises straight up; suddenly, without wind (often there is not a breath), without any visible physical action on the part of the practitioner or anyone else (because they are all at a distance), it curves inward, we are told, eddies, and then advances towards a hut which it completely envelopes. The hut's owner is immediately seized and declared guilty [562]; however, he can insist on drinking the test poison, provided that he is buying back his life for the first time. One cannot redeem oneself from the test poison.

The smoke test has always seemed to me one of the most difficult to explain. I have witnessed it several times and in spite of the closest attention have not been able to perceive the least trickery.

685 A second test is the following: the practitioner lies on the 695 ground and appears to listen to mysterious voices which are heard, 787 in fact, as if coming out of the earth. Probably a simple effect of 198

685 ventriloquism is involved; certain practitioners are past masters 695 at it. The voices mention three names, which the practitioner 787 repeats aloud. Each of the presumed culprits must then bring a 198 fowl; these are slaughtered by the practitioner and their blood is poured on the ground. The first sign is deduced from the way in which the drops fall and the forms they take. The fowls are then cut open, and the position of the liver and the final contractions of nerves and muscles corroborate the first indications.

685 The totem plays only an inconspicuous part in this test, 695 which in any case is rarely used nowadays.

787 The most frequent test is the akala-nkal, thus called after the fetish nkal, which is kept in an antelope horn or large snail (ngôn). The practitioner heats water, mixing in different kinds of plants, and adds, to satisfy those who may think they are suspected, some of the ashes of their totemic sacrifice.

When evening comes, every man prepares a fire of wood and bamboo in front of his hut. The chief then goes through the brightly lit village, invoking guardian spirits and threatening the thief or thieves with terrible vengeance. Then he runs and jumps over all the bonfires, the men and women of the village following after him. If a man or woman should touch one of the brands with a foot so as to make it roll off the fire, that person is declared guilty. While undergoing the nkal test, the chief carries his totem in his hand. If all come through safely, the chief starts again on his own, this time holding the village totem, show everybody's innocence even more. [563]

After this first trial, which everyone usually gets through with the greatest ease, the one or more accused if such there be, if not, all the men of the village, take a drink of lustral water which the practitioner has just boiled; then they take a few steps and spit on the nkal, which has been put on the ground. Each person then steps over the nkal, swearing his innocence, and starts once more to leap over all the bonfires. If he is not hurt, he is declared innocent. It is extremely rare that, from the effects of the poison or for some other reason, one or another does not stumble over a brand and knock it out of the fire. He is thereupon declared guilty; if he denies it, he will have to drink the éłûń; if on the contrary, he saves his life but has to repay the theft twice over.

683 This is the most frequent test among the Fan.
787 Anyone accused of sorcery, or all those who have suc-
695 cumbed during the first tests, must drink the ordeal poison. This 278 ceremony has been described so often that there is no need to go into it at length.

In the Fan test-poison ordeal three different poisons are used, according to the case in question: the sap of the éłůn tree; the grated bark and roots of the oné or onaĩ; (1) the roots of the [411]

> 1. Strychnos onaĩ: this shrub of the strychnine family, produces the poison used on arrowheads. Puncture is fatal if the poison is fresh, and death ensues within a few moments. If the poison is old, the wound slowly becomes gangrenous. Bromine is a good antidote.

shrub kwéa. (2) These roots are finely shredded, thrown into boiling water and a reddish liquid is obtained after a few hours of simmering. This highly dangerous brew contains in solution a considerable amount of strychnine and hyoscine.

> 2. Strychnos ikaja: this is a common test on the coast, where kwéa, the natives say, is called ikaja, nka, mbonde, ibonde, etc.

683 The ngenngǎh, or practitioner, begins by sacrificing a she-787 goat, with the formulae already indicated. Next, all the vil-
695 lagers assemble, and the practitioner appears in red and white paint, with red parrot feathers and black fish hawk plumes stuck into his hair to form a crown. His only garment consists of a skin tied around his loins, and he wears many bells on his hands and feet. [564] He invokes the protective fetishes of the village, leaps, skips, and howls frenetically. The tom-tom played by one of his acolytes is beaten faster and faster; the practitioner's movements increase in tempo; little by little he seems to move by preference toward a group, the sound of his bells directing him, so he says. Finally he halts abruptly and points in the crowd

68 695 781 to one or more culprits, who are immediately seized and led to the middle of the public square, where one of the practitioner's assistants is waiting with several cups of the liquid.

Those who, in previous ordeals, have asked to be given the poison to drink are also brought up at the same time.

Each in turn empties a cup: the effects vary according to the kind of poison.

Those who drink the élûn quickly develop a violent trembling, which convulses the whole body. They can hardly keep on their feet and would roll on the ground were they not supported by friends. If at this point they are able to urinate copiously, they will gradually recover and survive. However, for years they will have a persistent nervous tremor.

Those who drink the ikaja or the onaĩ seem, on the contrary, to be knocked out: they fall down, get up, and fall down again. They survive only if they can vomit the liquid.

Whatever the effect of the poison, all who have undergone the test are led before a log thrown like a bridge over a brook, or sometimes before a plank or a dead tree laid on the ground. They must tread it without help from one end to the other. If they teeter and fall, all the participants leap on them, [266] strike and kill them with clubs, tear them apart and eat them on the spot. However, the sorcerers or those who claim to be are never eaten but are burnt alive. Those who get through to the end of the plank have to pay a large fine. "There's no smoke without fire," seems to be the Fan proverb, translated [538] into their idom as, "Ké abi fo ve fo -- there's no rat hole without a rat!"

The totem enters to a fairly large extent into all these tests, either through the practitioner who invokes it or through the unfortunate accused who always have the right, quite illusory for them, to have a [565] piece of the totem boiled with the élûn (1) and to invoke it before drinking up the fatal

1. It is not for me to pass judgment on these ceremonies, or to show to what degree the practitioner plays the dominant role, often getting well paid for administering an effective emetic along with the test poison. I shall evaluate these ordeals later when discussing religion.

683
695
787

potion.

683
695
787
562

Women are not subject to the tests I have just mentioned except sometimes to the nkal test. Among the Fan they do not drink the test poison; they are, in fact, considered as irresponsible and in a state of tutelage. Therefore in cases of serious accustion, a woman's father or husband has to take her place but does not invoke the totem, because it would not be able to act on her behalf since it does not acknowledge the woman.

Only for an accusation of sorcery does a woman have to submit to a test.

She is brought gagged to the middle of the village, two female relatives pull her head back, and the practitioner empties [278] into her eye the sap of a euphorbia called ka. (2) If she comes

2. Euphorbia scandens, of the arboreal euphorbias.

through unhurt, she is innocent. If, on the contrary, as nearly always happens, the eye leaves the socket, she is immediately [266] declared guilty, dragged away into the forest, burnt, and eaten. The accusation frequently arises, and punishment is never delayed.

VIII. Blood Exchange

608

" 'Brotherhood' (in America, totemisation)," says Mgr. Le Roy, (3) "is relationship through an exchange of blood; if

3. La religion des primitifs [The Religion of Primitive Peoples] op. cit., p. 120.

this is not quite totemism, it is very near to it."

608 All primitive man's interests lead him to extend his relationships and alliances, that is, briefly, to enlarge his family. Therefore the exchange of blood has two rather different aspects. "By means of certain mysterious practices, certain actions and words that are kept secret among the initiated but that always involve an exchange of blood, it is possible first of all to gain an animal's favor, to make him follow and obey, to assume his various aspects as a disguise if need be, and to take advantage of his strength, [566] cunning, and skill. In a word, one can make a 'brother' of him, and perhaps this constitutes the basis of all totemism." (1)

1. Le Roy, op. cit., p. 120.

Exchanging blood with an animal -- for all alliances with animals always include a blood exchange -- is therefore, in fact, the central, the first, and by far the most important of totemic rites. I went into this point at great length in discussing the origin of the totem and nagualism.

Yet if a man at the present time seeks above all a covenant with an animal, a temporary and personal alliance in the primitive sense, as Mgr. Le Roy properly points out, (2) by this alliance "man not only wants to get hold of the animal such as it is and link its family with his own, but he also and especially seeks that animal's family, as strengthened by the presence and activity of a spirit from the invisible world -- the animal's own soul, the spirit of the ancestors, the tutelary genius. ..." In a word, blood alliance is a pact with the invisible world.

2. Op. cit., p. 122.

What a man achieves with an animal, he would all the more like to effect with another man. This will be a powerful means of extending his personal relationships, his alliances, his "family." He chooses by preference, therefore, one whose friendship, power, and loyalty he values, and he concludes a pact of alliance that will be sanctioned by an exchange of blood in a special ceremony and according to special rites. With the

608 rites completed, the two men become truly blood brothers, ndugu among the Swahili of the east coast, ndégo among the Mpongwe of the equator, angom among our Fan; these represent the same word, with the same root, the different forms resulting from differences in dialect.

608 Still, two conditions are necessary to blood exchange: in the first place, a real operation is performed. Only chiefs make 622 this exchange, and believe themselves to be completely bound and, if need be, ready to give their lives for their blood brothers. They are thus in a position to exact reciprocity. Only the chiefs, as we have said, make blood brothers; for they alone are representatives of their race and guardians of the totem, consequently masters of the intrinsic virtue and strength of the tribe. Anyone other than the chief is therefore disqualified, [567] and the chief himself cannot appoint a delegate to take his place. Nevertheless, this does happen from time to time! A white man who chances by, perhaps an explorer, anxious to obtain the good will of an influential chief, or often a trader pursuing his business, may ask a chief to make him a "blood brother." The chief sees his own advantage here and readily agrees, knowing perfectly well that he is certain to receive many presents. The ceremony takes place, but the white man, who believes that he has gained his ends, is really very naive, for in most cases the chief will have appointed a deputy and the rite means nothing legally.

However, a chief does sometimes go through the ceremony himself but in that case the basic rites are abbreviated, often omitted. An African knows too well what he is undertaking and has no desire for a white blood brother. Yet in certain circumstances, and well aware of what he is doing, an African chief does really make a blood brother. Thus, for instance, a chief of Kilimanjaro, named Tumba, is blood brother to Mgr. Le Roy, (1) who has left us an interesting and thorough account

1. Voyage au Kilima-Ndjaro [Journey to Kilimanjaro] by Mgr. Le Roy; Mame, Tours. See also Ann. Prop. Foi. 1882,

7: Trilles--109 M-5 (1893-1912) 1912 FH9 Fang FH9
Buye F015

F
608
622

p. 369 ff. [Annuaire de la Propagation de la Foi, Yearbook of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith].

of the ceremony and associated ritual.

The second condition is that the parties concerned be of different tribes and not have the same totem. This condition is essential and proceeds from the very nature of totemism.

The process of blood alliance or blood exchange is rather curious. Among the Fan it is as follows and is found in precisely the same form in several Congo tribes somewhat related to the Fan, like the Wabuyu of the Upper Congo.

[171]

One of my mission colleagues recently described it thus: (1)

B
608
622

1. Bulletin des Pères Blancs d'Anvers [Bulletin of the White Fathers of Antwerp], n° de mai [May] 1910.

"In the evening there is a loud beating of drums; several rifle shots followed by shouts of joy announce a festival. Urged by curiosity, I went in the direction of the noise and discovered that two chiefs were to effect a blood exchange that day. They came forward solemnly . . . the participant crowded around and let out bloodcurdling howls. The protagonists solemnly sit down on special seats [568], face to face, with their knees touching. A white cloth is thrown over them, and the ceremony begins.

"The minister [practitioner] of one of the chiefs of the village where I am stationed takes a small thin knife and makes an incision in the leg of the foreign chief, while the latter's minister does the same to the village chief. Each one spreads on a leaf a paste that looks like butter, and simultaneously both ministers rub the two incisions. They keep exchanging the leaves so that their masters' blood is thoroughly mixed, the better to seal the mutual friendship.

"At the same time ivory horns are sounded and drums beat martial airs, rather unreasonably, it seems to me, at a 'peace conference.' The music arouses angry passions in the

608 hearts of the crowd, which are translated into wildly savage 622 cries.

"The ministers signal for silence with waves of the hand, and deliver short addresses to their masters, of which the gist is more or less: 'You have concluded a blood pact. Your reciprocal friendship will never end. Should one of you be false to your given word, may he be broken like this leaf!'

"Adding gesture to speech they tear in pieces the leaves used in the ceremony. The two chiefs then stand up and announce in loud voices: "Everything that I possess is yours -- children, slaves, subjects, cattle, and plantation. Should any man seek to harm you, I shall always be ready to avenge the injury.'

"Next, hand in hand they circle the group two or three times, at a slow and dignified pace. They are followed by about ten women ... dressed in native materials of wildly clashing colors. The women's hair has been elaborately braided, [301] necklaces of pearls and glass beads adorn their bosoms, enormous copper bracelets cover their forearms, and heavy iron rings encircle their ankles. At a signal from one of them, all the [481] women start to walk with swaying movements and a curious swinging of the hips [569], along with their most ingratiating gestures and enticing grins directed towards the delighted participants.

608 "Shortly afterwards, when the newly made friends have 622 returned to their seats, a group of men comes out of the ranks
535 of spectators, dressed in loincloths of many colors. The dancers salute the two majesties by giving three times a wild animal's roar, to which the crowd replies. The orchestra musicians madly compete on their instruments; dancers and spectators raise from powerful chests three more roars that would make the very lions tremble. This is the signal for the dance, the main attraction of the festival. Great and small leave their ranks and join the group. With feline flexibility they crawl, jump like leopards, rise up together, whirl around brandishing spears that gleam in the sun, leap upon an imaginary victim whom they trample in rage. Sweat pours down the naked, gleaming bronze bodies; to stave off their fatigue, the dances alternate with war songs celebrating the achievements of the tribe's forefathers and teaching contempt for death.

7: Trilles--111 M-5 (1893-1912) 1912 FH9 Fang FH9
Buye F015

B 608 622 535

"Then comes the feast, from which women are strictly excluded."

F 608 622

A ceremony identical to that of the Wabuyu is found among the Ozèm Fan, which I have seen several times, and is almost the same among the Dzandzama and Bakélé.

F 171

It is rather strange to find almost the same customs among the most ancient peoples. For instance, Herodotus wrote of the Scythians: "This is how the Scythians used to take an oath: they would pour wine into a large earthenware cup, and the parties to the oath would add their blood from slight cuts made on their bodies with knife or sword; a boar-spear, an axe, and a lance would then be dipped into the cup. They then recited long prayers and drank from the cup. The leading members of the court would drink after them." (1)

1. Herodotus, Book IV, Ch. 70.

F 779

Blood alliance is the last general totemic rite that we have to deal with. Next come particular rites. The totem usually plays a far less important part in these than in general rites, and we shall therefore be much less concerned with them. [570]

Chapter XVI

The Totem in Fan Life: Particular Rites

Summary:

1. Birth.
2. Adoption.
3. Marriage.
4. Hunting, fishing, husbandry.
5. Trade and palavers.
6. Diseases and death. The funeral dance and the fanki.

7: Trilles--112 M-5 (1893-1912) 1912 FH9 Fang FH9

1. Birth and Name Giving

844 Only women, the village matrons, are allowed to help a mother in childbirth. Men are absolutely excluded, even husbands. A woman who gives birth on a journey prefers to go off by herself into the forest rather than ask for her husband's help.

As soon as the child is delivered, his umbilical cord is cut and he is carefully washed. The remnants of the cord are wrapped in a cloth and buried out of the way. In the case of a chief's son, especially that of the head chief, the remains are buried, as we have seen, at the foot of a sacred fig tree. (1)

[824 778]

1. Ficus elastica.

Great importance is given to the tree's growth, and to touch it is strictly forbidden. Any violation of the tree would be considered an attack upon the human being.

[688]

851 A few days after birth, the baby is carried to his father, who may accept it or refuse it. However, the latter [571] happens only if the child is deformed or crippled, in which case it is ruthlessly sacrificed. The religious rites (1) connected with birth are numerous, but the only ones that seem to me to be totemic are name giving and the choice of the baby's totem.

847

553

1. See Bulletin de la Société Neuchâteloise de Géographie [Bulletin of the Neuchâtel Geographical Society], 1910, "Les rites de la naissance chez les Fân" ("Ritual rites among the Fang"), by Father Trilles.

The name is solely the father's choice; it is often determined by attendant circumstances, atmospheric or other, or by some local happening, a hunt, a fishing expedition, the 553 arrival of a stranger. Hence, a certain number of names that at first would seem totemic, because they copy the names of animals and plants, are not so at all. In general, the eldest son's name is that of one of his forebears, a grandfather or ancestor, who is thought to come to life again in him. Twins, [845] however, always receive special names of matched things, which go in twos, like Sun and Moon, Wind and Rain, Storm and Thunder, etc.

851 As soon as the child has been given a name, his father 779 takes it in his arms and carries it into his hut, where he opens the évora biéri and puts the baby down on the lid. He then takes the ancestral skulls one by one and puts them on the child's head, then places the family totem in its hand. The father with his fingernail often scrapes a bit off of the antelope horn holding the remnants of his personal totemic sacrifice, and puts some of this into the child's mouth. This, strictly speaking, is the dedication to the totem. The father then takes the baby back to its mother so that she may anoint it with oil and rub it with red wood. After the mother, or any other woman present, has attended to this, the father again takes the child and puts another bit of the totem into its mouth. A she-goat, a sheep, or at least a fowl is then offered to the family totem and to the spirits of the departed, according to sacred ritual. The remains [779] of this sacrifice, the ashes, etc., are enclosed in a small antelope horn, which is hung around the baby's neck or above his genital organs; this will be his amulet. Finally, the father gives the baby his personal totem, which will be recalled to him later on when he is old enough to understand. At that same time he will be taught what are the family, clan, and tribal totems, and the duties and obligations they impose on him. This instruction is part of the méhara. [572]

2. Adoption

597 In certain cases, a few children are adopted by a head of 727 the family when given as ransom for murder or spared in the 597 727 sacking of a village. For, although in such cases all the men and able-bodied youths are ruthlessly killed and eaten, this does not apply to women and children, even to male children, who henceforth belong to the new tribe and will later be looked upon as warriors. There is no ceremony for women or female [562] children, since, as we have seen, the totem ignores them, and they have only one duty toward it, to hide in their huts as quickly as possible whenever there is talk of the totem, and never to mention it. Should this nevertheless happen, it would be an offense requiring expiation.

597 Male children are adopted by the various heads of a family. Tribal or village chiefs have first choice, the rest of the warriors come after. The one or more children chosen by a chief, however, may never succeed him.

597 Adoption ceremonies are like those at birth. The adopted child loses all his old totems in order to acquire those of the 344 tribe he joins. There is just one additional ceremony, blood-letting. So as to prove his definitive entry into the tribe, he undergoes the following operation when led before the totem. With the mfox knife, a small steel blade kept for this purpose, the adoptive father makes a few slight scarifications on the child's left arm, collects the blood that flows, and throws it on the ancestral skulls, then on the akaméyòn. He then takes a fragment of skull and some totemic sacrificial ashes and rubs these vigorously on the child's arm. This is the true sign of adoption, by which the boy definitively enters his new family and is recognized as belonging to it entirely. Later on he may even be allowed to take a wife from his former tribe, in spite of the [illegible] because adoption is so authentic.

[348 563] Often the same bloodletting and blood alliance occur with illegitimate children or with mulattoes, but the object is then different. Adoption never takes place at birth but much later, so as to ensure for the child the ancestors' protection.

The same act often occurs when a child is ill. [573]

7: Trilles--115 M-5 (1893-1912) 1912 FH9 Fang FH9

3. Marriage

119 I do not know of any truly totemic act among the com-562 plicated religious rites connected with marriage. This absence 583 must come from the fact that women are considered to be in themselves independent of the totem.

584 Before marriage, especially before starting to make the 119 rounds of the villages in order to pick out a future companion, a young man first builds a sort of triumphal arch in front of his hut. A creeper decorated with various bits of cheap finery, fabric, green leaves, flowering branches, and ava flowers, is stretched from his house to the one opposite, on the other side of the public square or the main street of the village. Before his hut two shrubs garnished in similar fashion have their tops bound together to form a triumphal arch. The young man opens the biéri box, removes his family totem and a skull and puts them before the statue of the biéri. Then for hours, endless songs and dances will be performed. When the young man is exhausted, one of his friends takes over. The songs and dances last far into the night and start again at dawn. No one may interrupt or even enter the hut, otherwise the entire ceremony would have to be begun all over again. A woman's glance at the biéri or totem, or that of a strange man, would be enough to bring this about. Therefore, one of the young man's friends is constantly on guard to prevent such an accident; he stands in front of the hut door and sees to it that people move along briskly.

[583] This rite only takes place when a youth is contemplating marriage by abduction. He wishes in this manner to gain the good will of the biéri, the ancestors, and the totem.

On the third day in the evening the ritual dances end.
[182] The young man immediately offers a final sacrifice, usually of a cock, a hen, and some maize, following the prescribed forms. Then, since he is not permitted to rest for even a moment, he starts out, carrying the cock, hen, and maize as his only provisions; he is not allowed to take along anything else.

595 Whatever the kind of marriage, the first wife is the only
585 one considered [574] as truly legitimate. As soon as she enters her new hut, her husband leads her by the hand before the évora biéri, which is kept tightly closed. Throughout her life, the wife will never be allowed to look into the box, as that would entail a very grave ritual offense. She now takes a bit of palm oil brought from her own village, mixes it with some from her husband's mother, and rubs this symbolic mixture on the statue
[842] on top of the évora. This is a symbol of the fertility she asks of the ancestors and the guardian spirits of the race. She next [782] puts a few grains of maize in a small basket at the base of the statue, so that her future plantations may thrive. This sacrifice should be repeated every morning, but only by the principal wife -- and it is often omitted.

4. Hunting, Fishing, Husbandry

788 Before starting on a hunting or fishing expedition, like-779 wise before going out to the first work on his plantation, every family head or warrior will be sure to invoke his totem. He does this first with an offering on the biéri box, then by touching his weapons, tools, or snares against the family totem.

788 In the case of hunting, the hunter, when charing his gun, 224 mixes some of the ashes of totemic sacrifice with his small shot,
779 puts his hand on his totem, and leaves confident of the outcome. Even if hunting does not come up to expectation, he would never dream of blaming his totem. He would think that he had had bad luck or, more likely, that he had committed some offense.

788 When going fishing, he carries some of the sacrificial ashes hidden in a rag. At the spot he thinks propitious, he al-226 ways begins by throwing the ashes into the water, in order to 779 obtain his totem's good will.

Likewise, when a man starts farming, at the beginning of 788 each dry season, before giving the first ax blow to the trees to 224 be cut down, he places some ashes or remnants of sacrifice in 779 some kind of hole and sees to it that they are consumed by the

779
778 fire which he sets to the felled trees so as to make the necessary
241 fertilizer needed for his future crops. [575]

Returning from hunting or fishing, a man is always sure to 782 put an offering on the évora biéri: it may be a piece of the ani-224 mal's heart and brain or part of the first fish caught, even the 226 whole fish if it is very small. The first fruits are also placed on 779 the évora. Any infraction of these rites leads to punishment that can only be atoned for by one or more sacrifices. A warrior will infallibly recognize punishment in the failure of hunting or fishing trips or in barren plantations.

The hunting or fishing offering is made by the head of the family, that of first fruits by the first wife.

5. Trade and Palavers

788 Whenever a Fan has to "talk," he is very careful to try 537 to gain his totem's good will beforehand. On such occasions 779 it is important that he be able to convince his fellow speakers or his adversaries.

The totem ceremony is very short. Before leaving for the palaver or on a trading trip, he removes from the biéri box some of the ashes of the last sacrifice and puts them into a rag, closes the box, and goes off contented.

Before beginning to "talk," he will open the package of ashes and put a bit on his forehead, lips, and throat. Thus the spiritual guardians of the race will aid his brain and inspire him with the best thoughts and the best phrases, and thus they will tell him the best words to use to convince his adversaries and obtain what he wants.

6. Disease and Death

755 The totemic ceremonies connected with disease and death
779 are of somewhat more consequence. As soon as a man falls gravely ill, the practitioner is called in. He demands in advance, to be on the safe side, the proper payment for his pains, and then

755 goes to the sick man's hut. A variety of remedies are used, 779 among them always a dance in honor of the totem. After the dance and the driving out of the evil spirits [576] that torment the sick man, a sacrifice is made, often of a she-goat, a sheep, or at least a fowl. The sick man always has to eat some of this sacrifice, and the practitioner mixes into it fragments of the patient's family totem, as he does into any potions administered. If the sick man recovers, he will have to offer a black hen on the évora biéri before he leaves his hut. The hen will then be burnt according to the sacred rituals.

764 If the man dies, his eldest son closes his eyes and 779 straightens the arms and legs before they become stiff, after which the corpse may not be touched, under grave penalties. The lamentations begin, but in an undertone; the dead man's wives gather around him, tear at their arms and legs, and with the blood that flows sprinkle the corpse. He is then covered with his fetishes and at his side is the mébup on which his family totem is hung. After the first lamentations are over, the commotion quiets down and only the dead man's wives continue to weep.

In the morning the eldest son and heir offers a sacrifice to the deceased's family totem so that it may continue to favor the survivors. He puts some of the victim's blood into the mouth of the corpse and also takes some in his own mouth. He then completes the sacrifice according to the customary rites.

Before the burial another sacrifice will be made in order to determine the location of the grave and to make sure that the dead man is satisfied. The corpse is made to partake of this sacrifice too.

At the appropriate time, the dead man is placed in the grave dug for him; his family totem lies beside him, and, if he is a tribal chief, the clan or tribal totem is also placed at his side. This is left to him for a few moments, then the heir removes it, so as to "take possession."

765 The same ceremonies are observed when the skull is re-779 moved, 30 days after death.

765 This skull cannot, however, be put into the évora biéri
779 right away, it must first be "acknowledged." The rite is analogous to that of the chief's initiation, which has already been described. The skull [577] is carried into the forest, placed upon a kind of altar, and a victim is immolated in its honor. It is sprinkled with lustral water, then with blood. The chief's heir then takes the skull and makes it first "acknowledge" the ancestral skulls, then successively the family and clan totems, and ends with the tribal totem.

768 Thirty days after death the funeral dances or fanki also 779 take place, and then the division of the deceased's property, particularly his wives. His hut usually stays closed throughout this time, with the door barred and the roof covered with thorns so that the deceased's spirit cannot re-enter the house, which would mean making further sacrifices.

The mortuary rites are very complicated and very solemn among the Fan, especially for an important chief. I have here referred only to totemic rites. The totem will live again later in the person of one of the descendants, usually the grandson, [557] who, in many cases, will have both the name and the totem of his grandfather.

[p. 578-663 not translated]

7:Trilles--120 M-5 (1893-1912) 1912 FH9 Fang FH9

Fang Bibliography

A. French Authors

113 Rev. Allégret, La Religion des Fâ. Revue des Religions 1906.

Alexis, le Congo français. Tours 1899. Chez Mame et Challamel.

Alis (H.), Vers le Tchad. Paris 1896.

Mgr. Augouard, 28 Années au Congo. Paris 1906.

Avelot (lieutenant). Dans le Bassin de l'Ogowé. Bull. Sté de Géo Commer. Paris 1901.

— Recherches sur les migrations de la Gabonie. 1906.

Dr. Bayol, L'Afrique occidentale. Sénégambie et Guinée. La région gabonaise. Paris 1889. Challamel.

Bayrat, bulletin Sté de Géo. Paris 1896.

Bertou, le Lastourville à Samba. Paris 1899.

— Les races du Gabon. Bull. Sté Anthr. de Paris. T. XVI. 1895.

R. P. Bichet, Miss. Cathol. 1884.

Bohin, Nègres du Gabon. Bull. Sté Anthr. de Paris. T. IV. 1863.

Bouchaud, Le Congo français. Paris 1901.

— A la côte du Congo français. 1897.

Brazzaville, Bulletin Sté de Géo. Paris 1881.

de Brazza, Tour du Monde. 1887. 1890. 1893.

— Bulletin Sté de Géo. XVIII. Paris 1879.

Bruel, les populations de la Moyenne-Sangha. Revue d'ethnologie et de sociologie 1912.

R. P. Bullion, Ann. Prop. Fol. 1888.

Bulletin de la Société des Missions Evangéliques protestantes 1905, 1906, 1908.

du Chaillu, L'Afrique équatoriale. Paris 1868.

Chevalier (A.), L'Afrique centrale française. Paris 1904. Challamel.

Compiègne, L'Afrique équatoriale. Paris 1875.

Coppin, la Mission Cotton au Sud-Cameroun. Paris 1910.

— Pahouins et Pygmées. Le Géogie, Juillet 1909.

Cuny, Bulletin Sté de Géo. Paris 1896.

Decaen, bulletin Sté Normande. Rouen 1888.

Duparquet de Ranzay, Le Congo français. Paris 1888.

Duval, Les Nègres du Gabon. Bull. Sté Anthr. de Paris. 1863.

Dybowski, La Route du Tchad. Paris 1906.

7:Trilles--121 M-5 (1893-1912) 1912 FH9 Fang FH9

113 Fleuriot de Langle, Le Tour du Monde. Paris 1877. Croisières sur les côtes de l'Atlantique.

Foret, Le Fernan-Vaz. Bulletin Sté de Gie. Paris 1898.

Fourneau, Bulletin Sté de Gie. De l'Ogowé au Campo. XVI. Paris 1891.

Frais, La Côte ouest du Gabon. Paris 1908.

Froment, Bulletin Sté de Gie. X. Lille 1889.

Gacon, Exercices de lecture français-fang.

Guillemin, Le Congo français. Paris 1889.

Guillemot, Notice sur le Congo français. Paris 1901.

Guiral, Le Congo français. Paris 1889.

Hallez d'Arros, Colonisation du Congo français. Paris 1899. Challamel.

Haug, Le Bas Ogowé. Ann. de Géogr. 1903.

Hebert, Bulletin Sté de Gie. Paris 1868—69.

— Notes sur les populations du Gabon. La Géogie 1874.

Jardon, Bulletin Sté de Gie. Rochefort 1883—84.

Jeanneret, Quatre années au Congo. 1893.

R. P. Lejeune, Miss. Cathol. 1896.

— Au Congo, la Femme et la Famille. Desclée. Lille 1900.

— Dictionnaire Français-Fang. Paris 1892.

Laloy, Anthropologie S. 13. Paris 1910. Challamel.

Marche, Journal L'Explorateur. 1876.

R. P. Martrou, Les Eki des Fâ. Anthropos I (1906).

Mion, Voyage de Crampel. Bulletin Sté de Gie. Paris 1890.

R. P. Neu, Lettres sur Lambaréné. Annales de la Prop. de la Foi. 1883.

Pavour-Diblot, Bull. Sté de Gie de Nancy. Trente mois au Gabon. mystérieux. 1898.

A. Pittard, Notes sur quelques crânes fâ. Bulletin de la Société de Géographie de Neufchâtel 1898. (Supplément.) — Nouvelles Notes, même Bulletin 1910.

Poisel, La Hte Sangha. Bulletin Sté de Gie. Paris 1896 et 1899.

Du Quélio, Voyage dans l'Ogowé. Rev. Marit. et Col. 1874.

Reclus, Géogr. Universelle. — L'Afrique.

Reichmanhet, Revue Coloniale. 1906.

H. Rillot, J. de Brazza au Congo. Gazette Géogr. 1877.

Ricard, Notes sur le Gabon. Rev. Col. 1884.

Roche, Au pays des Pahouins. Paris 1904.

Rouget, L'Expansion coloniale au Congo français. 1899.

Mgr. Le Roy, La Religion des Primitifs. Paris 1909, p. 77, 113, 149, 198, 314 et passim.

[p. 121]

7:Trilles--122 M-5 (1893-1912) 1912 FH9 Fang FH9

R. P. Trilles, Dans les Rivières de la Mondah. Miss. Cathol. 1894 — Desclée 1910. 113
— Au pays Fâ. Société de Géogr. de Lille 1902.
— Carte du Pays Fâ, déposée au Ministère des Colonies.
— Contes et Légendes fâ. Bulletin de la Société de Géographie de Neuchâtel 1898.
— Exercices de lecture et écriture fang-français. Libreville 1902.
— Les Fâ, où ils vont, d'où ils viennent. Miss. Cathol. 1898.
— Les Fâ. Société de Géogr. de Bordeaux 1901.
— Mille Lieues dans l'Inconnu — Au pays des Fâ. Miss. Cathol. 1901.
— Quinze années au pays fâ. Desclée 1912.

Thivier, Bulletin Sté de Géo. Rochefort 1885—86.

Vocloge (Dr.), Le Congo français. Paris 1897.

Plus un certain nombre d'articles dans:
La Dépêche Coloniale — Revue indigène — Bulletin du Comité de l'Afrique — Le Tour du Monde — Annales maritimes et coloniales — Questions diplomatiques — Annales spontaliques des Pères du St Esprit.

B. German Authors

Dr. Güssfeldt, Zeitschr. der Ges. für Erdkunde zu Berlin X. 1875.
Hartmann, Zeitschr. der Ges. für Erdkunde zu Berlin. 1902. (Les arts fétichiques chez les Fangs.)
Dr. Lenz, Geogr. Blätter I. 1877, p. 74.
— Der Ogo-wai, Peterm. Mitt. 1883.
— Zeitschr. d. Ges. für Erdkunde zu Berlin. 1875.

C. English Authors

Bennett, Journ. Anthr. Inst. London 1899.
Burton, A day among the Fans. Anthr. Review. I.
Miss Mary Kingsley, Travels in West Africa. Scott. Geogr. Mag. London 1896.
Marling, Dictionn. Fang-français. New-York 1872.
Nassau, Journ. Afric. Societ. 1903—04.
R. B. N. Walker, Proceed. of the Roy. G. Soc XVII. 1873.

D. Spanish Authors

Bulletin de la Sté Royale de Madrid. 1904. Le Muny espagnol.

[p.122]

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

COLLECTION INTERNATIONALE DE MONOGRAPHIES ETHNOLOGIQUES
BIBLIOTHÈQUE -BIBLIOTHEK
ANTHROPOS
TOME BAND I. DIRECTION P. W. SCHMIDT S. V. D. 4. FASC. HEFT INTERNATIONALE SAMMLUNG ETHNOLOGISCHER MONOGRAPHIEN.

LE TOTÉMISME CHEZ LES FÂN

PAR LE

R. P. H. TRILLES, C. S. SP.

AVEC PRÉFACE DE MGR. A. LE ROY,
EVÊQUE D'ALINDA, SUP. GÉN. C. S. SP.

MÜNSTER i. W. 1912.
ASCHENDORFFSCHE VERLAGSBUCHHANDLUNG

EN VENTE

POUR LA FRANCE:
PICARD, FILS ET CIE.
PARIS VIe, 82, RUE BONAPARTE

POUR L'ANGLETERRE:
LUZAC AND CO.
LONDON WC. 46, GREAT RUSSELL STREET

[P-A]

TABLE DES MATIÈRES.

Quelques mots d'Introduction.

§ 1. Réalité de notre Étude 1
§ 2. Évolution des idées 2
§ 3. Premières recherches 6

Chap. I. La tribu fàn.

§ 1. Division de la Nation fàn 11
§ 2. Les tribus alliées aux Fàn 15
§ 3. Le nombre des Fàn 18

Chap. II. La notion du totem.

§ 1. Le mot «totem» et son origine 21
§ 2. L'extension du totem 22
§ 3. La définition du totem 24
Auteurs qui se sont occupés de la question du totem 25
1° Auteurs qui se sont occupés de la question d'une façon générale 27
2° Auteurs qui se sont occupés de la question du totem au point de vue africain 33
§ 4. Conditions requises pour qu'il y ait totémisme 38

Chap. III. Extension du totémisme dans la tribu fàn et dans les autres tribus bantoues.

§ 1. Le totémisme existe-t-il dans tous les clans de la tribu fàn 41
§ 2. Le totémisme dans les autres tribus bantoues 45
Bouiti 49
Le Woleu 52
§ 3. Le totémisme chez les peuples du Soudan occidental 54

Chap. IV. Le totem fàn.

§ 1. Définition et formes diverses 59
§ 2. Le totem réel. Le totem en lui-même, être réel et totémique . . . 61
a) Le nom générique 61
b) Les différents noms du totem d'après les différentes formes de totémisme 64
§ 3. Le totem matérialisé sous une forme tangible et effective 67
§ 4. Résumé de ce chapitre 71

[p. iii] [p. ii is blank] 1°

Chap. V. Le nom du totem fâñ.

§ 1. Difficulté de trouver le nom du totem 76
a) Par ignorance de la langue 76
b) Ignorance de l'interprète 77
c) Ignorance ou mauvaise volonté du Fâñ lui-même 78
§ 2. Spécification du totem 82
a) Le nom générique 82
b) Le nom propre 87
1° Le nom du totem dans la vie courante 88
2° Le nom du totem dans les chants et les légendes des aïeux . 90
3° Le nom du totem dans les appels directs au protecteur . . . 92
4° Le nom du totem dans les cérémonies et rites cultuels . . . 93

Chap. VI. Le totem réel, être tutélaire ou mvamayôñ.

§ 1. La notion du mvamayôñ 97
§ 2. Existence et nature du mvamayôñ ou totem tribal 100
a) Existence du mvamayôñ 100
b) Nature du mvamayôñ 101
1° Totem être vivant 101
2° Totem être inanimé 102
3° Totem phénomène naturel 103
§ 3. Les différents totems suivant les différentes collectivités organisées . 104
a) Le totem national 104
b) Le totem tribal 107
1° Différence entre clan et tribu 107
2° La formation de la tribu 108
3° Groupement des généalogies d'où sort le groupement des tribus 114
4° Comment reconnaître la «tribu» de façon précise 117
c) Le totem de clan 119
1° Désagrégation de la tribu, formation du clan 120
2° Exceptions à la forme habituelle de désagrégation 126
3° La formation du totem de clan 127
4° Conclusion 128
d) Le totem familial 131
e) Le totem individuel 136
f) Totems de confrérie et de société secrète 141

Chap. VII. Nature des divers totems.

§ 1. Etat de la question 144
§ 2. Nature des divers totems 147
a) Totem national 147
b) Totems de tribu 147
α) Les animaux proprement dits 148
β) Les autres animaux vivant sur terre 149
γ) Les êtres vivant en l'air 149
δ) Les êtres vivant dans l'eau 149

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

ε) Les végétaux 150
ζ) Les êtres inanimés 150
η) Les phénomènes naturels 152
c) Totems de clans 152
1° Clans strictement totémiques, ou clans primaires et filiaux . . 152
α) Des totems d'animaux 153
β) Des totems d'oiseaux 154
γ) Des totems reptiles, sauriens, etc. 154
δ) Des totems d'insectes, mollusques, etc. 154
ε) Parmi ces clans les totems végétaux seront plus nombreux 154
ζ) Les totems phénomènes naturels 154
2° Clans non strictement totémiques ou secondaires 155
3° Divers totems de clan 158
α) Portant le nom du mvamgédé 158
β) Clans ne portant pas le nom du totem 159
d) Totem familial 159
e) Totem individuel 160
1° Quelques remarques sur l'existence et le rôle du totem individuel 160
2° Circonstances qui déterminent le choix du totem individuel . 162
3° Circonstances fortuites déterminant le choix du totem individuel 163
4° Violation d'ebi totémique, ce qui en résulte 165
5° Qui choisit le totem individuel 166
6° Les seuls individus mâles ont un mvamv 167
7° Lois du mvamv 167
f) Totems de sociétés secrètes et de confrérie 169
§ 3. Conclusion 170

Chap. VIII. L'antiquité du totem fàn.

§ 1. Le totem fàn est-il un phénomène d'importation, ou bien remonte-t-il aux origines de la tribu 176
§ 2. Documents et raisons qui nous permettent de faire remonter le totémisme aux origines de la tribu 180
a) Les généalogies 180
b) Les légendes 183
1° La légende de Nyamvyamvu, le fils du Crocodile 184
I° Comment il était né, c'est la première chose 185
II° La Mort d'Ombaro 196
III° Le Culte du Crocodile 200
2° Survivances du culte totémique d'Ombaro 202
3° La légende totémique de l'Eléphant 205
c) Survivances actuelles du culte du crocodile et de l'Eléphant . . 213
1° L'Ekimo 219
2° Le Nzui bôlum 226
a) Préparation du Nzui bôlum 226
b) Un «étranger» est nécessaire comme victime 231

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

c) L'offrande du sang 232
d) La bénédiction des armes 234
e) La destruction du Nsué 234
3° Le Nsué be kuje 235
4° L'Eléñ bitóre 240
d) Les mutilations, tatouages et signes ethniques 242
1° Mutilations 242
a) Mutilations cultuelles 242
b) Mutilations plastiques 243
c) Mutilations de châtiment 243
2° Mutilations ethniques; mutilations proprement dites et tatouages 243
3° Les tatouages et signes ethniques 245
e) Bégnus bitéñ 245
f) Le sentiment populaire au sujet du totem 247

Chap. IX. L'origine du totem fáñ.

§ 1. L'origine du totem d'après les Fáñ 249
L'interrogation directe 250
§ 2. Origine du totem d'après les légendes 252
I° Légende de la Création 253
II° Légende de la Séparation 265
§ 3. L'origine du totem d'après les auteurs 282
I° Cause du totémisme: La Crédulité populaire 282
II° Cause du totémisme: Survivance de l'ancien culte familial . . 294
III° Cause du totémisme: La Métamorphoses 299
IV° Cause du totem: La Crainte 294
V° Cause: La Reconnaissance 299
VI° Cause: La Bienveillance de l'animal éponyme 302
Les influences antiques 309

Chap. X. Le totem «présent et tangible» et l'akaméyób.

I. Le totem présent et tangible.
§ 1. Nécessité du culte 319
§ 2. Objet du culte totémique 321
§ 3. Qui prendra le totem 328
§ 4. Dans quelles conditions ce totem sera-t-il pris 330
Les conditions du choix 330
a) Se procurer l'animal choisi 330
b) Les cérémonies rituelles 332
§ 5. Vertu du fragment choisi 344
§ 6. Où conserve-t-on le totem 349
II. L'Akaméyób.
Nature de l'Akaméyób 349

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Chap. XI. Le mvamayôt et l'esayôt.

Préliminaires 361
§ 1. L'objet du culte du mvamayôt, et l'objet du culte de l'esayôt diffèrent essentiellement 363
§ 2. Dans le culte totémique, on ne se préoccupe que du mvamayôt et de ses descendants actuellement existants; dans le culte mânique, les seuls descendants dénoncés de l'esayôt demeurent l'objet du culte 367
§ 3. Les cérémonies des deux cultes mânique et totémique sont différentes 371
I° Difficultés de la question 371
II° Exemple des différences entre les deux cultes 371
§ 4. Les ministres des deux cultes sont différents, sinon en fait, du moins en droit 388
§ 5. Les demandes au mvamayôt sont différentes des demandes à l'esayôt 391
§ 6. Les défenses du mvamayôt et de l'esayôt sont d'ordre différent . . 396
§ 7. Résumé de ce chapitre 397

Chap. XII. Les ministres du mvamayôt.

§ 1. Le ministre réel du mvamayôt est le chef (nsilla) 401
§ 2. Le Bôcheur ne peut être le ministre officiel du mvamayôt . . . 401
§ 3. Circonstances exceptionnelles où le Bôcheur est ministre du mvamayôt 402
§ 4. Seul, l'héritier de sang peut être délégué comme ministre de l'ancêtre réel et épouvante 404
§ 5. Le Bôcheur peut être délégué du mvamayôt: le sorcier ne le peut pas en tant que sorcier. Distinction nécessaire entre ces deux personnages 408
La position sociale du sorcier 409
Sentiments des Fâ à l'égard des sorciers et des Bôcheurs . . . 412
§ 6. Le Bôcheur et le sorcier sont ministres du totem dans les sociétés secrètes qu'ils dirigent 424

Chap. XIII. Féticheurs et sorciers. Leurs sociétés secrètes.

§ 1. Les sociétés secrètes des Bôcheurs 428
§ 2. Les sociétés secrètes de Bôcheurs sont distinctes de celles des sorciers 440
I° Le nom générique diffère pour les sociétés secrètes suivant qu'il s'agit de Bôcheurs ou de sorciers 440
II° Les sociétés secrètes de sorciers ont une existence absolument distincte de celles des Bôcheurs 441
§ 3. Sorciers et Bôcheurs ont des réunions secrètes distinctes 442
I° Le fait du nom 442
II° Les réunions des sorciers 443
a) Le temps et l'époque des réunions 443
b) L'endroit des réunions 446
c) Quelques témoignages au sujet de ces réunions 447
§ 4. Conclusions relatives à ces réunions 451

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

§ 5. Le mode de conversion aux assemblées de sorciers 452
§ 6. Le mode de transport des sorciers 454
§ 7. Les initiations 459
I° Le lui du secret 459
II° Les initiations proprement dites 460
III° L'anthropophagie des Bitchouers et des sorciers. Différence entre les deux actes 463

Chap. XIV. Les totems des sorciers et de leurs sociétés secrètes. Nagual et nagualisme.

§ 1. Les différents totems de sorciers 468
§ 2. Nagual et nagualisme 470
I° Notion du nagual 471
II° Notre première rencontre avec le nagual 473
III° L'origine du mot nagual. Le mot et la chose 475
§ 3. L'initiation au nagual 477
I° L'initiation du jeune guerrier 478
II° L'initiation du Bitchouer 481
III° L'initiation du sorcier et le nagual 484
IV° Résumé des différences entre le nagual et le totem 489
L'éléfa peut être un animal faisant partie du clan-totem . . 491
V° L'éléfa était primitivement le totem du fondateur de la race ou du clan 491
VI° Différence entre le nagual et le sorcier transformé en animal . 492
§ 4. Les ambitions des sorciers et leurs totems 494

Chap. XV. Le totem dans la vie fût. Les rites généraux.

§ 1. Le droit de totem aux rites initiatiques 498
§ 2. Les rites totémiques généraux ou rites du nouvelgnit 500
I° Le sacrifice totémique 501
a) Le sacrifice du totem 502
b) Le sacrifice -ne- totem 506
II° L'eau lustrale. Mbôme ebum 508
III° Le pétun. Mal ebôn 509
IV° Les danses totémiques. Ndôm ba ôsôn ebôn 510
§ 3. Les rites totémiques généraux. Détail de ces rites 515
I° La circoncision 516
a) La circoncision est-elle un rite religieux? 517
b) La circoncision est-elle un rite totémique? 518
c) Le fait même de la circoncision 520
α) Le fait lui-même de la circoncision 520
β) L'âge de la circoncision 521
γ) L'époque de la circoncision 522
δ) Les préparatifs 523
ε) La circoncision 524
d) Les résultats de la circoncision 526

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

II° L'Initiation 530
a) Les épreuves 531
b) L'initiation aux rites 531
c) La consécration des armes 532
III° La consécration du chef 537
a) La cérémonie 537
b) Le rite de la lance ou des engoim. Ahamer mébôt 541
c) Comparaison du rite de l'initiation et de la consécration du chef avec le rôle religieux du Pharaon 543
d) Erreur de l'administration européenne nommant de nouveaux chefs de tribu pris en dehors de la famille royale 545
e) Changement de totem de clan 547
IV° La Guerre et les Palabres 549
V° Les grandes chasses 553
VI° L'Etablissement d'un nouveau village 556
VII° Les Ordalies 559
VIII° L'Echange du sang 563

Chap. XVI. Le totem dans la vie fàn. Les rites particuliers.

§ 1. Naissance et imposition du nom 570
§ 2. L'adoption 572
§ 3. Le mariage 573
§ 4. Chasses, pêches, cultures 574
§ 5. Commerce et Palabres 575
§ 6. La maladie et la mort 576

Chap. XVII. Les lois du totem.

§ 1. Le droit à la crainte 579
I° La crainte du totem engendre le respect 579
II° Comment se manifeste la protection du totem. Faits qui expliquent cette protection 580
III° Le respect et la crainte engendrent le culte 584
IV° Intervention du totem 584
§ 2. Les Ebi ou défenses rituelles 585
I° La notion de l'ebi 585
II° Ebi totémiques 590
III° Ebi par rapport aux différentes situations sexuelles ou sociales . 591
§ 3. La loi d'exogamie 593
I° Nature de l'exogamie 593
II° Origine et but de l'exogamie 598
§ 4. Les tabous 601

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Chap. XVIII. Le totem symbole.

§ 1. L'emblème du clan 606
§ 2. Le nom du clan 608
§ 3. Les représentations symboliques ou effectives du totem 609
I° Figurines des ceaux 609
II° Dessins sur les ceaux 610
III° Gravures, incisions et marques 611
IV° Les piliers des ceaux 614
V° Les danses représentatives, les masques, coiffures, etc. 615
VI° Les mutilations ethniques et les tatouages corporels 616
a) Différentes mutilations 616
b) Le tatouage 617
α) Importance du tatouage 617
β) Différentes espèces de tatouages 617
γ) Figuration fictive des tatouages 620
δ) Le tatouage et la civilisation européenne 622

Chap. XIX. Totémisme et fétichisme.

§ 1. Ce qu'il faut entendre par fétichisme 624
§ 2. Distinction entre totem et fétiche 625
§ 3. L'ensemble du fétichisme 630
D'où provient le fétichisme? 630

Conclusion 636

Appendice I. La langue bantu du Mont Elgon 638
II. Calmeno et sorciers à Madagascar 641

Index 647

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

BIBLIOGRAPHIE DES FÂN.

A. Auteurs Français.

Rev. Allégret, La Religion des Fâ. Revue des Religions 1906.

Alexis, Le Congo français. Tours 1899. Chez Mame et Challamel.

Alis (H.), Vers le Tchad. Paris 1896.

Mgr. Augouard, 19 Années au Congo. Paris 1905.

Avelot (Lieutenant). Dans la Boucle de l'Ogowé. Bull. Sté de Géo Commer. Paris 1901.

— Recherches sur les migrations de la Gabonais. 1906.

Dr. Barat, L'Afrique occidentale. Sénégambie et Guinée. La région gabonaise. Paris 1889. Challamel.

Barrat, Bulletin Sté de Géo. Paris 1896.

Bertou, De Libreville à Samba. Paris 1899.

— Les races du Gabon. Bull. Sté Anthr. de Paris. T. XVI. 1895.

R. P. Bichet, Mission Catholi. 1884.

Bosia, Nègres du Gabon. Bull. Sté Anthr. de Paris. T. IV. 1863.

Bourdarie, Le Congo français. Paris 1901.

— A la côte du Congo français. 1897.

Braouezec, Bulletin Sté de Géo. Paris 1891.

de Brazza, Tour du Monde. 1887. 1890. 1895.

— Bulletin Sté de Géo. XVIII. Paris 1879.

Brunel, Les populations de la Moyenne-Sangha. Revue d'ethnologie et de sociologie 1910.

R. P. Bulédon, Ann. Prop. Fol. 1888.

Bulletin de la Société des Missions Evangéliques protestantes 1903, 1904, 1905.

du Chaillu, L'Afrique équatoriale. Paris 1863.

Chevalier (A.), L'Afrique centrale française. Paris 1904. Challamel.

Compiègne, L'Afrique équatoriale. Paris 1875.

Coffin, La Mission Coffin au Sud-Cameroun. Paris 1919.

— Pahouins et Fyguées. La Géogie, Juillet 1908.

Cupy, Bulletin Sté de Géo. Paris 1898.

Decazes, Bulletin Sté Normande. Rouen 1884.

Dutreuil de Rhins, Le Congo français. Paris 1886.

Duval, Les Nègres du Gabon. Bull. Sté Anthr. de Paris. 1863.

Dybowski, La Route du Tchad. Paris 1906.

[p. 76]

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

FLEURIOT DE LANGLE, Le Tour du Monde. Paris 1877. Croisière sur les côtes de l'Atlantique.
FOREST, Le Pavaan-Vas. Bulletin Sté de Géo. Paris 1898.
FOURNEAU, Bulletin Sté de Géo. De l'Ogowé au Congo. XVI. Paris 1891.
FRAIN, Le Côte ouest du Gabon. Paris 1908.
FROMENT, Bulletin Sté de Géo. X. Lille 1889.

GACON, Exercices de lecture français-fang.
GUILLEMIN, Le Congo français. Paris 1889.
GUILLEMOT, Notice sur le Congo français. Paris 1901.
GUIRAL, Le Congo français. Paris 1889.

HALLEZ D'ARGON, Colonisation du Congo français. Paris 1898. CHALLAMEL.
HAUG, Le Bas Ogowé. Ann. de Géogr. 1899.
HERBIN, Bulletin Sté de Géo. Paris 1888—89.
— Notes sur les populations du Gabon. La Géogie 1874.

JACOBS, Bulletin Sté de Géo. Rochefort 1883—84.
JEANNEST, Quatre années au Congo. 1882.

R. P. LEJEUNE, Mém. Cathol. 1886.
— Au Congo, la Femme et la Famille. DESCLÉE. Lille 1906.
— Dictionnaire Français-Fang. Paris 1892.
LALOU, Anthropologie 8. 13. Paris 1910. CHALLAMEL.
MARCHE, Journal L'Explorateur. 1878.
R. P. MARTRON, Les Eki des Fâ. Anthropos I (1906).
MOUNIN, Voyage de Crampel. Bulletin Sté de Géo. Paris 1890.

R. P. NIEL, Lettres sur Lambaréné. Annales de la Prop. de la Foi. 1883.

PAYNON-DUMOLOT, Bull. Sté de Géo de Nancy. Trente mois au Gabon, souvenirs. 1886.

A. PETTIARD, Notes sur quelques crânes fâ. Bulletin de la Société de Géographie de Neuchâtel 1908. (Supplément.) — Nouvelles Notes, même Bulletin 1910.

PONEL, Le Haut Sangha. Bulletin Sté de Géo. Paris 1899 et 1900.

DU QUELAS, Voyage dans l'Ogowé. Rev. Marit. et Col. 1874.

RECLUS, Géogr. Universelle. — L'Afrique.
REICHHARDT, Revue Coloniale. 1906.
H. RILLOT, J. de Brazza au Congo. Gazette Géogr. 1877.
RICARD, Notes sur le Gabon. Rev. Col. 1855.
ROCHE, Au pays des Pahouins. Paris 1904.
ROCHET, L'Expansion coloniale au Congo français. 1903.
Mgr. LE ROY, La Religion des Primitifs. Paris 1909, p. 77, 113, 143, 198, 314 et passim.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

R. P. Trilles, Dans les Rivières de la Mondah. Mim. Catholi. 1894 — Desclée 1910.
— Au pays Fâ. Société de Géogr. de Lille 1901.
— Carte du Pays Fâ, déposée au Ministère des Colonies.
— Coutes et Légendes Fâ. Bulletin de la Société de Géographie de Neuchâtel 1898.
— Exercices de lecture et dictées fang-français. Libreville 1902.
— Les Fâ, où ils vont, d'où ils viennent. Mim. Catholi. 1898.
— Les Fâ. Société de Géogr. de Bordeaux 1901.
— Mille Lieues dans l'inconnu — Au pays des Fâ. Mim. Catholi. 1901.
— Quinze années au pays Fâ. Desclée 1912.
Tryon, Bulletin Sté de Géo. Rochefort 1885—86.
Voulloz (Dr.), Le Congo français. Paris 1897.

Plus un certain nombre d'articles dans:
La Dépêche Coloniale — Revue indigène — Bulletin du Comité de l'Afrique — Le Tour du Monde — Annales maritimes et coloniales — Questions diplomatiques — Annales apostoliques des Pères du St Esprit.

B. Auteurs Allemands.

Dr. Güssfeldt, Zeitschr. der Ges. für Erdkunde zu Berlin X. 1875.
Hartmann, Zeitschr. der Ges. für Erdkunde zu Berlin. 1902. (Les arts indigènes chez les Fangs.)
Dr. Lenz, Geogr. Mitter I. 1877, p. 74.
— Der Ogo-wai, Petern. Mitt. 1882.
— Zeitschr. d. Ges. für Erdkunde zu Berlin. 1876.

C. Auteurs Anglais.

Bennett, Journ. Anthr. Inst. London 1896.
Burton, A day among the Pans. Anthr. Review. I.
Miss Mary Kingsley, Travels in West Africa. Scott. Geogr. Mag. London 1896.
Marlow, Dictionn. Fang-français. New-York 1872.
Nassau, Journ. Afric. Sociét. 1903—04.
R. B. N. Walker, Proceed. of the Roy. G. Soc XVII. 1871.

D. Auteurs Espagnols.

Bulletin de la Sté Royale de Madrid. 1904. Le Mozy espagnol.

PRÉFACE.

Ces quelques lignes, qui me sont demandées pour figurer en tête de la présente Etude, n'ont pas pour but de la signaler à l'attention bienveillante du public, d'en montrer l'intérêt, d'en faire l'éloge: les travaux de ce genre ne peuvent se recommander que d'eux-mêmes à ceux, de plus en plus nombreux, qui s'attachent à la recherche des organisations sociales ou religieuses des «populations de culture inférieure».

Tout le mérite de ces essais, consacrés à l'un ou à l'autre des nombreux problèmes de l'éthnologie, consiste à fournir de surs éléments d'information, basés sur des matériaux de première main, à d'autres travaux d'ensemble. Leur valeur dépend de leur importance, de leur exactitude, de leur étendue, de leur sincérité —, toutes qualités, d'ailleurs, qui supposent la compétence et la probité de l'auteur.

* * *

Mais, précisément, les missionaires, parce qu'ils sont missionnaires, peuvent-ils, en ces matières, présenter toutes les garanties qu'on est en droit d'exiger d'un informateur? Envoyés pour convertir à leur propre foi les peuples sauvages, ne seront-ils pas portés soit à trouver abominable tout ce qui est «payen», soit à l'interpréter au mieux de leurs intérêts, à le tourner à leur profit, à y rechercher des données apologétiques, et, dans l'un comme dans l'autre cas, à déformer ce qu'ils touchent?

Ceux qui ont ces préventions inquiètes supposent évidemment au préalable qu'un missionnaire est nécessairement un fanatique aveuglé par sa foi, peut-être un malhonnête homme, à tout le moins un imbécile ou un impuissant, prisonnier dans son dogme . . .

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Que, de fait, parmi ceux qui traitent les questions religieuses, il y ait des hommes à qui ces épithètes conviennent assez bien, c'est possible! Mais est-il absolument nécessaire que ces hommes soient missionnaires? Il semblerait suffisant, en effet, que, docteurs infaillibles et parlant au nom de la Science, ils aient un système à soutenir, système dont ils sont les auteurs ou les interprètes, et qu'il leur faut défendre, propager, populariser, imposer, en vue d'un but déterminé qui les attire et — qu'on me pardonne! — les fanatise!

Le missionnaire digne de ce nom n'est pas de ceux-là. D'abord, il connaît l'indigène dont il parle, il s'entretient avec lui dans sa langue, il en est l'ami et le confident, souvent le protecteur, quelquefois le protégé, presque toujours l'allié. Il s'intéresse à la tribu, au milieu de laquelle il doit vivre et qui, parfois, l'a adopté comme l'un des siens. Sans doute, il veut son bien matériel et moral, il travaille à son amélioration, laquelle ne va pas sans quelque changement, il cherche même sa conversion. Mais il sait que ces résultats ne seront obtenus qu'à certaines conditions: la connaissance et le respect des traditions locales, la confiance, la libre discussion, la persuasion, et surtout qu'il y faudra cet élément essentiel qui lui est étranger et qui s'appelle la Grâce de Dieu . . .

Sa curiosité ne peut être que bienveillante; son témoignage sera sincère.

Le missionnaire, néanmoins, comme tout homme, porte avec lui son caractère, son tempérament, ses défauts, ses imperfections diverses. Il n'est pas toujours au courant — et il peut difficilement l'être — des études qu'il aborde dans ce domaine nouveau, il est peut-être mal doué pour l'observation patiente et attentive, il ne contrôlera pas toujours assez ses premières impressions, il jugera, interprétera, expliquera, généralisera trop tôt et trop vite . . . Et en cela, encore une fois, il sera semblable à quelques autres, qui ne sont ni missionnaires ni chrétiens — au contraire! — mais qui ont la même préoccupation de gagner à leurs conceptions, c'est-à-dire à leur foi, ceux qui les écoutent et ceux qui les lisent.

Sous ce rapport, la situation est donc pareille. Mais il reste à l'avantage des missionnaires que, du moins, ils connaissent par une pratique personnelle et généralement assez longue les populations dont ils relatent ou interprètent les croyances.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Qu'est-ce à dire sinon que, en ces matières, il convient de se contenter avant tout d'exposer loyalement ce qu'on a vu et entendu, et que cela seul compte véritablement? Quant au reste, si les explications, interprétations et comparaisons ne peuvent être défendues à personne, elles n'ont plus la valeur du fait observé. Chacun en prendra ce qu'il en voudra prendre, en se rangeant aux conclusions qui lui sont suggérées ou en gardant les siennes propres.

C'est dans ces dispositions qu'on lira les pages qui suivent.

Le sujet qu'elles traitent, intéressant en lui-même, gagne ici être observé dans tous ses détails et en une tribu déterminée. De cette étude on sera reconnaissant au P. H. Trilles, et il est à souhaiter qu'il ait de nombreux imitateurs —, dussent-ils être missionnaires! Sous nos yeux, les masses jadis profondes des populations «sauvages» sont pénétrées de toutes parts par une invasion qui les découverte. Pressé par un besoin d'expansion qui ne fut peut-être jamais égalé et en tous cas jamais mieux servi, l'homme blanc a fait de la terre entière sa propre colonie, il a rapproché les distances, il a soumis les peuples de couleur à sa puissance ou il les enveloppe de sa civilisation: il est grand temps de recueillir ce qui reste d'original en chaque pays et en chaque groupement, noir, rouge ou jaune. Le P. Trilles a voulu le faire pour le Gabon, les Fân et le Totémisme: qu'il en soit félicité et remercié.

A. Le Roy,
Ev. d'Alinda, Sup. Gén. C. S. Sp.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

QUELQUES MOTS D'INTRODUCTION.

§ 1. Nécessité de cette Etude.

§ 2. Evolution des idées. — Pourquoi beaucoup d'auteurs n'ont pas connu le totémisme fâ. — Rapports entre certaines croyances fâ et égyptiennes. — Un moyen de pénétrer dans l'intimité noire: le mâbara. — Ce que le Noir pense du Blanc à propos de ses croyances.

§ 3. Premières recherches sur le Totémisme. — Mgr. Le Roy et la Religion des Primitifs.

---

§ 1. Nécessité de cette Etude.

En 1923, voilà tantôt vingt ans, nous arrivions jeune missionnaire chez les Fâ; dès qu'il nous fut donné d'assister à leurs cérémonies cultuelles et surtout d'en pénétrer le sens, un phénomène attira notre attention. A côté du culte officiel, du fétichisme proprement dit, et de ses innombrables manifestations, s'en dressait un autre, tout aussi important, mais dont on parlait beaucoup moins, peut-être tant il semblait naturel. Ancré au plus profond des institutions rituelles, il semblait faire corps avec elles, tout en conservant son individualité distincte.

C'était le culte de l'animal protecteur, identifié souvent avec le génie de la tribu, animal protecteur du clan, mais aussi de la famille, de l'individu.

En vain, j'interrogeai les missionnaires, mes aînés. Plus absorbés par les préoccupations d'un apostolat difficile, venus aussi, il faut l'avouer, à une époque où ces sortes de recherches étaient absolument laissées de côté, et même plus que cela, considérées comme inutiles, nul ne s'en était occupé et nul ne sut me répondre.

[p. 1]

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

§ 2. Evolution des idées.

Mais depuis cette époque, peu à peu les choses ont changé de face, et grâce à de puissantes impulsions, desquelles il n'est peut-être pas inutile de faire remarquer que Mgr. Le Roy fut un des principaux promoteurs, et l'«Anthropos» un savant et vaillant initiateur, on a compris que le missionnaire devait, lui aussi, s'initier à ces études, et ne pas en laisser le monopole aux divers explorateurs, pour s'occuper exclusivement de prosélytisme.

Catéchiser et moraliser le sauvage, c'était bien, mais le catéchiser et le moraliser au nom d'une morale supérieure en la lui imposant tout d'un bloc, sans se plier aux contingences nécessaires du lieu, du climat, des hommes et surtout de l'atavisme, c'était peut-être moins bien; c'était surtout marcher à un insuccès relatif, s'exposer à des difficultés sans cesse renaissantes et qui expliquent bien des défaites. Loin de nous encore, répétons-le, l'idée d'attaquer qui que ce soit! Mais nous sommes heureusement sortis, ou à peu près, du temps où l'on traitait de «singerie» et de «sottises» toute manifestation rituelle du culte noir!

Si les missionnaires, connaissant la langue et les coutumes du pays, n'étaient pas arrivés à saisir l'importance du totémisme, il ne faut pas s'étonner que d'autres, voyageurs et fonctionnaires, n'y soient pas parvenus non plus. Ainsi, on fait légitimement cette constatation générale: les auteurs qui jusqu'ici se sont occupés des Fân, tantôt ont laissé cette question complètement sous silence [1], tantôt l'ont à peine effleurée [2], tantôt l'ont simplement considérée

---

[1] Guiral, Le Congo français. 1889. Observateur consciencieux mais peu instruit. A cette époque, on ne soupçonnait guère le totémisme.

Jules Roche, Au pays des Pahouins. 1902.

Dr. Voulgre, Le Congo français. 1897.

Alexis (M. G.), Le Congo français. 1900.

A. Guillemot, Le Congo français. 1900.

A. Rouget, L'expansion coloniale au Congo français. 1902.

[2] Nassau, Fetichism in West Africa. London 1904.

Du Chaillu, Voyages. 1880.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

au point de vue des tatouages[1] ou des défenses rituelles[2], mais sans les rattacher au totémisme. Nous ne connaissons guère que trois auteurs qui en aient parlé[3], et encore très-brièvement.

Pour notre part, nous avons d'abord vécu, comme je l'ai dit déjà, plusieurs années au milieu des Fâh sans pouvoir constater de visu les cérémonies rituelles; plus tard, ce n'est que par hasard, à force d'instances, et dans des villages où le missionnaire catholique n'était pas connu en tant que tel, où il était plutôt considéré comme «revenant» ou khun et, par conséquent, appartenant jadis à la tribu, que nous avons pu d'abord être admis aux premières initiations, les plus difficiles en somme: ce premier point gagné, on pouvait avancer. Comme «revenant» mais appartenant à la tribu, disons-nous. En effet, partout où le Blanc n'a pas encore paru, où il n'est connu que de réputation, lorsqu'il arrive dans un village où sa couleur est extraordinaire, maintes fois ce fut notre cas, on le prend immédiatement pour un revenant, khun: c'est l'âme d'un mort, c'est un esprit réincarné. Mgr. Le Roy, dans son livre des «Primitifs», a employé, par analogie avec les croyances égyptiennes, le mot «double» pour désigner cet esprit. Ici, l'expression ne serait peut-être pas tout à fait juste. Il ne s'agit pas du «double» ou nsisim, l'âme ou l'ombre du défunt, mais bien de l'esprit lui-même, ou, si l'on préfère, des mânes du défunt réincarné[4].

---

[1] Fleurigny de Langle, Croisières à la côte d'Afrique. Tour du Monde. 1872.
Compiègne et Marche, Au pays des Pahouins. 1876.
Du Braila, passim. Tour du Monde. — Bull. Soc de Géo. Paris.

[2] Martrou, Les Eki. Anthropos I (1906), p. 745.
Trilles, Contes et Légendes. Revue de la Soc. de Géogr. de Neufchâtel. 1906.

[3] Mary Kingsley, West African studies. London 1901.
Hartmann, Les présages fatidiques chez les Pahouins. Zeitschrift für Ethnologie. Berlin 1902.
A. Bennett, Anthropological Notes on the Fâh. Journ. of the Anthropological Institute II 1899, pp. 90—95.

[4] Dans son livre de «La Religion de l'Ancienne Egypte», Mr. Virey dit que Mgr. Le Roy signale au sujet de l'âme considérée dans ses diverses manifestations, une curieuse analogie entre les croyances égyptiennes et les croyances bantoues. Pour nous, nous croyons, et nous le montrerons plus au

Le Blanc, pour le Noir ignorant, est donc un khus; c'est un esprit, revenant et réincarné dans un corps humain; ce corps est blanchi parce que, après le trépas, il lui a fallu traverser le fleuve des morts et la grande mer, et que dans l'eau, tout Noir a pu le long en expliquant la Religion des Fâ, qu'il y a plus que de curieuses analogies, il y a dérivation et en même temps dégradation des dogmes primitifs.

---

Ainsi, pour n'en citer qu'un point, les Egyptiens ont

1° L'âme proprement dite, le ba, représenté en hiéroglyphe par un oiseau avec un signe devant la poitrine: de même les Fâ reconnaîtront dans l'âme l'ebo ou principe créateur, d'où le mot ebo planter, engendrer, ebo, père (en mâbâ), ebo faire etc.

2° Le «double» ou genius, ka, qui est créé en même temps que le corps matériel, qui est associé à ce corps et en fait la personnalité, invisible aux yeux des mortels. Ce double, croyons-nous, est pour le Fâ la lumière (ngil) qui réside dans la prunelle de l'œil (ngil dzio), lumière qui constitue proprement la personnalité de l'âme, qui ne s'éteint pas à la mort, mais qui disparaît pour aller se mêler à la lumière des astres en gardant son individualité distincte.

3° L'esprit, figuré par un oiseau avec un signe derrière la tête, khu, qui représente ce que nous appelons les mânes, correspond selon DE HORRACH aux esprits auxquels s'adressent les évocations du spiritisme, et joue souvent le rôle de revenant ou d'esprit pourvoyeur. De même, le Fâ a le khus, qui joue exactement le même rôle, mânes, esprit évoqué dans les conjurations, revenant ou esprit pourvoyeur.

4° Le cœur, haty, qui représente l'âme comme personnalité morale et conscience. Le Fâ admettra également que c'est dans le cœur (nlim), que réside le principe du bien et du mal, nlim mol, nlim abi, cœur bon et cœur mauvais, et c'est tout d'abord dans le cœur que l'on recherchera, au cours des autopsies, si le défunt était bon ou mauvais, s'il mangeait les autres ou non.

5° Le nom, ren, qui conserve et fait vivre la mémoire du défunt, de même qu'en Fâ, le nom, edzû, est impérissable et se transmet de préférence de petit-fils en petit-fils.

6° L'ombre ou khaibit, à laquelle répond naisim du Fâ, mot qui désigne à la fois l'ombre et l'âme invisible.

7° Puis, pour terminer, sekhem, les puissances, qui égaleront ki la force, chez le Fâ.

D'où nous aurons le curieux tableau suivant:

Ame Egyptienne.	Ame Fâ.
Ba Principe vital du corps.	Eba Principe créateur (ba, le cerveau).
Ka Double ou génius.	Ngil Le double.
Khu Les mânes, le revenant.	Khus Les mânes, le revenant.
Haty Le cœur conscience.	Nlim Le cœur conscience.
Ren Le nom qui perpétue le défunt.	Edzû Nom perpétuant le mort.
Khaibit L'ombre.	Naisim L'ombre.
Sekhem Les puissances formatrices.	Ki et Nlim La force et le signe.

constater, au bout de peu de jours, le cadavre perd sa pigmentation noire et devient d'un blanc livide.

Donc, pas de doute, nous appartenions à sa race. Mais aussi nous pouvions être d'une race ou plutôt d'une tribu ennemie. Comment s'en assurer avec un homme qui ne portait aucun tatouage distinctif? Il n'y avait qu'un moyen, le mébara, c'est-à-dire la «récitation de la liste des Ancêtres» [1].

Lorsque deux indigènes se rencontrent, et veulent savoir s'ils sont, étant d'une même tribu ou d'une tribu alliée, parents proches ou éloignés, ils récitent leur mébara, c'est-à-dire la liste de leurs ancêtres: Je suis fils d'un tel, qui l'était d'un tel etc. Remontant jusqu'à vingt générations et plus, ils en concluent immédiatement à leur parenté existant ou non.

Lors donc que j'arrivais dans un village inconnu, après les salutations d'usage, je m'empressais de demander au chef son mébara, car un esprit réincarné avait évidemment le droit d'interroger le premier un simple mortel. Comme j'avais déjà en ma possession un grand nombre de généalogies, dès que j'avais entendu ses premières générations, surtout connaissant sa tribu, je retombais bien vite dans son propre cycle. Quand, à mon tour, je devais réciter mon mébara, il se trouvait invariablement qu'à son grand étonnement, et par une innocente supercherie, non seulement nous nous retrouvions les mêmes ancêtres, mais encore j'étais toujours d'une famille plus proche apparentée que lui même à la souche primitive! Même lorsque j'arrivais à cette souche primitive, je remontais encore bien plus haut que mon interlocuteur dans la liste des ancêtres, grâce aux généalogies patriarcales de la Bible; et ainsi, tout doucement, m'appuyant à la fois sur ma mémoire et mes notes, nous arrivions à Adam, fils de Dieu, où il était bien nécessaire de s'arrêter!

Convaincu, grâce au mébara, le chef reconnaissait en moi un allié, un parent, et nous en profitions pour devenir amis. Entre parents, on se doit assistance. Il y avait bien un peu le revers de la médaille. Un ami revenu de si loin, et apportant avec lui tant de choses merveilleuses, devait évidemment un beau cadeau à ses frères demeurés pauvres ... Cela m'a rendu néanmoins de grands services, fait pénétrer dans l'âme du peuple, et surtout évité bien des coups de fusil! Si la crainte est le commencement de la sagesse, comme le dit l'Ecriture, ce fut souvent, à mon égard, le sentiment de mes noirs amis.

[1] v. Anthropos IV, p. 946 et suiv.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Sans ce moyen d'ailleurs, il m'eût été fort difficile d'approfondir et même de connaître les «mystères» de la théologie noire: et, je puis parler d'expérience pour affirmer qu'un voyageur qui passe ou qu'un «administrateur» blanc — c'est le terme reçu pour désigner ceux qui sont chargés de gouverner le pays — ne saura jamais que très peu de chose, et ce que les indigènes voudront bien lui montrer. Un de ceux qui ont le plus essayé de pénétrer l'âme noire, l'administrateur LANGEAT, disait un jour qu'il était beaucoup plus facile à un Européen de pénétrer dans l'âme arabe, pourtant si fermée, que de deviner l'âme noire.

Les indigènes, et surtout les chefs et sorciers, savent parfaitement que nous ne venons, en général, que pour détruire ou modifier tout au moins leur culte. Comme leur influence en dépend en grande partie, on conçoit facilement qu'ils ne se montrent pas très-enthousiastes pour nous admettre. De plus, par leur dédain ou leurs railleries, injustifiées parfois, les Blancs les ont souvent profondément blessés. Aussi ne pouvons-nous qu'applaudir à ces sages paroles de Mr. JEAN CAPART [1], dans son Introduction au Totémisme:

«Un des meilleurs connaisseurs de la mentalité du sauvage, un de ceux qui pénétrèrent le plus profondément dans cette psychologie intéressante, disait en parlant de l'Africain des côtes de Guinée: «Plus vous le connaissez, plus vous étudiez son droit et ses institutions, plus vous êtes contraint de reconnaître que le caractère principal de son intelligence, c'est d'être logique, mais étroite. Ce n'est pas un rêveur, il ignore le doute: pour lui, tout est réel, très réel, horriblement réel» [2].

«Cela est essentiellement vrai pour toute l'humanité sauvage [et certes nous avons pu le constater maintes fois chez nos Fáń], et lorsqu'on étudie les phénomènes de cette vie primitive, on est surpris et charmé tout à la fois de trouver une suite logique d'idées,

[1] JEAN CAPART, Le Totémisme. Bruxelles 1905.
[2] Miss KINGSLEY, West African studies, p. 62.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

un raisonnement serré, là où on ne semblait voir au début que les rêveries d'une imagination en délire. On se prend alors à croire que l'homme primitif est arrivé à donner à tous les problèmes qui se sont posés devant lui, des solutions si simples, si rigoureuses, que si sa pensée devait aujourd'hui faire à nouveau le même chemin, elle ne pourrait manquer d'arriver à un résultat identique.

«Ce qui s'impose à nous, lorsque nous abordons un problème relatif aux primitifs, c'est d'abord, et avant tout, de rejeter toutes les explications plus ou moins rationnelles qui ont été proposées, et nos façons de penser spéciales, pour en déduire des interprétations des rites et coutumes primitives.

«Ce qu'il faut, c'est, au contraire, travailler à faire «table rase» de nos idées modernes pour descendre de l'état primitif — s'il est possible de l'entrevoir — jusqu'au point spécial qui nous occupe.

«Mais pour cela, croyons-nous, il est à peu près indispensable d'avoir vécu longtemps parmi les Noirs, et non seulement d'avoir vécu, mais d'avoir pénétré dans leur mentalité particulière. Là, rien ne vaut ni ne remplace l'expérience personnelle.

«Il faut, de plus, ne pas perdre de vue cette «logique de sauvage» à laquelle je viens de faire allusion et rejeter toute explication qui n'y est pas conforme. Si le sauvage nous paraît en un point ridicule, insensé ou fou, c'est, le plus souvent, que nous avons passé à côté de la solution vraie sans nous y arrêter.

«Ou bien encore, nous nous sommes fiés, trop à la légère, aux explications obtenues par des voyageurs peu avertis[1]. Le sauvage ne donne pas toujours la véritable raison de ses croyances et coutumes, même quand il la connaît exactement[2], pas plus d'ailleurs que les anciens ne dévoilaient leurs mystères. Nous commençons

[1] [Nous avons souvent constaté que c'était surtout par crainte des railleries du Blanc, ou encore parce qu'il le croit aussi bien et mieux informé que lui-même.]

[2] [Signalons à ce point de vue particulier Largeau, Dictionnaire Français Pahouin. Cet ouvrage a été composé par l'auteur, administrateur colonial, au bout d'un an de séjour dans une colonie dont il ne parlait pas la langue, avec l'aide d'un seul interprète; il est rempli de nombreuses erreurs, mais dénote cependant chez son auteur un travail considérable et un désir vrai de se mettre en rapport avec ses administrés, deux choses trop rares aux Colonies pour ne pas être louées.]

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

seulement à entrevoir ce qui se cachait de profond et de réel sous les mythes qui passèrent trop longtemps pour la religion des anciens.

«Une autre conséquence importante de cette même logique, c'est que les croyances et les coutumes religieuses ou sociales des sauvages forment un corps de doctrine compact et important où tous les membres sont étroitement unis. Nul point ne peut être compris sans qu'on ait préalablement éclairci ce qui précède, et ce qui suit: c'est fort loin, bien souvent, qu'il faut remonter pour découvrir la source logique d'où découle un phénomène qui fixe l'attention en un moment donné.»

§ 3. Premières recherches.

Seul d'abord, puis avec quelques amis, nous continuâmes donc nos recherches, et c'est ainsi que peu à peu la religion des Fáñ ira se faisant connaître de plus en plus. Notre ancien collaborateur, le R. P. Martrou, aujourd'hui distingué supérieur de la Mission de l'Okano, y a contribué déjà largement pour sa part avec deux études remarquables: «Les Eki des Fáñ»[1] et «L'âme fáñ après la mort»[2].

A mesure que se précisaient nos recherches, localisées sur ce point particulier dont nous avons parlé plus haut, l'objet cependant, loin de s'éclairer, en paraissait de plus en plus obscur. Ce n'était plus simplement un animal qui devenait ou était le protecteur de la tribu, du clan, de la famille ou de l'individu, ce pouvait être une plante, un esprit, même parfois un phénomène purement extérieur, le vent, la tornade, la tempête, l'éclair. La transfusion du sang, toujours obligatoire, pensions-nous d'abord, devenait un mythe.

A cela, se joignait toute une autre classe de phénomènes: l'animal non plus protecteur, mais protégé par une alliance mystique, obéissant à son maître, lui rendant des services qui semblaient de prime abord répugner à sa nature, animal doué pour ainsi dire d'une seconde personnalité, dédoublé par l'échange et l'infusion du sang.

Ce n'était pas tout encore: à ces deux premières classes, s'en joignait une troisième, dont les sombres mystères, beaucoup plus

[1] Anthropos I (1906), p. 745. [2] A publier dans Anthropos VI (1911).

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

cachés, étaient et demeurent encore aujourd'hui des plus difficiles à pénétrer. Chaque société secrète, et non seulement chaque société secrète, mais chaque grade dans chaque société secrète, avait son animal protecteur, avec sa consécration, ses rites, son culte et ses défenses particulières.

De sorte que parfois un individu, un chef surtout, nous avouait dans un rare épanchement, que tel animal était son protecteur; il devait l'honorer, lui rendre un culte, ne jamais s'en nourrir ni le tuer, même dans un extrême besoin; il observait fidèlement cette loi, puis, à un moment donné, ne s'en préoccupait plus d'aucune sorte, s'en nourrissait à son gré. Et à nos interrogations sur cette dérogation à la loi:

«Ah! disait-il parfois, c'est que j'ai changé. Mé mana vétéza!»

«Ah! répondait-il en d'autres circonstances, ce n'est plus la même chose, é sèn zum mbori!»

Et peu à peu nous découvrîmes en effet que tout d'abord, en changeant de grade dans une société secrète, on changeait d'animal protecteur, et que parfois dans certaines circonstances données, dont nous aurons d'ailleurs à parler plus loin, il était permis et même ordonné de «consommer» l'animal protecteur, de participer à la communion de la victime.

Et ainsi, un fait éclairant l'autre, un détail venant préciser un autre détail, les observations s'accumulaient et dégageaient peu à peu un système fort compliqué au premier abord.

Depuis longtemps, nous reconnaissions dans ces faits tout un ensemble de phénomènes totémiques, lorsque en 1897, l'ouvrage de J. G. Frazer, «le Totémisme», puis un peu plus tard, les Etudes de Andrew Lang et de Salomon Reinach, puis de Durkheim vinrent nous donner une direction plus précise, nous aider à comprendre plus d'un point demeuré obscur, nous ancrer aussi parfois davantage dans nos idées, opposées en certains points à celles de ces auteurs [1].

En 1908, notre modeste Etude était terminée; l'«Anthropos» devait lui ouvrir ses portes, lorsque parut le savant ouvrage de Mgr. Le Roy: «La Religion des Primitifs». Il abordait également, mais avec la maîtrise qui lui est propre, ce même sujet du totémisme, et y consacrait de longues pages au point de vue général de la religion des peuples bantous. Dès lors, en bien des points, notre Etude n'eût été qu'une réédition inutile, une superfétation oiseuse. Aussi, sans hésiter, avons-nous dû nous remettre à l'œuvre pour élaguer mainte page d'un intérêt plus général, et nous restreindre plus spécialement à ce qui constituait le fond même de notre Etude. En plusieurs points, nous nous trouverons peut-être en contradiction avec l'éminent auteur. Nous avouerons franchement que planant de plus haut, il a dû voir plus vrai. Nous avons persisté cependant, non par une vaine outrecuidance ou attachement à nos idées, mais pour permettre des recherches ultérieures qui dégageront mieux la vérité. D'ailleurs, ce qui est vrai de l'ensemble des tribus, peut l'être beaucoup moins et même être faux, lorsqu'il s'agit d'une tribu particulière. Tel fait précis peut renverser une série d'hypothèses! D'un point controversé, jaillit souvent une série de phénomènes qui l'éclairent d'une lumière toute nouvelle. En maintenant des assertions qui pourront parfois sembler, à quelques-uns, téméraires ou hasardées, c'est à la fois notre but, notre espoir et par là même notre excuse.

[1] Citons en particulier à ce point de vue: «Tabou et Totémisme à Madagascar», par A. van Gennep. Paris 1904.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

[p.11]

LE TOTEMISME CHEZ LES FÂṄ.

CHAPITRE I.

LA TRIBU FÂṄ.

§ 1. Division de la Nation fàṅ. — «Fàṅ» et «Paboulu» sont deux mots non pas seulement synonymes, mais identiques. — Les quatre groupes fàṅ. — La tribu, le clan et la famille, cellule primordiale.

§ 2. Les tribus alliées aux Fàṅ. — Ressemblances et différences avec les tribus apparentées et soi-disant apparentées.

§ 3. Le nombre des Fàṅ. — Erreurs de la statistique officielle.

§ 1. Division de la Nation fàṅ.

Avant de commencer cette Etude, nous devons tout d'abord dire un mot de la Nation fàṅ et de sa division en groupes, tribus et clans[1].

Les Fàṅ ou Paboulus ou encore Mpawins[2], car ces trois mots

[1] Voir au titre de cet ouvrage, l'énumération des divers ouvrages que nous avons pu consulter.

[2] Notons en passant, que le mot «Fàṅ» est le mot vraiment indigène pour désigner cette tribu. Il bizarre que cela puisse paraître au premier abord, et malgré le changement profond, «Paboulu» est l'altération du même mot! Les premières tribus de la côte, en rapport avec nous, appelaient les Fàṅ «Mpàṅ» ou mu-pàṅ, homme pàṅ, par abrév. mpàṅ, par un procédé commun à ces langues africaines. Ainsi mpiro, la poudre, en Mpongwé, devient efiro en Fàṅ; mpilata, le plateau, filato; epili, une sandale, du mot espagnol «plata», mfil, par plata, epilata, ipila, ipila, efil, mfilir, mfil etc. De «Mpàṅ», mot que les tribus du rameau Nord prononçaient seules de cette façon, les tribus du Nord, Kombé, Bracko et autres, appartenant au rameau Mpongwé, avaient fait «Mpongwé», toutes les langues du groupe gabonais ou mpongwé n'admettant désignent un même peuple, constituent la tribu la plus importante du Congo français et du Kamerun allemand.

7: Trilles FM9 Fang

Les Fôn proprement dits se partagent, non comme mœurs ou habitudes, car elles sont absolument les mêmes, mais au point de vue des dialectes, en quatre familles distinctes: Bétsi, Mékè, Fôn et Balé. Ces quatre familles ne parlent pas un dialecte tellement différent qu'elles ne puissent se comprendre, sinon à toute première vue, du moins après quelques jours de cohabitation.

Nous dirons volontiers qu'entre Bétsi et Mékè la différence dialectale est à peu près celle que l'on trouve entre divers dialectes ou patois du midi, par exemple entre Limousin et Provençal, tandisqu'au contraire la différence entre Mékè et Fôn est au moins celle qui, en France, existe entre langue d'oc et langue d'oïl, ou en allemand, entre haut et bas allemand.

A propos de ces deux branches Bétsi et Mékè, une tendance particulière à écrire «Bédzi» semble prévaloir chez certains écrivains, appartenant au monde officiel ou administratif, qui se sont occupés d'eux. Ainsi MM. Lamnaz, Avelot, Rocus etc. Nous ferons simplement remarquer que pas un de ces Messieurs ne parle la langue fôn, du moins de façon à pouvoir suivre une conversation sortant tant soit peu des nécessités de la vie courante. Nous n'avons d'ailleurs jamais rencontré un seul fonctionnaire capable de suivre et de résumer une palabre. Pour eux, «Bédzi» signifierait «Les mangeurs». Tous les missionnaires, au contraire, sont d'accord pour écrire «Bétsi», c'est-à-dire «les Hommes des plantations», dont je donnerai ailleurs l'étymologie. Et l'on trouve parmi eux des hommes qui ont toute leur vie étudié les langues indigènes. Tels le Docteur Nassau, chef des missions protestantes avec 45 ans de séjour, les PP. Delorme, Lecerf, Bessieux, Le Berre, avec 40 ans et plus etc. etc.

La nation fôn se compose donc, à l'époque actuelle, de quatre groupes différents, partagés eux-mêmes en tribus, lesquelles le sont à leur tour, en clans.

---

pas qu'un mot se termine par une consonne, mais toujours par une voyelle. Et «Mpangwé» devenu «Mpangwen» chez les Français, puis bientôt «Mpangwin», s'est aujourd'hui changé en «Mpawin», puis «Pawin» et enfin «Pahouin», où il est vraiment difficile de reconnaître la primitive origine.

7: Trilles F919 Fang

Ces groupes parlent tous une langue identique quant au fond, mais séparée en dialectes plus ou moins distincts. Les querelles civiques qui ont provoqué les premières scissions, comme en font foi les «Légendes des Aïeux», divisent plus ces quatre groupes que leurs différences dialectales.

Réservant à une autre Etude des notions plus complètes sur la tribu, nous ne donnerons ici que le strict nécessaire.

Les Fâ se partagent donc tout d'abord en quatre groupes:

Bétsi,
Mékè, Bulu, Fâ,

dont les deux premiers sont de beaucoup les plus connus, ayant effectué les premières migrations, ou du moins ayant été les premiers en contact avec les Blancs. A eux se rapportent, et encore surtout aux Bétsi, tout ce qui a été écrit sur les Fâ.

On rattache souvent le groupe Bulu, soit aux Fâ, soit aux Yaundé, dont il formerait avec les Mékè le chaînon intermédiaire. Les Fâ, ou hommes de l'intérieur, ainsi que l'indique l'étymologie de leur nom[1], sont demeurés, encore à l'heure actuelle, tout à fait dans l'intérieur, et derrière les Bétsi et les Mékè. Leur dialecte les rapproche des Bétsi, dont il diffère plutôt par l'accentuation plus gutturale. Leurs tribus sont fortement enchevêtrées dans le même territoire, tout en conservant chacune son autonomie propre et sans se mélanger.

Les quatre groupes Fâ se divisent chacun en tribus, ayant chacune son chef, son territoire et son autonomie propre: aucune n'est asservie à une autre, d'autant qu'en cas de guerre, on ne fait jamais d'esclaves, les captifs non rachetés étant aussitôt mangés.

Chaque tribu est d'une importance très variable, suivant le développement qu'elle a acquis, les chefs qu'elle a eus et la grandeur du territoire qu'elle occupe. Ainsi les Yenkwaï ne comptent plus que trois villages assez peu peuplés: ils peuvent tout au plus ranger trois cents guerriers sous les armes; les Yengon, une ancienne tribu cependant, n'ont plus qu'un village et quelques guerriers; les Yenvi, au contraire, habitent plusieurs centaines de villages et comptent des milliers de guerriers. Mais à propos de ce mot «tribu», notons ici un point très important: à l'heure présente, et depuis une migration qui doit remonter, d'après notre étude personnelle, à trente-deux ou trente-trois générations, il ne se forme plus de tribus, mais des clans. Les tribus actuelles, nous verrons tout à l'heure comment les reconnaître des clans, peuvent dater, pour nous, dans leur constitution, de dix siècles à peu près; ce qui ne veut pas dire évidemment qu'elles n'existaient pas auparavant. Leur origine est certainement beaucoup plus ancienne.

[1] Fâ, moelle de bambou, intérieur très-sombre de forêt.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Il est rare que la tribu demeure longuement homogène: de nombreuses causes en amènent la désagrégation, telles, des migrations successives, des disputes familiales, des chefs de famille plus ou moins entreprenants ou désireux de secouer une autorité trop abusive. Le fait de son augmentation progressive amène en même temps la surpopulation des villages et la nécessité d'aller chercher ailleurs de nouveaux territoires de chasse et de culture; de là, au bout d'un temps plus ou moins long, la tribu se fractionne en clans composés d'un nombre indéterminé et très variable de familles. Certains clans sont très nombreux, tels les Esingi, et comptent des centaines de villages, tandis que certains autres, soit trop récents, soit par suite des mêmes causes dissolvantes de la tribu, ne comptent qu'un très petit nombre de familles.

Les clans, à leur tour, par suite des mêmes circonstances qui ont forcé les tribus à se partager en clans, se fractionnent eux-mêmes en sous-clans, également d'importance variable.

D'après ce que nous venons de dire, ressort tout d'abord une constatation qui semble aller à l'encontre des données généralement admises parmi les Européens et observateurs superficiels. Pour ces derniers, en effet, le partage de la nation et sa division en tribus et en clans repose sur une donnée arbitraire et très variable: le nombre des individus.

Pour nous, au contraire, et c'est certainement la conception fân, les différentes notions de nation, tribu, clan, sous-clan, repose uniquement sur une base unique et immuable, la famille, qui constitue le noyau, ou si l'on préfère, la cellule primordiale, ou encore le pivot sur lequel roule toute l'organisation.

Et ainsi nous aurons le tableau suivant de formation:

Famille ou Ndzâń	Famille
Clans et Sous-Clans (Totems) ou Ayum	Clans et Sous-Clans
Tribu ou Ayôń	Tribu
Groupe ou Mfulana mèyôń	Groupe

Nation fâń.

De cette formation, résulte une conséquence importante, mais dont le développement ne trouverait pas sa place ici et doit être remis après la discussion de la notion du totem. Cette conséquence est la suivante: parmi les clans, les uns portent le nom du totem, les autres ne le portent pas. Mais bien qu'un certain nombre d'auteurs, presque tous même, fassent de cette condition: porter le nom du totem, une condition sine qua non de totémisme pour le clan, nous montrerons que cette conception est exagérée et que les clans, portant ou non le nom du totem, sont tous totémiques.

§ 2. Les tribus alliées aux Fâń.

Non seulement ces quatre grandes fractions, Bétsi, Méké, Bulé et Fôń, constituent la nation fâń proprement dit, mais dans leur cercle gravitent encore une certaine quantité d'autres tribus, en nombre plus ou moins grand, qui se rattachent au même rameau. Nous disons: en nombre plus ou moins grand, car jusqu'ici l'intérieur du Kamerun allemand d'une part, et de l'autre, l'Hinterland qui s'étend entre le Wole, le Ntém et la haute Sangha, a été peu exploré. A peine, avant notre passage, connaissait-on l'existence des Dzém. Les Dzandzama n'avaient jamais été cités. Ces tribus forment le chaînon intermédiaire qui relie les Fâń au rameau batéké, et par eux aux Kanioka et autres tribus du Centre Congolais, dont nous signalions dernièrement les analogies de folklore avec le folklore fâñ [1].

Les Yaundé, dont l'Anthropos publiait récemment une grammaire [2], sont sans aucun doute une branche du rameau bétsi. Les Bosyéba, dont le dialecte, un peu plus éloigné, se rapproche davantage de celui des Bubi de Fernando-Po, sont également de la nation fâñ. Enfin, s'écartant de la souche primitive, et dans l'ordre progressif, les Dzèm, Dzimu et Dzandzama, sortant à peine aujourd'hui de la grande forêt et du pays des Nyamnyam; quoiqu'on en ait dit antérieurement, leur langue n'a qu'une parenté éloignée avec cette dernière tribu [3].

Ainsi qu'on le voit d'après la note publiée en bas de cette page, les différences entre le Fâñ et le Nyamnyam sont énormes. A peine trouverait-on cent cinquante mots ayant même radical, fait qui encore ne prouverait rien, car les Fâñ ont certainement

[1] V. Anthropos IV p. 945 à 971, V p. 163 à 180.

[2] V. Anthropos IV p. 684 à 701, 919 à 930.

[3] Comme un certain nombre d'observateurs et explorateurs (tels par exemple qu'ALLEGRET, ancien missionnaire protestant au Gabon qui les rattache aux groupe Nyamnyam, Fulah, Asandeh), s'en rapportant aux uniques caractères ethnographiques apparents, prétendent maintenir cette parenté, donnons simplement cet aperçu des quatre langues Fâñ, Osyeba, Dzèm (inédit) et Nyamnyam (d'après SCHWEINFURTH et COLOMBAROLI):

	Fâñ	Osyeba	Dzèm	Nyamnyam
Homme	Mur	Muri	Murum	Combâ
Femme	Munga	Mura	Muma	Dè
Fille	Ngon	Śyè	Lézi	Dégudè
Vieillard	Ntôl	Ntôli	Tuma	Binzâ
Sœur	Kal	Kali	Kalo	Bécili
Père	Sa	Sôñ	Da	Ba (ôba en Fâñ mêkê)
Nom	Dźâ	Dźina	Ndźè	Limô
Corps	Ñul	Mulé	Ñûlo	Kuô
Peau	Eko	Kundé	Kuro	Kubto
Tête	Nlô	Nlô	Nlô	Li
Front	Mrabal	Bondé	Nbalopum	Vu
Langue	Dèm (plur. Mèm)	Gimi	Gyèm	Mirassè
Village	Dźal	Kware	Kwor	Lingarâ
Porte	Mbi	Mbié	Léboa	Ngwadumo litt. porte de la maison (duma nid en fâñ).

coudoyé les Nyamnyam dans leurs migrations, et ont donc pu et dû leur emprunter un certain nombre de mots.

En somme, la tribu fâñ peut se diviser de la façon suivante:

	I.	II.
Fâñ ou Pahouins	Fâñ proprement dits	Bétsi	Yaundé
			Bétsi
		Méké
		Bulé
		Fôñ
	Bosyéba	Bosyéba
		Mékux
	Bésèx
	Dzèm Dzandzama
	Guma

On peut considérer les tribus Fâñ, Bosyéba, Bésèx, Dzèm, Dzandzama et Guma comme parlant chacune une langue, non un dialecte. Toutefois, ces langues sont très rapprochées, ayant à peu près les mêmes règles et une même langue racine.

Bétsi, Méké etc., constituent simplement des dialectes.

Comme nous l'avons dit un peu plus haut, la tribu fâñ, dans son ensemble, occupe le Congo français, le Kamerun et déborde légèrement sur le Congo belge, au sud.

Les Dzèm, dont nous espérons faire connaître prochainement la langue, encore absolument inédite, sont groupés dans le haut Ntèm; leur nombre ne doit guère dépasser une centaine de mille.

Les Dzandzama les bordent au sud-est, et leur langue fait la transition avec les Batéké, leurs voisins du sud. Leur nombre est sensiblement égal à celui des Dzèm.

Les Bésèx ou Bulu, qui occupent une grande partie de la région située au nord de l'Ogowé, constituent une tribu très disséminée, jadis fort puissante, aujourd'hui à peu près éteinte par le poison, les féticheurs, et l'étreinte des Pahouins. Leur nombre ne doit pas dépasser quelques milliers.

Les Bosyéba, auxquels les cartes du Congo français donnent une importance absolument exagérée, ne sont pas plus nombreux que les Bésèɣ.

Les Bosyéba, dont on a fait peut-être à tort un peuple distinct, ne sont au fond, à notre avis, que des tribus détachées depuis longtemps du rameau méké, dont ils ont conservé les tatouages distinctifs et la langue peu altérée. En 1889, Mr. Fourneau, en arrivant dans le pays des Bosyéba, au nord du Campo, vit ses porteurs, qu'il avait recrutés au pays des Méké sur les bords de l'Ogowé, fraterniser immédiatement avec les Bosyéba et heureux de retrouver leur langue, après avoir traversé tout le pays bétsi [1].

D'après Avelot, le nom de Bosyéba viendrait de ošü é ba «le fleuve les a engendrés», sobriquet qui leur serait appliqué par dérision, les Bosyéba craignant fort la navigation. Nous ne croyons guère à cette étymologie, d'autant qu'elle est incorrecte: on devrait dire ošü o ba.

Les Guma, aujourd'hui en très petit nombre, ont été refoulés vers le Kamerun: ils se rapportent également au rameau méké. Les Européens désignent souvent les individus de tout ce groupe sous le mot «Makina» de ma ki na «je dis que»; ils ont, en effet, l'habitude de commencer tous leurs discours par ces mots. Les Bétsi sont nommés «Mazuna» pour la même raison.

§ 3. Le nombre des Fâñ.

Les Fâñ sont de beaucoup le rameau le plus important. Il est fort difficile d'évaluer leur nombre. Officiellement, ils ne seraient que quelques centaines de mille. Mais le chiffre officiel est loin d'être réel. N'est compté en effet, pour la statistique de l'Etat, que celui qui paie l'impôt. Or, plus de la moitié du Congo français est inexploré, sauf par quelques rares voyageurs. Ainsi, en 1901—1902, nous avons été le premier à explorer tout le Congo Nord qu'avait jadis simplement traversé Crampel, puis le pays des Dzèm et des Dzandzama; après nous, est venue la commission de délimitation du Kamerun, sur une fraction de ce même pays, et c'est tout. Aussi un document

[1] Cf. A. Fourneau, De l'Ogôoué au Campo. Bull. Sté Géogr. t. XII 1891, p. 190—215.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

récent donne-t-il un nombre de 40000 guerriers fâñ environ, chiffre qui n'est même pas à discuter [1]. Ce qu'il y a de certain, c'est que la population totale du Congo français, dont les Fâñ peuvent former la moitié, peut être évaluée à un chiffre variant de 3 à 10 millions, sans aucune précision possible à l'heure actuelle. Pour nous, nous évaluerions facilement les Fâñ à cinq millions au moins, dix à douze millions au plus. Le bassin du Wole à lui seul, dont nous avons relevé tous les villages, compte plus d'un million de Fâñ.

Les Fâñ font partie de la grande famille bantoue, mais en constituent un des chaînons externes, ou, si l'on préfère, ils sont placés sur la limite qui sépare les Bantous des populations et des langues du nord est, Lybie, Soudan etc. Ce sont, dit Reclus, les moins bantous de tous les Bantous.

[1] Un clan, celui des Amvom, dépasse ce chiffre. Les Bulé sont encore plus nombreux; le nombre des clans fâñ, tout au moins ceux que nous connaissons, se chiffre par plus de 400. A s'en tenir à l'évaluation officielle, chaque clan ne compterait guère qu'une centaine de guerriers. Pour beaucoup, c'est à peine le nombre de leurs villages.

[p.20]

CHAPITRE II.

LA NOTION DU TOTEM.

§ 1. Le mot «totem» et son origine.

§ 2. L'extension du totem. — Phénomènes religieux qui doivent être séparés du totem.

§ 3. La définition du totem. — Le totem à l'origine.

1° Auteurs qui se sont occupés de la question du totem d'une façon générale. — Définition du totem d'après FRAZER, REINACH, Mgr. LE ROY, LANG, CAPART etc. et discussion de ces définitions.

2° Auteurs qui se sont occupés de la question au point de vue africain. — MM. VIREY et FOUCART, discussion de leur opinion par rapport aux Fâñ. — Enumération des auteurs 1° qui se sont occupés du totémisme égyptien, 2° des autres peuples africains.

§ 4. Conditions requises pour qu'il y ait totémisme: existence du totem, rapport de nom, rapport de parenté, loi d'exogamie et interdictions.

En commençant cette Etude sur le totémisme fâñ, nous devons tout d'abord préciser la notion du totem, et le sens que nous attachons à ce mot; en effet, suivant les divers auteurs qui ont traité cette question, soit d'une façon générale, comme FRAZER, DURKHEIM, LANG[1] etc., soit d'une façon particulière ou pour un peuple particulier, comme LORET[2] et VAN GENNEP[3], ce sens a fortement changé.

---

[1] Voir plus bas, pp. 27 et suiv. les ouvrages de ces auteurs.

[2] LORET, L'Egypte au temps du Totémisme. Paris (Leroux) 1906.

[3] A. VAN GENNEP, Tabou et totémisme à Madagascar. Paris (Leroux) 1906.

§ 1. Le mot «totem» et son origine.

Avant de donner la définition proprement dite du totem, nous devons nécesssairement commencer par préciser ce que l'on entend par ce mot, surtout au point de vue africain, car, on le verra plus loin, il diffère en quelques points du totem indien et australien [1].

«Le totem, dit LORET est avant tout un attribut ethnique, la marque extérieure, l'enseigne d'un clan: le mot totem est même, s'il faut en croire les étymologistes, un nom commun signifiant simplement «marque», »signe distinctif» dans la langue des Indiens d'Amérique, chez lesquels on observa pour la première fois le totémisme . . .

«Le totem ne se borne pas à être la marque distinctive de la collectivité. C'est aussi le nom visible, le nom matérialisé du clan. Le clan qui a choisi le loup pour emblème, s'appelle le clan du loup . . . De là à se prendre pour de véritables loups à face humaine, il n'y a qu'un pas, qu'ont franchi tous les groupements totémiques que l'on connaît. Tous, en effet, considèrent leur animal totémique comme un parent, comme un ancêtre, fait de la même substance qu'eux-mêmes.»

En parlant du nagualisme, nous montrerons qu'à notre avis tout au moins, cette dernière assertion ne paraît pas juste, qu'il s'agisse du clan proprement dit, ou des sociétés secrètes portant un nom d'animal. Dans ce cas même, les «Loups» ne se croient guère des animaux à face humaine, mais à côté du «loup» humain, il y a le «loup» animal, obéissant et soumis. Et ainsi pour les autres animaux. Dans ces circonstances, il n'y a point filiation, mais transmission ou transfusion de sang, et cet acte s'applique non à une collectivité pour créer un ancêtre éponyme, mais à deux individus particuliers et se termine avec eux. Chaque individu de la société secrète doit avoir et a son initiation particulière, renouvelable à chaque degré nouveau conquis dans la société.

[1] Cf. Domestic Life of Tanganika, by father DUCHÊNE (Catholic Missions 1910): «But missionaries, who have lived long in Equatorial Africa, understand that there is no true connection between the totems of the American Indians and the mviko (totems) of the Tanganika tribes.»

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

A notre connaissance, aucun clan fân ne considère l'animal éponyme comme un ancêtre, fait de la même substance qu'eux mêmes. Ils sont parents parce qu'un même esprit les anime et que cet esprit anime le corps. Nous en rapporterons une preuve, à notre avis décisive. Un homme du clan de l'antilope mvin tue par hasard un animal de cette espèce: il a commis une faute et ne peut en manger. Un homme du même clan mvin rencontre par hasard cette antilope «morte» et n'a pas eu connaissance du meurtre; s'il en mange, il contracte une simple souillure rituelle, mais non la faute proprement dite: l'esprit éponyme ne l'habite plus. Ajoutons que cette règle a cependant des exceptions en ce sens que parfois il n'y a même pas souillure. Nous étudierons mieux cette distinction difficile en parlant des éki totémiques ou éki de race et des éki rituels, totalement différents.

«Cette expression de totem, qui a fait fortune, dit Mgr. Le Roy[1], est un barbarisme tiré d'un mot des Indiens Chippeway, (peut-être plutôt Algonquin) de l'Amérique du Nord, car c'est là surtout que l'institution fleurit (ou du moins qu'on l'a signalée tout d'abord et l'on sait combien aujourd'hui s'éteignent rapidement les tribus indiennes)[2]. — Selon l'abbé Thévenet, dit Frazer, le nom est proprement ote, famille, tribu, dont la forme possessive est otèm, nind otèm ma famille, kit otèm, ta famille etc. — De sorte que, si l'on tient absolument à se servir de cette expression qui a l'avantage d'avoir un aspect mystérieux et d'en imposer au vulgaire, on devrait dire tout au moins otéisme, ou otétisme.»

§ 2. L'extension du totem.

Ce n'est pas seulement dans l'Amérique du Nord que le totem est connu. On le retrouve, ne fût-ce qu'à l'état de survivance partielle, dans toutes les parties du monde. Il peut être familial, sexuel ou individuel, soit qu'il s'applique à toute une famille ou toute une tribu, qu'il appartienne exclusivement à un sexe de

[1] La Religion des Primitifs, p. 110.

[2] Voir également à ce sujet ce qu'en dit Reinach, Cultes, Mythes et Religions. Paris 1905. T. I, p. 9 et suiv. L'abbé Bros s'étend assez longuement sur ce sujet. Cf. Religion des peuples non civilisés, p. 217 et ss.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

ce groupe, ou qu'il soit particulier à un individu. On remarque également, et notamment en Afrique, des totems d'association secrète. C'est ainsi qu'au Loango il y a la société du Léopard, chez les Wanyika la société de l'Hyène etc. [1].

En examinant cette question dans la tribu fàn, nous aurons à passer en revue ces divers totems, et par là même, croyons-nous, à constater que:

1° Au fond, si dissemblables que paraissent tous ces différents totems, ils se rattachent tous par un même lien à un fondement commun, à une même origine.

2° Ces diverses sociétés citées plus haut ne sont pas des sociétés d'origine totémique, tout en ayant bien leur totem, mais bien d'origine fétichiste.

3° Après avoir étudié les phénomènes divers qui rentrent dans le totémisme et le totem, nous aurons à écarter un assez grand nombre de faits que certains auteurs ont voulu, à tort croyons-nous, y faire rentrer; ces faits ont néanmoins avec le totémisme une connexité étroite, et même y pénètrent assez parfois pour qu'on ait voulu y voir tantôt la cause efficiente, le fondement même du totémisme, tantôt une de ses principales sources. L'exogamie, sur laquelle plusieurs savants ont voulu faire reposer tout le totémisme, est dans ce cas.

Ces faits, tout en se rattachant au totem par des liens étroits, paraissent néanmoins devoir en être séparés comme ne venant pas de la même source, et ressortissant d'un autre ensemble cultuel. Et tels sont:

1° Le fétiche 2° Le tabou (objet) 3° Le nagual	qui sont différents du totem, considéré comme objet.

D'autres faits ou ensembles de faits se rattachent au totémisme par certains points communs, mais cependant n'ont point même origine. Et tels sont:

[1] La Religion des Primitifs, p. 11.

1° Le fétichisme 2° Le tabou (doctrine) 3° Le nagualisme 4° Les défenses rituelles ou éki[1] 5° L'exogamie et l'endogamie 6° Les sociétés secrètes	qui sont différents du totémisme considéré comme corps de doctrine.

§ 3. La définition du totem.

De l'exposé des faits que nous venons de reproduire plus haut et des divisions données, il ressort nettement que le totem se présente sous plusieurs aspects différents. Sous peine d'étranges erreurs, il importe donc de les soigneusement distinguer.

A l'origine, le totem a été évidemment personnel et individuel, ne s'appliquant qu'à un seul individu, au père de la race. Mais, par la force même des choses, ce totem est devenu rapidement familial, puis, par suite de l'extension de la famille devenue au cours des siècles clan, puis tribu, s'est fait totem de clan d'abord, puis totem tribal.

Nous aurons tout d'abord à nous préoccuper de ce dernier, le plus important de beaucoup, tout en constatant que, de fait, ces trois divisions demeurent toujours; chaque «mâle» reçoit en effet à sa naissance, sauf l'aîné, un totem particulier, qui, par suite de son mariage, deviendra totem familial. Chaque mâle reçoit, disons-nous, à sa naissance, un totem particulier; ce totem est bien différent du nagual, animal protecteur, donné seulement à certains individus et dans certaines circonstances données. Le fait de recevoir le totem est un fait général: celui de recevoir un nagual, un fait particulier.

Nous ne pouvons donc souscrire à l'opinion de VAN GENNEP écrivant: «Avec A. LANG, je réserve le nom de totem à l'allié animal, végétal etc. d'un groupe de parents, clan, phratrie etc. et préfère voir conservé aux alliés et protecteurs animaux etc. d'individus

[1] L'ensemble des éki ou des défenses rituelles, comme l'a montré le R. P. MARTROU dans son Etude sur les éki (Anthropos 1906), se rattache au fétichisme, ou, si l'on préfère, au culte religieux proprement dit, mais le culte du totem a également ses éki particuliers.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

leur nom local (nyarong, nagual[1] etc.); sinon, il n'y a plus moyen de s'entendre.» Cf. A. Lang, Social Origins. London 1903, p. 133—134[2].

Contre A. van Gennep, nous croyons pouvoir dire: le nagual n'est nullement le totem individuel; ce sont deux conceptions différentes répondant à des buts divers. Un de nos voisins, le chef des Esaméndum, avait ainsi pour nagual le serpent noir et pour totem individuel l'antilope mvin.

De plus, il est très important de remarquer avec l'abbé Bros[3], que le culte est totémique, lorsqu'il s'adresse non à un individu, mais à une collectivité. Or, le nagual est un individu, tandisqu'au contraire le totem individuel est une collectivité.

Nous disons «chaque mâle reçoit un totem à sa naissance, sauf l'aîné»; celui-ci, destiné à perpétuer la race, conserve évidemment le totem familial qui deviendra proprement sien à la mort du chef de famille.

Tout ce que nous dirons désormais, s'appliquera donc de préférence, sauf lorsque nous traiterons à part des totems dérivés, au totem tribal, sur lequel, en somme, repose tout le système.

C'est de même au totem tribal que s'appliquent généralement les définitions données par les auteurs qui se sont occupés plus particulièrement de la question du totémisme. Il faut passer en revue ceux-ci, avant d'entrer dans la question elle-même, afin qu'il ne reste aucune ambiguïté pour ce qui regarde la signification du mot «totem».

a) Auteurs qui se sont occupés de la question du totem.

Les différents auteurs qui depuis quelques années ont traité la question du totémisme, attribuent presque tous les premières recherches scientifiques sur ce sujet à l'Américain Mac-Lennan[4]. Ce fut cet ethnographe, disent-ils, qui attira, il y a trente ans à peine, l'attention des savants et de tous ceux qui s'occupent d'étude des

[1] [Voir à propos de ce mot nagual la note 4 de la page 34.]

[2] Van Gennep, Tabou et Totémisme à Madagascar. Paris 1904, p. 305.

[3] Religion des peuples non civilisés. Paris 1908, p. 208.

[4] Primitive marriage. The worship of plants and animals (Fortnightly Review). New-York 1870, I, p. 207.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

religions et des sociétés, des ethnographes et des linguistes, sur les totems et leur importance dans les races, dites sauvages, de l'Amérique du Nord, au double point de vue social et religieux.

Depuis les premiers travaux de Mac-Lennan, la question s'est considérablement élargie: successivement, on a reconnu que le totémisme existait à la base de beaucoup de religions. On l'a signalé chez les Australiens, les tribus sud-américaines, les indigènes africains, et peu à peu la question a pris un développement que l'on ne soupçonnait guère tout d'abord.

Il conviendrait toutefois de rendre leur dû aux premiers savants qui se sont occupés du totémisme. Longtemps avant Mac-Lennan, et le fait n'a pas encore été signalé, un Jésuite français, Joseph Lafitau [1], missionnaire chez les Indiens Iroquois, avait décrit cette institution dans son livre «Mœurs des Sauvages américains comparées aux mœurs des premiers temps» [2].

Après lui, Long dans ses «Voyages and Travels» au pays des Indiens, publié en 1791 [3], parle également de cette institution. Puis, et longtemps encore avant Mac-Lennan, Emile Chevalier dans ses «Lettres sur l'Amérique du Nord» [4] employait le mot «totem» pour désigner les emblèmes des clans indiens. Egalement avant Mac-Lennan, le voyageur Paul Marcoy (1865) signalait l'existence des totems et des emblèmes totémiques dans les tribus péruviennes. «Chaque tribu, dit-il, en parlant en particulier des Siriniris, a son totem particulier et son emblème tatoué, grâce auquel on distingue à première vue les individus de chaque clan» [5]. Malgré leur valeur scientifique, surtout au point de vue botanique, les ouvrages de Paul Marcoy (pseudonyme de L. de St. Cricq, savant bordelais), n'ont pas atteint la notoriété qu'ils méritaient. Ecrits dans un style particulier et d'une façon très humoristique, accompagnés de dessins de l'auteur lui-même, ces ouvrages sont aussi intéressants que documentés.

---

[1] Reinach cite Lafitau, Cultes, Mythes et Religions, p. 9, T. I, mais sans indiquer les sources.

[2] Paris 1723, 2 vol. in 4° et Rouen 1724, 4 vol. in 8°.

[3] London 1791.

[4] Publié chez Wouters à Bruxelles 1844.

[5] Voir: De l'Atlantique au Pacifique. Voyage aux vallées de Quinquinas etc. Paris 1869—1872.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Nombreux sont à l'heure actuelle les auteurs qui ont étudié d'une façon spéciale le totémisme et ses dérivés, avec les faits y connexes. Dans l'impossibilité ou plutôt l'inutilité de les citer tous, nous nous contenterons d'énumérer les principaux.

Pour ce qui se rapporte à cette étude, ces auteurs se divisent en deux catégories: 1° Ceux qui ont traité la question soit d'une façon générale, soit d'une façon extra-africaine[1].

2° Ceux qui se sont spécialement occupés du totémisme chez les divers peuples africains.

1° Auteurs qui se sont occupés de la question d'une façon générale.

Parmi ces auteurs, pour ne citer que les plus récents, outre les articles plus ou moins développés des grands dictionnaires, tels que Larousse et surtout Déchelette (Manuel d'Archéologie préhistorique), nous aurons à citer tout d'abord Frazer; dans deux ouvrages spéciaux, il a étudié profondément la question, s'attachant toutefois de façon plus déterminée aux traces nombreuses de totémisme dans les clans australiens, chez lesquels on a ainsi constaté tout un ensemble religieux de culte rituel et ancestral, après les avoir longtemps tenus pour la race la plus dégradée du globe. Frazer définit le totem:

«Une classe d'objets matériels que le sauvage regarde avec un respect superstitieux, croyant qu'il existe entre lui et chaque membre de cette classe une relation intime et très-spéciale»[2].

Cette définition peut être adéquate à la conception du totem tel que l'admettent les tribus australiennes. Mais, d'une façon générale, elle nous paraît incomplète, et pour les Fâñ, il semble difficile de l'adopter. En effet, les mots «respect superstitieux», tout d'abord, ne nous paraissent pas justes. Nous ne croyons pas que le sauvage éprouve du respect pour le totem, pas plus que pour toute autre divinité, quelle qu'en soit la nature. Le mot «respect», tel au moins que nous, Européens, le comprenons, n'existe pas dans les langues bantoues. Ainsi, par exemple, en Fâñ, nous trouverons

[1] C'est-à-dire par rapport aux peuples américains et surtout australiens, en particulier les Aruntas.

[2] J. G. Frazer, Le Totémisme, trad. Dirr. Paris (Schleicher) 1898, p. 3.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

les mots: esème Nzame, que nous traduisons par «adorer Dieu», mais qui en réalité signifie accomplir les exercices rituels, non pas en l'honneur de Dieu, mais «ordonnés» par lui; ou encore: egume mur, «rendre à un supérieur les services nécessaires ou ordonnés». Mais le respect, tel que nous l'entendons, n'a aucune part dans ces ordres. Il s'y trouve simplement les rapports de supérieur à inférieur, l'un fort et puissant, l'autre faible, l'un ordonnant et l'autre obéissant, l'un punissant toute infraction, l'autre obéissant par crainte de cette punition. Ainsi, dans les rapports du Noir avec son totem ou avec la divinité, règne un seul lien, celui de la crainte: si le Noir n'obéit pas aux ordres, il sera puni. Et cela est tellement vrai que si, d'aventure, comme il arrive parfois, le Noir change de tribu, livré comme rançon de meurtre, par exemple, à une autre tribu, son premier totem lui deviendra absolument indifférent, il ne s'en préoccupera d'aucune façon, et cèdera sans aucun scrupule au Blanc qui voudrait l'acheter, l'image représentative de son ancien totem auquel il tenait tant naguère. Ce sera pour lui une chose sans valeur, et le totem de sa nouvelle tribu deviendra tout pour lui.

Il n'y a donc pas entre le Noir et son totem «respect», mais simplement «culte», et culte fondé sur la crainte.

Il est également difficile d'admettre le mot «superstitieux». Qui dit «superstitieux» implique superstition. Or, la superstition est une déviation du sentiment religieux par laquelle on est porté à se créer des obligations fausses, à craindre des choses qui ne doivent pas être craintes ou à mettre sa confiance en d'autres qui sont vaines — mais rien de semblable n'existe dans l'âme sauvage, considérée comme telle. Vraie peut-être pour nous, cette définition est fausse pour le sauvage qui, lui, admet comme réelles et prouvées la puissance de son totem, les obligations qu'elle lui crée. Loin d'être une déviation du système religieux, c'en est beaucoup plutôt le fondement, ou pour parler plus vrai, un des principaux fondements.

Salomon Reinach[1] précise avec plus de clarté ce qu'est le totem en disant: «On désigne sous ce nom l'animal, le végétal, ou plus rarement le minéral ou corps céleste en qui le clan reconnaît 1° un ancêtre, 2° un protecteur et 3° un signe de ralliement» [1].

[1] Reinach, Cultes, Mythes et Religions. Paris 1905. Le Tome III en 1908. T. I, p. 81.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Mgr. Le Roy, qui ne donne pas lui-même une définition du totem, mais seulement du totémisme, semble se rallier à ce dernier sentiment, et adopter cette définition [2].

Cependant, elle nous paraît pouvoir être complétée. En effet, elle mêle plusieurs points absolument distincts. Ainsi, par exemple, un clan éponyme d'un phénomène céleste qu'il regardera comme son totem, ne le considère pas pour cela comme son ancêtre. Tel le clan qui reconnaît le tonnerre comme totem, se dira volontiers «fils du tonnerre», mais c'est là une expression toute symbolique et c'est seulement d'une façon détournée que le tonnerre, en tant que cause déterminante, sera l'ancêtre éponyme du clan.

D'un autre côté, en disant que le clan reconnaît dans le totem un protecteur et un signe de ralliement, on doit faire observer qu'ici se mêlent deux ordres de phénomènes: le totem réel est protecteur, le totem figuratif seul est signe de ralliement. De plus, cette définition, vraie en partie, sous les réserves données, du totem général du clan, l'est déjà moins du totem familial ou des sociétés secrètes, elle ne l'est plus du totem individuel.

Dans un autre endroit, Reinach, en une définition plus courte, dit simplement: «Le totem n'est pas un individu, mais un clan animal affilié au clan humain» [3].

Nous ne pouvons admettre, pour le totémisme fân, cette définition. Le clan animal est bien affilié au clan humain, mais ce clan animal n'est, d'aucune façon, totem du clan humain, en tant que clan. Chaque animal du clan éponyme, en tant que participant à l'animal totem primitif, est relié à chaque homme du clan correspondant; c'est là un lien, non pas collectif, mais individuel,

---

[1] Dans son «Orpheus», Paris 1909, Reinach dit en parlant du totémisme: «Définir le Totémisme est très difficile. On peut dire, quitte à préciser ensuite, que c'est une sorte de culte rendu aux animaux et aux végétaux, considérés comme alliés et apparentés à l'homme.» Cette définition a en effet besoin d'être complétée et précisée pour être exacte.

[2] La Religion des Primitifs, p. 110. Mgr. Le Roy définit le totémisme, p. 122, de son ouvrage déjà cité.

[3] Cultes, Mythes et Religions, T. I.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

et si peu collectif, mais bien individuel, que sous l'influence de certaines circonstances données, dont nous avons déjà fourni des exemples (individu passant d'une tribu à une autre, v. plus haut p. 28), ce lien peut cesser par rapport à tel ou tel individu, ce qui ne pourrait arriver s'il était collectif.

En résumant, A. Lang[1] arrive à établir les points suivants:

a) Le totem donne à son nom la tribu. b) Il est considéré comme l'ancêtre commun des animaux actuellement vivants de la même espèce et des hommes[2] du clan. c) Chaque tribu ou clan a son totem particulier et respecte dans tous les descendants, animaux ou hommes, du dieu-ancêtre, les congénères indissolublement unis par «les liens du sang».

A son tour, M. Jean Capart, le distingué professeur de Louvain, dans une brochure sur le totémisme, a condensé brièvement les travaux de ses devanciers et donné une nouvelle définition du totem. Pour lui, le totem est: «Un objet sacré, généralement un animal, plus rarement une plante ou une chose inanimée, dont l'espèce entière est l'objet de la vénération d'une tribu ou d'un clan.»

Cette définition pèche peut-être en deux points.

Ecartons tout d'abord le mot «vénération», qui implique une idée d'estime, de respect, d'amour, et qui en somme se fonde uniquement sur ces sentiments. On vénère un saint, un aïeul, une relique, un endroit qui mérite de l'être par les souvenirs de celui qui y a vécu, mais le Noir ne vénère pas son totem: il a pour lui le culte rituel fondé sur la crainte dont nous avons précédemment parlé.

Le mot «espèce entière» n'est pas juste non plus dans la rigueur du terme; ainsi, telle tribu aura pour totem le serpent, non

---

[1] Lang, Cultes, Mythes et Religions, trad. Marillier. Paris 1896.

[2] Nous verrons que pour les clans bantous, cette assertion n'est pas juste: il y a alliance et transmission de sang entre l'ancêtre homme, et l'ancêtre éponyme animal; les deux clans ont une existence parallèle, alliée il est vrai, mais non identique. Il y a non pas un ancêtre unique, mais deux ancêtres unis par le sang et l'esprit. Nous verrons plus tard comment. De plus, le totem est loin d'être considéré «comme l'ancêtre commun des animaux actuellement vivants de la même espèce». Il est considéré comme l'ancêtre des animaux vivants de la même espèce, offrant certaines particularités bien déterminées de lieu, de taille, d'aspect etc.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

pas la classe entière des serpents, mais telle espèce de serpent. Les autres lui seront indifférents. Souvent, dans cette espèce, lui seront seulement totems ceux qui présentent telle variété, ou tel accident de forme, de couleur ou d'aspect. Dans cette espèce ou variété, quelle que soit la forme sous laquelle elle se présente, lui seront seulement totems les individus localisés dans telle ou telle région ou dans tel ou tel site particulier, ou encore dans telle ou telle situation; ainsi, pour préciser, lui seront seulement totem le serpent de la montagne, et non la même espèce de la plaine etc. etc.

Au point de vue fàn, cette définition n'est pas absolument exacte: il faudrait y ajouter, comme nous l'avons d'ailleurs fait plus loin, «certains phénomènes naturels, mais alors attribués à un animal totem». Ainsi, pour certains clans, le tonnerre est considéré comme totem. C'est la manifestation d'un esprit particulier, protecteur invisible du clan, ou même d'un animal, v. g. l'écureuil-volant; de même, l'arc-en-ciel qui se produit après la pluie et dans une certaine direction donnée, sera totem, mais non pas celui que l'on voit briller presque constamment au-dessus de certaines cascades, et qui serait vraiment trop banal! La raison est la même que pour le tonnerre. Le mica, considéré comme enfant du tonnerre, rentre alors pour ce clan dans cette catégorie. Egalement totem l'éclipse de lune, pour le clan protégé par l'animal qui mange la lune. Et ce que nous disons du totem bantou, nous n'hésiterions pas à le dire du totem en général. Les phénomènes naturels nous paraissent difficilement devoir être admis, en eux-mêmes, comme sujets totémiques. Nous croyons beaucoup plus simple et beaucoup plus conforme au génie de l'homme primitif, qui, si facilement, naturalise tous les phénomènes qu'il voit et qu'il ne peut expliquer a priori [1], beaucoup plus simple, disons-nous, d'admettre que ces phénomènes sont sujets du totem, en tant que manifestations d'un animal, ou apparitions d'un esprit sous une forme particulière et déterminée. Ainsi, le tonnerre, frappant le roc, y laissera, aux yeux du Noir, des parcelles de mica;

[1] Ainsi chez beaucoup de tribus, les éclipses sont considérées comme le fait d'un dragon qui veut manger la lune, d'où l'on s'efforcera de le chasser, à la fois, par l'attrait du sacrifice, et par la peur du bruit, à grand renfort de cris et de tamtam.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

elles seront le témoignage visible du totem, la manifestation tangible de son passage, par là-même le symbole figuratif qui permettra de lui décerner un culte objectif: ce culte serait difficile ou même impossible, sans cette condition, à ces hommes frappés avant tout par les phénomènes sensitifs et qui rentrent avec la plus grande difficulté dans le domaine de la spéculation pure.

Dans ses «Etudes sur les Religions Sémitiques», le P. Lagrange a également traité la question du totémisme, mais de façon incidente, à propos du totémisme en Israël; il en a donné la même définition que W. R. Smith dans son «Kinship» (p. 187), ouvrage fondamental que doivent connaître tous ceux qui s'occupent du totémisme général. Cette définition étant la même que celle de Lang, nous pouvons la laisser de côté, ainsi que celle de Marillier qui l'a également reprise dans les articles publiés par lui sur le totémisme [1]; ces articles peuvent être considérés comme une excellente réfutation des théories exposées par F. B. Jevons, «An Introduction to the history of Religion» (London 1896). D'accord avec une certaine Ecole, dont nous montrerons l'erreur, tout au moins pour les Fâñ, Jevons fait du totémisme le point de départ de l'évolution religieuse de toute l'humanité. Mr. Marillier [2], comme le note le P. Lagrange dans ses «Etudes» (op. cit.), montre que la plupart des usages allégués sont susceptibles d'une autre interprétation, et que le totémisme, lié à un état social très particulier, est plutôt le terme d'une évolution religieuse et n'a pas les conditions nécessaires pour servir en quelque sorte de principe premier et de source générale.

Dans son livre: «La Religion des Peuples non civilisés» [3], Mr. l'abbé Bros a également donné un résumé du totémisme où nous aurions peut-être quelques points à relever. Ainsi, par exemple: le culte est totémique lorsqu'il s'adresse non à un individu mais à une collectivité, proposition qui sous sa forme générale a besoin d'être expliquée, comme le montrera plus loin la discussion du totem fâñ. — Les totems «couleurs» nous paraissent beaucoup plutôt se rapporter

[1] T. XXXVI, p. 402.

[2] Article Religion, G^de Encyclopédie, tome XXVIII. La place du Totémisme dans l'Evolution religieuse. Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, tome XXXVI—XXXVII, 1897—98.

[3] Paris (Lethielleux) 1908, p. 217 et ss.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

aux défenses rituelles, aux tabous, aux objets consacrés aux Dieux qu'au totem proprement dit. En tout cas, il en est certainement ainsi à la côte de Guinée. — Dans la suite de cette étude, nous montrerons également le «pourquoi» des différents totems. D'une façon générale, cependant, Mr. Bros a bien résumé et dégagé les lois du totémisme [1].

Assez récemment, le P. Zapletal a repris, par rapport à Israël cette étude du totémisme dans «Der Totemismus und die Religion Israels» [2]. Il y nie l'existence du totémisme.

Nous trouvons également: Sur le Totémisme, par Durkheim [3] et: Code of totemism, par Stanley Cook [4].

Enfin, pour clore cette longue liste d'auteurs ayant traité la question au point de vue général, citons encore en flamand et en hollandais «Over Totemvereering», naar J. Laenen [5] et «De Godsdeensten der Wereld, Totemvereering» naar Bettany I. 13—16, 69—493 et II. 82—167) [6].

2° Auteurs qui se sont occupés de la question du totem au point de vue africain.

Les auteurs qui se sont occupés de la question au point de vue des peuples africains, sont également nombreux. Tout d'abord, un point reste bien acquis chez tous les observateurs, certain et reconnu par tous: le respect de certaines familles, de certaines tribus africaines pour des animaux auxquels ces familles, ou ces tribus, se prétendent unies par des liens de parenté ou d'alliance, tantôt réelle, tantôt mystique. Mais tous ne sont pas d'accord sur l'explication à donner de ce phénomène. «Les uns, dit Mr. Virey [7], dont vient de paraître la savante étude sur la religion de l'ancienne Egypte, ont simplement reconnu du totémisme dans ce phénomène.

[1] Voir cependant à propos de Mr. Bros ce qu'en dit Mgr. Le Roy dans son livre sur la Religion des Primitifs, p. 81.

[2] Freiburg (Schweiz) 1906.

[3] L'Année Sociologique. V. 1900/01. Paris 1902, p. 82—121.

[4] Jewish Quarterly Review, April 1902, p. 413—448.

[5] Katholieke Vlaamsche Hoogschooluitbreiding (Etudes catholiques), no. 60.

[6] 's Graven Haag 1907.

[7] La Religion de l'ancienne Egypte, Etudes sur l'Histoire des Religions, leçons données à l'Institut Catholique de Paris, 1910.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

D'autres, comme Mr. Georges Foucart[1], ont répondu que le totémisme appartient exclusivement aux Indiens de l'Amérique du Nord; qu'aucun des faits observés ailleurs ne peut avec certitude être rapporté au totémisme; que si beaucoup de familles ou de tribus africaines croient à l'existence d'une parenté entre elles et des animaux, cette croyance n'est qu'une dégénérescence, une survivance déjà confuse de la zoolâtrie. C'est donc seulement dans le développement des idées animistes qu'il faudrait chercher l'origine de la zoolâtrie. Cette explication, continue Mr. Virey, paraît être en contradiction avec le témoignage des monuments archaïques que représentent les enseignes des anciens Egyptiens»[2].

En ce qui concerne le totémisme fâñ, elle nous paraît également fausse; nous aurons d'ailleurs à y revenir. Deux ordres de phénomènes paraissent avoir été souvent confondus par les auteurs qui se sont occupés de cette question: le totémisme proprement dit, et le nagualisme[3], qui en est totalement distinct. Quantité de faits qui se rapportent au nagualisme et par conséquent d'une certaine manière au culte de l'animal fétiche sont à rejeter complètement en dehors du totémisme, sans que d'ailleurs, de ces faits, on puisse conclure à la zoolâtrie. Un observateur superficiel, ou qui connaît mal la langue et le peuple, peut conclure à la zoolâtrie, d'un certain nombre de faits qui réellement ressortent beaucoup plus du pouvoir magique, de phénomènes d'hypnotisme ou de suggestion, dont nous aurons à nous préoccuper.

Mr. Georges Foucart n'a sans doute pas tort de vouloir rapporter à l'animisme[4] une bonne part des phénomènes de la

---

[1] La Méthode comparative dans l'Histoire des Religions, p. 74—75, 76—77.

[2] Virey, op. cit. p. 27.

[3] Nagualisme, d'un mot indien nagual. Comme nous aurons occasion de revenir sur cette doctrine dans le cours de cette Etude, disons rapidement que le nagualisme est l'ensemble des faits et des croyances qui se rapportent au nagual. Le nagual est l'animal qui, par des rites magiques et l'échange du sang, contracte avec un homme une parenté spirituelle et réelle qui les lie et les fait vivre d'une même vie, de sorte que l'animal obéit aux ordres de l'homme, même seulement pensés, obéit à ses volontés, souffre de ses maladies et meurt de sa mort. Les Fâñ appellent le nagual: elâñéla.

[4] On a nommé animisme, dit M. Virey la tendance de l'homme à supposer l'existence d'âmes analogues à la sienne, d'esprits analogues au sien, dans les zoolâtrie égyptienne. Mais la zoolâtrie officielle et même la zoolâtrie populaire ont certainement aussi d'autres origines, entre autres le totémisme.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

L'Egypte est, de beaucoup, le pays le mieux étudié au point de vue du totémisme, et cela, grâce aux très nombreux monuments, papyrus et hiéroglyphes que le temps a respectés. Nous avons tout d'abord à nous occuper du totémisme égyptien, non pour l'étudier, car cette question est réservée aux auteurs spéciaux, mais en citant ceux qui en ont traité et en renvoyant à leurs ouvrages. La question est, en effet, d'importance capitale pour l'étude de tout le totémisme bantou et des faits totémiques de chaque clan, car, pour notre part tout au moins, nous admettons que le totémisme bantou a une étroite affinité, si même il n'en est pas dérivé, avec le totémisme égyptien.

Rochemonteix [1] est le premier qui ait soupçonné l'existence du totémisme égyptien, sans pouvoir cependant l'étayer de preuves précises. D. Mallet [2], en 1893, avait indiqué conjecturalement la possibilité d'une origine totémique du culte des animaux. Maspéro [3] s'était servi, dans sa grande Histoire, du mot totem pour désigner le serpent qui personnifiait un des nomes de la H^te^ Egypte, le nome du Serpent, au sud-est de Siout. Mais ce sont les découvertes de monuments archaïques postérieurs à l'année 1895 qui ont amené M. Loret [4] à substituer à ces hypothèses un système appuyé sur des témoignages clairs et précis.

---

animaux, les végétaux, et même dans les objets qui nous paraissent absolument inanimés. Ainsi, si l'on voulait admettre pour réels les pensers des poètes, il y aurait une manifestation d'animisme dans ces vers de Lamartine:

Objets inanimés, avez-vous donc une âme
Qui s'attache à notre âme et la force d'aimer (Milly, v. 15—16). Virey, op. cit. p. 27.

[1] Rochemonteix, Le Temple égyptien, Revue internationale de l'Enseignement, Juillet 1887; cité par Virey, p. 28.

[2] D. Mallet, Premiers établissements des Grecs en Egypte. Paris 1892, p. 392.

[3] Maspéro, Histoire I, p. 76; v. aussi Recueil de travaux, vol. II, 1880, p. 115 et ss.

[4] Loret, L'Egypte au temps du Totémisme. Paris (Leroux) 1906.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Aussi, à dater de ce moment, les études sur ce point particulier se sont-elles multipliées. Dans ce nombre considérable, ne citons que les plus importantes pour nous, dans le sujet actuel:

Wiedemann, Quelques remarques sur le culte des animaux en Egypte, où il traite après Strabon, des animaux θεοί et des animaux ἱεροί [1];

Amelineau, Le rôle des serpents, dans l'antique Egypte [2];

Moret, Du Sacrifice en Egypte [3];

Lefébure, Rites Egyptiens [4];

Kyle, Recueil de travaux, où se trouve discuté le caractère religieux des immolations de victimes humaines [5];

G. Jéquier, Le livre de ce qu'il y a dans l'Hadès [6].

Enfin nombre d'articles dans les Revues d'Egyptologie et Assyriologie, mais qui s'écartent déjà de notre sujet.

Après ces auteurs qui se sont livrés plus particulièrement à l'étude du totémisme égyptien, nous avons à en citer deux autres comme s'étant occupés du totémisme africain. Mgr. Le Roy, qui a traité la question au point de vue général, dans son livre: La Religion des Primitifs, et dont nous exposerons le sentiment en parlant de l'origine du totémisme, puis Mary Kingsley, West African Studies, London 1901, qui l'a étudié par rapport à la Côte Ouest Africaine du Sénégal au Congo.

Signalons ensuite les quelques auteurs qui ont traité du totémisme par rapport à un peuple déterminé. Ce sont:

Arcin, La Guinée française [7], où la question est longuement et bien traitée; ce livre constitue une des plus remarquables Etudes parues depuis longtemps sur les Colonies; nous regrettons seulement

---

[1] A. Wiedemann, Quelques remarques etc. Muséon VI, Louvain.

[2] Amélineau, Revue de l'Histoire des religions, 1905.

[3] Moret, Revue de l'Histoire des religions, 1908.

[4] Lefébure, Mémoires de la Mission archéologique française a Caire. T. III. La vertu du sacrifie funéraire. Sphinx v. VII, p. 185—209 et v. VII, 1—51.

[5] G. Kyle, Recueil de travaux, v. XXVII. Paris.

[6] Cf. Virey, op. cit. p. 272.

[7] Arcin, La Guinée française. Paris (Challamel) 1908.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

les théories matérialistes de l'auteur, et son évolutionisme depuis longtemps réfuté;

A. van Gennep, Tabou et totémisme à Madagascar[1], Etude également fort remarquable, et qui montre très bien en vertu de quelle idée les serpents sont vénérés dans la grande île africaine comme ancêtres et comme protecteurs.

En revenant au Congo, nous trouverons le R. P. Colle, qui dans le Bulletin des Pères Blancs[2] a publié une étude très-fouillée sur les sociétés secrètes des Congolais (pays Baluba) et leurs totems.

Sur les Mpongwés du Gabon et en même temps sur les Fâñ, le Dr. Nassau, qui pendant plus de quarante-cinq ans dirigea la mission protestante du Gabon, a donné une Etude très documentée[3], surtout au point de vue du fétichisme, mais où il parle peu des totems.

Nous ne saurions oublier les «Eki des Fâñ», publié dans l'Anthropos (1906), par le P. Martrou, A. L. Bennett[4] —, et enfin quelques autres, moins importants, qui ont seulement effleuré la question, tel Largeau[5] et du Chaillu[6]. Naturellement, de tous ces auteurs importants il y a quelque chose à apprendre, et il faut leur être reconnaissant de maintes observations justes et exactes[7].

En somme, comme on le voit par les quelques mots qui précèdent, entre les auteurs qui affirment l'existence du totémisme africain, et ceux qui la nient, tout au moins comme développement complet, bien que la question ne paraisse pas entièrement résolue, il semble néanmoins qu'elle soit bien près de l'être par l'affirmative. Nous nous efforcerons d'apporter à cette question notre contribution

---

[1] A. van Gennep, Tabou et totémisme à Madagascar. Paris (Leroux) 1906. — V. aussi du même auteur: Totémisme et méthode comparative. dto. 1908.

[2] P. Colle, Bulletin des Pères Blancs d'Anvers, 1907 et 1908.

[3] V. ci-bas p. 41 note.

[4] Ethnographical Notes on the Fâng (Journ. Anthrop. Inst. vol. XXIX, 1899, p. 66—98).

[5] Dictionn. franç.-pahouin, op. cit.

[6] Voyages à la côte d'Afrique, op. cit.

[7] Nous devons également des remerciments particuliers à Mr. le Dr. de Jonghe, professeur à l'Université de Louvain, dont on connait les beaux travaux sur les «Sociétés secrètes», les «Balumba», et les «Bayombe», et qui ayant fait une étude spéciale du totémisme sur lequel il se propose de publier une savante étude, a bien voulu nous prêter le concours de ses conseils et de sa science reconnue.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

en exposant les faits tels que nous avons pu les étudier sur place, non par interprète, mais par nous-même, faits dont nous avons été témoin, dans la très grande majorité des cas. Et de là, nous établirons notre croyance à l'existence du totémisme africain, nous gardant toutefois de lui attribuer une influence exagérée, en ce qui concerne tout au moins la tribu fâñ, et par là même, croyons-nous, l'ensemble des tribus bantoues.

§ 4. Conditions requises pour qu'il y ait totémisme.

Les différents auteurs qui ont traité la question au point de vue général, tels que Frazer, Lang, Reinach, Robertson, Smith, Durkheim et autres, réclament, pour qu'il y ait vraiment totémisme dans une tribu, les conditions ou caractères suivants:

1° Le clan aura un totem. C'est évidemment la condition primordiale et nécessaire. Dans le chapitre suivant, nous considérerons donc tout d'abord la notion du totem fâñ et comment il faut le comprendre.

2° Le clan ou la tribu prend ordinairement le nom du totem.

3° Le clan admet un rapport de parenté avec son totem quand ce totem est un objet animé, sinon, avec l'objet animé auquel a rapport le totem.

4° Le clan n'admet pas le mariage entre membres d'un même clan ou ayant le même totem. C'est la loi d'exogamie. Quelques-uns en ont fait le fondement de tout le totémisme.

5° Le clan défend à ses membres certaines pratiques par rapport au totem, et en première ligne, de s'en nourrir, sauf dans certains cas bien déterminés.

Nous étudierons successivement ces divers points, et tout d'abord l'existence du totem fâñ.

Mais, disons-le dès maintenant, supposant pour un temps la question résolue, ces cinq conditions se retrouvent chez nos Fâñ. D'où la conclusion facile à tirer:

Le totémisme existe chez les Fâñ, et à suivre les règles marquées par quelques auteurs, ce serait même le totémisme intégral.

Nous nous hâtons toutefois d'ajouter nos conclusions par rapport à ces cinq points:

1° Totem: il existe certainement.

2° Rapport de nom: il existe dans les cas que nous déterminerons et n'existe pas dans les autres cas, en vertu de règles spéciales.

3° Rapport de parenté: il est hors de doute.

4° Loi d'exogamie: elle existe, bien que ne devant pas être regardée chez les Fâñ, à notre avis du moins, comme une conséquence du totémisme, mais comme concomitante.

5° Interdictions: elles existent, d'une façon générale, non pas seulement par rapport à certaines aliments, mais encore à certaines pratiques, coutumes etc. Ce sont les éki.

Donc, en somme, le totémisme existe chez les Fâñ, avec toutes les conditions requises pour qu'il y ait vrai totémisme.

CHAPITRE III.

EXTENSION DU TOTÉMISME DANS LA TRIBU FÂŃ ET DANS LES AUTRES TRIBUS BANTOUES.

§ 1. Le totémisme existe-t-il dans tous les clans de la tribu fâń? — Réponse affirmative. — Pourquoi cette existence est-elle niée par quelques-uns. — L'extension actuelle du totémisme fâń.

§ 2. Le totémisme dans les autres tribus bantoues. — Le totémisme fâń n'est pas un fait isolé dû à la situation particulière du peuple fâń. — Le Biéri fâń comparé au Bwiti fiote. Similitude et origine communes des deux cultes. — Les autres tribus bantoues.

§ 3. Le totémisme chez les peuples du Soudan occidental. — Témoignages d'ARCIN et de BINGER. Le ntèné.

Après avoir résolu par l'affirmative, tout en en remettant à plus tard les preuves décisives, l'existence du totémisme dans la tribu fâń, considérée dans son ensemble, se pose, comme nous l'avons dit, une question subsidiaire qui a également sa grande importance, et que nous devons examiner sous trois raisons différentes:

1° Le totémisme existe-t-il dans tous les clans de la tribu fâń, clans fort nombreux comme nous l'avons vu, et qui dépassent le nombre de 400?

2° Le totémisme se retrouve-t-il dans les autres tribus de race bantoue?

3° Le totémisme existe-t-il dans les autres tribus africaines non bantoues?

[p. 40]

§ 1. Le totémisme existe-t-il dans tous les clans de la tribu fâṅ?

Nous avons parcouru de longues annés la nation fâṅ du nord au sud, et de l'est à l'ouest; on retrouve le totémisme avec tous les phénomènes y connexes dans tous les clans fâṅ; il est tellement semblable partout qu'il ne saurait y avoir aucune hésitation sur sa généralité; en même temps, par une conséquence nécessaire, cette diffusion est un indice de sa haute antiquité, puisque certains clans sont en guerre les uns contre les autres ou n'ont aucun rapport entre eux depuis des siècles.

Il faut néanmoins reconnaître que parmi ceux qui ont le plus vécu parmi ces clans et qui en connaissent le mieux la langue — les missionnaires sont dans ce cas — il s'en trouve et s'en trouvera certainement qui nieront l'existence même du totémisme. Cette négation tiendra à plusieurs raisons.

Tout d'abord, certains missionnaires, et ce sont souvent ceux qui connaissent le mieux la langue, sont venus à une époque où nul d'entre eux n'étudiait les problèmes ethnographiques, et où le seul souci était d'amener les indigènes à adopter la foi catholique ou protestante, non pas en s'efforçant de pénétrer l'âme noire, mais en présentant nos croyances avec tout ce que vingt siècles de christianisme y ont apporté de profondeur et d'éclat. Nous ne prétendons nullement ici blâmer tel ou tel, nous constatons simplement un fait, qui tient d'ailleurs au temps beaucoup plus qu'aux hommes.

D'autres, qui ont étudié l'âme noire et se sont efforcés d'en pénétrer les secrets et de connaître le culte rituel, mal préparés parfois par leurs études antérieures et surtout venus trop tôt, en un temps où ces connaissances étaient encore insoupçonnées, les ont devinées, mais n'ont pu les approfondir assez. Ainsi, nous montrerons plus tard la différence profonde entre totem et fétiche, totémisme et fétichisme souvent confondus. Le Dr. Nassau, chef des missions protestantes, évangélise le Congo depuis 1861 et vit au milieu des Mpongwé et des Fâṅ; il a écrit tout un livre sur le fétichisme [1], où tous les faits totémiques, quelqu'ils soient, ne sont considérés que comme actes fétichistes. Il dit simplement du totem, dont il reconnaît cependant l'existence: «...this totem idea does not exist as a worship. Indeed, the animal (or part of an animal) is not sacred to an entire clan, but only to individuals, for whom it is chosen on some special occasion; and its use is only prohibited to that individual only in the sense that it may not be used for common purposes, it is sacred or holy to him.» D'où il nous paraît également évident que le Dr. Nassau a observé seulement le totem individuel, et non le totem familial et le totem tribal, soit que son attention n'ait pas été attirée sur ce point, soit qu'il n'en ait pas eu l'occasion.

[1] Dr. Nassau, Fetichism in West African. London 1901, p. 210.

D'autres missionnaires nient le totem pour une autre raison. Préoccupés avant tout de faire des chrétiens, ils négligent de parti pris et ignorent toutes manifestations rituelles, fêtes, danses, initiations etc. du culte noir. Pour eux, ce sont folies, sottises ou diableries dont il est parfaitement inutile, oiseux et souvent dangereux de se mêler. Leur siège étant fait, il serait également oiseux d'essayer de les détromper, et de leur montrer que souvent ils réussiraient mieux et plus vite en étudiant davantage, comme l'a si bien démontré Mgr. Le Roy, la Religion des Primitifs qui les entourent. Mais ce serait de notre part outrecuidance de les juger, car, après tout, nous les avons toujours rencontrés ne désirant qu'une chose: faire le plus de bien possible.

Souvent aussi, et à notre avis, c'est le cas du Dr. Nassau, le sentiment varie d'après les tribus au milieu desquelles on vit. Tantôt, on est, de par ses fonctions, en communication plus ou moins intime avec les indigènes, tantôt, et c'est le cas le plus fréquent, on rencontre dans les clans au milieu desquels on est appelé à vivre, des traces plus ou moins grandes de totémisme, et surtout un totémisme plus ou moins apparent. Le cas est surtout frappant pour les populations demeurant près de la côte ou des établissements européens groupés assez nombreux en un point particulier propice au commerce, sorte d'emporium où se presse une population cosmopolite noire et blanche. Là, toute trace de religion a presque disparu, aussi bien chez le Noir que chez le Blanc; il se passe dans ces centres un phénomène assez analogue à nos vastes agglomérations urbaines où l'on voit des milliers d'individus qui ne connaissent la religion que de nom, ils en conservent seulement une crainte vague qui leur fait éviter le prêtre ou le pasteur, et ne retrouvent le chemin du temple ou de l'église qu'à la naissance ou à la mort.

Et dans ces agglomérations qui s'établissent au pays noir près de l'Européen, les faits deviennent identiques. Par une suite nécessaire du relâchement des mœurs, lorsque la femme apporte à la case un gain facile, et que d'elle vit la parenté avec les parasites groupés autour, les liens du sang se relâchent également, le père de famille perd son autorité antique, et les coutumes ancestrales disparaissent [1].

A cette raison, très importante par elle-même, ajoutons-en au moins deux autres: tout d'abord la compénétration de tribus de races différentes, n'ayant pas le même culte et les mêmes dieux, ou tout au moins les connaissant sous d'autres noms et observant d'autres rites, forcées par conséquent, par crainte de railleries, de sévices ou de violations du secret, de ne plus se montrer au grand jour, mais de se cacher dans la forêt et dans l'ombre de la nuit, pour accomplir les cérémonies cultuelles.

L'arrivée du Blanc est une autre raison: sa crainte, sa présence, son culte.

Sa crainte, d'abord. D'instinct, l'administration blanche est curieuse. C'est à la fois utile et nécessaire. Pour le bon ordre et au nom de la civilisation, elle tient à savoir ce qui se passe dans les assemblées et les sociétés secrètes, rempart le plus fort du totémisme. Elle tient à le savoir, car elle sait aussi d'expérience indubitable que souvent dans ces réunions nocturnes, outre d'affreuses orgies sexuelles où, au mépris de toute règle, la débauche la plus affreuse se donne libre carrière, elle sait que souvent ont lieu des sacrifices humains, et veut — qui l'en blâmerait? — les empêcher. Elle sait, par exemple, que jusqu'aux portes des villes européennes, les Fâń, pour ne citer qu'eux, n'ont pas renoncé aux sacrifices humains rituels. Sans doute, le Fâń n'est pas anthropophage comme son voisin des bords de l'Oubangui, le Bondjo. Le Bondjo mange la viande humaine par goût, et littéralement il pratique «l'élevage» du bétail humain; dans chaque village bondjo, nos missionnaires ne le savent que trop, on trouvera des hommes, des enfants, des jeunes filles destinés ainsi à la vente et à la boucherie, et résignés à leur sort. Rien de pareil chez le Fâń. Jamais, chez lui, on ne mangera de femme ou d'enfant, même d'homme, par goût, par désir de chair humaine, mais, et le fait est fréquent, et j'en ai été témoin, on mangera le prisonnier de guerre dans un sacrifice rituel, après les cérémonies d'usage; le festin sera d'abord la participation à la victime, pour s'assurer ses qualités; on le mangera surtout par vengeance, pour annihiler son corps, et là nous retrouvons une croyance égyptienne, la durée de la personnalité attachée au corps lui-même. Il arrivera aussi que des femmes, parfois des enfants, seront également immolés, ce sera alors par leurs propres parents, jamais par d'autres, et dans des cérémonies rituelles et prévues. Néanmoins, on conçoit parfaitement que l'administration européenne s'oppose à ces actes, malheureusement beaucoup trop fréquents.

[1] C'est, par exemple, ce que le P. Martrou a fort bien fait remarquer dans ses «Eki des Fâń», Anthropos 1906.

La crainte de l'Européen force donc le Noir à se cacher; mais sa simple présence suffit également, car le Noir redoute fort qu'on se moque de lui; en présence de ces cérémonies qui, il faut bien le dire, offrent généralement un côté burlesque, surtout pour des yeux prévenus, le Blanc ne ménagera pas ses railleries; les oripeaux dont se couvre le sorcier lui sembleront ridicules, et il le dira, tandis que chaque pièce d'habillement, pour le Noir, représente une idée, un sacrifice, une épreuve parfois terrible.

Le Christianisme qui va progressant chaque jour et qui cependant gagne moins de terrain que nous ne voudrions, est aussi une cause puissante de désorganisation. Le Noir chrétien se fait volontiers apôtre: en tous cas, devant son abstention et surtout son prosélytisme, le culte ancestral perd vite de sa force. C'est un bien, qui est loin d'amener la désagrégation de la tribu; la famille se reconstitue au contraire vraiment forte, le clan se refait cellule par cellule.

Quoi qu'il en soit, le totémisme a aujourd'hui disparu presque complètement dans les clans fâń arrivés près de la mer, et surtout aux environs le Libreville. Il a beaucoup diminué dans les clans disséminés sur l'Ogowé, de Ndjolé à l'Océan.

Toutefois, il ne faudrait pas s'exagérer déjà les résultats accomplis. En effet, si le totémisme a disparu en partie des endroits cités, il est encore profondément vivant dans l'intérieur du pays, à l'ombre des forêts immenses, sur les bords du Wole, du Ntèm, de l'Aïna et des hauts affluents du Congo et de l'Ogowé. Pour bien préciser les clans gagnés, prenons une comparaison. Le pays fâñ égale à peu près en superficie les $^3/_4$ de la France. Supposons pour un instant convertis au christianisme ou tout au moins le connaissant, les peuples habitant les bords de la Loire depuis Nantes jusqu'à Blois, et une zône côtière s'étendant à quelques cinquante kilomètres, de Nantes à Bordeaux; dans l'intérieur, une ou deux stations rayonnant à quelques vingt kilomètres autour d'elles: on voit ce qui resterait à faire!

Par rapport au Congo et aux Fâñ, la situation en est là.

La grosse, très grosse majorité des clans fâñ est donc totémiste.

Considérons maintenant les peuplades voisines alliées aux Fâñ. Nous en avons déjà énuméré une partie au commencement de cette étude. Les Bulu ou Bésex qui vivent au milieu des Fâñ, presque absorbés par eux, ont mêmes rites et mêmes croyances. Mêmes rites et mêmes croyances également chez les Dzèm et les Dzandzama à l'Est, les Bakélé et les Batéké au Sud, chez les populations de race mpongwée, chez les Galoa, Inenga, Benga, Banoko, Balengui et Batoko, qui vivent près de l'Atlantique.

§ 2. Le totémisme dans les autres tribus bantoues.

Lorsque les ethnographes ont voulu assigner au peuple fâñ sa place dans les nations africaines, la plupart se sont vus fort embarrassés. En effet, on se trouvait avoir affaire à un peuple migrateur, nullement autochtone, inconnu il y a trente ans dans les pays qu'il occupe actuellement.

Par ses mœurs, ses coutumes, ses habitudes, sa façon de construire et de cultiver, il se rapprochait fort des Asandeh et des Nyamnyam du centre africain, signalés par Schweinfurth. Par sa langue, au contraire, qui constitue au fond la plus forte marque distinctive d'un peuple, il se rapportait plutôt à toutes les populations de race bantoue, avec lesquelles sa grammaire avait des règles communes; mais d'un autre côté, l'influence d'autres vocables appartenant aux races du nord s'y fait certainement sentir. Nous avons montré jadis, dans un autre ouvrage [1], que l'on pouvait encore actuellement retrouver dans la langue fâñ de nombreuses, racines qui paraissent dérivées de l'ancien égyptien. Il semble donc que deux sources bien différentes constituent cette langue. La pauvreté de sa syntaxe, la richesse de son vocabulaire [2] et l'extrême facilité de composer de nouveaux vocables l'assimilent, à ce point de vue, à l'anglais moderne, en tant que rôle joué par la langue en regard des autres dialectes.

La position du Fâñ l'a fait tantôt ranger parmi les populations bantoues, tantôt complètement à part dans un ilôt isolé, tantôt enfin dans le rameau semi-nilotique. Il ne serait donc nullement étonnant que, placé ainsi à cheval au milieu de plusieurs races, il ait emprunté son culte totémique à l'Egypte ancienne, ou à un autre peuple influencé par les idées égyptiennes, à l'exclusion des autres races bantoues. Ce serait là chez lui un accident isolé, dû à des circonstances exceptionnelles.

Mais tel n'est pas le cas. Bien que jusqu'ici les faits totémiques aient été rarement signalés chez les races d'origine bantoue, on les retrouve néanmoins chez toutes, tantôt à un état rudimentaire, tantôt à un état beaucoup plus développé d'avancement rituel. Et encore, lorsqu'on croit les trouver dans cet état rudimentaire, il faut beaucoup se défier d'un jugement hâtif, qui, dans bien des cas du moins, si non presque toujours, serait dû, non pas aux faits eux mêmes ou à l'existence plus ou moins développée du totémisme, mais beaucoup plutôt à l'observateur lui-même, peu ou mal renseigné, trompé par les indigènes, ou ne connaissant pas suffisamment la langue.

Il faut bien reconnaître aussi que parmi ceux qui ont le plus vécu parmi ces tribus et qui en parlent le mieux la langue, les missionnaires, pour les raisons données plus haut à propos des Fâñ, n'ont pas toujours signalé ces faits, les ont rangés sous d'autres dénominations ou bien encore n'en ont pas reconnu l'importance. Comparons, par exemple, le Biéri fâñ et le Bwiti fiot. On en verra l'identité.

[1] Les Fangs, d'où ils viennent et où ils vont. Missions Catholiques 1898.

[2] Le vocabulaire fâñ contient plus de 18000 mots, ensemble énorme pour une langue où les termes de sciences, d'art, de religion manquent presque absolument.

Le fétiche national du Fâñ est le Biéri, nom qui désigne d'ailleurs tout un ensemble de rites, de sacrifices, d'objets et une société secrète. C'est en somme, pour le résumer rapidement, le «culte des ancêtres», bien qu'il s'y mêle encore beaucoup d'autres choses. Mais c'est aussi le culte du totem, et à côté des crânes ancestraux, on retrouvera, dans chaque clan et dans chaque famille, soit le crâne, soit un fragment de crâne, soit une griffe ou autre partie du corps de l'animal totémique ou de l'objet matérialisé du totem autre que l'animal, végétal etc. Pour mieux expliquer ce phénomène, examinons rapidement le Biéri dans un clan ayant le totem serpent, ou, ce qui est beaucoup plus fréquent, dans la grande société secrète ayant pour totem «général» le serpent; car il ne faut pas oublier qu'à côté de ce totem «général», il y a des totems «particuliers».

Or, cette société du Biéri[1] ou du Biéti se retrouve, à peu près exactement la même, chez les Ishogo, les Ivili, les Ivéa, les Eshira, les Akélé, les Apindji, les Ashango et les Ndjavi, tribus de la Ngounyé et du Haut-Ogowé[2], nullement apparentées aux Fâñ.

Plus loin, le Biéri ou Biéti est connu des peuples du rameau Ivili et Fiote sous le nom de Bwiti; elle comprend tout un ensemble de faits, de rites, de cultes, dont les uns sont totémiques, les autres non, mais qui cependant se rattachent de façon générale au «culte des ancêtres», si proche du culte de l'ancêtre totémique auquel il se mêle intimement. Pour montrer, en passant, combien parfois il est difficile de reconnaître ces phénomènes totémiques, citons en passant une page curieuse sur le Bwiti ou du moins un de ses aspects[3].

[1] Notons qu'en Fâñ, r est interchangeable avec t: ainsi m(e)rara, coffre, à la côte, m(é)vata plus haut, alèr ou alèt, dur, ngèr ou ngèt sucré etc.

[2] Mr. l'abbé André, aujourd'hui missionnaire sur le Ht Ogowé, a promis pour l'Anthropos une série de monographies de ces tribus assez différentes comme mœurs et langage, dont il parle couramment la langue. Sa qualité de prêtre indigène nous est garante de la valeur de son travail.

[3] Au pays des Ishogos, par Mr. l'abbé André, Messager du St Esprit, Lierre, Janvier 1910.

«1er Septembre. — Hier soir, je n'ai pas pu faire le catéchisme à Pingo. Un homme y était mort trois jours auparavant et il y avait grand Bouiti, en l'honneur du défunt. Heureusement, le village est grand et la danse a eu lieu tout à fait à l'extrémité opposée. De cette sorte le tamtam ne nous a pas trop incommodés, les enfants et moi, et nous avons pu dormir tout à notre aise.

«Les cérémonies des funérailles chez les Ishogos sont très curieuses à voir.

«Dès qu'un Ishogo a rendu le dernier soupir, tandis que les hommes tirent des coups de fusil, les femmes entonnent des chants lugubres, poussent les hauts cris, pleurent à chaudes larmes, se roulent à terre, le corps à demi-nu, les cheveux en désordre, simulant le chagrin le plus profond. Après cette première explosion de douleur, le corps du défunt est transporté par les hommes dans la mbandja, où il est rayé de larges bandes rouges et noires et tacheté d'une multitude de petits points blancs. Cette toilette terminée, on construit derrière la mbandja une petite cabane de feuilles de bananier, où le mort, assis sur un tabouret, un bras posé sur le genou et l'autre retenu en l'air par une ficelle, est exposé à la vue du public, à travers une ouverture pratiquée dans la cloison.

«Le jour, cette petite fenêtre est cachée par un pagne ou une natte. Mais la nuit, au moment de la danse, le voile est levé et alors chacun peut contempler à son gré l'horrible cadavre tuméfié, dont les exhalaisons méphitiques remplissent la mbandja. Car les Ishogos conservent souvent leurs morts, deux, trois et même quatre jours Quand l'odeur devient par trop insupportable, on brûle dans la mbandja de grandes brassées de noundouvèlé ou thé sauvage, pour en chasser les émanations fétides.

«Si le défunt n'est ni un chef ni un vieillard, le cadavre tenant une feuille de palmier à la main, est exposé dans la cour sur un piédestal faisant face à la mbandja, où il reçoit également les honneurs de la soirée. Les danseurs passent et repassent devant le mort, se baissent, se relèvent, font la pirouette, courent de ça de là avec des flambeaux allumés, le tout accompagné de gestes et de contorsions impossibles. Plus on dansera, plus l'entrée du défunt dans le séjour des mânes sera glorieuse et triomphante. De temps à autre, un danseur s'approche du défunt en brandissant sa torche. L'air déplacé par ce geste fait remuer la feuille de palmier que tient le mort. Aussitôt un même cri retentit dans la foule des assistants: «Voyez, voyez comme il est heureux des honneurs qu'on lui rend! voyez comme il exprime son contentement!» Et le tamtam résonne avec plus de force, les chants redoublent d'intensité, la danse est reprise avec plus d'ardeur et d'entrain que jamais . . .

«Dans certaines circonstances, pour donner aux profanes une plus haute idée du Bouiti, on simule une marche du mort. Un des initiés soulève le cadavre sur son dos, se couvre de la tête aux pieds de feuilles de palmier tressées, de manière à ne laisser voir que le visage du défunt, en se ménageant à lui-même une ouverture pour voir sans être vu. Et ainsi habillés, porteur et porté se promènent dans la cour du village au milieu des chants, des battements de mains et des bravos poussés par les femmes criant au prodige.

«D'autres fois, on fait parler le mort. Pendant la danse, un initié va se dissimuler dans la bananeraie ou à l'entrée du village . . . Tout d'un coup, les torches s'éteignent comme par enchantement. La nuit la plus épaisse règne dans la mbandja et au dehors. Personne ne cause, personne ne bouge . . . Pendant ce temps un des danseurs entonne une mélopée aussi étrange que lugubre, moitié chant, moitié prière . . . qu'il termine en criant à haute voix le nom du défunt: Makita! Makita! Makita!!! Oh! oh! oh! répond le compère blotti dans les herbes à une bonne distance de la mbandja. — Plus de doute, le mort a parlé! il est satisfait et ne manquera pas de veiller sur le village.»

Cet exemple nous montre un aspect du Biéri: mais un second va le faire sous une autre face qui se rapproche beaucoup plus de ce que nous avons dit du Biéri fâñ.

Toutes les tribus du Congo français, au moins celles de la partie nommée Gabonie, sont totémistes. Descendons plus au sud: là, habite la grande tribu fiote, dont les divers clans s'étendent fort loin dans l'intérieur, envahissant le Congo portugais au sud, et se ramifiant également au nord sous le nom de Ba-vili.

Le Biéri fâñ est le même que le Bwiti fiot. Un article d'un missionnaire de ce pays, le R. P. Le Scao, un des trop rares missionnaires ayant étudié consciencieusement les fétiches, va nous parler du Bwiti, à un point de vue particulier, il est vrai, et dans une Etude destinée plutôt à une Revue religieuse: d'où certains termes et comparaisons [1].

Bouiti.

«Le Grand Fétiche du pays s'appelle Bouiti; il préside à la prospérité dans le village.

«Sa case est la plus belle de toutes. Elle occupe la place d'honneur, au fond du village, au bout de la cour. Les autres cases s'alignent respectueusement de chaque côté de la cour, en ligne droite. Quand on arrive dans un village, l'entrée sombre de la case de Bouiti frappe tout d'abord. Elle n'a en effet aucune fenêtre: une lumière faible y pénètre par le devant, le toit n'est pas à plus d'un mètre d'élevation au-dessus du sol. Au fond, il y a une issue cachée, par où, en cas de danger, on peut se sauver et sauver le fétiche. Au toit, sont suspendues en guise de guirlandes, des branches d'un arbre appelé «Mouamba-Tsangou». Le fétiche est dans une niche plus ou moins ornée, d'ordinaire grossièrement sculptée, au fond de la case. Entre cette niche et l'unique poteau qui soutient la toiture sur le devant, il y a un feu alimenté par trois belles bûches de bois. Ce feu ne doit jamais s'éteindre. C'est comme la lampe du sanctuaire. Un peu de tous les côtés, il y a des peaux de serpents ou des figures de serpents, tracées ou peintes sur des écorces.

[1] Au pays de Sette Cama, Le religion des habitants. Les fétiches: le Bouiti: par le R. P. Le Scao 1908—1909 Messager du St Esprit.

«A côté de la case, un sentier plus large et plus propre que d'ordinaire, mène au Nzimba. Gare au profane qui s'y engage! Si c'est un Blanc, les initiés n'oseront pas le toucher, mais si c'est un Noir, il risque de ne pas revenir. C'est là, au Nzimba, que les sectateurs de Bouiti tiennent leurs réunions secrètes. L'endroit, bien nettoyé, est au milieu de la forêt: de tous côtés courent des lianes en forme de reptiles ornées par ci par là de peaux de serpents. Sur les côtés et surtout à l'entrée, il y a des bâtons durs taillés en pointe, plantés en terre, un peu penchés. Si vous n'y prenez garde, ils vous blesseront, et la blessure sera facilement mortelle à cause du poison dont on les a frottés [1].

«La statue du Bouiti consiste en un bâton grossièrement taillé en figure humaine. A la place des yeux et du nez, on met des éclats de verre. Ce bâton s'enfonce dans un sac d'ordures de toutes sortes recouvert d'herbes. A la place du ventre est encastré un morceau de verre, ou plutôt de miroir. Au-dessous, une peau de chat-tigre.

«A côté, par terre, quelques clochettes, puis une corne de bœuf, pour appeler les initiés. Mais ôtez ces herbes, ouvrez le sac, et vous trouvez ce qui est vraiment le Fétiche, c'est-à-dire une tête de mort remplie de poudres diverses, d'herbes, de poisons [2], et une tête de serpent [3].

«La danse joue un grand rôle dans ce culte étrange, danse sauvage, qui ne ressemble en rien à ce que nous connaissons, et dont les femmes sont exclues. Le Ganga [4] préside, et sous sa direction les hommes se livrent à une sarabande endiablée. La figure barbouillée de rouge, ils chantent au son du tam-tam des paroles mystérieuses sur un rythme lent d'abord, puis accéléré. Un feu est allumé au milieu de la case et on brûle de l'encens. Le Ganga, les reins ceints d'une peau de tigre, lance des regards sinistres au fétiche et autour de lui; il saute comme une hyène, et tous à son exemple, pendant des heures, vont s'adonner avec frénésie à des sauts désordonnés.

---

[1] [On retrouve le même culte, beaucoup plus au Nord, chez les Fâń du Haut Congo. Le poison, dont les morceaux de bois sont imprégnés, est d'ordinaire extrait d'un strophantus, par écrasement des racines et ébullition du produit. Pour le rendre plus fort, on y ajoute de l'acide formique, obtenu en écrasant des fourmis, et des ptomaïnes, extraites de cadavres en putréfaction. Ce poison, lorsqu'il est frais, tue en quelques minutes. On le conserve ordinairement six mois. Ce poison est analogue, comme composition et comme effets, au curare des Indiens de l'Amazonie. Les Noirs en connaissent le contre-poison, mais la maladie ou les plaies causées par piqûre sont, à cause du poison animal, très longues et parfois impossibles à guérir. Le sang se corrompt et les chairs se décomposent progressivement.]

[2] [Chez les Fâń, on trouve de plus une fiole remplie d'un liquide noir et nauséabond. C'est le nsou ou sanie de cadavre. On le fait boire ou on l'inocule aux coupables présumés dans certaines circonstances.]

[3] [La tête de mort représente le culte ancestral ou mânique, et la tête de serpent le culte totémique.]

[4] Le ganga est le «féticheur». Ce mot ganga se retrouve avec des formes identiques dans toutes les populations bantoues. Cf. Mgr. Le Roy, Religion des Primitifs, p. 275—288.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

«La nuit se passera ainsi. Pendant ce temps, le Noir ne se connaît pas Le plus doux prend un air féroce: les vieillards se sentent rajeunis et recouvrent l'agilité de leurs vingt ans.

«Sur l'initiation, voici les détails que j'ai pu recueillir . . . Un homme est-il décidé à entrer dans le Bouiti? Le Ganga fixe une date, puis, pendant trois jours, il fait mâcher au postulant des racines provenant d'un arbuste appelé Diboha [1] et lui fait boire à doses répétées une décoction de ces mêmes racines. Le postulant ne tarde pas à s'assoupir et à tomber dans un état de léthargie et d'absorption complète; il est ivre-mort. On lui passe alors une liane autour du cou. Après trois jours seulement, il revient un peu à lui, à moins qu'il ne revienne jamais. Tel cet enfant de 14 ans, qu'on devait, cette année même, initier à Koja. Il avait bu le Diboha, et perdu connaissance; mais quand on voulut le ramener à lui, ce n'était plus qu'un cadavre! Celui qui a supporté plus vaillamment l'épreuve du Diboha, est alors invité par le Ganga à regarder dans le miroir dont il a été parlé, miroir encastré dans le ventre du fétiche. A ce moment, il doit y voir certaines choses et les détailler au Ganga. S'il dit bien, il est reçu dans le Bouiti [2]; s'il ne dit pas ce qu'il faut, c'est que le fétiche n'a pas voulu se montrer à lui, l'a refusé. Tout est à recommencer. Que doit-il voir? C'est là le secret du Ganga et des initiés. Il est impossible de démêler ce secret parmi les récits incohérents qui sont faits. Les convertis eux-mêmes sont pleins de réticences et quand on les met sur ce sujet, ils sont saisis de terreur. On raconte que l'initié voit dans le fétiche tantôt un boue, tantôt un éléphant, tantôt . . .!!! Qu'y a-t-il de vrai? Je n'ai pu, même des convertis, obtenir aucune révélation. Tous ont peur de parler. S'ils révélaient quelque chose, c'est la mort certaine pour eux!

«Les Noirs se plaisent à raconter divers prodiges qu'ils attribuent au Bouiti. Pour vous convaincre, ils vous conduiront à quelque «Dindimba». Le Dindimba est une liane qui relie par le sommet deux grands arbres à cette hauteur où les branches paraissent incapables de soutenir le poids d'un homme. Qui, sinon Bouiti, eût pu attacher cette liane si haut? Quand le Likoundou veut passer par là pour aller manger l'âme de quelqu'un, cette liane l'arrête . . .

«D'autres affirment avoir vu des initiés de Bouiti demeurer suspendus à un mètre de terre, pendant plus de dix minutes.

«On m'a cité des faits plus étranges encore [3] . . .

«Ni mes confrères ni moi n'avons été témoins de tels faits, mais tous comprendront que nous ne sommes jamais admis à ces cérémonies. Faut-il les admettre? Beaucoup le croient.

---

[1] Strychnos Icaja, des Strychnées. C'est un poison dangereux à haute dose. A dose faible, ses effets sont analogues à ceux du chanvre indien.

[2] [Les Bouiti désigne non seulement le fétiche de ce nom, mais encore l'association de ceux qui en connaissent les mystères. Les noms de fétiches désignent ainsi d'ordinaire le fétiche, l'association et le féticheur.]

[3] [Mgr. Le Roy cite également quelques faits analogues. Cf. Religion des Primitifs, p. 340—351.]

Le Mboïo.

«Le Mboïo [1] est un autre fétiche. Le sanctuaire où il réside consiste en deux petites moitiés de case se regardant l'une l'autre, et dressées au milieu de la cour du village. A l'un des côtés de la case est suspendu le fétiche. C'est une boîte ronde en écorce d'arbre et renfermant un crâne humain, et des matières rouges malpropres. Dans le couvercle de la boîte on a pratiqué un petit trou, par où le Mboïo est censé manger les poules! Dans l'autre case, il y a un paquet de lanières de peaux de bêtes enfilées dans un manche sculpté sous forme de figure humaine. C'est le «Ngendo», que les hommes de Mboïo agitent tour à tour pendant la danse.

«Non loin du village, dans la forêt, il y a aussi un endroit pour les réunions secrètes des partisans du Mboïo. C'est le «Boukoso», qui est au Mboïo ce que le Nzimba est au Bouiti. Le rite paraît être celui-ci. On frotte les yeux du postulant avec la sève d'un arbre appelé mounzanzi. Les yeux se ferment; pour les rouvrir, on emploie du piment mêlé à des bananes pourries. Puis, on va en pompe au Boukoso où l'on transporte le fétiche. On ouvre la boîte et l'initié regarde ce qu'il y a dedans. Là-dessus, on mange une poule, on frotte l'ouverture qui est dans le couvercle avec du sang de cette poule, et on revient au village. Tout le monde voit le sang sur la boîte et s'écrie: «Oui, oui, Mboïo est vraiment grand, car il mange des poules!»

«Et c'est tout. Gare à l'initié qui révèlerait à quelqu'un les choses de Mboïo! . . . Il pourrait lui arriver ce qui est advenu autrefois à une femme du nom de Boumba. Cette femme, moins crédule que les autres, refusa de donner une poule à Mboïo en disant que Mboïo n'était rien. Le soir même, on la chercha en vain. Mboïo l'avait enlevée, dit-on; la vérité c'est que les fidèles de Mboïo l'avaient tuée!

«Depuis ce temps, on ne jure que par «Mouna Boumba». Le Noir qui prête serment le fait en ces termes: «Ce que je dis est vrai, aussi vrai que Boumba a été enlevée par Mboïo».»

Cet exposé du Bwiti nous montre bien, une fois que l'on est au courant de la question et des phénomènes qui y rentrent, des faits purement totémiques, tels que figures ou emblèmes totémiques du serpent, auquel, ne l'oublions pas, est «consacrée» la société du Bwiti toute entière. En parlant du «fétiche» nous aurons d'ailleurs occasion de revenir sur ces faits.

Si, du pays fiot, nous descendons plus bas encore, presque au sud de l'Afrique, nous y retrouverons également le totémisme.

«In Southern Africa, it [totemism] exists among the Bechuanas (who, however, are not pure Bantu); not in the form of carving and setting up poles in their villages, but in the respect which different clans give to certain animals, e. g., one clan being known as «buffalo-men», another as «lion-men», a third as «crocodile-men», and so forth. To each clan its totem animal is sacred, and they will not eat of its flesh. In some parts, this sanctity is regarded as so great that actual prayer and sacrifice are made to it. But in most of the Bantu tribes this totem idea does not exist as a worship. Indeed, the animal (or part of an animal) is not sacred to an entire clan, but only to individuals, for whom it is chosen on some special occasion; and its use is prohibited only to that individual. Only in the sense that it may be not used for common purposes, is it «sacred», or «holy» to him» [1].

[1] [Pour le Mboïo, cf. ce qu'en dit DENNETT, At the back of the black man's mind, p. 93. On verra les faits extraordinaires que l'auteur semble également parfaitement admettre.]

Pénétrons maintenant dans la grande forêt, tout à fait dans l'intérieur, au pays des Banda, des Asandeh, etc. ce qui nous rejette vers les hauts plateaux du Soudan et du Darfour. Nous y retrouverons le même totémisme. L'orote banda ressemble à l'orunda mpongwé, frère de l'éki fàñ, des ilohi du Sud, des élègili des Baḍuma.

Et si nous nous transportons aux rives du Tanganyika chez les Baganda, les mots auront changé, mais non les faits; suivons plutôt l'interrogatoire d'une femme chrétienne martyrisée dans l'Ouganda; il nous est rapporté par Mgr. Streicher, des Pères Blancs, Vicaire apostolique du Nyanza septentrional:

«Quel est ton père? demande le bourreau à l'héroïne.

— Mon père est mort.

— Quels sont tes frères?

— Tu les as tués!

— Quelle est ta famille?

— Je n'en ai pas.

— Alors quel est ton mouziro? [c'est-à-dire, nous apprend l'évêque en employant précisément le mot, ton animal totem, dont l'emblême est distinctif de la tribu].

— Je n'en sais rien!

— Il est impossible que tu ignores cela!

— Je suis une esclave.»

Le juge n'insiste plus, les esclaves n'ont pas de mouziro.

Dans une tribu voisine, chez les Wafipa, nous retrouverons mêmes croyances. «Each family, écrit le R. P. Duchêne [2], is designated by the name of a certain animal or plant. This is the family mwiko, and the representation of the objet designates the family or tribe. No member of the tribe is permitted to eat of the plant or of the flesh of the animal that constitutes his ancestral mwiko. To him, this animal or plant is sacred» [1].

[1] Nassau, Fetichism in West Africa, p. 210.

[2] Domestic Life of Tanganyika, Catholic Missions, May 1910.

Beaucoup de tribus de race bantoue admettent donc l'existence et le culte du totem. Un ouvrage récent, et des plus étudiés, du R. P. Colle, sur les sociétés secrètes du Hᵗ Congo [2], et auquel nous renvoyons nos lecteurs, en donne des preuves surabondantes. Il est facile, entre autres constatations, d'y voir que toute société secrète, sans exception, y a son animal totem dont elle porte généralement le nom.

Nous avons donc ainsi constaté l'existence du totémisme non seulement dans la tribu fàñ, mais encore dans les populations de race bantoue.

§ 3. Le totémisme chez les peuples du Soudan occidental.

Nous voudrions montrer encore l'existence du totémisme, non pas chez tous les peuples africains, ce qui nous entraînerait hors des cadres de notre étude, mais chez les peuples du rameau guinéen; les Fàñ ont conservé avec eux certaines affinités, soit qu'ils les aient côtoyés dans leurs anciennes migrations, soit qu'à une époque fort reculée, ils soient sortis ensemble des plateaux de la Hᵗᵉ Egypte, et se soient séparés vers les rives du Tchad; les uns sont descendus franchement au sud, les autres ont continué vers l'ouest [3]. Donc

---

[1] D'après une note de Mgr. Le Roy, il y aurait confusion à propos de ces mots: «mouziro, mwiko» qui désignent, non pas le totem lui-même, mais la chose défendue, l'ôlí fàñ. — A la côte orientale, on emploie Ndugu' pour désigner le totem, c'est-à-dire l'ami, le frère, parent; de même chez les Mpongwé de la côte occidentale, est resté le mot Ndépo dans le même sens et Angom chez les Fàñ.

[2] Les Sociétés Secrètes de l'Urua, Bulletin des Pères Blancs d'Anvers, 1908.

[3] Voir ce que dit Avelot à ce sujet, Recherches sur les migrations en Gabonie. Paris 1905.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

le totémisme et le totem ne se sont pas restreints à la race bantoue: on les retrouve dans l'Afrique entière.

Ainsi, en Guinée, dans la race soso, la famille, dit ARCIN [1], a conservé en le modifiant le culte totémique . . . Le totem, ancêtre mythologique du clan, lui sert d'emblème et lui donne son nom. C'est un animal ou un objet. Le totémisme a perdu avec la désagrégation du clan, une partie de sa signification [2]. L'être animé ou inanimé adoré de cette société primitive a cessé parfois d'être considéré comme l'ancêtre. On s'est contenté de l'associer à la légende fabuleuse du premier patriarche de la phratrie qui a succédé au clan. Néanmoins, l'expression «c'est mon père», en parlant de certains animaux, s'emploie encore couramment.

Le mot employé par les Sosos pour désigner le totem est nténé. Au dire d'ARCIN, ce mot indique une idée de parenté éloignée et signifierait «sœur ainée du père», c'est-à-dire du patriarche primitif. Nous retrouvons le même mot avec quelques variantes ou ses équivalents dans les langues africaines de cette région. Ainsi

---

[1] Mr. ARCIN, auquel nous empruntons une longue citation, a consacré à la Guinée française un livre de haute valeur et qui mérite d'être connu et étudié. Mr. ARCIN connait à fond son sujet, et après lui, il y a bien peu de choses à dire. Pourquoi faut-il que, par un travers commun à trop d'écrivains, il se mêle de parler de la religion catholique et de ses dogmes d'une façon qui montre une ignorance profonde. Cueillons au hasard ces perles.

«Les Pères de l'Eglise ont tous admis la corporalité de l'âme, p. 396.

L'adoration des bœufs a légué à la religion chrétienne ses chérubins, p. 401.

St Dominique donne leur pouvoir aux charmeurs de serpents, p. 406.

Le mot «Dieu» dans les langues sémitiques suppose au début le principe mâle et femelle.

Les chrétiens, bien que monothéistes, ont cependant leur mystère de la Ste Trinité et leur croyance à la Vierge.» (Ils admettent donc quatre dieux!)

Nous ne savons si Mr. ARCIN est ou a été catholique: si oui, un enfant de douze ans lui en remontrerait sur le simple petit catéchisme. C'est regrettable, répétons-le, pour un ouvrage qui a de la valeur.

[2] «La Guinée française» par ARCIN, Paris (Challamel) a été publiée en 1906, à une époque où notre travail était déjà terminé; nous n'en avons eu connaissance que tout récemment et sommes d'autant plus heureux de nous rencontrer en nombre de points avec l'auteur sur le fait du totémisme, que son Etude corrobore nombre de nos observations et de nos affirmations. La religion de la Côte de Guinée avait fait déjà l'objet d'études approfondies, de la part du P. BAUDIN (Missions Catholiques) entre autres; or, le totémisme y était complètement passé sous silence.

tenné en malinké, tana en bamana, namo en baga, woda en fula, kosé en soninké etc. — Sous l'influence de l'islamisme, ces dogmes ou croyances commencent à disparaître [1].

Retenons de cet exposé deux conséquences assez curieuses. La première, c'est que pour les peuples guinéens, le totem ou ntèné est non pas l'ancêtre ou le parent fait de même substance que le père du clan, mais simplement l'animal éponyme de l'ancêtre du clan, l'un homme, l'autre animal, unis entre eux par un lien à la fois mystique et physique lorsqu'il y a eu, par exemple, échange de sang, mais non descendance directe, comme l'ont dit LORET et plusieurs auteurs. ARCIN et BINGER, qui ont eu l'avantage de parler d'après enquête faite sur place, partagent donc notre avis.

---

[1] Cf. Colonel BINGER, Du Niger au Golfe de Guinée T. II: «Ils conviennent à Kong que ceux qui ont imaginé les Tenné, étaient des gens bien simples, voir même des malins, disent-ils, car on ne trouve jamais comme tenné, le bœuf, le mouton, ou autre animal comestible, à moins qu'il ne soit d'une rareté telle qu'il soit introuvable [nous verrons plus tard que cette assertion est erronée], comme un bœuf absolument noir, n'ayant pas un poil blanc! Quelle douce privation, en effet, de se passer de la fantaisie de manger ou de toucher

Un merle métallique.

Un vautour Urubus.

Un petit sénégalais (oiseau).

Un boa.

Un trigonocéphale.

Un lion.

Une sorte de légume sauvage qui ne rentre jamais dans l'alimentation courante.

Du lait de fauve!

Une sorte de mouche.

Les Dioulas l'ont si bien compris qu'ils ont laissé tomber les tenné dans l'oubli.» —

Cette liste a du moins l'avantage de nous montrer les ntèné en usage au Golfe de Guinée (ntèné qui ressemblent fort aux ntèn fáń). Nous ne regretterons qu'une chose: l'oubli que les Dioulas font de leurs ntèné pour passer à l'islamisme. Progrès, dit plus loin le Colonel BINGER, qui considère l'islamisme comme un progrès nécessaire — et il n'est malheureusement pas le seul — progrès même supérieur au catholicisme, l'un relevant le niveau moral du Noir parce que à sa portée, l'autre pouvant le relever, mais de fait ne le faisant pas, parce que hors de sa portée. On nous permettra, à nous qui nous nous sommes voués au relèvement moral et social du Noir et considérons que seul, le Christianisme peut y arriver, de ne pas être du même avis.

Le mot ntèné nous paraît également digne d'attention. Sans en apporter d'ailleurs de preuves, Ancin croit pouvoir lui donner la signification de «sœur aînée de l'ancêtre». Soit, mais n'est-ce pas un sens dérivé? Nous aurons l'occasion de le redire en parlant du totem emblème, marque ethnique; les Fâñ désignent ce totem par un mot presque équivalent à ntèné, c'est le mot ntèn, qui désignera tout à la fois et le totem emblème qui est un signe ethnique et mieux d'après son sens propre, toute espèce d'écrit, de marque dessinée ou peinte. La «marque incisée», taillée, gravée, le tatouage par exemple, aura un tout autre mot pour la désigner.

Donc, en somme, si ntèné désigne «la sœur aînée de l'ancêtre», le ntèn fâñ, lui aussi, désigne: «la marque, le symbole représentatif, l'emblème ethnique, la figuration de l'ancêtre éponyme», et ces deux sens nous paraissent bien rapprochés.

Quelle en est la racine? Peut-être pourrait-on la chercher au pays d'où le totémisme fâñ aussi bien que le totémisme guinéen peuvent avoir trouvé leur source, et en égyptien, nous trouvons précisément: tèn couper, diviser, séparer, marquer. Le Fâñ[1] a conservé le même mot tèn avec une signification équivalente, marquer, séparer par des traits, diviser, d'où actuellement nous avons fait tèn, écrire, ntèn écrit, car pour le Fâñ, l'écriture, qu'il ignore ou plutôt qu'il a oubliée (ce n'est pas le moment de le démontrer), est un dessin et tout ntèn, toute écriture, est bien pour lui un simple dessin. Coïncidence fortuite, diront quelques-uns peut-être. Signalons donc dans le même ordre d'idées:

En égyptien	En fâñ
sèn, couper,	. . . . .
d'où sèbe circoncire	sèle, circoncire, nsèla[2] circoncis,
sèfe couteau	fa, mfe, mfor, sabre, couteau (avec un préfixe m).

[1] Non seulement les Fâñ, mais les Bantous, d'une façon générale, ont conservé la racine téna couper, inciser etc.

[2] Ailleurs dèle, et son dérivé nèla. Tous les dérivés fâñ qui expriment une action de couper, de partager, tels que ekiż couper, eka partager, eko faire une portion, aka morceau, ekiñ, raser, ebiż inciser, se retrouvent également en égyptien sous la même forme.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Et beaucoup de coïncidences pareilles pourraient être de nature à rapprocher le fàñ de l'égyptien, à une époque fort éloignée: elles indiqueraient aussi, avec toutes les réserves voulues, que le totémisme fàñ n'est point un fait isolé à la tribu, mais qu'il s'étend à toutes les tribus bantoues, les dépasse pour se retrouver avec les mêmes caractères chez les peuples guinéens, et se rattache par des mots identiques et des coutumes pareilles, à l'antique totémisme de la Terre de Ur, par conséquent aux âges primitifs du monde[1].

[1] Au Loango (et la même constatation est vraie du pays fàñ) sur les bâtons, les habits des demeures ainsi que sur des colliers ou des ceintures rituels, il y a des tribus qui figurent des signes où l'on peut reconnaître une véritable écriture hiéroglyphique. Cf. R. E. Dennett, op. cit. p. 71.

CHAPITRE IV.

LE TOTEM FÂŃ.

§ 1. Définition et formes diverses, totem réel et totem symbole.

§ 2. Le totem réel. Le totem en lui-même, être réel et tutélaire.
a) Le nom générique. — Ce que c'est l'étotore. — Comment on devient étotore.
b) Les différents noms du totem d'après les différentes formes de totémisme: tableau des formations totémiques.

§ 3. Le totem matérialisé sous une forme tangible et effective.

§ 4. Résumé de ce chapitre. — Tableau des différents totems. — Réfutation de quelques idées erronées. — Nos propositions.

---

§ 1. Définition et formes diverses.

Nous avons affirmé l'existence du totémisme chez les Fâń. Nous allons maintenant donner l'exposé des faits qui nous permettront de la justifier.

La question de l'existence même du totem fâń se pose tout d'abord: s'il existe, s'il a un nom: quel est ce nom, quelle est sa signification? Or, nous nous trouvons en face d'une première difficulté: la notion de totem embrasse tout un ensemble de phénomènes. En effet, nous avons vu précédemment, au Chapitre IIIe de cette Etude, les diverses définitions du totem.

Parmi celles que nous avons données, retenons, avec les réserves déjà faites, la définition de Loret [1] en la complétant par celle de Déchelette [2]; elle nous permettra d'étudier successivement les diverses parties du totémisme intégral chez nos Fâń.

---

[1] L'Egypte au temps du Totémisme. Paris 1906, p. 17.

[2] Manuel d'Archéologie préhistorique. Paris 1896, au mot «totémisme».

[p. 59]

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Le totem est donc, dit Mr. LORET, avant tout:

1° un attribut ethnique, l'enseigne d'un clan,

2° le nom matérialisé du clan, et de là, par un pas que tous les groupements totémiques ont franchi, 3° l'ancêtre ou le parent (fait de la même substance qu'eux-mêmes).

Nous mettons entre parenthèse cette dernière partie qui nous paraît fausse pour les clans bantous.

Le totem, ajoute DÉCHELETTE, c'est l'être ancestral et tutélaire dont il faut se réserver les faveurs. Cet animal devient par la suite l'objet d'un culte constant, et parmi les superstitions antiques des peuples civilisés, un grand nombre, plus ou moins déformées au cours des âges, ont leur racine profonde dans ce culte totémique.

Le totem embrasse donc un ensemble de phénomènes distincts les uns des autres et que ces différents auteurs ne séparent peut-être pas assez. Afin de mettre plus de clarté dans un sujet fort difficile, nous essaierons d'étudier, en deux parties distinctes:

I° Le totem réel,
II° Le totem symbole.

Le totem réel comprendra
- 1° Le totem en lui-même, être réel et tutélaire,
- 2° Le totem concrétisé, matérialisé sous une forme tangible.

Le totem symbole comprendra
- 1° Le totem, attribut ethnique, enseigne du clan, ou matérialisé sous une forme figurative,
- 2° Le totem, nom matérialisé du clan.

Après avoir étudié le totem réel et avant d'étudier le totem symbole, nous devrons, dans un chapitre à part, nous préoccuper du nom du totem réel, d'où ressortiront d'importantes conclusions, puis du culte, du ministre, des lois etc.

Ces divers chapitres nous paraissent absolument nécessaires et répondent à autant d'idées distinctes qui doivent être étudiées successivement sous peine d'inextricables confusions. Prenons en effet le § 1, le totem en lui-même, être réel et tutélaire. Quel est cet être tutélaire? Cet «animal» devient par la suite, nous dit DÉCHELETTE, l'objet d'un culte constant. Tout d'abord, notons que souvent il ne s'agit pas d'un animal; comme le note l'abbé BROS [1], tout être vivant ou inanimé a pu être regardé comme totem par les sauvages. De plus, cet être tutélaire est, non pas un être unique, mais une collectivité: ainsi, par exemple, pour le clan Amvom, le totem est le boa. pris d'une façon collective, et non pas un boa, divinité quelconque, représentée sous cette forme ou par cet attribut, et ayant eu une existence antérieure; pour ce clan, le boa est un animal sacré, non pas parce qu'il est consacré à la divinité comme on l'a dit parfois, mais parce que dans ses veines coule le même sang que celui de l'animal allié au père de la race. On voit immédiatement comme toutes ces notions se mêlent et s'embrouillent, combien il devient difficile de s'y reconnaître.

[1] Religion des peuples non civilisés, p. 219.

D'où les divisions précédentes.

§ 2. Le totem réel. Le totem en lui-même, être réel et tutélaire.

a) Le nom générique.

Le totem en lui-même est tout d'abord un être réel et tutélaire.

De là, deux choses à examiner: c'est un être, réel, ayant son objectivité propre et ne vivant pas seulement, aux yeux du sauvage, d'une vie symbolique ou figurée, simple fruit de son imagination, et purement imaginatif. C'est un être réel.

De plus, il est tutélaire: il faut se concilier ses faveurs; donc cette condition nécessite tout un culte totémique, afin d'obtenir ses bienfaits et d'écarter ou d'éviter sa haine et sa désapprobation. Et du culte, nécessairement, ressortira le sacrifice, seule façon pour le Noir, de «prier», de conjurer, d'obtenir et d'apaiser.

La première question qui se pose est celle-ci: les Fâñ admettent-ils de fait un totem, être réel et tutélaire?

Or, ils l'admettent si bien qu'ils lui donnent un nom et lui rendent un culte, avec ses lois, ses droits, ses rites et ses ministres.

En tant qu'être réel et tutélaire, et surtout parce que tutélaire, le totem peut se désigner, et dans la conversation courante se désigne souvent de fait sous un vocable général; ce vocable s'applique non seulement à lui, mais encore à tout ce qui répond à l'idée générale de protection.

Ce vocable est étotore, c'est-à-dire le Protecteur, le gardien fort, le défenseur ferme. Nous devons noter toutefois que ce nom particularise parfois le nom matérialisé du clan.

Il est assez difficile de donner étymologiquement la signification de ce mot, surtout par rapport à la finale ore que nous retrouvons dans un certain nombre de noms de divinités, telle Omore [1], la personnalité ore. D'après le réduplicatif etoto, du verbe eto, se tenir là, ferme, il semblerait signifier la personne qui se tient ferme, le protecteur. Toutefois, nous n'insisterons pas davantage.

L'étymologie du mot Omore demeure jusqu'ici inconnue. Tout ce que l'on peut affirmer, c'est qu'Omore est une des plus anciennes divinités ou fétiches des Fâń. Bien que rechercher des étymologies plus ou moins douteuses, soit souvent une cause de profondes erreurs, peut-être n'est-il pas sans intérêt de rapprocher ce mot Omore de la déesse chaldéenne Um-uruk [2], en grec Omoroca, déesse de la Mort et du Chaos. De même que l'Omore des Fâń, Um-uruk est représentée dans les sculptures chaldéennes avec divers animaux devant elle, chèvre, lion, aigle etc. Il est au moins curieux de retrouver pareille similitude, peut-être complètement fortuite, dans le nom et les attributs des deux divinités.

Mais l'on ne saurait se contenter de ce mot générique. Il s'applique, en effet, non pas seulement au totem, mais encore, en embrassant l'universalité de son nom, à toute espèce de protecteur, quelque soit le degré d'influence de ce dernier. Il nous est ainsi arrivé nous-même, par exemple, de jouer ce rôle d'étotore.

Sur une rivière du bassin de la Mondah, la rivière Libi, nous arrivâmes, un jour, au temps où un village venait de se tout nouvellement

---

[1] Omore est un esprit féminin considéré comme étant la femme du Ngil. Dans les réceptions d'initiés dans la société secrète qui porte ce même nom de Ngil, les récipiendaires doivent accomplir devant la statue d'Omore un certain nombre d'actes se rapportant à la génération sur lesquels nous n'avons pas à insister ici. La statue d'Omore représente une femme nue ayant à ses pieds un serpent: elle est, dans le temple du Ngil, à la droite de son mari. Les initiés du Ngil sont considérés comme ses enfants.

[2] Fr. Lenormant, Essai de Commentaire de Bérose, p. 88.

construire. Les chefs des différentes abèñe[1] s'étaient réunis dans l'abèñe du chef principal et délibéraient sur une affaire toujours très-importante pour un chef Noir: le nom que devait recevoir le nouveau village. Bien que l'avis du chef principal doive toujours être définitivement prépondérant, les convenances le forcent à écouter avec attention les noms qui sont proposés, et les raisons que chacun apporte en vue de son opinion. La discussion fut vive et animée, chacun parlant à tour de rôle et proposant son appellation. Mais, à la fin, le chef se leva et après avoir résumé, suivant l'usage, les noms qui lui avaient été successivement proposés, il se tourna vers nous et nous invita à nommer le village.

«Ce sera, dit-il à ses hommes, le meilleur moyen de nous entendre et en même temps d'assurer à nos cases un puissant

[1] Nom que porte la maison commune où les guerriers se réunissent pour manger, causer et dormir pendant la journée. Un grand village comprend ordinairement plusieurs abèñe, dont chacune est le centre d'une petite agglomération qui pourrait répondre à ce que nous désignons par quartier. Chaque groupe de familles dont les chefs sont frères ou cousins germains, a son abèñe, et dans l'abèñe, chaque guerrier a droit à l'éto ou siège. Les abèñe de groupe sont placées à l'intérieur du village, et perpendiculairement à la ligne des cases: souvent, elles coupent complètement le village, ne laissant entre les deux rangées de maisons qu'un étroit passage, et constituant autant de quartiers distincts: l'abèñe du chef principal occupe l'extrémité la plus importante à défendre. La constitution normale du village fàñ est celle-ci:

étotore, car chacun sait que les esprits «blancs» l'importent de beaucoup sur les esprits «noirs» et qu'en particulier celui des minissé (missionnaires) est très-bon. J'ai dit.» Tous applaudirent du reste à cet avis, et le nom que nous proposâmes, après quelques instants de réflexion, fut adopté par l'assemblée. Rarement nous vîmes pareille unanimité. Le village porte toujours le même nom, et le chef n'a pas manqué chaque année de venir à la Mission apporter un petit cadeau, sûr d'ailleurs d'en recevoir un plus fort. Il recourt également à son étotore dans toutes ses difficultés d'ordre matériel et spirituel.

Mais toutefois, il ne faudrait nullement conclure de là, et de la similitude du nom, que nous sommes devenus le totem du village: nous verrons tout à l'heure que cette conception est toute autre. Etre le protecteur, même spirituel du chef, pas plus que devenir son frère de sang[1], ne font qu'on en devient le totem, comme quelques-uns l'ont pensé, à tort, semble-t-il.

b) Les différents noms du totem d'après les différentes formes de totémisme.

Si le totémisme était un fait unique et général, un seul nom aurait pu le désigner. Mais tous les auteurs, et avec raison, ont reconnu plusieurs formes de totémisme, d'où nécessairement autant de noms distincts.

Nous venons d'écarter, comme trop général, ce premier nom d'étotore.

---

[1] En disant «devenir son frère de sang», nous entendons le devenir de façon sérieuse et légale. Cette cérémonie n'a rien de commun avec celle qu'ont décrite maints voyageurs et sur laquelle nous aurons à revenir au cours de cette étude. Il arrive fréquemment que certains voyageurs ou commerçants contractent une alliance de sang avec les chefs des pays qu'ils traversent, et retracent ensuite la cérémonie de façon plus ou moins burlesque dans leurs récits. Ils peuvent de plus ajouter que si, à leurs yeux, la cérémonie a été burlesque et le chef noir naïf, la réciproque est exactement vraie. Le chef noir, beaucoup plus malin que ne le suppose le Blanc, consent facilement à cet échange de sang et au besoin le provoque, car pour lui c'est le moyen d'avoir un cadeau. Quant à se croire lié, c'est toute autre chose! Il est très rare que les missionnaires, qui pourtant savent mieux que personne à quoi s'en tenir, fassent ainsi l'échange de sang, mais quand ils le font, c'est sérieux!

Frazer, et à sa suite l'abbé Bros, qui le résume[1], admet seulement trois divisions de totem: le totem de clan, le totem de sexe, le totem individuel.

Pour les Fâñ et les Bantous, il est impossible d'admettre cette division sous une telle forme. Sans doute, on peut reconnaître en premier lieu le totem de clan, du moins quant à son essence. Toutefois, il semble bien préférable d'admettre le totem de «collectivité organisée». Nous disons «organisée» parce qu'une simple collectivité, un groupement quelconque ne saurait avoir son totem unique. Ainsi, par exemple, à Libreville, au Congo, des Fâñ de toutes tribus sont venus s'établir, surtout comme ouvriers, et un bon nombre y ont fondé une famille, conservant en partie leurs anciennes traditions et leurs rites: dans les villages ainsi formés, on trouve des familles appartenant à de nombreuses tribus différentes, parfois même ennemies. Sous l'égide du gouvernement, et surtout le bâton attentif du «policeman» noir, qui connaît ses hommes et les tient à l'œil, ces familles vivent dans une paix relative et constituent vraiment un seul village, mais nullement un groupement organisé, au sens ordinaire du mot. C'est pourquoi, au lieu du nom de totem de clan, nous préférons celui de totem de collectivité organisée, qui a l'avantage de renfermer à la fois la famille, le groupe familial ou clan, la tribu, la nation.

De plus, dans ce même totem de collectivité organisée se rangent tout naturellement les totems de sociétés religieuses, et les totems de sociétés secrètes, qui sont complètement différents du totem de clan.

Pour la plupart des Bantous, pour les Fâñ en particulier, le totem de sexe ne saurait non plus être admis.

En effet, de façon générale, la femme est toujours considérée comme être inférieur, dépendant; jeune fille: elle est en puissance du père; jeune femme: en puissance du mari; veuve: en puissance du fils aîné ou de l'héritier du mari. Mais l'idée de totem impliquant la liberté individuelle, il ne saurait y en avoir pour elle, pas plus que pour l'esclave. Le totem de sexe ne saurait donc être admis.

Nous avons dit «de façon générale». En effet, les femmes ont formé un peu partout des sociétés secrètes d'où les hommes sont absolument exclus, sociétés par lesquelles elles s'efforcent de conserver leurs droits et surtout d'en acquérir de nouveaux. Dans ces sociétés, elles ont copié les sociétés secrètes masculines, et admis, comme celles-ci, des totems individuels, et des totems de société.

[1] Op. cit. p. 220.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Donc, pour résumer clairement ce premier paragraphe de l'entité réelle d'un totem tutélaire, nous pouvons établir les propositions et le tableau suivant:

I° Le totem, en tant qu'être réel et tutélaire, et parce que tutélaire, prend le nom d'étotore, c'est-à-dire d'être protecteur.

II° Ce nom générique étant insuffisant, chaque totem spécifique prend un nom particulier.

III° Frazer et un certain nombre d'auteurs admettent seulement trois formes de totémisme, ou trois classes de totems. Cette classification étant inadmissible pour la tribu fàñ, et croyons-nous, pour beaucoup de tribus bantoues, nous proposons le tableau suivant qui permet d'embrasser toutes les classes, et tous les cas:

Totem générique: Etotore.

I° Totem individuel, admet dans certaines tribus
1° Totem masculin,
2° Totem féminin.

II° Totem de collectivité sociale organisée.
1° Totem national,
2° Totem tribal,
3° Totem de clan, } qui se confondent souvent en pratique.
4° Totem de phratrie, }
5° Totem familial.

III° Totem de collectivité religieuse organisée.
1° Totem d'association ou de confrérie, n'admet pas de totem féminin.
2° Totem de société secrète, admet
1° les totems pour hommes,
2° les totems pour femmes.

Le totem de collectivité religieuse admet pour chaque individu:
1° Le totem individuel,
2° Le totem de grade,
3° Le totem de société.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Comme on le voit par le tableau précédent, nous distinguons entre le totem d'association religieuse ou confrérie, et le totem de société secrète. C'est qu'en effet la première est «légale», consacrée et publique, en ce sens au moins que tout en procédant par sélection d'adeptes, elle agit cependant au grand jour et sous la direction du féticheur; la société secrète, au contraire, est sous la direction du sorcier, ressort, non du culte religieux, mais du culte magique, et lutte dans l'ombre contre la véritable organisation de la tribu. C'est un Etat dans l'Etat.

De plus, la collectivité religieuse, dont la formation est calquée en quelque sorte sur le totem social, admet pour chacun de ses membres un totem individuel, pour chacun de ses grades un totem de grade, pour l'ensemble de la société un totem général de société.

§ 3. Le totem matérialisé sous une forme tangible et effective.

Suivant la personnalité, ou, en d'autres cas, la collectivité à laquelle on a affaire, le nom donné à ce qui représente pour nous l'idée de totem, est différent. Et ainsi le nom change suivant que nous nous trouvons en présence de la nation, prise dans son ensemble, ou mieux de la race, de la tribu, du village, du clan, de la famille ou de l'individu, ou encore en présence d'autres collectivités, telles que les sociétés secrètes et les confréries. De plus, il est encore nécessaire de distinguer entre totem réel et totem matérialisé. D'où il est facile, soit dit en passant, de voir combien les erreurs sont faciles ou même inévitables pour tous ceux qui étudient ces questions sans parfaitement connaître la langue de la tribu, et a fortiori pour ceux qui écrivent d'après les rapports des voyageurs, même bien intentionnés.

Nous avons donc tout d'abord à nous préoccuper du nom du totem, en distinguant soigneusement entre les différents totems qui se présentent, totem de tribu, totem de clan, totem de famille, totem individuel, totem de société secrète, tous différents

a) quant à l'individu ou à la collectivité à laquelle ils s'appliquent.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

b) quant à leur rôle, leurs attributions, leurs ministres et leur culte, bien que l'ensemble constitue le totem proprement dit, objet ou être tutélaire.

Donc, et cette observation est des plus importantes à retenir, tout totem quelqu'il soit, totem de race ou de tribu, de clan ou de famille, d'individu ou de société est: étotore, c'est-à-dire protecteur.

Et ce mot étotore est non seulement un terme générique, mais encore ce que l'on pourrait appeler un qualificatif, car on peut dire également de tout biân ou fétiche qu'il est étotore, en ce sens qu'il est protecteur. Mais comme cette protection est en général concrétisée, le terme étotore s'appliquera de préférence à l'objet «matérialisé» du totem, tout en n'excluant pas de façon absolue les autres sortes de totems.

Une deuxième observation est également aussi importante que nécessaire. Tout totem, quelqu'il soit, est à la fois être tutélaire avec son existence propre; et de plus il est matérialisé dans un objet; cet objet non seulement le représente aux yeux du possesseur, mais encore doit avoir appartenu en quelque sorte à l'être tutélaire lui-même, être une fraction réelle de cet être. Cette matérialisation ne doit pas être confondue avec le totem symbole ou attribut ethnique, qui est tout différent. Tout totem se présentera donc sous ces trois formes nettement séparées; si on ne les distingue pas soigneusement, naîtront les inévitables confusions que l'on remarque souvent.

Le totem est tout d'abord, disons-nous, un être tutélaire. En examinant plus loin la nature de cet être, on comprendra l'erreur de certains auteurs, admettant des objets ou êtres inanimés comme totem. Nous croyons que le totem réel et tutélaire est toujours un être animé; dans les cas, assez rares, où le totem semble au premier abord un être inanimé, par ex. un phénomène naturel, le tonnerre, l'éclair, c'est en réalité une «matérialisation» d'esprit. Cet esprit est alors le véritable totem de la tribu. Mais dans la plupart des cas, lorsqu'on parle d'objets matériels comme totem, ces objets sont, en réalité, non pas le totem réel de la tribu ou de la famille, mais la matérialisation de ce totem.

Tout totem se présente donc sous trois formes distinctes. Un exemple fera mieux sentir l'importance et la nécessité de cette distinction. Prenons une tribu dont le totem est la panthère: les Ebinze sont dans ce cas. Par un artifice de langage dont nous aurons à expliquer la signification exacte, les Ebinze admettent donc la panthère comme ancêtre, non pas réel, mais allié: ce sera le totem tribal, ou mvamayôṅ.

A proprement parler, le mvamayôṅ est la panthère ancêtre, contemporaine du père de la tribu ou esayôṅ, et ayant contracté avec ce dernier une alliance à la fois effective et mystique par un échange de sang créant un lien naturel et religieux. Tous les descendants de cette panthère ancestrale — mais, notons-le bien, les seuls descendants, et non pas toutes les panthères, quelqu'elles soient — sont, par le fait même de leur descendance, considérés comme protecteurs de la tribu qui porte leur nom. En fait, le culte du mvamayôṅ s'adressera donc bien à une collectivité, mais en réalité, ce culte ne s'adressera à cette collectivité qu'en vertu de la descendance du mvamayôṅ primitif, du même sang qui a coulé dans ses veines et qui coule encore dans ses descendants. Ce sang a été uni par l'échange avec l'ancêtre de la tribu, et l'échange se renouvelle encore de temps en temps pour fortifier l'alliance.

Nous reviendrons plus tard sur cette distinction nécessaire entre descendants de l'ancêtre éponyme et non-descendants: dire par exemple que les Ebinze, fils de la panthère, reconnaissent toute panthère comme ancêtre ou allié, n'est donc pas juste. Ils ne reconnaissent que certaines panthères: mais lesquelles? nous verrons également plus loin à qui il revient de les distinguer. Cette confusion a souvent été faite.

Le totem se présente donc sous ce premier aspect d'être réel et tutélaire: c'est le mvamayôṅ.

Mais ce mvamayôṅ, afin de pouvoir être l'objet d'un culte, se matérialise sous deux formes très différentes et distinctes l'une de l'autre: il se matérialise effectivement et symboliquement.

Tout d'abord, il se matérialise effectivement: c'est-à-dire que pour faciliter le culte, il sera représenté par un fragment quelconque ayant appartenu — un os par exemple, si c'est un animal — au mvamayôń lui-même, et comme ce mvamayôń peut être, et est souvent de fait, fort éloigné dans la suite des âges, de temps à autre, dans des fêtes solennelles, et par des rites particuliers, on renouvelle l'alliance avec un descendant «authentique» du mvamayôń primitif, et toujours en supposant que ce soit un animal (le cas est d'ailleurs le même pour tout autre être), un fragment de ce mvamayôń renouvelé constituera la nouvelle matérialisation de l'ancêtre.

Cette matérialisation effective, cette réduction pour ainsi dire de l'ancêtre, prend, lorsqu'il s'agit de la tribu, le nom d'akaméyôń, nom qui comprend d'ailleurs non seulement l'objet matériel du mvamayôń, mais encore tout un ensemble d'objets étroitement reliés à celui-ci, ou destinés à accomplir les rites connexes.

Lorsqu'il s'agit d'un totem autre que le totem tribal, ce totem, être réel, conserve ce même nom de mvame (nous en verrons la signification), et on ajoute, en général (sauf pour les sociétés secrètes et les confréries) au nom mvame le nom de la fraction on de la collectivité auquel il s'adresse: ainsi nous aurons le mvame de famille, de clan, de village etc.

Ce totem, autre que le totem tribal, se matérialise de la même façon, mais au lieu de prendre le nom d'akaméyôń, réservé au seul totem tribal, il reçoit le nom générique de biâń; ce terme, dans son acception la plus générale, signifie «remède» et s'applique à la plupart des «fétiches» ou plutôt des fétiches également matérialisés ou concrétisés. Toutes ces «matérialisations» ou ce que l'on pourrait appeler «figurations réelles» sont bien en effet des «remèdes»: le Noir leur attribue une puissance telle et les invoque en vue d'un effet à produire, par conséquent, d'une façon large, d'un remède.

Enfin, le totem, être réel, se matérialise symboliquement, soit par un signe particulier et conventionnel, marque ethnique représentant plus ou moins le totem réel, soit par un tatouage, soit par un simple symbole, soit enfin par le nom de la tribu. Ce sera d'ailleurs l'objet d'un autre chapitre.

§ 4. Résumé de ce chapitre.

Une observation très importante ne doit pas être perdue de vue: c'est que, dans la grande majorité des cas, et à moins d'avoir besoin d'une désignation précise et expressse, le Fâń désignera toujours son totem par le nom matérialisé (akamayôń ou mvame).

De plus, il faut ajouter que ce totem matérialisé renferme, outre le fragment de totem réel qui en forme toujours la partie principale, un certain nombre d'autres objets, fétiches ou autres, destinés à en augmenter la force et la puissance. Tout Noir, comme on l'a constaté bien des fois, se fie avant tout au nombre. Plus il aura de «gris-gris», plus sa confiance augmentera! Au secours du totem ancestral ou familial, le Fâń appellera donc d'autres esprits, leur fera les sacrifices nécessaires, et dans un sachet d'étoffe, conservera soigneusement le souvenir et la trace de ce sacrifice: ce sachet d'étoffe ira ensuite voisiner le totem matérialisé qui, à ses yeux, ne saurait en recevoir qu'un accroissement de puissance.

D'après tout ce que nous venons de dire, il est facile de voir combien se rangeront désormais sous un ordre parfaitement logique, et d'ailleurs nécessaire, les diverses fonctions du totem. Et ainsi se trouveront justifiées les propositions que nous donnions plus haut, d'après les définitions de Loret et de Déchelette.

Le totem est bien:

1° un attribut ethnique,

2° le nom matérialisé du clan,

3° l'ancêtre ou le parent,

4° l'être tutélaire dont il faut se réserver les faveurs.

Mais au lieu de constituer quatre propositions distinctes et indépendantes entre elles, nous venons de voir comment elles naissent, au contraire, les unes des autres et sont liées par une étroite connexité.

Le tableau qui suit fera à la fois mieux ressortir et mieux comprendre les distinctions qui viennent d'être établies.

TOTEM: nom générique: étotore; nom spécifique suivant chaque totem.

Totem être tutélaire réel.	Totem être tutélaire matérialisé.	Totem symbolisé.
Totem national mvamayôṅ (n'existe plus qu'à l'état de vestiges).	En fait, la nation n'existant pas comme corps constitué, mais chaque tribu ayant sa vie propre et indépendante, le totem national n'a aucune matérialisation.	ndèm ayôṅ.
Totem tribal mvamayôṅ.	akameyôṅ.	edzû.
Totem de clan mvamayum ou mvamayôṅ suivant l'importance du clan.	akameyôṅ.
Totem de village mvamedzal (ordinairement le même que le totem de tribu).
Totem de groupe ou phratrie mvamayum.	biân ngit ou emanandum.
Totem de famille mvamendzâṅ ou souvent mu-mvame.	biâṅ ayâṅ.
Totem individuel mvamésa ou plus souvent étotore.	biâṅ bôme ou biâṅ meluÿe.
Totem d'association mvame (de confrérie religieuse).	biâṅ.
Totem de société secrète mvamakwa.	shole (littér.: celui qui est caché).

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

De ce qui précède, ressort également pourquoi il nous semble difficile d'adopter le sentiment de certains auteurs qui rangent tous les objets totems sous un même titre, sans aucune distinction. Par exemple, dans sa «Religion des peuples non civilisés» Mr. Bros écrit [1]:

«Les objets totems sont fort divers: toutefois les plus fréquents sont des animaux ou des plantes. Ainsi, chez les Iroquois, c'est la tortue, l'ours, le loup . . . etc. En certaines contrées, les divers membres d'un animal eux-mêmes sont totems. Ainsi, l'oreille au Bengale, les yeux de poisson à Samoa etc.»

Il nous semble bien y avoir plutôt là, soit une défense totémique: chez les Fâñ, le cœur de l'animal tué est le morceau réservé au chasseur avec la jambe droite, tandisque la gauche appartient au chef, et la cervelle, les poumons et parties molles aux vieillards etc.), ou bien encore la partie totémique représentant le tout.

«Outre les animaux et les plantes, d'autres objets peuvent être considérés comme totems. En divers endroits d'Australie, le tonnerre, la pluie, une étoile, le vent chaud, le soleil, le miel, l'averse, l'éclair sont des totems. En Amérique, la glace, le tonnerre, la terre, l'eau, le vent, le soleil, la neige, la mer, le sable et la pluie ont le même privilège. En Afrique, on trouve le soleil et la pluie comme totems, dans l'Inde, une constellation et l'écume de la rivière, à Samoa, l'arc-en-ciel et l'étoile filante.»

Ces totems se retrouvent également, sinon tous, du moins une bonne partie, en pays fâñ, mais alors on ne peut en aucune manière, et nous le verrons plus loin, les ranger sous le même titre que les autres totems. En effet, le clan du tigre, par exemple, se considérera bien comme relié par une double parenté, mystique et réelle, au tigre animal, mais jamais il ne viendra à l'esprit d'un Noir du clan de la pluie de se considérer comme lié par une parenté quelconque, mystique ou réelle, à la pluie qui tombe. Ces totems ne sont en réalité que la «matérialisation» du totem réel que l'on ne saurait atteindre autrement, des «matériali-

[1] Religion des peuples non civilisés. Chap. VIII: Totémisme, p. 218—219.

sations» d'un esprit supérieur qui est alors le véritable protecteur et allié du clan, tel par exemple l'esprit des eaux, de la pluie, du tonnerre etc.

«Il existe même des totems couleurs; le rouge est totem chez les Omahas... On trouve des totems plus singuliers encore, le filet par exemple, en Bengali, la tente chez les Kaws etc....»

Là encore, nous estimons qu'il y a confusion entre le totem lui-même et les «couleurs» ou les «objets» qui lui sont consacrés, mais qui ne sont en aucune façon le totem lui-même. Ainsi, à la côte de Guinée, chaque dieu a sa couleur qui est exclusivement réservée, à lui et à ses prêtres, sans qu'on puisse voir là un totem. De même, au Congo, le «bleu» est la couleur réservée au vêtement de deuil, le «blanc» aux funérailles, ce sont des couleurs «réservées», mais non des totems[1].

«De l'énumération de tous ces objets, il ressort que tout être vivant ou inanimé a pu être regardé comme totem par les Sauvages.»

Pour nous, au contraire, nous croyons que pour les Fâñ, et aussi pour tous les Bantous, cette conclusion, prise d'une façon aussi générale, ne saurait être admise, et en regard, nous formulerions volontiers les propositions suivantes, qui d'ailleurs résumeront tout ce chapitre:

I° Le totem est toujours un être vivant et tutélaire.

II° Cet être tutélaire se matérialise en un objet afin de pouvoir manifester sa protection.

III° Cet être tutélaire est ordinairement un animal, plus rarement une plante, plus rarement encore un minéral, auquel d'ailleurs est attribué une vie particulière.

IV° Lorsque le totem est un esprit, il se matérialise ou se concrétise soit dans un phénomène naturel, p. e. le tonnerre, soit dans une manifestation quelconque qui le symbolisera.

V° Le phénomène naturel, par ex. le tonnerre, la foudre, l'arc-en-ciel, se matérialiseront à leur tour, soit par un objet ayant un rapport immédiat avec eux-mêmes, par ex. le mica pour le

[1] Cf. Mgr. Le Roy, op. cit. p. 303.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

tonnerre, certaines «pierres du ciel» pour la foudre et l'éclair, soit par un objet déterminé par le féticheur, vg. certaines pierres tachées de façon déterminée.

Comme on le voit, la confusion entre les différents totems, et l'attribution de cette qualité à toute espèce d'objet, animé ou inanimé, a été surtout déterminée faute de distinguer

1° entre totem réel, et sa matérialisation,

2° entre la matérialisation de l'être vivant et celle de l'esprit qui est pour ainsi dire double.

Nous espérons avoir contribué à mettre un peu de clarté dans cet aperçu général.

CHAPITRE V.

LE NOM DU TOTEM FÂŃ.

§ 1. Difficulté de trouver le nom qui désigne le totem: a) à cause de l'ignorance de la langue, b) de l'ignorance de l'interprète, c) de la mauvaise volonté du Fâń lui-même ou de son ignorance.

§ 2. Spécification du totem.

a) Le nom générique. Tableaux divers de spécification.

b) Le nom propre. Divers cas où on l'emploie 1° dans la vie courante, 2° dans les chants et légendes, 3° dans les appels, 4° dans les cérémonies rituelles. Exemples à l'appui.

---

§ 1. Difficulté de trouver le nom du totem

a) Par ignorance de la langue.

Nous avons vu, d'après le tableau des différents totems, au chapitre précédent, que le nom fâń du totem change suivant que l'on a en vue tel ou tel totem, général ou individuel, de clan ou de société.

En donnant le nom de chacun dans le tableau de la page 72, nous avons, par le fait même, admis la question comme résolue. Mais afin de prouver notre postulat, et aussi de vérifier la vérité de nos assertions, interrogeons maintenant l'indigène lui-même, et faisons notre enquête au milieu des villages fâń. Adressons-nous à un indigène, de préférence à un chef de tribu, car, d'une façon générale, ce sont les chefs qui possèdent le mieux les traditions de la race aussi bien que les traditions de leur famille, et de plus, ils seront, moins que leurs hommes, soumis à une sorte de crainte révérentielle, et redouteront moins la colère des féticheurs.

[p. 76]

Si nous suivons, comme nous en avons été le témoin authentique non seulement pour les interrogations de cette nature, mais pour bien des enquêtes faites auprès des indigènes, si nous suivons, dis-je, la méthode dont on use parfois en pareil cas:

«Quel est, pourrions-nous d'abord demander au chef fâñ, le nom sous lequel tu désignes ton totem?»

A la question ainsi posée, brutalement pour ainsi dire, ou, si l'on préfère, sous sa plus simple expression, il est évident que le Fâñ ne répondrait que par la négative, car il ne comprendrait en aucune façon ce que l'on veut lui demander. Pour obtenir de lui une réponse à une telle question, il faut non seulement lui en traduire le sens, mais procéder par de longues explications, par des synonymes, par des allégories, en employant les mots, les images et les idées à la portée de son fruste interlocuteur.

Ainsi font les missionnaires, qui veulent réellement faire quelque chose de sérieux; pour ma part, j'ai souvent admiré avec quelle patience, avec quelle ténacité, avec quel soin ingénieux de ne blesser en rien leurs auditeurs, des hommes tels que le regretté P. Lejeune, un de ceux qui ont le mieux connu les Fâñ, ou encore le Dr. Nassau, causaient des heures entières dans les abêñe noires pour arriver à démêler la vérité et par là même à produire des livres tels que ceux qu'ils ont écrit.

b) Ignorance de l'interprète.

Mais lorsque ces interrogations sont faites par d'autres Européens, bien que quelques-uns, trop rares, aient déjà une teinte légère de la langue [1], elles le sont au moyen d'interprètes, généralement fort ignorants.

L'interprète, recevant à traduire le mot «totem», ne comprend pas ce que veut dire cette expression; il ne cherchera donc pas à l'expliquer, mais très simplement, il transposera, le mot d'une

[1] Signalons à ce propos, et ce n'est guère à l'honneur de la France, que les cours de langues coloniales africaines y sont des plus rares.

A l'Ecole Coloniale, on professe, il est vrai, le malgache, et une mairie de Paris a ouvert un cours de malinké: c'est tout. Aucune langue de notre immense possession congolaise n'est professée, tandisque, chez les peuples voisins, on trouve, soit à Bruxelles, soit à Berlin, des cours de langues congolaises.

langue dans l'autre sans le changer. Et l'interrogateur inscrira gravement la réponse du Noir, évidemment négative. Conclusion: ils n'ont pas de totem. Que l'on ne s'étonne pas de nous voir revenir sur ce point: par deux fois, j'ai vu des hommes, cependant sérieux, user de cette méthode, et écrire ensuite une relation soi-disant véridique!

Par un procédé analogue, on obtiendrait certes de curieuses réponses d'un Européen. Au Fáñ ainsi interrogé:

Nza a ne «totem» wûia?	Quel est totem tien?
Mè wux!	Je ne comprends pas.
W'à yèm dia totem, wé wuxe?	Tu ne connais pas totem, tu ne comprends pas?
Mà yèm mur ète! Zi a ne?	Je ne connais pas cet homme-là! Quel est-il?
A ne mur a bajele we.	C'est l'homme qui te garde.
Mé ne hamur, wé séra né mur a bajele ma.	Je suis un homme fait, je n'ai pas d'homme qui me garde (i. e. je ne suis pas en tutelle comme un enfant).

Conclusion: ce brave Fáñ n'a pas de totem! puisqu'il n'a aucun homme qui le garde!

Mais avec la même vérité et la même sûreté d'information, un prêtre pourrait demander à un petit chrétien, en l'interrogeant par exemple sur son ange gardien ou son saint protecteur.

«Dis-moi, mon petit ami, as-tu un mvame? — Je ne comprends pas. — Un mvame, c'est-à-dire quelqu'un qui te garde. — Oh! dans ce cas, monsieur, j'ai mon père, ou mon tuteur, ou une famille.»

La conclusions serait exactement la même. Ni ange gardien, ni saint protecteur.

c) Ignorance ou mauvaise volonté du Fáñ lui-même.

Interrogeons donc notre Fáñ en y adjoignant les explications absolument nécessaires pour qu'il comprenne.

«Quel nom porte le totem?» ou plutôt sous quelle périphrase pouvons-nous lui donner une idée approximative et générale du sujet sur lequel nous voulons des explications? Quelque claires que soient ces explications, la question est des plus épineuses et difficiles à résoudre, et cela pour trois raisons principales. En première ligne, et d'une façon générale, le Fáñ, de même que la plupart des Noirs, n'aime pas à généraliser les choses individuelles, à moins qu'elles ne puissent se présenter, et elles se présentent parfois de fait, en masses confuses et pour ainsi dire indéterminées, telles que plantes, oiseaux, poissons, insectes etc. Il aura alors pour les désigner un nom collectif; pour les autres cas, presque toujours, chaque chose aura son nom qui la distinguera nettement, et exclura, pour le Fân, la nécessité et souvent même l'idée d'une dénomination générale. Ce fait, ou, si l'on préfère, cette tournure d'esprit, trouvera surtout son application dans les phénomènes ressortant du domaine de la religion, du culte ou de l'intellectualité pure. Ainsi, pour préciser, les «idoles» en général, au sens du moins que nous attachons à ce mot, n'auront point pour les désigner un mot collectif, mais chaque idole aura son nom particulier. Le Fân passera difficilement de l'idée particulière à l'idée collective. Ainsi, encore, dans sa conception de la création mondiale, Nzame, l'Etre créateur est unique et a seul agi. Donc Nzame est un, et n'étant pas multiple, le vocable qui le désigne ne saurait avoir de pluriel. Aussi, le Noir interrogé sur la formation du pluriel de ce nom, ne sait que répondre, et si on lui demande: «Faut-il dire Bénzame, ou Ménzame, quel est le préfixe à employer pour désigner «les» dieux?» il répond invariablement: «Mais il n'y a pas plusieurs Dieu!»

C'est qu'en effet, outre la difficulté de généraliser l'idée simple, le Noir éprouve encore une difficulté plus grande à la simple abstraction; cette forme si familière à notre esprit: «En supposant que», reste pour son esprit presque absolument fermée. Nous l'avons constaté maintes et maintes fois dans nos écoles. Comment supposer une chose qui n'existe pas! Le Noir est avant tout l'homme du fait, précis, actuel surtout, et non pas l'homme des abstractions, des possibilités. Si donc nous interrogeons le Noir sur le nom générique du totem, il sera tout d'abord difficile de s'entendre.

Puis, vient une deuxième raison: la grande diversité des appellations. Ce nom générique dont nous avons déjà parlé, étotore, le protecteur, s'applique à lui, mais aussi, en de nombreux cas, également à des idées assez différentes, ou du moins à d'autres sujets; nous trouvons à côté de ce premier vocable, d'autres noms qui en certaines circonstances peuvent également lui convenir. Suivant «l'usage» auquel le Noir le destine en ce moment là, il pourra même lui donner un nom avec lequel il a été de fait souvent confondu: le mot biâñ, qui s'applique indifféremment à toute espèce de remède, de prescription médicale, de fétiche protecteur. Tout acte, toute prescription, toute chose même qui surpasse l'intellect du Fâñ, dont il ne peut saisir le sens, est pour lui biâñ. Par exemple, l'acte religieux accompli par l'Européen, le livre de prières du missionnaire, sa croix, les médailles qu'il distribue, en somme tout acte, ou tout objet auquel le Fâñ rattache une idée religieuse. Pour lui, elle tend toujours et ne peut tendre qu'à une seule chose, éloigner une influence bonne ou mauvaise, dégager et appliquer une vertu, bonne pour l'un, néfaste pour l'autre. Et dans ce sens, son totem qui a précisément ce but, est bien biâñ pour lui; nous avons vu précédemment qu'il désignait ainsi l'objet «matérialisé» du totem. Mais ce mot, bien qu'il s'applique au totem, ne le détermine que par rapport aux effets produits; ce n'est pas son nom, pas plus qu'en français le mot «remède» n'est le mot propre de chaque substance curative.

Si nous avons insisté sur ce point, c'est qu'en réalité on se contente trop souvent de ces vagues appellations qui s'appliquent à des choses fort diverses et parfois opposées, d'où d'étranges confusions d'idées. Ainsi, pour en citer encore un exemple, outre son nom général, chaque totem a de plus son nom propre; ce nom varie lui-même suivant qu'on l'emploie dans les chants et légendes des aïeux, ou bien dans les cérémonies cultuelles, au cours des invocations. De là, il est nécessaire de connaître profondément la langue, et non seulement la langue actuelle, mais encore la langue archaïque[1], presque toujours employée dans les chants; on y trouve nombre de mots et d'expressions aujourd'hui tombés en désuétude; de plus, il faut savoir la langue hiératique[1], où un certain nombre de mots sont détournés de leur sens obvie afin d'échapper à la compréhension des non-initiés. Lorsqu'on ne réunit pas ces trois conditions, connaissance approfondie de la langue, connaissance de la langue archaïque, connaissance de la langue hiératique, il est facile d'ignorer nombre de faits cultuels, et par là quelquefois d'arriver à nier même leur existence, par un malentendu regrettable.

[1] Bien que, d'une façon générale, la langue des Fâñ se soit conservée avec une pureté remarquable, on retrouve cependant, dans les chants, les légendes, et surtout les proverbes, les restes de la langue archaïque, qui, à une époque fort éloignée de la nôtre, a été parlée par la race entière. En effet, un certain nombre de ces proverbes sont communs, avec les mêmes mots et les mêmes expressions dans les différents dialectes qui composent aujourd'hui la langue. Les mots de la langue archaïque tendraient, croyons-nous, à la rapprocher du baléké plus que de toute autre langue.

Enfin, la question reste complexe pour une troisième raison. Le Fâñ n'aime pas à parler de sa religion, de ses rites, de son culte. Si vous êtes «initié», vos questions sont oiseuses. Si vous ne l'êtes pas, à quoi bon? — Il se défiera; ce sera son premier mouvement, et presque toujours le seul. Comme Blanc, vous appartenez, tout au moins d'une façon générale pour tous ceux qui ont été en rapport déjà avec l'Européen, à une race qu'il supporte mal. Au reste, il n'a pas eu à s'en louer à bien des égards, et en particulier pour tout ce qui concerne sa religion et ses rites. Là où l'Européen n'a pas encore pénétré, sa réputation l'a cependant précédé, et le Noir admet parfaitement qu'il appartient, même au simple point de vue des idées, à un monde supérieur. Dès lors, pourquoi vouloir faire des questions que vous «devez» parfaitement connaître? La première pensée qui viendra à l'esprit du Fâñ sera qu'on veut lui tendre un piège; aussi, se contentera-t-il souvent de répondre dans les mêmes termes à la question que vous lui aurez posée, s'efforçant de le faire dans le sens qu'il espère

[1] La langue hiératique ne constitue pas une langue à proprement parler, en ce sens que, sauf certains mots, tous les vocables qu'elle emploie se retrouvent dans le langage ordinaire. Mais ces mots sont employés dans un sens tout autre que celui du langage courant; souvent encore, ils deviennent inintelligibles par suite de l'adjonction d'une simple lettre ou d'une particule. C'est un procédé enfantin que nos langues modernes ont parfois renouvelé, tel, par exemple, le »javanais» qui fit un moment fureur à Paris. Dans des langues comme le fâñ ou le nsez, où les monosyllabes jouent un grand rôle, on conçoit combien un tel procédé les rend vite inintelligibles; presque toujours, on ne se contentera pas d'une seule particule, mais on en prendre deux ou trois, par exemple bo pour les personnes, ma pour les choses, etc. Ainsi «le chef veut savoir qui a frappé ces hôtes du village» littéralement «Khuma a yi yèm nza a nga yit byèdzal» deviendra «Khuma bo a yi bo yèmma nza bo a nga bo yit ma byèdzal bo», dont le sens est tout différent.

pouvoir vous être agréable et répondre à votre idée. S'il ne le peut pas, il sourit et demeure coi, imitant

«De Conrart le silence prudent.»

Il se taira, ou s'il parle, ce sera bien pis, ce sera pour essayer de vous donner le change!

§ 2. Spécification du totem.

a) Le nom générique.

Dans le tableau des totems, au chapitre précédent, nous avons vu que l'on pouvait tout d'abord considérer le totem sous un point de vue extrêmement général, sans tenir compte des totems particuliers, ni des effets à obtenir: dans ce sens, il prenait le nom d'étotore, c'est-à-dire le protecteur. Ce mot s'appliquait à toute espèce de protecteur, de gardien, mais plus particulièrement à l'être tutélaire en lui-même.

Dans ce sens général donc, étotore signifiera:

1° toute espèce d'être tutélaire, de gardien;

2° le totem, soit national, soit plus particulièrement encore, individuel, parce qu'il est, par excellence, le gardien, le protecteur.

Si, au lieu de regarder l'essence, on a en vue les effets, les propriétés, ce ne sera plus le totem, être tutélaire, mais le totem matérialisé, concrétisé; il prendra alors un nom générique, biâń, qui, suivant chaque cas et chaque totem de collectivité, se spécifiera pour recevoir une appellation distincte; nous l'avons vu au tableau du chapitre précédent.

Nous aurons donc, au point de vue des noms, cette première distinction:

Etotore, nom généralisé

I.	II.
Considéré comme	Considéré comme
être tutélaire	effets de l'être tutélaire
mvame.	biâń.

D'une façon générale, l'étotore, considéré comme être tutélaire, prend le nom de mvame; nous en verrons tout à l'heure la signification. Considéré, au contraire, au point de vue des effets, il prend le nom de biâñ, c'est-à-dire de remède, d'une façon très-générale.

Suivant la collectivité à laquelle il appartient, chaque mvame adjoint à son nom le nom de cette collectivité, sauf dans les trois cas suivants: la famille, l'individu, la société secrète; nous les indiquerons dans le tableau ci-dessous.

Au point de vue: effets, l'être tutélaire prend le nom de biâñ. Mais ce biâñ se compose de tout un ensemble qu'il importe d'expliquer.

Tout d'abord, suivant chaque mvame, individuel ou de collectivité, le biâñ change de nom. Mais quels que soient le nom qu'il porte et la collectivité à laquelle il appartient, le biâñ totémique se compose toujours de deux éléments distincts:

1° le totem, être tutélaire, matérialisé sous une forme sensible et tangible,

2° un ensemble d'objets qui se rapportent à ce totem matérialisé. Cet ensemble est destiné à le «renforcer», à augmenter l'effet produit.

D'une façon large, les rites qui se rapportent au culte, les paroles consacrées à ce totem, prendront également le même nom.

Chaque mvame, suivant la collectivité à laquelle il appartient, ajoute à son nom celui de cette collectivité. En effet, nous avons vu plus haut que la nation fañ ne se contente pas d'un seul et unique totem, recevant, tantôt les hommages de la nation entière à titre collectif et général, tantôt ceux de chaque individu, en son seul et unique nom, comme culte privé.

Loin d'en être ainsi, chaque fraction constitutive de la tribu aura son totem particulier: de là, outre le totem national, les trois grands totems: tribal, de clan, et familial.

Mais, à côté de ces trois totems, nous en trouvons trois autres encore: le totem individuel, le totem de société secrète et le totem de confrérie, qui en ressortent également.

En effet, le totem individuel ressort du totem familial[1], l'individu n'existant comme tel à ce point de vue qu'en fonction de la famille, cellule qu'il est appelé à fonder lui-même plus tard. D'un autre côté, la confrérie, et sa contre-partie la société secrète, ne sont qu'un organisme, avoué ou non, du clan ou de la tribu; il reconstitue la famille sur une base à la fois plus large et plus étroitement unie, en accueillant les néophytes sans acception d'unité de sang, et en les resserrant sous une autorité plus grande.

[1] Cette assertion est contraire à la théorie de SPENCER; nous la retrouverons plus loin en parlant de l'antiquité du totem fañ.

L'individu est en fonction de la famille, mais en tant seulement que chef futur d'une nouvelle unité sociale; seul, le mâle aura donc son totem dans les circonstances que nous spécifierons plus loin. C'est en vertu de ce principe qu'il nous paraît difficile d'admettre la théorie de VAN GENNEP repoussant le totem individuel: «Je réserve le nom de totem à l'allié animal, végétal, etc. d'un groupe de parents (clan, phratrie etc.) et préfère voir conserver aux alliés et protecteurs animaux, etc. d'individus, leur nom local, nyarong, nagual etc.» [1] Le totem individuel tout différent est du nagual ou du nyarong.

Signalons rapidement les principales différences.

1° Tout individu mâle a son totem; au contraire ceux qui ont un nagual sont rares.

2° Une femme peut avoir et a parfois de fait un nagual; elle n'a jamais de totem (sauf dans le cas particulier de société secrète, mais c'est là un cas extra-légal).

3° Le totem peut être toute sorte d'être animal, végétal, ou minéral; le nagual est toujours un animal: il ne saurait en être autrement. De là également les noms particuliers des totems, suivant chaque fraction sociale, en conservant toutefois toujours le nom générique. Mvame[2] est le nom générique, c'est-à-dire l'ancêtre. Le nom de la tribu étant ayôñ, l'ancêtre de la tribu sera tout naturellement mvam 'ayôñ, et c'est en effet le nom du totem tribal.

Le clan c'est pour nos Fâñ une partie de la tribu, ou mieux la tribu elle-même, détachant en avant une fraction; il conserve donc le même nom d'ayôñ. Mais, dans l'origine, ainsi que nous l'expli-

---

[1] Cf. VAN GENNEP, Tabou et totémisme à Madagascar, p. 303, 1908; FRAZER, Social Origins. London 1903, p. 133.

[2] Mvame, dans son sens propre, signifie l'aïeul, l'ancêtre: mais comme, en pays fâû, et un peu partout, l'ancêtre garde les enfants, et veille sur sa famille, par extension mvame signifie également «protecteur, gardien».

querons un peu plus loin en parlant du développement normal de la tribu, et en fait également, toutes les fois que se fonde un nouveau clan, il se compose tout d'abord d'un seul village; le totem du clan sera en même temps celui du village, et nous aurons alors le protecteur ou l'ancêtre du village (mvame dzal). C'est le nom du totem de clan, lorsque le clan à lui seul constitue un village; sinon ce sera mvam 'ayum, ayum étant le nom du clan.

La troisième division ou fraction de la nation est la famille, ndzâń. Le protecteur de la famille se nommerait donc tout naturellement mvame ndzâń. Mais en réalité, et c'est ce qui confirme bien ce que nous dirons plus tard, la famille étant la cellule sociale par excellence, son mvame est par là même le totem par excellence et n'a pas besoin d'autre appellation. Aussi, couramment, l'appellera-t-on mvame, ou mu-mvama[1], et ce sera, sans hésitation ni besoin d'autre appellation, «le protecteur de la famille». Tout au plus, emploiera-t-on ce terme «mvame ndzâń», lorsque, dans certaines circonstances rares, on voudra le spécifier, en l'opposant à celui d'autres familles. Nous aurons donc simplement mu-mvama, ou mvame, et ce sera le totem familial.

L'individu, avons-nous dit, est en fonction de la famille, et seul, par conséquent, le «mâle» aura son totem. Comme ce protecteur est le père de sa race, lorsque l'individu isolé devra désigner son totem, il n'oubliera pas non plus cette qualité essentielle, et le nommera: le protecteur père, mvamésa: c'est en effet le nom du totem individuel.

Reste enfin le totem de société secrète désigné souvent par le nom générique d'akwa; le protecteur de la société sera par conséquent: Mvam 'akwa; ce sera le nom du totem de société secrète, ou encore, aussi souvent, le nom de la société secrète elle-même.

Nous aurons donc, ainsi, pour tout résumer:

Mvame ayôń, totem de tribu, et de clan développé, c'est-à-dire faisant fonction de tribu, soit que la tribu mère ait disparu, qu'elle soit trop éloignée, ou que le clan comprenne plusieurs villages.

---

[1] Mu-mvama ou mu-mvame, c'est-à-dire la personnalité, l'entité gardienne.

Mvame dzal, totem de clan et de village,

Mvame ayum, totem de clan et de phratrie,

Mvame ou mu-mvama, parfois mvame ndzâñ, totem familial, c'est-à-dire de tous ceux qui se groupent au titre de parenté autour du «père» de famille,

Mvamésa, totem individuel, mais seulement du mâle,

Mvame akwa, totem de société secrète.

D'où nous établirons le tableau suivant:

Etotore ou Protecteur

I. Considéré comme être tutélaire Mvame	II. Considéré comme effet de l'être tutélaire Biâñ
de la nation mvamayôñ	. . biâñ akameyôñ ou simplement akameyôñ
de la tribu mvamayôñ	. . akameyôñ
du clan mvamayum	. . d°
du village mvamedzal	. . d°
de la phratrie mvamayum	. . ngit ou emanandum
de la famille mvamendzâñ . . . . . ou mu-mvame	. . ayâñ
individuel mvamésa . . . . . ou étotore	. . biâñ bôme ou méluÿe
d'association mvame	. . biâñ
d'où avec le nom de l'association mvam 'akhûñ
de société secrète mvamakwa . . . . . ou akwa	. . biâñ šole.
d'où avec le nom de la société akwa 'khûñ [1].

[1] Souvent, pour mieux se dissimuler, les sociétés secrètes portent le même nom que les associations «légales».

Nous résumons donc:

Le totem considéré comme être tutélaire prend le nom de mvame.

Chaque collectivité organisée a son mvame particulier, lequel mvame porte le nom de cette collectivité, afin de pouvoir se distinguer des autres: ainsi, par exemple, le mvame de la tribu, du clan etc.

Le totem considéré au point de vue matérialisé prend d'une façon générale le nom de biâṅ.

Chaque collectivité organisée a son biâṅ particulier, lequel porte un nom différent, suivant chaque collectivité.

Mais le totem considéré à ce point de vue particulier de biâṅ, comporte deux choses bien distinctes:

1° le mvame matérialisé,

2° ce qui se rapporte à cette matérialisation.

b) Le nom propre.

Nous avons vu plus haut qu'une des sources d'erreurs provient souvent du nom propre.

En effet, chaque collectivité organisée a son mvame ou totem particulier. Par conséquent, nous trouverons déjà autant de totems particuliers que la nation comprendra de tribus différentes; dans chaque tribu, il y aura autant de totems particuliers que de collectivités organisées, ou ce qui serait mieux encore, d'unités sociales; nous n'excluons pas ainsi l'individu, qui a son totem dans certaines circonstances déterminées par la loi.

De là, et c'est une conséquence nécessaire, chaque totem possède, d'après sa nature, un nom propre qui le spécifie, et le distingue de tous les autres totems.

Ce nom n'est pas employé d'une façon constante, loin de là! Il est ici très important de distinguer ces cas.

Nous pouvons compter 4 cas principaux:

1° la vie courante ou les circonstances ordinaires de la vie,

2° les chants et légendes des aïeux,

3° les appels directs au protecteur,

4° les cérémonies rituelles.

1° Le nom du totem dans la vie courante.

Dans la vie courante et dans les circonstances ordinaires de la vie, le totem est désigné sous deux noms, d'ailleurs synonymes, esamvama et mu-mvama[1], ou plus simplement mvama ou mvame, tous noms qui ont un même sens.

Mvama, c'est, en effet, le nom qui désigne l'ancêtre, d'une façon collective; il répond à notre mot français «aïeul», mais d'une façon plus générale encore, car il embrasse non seulement les lignes directes de génération ancestrale, mais encore, et plutôt, les lignes collatérales, grands'oncles, arrière grands'oncles etc.; il exclut en même temps la parenté féminine, qui ne compte, au point de vue fàñ, qu'à l'unique point de vue des tabous de race; nous aurons à l'examiner plus tard.

Ce nom mvama provient d'une racine va qui implique, non l'idée de génération, qui est sa ou ba «planter», mais celle de production, d'augmentation, de croissance. Le préfixe m qui s'y adjoint indique l'agent, celui qui fait; il provient originairement, soit d'un pronom personnel, soit du mot mur ou en construction mu, personnalité, être vivant ou ayant une existence similaire, ou encore être non vivant et inerte de sa nature, mais personnifié. C'est donc par une sorte de redondance, familière d'ailleurs au génie de la langue, que les Fàñ désignent souvent le totem par mu-mvama, littéralement la personnalité de celui qui fait croître, l'ancêtre.

Aussi fréquemment que mu-mvama, on dit encore esamvama, littéralement le père ancêtre; notons que si le mot esa désigne en fàñ le père, ce n'est pas nécessairement le père, au sens littéral de ce mot, car c'est alors tare, mais souvent, le père, soit au titre collectif, soit au titre d'honneur. Ainsi, dans ces divers sens, on dira que les missionnaires sont les pères des chrétiens, bésa békré-

---

[1] Dans les tableaux précédents, nous avons écrit mvame: le nom, sans changer aucunement de signification, varie en effet, suivant les tribus, de mvama à mvame. En réalité même, la première syllabe, très fortement frappée, rend la seconde assez indistincte. Comme on l'a fait observer, en fàñ a et e finals ont presque le même son, de même que e et i initiaux, d'où encore de très nombreuses confusions, d'autant que l'o bref a un son presque identique à l'a bref.

tyen, à plus forte raison que Dieu est notre Père, esa waza, que le plus gros des éléphants d'une horde, le plus gros arbre d'une forêt, est l'esa de la troupe, de la forêt.

Le mot mvame s'applique de préférence à la ligne collatérale, ou du moins à la lignée des ancêtres autre que la ligne directe; il repose donc au fond sur une idée toute semblable à celle qui a donné le mot ntèné, ou sœur aînée du grand père, dans le rameau malinké, ou encore le mot otèm lui-même, si nous remontons au mot qui a fait aujourd'hui fortune, puisque nous avons vu que ce mot représente en réalité la «famille».

Mvame, ntèné, otèm (et peut-être toutes les autres appellations que l'on retrouvera chez les autres peuples) proviennent donc au fond d'une seule et même idée et reposent sur le même fondement de parenté. Il est à remarquer que le mot mvame a, en fâñ, la même terminologie que Nzame[1], le nom du Créateur; rechercher ici si les deux racines ont quelque origine commune, nous entraînerait trop loin, et en dehors de notre sujet. Revenons donc au nom du totem et à mvame.

Notons également qu'en employant pour traduire le mot mvame, notre mot français «ancêtre», nous n'entendons nullement dire qu'il y a parenté directe entre l'animal et l'homme. Les pages suivantes indiqueront quelle est, aux yeux du Fâñ, la parenté existant entre lui et l'animal.

Le mot générique mvame est donc seul employé dans le langage usuel, à l'exclusion du nom propre réservé aux cérémonies cultuelles. Le Fâñ exclut délibérément de sa vie courante tout ce qui touche à sa religion et aux phénomènes cultuels, quelle que soit leur nature. Ainsi, prenons un clan dont le totem est le tonnerre qui se manifeste, nzalâñ. Les hommes sont réunis dans l'abèñe, ou maison publique: un coup de tonnerre éclate: «nzalâñ za bam, le tonnerre retentit», dira un homme du clan. «Ah! mvam'o! Ah! l'ancêtre, oh!» ajoutera souvent, et tout au plus, le chef du clan, en employant la particule o, indiquant que l'on s'adresse à la personne (telle: o! nan'o! oh! ma mère, sous-entendu «toi qui me vois, qui me protège»), et dans cette brève exclamation, tout au plus invocation, l'étranger non prévenu n'aura, même s'il l'a remarquée, qu'une vague idée d'interjection quelconque; il pourra croire à un sentiment de peur, tandis qu'au contraire les hommes du clan, et surtout le chef, représentant direct du totem, ne s'y seront pas trompés; ils auront vu là une exclamation rituelle, un appel et un merci à l'ancêtre, se manifestant ainsi à son clan. Plus apparente dans certains cas, beaucoup plus confuse la plupart du temps, nous l'avouons sans hésitation, cette interprétation n'en demeure pas moins certaine. Elle pourra même, et c'est une confirmation, passer à l'état d'habitude; telle est en somme l'exclamation familière à nos langues «mon Dieu», manifestation cultuelle dans l'origine, devenue familière et souvent, de fait, sans aucun sens.

[1] Voir dans Mgr. Le Roy, Religion des Primitifs, à l'appendice, ce qui est dit du mot Nzame et de son origine.

2° Le nom du totem dans les chants et les légendes des aïeux.

Dans les chants et les légendes des aïeux, trois cas se présentent: a) le chanteur est dans sa propre tribu; b) il est dans une tribu étrangère; c) il parle d'une tribu étrangère.

A. Le chanteur retrace dans sa propre tribu, les hauts faits des aïeux et les légendes de la race: toutes les fois qu'il s'agit du totem protecteur de la tribu, il le désigne simplement sous le nom de mvamayôn, parfois d'étotore: il ne saurait en effet y avoir confusion. Cependant, s'il raconte un fait arrivé dans lequel un des héros invoque son totem familial, il appelle alors ce totem par son nom distinctif, c'est-à-dire d'après le nom de l'espèce animale, végétale ou minérale, à laquelle le totem a appartenu, ou encore d'après le phénomène auquel il se rapporte.

B. S'il est dans une tribu étrangère, ou encore s'il parle d'une tribu étrangère, ayant à mentionner son totem ou celui de cette tribu, il suivra la même ligne de conduite. Ainsi, par exemple, supposons que notre chanteur appartient à la tribu des Aigles, les Ebindzü. Dans sa propre tribu, il dira simplement: Ane mvam' a nga bo ana, Mais l'ancêtre agit de la sorte, ou bien encore: An' a nga lè mvama n'évole avole dia, Mais il appela l'ancêtre pour l'aider de son secours.

Dans une tribu étrangère, racontant le même fait, il dira: Ane mvame ndzü a nga bo ana, Mais l'ancêtre Aigle agit de la sorte, ou bien encore: An' a nga lè mvam' ndzü n' évole avole dia, Mais il appela l'ancêtre Aigle pour l'aider de son secours.

C. Si enfin un conteur étranger racontait le même fait (ce qui équivaut évidemment à notre même conteur parlant d'une tribu étrangère) il dirait: Ane ndzü' to a nga lè ndzü n' évole ñe avole dia, Mais cet homme (de la tribu de l')Aigle appela l'Aigle pour l'aider de son secours.

La plupart de ces différentes appellations se retrouvent dans les vieilles légendes de la race.

Ainsi, prenons la légende du Crocodile, légende ancienne à n'en pas douter par les mots employés:

Ngèṅ éto, Nzame a nga lè myèdzal bétshit n' été Temps celui-ci, Dieu il a appelé le maître du village des bêtes pour né ñe.
disputer avec lui.

Ye zè? Esim a mbe oshü, ngan myèdzal a mana Et pourquoi? Quand il était à l'eau, le crocodile chef du village il a bi mur édzal dia ve dzi ñe. Abi foÿo, toÿo na attrapé un homme du village sien et mangé lui. Mauvais certes, parce que mur a mbe né ñe angom, éñe foÿo mu-mvama.
l'homme il était avec lui ami, et lui-même certes ancêtre protecteur.

Ane Nzame a nga zu ñe na: O vaÿa bo ana ye zè? Mur Mais Dieu il a dit lui (que): Tu auras fait ainsi pourquoi? Homme éto a mbe foÿo angom né we mvam'ayôṅ. O mana celui-ci il était certes ami avec toi le protecteur de la tribu. Tu as fini bo nsèm.
faire faute.

Ñina: Me vaÿa wux nzè abi.
Celui-ci (que): J'ai senti faim méchante [1].

Minal! Kos o ne oshü: mé ké shuze we. Bur bévox Mensonge! Le poisson il est dans l'eau; je vais punir toi. Hommes les autres bésésé bé ké dzi we.
tous ils mangeront toi.

---

[1] C'est-à-dire violente.

Ane ñina: Koko, ké dzi ma, mé ne mvam'ayôñ.
Mais celui-ci: Non, ne pas manger moi, je suis protecteur de la nation.

Eki
C'est défendu.

Ane Nzame: Eti foÿo, nge nkus é ne mbèñ nkèl.
Mais Dieu: Vrai certes, mais la flèche elle est au carquois de l'arc [1].

Bur bê ntobe dia né we édzal dia bésésé, bê ké kure afan
Les hommes ne resteront plus avec toi ton village tous, ils te quitteront dans la oya.

forêt loin.

Ane Ngan: Ah! ngongol, me bôñe na, mé tobege étam?
Mais le Crocodile: Ah! pardon, que ferai-je? demeurerai-je donc seul?

Ké bur abî né we, toÿo na mvam'ayôñ a bo abi né
Pas hommes nombreux avec toi, parce que protecteur il fait mal avec bur bia, a dä bo bur nsèm abi.

hommes siens, il trop fait les hommes faute méchante.

Ane bur ye ngan bé mbe ésim ñi abî ké fe
Mais les hommes du crocodile ils étaient temps celui-là beaucoup que encore yèm, bé mana lige édzal mvamayôñ. Mvè nale.

savoir, ils ont fini laisser le village du protecteur. Bien ainsi.

A mana.
C'est fini.

Et tout en nous donnant cette légende qui pourait remonter aux origines, le conteur avait soin d'ajouter: «Et c'est ainsi qu'ont commencé les autres tribus.»

C'est peut-être la réalité. Nous reviendrons sur cette question: elle trouvera tout naturellement sa place lorsque nous parlerons de l'origine du totem.

3° Le nom du totem dans les appels directs au protecteur.

Lorsqu'il y a lieu d'adresser un appel direct au protecteur, ce qui peut se présenter en cas de danger, l'exclamation habituelle est mvame; nous l'avons vu précédemment dans le cas que nous relations du tonnerre. Cependant, dans un cas pressant, le Fàñ désigne également son mvame sous son nom distinctif, c'est-à-dire d'après le nom de l'espèce animale, végétale, minérale etc. à laquelle il a appartenu. Ainsi un Ebifam (c'est-à-dire un homme de la tribu des Ebifam) invoquant dans les circonstances mentionnées le totem de sa tribu, qui est l'insecte coléoptère fam, ou Goliath [1], l'invoquera en disant: «O wéni, o ne fam, o! fam' o! Oh! toi qui es le Fam, oh! Fam, oh!» Presque toujours, dans les cas similaires, c'est ainsi que sera désigné, sous ce nom propre générique, le totem de la tribu. Ce cas se retrouve surtout lorsque le danger est prévu, et non immédiat. Ainsi, nous l'avons entendu bien des fois en pirogue, lorsqu'il s'agissait de franchir un passage dangereux. En guerre, comme on s'adresse alors, de préférence, au totem matérialisé, le nom change: nous le verrons plus loin.

[1] C'est-à-dire j'ai d'autres moyens. Nous disons familièrement ainsi: Il a plus d'un tour en son sac, plus d'une corde à son arc.

4° Le nom du totem dans les cérémonies et rites cultuels.

Le totem, dans les cérémonies et rites cultuels est rarement isolé. En même temps qu'on s'adresse à lui, on s'adressera presque toujours en même temps à l'ensemble, ou mieux à tous les objets qui lui sont toujours joints, sans toutefois se mêler avec lui, ni se confondre: cet ensemble, nous l'avons vu plus haut, porte le nom d'akamayôñ. Nous devrons y revenir tout à l'heure afin d'en expliquer la nature, lorsque nous parlerons de l'objet «matérialisé» du totem, tel qu'il se présente pour les besoins du culte.

L'ensemble des objets entourant le totem, et le totem lui-même, porte donc le nom d'akamayôñ, celui qui accompagne la nation, et seul le chef a le droit de le porter. Mais, dans les cérémonies, il arrive fréquemment que l'on s'adresse uniquement à l'ancêtre de la tribu, ancêtre protecteur évidemment, et non père de la race; d'où pour le désigner, nécessité d'un nom propre. Ce nom sera, en principe, le nom de l'animal ou du phénomène, ou encore de l'objet qui le matérialise. Tel, par exemple, khul ésa, nzoẋ ésa,

[1] Goliath (Chelorrhina polyphemes), magnifique insecte d'un vert sombre à taches blanches sur les élytres. Deux autres espèces de Scarabéides voisines du Goliath, le Mécynorrhina Savagei rayé de brun et de vert, et le Dicranorrhina Micans, d'un vert métallique brillant, ne sont jamais considérées comme totems, mais cependant très recherchées des féticheurs, surtout le Mécynorrhina; ils les emploient dans la composition de plusieurs remèdes, en particulier contre la blennorrhagie, ou encore dans certaines circonstances préliminaires des initiations aux sociétés secrètes. Leur rôle est alors analogue à celui des Cantharides.

mvin ésa, la tortue mère, l'éléphant père, l'antilope père, et c'est le cas le plus fréquent.

Dans les cérémonies et rites cultuels, lorsqu'on ne désigne pas le totem sous son nom propre, on se sert d'une périphrase, esa a ne ošu, celui qui est devant, c'est-à-dire au commencement, qui est, car il demeure; esa a mbe ošu, celui qui était à l'origine, a une signification particulière; on l'emploie lorsqu'on veut désigner à part l'ancêtre primitif, cas fort rare, et qui arrive lorsqu'on veut, par exemple, préciser l'ancêtre éponyme choisi par Nzame lui-même. Presque toujours, on choisit le nom: mvam'ayôń, l'ancêtre de la tribu; le mot ayôń désigne la tribu avec l'ensemble des clans et familles qui la composent, et l'ensemble des tribus constitue la «nation» fàń; ce mot collectif n'a pas son équivalent en langue indigène; le mot ayôń désigne à la fois la tribu et le peuple, quelque soit d'ailleurs le nombre de tribus que le composent.

Dans les chants rituels, et nous en donnerons plus tard quelques-uns, on appelle au contraire le mvamayôń par son nom. Tel, le chant du mvamayôń dans la tribu ébifam: «Wéni, Fam, o ne mvamayôń, mia lè we, Toi, Goliath, qui est le protecteur de la tribu, je t'appelle.»

Dans les cérémonies, on emploie de préférence ésa a ne ošů et rarement mvamayôń. Ainsi, à la fin de l'initiation, le chef de la tribu appelle le jeune initié; il lui apprend les noms des crânes des aïeux, puis à les reconnaître les uns des autres sans hésiter; c'est chose parfois assez difficile, car seule la calotte crânienne est conservée; pour peu qu'il s'en trouve une vingtaine, les différences qui les distinguent ne sont pas tellement caractéristiques que les distinguer au premier abord soit facile; il ajoute ensuite, en montrant un fragment d'os ou fragment quelconque de végétal ou minéral, soigneusement placé près des crânes et recevant mêmes honneurs qu'eux:

Et ceci, comment l'appelles-tu?	Dzam ěto, ba lè zo na zè?
Je ne sais pas.	Mâ yòm.
Je vais te l'apprendre. Sois attentif.	Mí ki yéyele we. Mélo.
Je suis attentif (littér. oreilles).	Mélo.
Cette chose était avant, elle est et elle sera.	Dzam ěto a mbe oshů, dzam ěto a ne, dzam ěto a ki tobe.

Je suis attentif.	Mélo.
Ton père Sékuma[1] l'a vu, et le père de la race et je le vois.	Eso Sékuma a nga yèn ve ésayôñ[2], ve mo.
Je suis attentif.	Mélo.
Le père de la tribu est là, tu vois le protecteur, tu connais le mystère des choses.	Esayôñ vana, mvamayôñ vana, wa yèm ewèmpôñ dzom.
Je suis attentif.	Mélo,

Puis le chef tourne autour des crânes des ancêtres et les asperge de sang, ainsi que les fragments du mvamayôñ ou protecteur de la tribu, en ajoutant ces mots dont le sens me paraît très difficile:

Méki mé nduria obuɨ, ndèɨe ké vaɨa bo miduɨ,
Le sang est ? ? que le ndèɨe? ne fasse pas de tromperies, mur a ne oshü a nga kèze bur mitshoɨèle ve yèm.

le protecteur a donné aux hommes ? pour connaître.

[1] Sékuma est dans la théogonie fàñ le premier de tous les hommes: Au commencement, Dieu a fait toutes choses, puis il a fait Sékuma, et Sékuma fut le père des hommes: Mélu méshushus (littér. les jours les tout premiers) Nzame a nga vel mam méséé, an' a nga bo Sékuma, ans Sékuma a to ém bur béééé. A ce sujet, il serait peut-être intéressant de remarquer que les Fàn, en parlant de la création de toutes choses, emploient le mot vel qui signifie exactement «créer», «faire avec rien», et en parlant de l'homme, bo qui signifie au contraire «faire avec quelque chose».

[2] Notons en passant ce mot esayôñ, le père vrai de la race; nous le retrouverons tout à l'heure.

CHAPITRE VI.

LE TOTEM RÉEL, ETRE TUTÉLAIRE OU MVAMAYÔÑ.

§ 1. Notion du mvamayôñ. — Différence entre le mvamayôñ et l'ezogôñ. — Discussion de cette théorie.

§ 2. Existence et nature du mvamayôñ. a) L'existence et ce qui en résulte. — b) Nature du mvamayôñ, animal, végétal, minéral, et phénomène naturel.

§ 3. Les différents totems suivant les différentes collectivités organisées.

a) Le totem national. — Eléphant et Crocodile. Une conversation indigène sur les «forces» respectives des divers totems.

b) Le totem tribal: ce qu'il faut entendre par ce mot: différence entre clan et tribu. — La formation de la tribu. Erreurs géographiques et leurs causes; le rôle important des généalogies. — Comment reconnaître de façon précise s'il y a «tribu».

c) Le totem de clan. — Désagrégation de la tribu, formation du clan. Exception à la forme habituelle de désagrégation. Formation du totem de clan. Confusion résultant des lois de cette formation.

d) Le totem familial. — La famille, cellule sociale de la tribu fâ. Les idées d'Arcin sur la formation de la famille.

e) Le totem individuel. Sa valeur. — Pourquoi nous n'admettons pas les idées de Frazer.

f) Le totem de confrérie et de société secrète. Différence entre fétiseur et sorcier. Explication de ces deux mots. — Raisons de l'établissement des sociétés secrètes de fétiseurs et de sorciers.

§ 1. La notion du mvamayôñ.

Dans le chant rituel qui termine le chapitre précédent nous avons vu apparaître deux mots qu'il importe absolument de spécifier: Le mvamayôñ, et l'esayôñ.

Le mvamayôñ, notons-le tout d'abord, est l'ancêtre de la tribu, mais non pas, au point précis, d'après la signification exacte que nous attachons à ce mot. En effet, pour cette signification exacte et précise, pour désigner l'ancêtre réel d'où la tribu descend tout entière, les Fâñ ont un autre mot, et pour désigner cette idée ce mot est absolument unique; c'est: esayôñ, le père de la race. Le mvamayôñ, lui, est non pas l'ancêtre direct, le père de la race au sens propre du mot, mais seulement l'ancêtre éponyme du père réel de la tribu.

Les Fâñ ont cette conception très nette[1], comme nous avons pu nous en assurer maintes fois, et ils ne confondent nullement mvamayôñ et esayôñ. Quand ils disent du mvamayôñ: «c'est le père, c'est la souche de notre tribu», et comme eux nous employons ce mot, ils n'entendent donc nullement dire par là qu'ils descendent du mvamayôñ par génération effective et réelle, mais bien qu'il y a parenté collatérale, parenté provenant de deux sources, l'une directe, en quelque sorte, par échange et transfusion de sang, comme nous aurons à nous en préoccuper plus loin, parenté réelle, donc, et l'autre, spirituelle, impliquant protection effective, mais d'ordre spirituel, résultat d'un lien à la fois corporel et mystique.

Il y aura donc, pour nous résumer, entre l'esayôñ et la tribu actuelle, descendance directe et lien du sang par transmission, d'où protection efficace, mais plutôt au point de vue particulier de protection effective de la tribu elle-même et de ses membres, ou, si l'on préfère, et ce sera plus juste encore, protection effective de la tribu quant à son existence en tant que tribu, de façon à lui garder sa place et son rang dans l'ensemble de la nation, à assurer sa prospérité matérielle, sa fécondité. Ce dernier but pourrait en somme être regardé comme le but principal du culte de l'esayôñ, puisque de là dépend à la fois la «perpétuité» de la tribu, et par là même, la «perpétuité» du culte et des honneurs rendus à l'esayôñ, honneurs qui le suivent de l'autre côté de la tombe et le préservent de l'anéantissement ou plutôt, de la fusion dans la masse anonyme et indéterminée des âmes privées de sépulture et d'honneurs funèbres, car les âmes, dans la conception fàñ, ne s'anéantissent pas au sens strict du mot [1].

[1] Les tribus voisines des Fâñ, et dont quelques-unes ne sont que de très loin apparentées avec eux, tels les Bassêké, sont également très affirmatifs sur ce point.

Au contraire, entre le mvamayôñ et la tribu, il y aura lien réel résultat du sang, mais plutôt lien assurant l'existence de la tribu au point de vue «ensemble», «constitution», en établissant la perpétuité des rites et du culte par un ensemble de prescriptions et de défenses totémiques, destinées, pour la plupart, à assurer l'existence de la race, à en constituer un tout homogène, en ralliant toutes les prescriptions à un centre commun et en confirmant par là même un principe d'autorité que sa nature rend intangible, et surtout inchangeable et immuable, indépendant des hommes et des événements. C'est ce qui constitue même, nous le verrons, la différence entre tabou et totem, l'un invariable, l'autre dépendant des chefs existants, et de là, variable, l'un durable, l'autre au contraire transitoire.

De là également nous semble ressortir l'erreur ou l'exagération — tout au moins pour la tribu fàñ, et l'ensemble des tribus voisines, ce qui implique cependant une idée générale —, l'erreur ou l'exagération, disons-nous, de certaines idées émises par plusieurs auteurs qui ont voulu confondre l'existence parallèle de ces deux ordres de phénomènes collatéraux et coexistants, mais chacun avec leur existence propre et particulière, ancêtre réel et ancêtre éponyme, esayôñ et mvamayôñ. Nous avons d'ailleurs montré plus haut la grande difficulté de ces études, même pour ceux qui sont sur les lieux mêmes, et à fortiori pour ceux qui sont éloignés et n'ont que des documents à leur disposition.

[1] Nous verrons plus tard en parlant de la conception de l'âme fàñ que les âmes se fusionnent plus tard avec les étoiles, étant lumière comme celles-ci. C'est une conception analogue aux croyances égyptiennes. Voir à ce sujet Maspéro, Bibliothèque égyptologique, t. I, p. 156; t. II, p. 19, 20. — Conf. également Virgili, Géogr. IV 227 pour une époque plus récente.

Ainsi, en particulier, nous ne saurions souscrire à ce que dit l'abbé Baos[1] en parlant des caractères du totémisme: «Le totémisme est une alliance tantôt considérée comme provenant de l'origine, et assimilée par là même au lien familial. Ainsi le clan de la tortue chez les Iroquois descend de la tortue ... En Sénégambie chaque famille descend de l'animal totem, etc. Parfois, par delà l'animal totem, on conçoit une femme qui lui a donné le jour: cela compliqtue, mais ne change pas le lien de descendance (ce qui nous semble bien étrange). Chez les Moquis, le clan descend d'un serpent totem mis au monde par une femme. Dans l'Afrique occidentale le crocodile, le singe, le boa, le cochon sauvage ont même origine.»

C'est d'ailleurs également l'opinion de Reinach écrivant: «Soit, par exemple, un clan ayant pour totem le serpent: les membres de ce clan se qualifieront de «serpents», raconteront qu'ils descendent d'un serpent, s'abstiendront de tuer les serpents, élèveront des serpents familiers, s'en serviront pour interroger l'avenir etc.»[2]

Pour nous, qui avons habité longtemps l'Afrique occidentale et étudié spécialement ces matières, nous nous permettons de ne pas être du même avis. Ainsi, pour ne citer qu'un cas, dans leurs légendes sur la création, Fâñ, Mpongwé, Bésèx, et toutes les tribus alliées sont unanimes à admettre qu'en première ligne Dieu créa les hommes noirs, en commençant par la tribu à laquelle ils appartiennent eux-mêmes, puis il créa les singes, après les singes, les nains ou négrilles, puis enfin les autres animaux. Toutes les légendes cosmogoniques représentent les hommes de l'origine vivant dans leurs villages et également les animaux vivant en villages sous l'autorité du Créateur. Les légendes et les croyances totémiques sont certainement postérieures, mais toutes parlent d'alliance avec l'animal, et non de naissance. Toutes les tribus que nous venons de citer, et ce point est important à remarquer, vous diront, suivant le cas: «Nous sommes fils du serpent, de la tortue, etc.» et tout aussi bien: «C'est le Créateur qui nous a faits, nous autres hommes, nous sommes fils de Nzame.»

En parlant dans un chapitre spécial de l'origine du totémisme fâñ, nous aurons l'occasion de traiter plus à fond cette importante question.

[1] A. Baos, op. cit. p. 222. [2] S. Reinach, Cultes, Mythes et Religions I, p. 9.

§ 2. Existence et nature du mvamayôñ ou totem tribual.

a) Existence du mvamayôñ.

Nous avons vu que le totem, considéré comme être tutélaire, portait, d'une façon générale, le nom de mvame, quelque soit d'ailleurs la collectivité organisée dont il était le protecteur reconnu. Le mvamayôñ ou totem tribual peut à juste raison être considéré comme type, car la collectivité organisée qu'il représente, la tribu, est l'organisme social le plus en vue, et de plus, tout ce que nous dirons de lui peut, avec les restrictions nécessaires, s'adapter aux autres mvame de collectivité.

Nous avons tout d'abord à prouver son existence.

Le mvamayôñ ou totem ancêtre existe, au point de vue naturellement de l'opinion fañ. Cette existence résulte nécessairement du nom qui lui est donné et des fonctions de gardien, de protecteur, qui lui sont assignées, fonctions qui par là même lui assurent, non pas une existence d'autrefois, perdue dans les traditions de la race ou dans les légendes plus ou moins historiques de la tribu, n'existant en somme qu'à l'état de souvenir plus ou moins persistant, plus ou moins réel, en un mot de mythe jouissant seulement d'une existence vague et indéterminée, ou mêlée à d'autres existences —, mais au contraire, vivant actuellement de son existence propre et réelle, existence effective, mais dont la qualité principale et surtout importante est d'être agissante. En effet, de là résulte le culte et sa nécessité. Nzame, considéré comme créateur, n'agissant pas «actuellement», car son rôle est réservé au passé et à l'avenir, n'a pas par là même besoin de culte. Or, le Noir, que ce soit dans sa vie religieuse ou dans sa vie sociale, a toujours comme mobile de ses actes le grand principe «donnant, donnant», et la règle de ses actes est, on pourrait le dire, la réciprocité: do ut des. Pour lui, de même qu'en politique, la générosité est une vertu négative, plutôt nuisible qu'utile. Aussi, ses actes de générosité proprement dite seront, quoi qu'on en ait pensé, assez rares, et en tout cas des actes «individuels» dont il faudrait souvent, de plus, bien connaître le motif, et être au courant des usages reçus avant de se prononcer.

Nzame agit, nous venons de le dire, dans le passé et dans le futur. Par là même son culte sera réservé au passé et au futur. Le mvamayôñ, au contraire, agit dans le présent: il aura donc besoin d'un culte présent, et afin d'obtenir ses faveurs ou de détourner son courroux, le Fâñ ne le lui marchandera pas.

b) Nature du mvamayôñ.

Le totem — et il demeure bien entendu qu'en employant ce mot, nous désignons, non pas ce qui désigne l'ensemble du totem, être réel et être matérialisé, mais simplement l'être tutélaire vivant et agissant, que les Fâñ appellent mvame — le totem, disons-nous, se présente, à notre point de vue, sous trois aspects différents, ou encore appartenant à trois ordres distincts de phénomènes: il sera être vivant, être inanimé,

phénomène naturel.

En employant les deux dernières qualifications, nous ne contrevenons nullement à ce que nous disions plus haut: le totem est un être tutélaire, vivant. En effet, en parlant de ces trois aspects, nous nous plaçons uniquement à notre point de vue européen, à notre conception plus ou moins scientifique de l'ordre naturel. Pour le Fâñ, le minéral a tout aussi bien sa vie que le végétal: ce qui apparaît aux yeux n'est que le substratum, sa matière inerte et non agissante par elle-même, mais habitée et inspirée soit par un esprit, soit par une vertu quelconque, théorie que nous aurons l'occasion de développer en parlant du fétichisme. Quant au troisième cas, le phénomène naturel, c'est, nous l'avons déjà dit, un simple substratum ou, en d'autres cas, le moyen que prend un esprit supérieur pour se manifester à l'homme.

1° Totem être vivant.

Le mvamayôñ sera donc en première ligne un être vivant, c'est-à-dire un être manifestant sa vie au dehors, soit par des fonctions ressemblant aux nôtres, et tel sera l'animal, soit par des fonctions de simple croissance et aussi d'action sur l'organisme, et tel sera le végétal. Notons tout d'abord que dans l'immense majorité des cas, il appartiendra au monde animal, et que par une conséquence naturelle, il aura son représentant dans les autres catégories en des cas infiniment plus rares.

Totem animal. — Il appartiendra donc d'abord au monde animal. Ce sera

1° un être vivant sur terre, animal au sens propre du mot, reptile ou insecte, mollusque, coquillage terrestre même,

2° un être vivant en l'air, comme les oiseaux, les insectes ailés,

3° un être vivant dans l'eau, comme les poissons et certains reptiles plutôt aquatiques.

Totem végétal. — Dans certains clans, le totem appartiendra au monde végétal, de préférence un arbre, très rarement une plante, encore plus rarement une portion d'arbre et de plante, feuille, rameau ou écorce, mais qui encore dans ce cas sera prise pour le végétal entier.

2° Totem être inanimé.

Le totem appartiendra parfois au monde minéral, tel le fer ou le mica, mais sous certains aspects et sous certaines conditions de lieu ou d'origine. Dans ce cas, de même que dans le suivant, il faut nécessairement observer tout d'abord s'il s'agit du mvamayôn lui-même ou de la simple matérialisation du totem, comme nous l'avons fait remarquer au II° des tableaux du chapitre précédent. Dans ce cas, qui se présente de temps à autre, il ne s'agit pas alors du mvame lui-même, mais du biân étotore, c'est-à-dire de sa matérialisation. En admettant au contraire que ce soit bien le mvame lui-même, c'est alors une matérialisation ou encore une manifestation transitoire d'un être animé appartenant à un monde supérieur, ou au monde de l'au-delà, et dans ce cas, on pourrait dire avec plus de raison peut-être que le totem est alors d'ordre spirituel.

Nous donnerons plus loin des exemples de ces cas.

Toutefois, il nous semble intéressant de noter dès maintenant qu'ils nous paraissent aller, aussi bien que les cas suivants du totem phénomène naturel, contre la théorie de Frazer [1], d'après lequel le totem serait l'animal, le végétal, ou l'objet inanimé dans lequel un individu pourrait déposer son âme afin de se rendre invulnérable; et cependant cette âme, ainsi enfermée dans un être, ou un objet extérieur et lointain, conserve des relations très étroites avec le corps auquel elle appartient. Si l'être ou l'objet où elle se trouve enfermée, subit quelque atteinte, l'individu à qui elle appartient, souffre; si cet être ou cet objet est détruit, l'individu meurt.

[1] Le Rameau d'or (Golden Bough) Trad. franç. T. II, p. 527 et ss.

Vraie en la plupart des points du «nagualisme» fâñ, cette théorie ne l'est pas du «totémisme» fâñ. En effet, il attribue nettement aux esprits supérieurs certains totems, et les esprits supérieurs n'ont pas d'âme à y déposer: l'homme seul est composé d'un corps et d'une âme, ñul né nsissim: quant l'esprit agit, c'est par lui-même et effectivement, sans pouvoir pour ainsi dire se dédoubler car il est simple. Le Fâñ admet, au contraire, très bien ce dédoublement de l'homme, tout aussi bien d'ailleurs que de l'animal.

3° Totem phénomène naturel.

Parfois enfin le totem peut être, en fait, un phénomène naturel, mais de droit encore, dans ce cas, nécessairement matérialisé.

En parlant plus loin des différents totems de tribus et de clans, et en les énumérant, nous donnerons par là-même des exemples à l'appui.

Il faut d'ailleurs remarquer que c'est un cas plutôt rare, et que nous ne trouvons pas dans la «tribu» proprement dite, mais seulement dans le «clan» où la formation du totem est différente, du moins subordonnée davantage aux phénomènes naturels qui peuvent se produire.

On trouve également ce totem dans les totems individuels. Ainsi il pourra arriver que des jumeaux aient l'arc en ciel pour totem individuel, totem résultant de ce qu'ils sont considérés comme fils du ciel, de même d'ailleurs que dans de nombreuses tribus bantoues[1]. Cette question sera à étudier en parlant des éki ou défenses totémiques.

---

[1] Cf. JUNOD, Les Baronga. Neufchâtel 1898, p. 412 et ss.

§ 3. Les différents totems suivant les différentes collectivités organisées.

a) Le totem national.

Nous avons vu au commencement de cette étude que la nation fân se partageait à l'heure actuelle en un certain nombre de groupes, lesquels se subdivisent eux-mêmes en tribus, puis en clans et en sous-clans. Une première interrogation se pose alors: Existe-t-il un totem national, et dans ce cas, quel est-il?

A cette demande, la réponse est très simple: A l'heure actuelle, en tant que peuple, les Fân n'ont point de totem général, admis par toutes les tribus comme tel, ou du moins, malgré toutes nos recherches à ce sujet, nous n'avons pu en trouver. Donc, avec quelque certitude, et sous réserve de recherches ultérieures qui nous semblent très-problématiques, nous croyons pouvoir dire:

A l'heure actuelle le totem national n'existe pas.

Mais la question peut se poser sous une autre forme: A-t-il existé un totem national et dans ce cas, quel était-il? A cette question, nous croyons pouvoir répondre, en nous appuyant sur les légendes: Oui, il a existé un totem national.

Mais quel était-il? Cette question nous paraît difficile à résoudre dans l'état actuel de nos connaissances.

Nous voyons, en effet, maintenant chaque groupe fân composé de tribus en nombre fort variable: mais au moyen des généalogies, comme nous l'expliquerons plus loin, ces tribus se resserrent peu à peu, de façon à indiquer qu'à l'origine elles ont dû, et la chose est évidente, se réduire à un très petit nombre. Nos moyens actuels d'investigation les réduisent à une soixantaine environ, mais les légendes et les récits en remontant beaucoup plus haut, vers les origines de la race, en restreignent singulièrement le nombre, et le réduisent à deux seulement: les fils de l'éléphant et les fils du crocodile.

En traitant de l'origine du totem, nous traiterons tout naturellement de ces légendes.

A l'origine donc de la nation, ou tout au moins si haut que nous puissions remonter, nous rencontrons seulement deux totems, Nzoẓ, l'éléphant, et Ngan, le crocodile. Auquel des deux appartient la priorité? Impossible de le préciser.

Nous rencontrons deux totems: Nzoẓ et Ngan. Ce choix parmi tous les animaux semble d'autant plus naturel et plus significatif que l'un, le Ngan, nous est donné par les légendes bétsi, et l'autre, Nzoẓ, par les légendes méké. Or, pour nous, et comme nous avons essayé de le démontrer en notre Etude précédente sur les Fâñ, les Bétsi, hommes des vallées du Haut Nil, devaient tout naturellement avoir beaucoup plus souvent affaire au crocodile, habitant des eaux, que les Méké, hommes des plateaux, qui y trouvaient l'éléphant en abondance. Les Fôñ, habitant le profond hinterland du pays fâñ, admettent également le Nzoẓ comme totem principal. On pourrait peut-être dire avec quelque raison que les Fâñ ont eu d'abord le Ngan comme totem principal; puis chassés des vallées du Hᵗ Nil, ils se sont réfugiés dans la forêt, où plus naturellement le Nzoẓ est devenu leur totem.

Quoiqu'il en soit de cette déduction que nous ne présentons nullement comme certaine ou démontrée, mais à l'état de simple proposition, il n'en reste pas moins acquis que chez les Bétsi, le Ngan est considéré comme le mvamayôñ par excellence ou père de la race, et chez les Méké, pareil rôle est joué par l'éléphant, tout aussi bien que chez les Fôñ.

Ainsi me le disait jadis le vieux chef bétsi Etûtû, un jour que nous parlions ensemble des origines lointaines de sa race, sur laquelle, grand voyageur, il me donnait de curieux détails.

«Ton mvamayôñ, lui demandai-je, est-il le plus fort de tous?

— Oh! les mvamayôñ ne se battent pas entre eux: le mvamayôñ Mvul (antilope) est aussi fort que le mvamayôñ Nzoẓ (éléphant).

— Mais protègent-ils de même façon?

— Oh! cela non! Le père de toute la race, tu comprends bien, protège davantage.

— Et quel est ce père de la race?

— Mais, tu le sais bien, c'est le plus vieux de tous.

— Et quel est ce plus vieux?

— Pourquoi veux-tu me tromper! Tu sais bien que le plus vieux de tous, c'est le père crocodile. Il est au dessus, beaucoup. Il pourrait «manger» tous les autres.

— Mais pourquoi n'avez-vous pas tous le même mvamayôṅ? vous seriez bien plus unis.

— Oh! cela n'est pas possible. Tous tes enfants, à toi, ont-ils la même tête? (i. e. même intelligence). Tous les arbres de la forêt sont-ils même chose? Nzame, le Créateur, a dit à l'un: Tu pousseras sans fruits (bons à manger). et à l'autre: Toi, tu en auras. Et tous sont des arbres! Ainsi des mvamayôṅ. Mais celui qui est tout à fait au devant (ošušu), c'est Ngan Esa. Mais il ne faut pas parler de cela ici: entre vieillards, c'est bien.»

Mézu méñamur[1] mémvèye méñamur.

Un homme fait ne doit parler de choses sérieuses qu'à un homme fait.

On trouve aussi chez les Méké pareilles croyances au sujet de l'éléphant. Mais ici cependant nous pouvons noter une différence. Tandisque les Bétsi ont également un grand respect pour l'éléphant, les Méké n'en ont aucun pour le crocodile, et nulle de leurs tribus, je crois, ne l'a pour totem. Peut-être néanmoins faudrait-il y voir, non pas une question de priorité, mais plutôt une haine de race, remontant à la séparation des deux groupes, aux origines de la race.

Donc, pour résumer:

A l'heure actuelle, il n'existe pas de mvamayôṅ national.

Le mvamayôṅ national a probablement existé: ce fut l'éléphant ou le crocodile: on ne peut dire avec certitude auquel remonte la priorité: la probabilité est pour le crocodile.

---

[1] Ñamur, que l'on traduit souvent à tort par vieillard, désigne au contraire l'homme dans la plénitude de sa force. Mur signifie «la personnalité», et la particule ña indique l'idée de plénitude ou de supériorité. Notre mot français «maître» répond assez bien à cette signification. Ainsi ñamur, un homme fait, un ancien, un maître homme, ñanda, une maison étonnante, ñanzali, un fusil supérieur, un maître fusil. Le vieillard à cheveux blancs est rarement estimé au pays fâñ. Dès qu'il n'a plus la force de porter un fusil, on ne lui prête aucune considération, et de lui-même d'ailleurs il se plie à ce rôle en plaisantant et en jouant à tout propos.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

b) Le totem tribual.

A l'époque actuelle nous trouvons dans la nation fâñ un grand nombre de tribus, différenciées par leur nom. Mais ces tribus sont souvent apparentées les unes aux autres, et quelques-unes, comme il est facile de s'en assurer en une courte interrogation, descendent les unes des autres.

Et ici survient une double difficulté.

Suivant que tel ou tel auteur en a écrit, et sans en donner d'ailleurs aucune raison, ces «fractions» de groupe — employons ce mot pour un instant — sont tantôt appelées clans, tantôt tribus, sans qu'au fond, pour beaucoup, on puisse assigner une raison ou une différence bien nette.

1° Différence entre clan et tribu.

Pour les uns, la différence entre clan et tribu reposera sur le nombre: le clan sera fraction de tribu, ou composé d'un nombre moindre d'individus que la tribu: le clan comportera plutôt une idée de petitesse.

Cette notion est-elle juste? Outre qu'elle est peu philosophique, nous la croyons de plus complètement fausse. En effet, où sera la limite qui distinguera le clan de la tribu! Il y a, par exemple, chez les Fâñ, des tribus réduites à un nombre infime d'individus. D'un autre côté, à côté d'eux, on trouve des tribus presque éteintes: telle, par exemple, les Batengé, ne comptent plus que trois familles. Est-ce tribu? Est-ce clan?

Nous rejetons donc cette idée: Le clan repose sur le nombre.

Le clan, nous dira une autre école, nous citons ici le P. Lagrange[1] qui d'ailleurs reproduit lui-même le texte de Marillier[2] traduisant ou s'inspirant de W. R. Smith[3]:

«Le clan est ce groupe de la tribu où tout le monde porte le même nom et se réclame d'un seul ancêtre.»

---

[1] P. J. Lagrange, Etudes sur les Religions sémitiques, 1905, p. 112.

[2] Marillier, Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, t. XXXVI.

[3] W. R. Smith, Kingship, p. 167. V. également le R. P. Zapletal, Der Totemismus und die Religion Israels. Freiburg 1901.

Malgré l'autorité de ces savants auteurs, nous ne croyons pas que cette définition soit juste. Appliquons-là en effet aux Fâñ. Qu'aurons-nous?

La tribu fâñ se partage tout d'abord en groupes, en quatre, avons-nous dit. Dans ce groupe de la tribu fâñ, par exemple, le groupe ou le rameau bétsi, tout le monde porte bien le même nom, Bétsi, et se réclame d'un seul ancêtre. Donc ce sera le clan bétsi. Nous verrons plus loin qu'aux termes de la définition de Mauillier ce clan, si clan il y a, ne serait pas totémique, ne portant le nom d'aucun animal, d'aucun végétal. Cependant, toutes ses fractions le sont: le tout, seul, ne le serait pas! Mais continuons. Le clan bétsi (pour nous, le groupe bétsi) se partage en tribus: là encore tous portent le même nom et se réclament d'un même ancêtre. Prenons par exemple la tribu Esingi: tous les individus de de cette tribu se nomment Esingi et se réclament d'un même ancêtre, Ngi, le chimpanzé. Ce serait donc le clan ésingi, partie du clan bétsi: et comme ce clan ésingi se subdivise encore en groupes distincts où tous encore portent le même nom que le chef du groupe, et se réclament d'un même ancêtre, nous aurions encore nouvelles subdivisions, nouveaux clans.

Le clan ne peut donc reposer sur le nom et la communauté d'ancêtre. Il l'a bien, il est vrai, mais c'est une résultante et non une cause, un effet et non la raison d'être de son existence.

Nous devons donc lui trouver une autre base, et cette base, disons-le immédiatement, ce sera la famille, cellule sociale.

Il nous faut donc ici, pour établir les différents totems de tribu et de clan, montrer tout d'abord ce que nous entendons par tribu et par clan, montrer aussi par là même comment l'un et l'autre se constituent, d'où leurs différences, et par là même encore montrer pourquoi et comment le totem de tribu diffère du totem de clan, la tribu et le clan étant deux formations différentes reposant l'une et l'autre sur la famille.

2° La formation de la tribu.

La tribu et le clan, disons-nous, sont deux formations différentes dont la famille est fonction. Comment s'opère ce développement, qui amène d'ailleurs le totem familial à devenir totem tribual, les deux développements étant nécessairement parallèles?

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Seules, à l'époque actuelle, les généalogies nous permettent d'arriver à ce résultat. Dans notre étude récente sur les rapports entre le folklore fâñ et le folklore kanioka [1], nous avons déjà traité ce point curieux. Comme cette étude ne comportait ce point que de façon incidente et ne peut non plus se trouver entre toutes les mains, nous devons la reprendre ici: cette explication est nécessaire.

Nous avons dit un mot déjà de ces généalogies en parlant du mébara [2] au commencement de cette étude; v. plus haut p. 5.

Lorsqu'on regarde la carte du Congo [3], on voit en effet le pays occupé par les Fâñ se partager entre quatre cents noms de tribus,

[1] Anthropos IV p. 946 et suiv.

[2] Généalogie des Ancêtres qui est le premier enseignement donné au jeune garçon. — Notons en passant que cet enseignement n'est jamais donné aux filles: la fille n'est pas considérée comme «membre» de la tribu, mais bien comme «objet» appartenant à la tribu, «objet» ayant certains droits, il est vrai, mais ne pouvant les exercer que sous la tutèle de son père ou de son oncle.

[3] Nous espérons pouvoir donner prochainement dans l'«Anthropos» avec une étude sur les Fâñ une carte de leur pays, aussi correcte que possible. Signalons en passant combien il serait utile pour ces cartes, et d'ailleurs pour tout renseignement géographique et ethnographique, d'adopter une fois pour toutes une orthographe uniforme, comme avait voulu le faire jadis le général Faidherbe, et comme le fera avec plus de succès, espérons-le, l'«Anthropos». Le système adopté aujourd'hui par la plupart des voyageurs et explorateurs est en effet celui-ci: écrire comme ils entendent! Et malheureusement, la plupart semblent convaincus que ce système est le seul vrai, sans se douter aucunement que le pays qu'ils traversent a une langue avec des règles précises et aussi que chacun n'entend pas de la même façon. Avec un pareil système, beaucoup trop généralisé, la carte du Congo français se couvre de noms orthographiés de la façon la plus fantaisiste, quand ces noms ne sont pas eux-mêmes absolument fautifs. Dans ce dernier cas, nous citerons entre autres perles, ceux de Mâyèm, de Vum, Mvum ou Evum etc. que l'on rencontre de temps en temps, et dont l'origine est tout simplement celle-ci: L'explorateur fait demander au guide le nom d'une localité: celui-ci répond parfois, et surtout s'il s'agit de localités un peu éloignées et que l'on aperçoit par exemple du haut d'une colline: Mâyèm, je ne sais pas, ou encore, Vum, mvum, etc. c'est un endroit. L'explorateur inscrit gravement: Mâyèm, Vum. D'un autre côté, il arrive fréquemment que l'interprète donne non pas le nom propre, mais le nom commun, ainsi Otôñ, un ruisseau, Ototôñ un petit ruisseau, Nkol une colline cet. Les dernières cartes du Congo, publiées à la suite des nombreuses expéditions qui ont, depuis dix ans, sillonné le pays, et ont en général été dirigées par des officiers, méritent souvent ce reproche. Il serait absolument à désirer et au premier abord, il est impossible de savoir si l'on a affaire à une tribu proprement dite ou à une subdivision de tribu ou à un clan.

Comment les distinguer et les grouper?

A peine sorti de la première enfance, le jeune Fâñ, dès l'âge de 7 à 8 ans, apprend son mébara (et c'est son premier enseignement), c'est-à-dire les noms des aïeux dont il est issu, et c'est là en même temps la marque de sa filiation et de la noblesse de son origine. Interrogez n'importe quel bambin sur sa famille, et vous le verrez répondre: «Je suis fils d'un tel, fils d'un tel, fils d'un tel», jusqu'au premier ancêtre de la tribu, où il s'arrête pour dire: «Et celui-là était fils de Nzame, c'est-à-dire de Dieu, et avant, je n'y étais pas, ni moi, ni personne»![1] Et notons encore en passant que jamais, au grand jamais, il ne dira, dans ce cas, «je suis fils de tel ou tel animal», bien qu'il appartienne au clan de cet animal. Autre chose la filiation, autre chose le totem! — Et chemin faisant, il s'arrête, toutes les fois que deux frères ou davantage, s'étant séparés, ont constitué une autre tribu. L'exemple suivant fera d'ailleurs mieux ressortir ces généalogies où l'on serait tenté parfois de retrouver une infiltration sémite des temps patriarcaux ou mieux encore, comme nous l'avons déjà indiqué plusieurs fois, une filiation avec les peuples de l'antique Egypte.

---

qu'avant de partir faire une expédition, les chefs de missions fussent au moins légèrement initiés à la langue et à l'histoire des pays qu'ils traversent, et à quelques notions de transcription des noms, choses qu'ils ignorent assez souvent.

En suivant ce désir, on éviterait, par exemple, de trouver sur les cartes congolaises, pour ne citer que celles-là, Fâñ écrit de 14 façons différentes: Fang, Fan, Fans, Fâñ, Faons, Mfan, Mfangs, Mfaons, Pahouins, Mpahouins, Pawin, Mpawin, Paouën, Mpaouën, etc. On conviendra que c'est beaucoup pour un seul peuple!

On éviterait encore d'écrire des noms de clans pour des noms de peuples, ce qui amène une confusion inextricable, surtout vers la côte, où les tribus de langue différente se mêlent étrangement. Des travaux d'une réelle valeur au point de vue géodésique deviennent alors inutiles pour l'ethnographe!

[1] Comme on le voit, nos Fâñ sont nettement spiritualistes et n'admettent pas l'éternité de la matière. D'aucuns diront peut-être que c'est précisément parce qu'ils sont arriérés qu'ils repoussent le matérialisme. Leurs chants de mort, dont j'ai également recueilli de nombreux exemples (cf. La Religion des Primitifs, par Mgr. Le Roy, pp. 148, 198, 253) confirment absolument cette croyance à la vie de l'au-delà.

Vous êtes dans une tribu fâñ et rencontrez un individu quelconque. Vous désirez savoir son nom, inconnu de vous. Vous l'interrogez donc et il vous répondra par son nom patronymique. Et c'est ainsi, pour le dire en passant, qu'un Fâñ, par exemple, aura d'abord son nom patronymique. reçu au sortir de la première enfance; puis son nom familier, sous lequel ses parents et ses proches le connaissent, rôle joué dans nos races par le prénom ou le diminutif familier ou amical; son surnom ou nom de guerre, par lequel ses compagnons le désigneront; son nom de race ou de branche de tribu, et enfin son nom particulier lorsqu'il est reçu dans une société secrète. Il est facile donc de concevoir combien un tel système, pour compliqué soit-il, peut amener d'erreurs ou de confusions, d'autant que bien souvent encore, par mesure de précaution ou de prudence, ou s'il a quelque peccadille à se reprocher, quelques représailles à craindre, ou bien simplement par raillerie, amour de tromper ou passe temps, le Noir, interrogé, vous donnera un faux nom, avec une aisance parfaite, et tel un cambrioleur émérite, le soutiendra avec énergie. Mais avec le mébara [1], qui n'admet que les noms patronymiques, de tels subterfuges sont impossibles. Car, pour tout averti, il est facile de s'apercevoir bien vite si les ancêtres improvisés sont véritables ou non, si la filiation est authentique ou fabriquée de toutes pièces.

Rencontrant un individu et voulant savoir qui il est, vous lui demanderez donc:

«O ne nza? Tu es qui?»

---

[1] Ce mébara, ou enseignement des ancêtres, a pour les Fâñ un puissant intérêt et leur est même socialement nécessaire. En effet, il est interdit sous les peines les plus sévères et même de divorce immédiat, de se marier 1° avec une femme de son propre clan, 2° avec une femme du clan dont la mère est issue, 3° avec une femme d'un clan issu de la même souche commune, si éloignée que soit la parenté, et parfois elle remonte à plus de vingt ascendants. Leur mébara seul leur permet d'être renseigné sur ce point.

Le mébara concerne uniquement les générations masculines. La femme est ignorée; en l'appelant on mentionne rarement le nom de son père et seulement dans le cas où, par suite de contestations ou de mariage de ses fils, il serait nécessaire de connaître le nom de sa tribu.

Au point de vue ethnographique, le mébara offre de même un haut intérêt puisqu'il permet de grouper à la souche les diverses tribus ou clans fâñ.

Et il répond par exemple:

«Mé ne Nze, mone Nkwax, je suis Nze, fils des Nkwax,» c'est-à-dire du clan Nkwax[1].

«O ne Nze nza? Tu es Nze de qui?» c'est-à-dire: Quel est ton père?

«Mé ne Nze Nzoÿo. Je suis Nze Nzoÿo,» c'est-à-dire et sous entendu: Je suis Nze, fils de Nzoÿo et comme dans le clan. les Nze peuvent être nombreux, et ainsi des autres noms, dans la pratique, on dira couramment Nze Nzoÿo. Mais continuons notre interrogation.

«Nzoÿo nza? — Nzoÿo Bitôma. — Bitôma binza»[2].

Et ainsi de suite. Nous obtiendrons donc pour Nze la généalogie suivante:

Nze	Otôñ	Ebias
Nzoÿo	Ndame né Mvi	Nsoÿe
Bitôma	Nkèle	Mvure né Ngol
Ndama	Mikvrè	Obiâñu
Esoÿe	Nkorele	Ndotuma
Mikvrè	Bikvras	Esoÿe
Nkâñ	Bikorele	Nkwax né Nduma né Nkvré[3]
Ndotuma	Esoÿe né Foÿe né Nkôñ[3]	Nzame
Nzoÿo	Mvas
Nkèle	Nkâñe

Dans le même village, interrogeant un autre individu, j'obtiens la généalogie suivante:

Abure	Esô	Esoÿe	Nkâñ
Méndame	Nkwax	Mikvrè	Ndotuma etc.

et il m'est facile de m'apercevoir, ainsi que tous les assistants, du degré de parenté qui relie Abure et Nze dont l'ancêtre commun est Esoÿe, quatre générations auparavant

Dans un autre village ye nkwax, interrogeant le chef, j'obtiens la généalogie suivante:

---

[1] Le clan Nkwax dont fait partie ce Nze, habite un affluent du Komo.

[2] Remarquez ici que le préfixe de nza, simple adjectif, suivra l'accord du nom possessif et prendra, bien qu'au singulier, un préfixe pluriel parce que Bitôma est un nom pluriel (littéralement: les branches de palmier) — Bitôma Béndama — Ndama nzá? — Ndam'Esoÿe — Esoÿe nza?

[3] C'est-à-dire Esoÿe qui eut deux frères chefs de clans.

Ndotuma	Nzuÿe	Nkèle	Nkorèle
Nsoÿo	Nzature	Mikwè	Bikwoas
Nkwèl	Nkoz	Esôñ	Bikorèle
Anguma	Mêbiâñ	Otore	Esoÿe né Foÿe né Nkôñ

et par le même procédé que tout à l'heure, je reconnais immédiatement que la souche commune est Nkorèle; Nze descend de Nkorèle par Mikwè, et Ndotuma, le chef vivant actuellement, par Otore Mikwè et Otore, tous deux fils de Nkorèle.

Et en procédant ainsi, nous pouvons reconstituer peu à peu la généalogie de la tribu entière.

Mais ne nous en arrêtons pas là. Un autre procédé permettra d'aller plus loin et de savoir quelle est, dans la tribu, ou dans plusieurs familles, la branche aînée. En effet, dans l'évora biéri, ou boîte contenant les crânes des ancêtres, le fils aîné conserve le crâne de son père, de son aïeul, et ainsi de suite, de fils aîné en fils aîné, usage sur lequel nous aurons à revenir plus tard.

Nze possède les crânes de tous ses ancêtres jusqu'à et y compris Nkwaz; celui-ci est donc le représentant direct de la branche aînée. Ndotuma, au contraire, s'arrête à Otore. Otore était par conséquent un fils cadet de Nkorèle. Le tableau suivant montre ainsi comment, grâce aux crânes conservés, on peut reconstituer une famille.

Le crâne de Nduma sera possédé par Esoÿe, celui de Ndame par Obi etc. Au contraire Ndam second fils de Ndame, Mvûñ, fils d'Olè, ne posséderont aucun crâne, n'étant point héritiers directs, mais seulement cadets; en revanche, leurs propres crânes passeront à leur fils aîné.

Enfin, nous avons dit que, dans les généalogies, lorsque plusieurs noms étaient donnés sur une ligne parallèle, les Fâñ entendaient désigner par là les fondateurs d'un nouveau clan, parfois d'une nouvelle tribu.

Ainsi, dans la première généalogie ci-dessus, Nze nous donne Otôñ, fils de Ndame, et Mvi. Ceci nous indique immédiatement que si Nkèle, père de Ndame, eut deux ou plusieurs fils (les autres généalogies renseigneront sur ce point), un seul de ces fils, Ndame, continua le lignage de la tribu. Mvi quitta sa tribu non pour une raison infamante, sans quoi il ne serait pas mentionné dans la liste, mais de son plein gré, et pour un autre motif, que souvent les légendes particulières nous indiqueront. Ainsi, dans ce cas, Mvi alla au loin fonder une tribu nouvelle dont il fut le chef, les Bémvi, encore existant aujourd'hui (villages sur l'Yé)[1]. Il sera donc facile d'établir la parenté entre la tribu Bémvi et la tribu Yenkwax.

En procédant de même, nous retrouverons les Esoÿe et les Nkôñ, les Béndum et les Békwé; toutes ces tribus, issues d'une même origine, et ayant le même sang, n'auront entre elles aucune alliance par mariage: la loi précédemment vue le leur défend, mais elles demeureront alliées au point de vue défensif et offensif à cause de la communauté d'origine.

Les généalogies actuellement conservées dans les tribus nous permettent de remonter à environ dix siècles en arrière, c'est-à-dire au temps de Charlemagne ou de Louis IX, à peu près; les générations les plus complètes que nous ayons pu recueillir comptent 32 ou 33 générations, telles celles des Yendum et des Yentsi, sur le haut Dzèm ou Ngoko, affluent de l'Ubangi.

3° Groupement des généalogies d'où sort le groupement des tribus.

Or, en réunissant toutes ces généalogies, il arrive ce fait curieux que peu à peu elles se resserrent, s'unissent, se groupent, et finalement se condensent en un certain nombre de tribus mères qui toutes commencent, pour le groupe Bétsi, par le mot ye «vallée». Dans une Etude parue jadis dans les «Missions Catholiques»[2] et à laquelle on peut se reporter pour plus amples renseignements, nous avions conclu finalement que les Fâñ, à une époque reculée de leur histoire, habitaient probablement sur les plateaux et les vallées qui limitent à l'Ouest le bassin du Bahr-el-Gazal; cette opinion concorde d'ailleurs avec ce que nous savons des Mombuttu, auxquels les Fâñ sont unis, anthropologiquement parlant, d'une manière étroite. Dans un travail récent sur le Congo, AVELOT[1] s'est rallié à cette opinion.

[1] Karagwa de certaines cartes. Karagwa est le nom donné par les anciens maîtres du sol. Les Fâñ ont souvent conservé ces noms.

[2] «Les Fangs, où ils vont et d'où ils viennent». Miss. Cath. 1898.

Mais pour en revenir à notre sujet, à cette époque, les Fâñ étaient partagés déjà en un certain nombre de tribus; chacune habitait sa vallée ou son territoire, de préférence sa vallée, plus favorable aux cultures que les hauts plateaux: là devait en somme se trouver le groupement principal de la tribu. Or, comme nous l'avons déjà dit, le mot ye désigne la «vallée», et en groupant les généalogies, on arrive finalement à les réunir en un certain nombre de tribus, dont le nom commence également par ye «vallée». A ye se trouve adjoint nécessairement un qualificatif désignant, à la fois, et la tribu et la vallée, celle-ci ayant pris son nom de la tribu qui est venue l'habiter. Nous savons d'ailleurs, par d'autres témoignages historiques, que l'établissement des Fâñ sur les plateaux et vallées du Bahr-el-Gazal était postérieur à de premières migrations d'un pays plus éloigné encore; les légendes en ont conservé les traces.

Ce qualificatif adjoint au mot ye «vallée» est toujours, au moins autant que nous avons pu le constater, un nom de plante, d'animal, ou de phénomène céleste. Ainsi Ye-Bikon, vallée des Bananes, Ye-Mvi, vallée du Mvi (espèce de fleur), Ye-Nzoχ, vallée de l'Eléphant, Ye-Ngü, du Sanglier, Ye-Mvé, d'une sorte de petit quadrupède, Ye-Mvéñ, de la Pluie etc.

On pourrait, au premier abord, soutenir que les hommes des clans habitant ces vallées ont reçu leur nom de la vallée elle-même; dès lors, ce nom ne serait en somme qu'un sobriquet, ou encore une appellation géographique dûe à des circonstances climatériques à certaines plantes ou animaux qui habitaient de préférence ces vallées, ou encore à des faits qui se seraient produits. Ainsi, par exemple, quelques noms de villages que l'on retrouve aujourd'hui en pays fâñ sont dûs à ces circonstances[2]: tel Nzoχ ébolia ou

[1] Recherches sur l'histoire des migrations dans le bassin de l'Ogowé, 1906 (Bull. Sté de Géographie, Paris).

[2] Dans une brochure récente: Le Nomadisme chez les Fangs (Paris, Delagrave 1909) le P. MARTROU signale un certain nombre de noms de village se rapportant à cette origine. Tels Alèn, Mélèn du nom de l'Elaïs, palmier à huile, Dzó, Adzáñ, les arbres à graisse, Akinétom, on n'a pas peur des disputes, Fula, réunion d'une tribu etc. L'auteur fait remarquer à ce propos avec juste Mbolenzox, l'éléphant pourri; on avait en effet trouvé là, à l'époque de la fondation du village, un éléphant pourri dans la brousse; telle encore Atna, la rivière noire etc. Mais il convient de remarquer que ce cas ne s'applique jamais à des noms de tribus ou de clans. Il serait, de plus, assez difficile à admettre que telle plante ou tel animal se soit ainsi rencontré à point nommé dans telle ou telle vallée. Mais, comme pareille chose serait encore possible, les deux preuves les plus fortes contre ce système nous paraissent être: 1° la formation actuelle des clans où on ne se préoccupe nullement de ces accidents; 2° le fait qu'avant d'habiter ces vallées, les clans étaient déjà formés et avaient, les légendes l'indiquent, accompli d'autres migrations. Aussi cette désignation du clan par le nom de l'animal ou de la plante totem ne nous semble pas, comme à Powell, l'origine du totémisme lui-même. Nous aurions peine encore à souscrire à l'opinion de Lang[1] disant dans «Social origins»: «Diverses circonstances (ressemblance physique réelle ou supposée) auraient provoqué la création spontanée de ces noms pour désigner aisément les groupes primitivement anonymes et d'abord vaguement distincts. Les totems seraient donc à l'origine de simples sobriquets. Sur ce nom se serait greffé un mythe d'où procéderait le système de rites et d'institutions religieuses que nous décrivons.» Ces groupes anonymes et d'abord vaguement distincts ne nous disent scientifiquement rien qui vaille. En tout cas, tel ne nous paraît pas le système fàñ.

Les Fàñ, disons-nous, seraient donc venus, à une époque impossible à préciser, d'un pays encore plus éloigné.

D'après la légende du crocodile, les Fàñ, à cette époque très reculée, auraient émigré en effet d'un pays situé sur le bord de grandes étendues d'eau, «avec des vagues», et le culte était alors, pour les Bétsi, celui du crocodile, auquel on offrait annuellement des victimes humaines. Nous aurons occasion de revenir à ce point en parlant de l'origine du totem.

Supposons donc ce point acquis: Les généalogies de tous les clans fàñ se groupent actuellement autour des généaraison que la confusion habituelle du nom du village avec celui de la tribu ou même du chef supposé du village est une erreur commune aux enfants de l'habitat fang.

[1] Cf. Baos, op. cit. p. 221.

logies des tribus commençant par Ye: dans ces dernières, quelques-unes donnent, par le même moyen, des preuves certaines de parenté qui d'abord les réduiraient en rameaux, puis finalement en une seule nation, composée à l'origine d'une seule tribu, puis d'une seule famille, d'où sort la nation actuelle.

Maintenant, donc, la nation fàñ se partage en quatre rameaux différents et chaque rameau en tribus.

Tout ce que nous venons de dire s'applique au rameau Bétsi, mais s'applique également, de fait, aux rameaux Méké et Fóñ, en observant toutefois que le nom de la tribu commencera généralement par A dans ces rameaux. Ainsi les Amvom, ou hommes du Boa. Les clans dérivés commenceront de même que dans les tribus Bétsi par Es' «père». Si la filiation est secondaire, le préfixe sera O ou A, tels les Oyex, ou plutôt par Ebi, synonyme de Es', les Angonavé, les Angonavel etc. Ces clans seront facilement reconnaissables de la tribu; le mode de filiation étant le même que celui que nous avons donné pour les clans Bétsi, leur nom ne sera pas «totémique», mais reproduira celui du fondateur du clan. Là encore, seules, les généalogies pourront nous permettre cette constatation, puisque le nom du fondateur pourrait également être un nom d'animal et leur prêter une apparence totémique qui irait directement contre la loi énoncée: «se considérer comme étant de la lignée de l'animal éponyme.» Le totem du clan peut parfaitement bien en effet ne pas être le même que l'animal dont le fondateur porte le nom, ce qui n'empêche nullement le clan d'être totémique.

Cette constatation est importante à signaler.

4° Comment reconnaître la «tribu» de façon précise.

Nous réservons donc, indépendamment du nombre d'hommes ou de villages, le nom de «tribus» aux fractions organisées dont le nom commence par Ye. Ces fractions sont toutes totémiques, c'est-à-dire que la tribu porte bien le nom du totem auquel elle est vouée.

C'est ainsi, par exemple, que nous avons les:

Ye-ngol, jadis hommes de la vallée du Ngol, ou simplement les hommes du Ngol, les Ngol;

Ye-nkwax, Ye-bikon, Ye-ngôm, Ye-ngû etc. Hommes du Nkwax (esp. d'animal), des Bananes, du Porc épic, du Sanglier etc.

A l'époque actuelle, les tribus Ye, auxquelles, répétons-le encore, se rattachent tous les autres clans, sont au nombre de soixante à quatre-vingts, en tous cas ils ne dépassent certainement pas la centaine, chiffre déjà très considérable.

Ces tribus fáñ Ye sont nettement totémiques; ainsi:

Nom de la tribu.	Nom du totem.
Ye-ngol	ngol, espèce de poisson,
Ye-ngû	ngû, sanglier,
Ye-kwé	kwé, escargot,
Ye-mvin	mvin, esp. d'antilope,
Ye-mvux	mvux, animal nocturne,
Ye-ngi	ngi, chimpanzé,
Ye-ehôñ	ehôñ, espèce d'arbre etc. etc.
Ye-mvin	mvin, la pluie.

Non seulement ces tribus sont totémiques par le nom, mais elles répondent absolument à ce que W. R. Smith, et à sa suite, Marillier et les auteurs réclament du clan pour être totémique, à savoir:

1° Qu'il porte le nom d'une plante ou d'un animal [1].

2° Que ses membres fassent remonter leur origine à cet animal ou à cette plante et se considèrent comme étant de sa lignée. — En parlant plus loin de l'origine du totem, nous verrons comment se réalise cette condition.

3° Qu'ils attribuent aux animaux ou aux plantes de l'espèce à laquelle ils se rattachent par des liens de filiation, un caractère sacré, qui peut les conduire à les regarder comme des dieux, mais qui, en tout cas, les leur fait traiter avec vénération et n'en user point pour leur alimentation de chaque jour. — Nous verrons également comment les Fáñ réalisent cette condition.

De là, ressort également avec netteté cette conclusion que la tribu est totémique.

Il existe pour chaque tribu un totem différent, d'où nous concluons avec raison à l'existence du totem tribal. Dans un paragraphe suivant, nous examinerons ces différents totems.

[1] Parfois aussi, comme nous l'avons vu, d'un phénomène naturel.

c) Le totem de clan.

A l'exemple du totem de tribu, existe-t-il également un totem de clan, ou bien chaque clan, sorti de la tribu, garde-t-il avec lui le totem ancestral?

Il y a d'abord lieu ici à une très importante remarque. Certaines tribus ne portent pas le nom de leur totem «actuel», animal ou végétal. Si l'on en demande la raison aux chefs, souvent ils sont incapables de la donner: Silege béñabur bémveye, interroge les anciens qui savent, répondra-t-on. Le souvenir d'un totem plus ancien s'est conservé, et c'est tout. Cependant, grâce à quelques chefs plus intelligents ou plus soucieux des traditions de la race, nous pouvons donner la raison de ce fait, anormal à première vue.

Les tribus qui ne portent plus «actuellement» le nom de l'ancien totem, l'ont, non pas «perdu», mais «changé» au cours de leurs migrations successives, parce que le totem primitif, animal, végétal, ou autre, ne se retrouvait plus dans la région occupée plus tard. Ainsi, maintenant, tel est le cas pour le lion, le cheval, ou l'okapi, l'hyène, le lapin etc. et certaines plantes que l'on ne trouve pas dans la région équatoriale habitée par les Fáñ depuis leurs dernières migrations.

Les tribus ont donc changé de totem, car ne le trouvant plus dans leur pays, elles ne pouvaient continuer avec lui l'antique alliance qui doit, de temps à autre et dans les circonstances déterminées par les rites, être renouvelée par l'échange du sang. Qu'ont fait alors les tribus placées dans ce cas? Elles ont choisi un autre totem rappelant l'ancien autant que possible, mais elles ont soigneusement gardé le nom du totem primitif. Peu à peu, dans bien des cas, le souvenir de ce qu'était ce totem s'est à peu près perdu. Ainsi, les Ye-mbax, dont le totem est aujourd'hui une espèce d'antilope, ont eu un totem dont le signalement, aujourd'hui fantastique et en même temps fantaisiste, nous paraît cependant se rapporter, soit au cheval, à l'okapi ou à un autre solipède, comme on en retrouve dans le haut pays et dont le nom primitif pourrait bien être commun avec le mbarta ou solipède, des Banda [1]. De même, les Esi-Mara qui ont «changé» pour prendre le chat-tigre, ont probablement eu, d'après leurs traditions, le terrible

[1] Les Banda habitent les vallées de la Hte Kotto, du 4° au 10° Lat. N et du 18° au 23° de long E. Ce ne sont plus des Bantous. Une de leurs tribus, les Ndris, est assez connue.

«lion» que nous retrouvons en Banda sous un nom similaire: bamara. Par un phénomène inverse, mais qui semble bien confirmer notre opinion, les animaux ou végétaux localisés dans le territoire fân actuel ou encore que l'on retrouve bien au sud, mais non au nord, ne sont jamais totems, et surtout, fait beaucoup plus important, aucune tribu ne porte leur nom. Tels en particulier l'élais ou palmier à huile et le gorille, pourtant si remarquable, que les Fân craignent fort, et dont on retrouve souvent la main droite conservée dans la Maison publique comme fétiche de l'Esprit de la Force. —

Mais revenons à la demande que nous posions en tête de ce paragraphe: Existe-t-il un totem propre au clan, ou bien chaque clan garde-t-il le totem ancestral? Pour répondre à cette question, il faut nécessairement examiner d'abord ce qu'est le clan et s'en faire une idée nette. D'où nécessité d'en étudier la formation.

1° Désagrégation de la tribu, formation du clan.

Au cours des siècles, et aujourd'hui encore, sous l'influence des migrations ou du nombre croissant, les tribus continuent à se désagréger. La plupart du temps, cet événement se produira, soit à la suite de querelles familiales, soit à la mort du chef. Mais notons bien un phénomène remarquable et qui appuie notre thèse du totémisme: ce ne sera pas un individu «quelconque» qui se séparera ainsi de la tribu pour aller fonder ailleurs un nouveau clan: si, par hasard, le fait se produit, il demeure à l'état sporadique, et le clan ainsi formé sous l'influence d'un homme n'ayant ni autorité ancestrale, ni autorité totémique, ne tarde pas à disparaître.

Prenons le cas le plus fréquent, la mort du chef. D'après les lois constitutives de la tribu, le pouvoir, quelque soit le nombre des fils du défunt, ne passe pas au fils aîné, à moins qu'il ne soit déjà d'un âge avancé, mais au frère du défunt qui suit immédiatement par rang d'âge. A la mort de ce frère, la succession va successivement aux autres frères, jusqu'à extinction totale de la lignée, et le dernier frère étant disparu, alors seulement le pouvoir revient au fils aîné du frère aîné, et toujours ainsi. Si la branche aînée vient à disparaître, la branche cadette la remplace.

Mais on conçoit que dans bien des cas, les héritiers se soulent désireux et surtout pressés . . . d'hériter. Un frère puîné fera facile-ment, s'il le peut sans inconvénients, disparaître un frère aîné. Le cas, il faut l'avouer, est cependant rare: une séparation à l'amiable est plus fréquente; elle l'a été surtout jadis, alors que dans les migrations continuelles de la tribu, la nécessité de rester unis était moins forte qu'une fois la tribu établie dans son territoire définitif, ou surtout dans un territoire à sa convenance. Très souvent aussi, le chef de la tribu envoyait en avant quelques-unes de ses hordes sous le commandement de ses frères ou de ses neveux. Le cas était légal: il a été de beaucoup le plus fréquent.

Quelles étaient alors les conséquences?

Un exemple le fera mieux saisir. Prenons, afin de préciser, la tribu des Yemvi, en remontant à quelque vingt générations. Le chef, à cette époque, est Bikwôñ[1]: il a trois frères puinés, Nture, Ngwa et Mikwé. De plus, il a des fils, Mvôñ et Mkwél. Pour une raison que nous ignorons, dispute familiale, manque de territoires de chasse, désir de conquêtes, de migration ou par esprit entreprenant, chacun des trois frères puinés se détache avec sa horde de la tribu principale. Nture et Ngwa s'en vont au loin, sans esprit de retour; Mikwé, au contraire, fonde un village dans les environs.

Qu'arrive-t-il? A la génération suivante, Nture et Ngwa ont fondé un «clan» nouveau: les villages de Nture et de Ngwa prendront leurs noms, et les enfants, remontant à leur ancêtre, dont les descendants en ligne directe conservent le crâne, preuve de la véracité de leur généalogie, diront: «Nous sommes les descendants de Nture, nous sommes les descendants de Ngwa, c'étaient nos pères: Esa Nture, Esa Ngwa, le père Nture, le père Ngwa», et désormais les hommes de ces deux fractions de la tribu Yemvi formeront deux nouveaux clans: les Esanture, les Esangwa. Les hommes de la tribu Yemvi continuant nécessairement leur existence, nous aurons donc à ce moment trois fractions sœurs, filles d'une même racine:

Ye-mvi

Yemvi Esanture Esangwa

et les Yemvi se trouveront ainsi groupés sous trois branches différentes, l'une étant la tribu proprement dite, les deux autres, des clans, et l'ensemble, la tribu Yemvi.

[1] Nouvelle preuve de l'utilité des généalogies. On pourrait étendre cet exemple à toutes les tribus.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Ce fait est très remarquable à signaler au point de vue du totem et de l'exogamie.

Un point important est à noter ici: c'est que ces hordes, ainsi lancées en avant, constituent plus tard les clans dont nous venons de parler, par suite même de leur mode de formation. Ce sont en effet les jeunes guerriers de la tribu qui partent ainsi en avant, mais ils n'emmèneront pas avec eux de femmes ou d'enfants, qu'ils n'ont d'ailleurs guère encore. Seul, le nouveau chef a la sienne ou les siennes, et parfois aussi ses frères qui l'accompagnent, ont également les leurs. On conçoit en effet que les femmes seraient plutôt un embarras pour ces hordes, surtout si elles étaient en nombre trop considérable, car ces nomades font parfois des randonnées fantastiques, se lançant à des centaines de kilomètres de la tribu-mère. De plus, une des principales raisons de ces migrations est surtout le désir et le besoin de se procurer des femmes. Les jeunes guerriers trouvent difficilement des épouses; ils sont liés d'un côté par les lois totémiques qui les empêchent de trouver femmes dans leur tribu ou dans les tribus alliées par le sang, quelque soit l'éloignement de la parenté; d'un autre côté, les chefs, par le fait même de leur puissance et de leur richesse plus grande, accaparent toutes les femmes. On comprend facilement que certains chefs pour eux seuls, par exemple, qui possèdent trois cents femmes, et plus, lesquelles travaillent toutes pour lui, puissent sans cesse augmenter encore ce nombre, soit par achat, produit du travail, soit par échange de leurs propres filles, ce que ne peuvent faire les jeunes guerriers.

Arrivée sur le territoire d'une tribu étrangère, après avoir obtenu libre passage chez les clans alliés, ou forcé sa route, soit de nuit, soit à main armée si les clans sont ennemis, la horde se construit, dans la forêt, un abri provisoire. Les ou le chef partent alors nouer quelques relations près de la tribu étrangère voisine, souvent près des Bésèy, Balengi, Bakélé etc. Ils s'établissent alors en un point qu'ils jugent favorable, puis commencent leurs déprédations. Ils attaquent les hommes isolés, qui sont presque toujours mangés afin d'éviter toute représaille ultérieure, ils volent les femmes qu'ils font leurs, et qui se soumettent à leur nouveau sort avec la passivité habituelle à la femme de ces races. Ainsi, peu à peu, de nouvelles familles se constituent à peu de frais, et se groupent dans une forte organisation autour de la cellule-mère du clan, constituée par la famille du chef, elle, bien autochtone. Alors, la horde a disparu: un nouveau clan filial est constitué; il n'aura plus avec la branche-mère que de lointains rapports, tout en conservant toujours le souvenir et les lois de sa filiation. Il nous est arrivé ainsi de rencontrer des clans à plusieurs centaines de kilomètres de la branche-mère. Le village des Abè, sur la rivière Tsini, à quelques vingt kilomètres de Libreville, avait été ainsi conduit par son chef actuel, lors de sa jeunesse, depuis les sources de l'Alna jusqu'à l'emplacement actuel, à 500 kilomètres environ du lieu d'origine. Rien n'égale la stupéfaction et le contentement du vieillard, lorsque pour la première fois, au retour d'un long voyage, je lui donnai des nouvelles de ses frères et parents restés là bas, et avec lesquels il n'avait jamais eu depuis lors de communications. Il fut particulièrement heureux d'apprendre que l'arbre Abé dont son clan portait le nom, planté lors de sa naissance sur les restes de son ombilic était encore parfaitement vivace. C'est une curieuse cérémonie totémique dont nous aurons à parler, au sujet des rites de la naissance.

Ainsi se constitue un nouveau clan.

Ce mode de formation «radicale» explique en même temps pourquoi la grande tribu fàñ, ou mieux la nation, forme, au centre, un groupe compact et sans aucun mélange: aucune tribu étrangère n'habite au milieu d'eux: elle a été purement et simplement «mangée». De ce fait, ressort cette conséquence que la langue demeure intacte, tout aussi bien que le faisceau des croyances et traditions, et l'ensemble des rites. L'influence d'une tribu étrangère ne saurait agir, puisque cette tribu est «absorbée», littéralement. Les femmes et les enfants, qui seuls sont épargnés, sont transportés au loin; ils deviennent bien vite aussi «fàñ» que leurs vainqueurs, d'autant que les femmes sont mises sur le même pied que les autres femmes et nullement réduites en esclavage, et que les enfants mâles, adoptés, seront également tous reconnus comme de véritables Fàñ. J'ai vu des enfants Naèz ainsi capturés: à peine se souvenaient-ils de leur origine, et nul ne les en faisait souvenir: ils étaient absolument sur le même pied que les autres enfants. Toutefois, ces «importés» demeurent toujours simples guerriers. Adoptés par un chef, ils ne lui succèdent pas.

Le peuple fâñ gagne continuellement sur les tribus voisines, et deviendra dans un temps donné, car il est très prolifique, le maître du Congo. Seuls, les Négrilles ont absolument résisté à cette absorption, mais leur nombre est infime, et ils vivent à l'égard des Fâñ, dans un état de demi-domesticité, demi-esclavage.

Quand, au contraire, un ensemble de familles se sépare de la tribu pour aller s'établir à une distance généralement peu éloignée, ce n'est plus un clan, mais un village dépendant de la tribu et du village dont il se détache, qui s'établit. Ces villages sont presque toujours sous le commandement d'un frère ou d'un fils du chef principal; ils forment avec le village souche un groupe homogène. Nous avons rencontré de ces groupements comptant ainsi quarante villages et plus, et tendant sans cesse à s'accroître, puis à se disséminer, accroissement et dissémination nécessités par les besoins des cultures qui s'épuisent vite [1].

Reprenons maintenant le cas précédent. Mikwé, frère de Bikwôñ, s'est également séparé de son frère, emmenant avec lui quelques familles pour fonder un nouveau village. Il renonce par là même à la succession de Bikwôñ, mais demeure sous son autorité, et plus tard son village obéira de même au fils aîné de Bikwôñ, mais d'une obéissance toute relative, et seulement dans certains cas particuliers. En fait cependant, et dans les grands palabres la chose a son importance, le pouvoir suprême, chez les Yemvi [2] — car c'est chez eux que nous avons pris cet exemple — restera au descendant soit en ligne directe, soit en ligne collatérale de l'ancêtre Bikwôñ, dans les cas énumérés précédemment. Par le hasard ou l'enchaînement des circonstances, il pourra très bien se faire que le village du chef suprême devienne un misérable hameau, et que ce chef soit un bien pauvre hère: il n'en conservera pas moins son titre et son rang reconnu. Il nous souvient d'avoir ainsi rencontré le chef des Esawôñ, puissante tribu du centre. Ce chef vint à nous, vêtu de misérables haillons, mais très fier de son importance, reconnue d'ailleurs. Or, son village renfermait à peine une dizaine de cases et autant de guerriers proprement à lui.

---

[1] Voir: le Nomadisme des Fang par le P. Martrou, déjà cité (p. 115, n. 2).

[2] Ce qui est vrai des Yemvi, l'est aussi évidemment de toutes les autres tribus.

Bikwôñ a deux fils, Mvôñ et Mkwèl. Mvôñ lui succèdera; mais si du vivant de Bikwôñ, son fils aîné et successeur, ennuyé d'attendre l'héritage, ou pour toute raison, se détache de lui et part en avant fonder de nouveaux villages, un nouveau clan sera établi.

Mais là, intervient un fait nouveau: le fils aîné ne saurait avoir d'autre totem ancestral que celui de son père, et son clan sera la filiale directe de la tribu-mère. D'où le clan nouveau ne prendra pas le nom de son chef, père et fondateur, mais gardera le nom de l'ancêtre en le modifiant ou plutôt en le désignant de façon spéciale: Esamvi, le père Mvi ou si l'on préfère: Mvi est notre père, et nous sommes, nous, les hommes d'Esamvi: Bur Esamvi: dans la pratique, on dira simplement Esamvi, les Esamvi. Mais en réalité, et c'est ce qui confirme notre opinion, si l'on demande à un Fâñ de cette tribu:

— «Qui es-tu? O ne nza?» — il ne répondra pas:

— »Mé ne Esamvi, je suis Esamvi» ce qui n'aurait aucun sens, puisque c'est le nom du chef de la tribu, mais:

— «Mé ne mone Esamvi, je suis un enfant du père Mvi.»

Toutefois, dans la pratique, le clan prend forcément le nom de l'ancêtre, et l'on dira les villages des Esamvi, en sous-entendant »hommes».

Par suite de ce nouveau fractionnement, nous aurons donc:

Ye Mvi

Yemvi		Esanture	Esangwa
Yemvi	Esamvi	Esanture	Esangwa.

Si, pour une raison ou pour une autre, ces tribus viennent encore à se subdiviser, elles suivront les mêmes règles de filiation.

Le rameau Bêtsi se composera ainsi de tribus en Ye, et de clans en Esa, en notant que ce mot, qui veut dire «père» se transforme en Esé, Esi, Eso, dans certains cas, c'est-à-dire si le nom du fondateur du clan commence par une voyelle autre que A. Ainsi trouvons-nous les Esamekos, les Esambun, les Esébékâñ, les Esisis, les Esobam, les Esoké[1], suivant que le père de la tribu est Mekos ou Mbun, Ebekâñ, Isis, Obam, Oké etc.

Dans le rameau Méké et le rameau Fâñ, le mot Esa père, sera remplacé par Eba, qui est le même en dialecte méké (et que l'on retrouve d'ailleurs comme racine en bétsi: ébo faire, ébi planter, ébo arranger etc.), et nous aurons ainsi les Ebikwé, des Yekwé, les Ebifill, des Ye fill, les Ebinayèl etc.

Parfois même, fait plus caractérisé, le premier clan filial de la tribu-mère conservera le mot ye, distinctif de la tribu, mais en l'ajoutant devant le mot ébi ou ésa, propres aux filiales. Ainsi nous trouvons ce cas dans les Yemvèñe, Yebimvèñe, Ebimvèñe, trois clans dont le premier est la tribu-mère, le second, sa première filiale, le troisième, une filiale suivante.

2° Exceptions à la forme habituelle de désagrégation.

Cette division serait on ne peut plus facile pour relier toutes les tribus si elle demeurait constante. Malheureusement, il n'en est pas toujours ainsi, ou plutôt, plusieurs cas se présentent. On trouve, en effet, des tribus dont le nom ne commence ni par Ye, ni par Es' ou Eb', mais bien par le préfixe A, tels les Angonavé, les Angonavel, les Abé, par le préfixe Bé, signe du pluriel, Békwé, Bémvu, Bulé, par le préfixe O, Oyex, Oshum.

par le préfixe N, Ntum.

Plusieurs explications se présentent pour ces tribus, d'ailleurs rares. Si elles appartiennent aux rameaux Bétsi ou Méké:

1° La dénomination Esa ou Ebi a disparu lorsque ces clans sont des clans séparatistes d'un autre clan constitué. Ainsi les Abé[2] de la Mondah se relient aux Esabé, demeurés aux sources du Ntém, les Békwé aux Esikwé etc.

[1] D'où l'on voit avec quelle raison (!) les explorateurs écrivent ce mot Esa «père», en l'orthographiant Ess, Ezi ou Ci, comme dans Essisis ou encore Ezisis ou simplement Cisis! C'est pure ignorance de la langue.

[2] Nous avons vu que ce clan a choisi son domicile actuel par suite de la proximité d'un arbre Abé. Quand un clan porte le nom d'un arbre voisin remarquable, il faut généralement en conclure qu'il s'est établi là à cause de cet arbre qui lui rappelle son totem et nullement que le clan a pris le nom de l'arbre. C'est un cas assez fréquent.

2° Ce sont des tribus aussi anciennes que les Ye, mais qui alors, au lieu d'habiter dans les vallées, seraient demeurés sur les collines ou les plateaux.

Elles peuvent également appartenir au rameau fôñ, peu nombreux, et dont l'organisation intérieure est très peu connue. Seules, les généalogies de la tribu ou du clan permettent de se prononcer.

Mais, et nous voulions en arriver à cette conséquence, la tribu et tous ses clans, quelque soit leur nombre, conservent en première ligne le totem tribal. Ainsi, pour la tribu Yemvi et tous ses clans dérivés, la plante Mvi demeurera le totem tribal.

3° La formation du totem de clan.

Toutefois, et cette constatation est des plus importantes, à côté du totem tribal, surgira un nouveau totem, le totem de clan. En effet, dans le cas cité plus haut, Nture et Ngwa avaient chacun, en tant que chefs de famille, leur totem familial. Mais ce totem, par là même qu'ils deviennent chefs de clan, devient non plus totem familial, mais totem de clan. A lui donc s'adresseront désormais les hommages du clan, qui, on le voit, ne portera plus le nom du totem, mais bien celui du fondateur, tout en restant nettement totémique; ainsi le totem de la phratrie sera, pour ainsi dire, promu à un rang supérieur. Est-ce à dire pour cela que disparaîtra le totem ancestral de la tribu? Nullement. Il ne disparaîtra pas, tout au moins de droit. En fait, il sera amoindri, car toutes les fois que l'on aura à invoquer le totem, dans les cas où le clan sera menacé ou bien aura besoin de son secours, ou encore dans les cérémonies cultuelles du totem, on invoquera le totem du clan, et non plus celui de la tribu. Cependant celui-ci subsistera néanmoins, et dans les circonstances où les clans se réuniront, par exemple si la tribu-mère est menacée, ou dans un cas d'assemblée solennelle (ésama), le totem tribal reprendra son importance, et les totems de clan s'inclineront devant lui.

Enfin, le totem de la tribu, même oublié par suite de la longue séparation, soit en distance locale, soit en distance de la souche primitive, demeure cependant vivant, en tant que ses prescriptions demeurent, sans pouvoir jamais être abolies. Ainsi, pour n'en citer qu'un exemple, dans le cas précédent, un Yemvi ne pourra épouser une femme Esangwa; cependant, à l'époque actuelle, les deux tribus sont séparées par vingt ou vingt-cinq générations, et la parenté, si le mariage se faisait par impossible, peut être beaucoup plus éloignée. Nous disons: si le mariage se faisait par impossible, car en fait, il ne se fait jamais, la loi d'exogamie étant une des plus solidement maintenues des lois totémiques. Pareille dérogation ne viendrait pas plus à l'esprit d'un Yemvi que pour un Européen, d'épouser sa sœur. L'un ou l'autre cas est possible, mais entraîne forcément une série de pénalités et aussi d'expiations nécessaires. La société s'en charge dans un cas; dans l'autre, le chef, représentant de l'autorité et ancêtre vivant, ne peut non plus le laisser passer sans les sanctions nécessaires.

Aussi la remarque de Mr. Baos[1] est-elle des plus justes: «Par la suite, les clans se subdivisent à l'infini et naturellement, peu à peu le premier totem qui lui a donné naissance s'évanouit pour faire place en importance aux sous-totems des subdivisions: il en reste au moins le lien clanique qui maintient quelque temps encore les prescriptions exogamiques.» C'est ce qui arrive chez les Fân. Le seul mot qui, pour eux, nous paraisse à reprendre est le mot «clanique», auquel doit être substitué le mot «tribal». Nous en avons donné les raisons.

De là encore, la différence entre les défenses totémiques et tabouales dont nous aurons à nous préoccuper.

4° Conclusion.

De tout ce que nous venons de dire, se détachent pour les Fân et tribus apparentées, et par là même peut-être pour l'ensemble bantou, deux règles qui semblent aller à l'encontre de ce que beaucoup d'auteurs ont écrit sur le totémisme et qui en plusieurs points, surtout par rapport à son importance, ne s'accordent pas avec leur système.

Ces deux règles sont:

1° De ce qu'un clan (tel que nous l'avons défini, et nous ne nous disons pas une tribu) ne porte pas le nom du totem, il ne faut pas se hâter de conclure qu'il n'est pas totémique;

2° Ce qu'on n'a pas toujours assez remarqué, un clan peut très bien

[1] Baos, op. cit. p. 238.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

porter le nom d'un animal, paraître ainsi au premier abord toténique, et cependant n'avoir aucune espèce de culte ou d'honneur pour l'animal dont il porte le nom, car il ne le reconnaît pas pour totem.

Le cas se présente ainsi pour les Esamvûñ, par exemple, pour ne citer que ceux-là, où le mvûñ, sorte d'antilope, ne reçoit aucun culte de clan. Ce fait n'empêche cependant en aucune façon ce clan d'être totémique: comment donc le démontrer?[1] Ici se place naturellement l'explication que nous avons donnée de l'origine du clan. Les Esamvûñ ont été fondés par Mvûñ, qui est le père du clan. Mais, dans toute la tribu fâñ, les individus portant un nom d'animal sont excessivement fréquents, et ce vocable n'implique en aucune façon qu'ils aient pour totem l'animal dont ils portent le nom. Les mêmes ethniques se reproduisent souvent dans la famille, le petit-fils porte fréquemment le nom du grand-père. Parfois encore, une circonstance toute fortuite détermine le nom de l'enfant: ce sera un animal tué ce jour-là, un événement survenu, un étranger qui passe, surtout s'il est extraordinaire, tel un Européen. Ainsi, dans nos explorations du Congo Nord, il nous est arrivé maintes fois le fait suivant: les enfants catholiques qui nous accompagnaient répondaient simplement aux gens des villages qui demandaient notre nom: «C'est le Minissé»[2] —, nom d'ailleurs plus facile à prononcer que le nôtre. Et nombreux sont les enfants, qui, d'aventure, nés en ce temps là, ont reçu le nom, très peu fâñ, de Minissé. On conçoit facilement qu'ils ne nous aient pas choisi pour totem! Nous avons fait cependant remarquer qu'à un certain point de vue, nous étions leur étotore, en signalant la différence entre les deux termes.

Donc, et la constatation est des plus importantes, si chez les Fâñ et nombre de tribus bantoues, nous trouvons un clan appelé le «Clan des Vautours», «des Serpents» etc., ne nous hâtons pas, comme certains auteurs qui ont plutôt étudié dans le silence du cabinet ou bien sur des documents de seconde main, d'en tirer la déduction suivante: le clan des Vautours, des Serpents, des Tigres etc. s'assimile aux animaux dont il porte le nom, leur rend un culte totémique, ou s'il ne leur rend plus, en est à un stade postérieur d'évolution: dans beaucoup de cas, cette conclusion serait prématurée.

[1] Nous avons donné en outre l'explication du totem «changé» par suite de la disparition de l'animal toténique primitif.

[2] Minissé, corruption du mot anglais «ministry». Les indigènes l'emploient partout pour désigner les missionnaires de tout culte.

S'il s'agit d'une tribu, le fait a beaucoup de chances d'être vrai.

S'il s'agit d'un clan, le fait a beaucoup de chances d'être erroné. C'est pourquoi nous avons cru bon de nous appesantir assez longtemps sur ces notions assez confuses de «tribus» et de «clans», ordinairement singulièrement mêlées: pour les uns, le «clan» et c'est la définition de nombreux dictionnaires, est une tribu composée de familles, et la tribu «une division du peuple»: ces définitions n'apprennent rien et compliquent la question.

Pour nous donc, et on en a vu les conséquences au point de vue totémique, la nation est l'ensemble des tribus, la tribu est un ensemble de clans, dont deux seulement gardent le nom propre de la tribu, le clan du fondateur de la tribu et celui fondé par un de ses fils ou descendants en ligne directe; le clan est un ensemble de phratries, développement actuel d'une famille «une» à l'origine, gouvernée par le fondateur du clan; ce clan porte le nom du fondateur. Du clan, naîtront à leur tour, et sous l'influence des mêmes circonstances, des sous-clans. L'ensemble n'en continuera pas moins à se rattacher à la tribu-mère. En somme, la tribu constitue, dans son ensemble, un arbre aux branches plus ou moins ramifiées. La tribu-mère en forme le tronc: elle aura une pre*mière filiale, la branche maîtresse*, qui gardera encore son nom; mais encore, à côté de cette branche maîtresse, elle poussera d'autres branches, également sorties du tronc, et qui seront, elles, plus ou moins fortes, parfois plus fortes même que la branche maîtresse, mais toujours filles, comme elle, du tronc lui-même. Chaque branche à son tour se ramifiera, certains rejetons même, telles des boutures sociales, s'en iront fructifier au loin et constituer de nouvelles souches; ce n'en sera pas moins la même vie qui circulera dans toutes les branches, les rattachera toutes au vieux tronc; l'étranger qui passe pourra s'y tromper: le Noir, lui, fier de son origine antique, ne l'oubliera pas, et gardera précieusement les derniers lambeaux qui lui restent de son histoire nationale.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Lorsque, le soir, dans la maison commune, quelque chanteur attitré redira les hauts faits des aïeux, les guerres sanglantes d'autrefois, les victoires de l'épopée nationale, un souffle ardent fera vibrer les âmes des noirs guerriers: dans le vent qui passe, dans la brise qui agite les bananiers, ils croiront entendre les mânes des anciens qui viennent, dans la nuit sombre, retrouver leurs descendants et reconnaître si le sang vigoureux de jadis n'a point dégénéré!

Souvent, j'ai assisté à ce spectacle. Et tandis que dans la case, les feux s'éteignaient, on entendait les vieux chefs redire avec un orgueil mélancolique: «C'est nous qui avons fait cela!»

Mais aujourd'hui, ce ne sont plus guère, sauf là bas, bien loin, dans les profondeurs les plus reculées de la forêt immense, ce ne sont plus les âmes des morts qui viennent: ce sont les Blancs qui apparaissent...

Et les Dieux antiques s'en vont!

Si, à la place, s'élève un culte nouveau et fort, si le christianisme vient infuser un sang nouveau dans ces âmes viriles, c'est bien.

Si, au contraire, le Blanc n'apparaît, comme il le fait trop souvent, que pour détruire sous son souffle railleur les anciennes croyances et ne donner à la place que le culte de l'argent, si au lieu du social relèvement, il n'apporte au Noir que le désir et la vue de honteuses débauches, et le cas est journalier, alors, nous n'hésitons pas à le dire, mieux vaudraient, pour le Noir, ses antiques croyances. Malgré l'esclavage, malgré la barbarie, malgré un état social profondément inférieur, il conserverait au moins quelques notions de droit, de morale et de justice.

d) Le totem familial.

Continuant notre étude sur le développement du totémisme fàn, nous devons maintenant examiner à ce point de vue, la famille fàn en tant que cellule sociale.

La famille constitue donc, répétons-le encore, la cellule sociale, d'où dérive naturellement la tribu. Celle-ci en est le développement, en groupant sous l'autorité d'un même chef de famille, aîné et représentant du père de la race dont il descend, les autres familles issues successivement de la branche commune.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

De la tribu, augmentation ou développement normal de la famille, naîtront à leur tour les clans; bien que se groupant en filiales près de la branche mère et reconnaissant son autorité, ceux-ci n'en constitueront pas moins une sorte de désagrégation de la tribu.

Les clans, ensemble de familles à l'origine desquelles on trouvera souvent un apport de sang étranger dû au rapt ou à la guerre avec tribus ennemies, ne seront en réalité qu'une réunion de phratries, parfois divisées d'intérêt, mais toujours reliées par la grande loi du sang.

Telle est, à notre avis, la constitution de la tribu fâñ, et en cela nous nous rallions complètement à la doctrine de Le Play, continuée, au point de vue africain, par son disciple de Parville.

Toutefois, cette doctrine est loin, nous le savons, d'être admise par tout le monde, et Arcin, par exémple, dans son livre sur la Guinée française [1], propose un tout autre système qui peut également se défendre.

Pour lui donc, et pour plusieurs auteurs,

1° le clan, qui représente originairement la race, est la première forme sociale;

2° par suite de la désagrégation progressive du clan, et comme conséquence de la propriété individuelle que l'homme s'arroge sur la femme, se crée la forme familiale dont l'extension est la phratrie, puis la tribu;

3° cette tribu, en s'amalgamant à des tribus voisines, forme la sous-race;

4° chacune des tribus de la sous-race se divise à son tour en familles particulières;

5° enfin, en se répandant un peu partout, ces familles «particulières se sont agrégées à d'autres familles venant de tribus «étrangères, et bien que conservant encore leur nom tribal, ont «formé ensemble des nationalités, des Etats, placés sous le com-«mandement du chef d'une de ces familles.»

On voit combien cette conception, tout en laissant le clan sous l'autorité du totem, s'éloigne de la nôtre. Il nous paraît donc nécessaire de la reprendre en détail.

[1] Arcin, op. cit. La constitution de la famille.

La société noire, continue ARCIN [1], est patriarcale.

Le père est toujours le chef politique dont le pouvoir est absolu. C'est le koroké, le vieil homme. C'est également la conception fàñ, ñamur, disent-ils; ce nom que beaucoup traduisent par «vieillard», désigne en réalité, un homme vraiment homme, auquel l'expression s'applique dans toute sa force, un «maître» homme, pourrions-nous dire.

Mais tantôt les enfants sont reconnuus parents dans la ligne paternelle seule (les Fàñ), tantôt dans la seule ligne maternelle (leurs voisins les Mpongwé), suivant que le père est, ou non, le chef religieux de la famille. De là, d'un côté, la famille est dite agnatique, tels les Fàñ; de l'autre, cognatique, tels les Mpongwé.

On peut dire qu'en règle générale, après la dispersion des clans primitifs, la famille africaine a été cognatique à l'origine. Il semble certain, en effet, ajoute encore ARCIN, et si nous le citons, c'est qu'en somme, il reflète toute la pensée de l'école matérialiste anthropologique dont MORTILLET a été le chef, «il semble certain que les clans furent la première forme de la société.» Mais la seule preuve qu'il puisse en apporter est celle-ci que beaucoup trouveront, de fait, bien pauvre: «Les femmes, dit Hérodote en parlant de certains Lybiens, sont en commun chez ces peuples ... les enfants sont élevés par leurs mères.» «Tel est bien le clan primitif d'où dérive la famille cognatique.»

Loin d'accepter la valeur de cette citation, nous pourrions opposer immédiatement qu'il faudrait d'abord que le témoignage d'Hérodote fût prouvé. Or, beaucoup de témoignages de cet auteur à propos des Africains sont erronés, tels sur les Pygmées, les Hommes à queue, les Singes etc.! A supposer la vérité de l'observation citée, il peut très bien s'agir de quelque clan, par exemple, où les femmes auraient été en trop petit nombre, d'un fait isolé, ou encore d'un rapport de voyageur mal informé. Il est facile de ce tromper, surtout lorsque, comme Hérodote, on ne connait pas la langue indigène. CUNY [2], en parlant des Fàñ, au milieu desquels il a vécu, dit bien qu'ils sont monogames, erreur manifeste pour un peuple qui considère au

[1] Guinée, p. 345 et sq.

[2] Voir Bibliographie. — Les rapports de CUNY ont peu de valeur.

contraire la monoganie comme un déshonneur ou une marque de pauvreté! — A côté de ces Lybiens d'Hérodote, vivaient aussi les Egyptiens, d'une civilisation bien plus ancienne et dont, certes, le clan n'était pas ainsi constitué. Mais passons.

«Ce mode «cognatique» de formation entraîne des conséquences considérables. Les mariages sont exogamiques.» — Nous montrerons que l'exogamie est au contraire une conséquence totémique de la famille agnatique.

«L'enfant hérite, non du père, mais de l'oncle maternel» — ce que nous trouvons également dans la famille mpongwée, moins totémique cependant que la famille fân.

«Son fétiche éponyme [c'est-à-dire le totem: on voit combien il est utile de dstinguer, comme nous le ferons plus loin entre totem et fétiche; la conception de l'un est toute différente de la conception de l'autre] est celui de la famille de sa mère et du clan primitif dont cette fanille est un dérivé.»

Nous avons donc là en somme une constitution analogue, sauf la différence entre fmille cognatique et agnatique, avec ce que nous retrouvons dans la tribu fân.

«A côté de la fmille cognatique[1] se forma dans la période contemporaine une fmille agnatique, sous l'influence musulmane, et actuellement les deux types existent côte à côte suivant les peuplades, et suivant qu'elles sont musulmanes ou fétichistes. Sous l'influence européenne le mouvement s'est encore accentué en faveur du type agnatique.»

Cette remarque est vraie, d'autant qu'elle concorde avec ce que nous voyons de la faveur accordée malheureusement aux musulmans. Cependant, cette influence est utile au point de vue des mœurs, car s'il est irrationel que l'oncle maternel, le mbalo mpongwé, soit, à l'exclusion du père, maître de l'enfant auquel au fond il s'intéresse peu, autant il est juste que ce soit le père. Mais nous sommes loin d'accorder telle part à l'influence musulmane. D'un côté, les Fân et la plupart des tribus bantoues ignorent cette influence; d'un autre, et c'est la raison principale, les généalogies fàñ sont là pour nous montrer qu'au contraire, si haut que l'on puisse remonter, le clan fàñ a toujours été agnatique. Et encore, au premier ancêtre, chef de la race, nommé, le Fàñ a grand soin d'ajouter: «Et celui-là était fils de beaucoup d'autres, et au devant de tous, il y avait le Créateur, et là, je n'étais pas présent.»

[1] Bien des faits viendraient d'ailleurs contre cette théorie. Si d'un côté, par exemple, nous trouvons le même type de famille chez les Fân aussi haut que nous puissions remonter, nous trouvons le type exactement contraire chez les Mpongwé, leurs voisins, et dont la langue semble faire partie du même rameau.

Eñi esayóñ.

Ane mur éto a mbe é mvus eñi mbox, ni vale, ni vale; ane oshu, Nzame a mbe; ésim éto, mé dia va.

Littéralement: «Mais celui-ci était le père de la race, mais cet homme était derrière un autre (allusion à la coutume fàñ: le frère aîné porte son frère sur le dos, d'où «celui qui est derrière», celui qui est sur le dos désigne le cadet) et ainsi, et ainsi, mais, devant tous, le Créateur chef était; en ce temps là, je n'étais pas présent.»

Et cette phrase que l'on retrouve dans toutes les tribus, même et surtout si elles n'ont jamais vu de «Blanc», ne montre-t-elle pas bien la famille fàñ, constituée ainsi sous l'autorité du père de famille, et remontant d'âge en âge, de siècle en siècle, jusqu'au grand père de la famille humaine, au Créateur — chef et père de la race! Et à Lui, le Fàñ, rejetant dédaigneusement la théorie qui ferait de ses ancêtres un conglomérat d'êtres vivant bestialement dans la forêt, sans règles de morale, adresse en somme un acte superbe de foi: Ane, oshu, Nzame a mbe, «Mais devant tous, père du premier homme de ma race, Dieu se tient!»

«Mais continue Arcin, il est bon de remarquer que la famille africaine n'est pas restreinte comme la famille européenne. Qu'elle soit cognatique ou agnatique, elle ne comprend pas seulement le père, la mère et les enfants, mais tous les descendants d'un même ancêtre. Voilà pourquoi les Noirs se disent frères de village, quoiqu'ils n'aient ni père ni mère communs.» — C'est vrai, mais il se disent frères parce qu'ils ont même origine, attestée par le totem tribal.

«Ce groupement, lorsqu'il est agnatique (et c'est le cas de nos Fàñ), correspond exactement à la «gens» romaine, et est basée sur le culte des ancêtres.» — Nous avons vu déjà et verrons plus loin encore, en parlant de l'origine du totem, combien ces deux idées, culte du totem, culte de l'ancêtre, sont intimement liées, bien que distinctes.

«La famille cognatique a adopté, elle aussi, le culte des ancêtres à mesure que le souvenir du clan s'effaçait. Mais elle a conservé, en le modifiant, le culte totémique, que l'on trouve également à l'état de souvenir dans la famille agnatique.» — Tout ce que nous venons de dire montre, au contraire, combien le culte totémique demeure bien plus qu'un souvenir dans la famille agnatique, dont la famille fân peut être considérée comme un type presque pur, remontant fort loin dans les âges.

«Le «totem», ancêtre mythologique du clan, lui sert d'emblème, et lui donne son nom. C'est un animal ou un objet. Le totem a perdu, avec la désagrégation du clan, une partie de sa signification. L'être animé ou inanimé, adoré de cette société primitive, a cessé parfois d'être considéré comme l'ancêtre. Rome, dit André Lefèvre (La Religion p. 11) célébrait la louve nourrice de son fondateur. La plupart des tribus Yakoutes ont l'oie, le cygne, le corbeau pour ancêtres et pour signes distinctifs. Les Thibétains se croient issus d'un singe et d'une guenon. La postérité du chien est innombrable dans le Nord de l'Amérique et dans l'Asie Orientale [1]. Les Bohémiens nomades se nomment Kalia, c'est-à-dire les Noirs, comme descendants du «serpent démon» qui vainquit Krishna. Chez les Kalloches, les totems sont les loups blancs, le corbeau, le dauphin etc.»

«On s'est contenté d'associer le totem à la légende fabuleuse du premier patriarche de la phratrie qui a succédé au clan. Néanmoins, l'expression «c'est mon père» en parlant de certains animaux, s'emploie encore couramment.» — Nous avons dit comment devait s'expliquer cette phrase qui n'implique nullement l'idée de descendance réelle, et ainsi s'explique facilement l'historiette qu'Angas ajoute à l'appui de son dire.

«Etant chez un ami qui élevait une jeune panthère, je commandai au boy de la prendre et de me la porter. Il refusa de le

[1] Nous ne croyons guère, comme nous l'avons déjà dit, à ces auteurs interprétant les traditions d'un peuple dont ils connaissent peu, mal ou nullement la langue. Nous avons montré en parlant du mvemapôñ et de l'ewapôñ combien il est facile de se tromper et de croire à une dénomination réelle lorsqu'elle n'est que figurative.

faire. «C'est mon papa, me disait-il, et si je le touche, cela m'attirera de grands malheurs.»

«Un autre jour, ayant frôlé par inadvertance une peau de panthère, il fit un bond en arrière et sa figure prit une expression de terreur indicible.» — Un fân du clan Nze ou du Tigre aurait éprouvé la même terreur: il y aurait eu, en effet, faute rituelle, qui aurait dû être expiée, expiation ordonnée, soit après aveu du coupable, par le chef de la tribu, ou bien vengeance particulière du totem, comme nous l'avons déjà déclaré. Il ne s'agit donc nullement là de filiation réelle: le Blanc l'y a vue bien plus que le Noir!

Et ce trait montre également combien, même au contact des Européens, le totémisme a encore de force, tant ses racines sont profondes et à la base même de la tribu.

En résumé donc, pour certaine école:

Le clan, avec les femmes en commun, serait la cellule sociale.

La phratrie en serait le développement par main-mise de l'homme sur la femme.

La tribu serait une association de phratries.

La tribu formerait la race en s'amalgamant avec des tribus voisines.

La race, en se ramifiant, constituerait enfin des familles.

Pour nous, au contraire:

La famille — monogame — serait la cellule sociale, famille ayant son totem, dont nous verrons bientôt l'origine et le rôle.

La famille polygame serait une conséquence des guerres incessantes diminuant le nombre des guerriers. Cette raison remonte à l'origine de la race, et demeure toujours, même aujourd'hui, une des causes de la polygamie. Celle-ci est due encore à ce que bientôt la femme devient l'instrument de travail et de portage: être plus faible. Enfin les alliances, nécessitées par le besoin d'augmenter l'influence de la tribu et des chefs de famille, sont la troisième raison de la polygamie.

La tribu est le développement normal de la famille et prend nécessairement son totem.

Le clan est le filial de la tribu; il prend, avec ses sous-clans, le totem familial, mais il est filial de la tribu par son origine.

Le sous-clan est filial du clan.

L'émigration en avant des hordes, composées de jeunes gens qui doivent se procurer des femmes, donne les phratries, dont l'ensemble constituera le clan, en formation lui-même de tribu.

L'ensemble des tribus constitue la nation, groupement de toutes les familles issues d'une même famille, ou d'un même groupe de familles dont chacune aura créé sa tribu; aucun document ne nous permet d'assigner une date à l'origine de chaque famille. Au contraire, les généalogies nous permettent, à l'heure actuelle, de réduire à une centaine les groupements de familles, constituant autant de tribus différentes, et formant déjà nation. A cette époque assignée par les généalogies, ces groupements, composés probablement d'assez peu de familles pour pouvoir résider ensemble chacun dans sa vallée, étaient déjà partagés en quatre rameaux; ils remontent à trente-deux ou trente-trois générations environ, soit à peu près dix siècles. Selon toute probabilité, leur origine était beaucoup plus éloignée encore, car chaque groupe de familles avait déjà son totem familial, reconnu et honoré, tel que nous le retrouvons encore aujourd'hui.

e) Le totem individuel.

Chaque individu mâle, par le fait même de sa naissance, fait déjà partie d'une entité qui, dans l'espèce, est tout d'abord la famille, puis, de façon secondaire, le clan ou la tribu dont sa famille fait partie. En entrant dans la famille ou le clan, il a donc déjà son totem particulier auquel il ne peut rien changer, puisque ce totem ne dépend pas de lui. Toutefois, le père de famille, qui constate pour lui et sa famille les bons effets du totem familial, et estimant que deux sorcetés valent mieux qu'une, donnera souvent à son héritier un autre totem particulier, protecteur destiné à assurer vie, richesses et honneur à l'enfant.

Ce totem, qu'il ne faut pas confondre avec l'éléélé ou animal protecteur que nous examinerons plus loin, n'a pas toutefois, et à bien près, la valeur du totem de famille ou de clan.

En effet, il est essentiellement transitoire et personnel, et cessera à la mort de l'individu, qui ne saurait le transmettre à ses descendants. Cette transmission serait d'ailleurs inutile, puisque chacun peut avoir le sien.

Non seulement il est transitoire et personnel, mais encore, et c'est ce qui le distingue nettement des autres totems, il est révocable. Cette détermination est importante et des plus utiles à remarquer. Les divers totems de tribu, de clan, de famille, ne dépendent, en effet, ni du chef de la tribu, ni du chef de clan et de famille. Tel ils l'ont reçu de leurs aïeux, tel ils doivent le transmettre: la tribu peut s'éteindre, aussi bien que le clan ou la famille, mais son totem ne disparaîtra point, puisqu'il est lié intimement au chef de la race, du clan ou de la famille. Le totem personnel, au contraire, dépend de la volonté de celui qui l'a donné d'abord, puis, quand celui qui l'a reçu devient indépendant, sui compos, il en est maître à son tour. Si donc, pour une raison ou une autre, il n'en est pas satisfait, s'il croit avoir à s'en plaindre et pense mieux réussir avec un autre totem, il en changera facilement.

Du fait donc, et cela arrive, qu'un Fân vend son totem personnel, il n'en faut point conclure qu'il vend un objet sacré pour lui, et que, par conséquent, sa croyance au totem est limitée. Il vend, pour un prix qu'il estime bon, une chose qui a cessé de lui plaire, et qui, pour lui, n'a plus en somme aucune valeur, sinon une valeur vénale presque nulle. Il estime faire un bon marché, le fait avec raison, et en sera quitte pour se choisir, ou ne pas se choisir, s'il le veut, un autre totem.

Dans la réalité, une fois parvenus à l'âge d'homme, la plupart des Fân ne se préoccupent plus du totem individuel, et le totem de famille et de clan, qui conserve toute sa vitalité et tout son prestige, leur suffit largement. Et c'est ce qui appuie encore notre précédente démonstration: dans la constitution fân, l'homme n'est rien et ne compte pour rien, si ce n'est en tant qu'il fait partie de la famille, première cellule sociale.

Par suite de tout ce que nous venons de dire, on voit combien nous sommes éloignés des théories de Reinach et de Frazer sur l'origine du totem, malgré la notoriété du dernier auteur.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

D'après Frazer[1], en effet, le «totem du clan, par suite l'or-«ganisation sociale du clan totémique ne serait qu'une extension, «une généralisation du totem individuel. Dans certaines tribus «africaines, chez certains peuples indigènes de l'Amérique, chaque «individu se croit protégé par un individu qu'il appelle son nagual, «son idhlozi etc. Qu'au lieu de protéger un seul individu, l'animal «soit censé protéger un groupe tout entier, le totem individuel se «transforme aussitôt en totem de clan. Le clan s'impose à l'égard «de cet animal les mêmes devoirs que l'individu à l'égard de son «nagual et de son idhlozi etc.»

On a vu combien tout ce que nous avons dit s'oppose à cette formation, et comment c'est au contraire le totem de clan qui dérive, nous semble-t-il, du totem individuel. Aussi ne pouvons-nous que partager le sentiment de Mr. Toutain[2] écrivant: «Ainsi le totémisme proprement dit, le totémisme de clan serait logiquement et historiquement (d'après Frazer) postérieur au totémisme individuel. Or, l'idée qui se trouve au fond du totémisme individuel est aisée à retrouver chez les divers peuples de l'antiquité classique: c'est l'idée que chaque individu est placé sous la protection d'un être puissant et bienfaisant, qui se manifeste le plus souvent sous la forme d'un animal. Le «genius» latin, le δαίμων grec, n'étaient-ils pas, en général, représentés par un serpent? Si la théorie de Mr. Frazer est juste, si vraiment la forme la plus ancienne du totémisme est le totémisme individuel, nous sommes en droit de dire que les Grecs et les Latins ont connu celle-là à l'époque historique, mais qu'ils n'ont point connu le totémisme collectif parce que leur évolution sociale et religieuse s'est faite autrement, dans un autre sens, dans une direction différente.

Mais nous ne voulons rien affirmer en cette matière. Il serait contraire à notre méthode et à notre conception de l'histoire de substituer des affirmations hypothétiques aux affirmations que nous contestons précisément parce qu'elles sont hypothétiques. Nous

[1] Le Rameau d'or, trad. franc. t. II, p. 815.

[2] J. Toutain, L'Histoire des Religions et le Totémisme, dans Transactions of the Third International Congress for the History of Religions, v. II, p. 124—127. Oxford 1908.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

nous sommes seulement efforcés de montrer que le caractère primitif ou antérieur du totémisme n'est rien moins que prouvé. Il n'est pas non plus certain que les populations totémiques soient des populations primitives . . .»

Nous examinerons ce dernier point en parlant de l'antiquité du totem.

f) Totem de confrérie et de société secrète.

«Comme la Religion, dit Mgr. Le Roy dans sa Religion des Primitifs (p. 335), a pris chez les Primitifs la famille pour support, — et on remarquera en passant combien cette théorie si bien prouvée par l'éminent auteur confirme la nôtre du totémisme prenant également la famille pour support —, la magie n'a pas manqué de la suivre dans cet asile qui paraissait pourtant devoir lui rester fermé, puis, de là, étendue au village et à la tribu, elle s'est emparée du gouvernement de ces peuples rudimentaires.

«Sans parler de multiples interdits, superstitions et prescriptions magiques dont la famille primitive se trouve chargée, nous devons rapporter à la même action l'institution singulière du totémisme ou pacte d'alliance avec le monde animal.

«Il en faut dire autant de l'initiation de l'adolescence, laquelle, en soi, a parfaitement sa raison d'être, qui peut être utilement sanctionnée par la religion, mais que presque toujours la magie accapare, complique et déforme.

«Mais c'est surtout dans ce que nous appellerions aujourd'hui l'action politique et sociale, que, par de très curieuses organisations, la magie paraît avoir dirigé ses efforts; son but avoué et visible est ici de s'emparer du gouvernement du village et de la tribu. Elle le fait au moyen de sociétés secrètes ou fermées. Ces sociétés ne sont pas cependant les mêmes partout, quoique partout elles aient un air de parenté indéniable: là, plus lâches, plus ouvertes, elles sont ici plus resserrées, plus mystérieuses, plus actives.»

Bien que nous ne partagions pas entièrement toutes ces idées, nous avons cependant donné cette citation, car elle éclaire d'un jour singulier toute cette question des sociétés secrètes.

Comme on le voit, Mgr. Le Roy attribue à la magie l'institution de ces sociétés, dont le but, au fond, va pour lui contre l'institution primordiale de la famille; il rattache également à cette même magie le totémisme. Pour nous, nous sommes d'idée un peu différente, et croyons que le totémisme est une forme particulière du culte, née après la religion primitive, et bien inférieur à elle, tenant en somme dans la vie religieuse de la nation une place parallèle avec le culte des ancêtres, culte avec lequel il faut bien se garder de la confondre. Rites, ministres, objet, nature, origine, tout l'en sépare.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

La magie, de son côté, comme le fait bien observer Mgr. Le Roy, a envahi la religion, mais loin d'envahir le totémisme, il pourrait bien se faire que le totémisme, ayant déjà sa place marquée dans la religion, a pris à son tour place dans les rites et cérémonies magiques. Si l'on préfère encore, la magie, trouvant le totémisme intervenant dans les nombreux actes religieux, par exemple dans le culte des ancêtres, où deux rites existent conjointement sans se mêler, l'a également adopté comme sien.

Les sociétés secrètes, avec les rites totémiques qu'elles adoptent, sont-elles, dit encore Mgr. Le Roy, d'institution magique? Il ne nous semble pas que ce soit le lieu de le discuter, car la question ne nous paraît, en cela, avoir aucun rapport avec le totémisme, mais ce qui n'a pas été fait, et ce que nous croyons très important, c'est de distinguer entre confrérie sociale et religieuse, et société secrète proprement dite.

On mêle trop souvent ces deux institutions, attribuant à l'une ce qui doit être attribué à l'autre, et les rangeant toutes les deux sous le titre unique, mais éminemment faux, de société secrète.

Or, il y a société secrète et société secrète, ou plutôt, comme nous l'avons écrit, société religieuse et sociale secrète, et société vraiment secrète, mais nullement sociale et plutôt anti-religieuse.

* * *

La société secrète sociale est sous la domination du féticheur: le chef y a son rang, mais subordonné à celui du féticheur qui dirige tout; en ce sens, et par les actes qu'il inspire, actes nécessairement religieux, on peut dire que la magie y joue son grand rôle.

En face de la famille, unité sociale parfaitement organisée, dont le père est le chef à la fois social et religieux, en face du clan, union de familles issues d'une même souche dont le chef de clan est le chef de famille appartenant à la famille souche, se dresse le fétiseur. Le chef lui déléguait seulement l'autorité religieuse, absorbé qu'il était souvent par la question politique et sociale; le fétiseur a voulu, à son tour, créer une unité sociale dont il serait le chef parfaitement reconnu; il a essayé, il a réussi même à créer cet organisme, tantôt d'une façon complète, tantôt, quand l'autorité sociale était trop fortement constituée, d'une façon incomplète, mais en y prenant cependant la part la plus considérable. Telle, par exemple, l'admission des jeunes guerriers: cet acte, parfaitement légal dans l'origine, et sous l'autorité du chef de clan et des chefs de famille, est devenu peu à peu un ensemble de pratiques secrètes, où le chef n'a plus, devant le fétiseur, qu'un rôle secondaire: aujourd'hui, cette admission se réduit en somme à entrer dans une société secrète et fermée, sous le contrôle et sous l'obéissance absolue du fétiseur.

A leur tour, les fétiseurs, pour maintenir intacts leur prémance et leurs rites et assurer leur recrutement, ont fondé des sociétés secrètes calquées sur le modèle de la tribu et du clan, et où chaque grade nécessite, pour être admis, une série d'épreuves graduées.

En ce sens qu'elles sont «socialement» organisées, et que leur existence, bien que contre la constitution même de la tribu, est néanmoins admise par tous, de force ou autrement, nous rangeons ces deux types de sociétés secrètes sous la même rubrique: sociétés secrètes ou confréries proprement dites.

CHAPITRE VII.

NATURE DES DIVERS TOTEMS.

TOTEM DE TRIBU, DE CLAN, DE FAMILLE, D'INDIVIDU, DE SOCIÉTÉ SECRÈTE.

§ 1. Etat de la question. Erreurs possibles entre totem de clan et de famille. Pourquoi les renseignements sont difficiles à obtenir. — Enfants et Chrétiens. Un fait personnel.

§ 2. Nature des divers totems. a) Totem national. Son vestige. — b) Totems de tribu: ses causes. — Différentes espèces de totems, animaux, végétaux, minéraux, phénomènes naturels. — c) Totems de clan: 1° Clans strictement totémiques, ou clans primaires et leurs totems. — 2° Clans non strictement totémiques. Pourquoi certains clans portent le nom du totem, et d'autres pas. — 3° Divers totems de clans. — d) Totem familial. Sa nature. — e) Totem individuel. Quelques remarques sur son existence et son rôle. — Circonstances qui déterminent le choix du totem. — Circonstances fortuites. — Violation d'ôté totémique. — Qui choisit le totem individuel. — Les seuls enfants mâles ont un nomen. Loin du nomen. — f) Totems de société secrète. Ils sont les mêmes que ceux de la tribu.

§ 3. Conclusion. Quelques remarques à propos des nomenpiit. — Extension de ces croyances. Elles sont répandues dans toute l'Afrique, non seulement chez les Fôti, mais aussi bien chez les Sonikés au Nord que chez les Sawaga au Sud. — Exemples. — Conclusion.

---

§ 1. Etat de la question.

On comprit, d'après ce que nous avons vu plus haut, l'importance de la distinction entre totem de tribu et totem de clan, et pourquoi nous nous sommes attachés à bien distinguer ce que nous entendons par tribu et par clan. Le totem de tribu demeure en effet presque toujours le totem le plus important, car, en somme, il ne disparaît pas, quelque soit la fortune de la tribu, puisqu'il se retrouve dans les clans, ses filiales; au contraire, le totem de clan peut parfaitement disparaître, et cela, sans aucun inconvénient.

[p.144]

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Toutefois, nous devons, dès maintenant, faire une constatation et en même temps un aveu: nous ne prétendons nullement être infaillible en donnant les noms des totems de tribu et de clan, et il pourra probablement arriver que l'avenir, et des études plus complètes, montreront que nous nous sommes trompés, non sur le fond même de la question, mais sur tel ou tel point de détail. Il ne faut pas oublier, en effet, que la loi totémique est une loi de secret, et que, particulièrement dans les totems de sociétés secrètes, cette loi est très sévère. De plus, malgré nos recherches nombreuses, il peut arriver que pour un totem de clan, surtout dans les clans composés de peu d'individus, on puisse se tromper entre totem de clan et totem de famille. Le fait, on le voit, ne porte en tout cas que sur un point de peu d'importance, et nullement sur le fond même de la question: pour rétablir la vérité, il n'y aurait jamais qu'à remplacer un nom de totem par le nom d'un autre totem, un animal, un végétal ou un minéral, à la place d'un autre.

Dans l'intérieur, on arrive avec une facilité relative, surtout lorsqu'on a déjà pénétré les premiers secrets, à connaître ces totems, mais ces renseignements deviennent de plus en plus difficiles à obtenir des enfants des Missions, des villages où a pénétré le Christianisme, protestants ou catholiques, et même dans tous les villages en contact avec les Européens. Les chrétiens et les enfants élevés à la Mission les dissimuleront soigneusement, en nieront presque toujours même l'existence. Les raisons en sont celles-ci: ils connaissent ou ne connaissent pas l'existence et la nature du totem, connaissance qui fait partie de l'initiation. S'ils ne la connaissent pas, ils nieront simplement, et affirmeront la non-existence. S'ils la connaissent, ils nieront encore plus énergiquement, soit qu'ils ne veuillent plus passer pour des «sauvages», et répondront: «Tout cela, ce sont des sottises, c'est bon pour les hommes de la forêt», soit encore qu'ils ne veuillent pas passer pour des renégats, assistant malgré leur conversion, à des cérémonies fétichistes et prenant part à des initiations. Avec les hommes faits, c'est encore plus difficile. Soit qu'ils redoutent les moqueries et les sarcasmes dont ne se privent guère, il faut l'avouer, les Européens, soit par ennui, lassitude, ou crainte de s'engager trop loin, ils nient simplement. Souvent aussi, en dévoilant des rites secrets dont ils savent fort bien que la divulgation amène la ruine, ils redoutent, et à bon droit, la vengeance des chefs et des féticheurs.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

J'ai pour ma part été témoin du fait suivant. Un des administrateurs de notre région consacrait une partie de son temps à s'enquérir auprès des indigènes de leurs mœurs et coutumes. L'un des Noirs, ainsi interrogé[1], nia absolument l'existence de tout totem. Le soir même, je le surprenais dans sa case, au moment où, venant d'immoler une poule, il l'offrait à son totem en expiation du mensonge. Il voulut en vain me bâtir une explication quelconque, et demeura d'abord fort embarrassé, voyant que je connaissais son secret, mais également fort confiant depuis, en constatant que j'étais loin de m'en moquer, ou de paraître même le connaître devant les autres. Sûr de ma discrétion, il m'apprit ensuite bien des points plus ou moins secrets, et m'expliqua le sens de nombreux rites, difficiles à saisir.

Tous ceux qui se sont occupés de la question ont éprouvé ailleurs mêmes difficultés, et de la négation des indigènes, il ne faut pas surtout conclure à la non-existence, surtout dans les tribus déjà en contact avec les Européens. Ainsi, nous nous permettons à ce point de vue de citer un court passage d'Ancel[2], d'autant que bien des points peuvent se rapporter à nos Fân, et montrent ainsi l'extension du totémisme. «Sous l'influence de l'islamisme, certains indigènes commencent à rejeter ces croyances; j'ai connu les difficultés que signale Bazan pour arriver à mener à bien une enquête. Je me suis heurté à des dénégations formelles chez certains Foutadjalonké, fervents musulmans comme les gens de Kong [et pour ma part, même fait m'est arrivé maintes fois chez nos Fân]. Il est même très difficile d'obtenir d'eux des renseignements à ce sujet, et un grand nombre de musulmans prétend n'avoir jamais eu de totém.» — De même, tous les Fân en relations avec les Européens, nient l'existence de tout totem: nous en avons donné les raisons.

[1] C'était un nommé Christophe Ngwa, interprète. Chrétien ardent de nom, il avait été baptisé en danger de mort, et, depuis, n'avait jamais pratiqué la religion. C'était un garçon fort intelligent, de la tribu des Essendéban: je lui dois nombre de renseignements intéressants.

[2] La Guinée française, par Ancel, pp. 347 et ss.

§ 2. Nature des divers totems.

a) Totem national.

Les Fâh n'ont pas, comme nous l'avons vu, de totem national, au moins dans l'état actuel de la nation.

Nous avons indiqué plus haut que l'ancien totem national, si on peut l'appeler ainsi, puisque ce n'était en somme qu'un totem de tribu, a été primitivement le crocodile et l'éléphant. On retrouve principalement les traces de ce double totem dans les légendes; l'éléphant, surtout, y a laissé, une empreinte profonde. Cependant, à côté des légendes, les chants traditionnels, et encore certains rites sur lesquels nous aurons à revenir, conservent également les vestiges et donnent la preuve de ce totémisme primitif, d'ailleurs de loin postérieur à l'antique animisme et au culte des ancêtres dans la tribu. Ces vestiges sont d'autant plus intéressants qu'ils sont pour nous les seuls restes d'un passé disparu, auquel, sans eux, nous n'aurions aucune notion précise et certaine.

b) Totems de tribu.

En parlant, au commencement du chapitre précédent, de la nature du totem, ou pour employer un mot plus précis, du mvamaydé, nous avons vu qu'il se présentait sous trois aspects différents:

Etre vivant
Etre inanimé
Phénomène naturel.

Remarquons cependant qu'en employant ce mot «être vivant», «être inanimé», nous ne prétendons nullement dire que le mvamaydé soit actuellement un être vivant, mais seulement que le mvamaydé était, au temps de l'esayôé, un être, vivant ou inanimé; il est représenté actuellement par des êtres vivants ou inanimés issus de lui, ou tirant de lui leur origine (tout aux yeux du Noir étant considéré comme, «vivant», ayant son mode d'action, ses influences, aussi bien le végétal que le minéral). Nous avons déjà donné à ce sujet les explications nécessaires et n'y reviendrons pas.

La première catégorie comprend donc l'être vivant, et nous avons dit également que c'était là l'immense majorité des cas. Si l'on admet en effet, et nous aurons à en parler dans le chapitre suivant, que l'origine du totem, d'après une opinion qui paraît vraisemblable, est due au désir de s'attribuer ou de conquérir des vertus et des qualités faisant en partie défaut à l'Espèce humaine, on conçoit facilement que ce soit l'animal qui ait frappé tout d'abord l'esprit du Noir. Il aura voulu être robuste, s'assimiler par exemple la force de l'éléphant, être rapide, et de là acquérir la vitesse de l'antilope, heureux à la guerre et avoir l'habileté et la souplesse du tigre; la crainte, causée peut-être par un événement tragique, aura pu le déterminer à choisir le tonnerre comme totem, surtout avec l'idée que le tonnerre était la manifestation extérieure d'un esprit puissant: de là mieux valait se faire un ami du plus fort.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Quelque soit la valeur de cette hypothèse, soit dit en passant, il est certain que c'est bien celle que m'ont maintes fois donné les Fân eux-mêmes. J'ai même vu un chef de famille changer son propre totem pour celui du tonnerre après avoir eu sa femme foudroyée à côté d'un arbre par la foudre. L'arbre était creux, il fut fendu par le tonnerre: en fouillant la cavité, on trouva les restes carbonisés d'un varan[1]: les os de l'animal constituèrent aussitôt le nouvel ngôk, ou totem familial matérialisé.

Aussi, si nous rencontrons aux plus anciennes tribus, celles en yo, d'après la marche que nous avons examinée plus haut, verrons-nous chez elles; de préférence, un totem animal vivant. Ce sera tout d'abord, en suivant non pas l'importance de la tribu, mais l'ordre tout arbitraire d'ailleurs indiqué plus haut

1° Les êtres vivant sur terre.

Ainsi nous aurons:

a) Les animaux proprement dits,

tels,

Nom de tribu	nom de totem
Les Yenzok	zamb ou éléphant
Les Kus[2]	kus ou panthère
Les Yengô	ngô ou sorbon sauvage
Les Yélémvô	mvô ou chat-tigre

[1] Varan du Nil.

[2] Tribu du groupe Bôô, par conséquent de la forêt, et ne dérivant du groupe yo exclusif aux Bôô.

Les Youlip	ulip, peut-être l'okapi[1]
Les Bikwel[2]	kwé ou singe noir
Les Youlé	ulé ou singe à nez blanc
Les Youpim	upim ou porc épic
Les Yowoul	owul, sorte d'animal nocturne sup. de lynx
Les Youwul	uwul, sup. d'antilope.

(tribu aujourd'hui éteinte et dont le clan filial reste seul: Les Ekiowul).

Et quelques autres tribus portent encore le Aa et l'avil, fourmilier et pangolin, diverses sortes d'antilopes etc.

f) Les autres animaux vivant sur terre, tels que reptiles, coquillages terrestres, insectes terrestres même. Ainsi:

Nom de tribu	nom de totem
Les Yowut	owut, silurus ebeje ou varan
Les Youbowut	ubowut, sup. de scarabée terrestre
Les Youpum ou Youpwé	upum ou upwé, ou gilil, ou scolopendre
Les Yéhokum	ékum ou fourmi noire
Les Youmum	umum ou kum.
Les Yofil	fil ou fourmi noire

(tribu éteinte, dont le clan filial reste seul: Les Ebofil).

y) Les êtres vivant en l'air.

Certaines tribus, en nombre déjà plus restreint, auront les êtres vivant en l'air, tels que oiseaux et même insectes. Tels:

Nom de tribu	nom de totem
Les Youdzé	udzé ou aigle
Les Youdzu	udzu ou bulgore porte-lanterne
Les Yofum (presque éteinte: un seul petit village. Le clan filial, les Ebofum et ses concurrents poissons).	fum ou goliath ou plutôt le scarabée

d) Les êtres vivant dans l'eau.

Enfin, d'autres tribus emprunteront leur totem au monde aquatique, poissons ou amphibies, en faisant cette remarque, assez singulière au premier abord, que malgré sa force, nous n'avons jamais rencontré l'hippopotame comme totem de tribu. La seule raison, qui nous paraîtrait assez forte, est la suivante. Si, comme nous le croyons, les Fàn sont venus du Haut Nil pour aboutir à l'Ogowé en passant par le Congo, partout, aussi bien dans leur pays d'origine que dans leurs migrations, ils ont trouvé abondance d'hippopotames, qui, même avec l'éléphant, a dû constituer souvent la base de leur nourriture animale: la privation de cette viande, d'après les prescriptions totémiques, eût été véritablement trop dure.

[1] Nous disons l'okapi, sur les descriptions que nous ont faites les Fà du ulip paraissant se rapporter à cet animal. [2] Tribu du groupe Bulé.

Nom de tribu	nom de totem
Les Yengol	ngol, esp. de silure et encore cette tribu, étant aujourd'hui écrasée à la côte, a-t-elle presque perdu son totem. En tous cas, les enfants yengol que j'ai connus s'en souciaient fort peu: je n'ai pu interroger les vieillards.

e) Les végétaux.

Certaines tribus nous offrent également des exemples de totem appartenant au monde végétal. Tels:

Nom de tribu	nom de totem
Les Ydiôm auront pour totem	ôdom ebolo, esp. de banane
Les Yeulum " " "	ulum, esp. d'arbre très dévé, souvent frappé par la foudre. Comme cette tribu prend également comme totem les arbres sous frappés par la foudre et ne peut s'en servir pour faire du feu, peut-être aurait-elle plutôt le tamarre comme totem.
Les Yemi " " "	mvi, esp. de fleur du genre Amomobera
Les Yendub " " "	ndub, ou palmier rotang.

Pour ce totem, la défense totémique d'user du totem porte sur la moëlle des jeunes pousses qu'il est interdit de manger, comme le font beaucoup d'indigènes[1], mais non de se servir des fibres pour faire de la vannerie, suivant l'usage général[2].

f) Les êtres inanimés.

Nous ne voyons, dans ce groupe, parmi les totems de tribus que:

les Yendôm ayant pour totem	ndôm ou les Eaux, mais ce totem dont la défense totémique d'en user serait évidemment impossible, est restreint à certaines eaux et dans certaines conditions déterminées, surtout par rapport au temps et aux ablutions[3].

[1] Les Européens mangent également ces jeunes pousses, grillées sur les charbons et dépouillées de l'enveloppe extérieure. Le goût en est bon mais un peu amer.

[2] Les paniers, corbeilles, nasses etc. sont tous faits en fibres de rotang.

[3] Par exemple, les chefs de famille ne pourront se baigner à la pleine lune, ni boire avant de partir en voyage, ni se désaltérer en se servant du creux de la main, mais d'un cornet de feuilles etc.

D'après la légende de la tribu, l'esayôé ou père de la tribu aurait eu son totem ainsi constitué parce que, voulant se marier et ne trouvant aucune femme à son gré, il aurait un jour offert un sacrifice à Nzame.

Cette légende que nous résumons presque mot à mot, rapporte que pendant que le feu consumait l'animal, une pluie abondante vint l'éteindre, et l'homme entendit une voix qui disait:

«Va et jette les os à la rivière.»

Il les prit et alla les y jeter. Et pendant la nuit, une voix lui dit encore:

«Va à la rivière» et il y alla. Et sur le bord, il trouva une jeune femme qui le salua en disant:

«Père, je te salue.»

Il reprit: «D'où viens-tu?»

Et elle répondit: «C'est le secret de l'eau, va le lui demander.»

Et il reprit: «Es-tu la fille du sacrifice?»

Et elle répondit: «C'est le secret de l'eau (c'est un mystère). L'eau est ma race: elle est mon père et ma mère: Médzim mé ne ma oda (litt. l'eau m'a portée sur le dos: nous avons vu le sens de cette expression). Et toi, tu seras mon époux.»

Et il lui dit: «C'est bien.» Il la prit, la ramena au village et l'épousa. De lui et d'elle descendent les Yemédzim, et l'eau est leur mvamayôé ou protecteur.

Cette légende se rapproche, on le voit, des légendes du dieu poisson, de la première femme sortie des eaux. — C'est également la seule légende que nous connaissons où le totem soit, à un certain point, reconnu comme père effectif de la race. Et encore ne l'est-il guère, car l'eau joue plutôt ici le rôle de Créateur, donnant un nouveau corps à l'animal immolé en sacrifice, dont les os se changent en femme; mais, en réalité, le vrai père de la race demeure bien le chef primitif, car l'animal offert en sacrifice est toujours, d'après les idées des Fâh, non pas un sacrifice quelconque, mais un sacrifice représentatif: il est substitué au sacrificateur lui-même et tient sa place.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

g) Les phénomènes naturels.

Les Yengure ont pour totem l'arc en ciel, bien qu'ils n'en portent pas actuellement le nom: Ewje, mais un nom très proche: ngure, qui signifie «nuage noir». Le ngure est un présagueur de l'arc en ciel.

L'origine de la tribu est attribuée à deux jumeaux, dont la naissance, dans presque toutes les tribus africaines [1], est considérée comme un présent du Ciel, d'où souvent leur immolation, pour les renvoyer à Dieu.

En pays fàn, lorsque naissent deux jumeaux, la mère n'en peut élever qu'un et doit donner l'autre à une femme qui l'accepte: dans le cas contraire, il est sacrifié. L'arc en ciel est le totem des jumeaux, et ils ont défense de le regarder.

c) Totems de clans.

1° Clans strictement totémiques, ou clans primaires et filieux.

Les clans primaires ou filieux sont tous strictement totémiques, ou, si l'on préfère, portent le nom du totem. Le clan est, comme nous l'avons vu, par rapport à la constitution de la tribu, en quelque sorte une dérivation de celle-ci. La horde détachée de la tribu, et marchant sous la conduite d'un chef sortant de la famille principale ou de la famille souche de la tribu, aura tout naturellement le totem de sa famille qui deviendra alors totem du clan. Ce chef est d'ordinaire, disons-nous, de la famille souche: il aura donc même totem que celle-ci; ainsi que nous l'avons expliqué plus haut en montrant comment la tribu se décompose ou se désagrège, ou pour employer peut-être une expression plus juste, se ramifie, le totem du clan proprement dit sera le même totem que celui de la tribu et portera le même nom, ce qui constitue à proprement parler le clan totémique. Ainsi d'ailleurs l'envisageraient également un certain nombre d'auteurs, pour lesquels le clan est en fonction de la tribu, constituant plutôt un petit groupe de familles réunies en un même village, et qui, plus tard, en s'augmentant, formera la tribu, fraction plus importante. C'est, croyons-nous, une notion plutôt géographique qu'ethnographique. Pour nous, et le cas arrive souvent, le clan filial peut être plus nombreux que la tribu mère proprement dite; de fait, nous l'avons rencontré ainsi souvent, et la chose nous paraît pouvoir bien s'expliquer: les jeunes gens les plus entreprenants, force vitale de la tribu, ne demandent pas mieux que de s'en aller au loin chercher fortune et conquérir de nouveaux territoires. De là, affaiblissement progressif de la tribu proprement dite où restent seulement les anciens[1].

[1] Voir l'Étude sur les Ba-ronga, par JUNOD, Bull. Soc. de Géogr. de Neuchâtel 1896.

Les clans totémiques, si on peut les appeler ainsi, ou filiaux, portent donc le même nom que les tribus dont ils sont issus, avec cette différence que le mot ye est remplacé par esa ou ebi «père». Nous aurons donc les mêmes distinctions que tout à l'heure, totems vivants ou inanimés, totems du monde animal, végétal ou minéral.

Remarquons encore que, pour un certain nombre de clans, la tribu mère a disparu ou s'est éteinte, ou encore est demeurée en arrière dans les profondeurs de la forêt, d'où on ne l'a pas encore vue sortir; ce fait est parfaitement possible, d'après ce que nous avons étudié plus haut de la constitution du clan.

Nous trouverons donc, comme totems de clan:

a) Des totems d'animaux, très

Nom de tribu	nom de totem
Les Ekingi	ngi, chimpanzé ou parfois gorille[2]
Les Ekwendé	ndé ou éléphant
Les Mvumu[3]	mvumu ou roi royé
Les Ekingui	ekingui ou mandrillon.

[1] Cette formation particulière du clan, vivant sous la condaite de plusieurs chefs de famille, a donné lieu à l'opinion émise par plusieurs auteurs (Ed, par exemple, le P. DOMOUSILLET, dans une Étude d'ailleurs bien documentée sur l'Habitation Bâ) que les villages Bâ étaient régis par une simple autorité patriarcale des anciens. Ceux qui ont émis cette opinion n'ont évidemment jamais vu les grandes tribus de l'intérieur.

[2] Le ngi ou gorille paraît être, d'après les auteurs (cf. DU CHAILLU, l'Afrique sauvage, chez HACHETTE, Paris) un animal particulier à la Gabonie. Il est toutefois très adaptable que son aire d'habitat se soit étendue jadis beaucoup plus loin.

[3] Clan appartenant au groupe Bâ qui n'est pas, avons-nous dit, caractérisé par Ebo ou Ebi, tel le Fôn.

Les Yengol et les Esingol n'appartiennent pas à la même tribu. Les Esingol ont dû faire partie d'une tribu aujourd'hui disparue, les Ye Zingol (?). Le zingol ou caméléon inspire à tous les Fâh une crainte superstitieuse: il est considéré comme le messager des esprits.

β) Des totems d'oiseaux, tels

Nom de tribu	nom de totem
Les Eméhane	Ikane ou huppe
Les Eéndé	ndé ou aigle.

γ) Des totems reptiles, sauriens etc.

Nom de tribu	nom de totem
Les Ekôôn	nôôn ou crocodile.

δ) Des totems d'insectes, mollusques etc., tels

Nom de tribu	nom de totem
Les Ekôwé	kwé, ou gros colimaçon
Les Ekôfil	fil, sup. de fourmi noire
Les Eenguen	nguen, ou yale
Les Eenwefon	fon, ou goliath.

Parmi ces clans

ε) les totems végétaux seront plus nombreux.

Nom de tribu	nom de totem
Les Eéneme	neme ou palmier des marais.

De ce nom, en brûlant le tronc et en en levant les cendres on extrait des chlorures à base de potasse qui dans certaines tribus remplacent le sel. Ce sel particulier sera interdit aux Eéneme: ils le remplaceront d'ailleurs par sel extrait de la Pistia stratiotes, plante aquatique riche en azote.

Les Ekôô	nôô, espèce d'arbre
Les Eéôôn	ôôn ou pourpier
Les Eéné	néné, le moelle du bambou.

Il leur sera interdit de s'en servir en vannerie, objets etc.

ζ) Les totems phénomènes naturels.

Nom de tribu	nom de totem
Les Eéôôn	ôôn miroir.

Ils auraient comme totem le miroir, dont la surface brillante remonte au miroir. — Mais, d'après ce que nous avons dit, le miroir sera considéré comme fils du tonnerre.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Les Eneningan [illegible] ngon, la lune [1].

Nous ignorons absolument la figuration et les défenses rituelles de ce totem. Nous avons simplement entendu parler des fêtes en l'honneur de ngon, mais cependant sans pouvoir reconnaître l'objet matérialisé du culte, non plus que les rites, toujours fort secrets. Il nous aurait été d'ailleurs difficile d'y assister, étant, paraît-il, fort obscènes et se rapportant tous à la génération. C'est un trait commun à beaucoup de tribus africaines. Certaines danses, uniquement réservées aux femmes, ont également lieu en l'honneur de la lune, ou plutôt du principe fécondant, dont elle est la source.

2° Clans non strictement totémiques ou secondaires.

Nous entendons par ce mot «secondaires», suivant toujours la règle de filiation que nous avons donnée plus haut, les clans issus de la famille souche, mais après le clan principal, et constitués soit par des fils ou frères du chef, soit même en dehors de la famille souche, mais toujours par des guerriers de la tribu. Les clans secondaires ne sont pas tous considérés par les auteurs comme strictement totémiques. Cette opinion est basée sur ce fait que certains d'entre eux portent, et d'autres ne portent pas, le nom du totem. Pour nous, au contraire, et nous croyons avoir, sinon démontré notre avis, au moins en avoir montré la grande probabilité, cette appellation de totémique ou non, ne prouve nullement en faveur du totémisme du clan. Elle dépend, en effet, non pas du culte et de la formation, qui peuvent être, et sont de fait, dans ce cas, nettement totémiques, mais de la filiation. Nous avons déjà indiqué, et il nous semble inutile de revenir sur ce point, que la tribu, en elle-même, est totémique; toutes celles du moins que nous connaissons ont ce caractère. Le clan principal est également totémique, toujours en ce sens qu'il porte le nom de l'ancêtre totémique, ancêtre, notons-le bien, dont le nom est souvent le même que celui de l'animal [2], fait

[1] Le mot ngon a plusieurs acceptions; en Fâ: il désigne 1° une sorte de cucurbitacée dont les Fâ font grand usage (ngondo ou mpongwé), 2° la lune, 3° une jeune fille nubile. — On sait combien souvent, dans toutes les races noires, l'idée de lune et de génération sont étroitement liées.

[2] Il est à remarquer que de nombreux Fâ portent un nom d'animal, sans que celui-ci soit communément leur totem. Il y a là presque toujours coïncidence fortuite. Lorsque ce cas arrive l'enfant, a reçu souvent le nom d'un ancêtre.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

qui a dû amener d'assez nombreuses confusions. Quant aux autres clans, les uns porteront le nom du totem, les autres ne le porteront pas, suivant qu'ils ont été formés par un chef appartenant à la famille souche ou par un chef important, mais secondaire de la horde, ou encore qu'ils soient dus à une circonstance fortuite. Toutefois, même encore dans cette circonstance, on ne saurait se montrer trop prudent. Ainsi, pour notre propre part, nous avons été témoins du fait suivant.

Un chef du clan des Esingi, dont, nous l'avons vu plus haut, le totem ou mvamayôt est le gorille ou ngi, se sépara, pour des raisons de famille et d'intérêt, du village principal de sa tribu dont il faisait alors partie. — Notons, en passant, que rien ne distingue le village principal, sinon la présence du chef principal lui-même; en fait, ce village peut parfaitement être beaucoup moins fort que d'autres villages de la même tribu pour plusieurs raisons dont nous avons déjà parlé.

Ce chef n'appartenait pas à la famille souche ou du moins ne s'y rattachait que de fort loin. Son mvamayôt était une sorte d'arbre nommé abé. Il partit donc à la tête d'un petit groupe de jeunes gens de son clan, suivant la coutume que nous avons décrite plus haut en parlant de la formation du clan, et chercha un endroit favorable pour s'y établir. «Je marchai ainsi, me disait-il, plusieurs lunes», souvent chassé par les tribus qu'il rencontrait, et plus souvent encore, comme le fait se comprend aisément, bien accueilli, mais prié de s'en aller plus loin le plus vite possible [1]. Après avoir parcouru plusieurs centaines de kilomètres et affronté toutes sortes de dangers, notre chef parvint aux confins de la tribu fàò, en plein pays noèy. Sur les bords de la rivière Tsini ou des mouches, il vit un jour, dans ses pérégrinations errantes, se dresser sur une sorte de petit promontoire, dans une fort belle situation d'ailleurs, un abé dont le port et l'aspect rappelaient absolument, me dit-il, celui auquel, après sa naissance, il avait été consacré comme enfant de la famille[1]. Le chef vit dans cette circonstance une manifestation évidente de la volonté du mvumayèé, et les sacrifices usuels ayant eu une issue favorable, comme il s'y attendait, il s'établit en cet endroit. Le clan changea immédiatement de nom et devint le clan des Abé. Depuis cette époque, peu reculée, le village primitif s'est déjà scindé en deux, mais chacun conserve son nom d'abé; le clan est fondé.

[1] Il est évident, en effet, que ces clans ou ces hordes aventureuses sont sans cesse repoussés par la force même des choses vers la périphérie du territoire Fâ, chaque tribu comptant une place qu'elle n'est facilement décidée à céder. Cette loi d'expansion est certainement la cause et la meilleure explication de ce mouvement qu'on a maintes fois constaté qui pousse les Fâ, comme tous les peuples de l'intérieur, vers l'ouest c'est-à-dire vers la mer. Ils ne peuvent, c'est évident, retourner vers l'est et la grande forêt, en voyant leurs propres tribus traversées de temps à autre par des hordes venant de l'est et cherchant à le fuir des compagnons et un territoire. Par suite de la même loi, en arrivant à la mer, les tribus ou les clans, ne trouvant pas l'idéal rêvé, ou l'Eldorado promis, se retournent vers l'intérieur, et sont dérangés par les nouveaux arrivants.

Une circonstance presque pareille, m'a-t-il été dit, a donné, mais à une époque beaucoup plus reculée, origine au clan aujourd'hui très nombreux de l'Ámvom ou du boa.

Les clans reconnaissent donc, et cela nécessairement, pour mvumayèé, les mêmes espèces que les tribus, non pas qu'ils adoptent le mvumayèé de la tribu mère, mais leur mvumayèé est également animal, végétal ou minéral.

Le mvumayèé du clan sera le même que celui de la tribu, si le chef de la horde appartient à la famille souche; sinon, son mvumayèé familial deviendra mvumayèé du clan, et c'est le cas que nous avons vu tout à l'heure pour les Abé.

Par suite de cette distinction, les clans, tout en restant totémiques, porteront le nom de leur mvumayèé, ou, suivant le cas, ne le porteront pas.

---

[1] Dans ce cas, lorsque le totem familial ou individuel est un arbre ou une plante, on va chercher un jeune plants de ce genre, graine ou rejeton du totem familial, on vient le planter près du village et on place sous la racine principale un fragment du cordon ombilical. Dans certaines circonstances, on peut-être toujours, m'a-t-il été affirmé, on verse également tout ou partie des eaux utérines; nous ne saurions absolument affirmer ce dernier point, tout ce qui touche à la naissance étant très mystérieux et toujours absolument interdit aux hommes et dans tous les détails. Celui qui a un tel arbre comme totem s'intéresse beaucoup à ce ombrage. En cas de mort de l'arbre, celui qui l'a comme totem, doit -rechercher- un propre vin.

3° Divers totems de clan.

Parmi ces totems de clans, nous trouverons:

a) Portant le nom du mvamayôô.

Nom de tribu	nom du totem
Les Ebiaar	mvamayôô arbre (pentadesma grandiflora)
Les Ebôôm	ebôm, crocodile
Les Ekiememe	mvame, arbre (dichostachys)
Les Amvam	mvam ou bois
Les Abô	abô, esp. d'arbre
Les Eshôô	shôô ou pourpier.

b) Clans ne portant pas le nom du totem.

Les clans ne portant pas le nom du totem seront beaucoup plus nombreux, comme le veut d'ailleurs la filiation, et dont nous croyons inutile de donner de nouveau les preuves.

Parmi eux, nous trouverons, par exemple, le fort clan des Eziolo et celui des Eiwôô, portant tous les deux le nom de leur fondateur, Eziô pour le premier, et Wôô pour le second, mais qui, n'appartenant pas à la branche souche, avaient un totem familial particulier.

Nom de tribu	nom de totem
Les Eziolo	antilope mend (tout ou moins pour certains villages)
Les Eziôô	arbre cogôôbô (mvi-mvayôô-bôômmmm) qui est également un arbre «fétiche»[1] pour les femmes, à cause de son fruit, objet d'un culte et tabou phallique.
Les Ejiab	ezu, sorte de lézarde
Les Esoop	ngumbôô ou mante religieuse
Les Esumbôp	fum ou gélinôt
Les Eshôô	arbre mvu ou ankankana
(pour une partie du clan)
Les Esôop	une fleur: pelinia pynaerti.

Le sous-clan Essogôm, dont le clan principal a pour mvamayôô le ngôm ou porc épic, a pour mvamayôô l'essogôm, esp. d'arbre (allanblackia floribunda) probablement à cause du nom similaire.

En somme, nous venons de le voir, la plus grande variété règne pour le choix des mvamayôô de clan; toutefois, parmi eux, au contraire des mvamayôô de tribu, les mvamayôô «végétaux» sont plus fréquents: nous en étudierons les causes en traitant de l'origine du totem.

---

[1] Le mot cogôôbô employé pour le désigner est interdit aux femmes car c'est le nom du phallus. Elles disent ordinairement cogôôbô, l'arbre cogô.

4) Totem familial.

D'après ce que nous avons établi plus haut, nous en arrivons tout naturellement au mvamayôô familiel. Au lieu de ce nom, réservé au totem tribual et de clan, il prend le nom de mvame ndabê, c'est-à-dire protecteur de la famille, ou plus simplement de mva-mvame, c'est-à-dire le protecteur par excellence, litt. celui qui est le protecteur. Ce nom, soit dit en passant, confirme bien notre théorie, la base et la souche de tout le système. On pourrait peut-être objecter que le mvamayôô individuel est au contraire à la base du système, chaque individu mâle ayant le sien. Mais il est facile de voir que non. En effet, cette règle ne nous paraît pas absolument invariable: du moins, nous n'avons pas pu nous assurer que tout individu mâle, sans aucune exception, a toujours son totem particulier. Nous le croyons sans pouvoir l'affirmer: nous verrons plus loin combien facilement, sur ce point comme sur tant d'autres, les déclarations des Noirs sont plus ou moins intéressées ou tendancieuses. Mais, en supposant même que cette règle soit invariable, le mvame individuel n'en est pas moins en fonction du mvame familial; il sera, en effet, son plein développement et surtout sa seule raison d'être qui est la conservation de la race et non de l'individu en tant qu'individu, seulement alors que la famille sera établie. Et ce qui le montre bien, c'est que le mvame, familial aussi bien qu'individuel, ne sera invoqué que dans les circonstances intéressant la race, mais nullement dans les autres circonstances. Ainsi, l'abuyôô[1] ou «fétiche de la guerre», destiné à mettre le guerrier à l'abri des flèches, et aussi aujourd'hui des balles, fera partie du mvame; le bôô ekôra ou fétiche du commerce, qui n'intéresse nullement la conservation de la race, n'y rentrera jamais. En fera encore partie le nkir qui rendant invisible l'individu qui, le portant, traverse une tribu ennemie, et le mvôl qui guérit les maladies, mais nullement le ndzu, destiné à protéger des voleurs et autres larrons.

Le totem ou mvamayôô familial étant un totem de l'origine, et la base même des mvamayôô de tribu, est aussi varié que ceux-ci. Parmi eux, on trouvera donc totem animal, végétal, ou minéral, les premiers beaucoup plus nombreux que les autres, d'après les remarques que nous avons faits à propos des totems de tribu, remarques qui s'appliquent toutes au totem familial.

[1] Litt. mvôm, force de la race.

Comme on a pu le remarquer, l'étude du totem de clan et de tribu n'est donc que le développement du totem familial. Ce totem familial resté isolé si la famille fân s'était bornée à une seule tribu: il a pris toute son extension par suite du développement considérable de cette même tribu.

e) Totem individuel.

1° Quelques remarques sur l'existence et le rôle du totem individuel.

Après tout ce que nous venons de développer, il nous reste en somme bien peu à dire sur le mvamayôn individuel. Cependant, quelques remarques sont utiles à faire.

1° Tout d'abord, ce point primordial. En principe, chaque individu mâle a son mvame individuel. Cette règle nous paraît générale. Dans les tribus de l'intérieur, où les croyances et les rites ancestraux se sont conservés beaucoup plus purs, elle se trouve aussi beaucoup mieux vérifiée. Là aussi, et c'est ce qui a favorisé le plus cette conservation, les Fân se maintiennent en masse compacte: devant les envahisseurs, toutes les autres tribus ont disparu: à peine, çà et là, quelque nom de village auquel les conquérants ont conservé l'ethnique primitif, rappelle-t-il encore le souvenir des anciens possesseurs. Sur les rives de l'Ogowé, au contraire, comme à la côte où les clans envahisseurs subissent plus ou moins le contact et l'influence des tribus conquises ou qu'ils envahissent, les Fân laissent tomber les anciennes croyances pour aboutir à une sorte de scepticisme railleur, ou, ce qui arrive également, les dissimulent plus profondément. Le R. P. Martrou, dans sa belle Etude sur les Eki des Fân[1], avait déjà fait cette constatation; c'est ce qui explique également pourquoi certains auteurs, d'ailleurs excellents observateurs, mais qui ont toujours séjourné parmi les tribus de la côte, ont si peu parlé de ces questions, et parfois en se méprenant sur leur signification ou en la raillant, faute de la comprendre. Tels le

[1] Anthropos I (1906) p. 764.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

R. P. Lejeune dans son Etude sur la femme au Gabon [1], A. Bennett, Notes Anthropologiques sur les Fâñ, Mary Kingsley, Nassau, Lenz et de Chaillu, dont nous avons cité d'ailleurs les noms au commencement de ce livre.

Ainsi le R. P. Lejeune:

— Eh! bien, Nzoyo, tu ne manges pas de la viande que je t'offre. Pourquoi? n'est-elle pas bonne?

— Oh! si, Minissé!

— Mais alors? —

— Je ne puis pas en manger, ma femme est enceinte. Alors, cette viande m'est défendue.

— Grand nigaud! (sic!) Alors, tu crois que cela peut faire quelque chose à ta femme! [2]

Manger de la viande est en effet défendu à l'homme dont la femme est enceinte, ou plutôt, ce que le P. Lejeune ne remarque pas, certaines viandes sont interdites. Mais il y a là une défense totémique, prise évidemment dans l'intérêt de la race, et de plus, une sorte de réversibilité de la conception sur le père considéré comme agent actif. Par une croyance pareille, dans les tribus Caraïbes des Antilles et également dans l'Amérique du Sud [3], lorsqu'une femme a mis un enfant au monde, elle reprend immédiatement ses travaux journaliers. Le père, au contraire, se couche, comme brisé de fatigue, et reçoit les félicitations des parents et amis. Bien nigaud (!) serait aussi celui qui penserait que ces Caraïbes croient à la réalité de la chose! Dans le cas cité par le R. P. Lejeune, au lieu de nous moquer de Nzoyo, qui se sent et s'estime, à tort ou à raison, lié pour son enfant, ne vaut-il pas mieux se servir de cette croyance pour établir, par exemple, la réversibilité des fautes, la nécessité de la surveillance paternelle, etc. Si nous nous raillons de cette idée, il nous semble difficile d'admettre que Nzoyo ne se moquera pas, tout aussi bien, et avec quelque raison, du péché originel, par exemple, et de ses suites, si le missionnaire lui en parle, ou mieux encore de la punition qu'on pourra lui infliger, si, plus tard, ses fils sont coupables à cause des mauvais exemples ou leçons qu'il leur aura donnés. Pour lui, ces croyances qui nous semblent, à nous, si différentes entre elles, ressortiront au contraire du même principe de réversibilité commune.

[1] Missions Catholiques, la Femme au Gabon, 1898. — La même étude a paru dans le Correspondant. Cf. Bibliographie.

[2] Miss. Catholiques, dans la Forêt 1897.

[3] En Amazonie, chez les Indiens du Brésil, à la Terre de Feu.

2° Circonstances qui déterminent le choix du totem individuel.

Le mvame individuel est d'habitude un animal, très souvent un tigre, vautour, éléphant, rarement un végétal. On conçoit facilement en effet que le chef de famille voulant donner un protecteur à son descendant, choisira de préférence un animal dont il voudra lui assurer d'avance le bénéfice de quelques qualités, force, souplesse, endurance, bravoure, etc. Ce choix ne sera donc pas sans raison, et tel ou tel animal qui, au premier abord, nous semblera une vraie dérision, sera loin d'en être une dans l'esprit du Noir. Ainsi, un exemple: un des enfants de la Mission avait pour mvame le scarabée. Après bien des hésitations, et des demandes, j'en eus enfin l'explication: un jour, peu avant sa naissance, son père avait trouvé, sur la tombe de l'aïeul, sortant d'un trou creusé en terre, un gros scarabée noir. Il en avait conclu que l'animal était, pour une raison ou une autre, en communication avec l'ancêtre: à la naissance de l'enfant, il le lui avait donc donné comme totem, désirant ainsi faire revivre en lui les vertus guerrières de l'ancêtre. Pareil cas déterminera souvent le mvame: ce sera tel insecte, telle fleur rare même, poussée sur la tombe ou trouvée dans d'étranges circonstances. Tel animal d'ailleurs, qui, pour nous, ne dit «rien», dit au contraire «beaucoup» au Noir; ainsi la tortue, symbole de la ruse, le porc-épic, astutieux, ou la fourmi qui sait si bien trouver sa nourriture, qu'on n'a jamais vu mourir de faim, tout aussi habile à attaquer qu'à se défendre. Ce dernier totem est fréquent; et quiconque a vu les longues théories de fourmis noires qui envahissent parfois par millions un village, visitant case après case, ne laissant rien de comestible derrière elles, réduisant en moins d'une heure, comme nous avons été témoin, un malade abandonné et hors d'état de se défendre en un squelette admirablement nettoyé où ne restent que les os blanchis, quiconque, agitant par mégarde l'arbre où gîte la fourmi noire ntantal, aura été piqué par une de ces terribles bêtes (morsure auprès de laquelle la piqûre de notre guêpe n'est rien), quiconque, pour une seule piqûre, aura eu le bras engourdi pendant des heures et verra se produire une fièvre intense, quiconque aura vu cela, disons-nous, comprendra facilement que le Noir envie pour son enfant pareilles qualités. Et ainsi de la ténacité avec laquelle le crabe (kara), le pangolin (ka) ou le fourmilier (avil) saisiront leur proie sans que rien puisse leur faire lâcher prise, et nombre d'autres exemples qui pourraient allonger indéfiniment ces pages.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Un végétal, un arbre, une fleur, pour ses qualités bonnes ou mauvaises, souvent son emploi dans tel ou tel fétiche puissant, déterminera pareil choix, au premier abord paraissant insolite ou même ridicule, au fond très-observé.

La même raison mystérieuse pourra également déterminer le zingol ou caméléon, messager des Dieux, ou l'incompréhensible mante qui se tredresse sur ses pattes et semble songer[1]... Quelque esprit inconnu doit avoir passé par là!

Quelque soit la force de ces raisons, ce ne sont pas cependant les plus fréquentes. Presque toujours, on donnera à l'enfant, de même que le nom, le mvame particulier du grand-père, de l'aïeul, de l'oncle ou d'un frère mort, qu'il fera ainsi doublement revivre. Ce sera encore celui d'un autre homme du clan que l'on verra réussir en tout, famille, richesses, enfants, ou dont encore les qualités guerrières ou d'esprit frappent les yeux. Pour le faire ainsi prospérer, son mvame a dû être particulièrement bien choisi: l'enfant ne saurait qu'en bénéficier.

3° Circonstances fortuites déterminant le choix du totem individuel.

Enfin, deux autres sortes de circonstances peuvent déterminer le choix du totem: une circonstance due, semble-t-il, seulement au hasard, ou un nsém ou souillure morale.

Ce sera une circonstance due seulement au hasard: telles, pourrait-on dire encore, celles que nous avons relatées plus haut, telles surtout celles qui se produisent immédiatement avant, ou au

[1] D'où son nom scientifique de Mantis religiosa.

7: Trilles F969 Fang

moment de la naissance, indépendantes de l'enfant ou au contraire dépendant en quelque sorte de lui, volontairement ou non. Parmi les premières, les phénomènes naturels jouent le premier rôle. Ainsi, par exemple, un orage, un coup de tonnerre, un arc-en-ciel pourront facilement déterminer le totem de l'enfant.

Ce seront encore des circonstances parfaitement fortuites; telles seront, par exemple, une chasse heureuse où quelque animal rare ou particulièrement précieux au point de vue de la nourriture, tel l'éléphant, aura été tué, ou une chasse habituellement heureuse, mais absolument infructueuse ce jour-là. Ce sera un accident arrivé sur l'oncle au père ou à la mère, et tant d'autres qu'il serait facile de citer.

Il faut cependant noter que dans tous ces cas, pour notre seule mentalité européenne, tels faits paraissent dûs à un simple hasard. Mais pour le Noir, le hasard n'existe pas: tout a sa cause. Hasard la pierre qui blesse fortuitement notre pied, l'arbre qui vous écrase, le rapide qui engloutit une pirogue? En aucune façon! Mais ce sera un esprit supérieur offensé, un ancêtre qui déchaînera contre vous cette calamité ou cet accident, ce sera un féticheur ou surtout un sorcier qui aura suscité contre vous l'influence mauvaise, pour vous, cachée en cette plante ou cette pierre, qui aura excité l'Esprit des Eaux etc.

Si, au contraire, c'est un phénomène naturel qui s'est produit, c'est une manifestation d'esprit: dès lors, quoi de plus naturel que d'assurer à l'enfant le bénéfice d'une protection supérieure?

A Madagascar, chez les Bétsileos, Hazz[1] nous apprend une curieuse coutume. Pour cacher aux sorciers et aux esprits malfaisants la naissance d'un enfant, on donne à un enfant qui naît beau et fort, un nom qui puisse les dérouter. Ainsi porc, chatte, tas de fumier, personne. Si un enfant est chétif, on le fait manger avec un chien dont il devient l'enfant adoptif et prend le nom. Mais rien de totémique dans cette coutume, et rien de pareil dans la tribu fiti. — A propos de cette coutume, van Gennep[2] écrit: «On remarquera qu'en théorie les descendants de ce «fils de chien»

[1] J. H. Hazz, Some Betsileo Ideas, Art. Ann. 4° XXIV, 1900, p. 398—402.
[2] Tabou et Totémisme à Madagascar, p. 266.

7: Trilles F319 Fang

formeront une famille de chiens, et l'on se trouvera ainsi en présence d'un groupement animal et à descendance canine sans intervention aucune de totémisme. Sans doute, au bout de plusieurs générations, alors que sera oblitéré le souvenir du fait primordial, leur nom et leur parenté sembleront étranges aux descendants de «Monsieur fils du chien.» — Mais qu'en savons-nous? Et si le fait, comme il le paraît, se reproduit souvent, pourquoi oublieraient-ils la cause du nom de l'ancêtre? — Puis, comme le nom change avec chaque individu . . . — «Ils inventeront, continue Mr. van Gennep, en guise d'explication, des légendes étiologiques qui pourront présenter une grande analogie avec des légendes totémistes vraies. Mais de là à conclure à une survivance totémique, il y aurait loin!» — C'est bien notre avis, mais la production de pareilles légendes est un fait «possible», que rien ne prouve, une simple supposition, et dans le domaine des suppositions, il y aurait aussi loin à aller!

Ce seront aussi parfois, avons-nous dit, des phénomènes dépendant en quelque sorte de la mère ou de la nature de l'enfant, tout au moins dans la pensée du noir. Ainsi la mère aura mis au monde deux jumeaux: souvent, comme nous l'avons remarqué, l'un sera sacrifié, l'autre au contraire sera épargné; son mvame sera l'arc-en-ciel et il en portera presque invariablement le nom: Ñaje. Nous verrons plus tard ses défenses totémiques. Si l'enfant naît également avec de petites dents pointant déjà, c'est toujours mauvais présage: en lui, revit l'esprit d'un ancêtre méchant. Si, grâce au sorcier, on retrouve cet ancêtre, il n'y a pas de mal; l'enfant sera épargné et aura le mvame de l'ancêtre. Si, au contraire, on ne peut le retrouver, il sera impitoyablement sacrifié: on l'enverra «rejoindre l'ancêtre au pays du froid» ewuz anô nê mvame. —

Une des causes également que nous avons signalée plus haut est le nsim ou souillure morale contractée par la violation d'un êki ou défense rituelle se rapportant au mariage. Cette violation, même si elle est involontaire, peut susciter de nombreuses difficultés au violateur.

4° Violation d'êki totémique, ce qui en résulte.

Dans un village Eisis (clan), j'assistai un jour à une grande palabre suscitée ainsi par la violation d'un êki. Un nommé Abiâô-

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Mbame s'était, pour une raison ou une autre, rendu au village de ses beaux-parents, éloigné du sien de plusieurs jours de marche. C'était, si je ne me trompe, pour leur apporter un supplément de dot. Il séjourna, comme c'est la coutume, assez longtemps dans ce village, puis revint chez lui, où il apprit à son grand contentement que sa femme était enceinte. Au temps voulu, celle-ci mit au monde un superbe garçon: malheureusement, quelques heures après sa naissance, et sans qu'aucune cérémonie pût être faite, l'enfant mourut. Les beaux-parents prévenus vinrent aussitôt. On recherchia quelles pouvaient être les causes de la mort; elles ne furent pas longues à découvrir: pendant le séjour chez les beaux-parents, on avait tué au village une antilope mye, le père de l'enfant en avait mangé, et cet animal est «interdit» au père aussi bien qu'à la femme enceinte pendant toute la durée de la gestation et de l'allaitement. Le père, bien qu'il ignorât la position de sa femme, avait donc commis un ndem. L'expiation était simple: comme l'enfant était le premier-né, la femme retournait chez ses parents, le divorce était prononcé, et le mari perdait tous ses droits sur la dot versée. Si au contraire l'enfant avait survécu, après avoir constaté la violation de l'ekí, le père eût payé une amende aux beaux-parents, et l'enfant eût été «voué» à l'antilope mye.

Pour un autre cas, ou une autre maladie, le totem individuel eût été un autre animal, souvent un arbre dont l'infusion l'aurait guéri. Ce dernier cas peut se rencontrer souvent.

8° Qui choisit le totem individuel.

Le chef de la famille a seul le droit de choisir le totem de l'enfant.

Ce droit ressort nettement de tout ce que nous avons dit de la constitution de la famille fáń, qui dépend uniquement de son chef, et non, comme dans beaucoup de tribus bantoues [1], de l'oncle maternel. Le ngué ou oncle maternel n'a aucun droit sur l'enfant dans la famille fàñ, tandis que tous les droits, au contraire, sont acquis au mbalo dans la famille ngongwèè voisine.

[1] Vg. les tribus voisines des Mpongwé, des Galoa, Ezenga, Bandko, Balengi Orungu, etc. Presque toutes les tribus voisines des Fáń, du côté de la mer, sont dans ce cas. Seuls, les Nzèk font exception, mais, comme nous l'avons dit, ils appartiennent à la famille fáń, et les autres peuples, soit à la famille Mpongwé, soit à de plus anciens envahisseurs se rapprochant du groupe Duala du Kamerun et Bubi de Fernando-Po.

Seul, le chef de la famille aura donc ce droit; tout au plus demandera-t-il l'avis du dzandà, ou oncle paternel, son frère. Il exercera ce droit quelques jours après la naissance de l'enfant, qui recevra son nom totémique ou son totem individuel généralement en même temps qu'on lui donnera son nom d'enfant et son nom de race.

6° Les seuls individus mâles ont un mvame.

Seuls en effet, ils appartiennent à la race: la femme, une fois mariée, quitte sa famille avec laquelle elle n'a plus que de lointains rapports, et encore seulement d'amitié. On conçoit donc qu'elle n'ait rien à dévoiler avec l'ancêtre de la race, d'autant que son mariage l'oriente dans une tribu toute autre, à laquelle elle appartient désormais. Il faut cependant noter que le totem de la tribu de la mère de l'enfant conserve ses droits sur celui-ci. Ainsi, dans beaucoup de cas de divorce, la famille maternelle reprend la mère et l'enfant.

De plus, le fils ne peut aller prendre femme dans la tribu de sa mère. De même, un homme de la tribu de la mère ne peut épouser une fille de cette femme mariée dans une autre tribu. Mais la défense totémique s'arrête là: une fille connaît bien la tribu de sa mère, mais nullement celle de sa grand'mère, d'autant que bien souvent elle est vendue, puis élevée dans la tribu de son futur mari dès l'âge de quatre ou cinq ans.

7° Lois du mvame.

Comme nous l'avons déjà fait remarquer à diverses reprises, ce mvame individuel ne doit pas être confondu avec l'éláñéla ou animal «voué».

Il y a là deux concepts fort différents. Nous aurons à y revenir dans un article spécial, en parlant du nagualisme. Bien que ces deux concepts soient dissemblables, cependant l'enfant peut avoir comme mvame, soit personnel, soit de famille, de clan ou de tribu, le même animal que l'éláñéla. Mais il y a toujours cette différence essentielle que le mvame, à quelque sorte qu'il appartienne, est toujours une espèce, ou mieux un être collectif (seul peut-être le soleil et la lune, et parfois Vénus, mais encore dans ce cas, comme l'a fait remarquer Spencer dans ses Etudes sur les Arunta d'Australie, on retrouve là encore une idée de pluralité, de collectivité) tandisque l'élàbéla (ailleurs nagual, kebong, idhlosi), est un individu isolé et jamais une collectivité. Ainsi un homme pourra avoir pour élàbéla (nagual) et pour totem de clan ou même totem individuel le crocodile ou caïman. Mais qu'arrive-t-il dans ce cas? C'est qu'il a pour totem «le» crocodile et non pas «un» crocodile: il a pour totem «le» crocodile de telle ou telle variété, qui réunira tel ou signe, mais tout crocodile rentrant dans cette catégorie sera son totem. Au contraire, il aura pour élàbéla «un» crocodile qui rentrera peut-être dans cette catégorie, ou n'y rentrera pas; en tout cas, ce sera un individu isolé. De plus, comme nous aurons occasion de le redire, entre totem et élàbéla, les rapports sont tout différents: le totem protège d'une façon toute spirituelle d'abord, puis souvent matérielle ensuite; l'élàbéla, au contraire, d'une façon toute matérielle et nullement spirituelle, tout au moins à certains points de vue.

Enfin, et c'est peut-être le point le plus important, le totem se relie au culte de la race et des ancêtres, l'élàbéla ne s'y relie en aucune façon, mais au culte des esprits. Le totem, et d'après ce que nous avons dit plus haut, on voit combien ce point est important, le totem ressort du féticheur, l'élàbéla, du sorcier. Ainsi supposons encore un enfant «voué» au serpent noir. Tout serpent noir, ou du moins tous les serpents noirs de telle région seront son mvame. Supposons au contraire que ce même enfant soit «voué» au serpent noir, son élàbéla. Il ne s'agira alors que d'un individu: celui-ci, venant à mourir, pourra être remplacé par un autre serpent noir, mais après toute une nouvelle initiation.

En fait même, il arrive très souvent que tous ces mvame se confondent: on pourrait dire se fortifient. Tel enfant «voué» au Tigre, à titre individuel, pourra parfaitement lui être également voué au titre «famille», «clan», «tribu» et même «société secrète». Avec toutes les réserves nécessaires, il y a là quelque chose de semblable à ce qui se passe dans nos communautés chrétiennes. Un enfant, par exemple, recevra au baptême le nom de la Sainte Vierge Marie. Pour attirer davantage sur lui la protection de sa divine mère, il lui sera «voué» par sa mère terrestre. Plus tard, fortifiant encore ce lien, il pourra entrer dans une société vouée à la Ste Mère de Dieu, et encore la choisir comme patronne de religion, quatre concepts différents tendant tous au même but, mais ayant chacun un objet distinct et cependant semblable: la protection du «voué».

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

f) Totems de sociétés secrètes et de confréries.

Les sociétés secrètes, comme nous avons eu occasion de le dire précédemment en un paragraphe à part de cette Etude, sont constituées en somme à l'image du clan, et ont été primitivement établies pour resserrer davantage encore les limites de l'autorité dans un cercle où tous les membres sont liés par la loi d'une stricte obéissance.

Participant à la constitution de la tribu, modelées sur son image, elles ont, comme elle, les mêmes totems, des animaux protecteurs, et auront, pour se les concilier, des cérémonies presque identiques. Une seule différence les signalera. Tandis que, dans le clan ou la tribu, la femme est considérée comme être nul et n'a aucune importance sociale vis-à-vis de la race, dans la société secrète elle a su recouvrir sa personnalité, et à l'instar de son maître, constituer des associations dont elle excluera soigneusement les hommes, quitte à les écarter, s'ils ne veulent s'y soumettre, par le poison et la mort.

Toutes les sociétés secrètes, soit d'hommes, soit de femmes, ont leurs grades divers, et chaque grade a son totem. Nous aurons occasion d'y revenir à propos du nagualisme et de l'animal voué ou ébéla, qui, nous l'avons dit, est à proprement parler, le totem de ces sociétés secrètes, soit qu'il s'agisse d'individus pris isolément ou «initiés», soit de grades, soit de collectivités.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

§ 3. Conclusion.

Quelques remarques à propos des mevumagôô.

Extension de ces croyances.

En somme, dans la tribu ou les tribus Fâh, nous retrouvons comme on le voit, les différents totems appartenant aux différents règnes de la nature, analogues à ceux que l'on retrouve dans toutes les tribus africaines, hantonnes ou non, ce qui montre bien l'extension du système.

Ainsi, au Kamerun, dans des tribus apparentées d'ailleurs de près aux Fâh, on retrouvera même système, comme le note Dr. Mansfeld dans „Vier Jahre unter den Crokodilmenschen Kamerums" [1]: „Der Totemismus steht in voller Blüte. Gewöhnlich hat ein ganzes Dorf dasselbe Totem, und zwar ein Tier, das entweder sehr stark ist oder sich doch leicht verbergen kann, also Elephanten, Leoparden, Gorillas, Fische, Schlangen."

En remontant plus haut, nous avons vu que le Colonel Binger signale comme totem à la Guinée française:

Le merle métallique, le vautour Urubus, le petit oiseau dit sénégalais, le bœ, le trigonocéphale, le lion, certain légume sauvage, du lait de femme, une mouche.

A propos de la singularité de quelques-uns de ces totems, nous avons fait remarquer qu'il faut souvent y voir une idée toute autre de ce que nous pensions d'abord. Le Noir ne pense pas comme nous.

Au pays soninké, on retrouve mêmes idées. Dans une Etude récente de ce peuple par Mr. Fernand Daniel [2], nous pouvons lire ces lignes, en regrettant de ne pas leur voir une tournure plus scientifique:

«Les «superstitions» de tout genre sont aussi pratiquées par le Sarakolé. S'il part en voyage et qu'il rencontre des toucans sur sa route, il a bien soin de les faire envoler, car la journée pourrait mal finir pour lui.

[1] Cité par l'Anthropos V (1910), p. 289
[2] Anthropos V p. 38.

?: Trilles FH9 Fang

M'ayant vu tuer d'un coup de fusil un gros python de 4 m 70 qui attaquait un porteur, mon boy Sarakolé ayant le serpent pour totem, accourut aussitôt. Il se fit mettre par un camarade une goutte de sang du serpent mort entre les yeux, à seule fin d'empêcher la fièvre que n'aurait pas manqué d'occasionner la vue du python.»

Le geste du boy s'explique par ce fait que chaque famille a pris pour tanna un animal sous la protection duquel elle se place. Jamais cet animal ne sera tué ou mangé par un Sarakolé l'ayant pris pour éponyme; bien plus, le tanna[1] n'attaquera jamais un homme qui a contracté alliance avec lui[2].

En passant, remarquons également qu'il ne faut pas s'étonner si certains auteurs, même très compétents, et connaissant bien le peuple dont ils écrivent, ne parlent pas du totémisme et des totems. Le fait et la chose peuvent parfaitement leur échapper, ou se mêler à d'autres phénomènes sociaux. Ainsi, le P. Bazin[3] auquel on doit une Etude très complète et très documentée sur la religion de la Guinée, ne cite même pas le totem. D'ailleurs, comme le fait très bien remarquer van Gennep, l'étude scientifique et approfondie du totémisme en est encore à ses débuts, et Frazer[4] cite pour l'approuver, l'opinion de Haddon[5], disant: «Ce qui est décrit en un endroit comme du totémisme peut fort bien être essentiellement différent de ce qui est appelé totémisme ailleurs.»

---

[1] Notons à propos de ce mot que les Européens en employant ce mot le défigurent quelque peu. Comme l'a fait remarquer Arcin (la Guinée française, op. cit.) c'est ndéd et non tanna, qu'il faut dire. «Ndéd désigne» la sœur aînée du Père «tandisque tanna n'a aucun sens». D'une façon générale, les Européens ont tendance à enlever aux noms indigènes l'n ou m nasale qui commence beaucoup de mots indigènes. Tels pour le cas qui nous occupe, on dit couramment Pahouins et Pongwés au lieu de Mpawins et de Mpongwés. Ainsi encore Dakar, si connu, s'appelait jadis Ndakar.

[2] Voir Anthropos V (1910), p. 843 suiv. P. Brun, Le Totémisme chez quelques peuples du Soudan Occidental.

[3] Missions catholiques 1884.

[4] «Man», London, 1901, p. 138.

[5] Haddon, Proceedings of the British Association, 1902. Ceux que cette théorie intéresserait la retrouveront dans Lang, Origin of Totem Names and Beliefs. Folk-Lore 1903. Consulter également van Gennep, Tabou et Totémisme à Madagascar, p. 321 et Revue de l'Hist. des Religions 1903, p. 406.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Nous n'avons plus à remonter vers le nord, où, en dépassant le Sénégal, les races diffèrent totalement, mais si nous descendons plus bas que le pays des Fâh en suivant la ligne des tribus bantoues, partout nous rencontrerons mêmes totems, un peu différents suivant l'organisation de la famille. Le totem serpent, par exemple, pour ne citer que celui-là, sera aussi respecté à Porto-Novo ou Whyda où nous trouverons ses temples, qu'à Madagascar, où VAN GENNEP nous a fait récemment connaître son culte, et dans l'antique Egypte où ce culte totémique a été si répandu jadis et subsiste encore aujourd'hui. On les rencontre tout aussi bien chez les tribus bantoues du sud, au sujet desquels SIDNEY HARTLAND[1] a pu écrire que l'étude de la vie sociale et religieuse des tribus de langue bantoue Zulous, Basutos, Ovaherero, Baroungas etc.) montre qu'elles ont dû passer par le totémisme . . . Chacun désigne l'animal dont il porte le nom comme son siboko[2], et se gardera non seulement de le tuer ou de le manger, mais même de toucher sa peau ou d'entrer en contact avec lui, s'il peut faire autrement.

De tous ces témoignages, résulte également que nous ne saurions souscrire à cette opinion de Mr. TOUTAIN[3]: «En Afrique, il y a très peu de clans totémiques.»

Nous venons précisément de montrer combien le totémisme était répandu dans toutes les tribus bantoues. Nous l'avons prouvé pour les Fâh[4].

---

[1] E. SIDNEY HARTLAND, Totemism and some recent discoveries, Presidential address: dans Review of Folk-Lore Society, XI. London 1906, p. 25—27.

[2] Siboko, allerte ovilo, comme sur les bords du Tanganyika, nous paraît plutôt signifier défense totémique que l'animal totem. Ainsi ôsi chez les Fâh, pilula en Xôma.

[3] L'Histoire des Religions et le Totémisme, p. 129 — op. cité.

[4] On peut également rapprocher de ces témoignages celui de Mr. JOHNSTON qui dans son livre: The Uganda Protectorate, examine successivement toutes les tribus du centre Africain. Il n'en est peut-être pas une seule où il ne montre l'existence du totémisme. Un des points où son témoignage nous paraît

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Toutefois, et nous ne saurions trop insister sur ce point, le totémisme chez les Bantous, et, en particulier, chez les Fân, malgré le développement du système dans cette tribu, n'a nullement l'importance qu'ont voulu lui attribuer certains ethnologues; mais cette question est trop capitale pour pouvoir se résoudre ici en quelques lignes. Elle mérite les honneurs d'un chapitre particulier.

---

des plus intéressants, est celui où il parle du totémisme chez les tribus bantoues du Mont Elgon qu'il estime se rapprocher le plus de la tribu-mère de tous les Bantous.

D'après cet auteur, le bantou parlé au Mont Elgon aurait le véritable bantou archaïque. Le fân s'en éloigne déjà considérablement.

Voir Notes justificatives à la fin du volume.

CHAPITRE VIII.

L'ANTIQUITÉ DU TOTEM FÁÑ.

§ 1. Le totem fàñ est-il un phénomène d'importation, ou bien remonte-t-il aux origines de la tribu?

§ 2. Documents et raisons qui nous permettent de faire remonter le totémisme aux origines de la tribu.

a) Les Généalogies. — Exemples divers.

b) Les légendes totémiques. — 1° Légende de Nyevengoronor, le fils du crocodile. — 2° Survivances totémiques de ce rite. — 3° Légende totémique de l'éléphant.

c) Survivances actuelles du culte du crocodile et de l'éléphant. — 1° L'Ekiem. 2° Le Nnué bêtum. — 3° Le Nnué du bojo. — 4° L'Ebéñ bêtum.

d) Survivances dans les tatouages et signes ethniques.

e) Sentiment populaire au sujet du totem.

Dans le chapitre précédent: «Le totem réel», nous avons donc constaté dans chaque tribu, clan ou famille fàñ, un totem, appartenant soit au règne animal, soit au règne végétal ou minéral, soit encore, mais rarement, aux phénomènes célestes. Toutes nos constatations se sont appuyées sur des faits précis, de façon à établir d'une manière indubitable l'existence de ce totem.

Avant de déterminer «l'objectivité» du totem, ou, si l'on préfère, l'objet «matérialisé» ou «concrétisé» auquel s'adressera le «culte» totémique, si ce culte existe, ce que nous aurons à étudier ensuite, il nous faut maintenant poser la question de l'antiquité du totem, et par là même du rôle qu'il joue dans l'économie de la tribu.

Le fait du totem existe, soit totem tribal, soit totem de clan, soit totem familial ou d'individu. Ce fait d'existence implique deux ordres de questions auxquelles nous avons à répondre maintenant. La question primordiale est celle-ci:

[p. 174]

7: Trilles F119 Fang

1° Le totem est-il seulement un phénomène d'importation ou rencontre-t-il comme tout ce que nous avons dit jusqu'ici tend à le faire supposer, une origine autane de la tribu?

Cette première question étant résolue, on passe la seconde:

2° D'après les documents que nous trouvons dans la tribu fàn elle-même, pouvons-nous assigner une origine au totem?

Question qui nous amène à étudier successivement ces documents qui se rattachent à cinq sources différentes:

a) Les généalogies[1], dont nous retrouvons ici l'importance;

b) Les légendes totémiques ou la tradition, tradition orale puisque les Fàn ne connaissent pas l'écriture, telle au moins que nous la comprenons, mais tradition orale conservée fidèlement par les «chanteurs» et les chefs[2];

c) Les survivances artefiles des rites totémiques dans certains phénomènes de culte;

d) Les survivances dans les tatouages, ombrèmes, langue etc.;

e) Le sentiment ou la croyance du peuple lui-même au sujet de l'origine du totem;

---

[1] A propos des noms des généalogies, faisons encore cette remarque que le nom est attaché au crâne présent ou'que tout ou moins la famille a en sa possession et surtout, par conséquent, les honneurs funéraires ont été rendus. Tous ceux qui sont morts par accident ou,étés à la guerre et dont on n'a pu retrouver les crânes sont laissés de côté, comme n'ayant pas reçu les honneurs funéraires, ou, de ce fait, ne pouvant être compris dans la ligne des ancêtres. Ce fait a dû souvent se reproduire dans des tribus aussi batailleuses que les hordes fàn. Joint au fait de l'oubli inévitable, et des oublieuses involontaires, il explique que les généalogies pouvent ne comme remonter beaucoup plus haut en réalité qu'on ne serait tenté de le croire à première impression. Cependant, dans certains cas, par exemple si on a pu se procurer un os du défunt, on se pourra remédier les honneurs ennemiens au lieu du crâne lui-même. Il faudra alors une cérémonie spéciale. Ce cas peut arriver pour les prisonniers de guerre mangés: à prix d'or, les parents s'en procurent subrepticement un reste quelconque.

[2] Les Fàn ne connaissent pas l'écriture proprement dite, mais ils savent cependant exprimer un nombre assez grand d'idées par certains signes, sortes de hiéroglyphes, que l'on retrouve souvent dessinés sur les parois des cases, et surtout par un système assez compliqué de nœuds et de cordelettes qui rappellent les «quipus» péruviens. Les femmes en particulier sont très habiles à se servir de ce système particulier.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Nous rejetterons à deux chapitres subséquents:

1° L'explication de l'origine du totem, telle qu'elle ressort du totem lui-même, ou d'après le système des différents auteurs qui ont traité la question, mais en l'appliquant d'une manière particulière aux Fàn.

2° L'importance du totem dans le système religieux des Fàn, question subsidiaire qui eût pu trouver sa place ici, mais à laquelle nous amènera naturellement un paragraphe suivant: le respect du totem.

Tels sont donc les deux ordres de questions qui forment l'ensemble de ce chapitre, questions qui sont toutes les deux d'une importance considérable dans cette Etude du totémisme.

§ 1. Le totem fàn est-il un phénomène d'importation, ou bien remonte-t-il aux origines de la tribu?

Les Fàn, tels les anciens Romains, sont loin d'être exclusifs dans leur culte. Ils adoptent avec une certaine facilité, au moins de surface, sinon les rites religieux des peuples ou des tribus qu'ils rencontrent sur leur chemin, tout au moins les fétiches qu'ils estiment puissants. Soit, et c'est en somme le plus commun, qu'ils incorporent à leur propre masse ces tribus plus faibles ou moins guerrières, et le fait alors d'accepter tout au moins leurs croyances, paraît alors très naturel, soit que par leurs rapports constants, leur pénétration au cœur même de ces tribus, ils croient au contraire constater la présence de «fétiches» plus forts, et là encore, par un sentiment fort compréhensible, se trouvent désireux de conquérir une force nouvelle et nullement à dédaigner pour leur propre nation.

Le fétiche principal actuel, par exemple, celui que l'on pourrait presque appeler le Dieu national, si ce mot «Dieu» n'avait pas une conception absolument étrangère aux Fàn qui n'adressent aucun culte à la divinité [1], le fétiche principal actuel, le Biéri, me semble bien importé, au moins dans sa forme actuelle de culte. Le fond demeure cependant fàn: il est probablement pris aux nations voisines, peut-être aux Bulus et aux Fiotes qui le connaissent sous le nom de Bwiti

[1] Nous avons vu plus haut que les Fàn n'admettent pas ces noms abstraits: divinité, humanité etc. Pour eux, il y a seulement des «entités» distinctes, dieux, hommes etc.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

(Bitti en fâ mékè). Tout au moins, on ne le trouve plus dans les tribus du nord, mais beaucoup plutôt dans les tribus de l'Ogowé et de la côte. Pour le mvumayôt, au contraire, on retrouve actuellement son culte et ses rites dans toutes les tribus fâ, du nord au sud, de l'est à l'ouest, plus vivant dans les tribus éloignées de tout contact européen, s'affaiblissant déjà, et pour des causes multiples que nous reverrons d'ailleurs, en parlant des tatouages, dans les tribus ayant subi l'influence ou l'infiltration européenne. Le fait de rencontrer ainsi le totem dans toutes les tribus fâ actuellement existantes, et de le retrouver également dans les tribus qui leur sont apparentées semble bien prouver, croyons-nous, que le totémisme n'est pas chez eux un fait importé, tout au moins à une époque récente: il n'aurait pu en effet pénétrer ainsi et se faire adopter dans toutes les tribus. Aussi serons-nous complètement opposé à la théorie de Lasseau[1], qui prétend, mais sans aucune preuve, à l'importation du culte du Crocodile, sans dire où, ni comment, ni pourquoi. Au contraire, le fait de l'existence actuelle du totem dans toutes les tribus et même dans les autres nations apparentées aux Fâ est un fait apparent, qu'il est facile de constater. On l'a noté dernièrement chez les Yaundé. De même, le P. Martrou l'a constaté, en en notant toutefois l'affaiblissement progressif, dans les tribus environnant sa mission de l'Ogowé. Ainsi encore l'ai-je remarqué pour ma part chez les Bosyebas; là, un de mes fidèles catéchistes, Fidèle Bézalé, fils du chef des Mékurk, la plus forte tribu des Bosyebas, m'a donné de curieux renseignements, surtout sur les sociétés secrètes de femmes, dont sa mère faisait partie; elle y occupait un haut grade. Je l'ai également vu chez les Dzém, et dans toutes les tribus fâ où il m'a été donné de pénétrer, c'est-à-dire dans presque toutes.

Cette universalité est donc bien de nature à nous faire conclure que le totémisme est vraiment un rite national.

On trouve également, il est vrai, le totémisme dans certaines nations qui habitent aussi le Congo. Tels, par exemple les Balengi, [1] Dictionnaire français-fang, à l'article: Origines. Nous avons déjà dit à propos de ce dictionnaire que l'auteur ne parlait pas le fâ, et a composé son livre à l'aide de plusieurs interprètes.

aujourd'hui repoussés à la côte du Muny et réduits à rien: le chef d'un de leurs rares villages me disait un jour, non sans mélancolie:

«Nous avions pourtant un puissant protecteur (c'était le tigre), nos ennemis n'avaient que le sanglier, et pourtant le sanglier a vaincu le tigre; comment expliquer cela! Ils nous ont mangés! —

C'est bien facile, lui répondis-je: depuis quand un tigre, si tigre soit-il, peut-il lutter contre mille sangliers! —

C'est bien vrai, reprit-il! Ah! si nous étions plus!»

Le totémisme existe également dans divers autres clans ou peuples. Ainsi, complètement en dehors de leur race et des clans bantous, mais à leurs côtés, vivant avec eux et souvent dans une sorte de servage, les Fân trouveront les Pygmées ou Négrilles dont la religion est fondée en partie sur le totémisme, tout au moins pour ceux qui habitent la Gabonie, et que nous connaissons. Or, ils reconnaissent trois totems principaux, le fourmi-lion, la chauve-souris et le modama[1].

Le modama, en fân olum (?), est encore assez mal déterminé; les Fân désignent sous ce nom deux arbres d'essence différente, bien que de la même famille des Sapotacées: le Baillonella toxisperma, qui me semble douteux, et l'Ibete latifolia (Mueil), qui me paraît plus probable. Les Pygmées se nourrissent de ses fruits qui contiennent 70°/₀ de matières grasses et sont par conséquent très-nutritifs, mais assez amers. Le latex, d'agréable odeur, est en réalité une gutta-percha. Le modama pourrait également être un autre arbre appartenant au genre Parinarium, des Rosacées, par exemple l'excelsum, très bel arbre à fût droit et lisse, rare au Gabon, mais fréquent au Sénégal et à l'intérieur. L'embryon renferme une huile grasse qui est employée dans l'alimentation, et les drupes fournissent une chair juteuse et un peu âpre. Ce qui semble confirmer la possibilité du choix de cet arbre, c'est que Sir H. Johnston le signale également comme recevant un culte des Pygmées et des peuples du Centre-Africain.

[1] Le modama, dit Mgr. Le Roy, dans son beau livre des Pygmées, appelé en mpongwé olumi, d'une racine idéotique qui signifie avoir de la renommée, être célèbre, être grand (dama), est un arbre magnifique et assez rare dont je n'ai vu que trois spécimens. Très gros, très grand, il s'élève tout droit, près des eaux, et porte à vingt ou trente mètres une tête superbe. Son écorce répand une odeur agréable, et quand on le frappe, disent les indigènes, il résonne comme pour répondre. Beaucoup de chansons le célèbrent: Olumi n'agondje . . . Cf. Les Pygmées p. 190.

Les Fâñ n'ont aucun de ces trois totems. De plus, le culte que leur rendent les Pygmées est tout différent: leur principale façon d'honorer ces totems est de prendre un fragment, ou un peu de sang, ou de sève du totem, de se faire une incision à la cheville, de le mêler au sang qui coule, et de le faire entrer dans la plaie. Ainsi auront-ils la force du moduma, la marche silencieuse et nocturne de la chauve-souris, l'habileté à saisir sa proie du fourmi-lion.

Les Pygmées ont encore un souverain mépris pour les totems et pour tous les fétiches des Fâñ qu'ils exècrent, bien que, et probablement parce qu'ils vivent sous leur domination. La réciproque est exactement vraie. Chacun se traite d'abominable sauvage.

Pour tous ces clans, bantous ou autres, s'oppose une même raison: les Fâñ les ont tous repoussés devant eux; seuls, sont restés les Pygmées, autochtones d'ailleurs[1], mais bien peu nombreux, quelques milliers au plus. Le totémisme des races vaincues n'aurait donc pû s'imposer aux envahisseurs que par «rayonnement» de la périphérie au centre, mais ce rayonnement est évidemment impossible du centre jusqu'aux extrémités de la masse, restées dans l'extrême intérieur, et tel le totémisme des clans arrivés maintenant à la côte, tel exactement, cependant avec les mêmes rites et les mêmes croyances, le totémisme des clans de l'intérieur, à plusieurs milliers de kilomètres les uns des autres[2].

La conclusion est donc évidente:

1° Le totémisme fâñ ne nous paraît pas d'importation récente.

2° Il n'est pas dû davantage à un phénomène d'infiltration, aux tribus voisines ou subjuguées.

Mais ici se présente une objection: le totémisme, pour n'être pas d'importation récente, pourrait néanmoins ne pas remonter aux origines de la tribu. Quelles sont donc les raisons ou les documents qui nous permettront de lui assigner une origine très-reculée? C'est ce qui fera l'objet d'un second paragraphe.

[1] Autochtones, en ce sens seulement qu'ils habitaient déjà le pays lors de l'arrivée des Fâñ. Ceux-ci les reconnaissent parfaitement comme «Maîtres» du sol, mais, en fait, les traitent en esclaves.

[2] Les Fâñ sont répandus sur une aire d'environ 7 degrés, près de 3000 kilomètres.

§ 2. Documents et raisons qui nous permettent de faire remonter le totémisme aux origines de la tribu.

Les documents et raisons qui nous permettent d'assigner au totémisme fàñ une origine très-reculée, appartiennent, avons-nous dit, à cinq sources différentes:

a) les généalogies, dont nous constaterons ici une fois de plus l'importance,

b) les légendes totémiques,

c) les survivances actuelles des rites totémiques dans les phénomènes du culte,

d) les survivances dans les tatouages, dessins, emblèmes,

e) le sentiment ou la croyance du peuple lui-même au sujet de l'origine du totem.

a) Les généalogies.

Les généalogies nous donneront tout d'abord un précieux moyen d'investigation, surtout dans les tribus mieux constituées de l'intérieur, où elles ont conservé toute leur force. Par elles, outre les noms qu'elles nous ont conservés des ascendants des guerriers et des chefs actuels, nous savons de plus, par raisonnement, que tel chef de famille, tel ou tel fondateur de clan ou de tribu, avait tel ou tel totem, précieusement transmis aux descendants. Ainsi, par exemple, m'adressant au chef du clan Ebinze, si je lui demande: «Pourquoi, vous autres, vous appelez-vous: les hommes du clan Ebinze?» — Il me répondra sans hésiter (et même souvent il ajoutera avec un sourire moqueur):

«Comment ne sais-tu pas cela, toi qui es de notre peuple, veux-tu donc m'éprouver? Tu sais bien que notre père, l'esayôñ du clan, était Nze. Voici d'ailleurs mon mébara [1].

— Mais ton mvamayôñ est également Nze (le tigre). Etait-il donc en même temps esayôñ?

— Wa kwerele me! (Tu te moques de moi!)

— Mais enfin? Pourquoi Nze mvamayôñ, et Nze esayôñ?

[1] Nous avons déjà dit plus haut que le mébara comprenait l'enseignement traditionnel et surtout la liste individuelle des ancêtres.

— Parce que les choses se sont trouvées ainsi! C'est que le père de Nze lui avait donné ce mvama!»

Et dans les interrogations que vous aurez ainsi l'occasion de faire, vous constaterez que le souvenir du totem du fondateur du clan, ou du premier ancêtre connu de la tribu, se sera toujours conservé, mais aussi toujours invariablement uni au souvenir du mvamayôñ; aujourd'hui, comme au temps du premier ancêtre, ce mvamayôñ est toujours le mvamayôñ de la tribu.

A combien, pour préciser les choses, remontent ces souvenirs? Il est difficile d'assigner une date précise. Dans les très nombreuses généalogies que j'avais naguère recueillies, travail précieux qui m'avait permis d'identifier et de grouper un grand nombre de clans, et qui s'est trouvé malheureusement perdu au cours d'un long voyage, les plus complètes, ou mieux celles qui comptaient le plus grand nombre d'ascendants en ligne directe, arrivaient à 33. Je n'ai jamais dépassé ce chiffre, mais celles de 20 générations et plus étaient fréquentes. En outre, les vieux chefs étaient unanimes à m'affirmer que dans les premières générations, peu à peu le souvenir se perdait, et il m'est en effet arrivé plus d'une fois d'en compléter par des renseignements ultérieurs ou dans des tribus plus éloignées. Les clans du nord ont conservé plus fidèlement ces souvenirs. Il est facile d'ailleurs de concevoir combien ces généalogies peuvent omettre de noms, puisque très fréquemment le fils aura le nom de son grand-père, et qu'à l'origine, cette coutume était plus fidèlement observée encore. Ainsi, Etûtû-Ovum, un chef Amvom, me donnait comme ses premiers ascendants, avec un ancêtre nommé Etûtû comme lui:

Etûtû Mison
fils de Nson Etûtû
fils de
Etûtû Biyère
Eyère-Bikwé
Nkwé-Etûtû
Etûtû Mison
Nson-Biyère
Eyère-Mitôñe
Ntôñe etc.

On conçoit combien la répétition de ces noms, revenant identiquement ou presque identiquement les mêmes, peut facilement amener de confusions. Faisons en passant une remarque curieuse: le nom du père, dans les généalogies, est souvent mis au pluriel. Ainsi Etûtû-Mison, c'est-à-dire Etûtû — fils de Mison. En réalité Mison se nommait Nson, comme le montre la généalogie suivante: Nson-Etûtû. De même Etûtû-Biyère, lequel est en réalité Eyère. Nous signalons cette particularité, que nul de ceux que nous avons jusqu'ici interrogés n'a pu nous expliquer. Un seul chef (car c'est toujours à ceux-là qu'on s'adresse, comme possédant mieux les secrets de la famille) m'a un jour répondu:

«Mais tu le sais bien, c'est parce qu'ils sont deux.

— Cependant, un seul (Eyère, par exemple) a vécu. Pourquoi dis-tu donc Biyère?

— Tu le sais bien: ils sont deux.»

Et je n'ai pu en tirer d'autre réponse. Je ne pense pas qu'il y ait là quelque raison grammaticale[1]; ce serait plutôt une raison en quelque somme théologique, une croyance à un double existant; je n'ai pu le constater.

Les plus anciennes généalogies, et par conséquent l'ancêtre totémique le plus éloigné, dont nous puissions retrouver la trace, remontent donc à environ trente générations. Si l'on veut appliquer une date à cette époque, il est relativement facile de le faire. Si la femme fàñ est mariée jeune, il n'en est pas ainsi de l'homme qui aime conserver beaucoup plus longtemps sa liberté, et aussi en jouir. Aussi, en fait, bien que souvent le jeune homme possède sa femme depuis longtemps, le mariage n'est-il consommé que beaucoup plus tard, entre vingt et vingt-cinq ans. Par une coutume même particulière aux fils de chefs et qui s'étend à leurs filles, ceux-ci ne sont souvent mariés que beaucoup plus tard; cette coutume a dû peut-être s'établir par raison d'utilité publique, pour sauvegarder l'unité et la pureté de la race, ou plutôt encore, et, à mon avis,

[1] Cette façon de procéder est au contraire formellement opposée aux règles: le «possesseur» impose son «préfixe» au «possédé». Ainsi e-li e-tax, un arbre petit, bi-li bi-tax, des arbres petits. Etûtû-Eyère, Etûtû-Ekyé serait conforme à la règle, mais ne se dit jamais. Le père prend le préfixe du pluriel.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

c'est la vraie raison, par suite de la loi même de succession. Ainsi le père n'aura aucun compétiteur possible. Peu importe d'ailleurs au fond ici la cause: le fait est que nous pouvons assigner à chaque génération une durée comprise entre vingt-cinq et trente-cinq ans, soit trois par siècle, ou sept pour deux siècles. Nous atteindrons donc, par ce moyen des généalogies, une limite de neuf siècles environ. Aucune ne dépasse cette limite, mais il faut bien remarquer les deux causes qui peuvent les faire remonter en fait beaucoup plus haut: 1° Les oublis dûs au temps; 2° l'omission de certains noms, par suite des crânes n'ayant pas reçu les honneurs funèbres, guerriers disparus ou pris par l'ennemi. Cette raison est très-importante.

b) Les légendes.

Si la durée assignée par les générations ne peut dépasser neuf siècles au maximum, il n'en est pas ainsi des légendes qui permettent de remonter à une époque beaucoup plus reculée.

Quelle est cette époque? Il est impossible de l'assigner: tout ce que l'on peut affirmer, c'est qu'elle est très lointaine. Au temps, en effet, où les généalogies nous font remonter, et que permet d'assigner le fondateur de nombreux clans, on trouve déjà la nation divisée en quatre rameaux distincts et quatre-vingt tribus environ, ce qui laisse supposer déjà une haute antiquité. Quoiqu'il en soit, rien ne permet d'assigner une date certaine. Seul, le folklore, en rapprochant les tribus aujourd'hui dispersées d'un bout à l'autre de l'Afrique, et la linguistique comparée, permettront quelques données nouvelles.

Nous avons dit plus haut que d'après les traditions que nous avons pu recueillir, les Bétsi et les Méké, au temps où ils ne formaient qu'une tribu chacun, ne reconnaissaient que deux totems, le Crocodile et l'Eléphant. Auquel des deux faut-il assigner la priorité, ou bien ont-ils eu, comme aujourd'hui, une existence parallèle? Il est absolument impossible de le dire, tout autant que de donner une date avec une approximation, même quelconque.

La légende du Crocodile présente de curieux détails au point de vue qui nous occupe; nous la transcrivons donc ici, telle que nous l'avons recueillie dans plusieurs tribus.

1° La légende[1] de Ngurangurane, le fils du Crocodile.

«Il y avait autrefois, il y a de cela bien longtemps, bien longtemps[2], un très-grand nganga (féticheur), et c'était Ngurangurane[3], le fils du Crocodile.

(Notons ici que ce nom de Ngurangurane, le premier chef connu des Fâñ, comme nous le verrons d'après la légende, n'est pas donné partout sous cette forme. Au mont Khumenzox,[4] le chef m'affirma que c'était une erreur, et que le vrai nom était celui qu'il lui donnait: Nganengane, qui s'en rapproche d'ailleurs: Caïman fils du Caïman (ngan: caïman).

Au pays des Dzèm, le nom variait encore: Nkômengane, Crocodile fils du Caïman. Tout en assignant deux noms au Crocodile et au Caïman, Nkôm et Ngan, les Fâñ leur donnent cependant une origine commune. D'après la contexture de la légende, Nganengane nous semblerait plus probable. Tous les Fâñ Bétsi que j'ai

---

[1] Cette légende m'a été contée par Henri Etuÿe, habitant un village de la rivière Ebè, affluent du fleuve Mondah. Etuÿe appartient à la tribu Yemvux. Ce récit m'a été répété à deux reprises différentes, et dans des termes presque identiques, la première fois par le chef du village Ebole-Nzox, près du mont Khumenzox, dans le Kamerun allemand, au village précisement où jadis Crampel avait enlevé une petite fille, Ñarinze, qu'il ramena avec lui en France. Cet incident faillit d'ailleurs amener le massacre de toute notre expédition. La seconde fois, il nous fut redit dans un village limitrophe des Dzèm. Plusieurs centaines de kilomètres séparent ces trois villages, d'où nous concluons à la très haute antiquité de la légende, comme tout d'ailleurs le fait remarquer.

[2] Lorsqu'un conteur fâñ rapporte à ses auditeurs un récit qui remonte aux origines de la tribu, il a coutume d'employer au commencement une sorte de phrase assez curieuse: «An'a nga to a mbe ngẽñ éto mê mbe dia ve ve betôl. Or il arriva qu'il arriva en ce temps-là, je n'y étais pas ni mes ancêtres non plus, mais seulement les Anciens . . .»

[3] Nous donnons ici ce nom de Ngurangurane, le premier qui nous fut donné dans l'Ebè, et dont l'étymologie est la suivante: Il y a vengeance complète: Ngura, représailles, vengeance, dont le réduplicatif donne une idée de plénitude, de complet. Ainsi akox, une pierre, akokox, une très-grosse pierre. Ngura é ne la vengeance est, Ngurangurane, la vengeance est pleinement satisfaite.

[4] Notons en passant que ce mont Khumenzox, c'est-à-dire le Mont du Père Eléphant, du Chef de la Horde (nom dû à la fois à sa forme et à sa hauteur, car il domine tous les autres) est orthographié sur les cartes «Gouméndzoko», qui n'a aucun sens! Nouvelle preuve de la nécessité pour les voyageurs de ne pas ignorer la langue.

interrogés sur ce point, ont toujours été unanimes à me déclarer: «Ngurangurane, ou Nganengane, est le père des tous les Fâñ».

Les Méké ont une autre légende qui attribue leur origine à l'éléphant, d'où le culte totémique rendu à cet animal: nous la donnerons et discuterons plus loin.)

«Donc, il y avait à cette époque, il y a de cela bien longtemps, bien longtemps, un très grand féticheur nommé Ngurangurane, le fils du Crocodile. Et voici comment il était né, c'est la première chose: ce qu'il fit et comment il mourut, c'est la seconde. Dire toutes ses actions, c'est impossible, et d'ailleurs qui se les rappellerait? [1]

1° Comment il était né, c'est la première chose.

A cette époque-là, les Fâñ demeuraient au bord d'un grand fleuve, grand, si grand, qu'on ne pouvait apercevoir l'autre rive; ils pêchaient sur le bord, mais ils n'allaient pas sur le fleuve; nul encore ne leur avait appris à creuser des canots: celui qui le leur apprit, ce fut Ngurangurane: Ngurangurane apprit cet art [2] aux hommes de sa famille, et sa famille, c'étaient «les hommes» (bé ne béfam, bé ne béfâñ, c'étaient les hommes, c'étaient les Fâñ).

Dans le fleuve vivait un énorme crocodile (ngan esa, un maître crocodile, ou le chef des crocodiles). Sa tête était plus longue que cette case, ses yeux plus gros qu'un cabri tout entier, ses dents coupaient un homme en deux comme je coupe une banane, cris! Il était couvert d'énormes écailles: un homme le frappait de ses javelots, tô, tô. Mais pfut, le javelot retombait, et celui qui faisait cela, ce pouvait être l'homme le plus robuste: pfut, le javelot retombait. C'était un animal terrible.

---

[1] Nous traduisons presque littéralement le texte indigène. Dans notre livre «Contes et Légendes» nous avons déjà donné ce récit, mais en l'abrégeant. Nous le rétablissons ici en entier.

[2] Il faut reconnaître que les Fâñ n'ont pas beaucoup profité des leçons de Ngurangurane. Encore aujourd'hui, dans tout l'intérieur, ils ne savent creuser que d'informes canots, et encore se servent-ils beaucoup plus souvent de mauvais radeaux en bois d'ambach (Musantha Smithonii) à peine assemblés par quelques lianes. A la côte, les populations riveraines, toutes très hardies à la mer, les raillent en disant: «Les Fâñ ont des canots faits comme des auges à piler le manioc, et ils se servent de leurs pagaies comme un colimaçon de ses cornes.»

Or, un jour, il vint dans le village de Ngurangurane, mais celui-ci n'était pas encore né. Et celui qui commandait les Fâñ était un grand chef, et il commandait à beaucoup d'hommes. Il commandait aux Fâñ et à d'autres encore [1]. Ngan Esa vint donc un jour dans le village des Fâñ et il appelle le Chef:

«Chef, je t'appelle.»

Le chef accourt aussitôt [2]. Et le chef crocodile dit au Chef homme:

«Bège mélo (Ecoute attentivement).

Et le chef homme répondit: ««Mélo.» (Oreilles: C'est-à-dire J'écoute bien).»

«Ce que tu feras à partir d'aujourd'hui, le voici. Chaque jour, j'ai faim, et je pense que la chair de l'homme me vaut mieux que la chair du poisson. Chaque jour, tu attacheras un esclave [3] et tu me l'apporteras sur les bords du fleuve, un homme un jour, une femme un jour, et le premier de chaque lune, une jeune fille bien peinte avec le baza [4] et bien luisante de graisse [5]. Tu feras ainsi. Si tu oses ne pas obéir, je mangerai tout ton village. Voilà, c'est fini. Tais-toi.»

Et le chef crocodile, sans ajouter un mot, retourna au fleuve. Et au village, on commença les Lamentations funèbres. Et chacun

---

[1] J'interromps ici le conteur pour demander: Ces autres étaient-ils Fâñ? — Tout le monde me répond: C'étaient les esclaves des Fâñ. — Evidemment! D'après une légende qu'on retrouve dans chaque tribu et qui s'explique facilement, Nzame, l'être suprême, créa d'abord les Fâñ, puis les autres nations. Chaque nation a l'orgueil d'en dire autant.

[2] J'interromps encore: Nzue (chef) était-il son nom? — On me regarde de travers, et on me répond: Nzue, c'est Nzue. Tobege evôvô: tâche de garder le silence. Je me le tiens pour dit, le conteur étant intéressant.

[3] A noter qu'aujourd'hui les Fâñ n'ont pas d'esclaves. D'ailleurs, le mot employé nsaja qui signifie «attaché», désigne plutôt un captif.

[4] Baza, poudre de bois rouge (santal pterocarpa, et plusieurs espèces voisines). On tire de l'arbre une magnifique teinture rouge, par simple écrasement du bois. Les femmes réduisent le cœur de l'arbre en poudre très fine, la mélangent avec de l'huile, et s'en parfument tout le corps. Dans l'intérieur, pour recevoir honorablement un étranger, la maîtresse de maison oint d'huile et de bois rouge le lit de bambous qui lui sera offert, et s'en peint elle-même la figure.

[5] Cette graisse est spéciale. On la tire, soit du fruit de l'aza (Teighemella africana), soit des fruits du palmier des marais (Raphia vinifera). Cette dernière a une odeur forte et est beaucoup moins estimée.

dit: «Je suis mort.» Chacun le dit, le chef, les hommes, les femmes. Le lendemain, au matin, quand le soleil se lève, le crocodile chef était sur le bord du fleuve. Wah! Wah! sa gueule était énorme, plus longue que cette case, ses yeux gros comme un cabri tout entier. Les crocodiles que l'on voit aujourd'hui, ne sont plus des crocodiles! Ce crocodile chef était comme le ndžin [1]. Et l'on se hâta d'apporter au crocodile chef ce qu'il avait demandé, un homme un jour, une femme un jour, et le premier de chaque lune, une jeune fille ornée de rouge et d'huile, toute luisante de graisse. L'on fit ce que le crocodile chef avait ordonné, et nul n'osait désobéir, car il avait partout ses guerriers, les autres crocodiles.

Et le nom de ce crocodile, c'était Ombure: les eaux obéissaient à Ombure, les forêts obéissaient à Ombure, ses «hommes» étaient partout, il était chef de la forêt, mais il était surtout chef de l'eau. Et chaque jour il mangeait soit un homme, soit une femme, et il était très content, et très ami avec les Fáñ. Mais ceux-ci avaient fini de donner tous leurs esclaves, et le chef avait livré tout ce qu'il avait comme richesses pour en acheter. Il n'avait plus un coffre [2], plus une dent d'éléphant! Il lui fallait fournir un homme, un homme fáñ! — Et le chef des Fáñ réunit tous ses hommes dans son abéñe [3]: il leur parla longtemps, longtemps, et après lui, les autres guerriers parlèrent aussi longtemps. Quand la palabre fut terminée, tout le monde était d'accord et pensait avec un seul cœur: on devait partir. Le chef dit alors: «Voilà cette question de départ réglée: nous irons loin, loin d'ici par delà les montagnes. Quand nous serons loin, bien loin du fleuve, par delà les montagnes, Ombure ne pourra plus nous atteindre, et nous serons heureux.» Et il fut décidé que l'on ne renouvellerait plus les plantations, et qu'à la fin de la saison, toute la tribu quitterait les bords du fleuve. Et ainsi fut fait.

[1] Ce mot ndžin, ou džin, n'a rien de commun avec les djinns ou diables musulmans. Le džin est un animal monstrueux, qui, disent les Fáñ, habite les fleuves profonds, de préférence au pied des cataractes. Il se nourrit de chair, entraîne les femmes, les enfants, lutte au besoin avec l'éléphant, est très-méchant, très-redouté. Il est très-rare, et je le crois assez légendaire. D'après cependant une griffe et un fragment de peau que j'ai vus, je l'assimilerais, s'ils sont bien de lui, à une loutre énorme. Mr. Chevallier pense qu'il s'agit du petit hippopotame des marais, espèce rare et très-peu connue.

[2] Exemple d'adaption: les coffres sont d'importation récente.

[3] Nous avons déjà dit que l'abéñe était la case où se réunissent les hommes seuls, sous la présidence du chef, pour y «palabrer».

Au commencement de la saison sèche, lorsque les eaux sont basses, et qu'il fait bon voyager, la tribu se mit en marche. Le premier jour, on alla vite, vite, aussi vite que l'on put marcher. Chaque homme pressait ses femmes, et les femmes, hâtant le pas, marchaient en silence, ployant sous le faix des provisions et des ustensiles de ménage, car on emportait tout, marmites, plats, pilons, corbeilles, sabres et houes, tout, chaque femme avait sa charge et elle l'avait lourde. Elle l'avait, lourde, car avec tout cela, on avait encore fait sécher du manioc et on l'emportait. Elle l'avait lourde, car il lui fallait encore porter les enfants, les petits qui ne savaient pas marcher, et ceux qui ne marchaient pas longtemps.

Et il fallait demeurer silencieux: les hommes se taisaient, les femmes se taisaient, et les enfants pleuraient, mais les mères disaient: Taisez-vous. Le grand chef était en tête: il conduisait la marche, car c'était lui qui connaissait le mieux le pays: il avait été souvent à la chasse, et au cou, il portait un collier de dents de grand singe.

C'était en effet un grand chasseur. —

Le premier jour, beaucoup regardaient derrière eux, croyant entendre le crocodile: Wah! Wah! et le dernier (!) avait froid dans son cœur! Mais on n'entendit rien. Et le second jour, la marche fut la même, et l'on n'entendit rien. Et le troisième jour, la marche fut la même, et l'on n'entendit rien [1].

Le conteur.

Bé nwux dia, ké wu - ỹe zum á zum, eh! yé - lè.

Ils n'entendirent pas, sans entendre aucune chose, eh! yé lè.

[1] Comme nous l'avons fait remarquer déjà, si le conteur voit que l'attention de ses auditeurs commence à se lasser, vite il en arrive à un endroit où le récit est coupé d'un chant, saisit son mvex à 7 cordes et prélude par un accord vif, puis le fait suivre d'un Eh! yélè, crié très fort dans le haut de la voix. Tous les dormeurs, réveillés du coup, répondent aussitôt sur le même ton: Eh! yélè. Puis le chanteur continue sa phrase musicale, et reprend ensuite le récit, qu'il raconte sans se lasser, jusqu'au moment où il y a besoin d'un nouveau «coup de fouet»; le récit est coupé encore d'un chant, avec le mvex à 7 cordes. Tous les auditeurs reprennent en chœur.

Les auditeurs.

Bé nwux dia, ké wu - ÿe zum à zum, eh! yé - lè[1].

Le premier jour, cependant, le crocodile chef était sorti de l'eau suivant son habitude pour venir à l'endroit où l'on avait coutume de mettre l'esclave qui lui était destiné. Il vient: Wah! Wah! Rien. Qu'est ce ceci? Il prend aussitôt la route du village.

«Chef des hommes, je t'appelle.»

Rien! Il n'entend aucun bruit; il entre, toutes les cases sont abandonnées; il va aux plantations, les plantations sont abandonnées: Wah! Wah! Il parcourt tous les villages, tous les villages sont abandonnés; il parcourt toutes les plantations, toutes les plantations sont abandonnées.

Ombure entre alors dans une fureur épouvantable, et se replonge dans le fleuve pour consulter son fétiche, et il chante:

Vous qui commandez aux eaux, esprits des eaux.
Bur ba zue médzim, bétwa médzim.
Vous tous qui m'obéissez, c'est moi qui vous appelle.
Bur ba wux méfex, maye ma lè mine mvèye.
Venez, venez à l'appel de votre chef.

---

[1] A propos de ce mot yélè que l'on retrouve également dans les tribus du nord et en Guinée, signalons une curieuse étymologie, d'après les recherches du Dr. Bertholon sur la langue archaïque, d'origine grecque ou phrygienne, parlée dans l'Afrique du Nord, avant l'invasion phénicienne. Ce dialecte aurait, par infiltration, influé sur quelques tribus africaines qui y auraient puisé un certain nombre de mots, plus ou moins déformés. C'est ainsi que les Soso, Mandé et les Malinké, qui sont aujourd'hui en Guinée française, y auraient trouvé quelques mots comme guné, la femme (γυνή), gémé, le caillou et yé la montagne (γῆ la terre), koro, vieillard (γέρων), don, manger (δδειν), fara, apporter (φέρειν), noma, la coutume (νόμος), kori, cercle (γυρος), fila, la feuille (φυτον), yélè et yélè, rire (γέλαος). Nous donnons évidemment cette origine à titre de simple curiosité: yélè, serait le cri de joie, oh! yélè, oh! rire.

Peut-être aussi pourrait-on y voir une simple onomatopée; de même que yi, pleurer, exprime bien le cri de douleur de l'enfant et se reproduit dans toutes les langues, yè serait le cri de joie, analogue du yó, yô des Grecs, l'exclamation de l'homme satisfait. Cependant, quelques-uns de ces mots se retrouvent en Fâń.

Nzaÿa, nzaÿa, nzue a lè mine.
Répondez sans tarder, répondez aussitôt.
Yèbega ke yane, ke yane voréye.
J'enverrai l'Eclair qui passe en fendant le ciel.
Ma yi lè Endèndâñ za sale minkure midzô.
J'enverrai le Tonnerre qui passe en brisant tout.
J'enverrai le Vent de la Tempête qui passe en arrachant les bananiers.
J'enverrai l'Orage qui tombe de la nuée et balaie tout devant lui.
Tous répondront à la voix de leur chef.

Vous tous qui m'obéissez, indiquez-moi le chemin.
Le chemin qu'ont pris ceux qui se sont enfuis.
Esprits des eaux, répondez.

. . . . . .

Mais à son grand étonnement, les esprits des eaux ne répondent pas, pas un seul ne répond!

Qu'était-il donc arrivé? Ceci. Avant de quitter son village. le chef des hommes avait offert de grands sacrifices. Il avait offert un grand sacrifice aux esprits des eaux, en leur demandant de rester muets, et ils avaient promis. Ils avaient promis: Nous ne dirons rien.

Ombure recommence une conjuration plus forte encore:

Vous qui commandez aux eaux, esprits des eaux.
Vous tous qui m'obéissez, c'est moi qui vous appelle . . . etc.

Et les esprits des eaux, forcés d'obéir, comparaissent devant Ombure:

«Où sont les hommes, ont-ils passé par vos chemins?
— Nous n'avons rien vu, ils ne sont pas passés par nos chemins.»

Et Ombure dit: «Ils ne sont pas passés par les chemins de l'eau: les esprits des eaux ne peuvent me désobéir.»

Et il appelle les esprits des forêts:

Vous qui commandez aux forêts, esprits des forêts.
Vous tous qui m'obéissez, c'est moi qui vous appelle.
Venez, venez à l'appel de votre chef.
Répondez sans tarder, répondez aussitôt.

J'enverrai l'Eclair qui passe en fendant le ciel.
J'enverrai le Tonnerre qui passe en brisant tout,
J'enverrai le Vent de la Tempête qui passe en arrachant les bananiers.
J'enverrai la Pluie d'Orage qui tombe de la nuée et balaie tout devant elle.
Tous doivent répondre à la voix de leur chef.

Vous tous qui m'obéissez, indiquez-moi le chemin.
Le chemin qu'ont pris ceux qui se sont enfuis.
Esprits des forêts, répondez.

. . . . . .

Mais à son grand étonnement, de tous les esprits des forêts, pas un esprit ne répond, tous se taisent.

Qu'était-il donc arrivé? Ceci. Avant de quitter son village, le chef des hommes avait offert de grands sacrifices. Il avait offert un grand sacrifice aux esprits des forêts, en leur demandant de rester muets, et ils avaient promis. Ils avaient promis: Nous ne dirons rien.

Ombure recommence une conjuration plus forte encore:

Vous qui commandez aux forêts, esprits des forêts.
Vous tous qui m'obéissez, c'est moi qui appelle.

Et les esprits des forêts, forcés d'obéir, comparaissent devant Ombure.

«Où sont les hommes, ont-ils passé par vos chemins?
Et les esprits des forêts répondent: Ils ont passé par nos chemins.»

Et successivement, Ombure appelle les esprits du jour, les esprits de la nuit, et grâce à eux, apprend où sont passés les Fâń. (Comme ces conjurations se répètent sous une forme identique, nous croyons inutile de les énumérer successivement. L'esprit du Noir se complaît à ces répétitions sans fin qui lui permettent de se laisser bercer sans attention soutenue par la lente mélopée du rythme, d'autant plus que lorsque l'appel des esprits est terminé, le conteur a soin de réveiller son auditoire quelque peu assoupi par un vibrant appel, relevé par les accords du mvex.)

Le Conteur.

Bé - khun bé ma - na lè! Bé - khun bé nlé - a.

Les esprits sont finis appeller; Les esprits sont appelés!

Les Assistants.

Bé ma - na bu - me fyè! Bé - khun bé nlé - a.

Ils ont annoncé la nouvelle!

Et quand Ombure eut terminé son enchantement, il connaissait le chemin qu'avaient pris les Fàń fugitifs. En vain ceux-ci avaient-ils dissimulé leurs traces. Ombure connaissait leur chemin. Qui le lui avait appris? L'Eclair, le Vent, la Tempête le lui avaient dit, l'Eclair le Vent, la Tempête le lui avaient appris.

Les Fàń continuèrent leur marche longtemps, bien longtemps. Ils franchirent enfin les montagnes, et le grand chef consulta son fétiche. «Nous arrêterons-nous ici?» Et le fétiche qui depuis longtemps, depuis le premier jour, obéissait aux ordres d'Ombure, mais cela le chef ne le savait pas, le fétiche répondit: «Non, vous ne vous arrêterez pas ici, ce n'est pas un bon endroit.»

Ils franchirent les plaines, et lorsqu'elles furent franchies, et que l'on eût retrouvé la grande forêt, la forêt qui ne finit pas, le grand chef consulta son fétiche: «Nous arrêterons-nous ici?» Et le fétiche, une fois de plus, répondit: «Plus loin encore.»

Ils arrivèrent enfin dans une vaste plaine, devant un immense lac qui fermait tout passage, et le grand chef consulta son fétiche: «Nous arrêterons-nous ici?» Et le fétiche qui obéissait à Ombure, répondit: «Oui, vous vous arrêterez ici.»

Et les Fàń avaient marché bien des jours et bien des lunes, les petits enfants étaient devenus adolescents, les adolescents étaient devenus jeunes guerriers, et les jeunes guerriers, hommes mûrs. Ils avaient marché bien des jours et bien des lunaisons. — Ils s'arrêtèrent sur les bords du lac; on construisit les nouveaux villages, les plantations furent faites, et partout le maïs donna son grain nouveau. Le chef réunit alors ses hommes pour donner un nom au village, et on l'appella: «Akurengan (la délivrance du Crocodile).»

Or, cette nuit-là même, vers minuit, un grand bruit se fait entendre et une voix crie: «Nzaÿa, Nzaÿan'oh (venez, venez ici).» Et tous sortent, fort effrayés. Que voient-ils? Car la lune éclairait bien! Ombure était au milieu du village! Il était devant la case du grand chef. Que faire! Où fuir? Où se cacher? Nul n'osait y songer! Et quand le grand chef sortit de sa case pour voir ce qui se passait, yû, ce fut le premier pris! D'un coup de dent, Ombure le cassa en deux: Krô, krô, kwas: «Voilà Akurengan», dit-il seulement.

Et il retourna vers le lac.

Les guerriers, tremblants, élirent aussitôt un autre chef, le frère de l'ancien, suivant la loi, et le matin, on prit la femme de l'ancien chef, et on vint l'attacher sur les bords du lac, en offrande à Ombure. Et celui-ci vint; la femme pleurait. Krô, krô, il la mangea. Mais le soir, il revint au village, et appela le chef:

«Chef, je t'appelle.»

Et celui-ci tout tremblant, répondit: «J'écoute.» —

«Voici ce que je vous ordonne, moi, Ombure, et vous le ferez. Tous les jours, vous m'apporterez deux hommes, un homme le matin, un homme le soir, et le lendemain, vous m'apporterez deux femmes, une femme le matin, une femme le soir. Et le premier de chaque lunaison, deux jeunes filles, bien parées et ornées de rouge et luisantes d'huile. Allez, c'est moi, Ombure, le roi de la forêt, c'est moi, Ombure, le roi des eaux.»

Et il en fut ainsi pendant de longues années [1]. Chaque matin, chaque soir, Ombure avait son repas, deux hommes un jour, deux

[1] La légende fàń a plus d'une analogie avec les anciennes légendes grecques. Ainsi, un compagnon d'Ulysse, Politès, ayant été tué à Témèse, et et n'ayant pas reçu les honneurs funèbres, exigea des habitants de cette ville le sacrifice d'une jeune vierge, mais moins cruel qu'Ombure, il en réclamait seulement une chaque année: la jeune fille devait être amenée sur le bord de la mer, et Politès, transformé par Neptune en monstre marin, venait l'emporter. Ce sacrifice dura jusqu'au jour où l'athlète lacrien Euthymos se présenta pour combattre le monstre, et après une lutte terrible, le rejeta dans la mer ionienne.

En Afrique, une légende analogue se retrouve au Bambouk (légende rapportée par Béranger-Féraud). Là, dans les temps reculés, un serpent gigantesque vivait dans un marigot et exigeait des habitants qu'on lui donnât chaque année une jeune fille choisie parmi les plus belles; en échange, il pro-femmes un jour, et deux jeunes filles le premier du mois. Il en fut ainsi longtemps. Pour payer Ombure, les Fâñ faisaient la guerre, loin, loin, et ils étaient partout vainqueurs, car Ombure, le chef crocodile, les protégeait, et ils devinrent grands guerriers.

Mais les années passèrent, l'une faisant tomber l'autre, et longtemps les Fâñ avaient renouvelé leurs plantations. Et ils étaient fatigués avec Ombure. Comment il les avait rattrapés dans leur fuite, cela, ils l'avaient oublié. Et ils étaient très fatigués avec Ombure.

Le Conteur.

Bé ma-na vo-re né Om-bu-re, bé ma-na vo-re ké fe yème.

Ils sont finis fatigués avec Ombure, ils sont finis fatigués à ne plus savoir encore!

Les Assistants.

Bé mâ-na vo-re né Om-bu-re, bé ma-na vo-re ké fe yèma.

Et ils avaient oublié. Et les jeunes gens dirent: «Nous sommes fatigués: partons.» Et les jeunes gens partirent en avant: les guerriers suivirent, et les femmes portaient les paquets derrière les guerriers.

Ombure vient le lendemain matin au bord du lac, chercher comme d'habitude sa provende journalière. Il regarde, il cherche, mettait aux habitants de les protéger contre tous leurs ennemis et de leur assurer la paix la plus profonde. Un jour, une belle et douce jeune fille, Kumba, fut choisie; elle était déjà fiancée. Malgré les pleurs et les supplications de son ami, elle fut conduite au bord du lac, et attachée à un poteau. Elle attendait le monstre pendant que la foule hurlait et que les coups de tamtam retentissaient pour étouffer sa voix. Le monstre sort du lac et s'avance vers la jeune fille: il allait la saisir quand soudain le fiancé, monté sur un cheval fougueux, fend la foule, et armé d'un long sabre, bondit sur le serpent. Celui-ci se dresse contre l'agresseur: la foule pousse des cris d'effroi, mais le jeune homme, sans se laisser intimider, court droit au monstre qui enlace déjà la jeune fille, et après une courte lutte, le renverse mort. Il prend aussitôt la jeune Kumba en croupe et s'enfuit avec elle. On ne le revit jamais, dit la légende, et il fit bien: les anciens, sans aucun doute, eussent immolé le couple pour détourner les malheurs qui devaient fondre sur la tribu: ils se multiplièrent de fait si bien qu'elle dut abandonner le pays.

---

rien. Il arrive au village. Rien. Que fait-il? Il prend son fétiche, et appelle aussitôt les esprits de la forêt. «Voici ce que vous ordonne votre chef, Ombure, votre chef, leur dit-il. Mes esclaves se sont enfuis, ils sont dans votre domaine: que tout chemin se ferme devant eux. Vent de la tempête, brise les arbres devant eux, esprit du tonnerre, esprit de l'éclair, aveuglez leurs yeux! Allez, c'est Ombure qui vous commande.»

Et ils vont.

Les chemins se ferment: devant les Fâñ, les grands arbres tombent, l'obscurité envahit tout: désespérés, il leur faut revenir au lac et sur la place. Ombure les attend. Mais Ombure est vieux, au lieu de deux hommes, il exige maintenant: «Vous me donnerez chaque jour deux jeunes filles en sacrifice.»

Et les Fâñ durent obéir et chaque jour amener deux jeunes filles à Ombure, deux jeunes filles peintes en rouge, reluisantes et frottées d'huile. C'est leur fête de mariage.

Elles pleurent et se lamentent, les filles des Fâñ; elles pleurent et se lamentent: c'est la fête des tristes fiançailles.

Elles pleurent et se lamentent le soir: le matin, elles ne pleurent ni se lamentent: d'elles n'entendent plus parler leurs mères: elles sont au fond du lac, dans la grotte où demeure Ombure: elles le servent et il en fait sa nourriture.

Mais un jour, il arriva ceci. La jeune fille qui devait être exposée le soir sur le bord du fleuve, la jeune fille dont le tour était venu, c'était l'enfant du chef, elle était jeune et elle était belle. Et, le soir, elle fut attachée sur le bord du lac avec sa compagne: la compagne ne revint pas, mais le lendemain, lorsque reparut le jour, la fille du chef était encore là. Ombure l'avait épargnée.

Aussi on l'appela: Aléna kiri (l'aurore a paru).

Mais neuf mois après, la fille du chef eut un enfant, un enfant mâle. En souvenir de sa naissance, ce garçon fut appelé Ngurangurane, le fils du crocodile.

Ngurangurane (Nganengane) était donc fils d'Ombure, le crocodile chef: ceci est la première histoire. Ngurangurane était né ainsi.

IIe La Mort d'Ombure.

Ngurangurane, l'enfant du crocodile Ombure et de la fille du chef, grandit, grandit, grandit chaque jour: d'enfant, il devient adolescent, d'adolescent il devient jeune homme. C'est alors le chef de son peuple. C'était un chef puissant et un très savant féticheur. Dans son cœur, il avait deux désirs: venger la mort du chef de sa race [1], du père de sa mère, et délivrer son peuple du tribut que levait sur lui le crocodile.

Ce qu'il fit dans ce but, le voici.

Dans la forêt, on trouve un arbre sacré, cela, vous le savez, et cet arbre, on l'appelle «palmier». Coupez un palmier: la sève coule, coule abondante, et si vous attendez deux ou trois jours, après l'avoir enfermée dans les vases de terre, vous aurez le dzâñ, la boisson qui rend le cœur joyeux. Cela, nous le savons maintenant, mais nos pères ne le savaient pas. Celui qui le leur a appris, c'est Ngurangurane, et le premier qui a bu le dzâñ, c'est Ombure, le crocodile chef. Qui avait fait connaître le dzâñ à Ngurangurane? C'était Ngonomane, la pierre fétiche que lui avait donnée sa mère [2].

---

[1] Ce point mériterait une note spéciale, car il pourrait amener à une constatation importante: en effet, si Ngurangurane reconnait comme chef de sa race le père de sa mère, on pourrait en arguer qu'à un moment donné de leur histoire, et précisément aux origines de la race, les Fâñ admettaient la famille maternelle comme la souche de la famille. Toutefois, à notre avis, cette conception serait fausse. Ngurangurane admet son grand'père maternel comme chef de sa race, parce que sa mère, de fait, n'a point été mariée dans une autre tribu. Il arrive fréquemment aujourd'hui encore que des jeunes filles ont un enfant. Loin d'être un déshonneur, c'est au contraire un honneur qui augmerte le prix de la jeune fille, en prouvant sa fécondité. Mais lorsqu'elle se marie, son enfant ne la suit pas; il appartient toujours à la tribu du père de la jeune fille, qui est considéré alors comme le vrai père de l'enfant. A défaut d'un père connu, c'est l'oncle maternel qui possèdera l'enfant, et tel est le cas pour Ngurangurane.

[2] Il est assez rare chez les Fâñ de trouver les pierres fétiches qui donnent ainsi certaines connaissances magiques. Cette croyance, signalée surtout dans les légendes, est assez curieuse. Il est à remarquer qu'on la trouve également chez les Indigènes de la Nouvelle Calédonie, avec les mêmes détails. Cf. Les Hypogées de l'Ile des Pins, par le R. P. Lambert, M. (M. C. et Imprimerie de la Mission — Nouméa).

Or, d'après l'avis de Ngonomane (= la fille a cessé d'être vierge: ce devait être un surnom d'Aléna kiri après son aventure), Ngurangurane fit ceci: «Apprêtez tous les vases de terre que vous possédez, tous, apportez-les dans ma case.» Il dit cela aux femmes: elles apportèrent donc tous les vases de terre qu'elles possédaient, et il y en avait beaucoup, beaucoup. «Allez toutes dans la forêt, leur dit-il encore, près du ruisseau de la terre à poterie et faites encore d'autres vases.» Et elles allèrent au ruisseau de la terre à poterie et firent des vases, beaucoup.

«Allons dans la forêt, dit-il aux hommes, allons, et vous couperez les arbres que je vous indiquerai.» Et ils allèrent tous ensemble avec les haches et les couteaux, et ils coupèrent les arbres que leur montra Ngurangurane. Ces arbres, c'étaient des palmiers. Et quand tous furent coupés, on recueillit la sève qui coulait abondante des blessures de la hache. Les vases furent apportés: ce furent les femmes qui firent cela, les vieux vases et les nouveaux, et quand tous furent là, tous on les remplit du dzâñ, et les femmes les rapportèrent au village. Tous les jours, Ngurangurane goûtait la liqueur: les hommes voulurent faire comme lui, mais cela il le leur interdit par un grand éki (défense). Un homme dit: «Mais Ngurangurane le fait: j'en boirai.» Et il en but, mais en secret, et la tête lui tourna aussitôt. Ngurangurane vint près de lui, et le tua d'un coup de fusil [1]. On jeta son corps sans sépulture pour avoir enfreint la défense et méprisé l'éki.

Trois jours après, Ngurangurane réunit ses hommes, les hommes et les femmes, et leur dit: «C'est le moment, prenez les vases et venez avec moi au rivage près du lac.» Ils prirent les vases et ils allèrent avec lui. Quand on fut sur les bords du lac, Ngurangurane ordonne ceci à ses hommes: «Traînez sur le bord tous les vases», et ils le firent. «Apportez l'argile que je vous ai envoyé chercher», dit-il encore aux femmes, et ainsi firent-elles. Et sur le bord du lac, avec l'argile fraîche, on construisit deux grands bassins, soigneusement battus avec les pieds, soigneusement lissés avec la paume des mains. Alors, dans les deux bassins, on verse tout le dzáń contenu dans les vases, sans en laisser une goutte: Ngurangurane commence un grand fétiche, et tous les vases sont ensuite brisés et jetés au lac, les deux captives attachées près des bassins, et tout le monde se retire au village.

[1] Exemple d'adaptation propre au conteur indigène: les fusils sont évidemment d'importation toute récente. Mais on n'y regarde pas de si près. Nul ne signala l'invraisemblance qui parut au contraire toute naturelle.

Ngurangurane demeure seul, caché près des bassins.

A l'heure accoutumée, le Crocodile sort de l'eau. Il se dirige vers les captives tremblantes de frayeur; mais, tout d'abord:

«Qu'est-ce ceci, dit-il en arrivant près des bassins, qu'est-ce ceci?»

Il goûte un peu du liquide. La liqueur lui paraît bonne, et il s'écrie à haute voix:

«Ceci est bon: dès demain j'ordonnerai aux Fáń de m'en fournir chaque jour.»

Et le Crocodile Ombure but le dzáń. Il le but jusqu'à la dernière goutte, oubliant les captives.

Lorsqu'il eut terminé, il chanta:

Mé mana ñu dzáń, dzáń za bo nlèm mvé,
Mé mana ñu dzáń.
Mé mana ñu dzáń, ma ñéÿe zo é nlèm wam,
Mé mana ñu dzáń.

J'ai bu le dzáń, la boisson qui rend le cœur content,
J'ai bu le dzáń.
J'ai bu le dzáń, mon cœur se réjouit,
J'ai bu le dzáń.

Nzue a zue bur bésésé, digéga, ézo ñi,
Mé ne nzue ošu osésé, mé ne Nzue Ombure.
Ngan ézo ñi, Nzue é ne ma,
Ombure wa zue médzim éti,
Ombure wa zue afan éti.
Nzue bur ba wux bésésé,
Ngan Ombure.

Le chef auquel tous obéissent, c'est moi,
Moi, le grand chef, moi, Ombure.
C'est moi, Ngan, c'est moi le chef,
Ombure est maître des eaux,
Ombure est maître des forêts.
C'est moi le chef auquel tous obéissent,
C'est moi, le chef.

J'ai bu le dzâń, la boisson qui rend le cœur content,
J'ai bu le dzâń.
J'ai bu le dzâń, mon cœur se réjouit,
J'ai bu le dzâń.

Il chante, et sur le sable, sans plus songer aux captifs, il s'endort, le cœur joyeux.

Ngurangurane s'approche aussitôt d'Ombure endormi; avec une forte corde, aidé des captives, il l'attache au poteau, puis brandissant avec force son javelot, il frappe l'animal endormi: sur les écailles épaisses, le javelot rebondit en arrière sans entamer le crocodile, et celui-ci, sans se réveiller, se secoue en disant: «Qu'est-ce ceci? un moustique m'a piqué.»

Ngurangurane prend sa hache, sa forte hache de pierre[1]; d'un coup formidable, il blesse l'animal endormi: la hache rebondit sans blesser l'animal; celui-ci commence à s'agiter: les deux captives s'enfuient épouvantées. Ngurangurane fait alors un puissant fétiche:

«Tonnerre, dit-il, Tonnerre, c'est toi que j'appelle, apporte-moi tes flèches.»

Et le tonnerre vient en éclatant. Mais quand il apprend qu'il doit tuer Ombure: «C'est ton père, s'écrie-t-il, et c'est mon maître,» et il s'enfuit épouvanté. Mais Aléna kiri vient au secours de son fils, et elle apporte ngonémane, la pierre fée. Et au nom de Ngonémane, Ngurangurane dit:

«Eclair, je t'ordonne de frapper.

Et l'éclair frappe, car désobéir, il ne le pouvait pas. A la tête, entre les yeux, il frappe Ombure, et Ombure demeure sur la place, foudroyé, mort. Celui qui l'a tué, c'est Ngurangurane, mais Ngurangurane ne l'a tué que grâce au secours de Ngonémane.

Et la fin de ce récit, la voilà. Ngurangurane retourne en hâte au village. «Vous tous, hommes du village, dit-il, vous tous, venez.» Et ils viennent tous sur les bords du lac Ombure est là gisant mort, immense. «Celui qui a tué le Crocodile Ombure, c'est moi, Ngurangurane, celui qui a vengé le chef de sa race, c'est moi; celui qui vous a délivrés, c'est moi, Ngurangurane.»

[1] Ici, le conteur reproduit évidemment l'ancien texte. Les Fáń n'ont plus aucun instrument de pierre, sinon le couteau cultuel de circoncion, et seulement dans les tribus du centre.

Tous se réjouirent, et autour du cadavre, on dansa le Fanki[1], la grande danse des funérailles: on dansa le Fanki pour apaiser l'esprit d'Ombure.

Et ceci, c'est la fin.

III° Le Culte du Crocodile.

Sur le bord du lac, le crocodile Ombure est étendu, et le lendemain, au matin, ce que fait Ngurangurane, le voici.

Il prend son grand couteau, le mfor akoż[2] qui ne sert qu'aux funérailles pour les sacrifices, et il ordonne à ses hommes de retourner le cadavre. Ils obéissent et retournent le cadavre. Ngurangurane fend alors la peau: il la fend depuis la gueule jusqu'à l'anus, il la fend en long, et par deux fois, il la fend en largeur: il la rabat encore de chaque côté; la chair est enlevée, mise sur le feu, tous les hommes ont leur part, chacun son morceau. A Ngurangurane, le cœur et la cervelle; aux chefs et aux vieillards, les parties nobles, et la langue, et les yeux; aux femmes et aux enfants les entrailles; chacun a son morceau, chacun a sa part. Ainsi nul ne pourra craindre[3].

Dans la peau desséchée et soigneusement recousue là où il le faut, Ngurangurane dispose alors des morceaux de bois pour en maintenir la courbure, et quand tout est prêt, Ngurangurane ordonne de la mettre sur le lac: elle flotte à la surface. Ngurangurane y monte, les pattes lui servent de pagaies, la queue flexible de gouvernail. Cà et là, il marche: à droite, à gauche, en arrière, en avant. Jusque là, les Fàń ne savaient pas ce que c'était qu'une pirogue. Comme Ngurangurane, le premier, avait fait avec la peau du crocodile, tel ils firent dans la suite en creusant des troncs d'arbre, mais celui qui leur apprit cet art, ce fut Ngurangurane, et les premières pirogues qui furent faites, on les fit et on les creusa comme il avait creusé le crocodile. A partir de ce moment, les Fàń allèrent sur

---

[1] On danse encore aujourd'hui le Fanki aux funérailles des chefs.

[2] Mfor akoż, c'est-à-dire couteau de pierre. On s'en sert encore pour la circoncision.

[3] En s'incorporant ainsi un morceau de la victime, on en devient partie intégrante, et l'esprit ne peut plus se venger sur un membre de la famille. Nous étudierons cette question en parlant du sacrifice.

le lac[1] et commencèrent à pêcher les gros poissons, car jusque là ils avaient peur d'Ombure et ne prenaient que le poisson des ruisseaux.

Mais ce n'est pas tout. Ngurangurane avait vengé sa race, et c'était son premier devoir. Mais il était aussi fils du crocodile, et pour cela, il ordonna les grandes fêtes des funérailles, le Fanki, les grandes fêtes qui apaisent les esprits des morts. Pendant trente fois trente jours, les femmes ont pleuré Ombure: pendant trente fois trente jours, soir et matin, elles ont fait retentir l'air des lamentations funéraires: pendant trente fois trente jours, les cheveux dénoués et remplis de terre, la figure et la poitrine striées de terre blanche[2] (mféma), elles ont chanté les louanges du père de Ngurangurane, Ombure.

Pendant trente lunaisons, l'esprit irrité d'Ombure a parcouru les villages, cherchant sa vengeance et poursuivant les vivants, mais partout il a trouvé sa propre chair[3]. (A mana yèn ñul zia.) Il ne peut se venger.

Tous les jours, le tamtam de mort retentit, les danseurs se succèdent, Ngurangurane préside à la cérémonie. Quand enfin le dernier jour a lui, de toutes parts, les hommes et les femmes sont réunis. Près du village, dans le bois voisin, Ngurangurane a fait enlever les arbres et disposé une place circulaire: les femmes apportent l'argile, et lui-même, le grand chef, de ses propres mains, il reproduit l'image de l'ancêtre: il façonne un énorme Ombure. On l'orne de blanc et de noir, de jaune et de rouge, et quand il est entièrement préparé, dans la tête, Ngurangurane introduit les os d'Ombure: autour de l'ancêtre, les danses ont recommencé, les danses circulaires. Toute la nuit, elles durent: jusqu'au matin, le tamtam retentit. Alors Ngurangurane s'approche seul: près d'Ombure, il a placé deux hommes, et l'un après l'autre il les immole, et le sang arrose Ombure. Près d'Ombure, il a placé deux femmes: il les immole, et le sang arrose Ombure. Les chairs sont placées près d'Ombure: près de sa tête, les têtes, près de son corps, les corps, près de ses pieds, les pieds. Et chacun prend sa part et se retire.

[1] Le mot eshû employé par le conteur pour désigner le lac signifie tout aussi bien marais, amas d'eau, débordement du fleuve.

[2] Le blanc et la terre blanche sont les couleurs du deuil.

[3] Allusion à la manducation du sacrifice: il ne pouvait donc se venger (v. note 3 p. 197).

A tous, Ngurangurane offre le cadeau des funérailles.

Quand tout est terminé, Ngurangurane ordonne ceci:

«Ainsi nous ferons chaque année, ainsi chaque année nous honorerons Ombure.»

Et les Fâñ, depuis ce temps-là, ont ainsi fait.

Et c'est pour cela que Ombure, sous la figure de Ngan, est encore aujourd'hui le mvamayôñ[1] des fils de Ngurangurane.

Ceci est la fin de cette histoire.

Dans une quatrième reprise, le conteur nous fait assister aux transformations, et à la mort de Ngurangurane mis à mort par un traître, mais cette partie ne se rapportant pas à notre cadre actuel, il serait inutile de la donner ici.

2° Survivances du culte totémique d'Ombure.

Avant de passer à la légende ou au mythe méké de l'Eléphant, notons que le mythe d'Ombure est encore aujourd'hui conservé. Indépendamment de la tribu Ebingan qui rend au crocodile un culte totémique, Ombure est reconnu dans toutes les tribus comme «génie des eaux». On l'appelle Mbure et Omure, parfois Omore: sous ce dernier nom, il est personnifié dans l'épouse du Ngil, dont nous aurons à nous préoccuper en parlant des sociétés secrètes.

Ce qui montre bien l'antiquité de ce mythe, c'est qu'on le rencontre également chez les nations voisines, Bésèx et Mpongwé, entre autres, ainsi que dans celles du groupe Ivili, il porte alors le nom d'Omwiri et est fort redouté comme génie des eaux.

Les Ivili lui attribuent une histoire qui se rapproche en bien des points de celle des Fâñ, et que, croyons-nous, ils leur ont empruntée. Tout au moins, on ne la retrouve pas chez les autres nations apparentées aux Ivili. Nous reviendrons à cette légende en parlant des origines lointaines du totem aquatique.

---

[1] Cette dernière phrase avait été omise jadis, faute de pouvoir en comprendre bien le sens, d'ailleurs fort obscur. Littéralement: Ngan (le crocodile) Mystère d'Ombure, se cache mvamayôñ Ngurangurane.

Il nous semble certain qu'on retrouve dans cette histoire d'Ombure des traces évidentes de culte totémique, et peut-être une des causes qui ont déterminé en bien des cas le culte du totem, à savoir la crainte, et en même temps le désir de s'assurer un puissant protecteur. Ce mythe ne nous paraît pas être un récit fictif ou inventé.

La légende de Ngurangurane nous semble en effet présenter trop de caractères historiques pour être rangée parmi les faits et récits de pure invention. Nous pensons bien, par l'ensemble des détails et la contexture du texte, avoir affaire à un récit vraiment historique, et, ce qui est bien à compter, l'opinion des Fâñ est unanime sur ce point. Ngurangurane, disent-ils tous, fut un de leurs ancêtres, un de leurs principaux chefs. Ce qu'il y a de singulier et ce qui démontre peut-être sa haute antiquité, c'est que nous n'avons retrouvé son nom dans aucune généalogie: il pourrait se faire aussi que Ngurangurane fût un simple surnom, donné en mémoire de la mort du Crocodile, car ce cas est fréquent. Les Fâñ qui portent de tels surnoms, soit glorieux, soit ironiques, ne le transmettent point à leurs descendants, et leur mébara n'en fait pas plus tard mention. Le nom est en effet pour eux une entité réelle, mais jamais le surnom ou même le nom d'adoption.

Quant à la légende d'Ombure, elle a été évidemment grossie à distance, soit que tout d'abord il s'agisse d'un crocodile monstrueux, et on en trouve dans les grands fleuves africains qui mesurent 7 mètres de long et plus, soit qu'il s'agisse d'une autre espèce de crocodile, de loutre ou de monstre, que les Fâñ m'ont affirmé exister encore et qu'ils nomment dżin. Nous en avons parlé plus haut. Quoiqu'il en soit de son existence, il paraît plus admissible d'admettre que cet Ombure fut tout simplement quelque monstre énorme, comme les eaux des grands Lacs ou du Nil ont dû en renfermer jadis. Les crocodiles d'aujourd'hui, avec leur carapace invulnérable aux balles, sont déjà très redoutés des Fâñ, dont les sagaies sont de peu d'effet sur pareille cuirasse, et l'approcher assez pour le tuer en l'atteignant à l'œil est le fait d'un chasseur particulièrement audacieux. Quant à l'attaquer dans son élément, comme les nègres de la Guyane ou de certains parties de l'Afrique le font sans hésiter, pas un Fâñ n'oserait s'y risquer.

Autour du mythe d'Ombure, se sont groupés beaucoup d'autres faits similaires, les uns de pure invention, les autres considérablement grossis: pareils mythes se retrouvent chez tous les peuples. et le Minotaure de Crète n'est pas au fond tellement différent d'Ombure avec la même offrande requise de jeunes gens et de jeunes filles. Autour des ravages exercés dans la tribu par quelque animal, se sont réunies peut-être les traditions de quelque conquérant célèbre, vainqueur des Fàń et qui leur aurait imposé le lourd tribut dont parle la légende. Certains faits presque contemporains sembleraient bien appuyer ce sentiment. Les voyageurs sont unanimes à rapporter les coutumes barbares de quelques potentats du Centre africain qui chaque jour ainsi faisaient servir sur leurs tables quelques esclaves immolés. Encore aujourd'hui le fait est fréquent au pays des Bondjos et dans les Sultanats du Haut Oubangui.

Mais plusieurs points plus intéressants sont à relever dans cette légende; ils nous prouvent qu'à une époque reculée, avant l'ère actuelle des généalogies, aux temps légendaires de la nation, celle-ci était déjà totémique: on mange le crocodile pour s'en incorporer la substance, et afin que son esprit errant, rencontrant sa propre chair, la protège, et contracte ainsi, même malgré lui, une parenté corporelle et spirituelle avec la tribu. On lui rend les sacrifices et les honneurs funèbres, mais Ngurangurane aura eu soin de «matérialiser» le crocodile esprit en plaçant les os d'Ombure dans la figuration en argile du même Ombure. On accomplit les rites d'expiation, mais aussi ceux-ci le font considérer comme un ancêtre de la tribu, et la parenté spirituelle du totem avec les hommes du clan est bien acquise par ce rite.

Non seulement la parenté spirituelle est acquise, mais bien encore la vraie parenté, puisque la naissance de Ngurangurane est attribuée au crocodile. De là le culte qui lui est rendu par ses descendants: le chef et sa famille auront les vrais liens de parenté: le clan aura la parenté spirituelle, d'où parenté totémique, comme elle est requise par les auteurs.

La légende d'Ombure, le crocodile chef, semble donc prouver l'existence du culte totémique à une époque très reculée de l'histoire des Fàń, et en réduisant le mythe à ses simples proportions, peut-être faudrait-il voir — et nous disons «peut-être», car on ne saurait être assez prudent dans ces déductions — peut-être faudrait-il y voir: 1° une des causes du culte totémique rendu au crocodile: à savoir l'abondance dangereuse de cet amphibie dans les fleuves des plateaux du Hᵗ Nil, première patrie des Fâñ.

2° Les causes de leurs premières migrations, c'est-à-dire le désir de trouver un pays plus propice, et peut-être aussi, après une première migration, les ravages causés de nouveau dans la tribu par les mêmes animaux, non moins abondants dans les lacs du Centre africain, ou les lacs du nord, Tchad et autres.

Au chapitre suivant, nous nous préoccuperons de l'origine possible du totémisme chez les Fâñ. Nous passons donc immédiatement des Bétsi aux Méké, chez lesquels nous trouvons à propos de l'éléphant une légende totémique d'un genre différent. Là, ce n'est pas l'Homme qui contracte une alliance avec l'Animal, et se crée une parenté nouvelle, mais bien l'Animal lui-même qui se place en maître de l'Homme et lui impose son pouvoir. Nous avons dit plus haut que cette légende existe dans le groupe méké: on la retrouve également, mais beaucoup plus dénaturée, dans le rameau bétsi; elle y est plutôt passée à l'état de fabliau que l'on raconte le soir, pour amuser les enfants. C'est du moins sous cette forme que nous l'avons entendue chez les Ye-vẽñ de la Rivière Tsini (affluent de la Mondah, au nord de Libreville). L'Eléphant y joue alors le rôle de l'ogre dans les contes de fées.

3° La légende totémique de l'Eléphant.

Parmi les légendes du cycle de l'Eléphant, il en est une qui paraît plutôt se rapprocher de celle du Crocodile et se rapporter également aux origines de la race. Elle me fut d'ailleurs donnée pour telle dans la tribu des Esingon, dans les lacs de l'Ogowé. Je l'ai également retrouvée dans la tribu Ebimvul, et ces deux tribus, toutes les deux du rameau méké, la donnaient pour expliquer le culte tribal du mvamayôñ. Nous en donnons ici une transcription littérale.

En ce temps-là, et ce temps-là est très-loin, on ne saurait penser plus loin, les hommes (c'est-à-dire les Fâñ) habitaient tous ensemble dans un grand village, et les animaux faisaient de même, chacun dans son village, chacun suivant sa race; les antilopes étaient avec les antilopes, les sangliers avec les sangliers, les tigres avec les tigres, les singes avec les singes:

Le narrateur.

Bém - vul bé mbe né bém - vul dzal a - vo - ri.

Les antilopes elles étaient avec les antilopes village unique.

Le chœur.

Bé - mvul bé mbe né bé - mvul dzal a - vo - ri.

Mais dans chaque village, pour les commander, il y avait un éléphant, et les éléphants étaient ainsi dispersés, chaque famille d'éléphants commandant un village différent: le chef pour eux tous, le père éléphant[1], habitait seul dans la forêt, mais quand il y avait palabre, tous comparaissaient devant lui et il jugeait bien. Quand le père éléphant pensait que son temps était venu, il remettait son esprit à son successeur et disparaissait. Jamais, jamais plus on ne le revoyait, mais son esprit demeurait vivant: Nsissim ñniñéa.

Les hommes habitaient à part, loin, loin dans la forêt, et pas un animal ne demeurait avec eux, pas un, même le chien. Pour les poules, je n'en sais rien, mais je pense que les poules étaient aussi avec les autres oiseaux.

Les hommes étaient à part: ils mangeaient les fruits de la forêt, mais souvent aussi ils tuaient des animaux pour en manger la chair, et c'étaient alors des palabres qui ne finissaient jamais. Les animaux venaient se plaindre à l'éléphant: celui-ci ordonnait aux hommes de venir, mais ils ne venaient point et continuaient à tuer les animaux.

Il y eut tant de plaintes contre les hommes que l'éléphant dit à la fin: «Puisqu'ils ne peuvent pas venir, j'irai à leur village.» Il fit ses provisions de voyage, et partit pour aller au village des hommes. Mais il fallait d'abord trouver ce village, car les hommes l'avaient bien caché, et c'était difficile. L'éléphant était en marche: sur son chemin, il rencontre d'abord le village des tigres:

[1] Ainsi, dans le Peuple de la Jungle, de RUDYARD KIPLING, Tha, le Premier Eléphant, est roi et maître des animaux.

«Où vas-tu, père éléphant? —

Je vais au village des hommes pour juger leur palabre avec vous. —

C'est une très bonne idée. Nous irons avec toi. —

Non, ils seraient trop effrayés: j'aime mieux y aller seul.» —

Et l'éléphant disait cela parce qu'il savait bien que Nzame a créé les hommes et que le chef des hommes était fils de Nzame comme lui.

«Eh! bien, tu iras seul, père éléphant, mais repose-toi un jour à notre village.»

Et l'éléphant accepta, parce qu'il était bien reçu, et il demeura deux jours entiers au village des tigres. Il serait même resté trois jours et plus, mais il n'y avait plus rien à manger.

Il continue donc son chemin, et arrive au village des antilopes. Là encore, on lui fait une grande fête.

«Et où allez-vous ainsi, père éléphant? —

Je vais au village des hommes, pour juger leurs palabres, car je suis fatigué «avec» eux. —

C'est une très bonne idée: nous irons avec vous. —

Non, je préfère y aller seul, car peut-être, pendant la nuit, ils vous tueraient!

Et les antilopes répondirent: «C'est bien, mais au moins reposez-vous deux jours avec nous.»

Et le père éléphant accepte volontiers, car les antilopes étaient très-bonnes pour lui, et il resta deux jours entiers au village des antilopes. Il serait même resté trois jours et plus, mais il ne restait plus rien à manger, et il avait faim.

Le narrateur.

E-sa Nzoẋ a wuẋ nzè, nzè ndèn ab'm é-ti, oh! E-sa Nzoẋ' oh!

Père éléphant il sent faim, faim grande ventre dans, oh! Père éléphant oh!

Le chœur.

E-sa Nzoẋ a wuẋ nzè, nzè ndèn ab'm é-ti, oh! E-sa Nzoẋ' oh!

Père éléphant se rend donc au village des sangliers [1].

Et ainsi de village en village, l'éléphant restait en route.

Depuis longtemps cependant, le chef des hommes, qui souvent consultait l'eyèn mvul (sorte de fétiche, corne d'antilope avec un miroir enchâssé au bout), avait appris le voyage de l'éléphant, et pourquoi il voulait venir au village des hommes. Cela, lui, ne le voulait pas. Et dans tous les sentiers qui aboutissaient à son village, depuis bien loin, bien loin, avec tous les hommes, et avec les femmes pour emporter la terre, il creuse de grandes fosses, avec des pieux pointus au fond; trois, quatre, cinq pièges se suivaient, à une heure, deux heures, trois heures de marche. Et quand le plus éloigné fut fini, il dit à ses hommes:

«Allez couper du manioc.»

Et les hommes allèrent couper du manioc.

«Jetez les tiges pour recouvrir bien la fosse.»

Et les hommes disposèrent bien les tiges, et quelques jours après, elles repoussaient, et on ne voyait plus le bois. Et à une heure de marche de là, sur le même sentier, le chef des hommes fait creuser une autre fosse. Et il dit à ses hommes:

«Allez me chercher des tiges de patates.»

Ils y allèrent, et ils revinrent avec beaucoup de tiges de patates. Et le chef leur dit:

«Disposez ces tiges sur la fosse.»

Ils les disposèrent bien, de sorte que l'on ne voyait plus rien de la fosse.

Et il fit ainsi creuser sur le sentier cinq fosses différentes, chacune avec une plante différente. Et sur chaque sentier qui conduisait à son village, il fit ainsi creuser cinq fosses. Et ce n'est pas tout encore: il y a bien autre chose. Le chef des hommes était très malin! Il avait pensé ainsi dans son esprit: «Si l'éléphant

[1] Comme nous l'avons déjà noté, le Noir semble estimer davantage la quantité que la qualité ou la variété des incidents. Le père éléphant visite ainsi un grand nombre de villages d'animaux et le même dialogue se reproduit sans variantes dans le récit. Dans le récit, mais non dans le conteur, car, et c'est là son grand succès, dès qu'il arrive à un autre village d'animaux, son ton et son allure changent et il imite de son mieux l'animal qu'il dépeint: les rires approbateurs de l'assistance ou leur silence dédaigneux témoignent de son succès, ou de son peu de talent.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

voit un tas de manioc dans le chemin, il se défiera, car il est rusé!» Et dans le sentier, loin, loin, à quatre, cinq places différentes, il fait jeter du manioc, mais, dessous, il n'y avait pas de fosse; et puis plus loin, après la première fosse, il fait jeter du manioc encore, et puis des patates, et puis les autres plantes. Il y en avait tout le long du chemin!

Père éléphant était donc en route pour aller au village des hommes. Et voici que sur le chemin, il rencontre un tas de manioc: il le retourne avec sa trompe, le retourne encore, car il était très rusé: mais il ne trouve rien de suspect. «C'est, dit-il, un cadeau de mes enfants: ils ont voulu me préparer de la nourriture dans le chemin: ils sont très bons.» — Et comme il se défiait encore un peu, il mange seulement un petit morceau de manioc. Il était excellent: il en mange un second, puis tout le tas, il n'y en avait pas beaucoup, et Père éléphant était très gros, bien plus gros que les éléphants de maintenant. Un peu plus loin, nouveau tas de manioc. Père éléphant s'en approche encore avec précaution, puis en croque un petit morceau: rien de suspect. «Ah! dit-il, les excellents enfants!» et il mange tout le tas, car Père éléphant était gros, et le tas petit. Et Père éléphant avait beaucoup, beaucoup marché! Et le soir venait, quand, dans le sentier, il voit un nouveau tas de manioc; comme il avait grand faim, il se précipite.

Kah! C'était juste le trou de la fosse! Et comme Père éléphant courait bien vite, il tombe la tête la première sur le pieu pointu. Et ce fut bon pour lui! Car, sans cela, le pieu lui eût percé le ventre, et il était mort. Mais sa tête brisa le pieu. Et toute la nuit, Père éléphant demeura au fond du trou, criant et gémissant: «Je suis mort! Mé mvua.» Mais au matin, le Chef des hommes, qui était là tout près avec ses guerriers, vient sur le bord du trou:

«Tiens, Imè! qu'est-ce ceci, dit-il! Comment? c'est Père éléphant! Oh! qui a pu le faire tomber ici!» Et prompt, il jette la terre et les branches dans le trou; mais quand il voit que la fosse est presque comblée, et que l'éléphant est près de sortir, au plus vite, il s'esquive avec tous ses hommes. Le Père éléphant cependant sort de son trou, et tout meurtri, tout froissé, il continue son chemin, mais la tête lui faisait très mal, et ses yeux étaient remplis de terre, et il avait peine à marcher! Aussi, quelques pas plus loin, quand il rencontre les patates douces, il s'arrête et regarde, puis s'avance avec précaution; il regarde et fait un pas, il regarde et fait un pas, il arrive tout près, rien, et comme il avait grand faim, il mange . . .

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

(Nous ne suivrons pas le conteur noir dans le long développement des aventures de Père éléphant. Comme on le conçoit facilement, il tombe successivement dans chaque piège, et chaque fois l'homme l'en retire. C'est quand il arrive au dernier, qu'il a surmonté l'obstacle des fosses que, juste, il s'arrête, découragé, et veut se rendre au village des hommes par un autre sentier . . . où il rencontre immédiatement les mêmes obstacles, les mêmes chutes et les mêmes péripéties. Aussi, finalement, retourne-t-il à son village pour essayer des moyens magiques. Ce n'est pas la partie la moins curieuse de son épopée, si l'on peut employer ce mot: dans ce terrain des «fées», le conteur noir laisse libre cours à son imagination et s'en donne à cœur joie. Mais, disons-le en passant, ce qu'il y a de plus intéressant à observer, c'est le conteur, identifié avec son récit, et qui, si bien, sait reproduire la mimique de ce pauvre Père éléphant, empêtré dans sa fosse. Enfin, après maints détails, Père éléphant, ayant fait à la fois appel à ses grands fétiches et à tous les autres éléphants, renverse les obstacles et parvient enfin au village des hommes. Il arrive sur la grande place; il n'y avait plus personne! Mais, sur son ordre, tous les autres animaux se mettent en campagne et sont chargés de ramener les hommes. Les singes les poursuivent dans les arbres, les sangliers et les tigres dans la forêt, les oiseaux dénoncent leur retraite, les serpents les mordent dans les herbes, il faut revenir se faire juger. La palabre est longue et l'homme se défend habilement: on croirait parfois entendre maître Renard de notre roman du Moyen âge. Enfin, Maître éléphant prononce la sentence: on laissera vivre les hommes, mais on les punira.

Reprenons le récit du conteur noir, en l'abrégeant cependant, car c'est ici, pour le point spécial qui nous occupe maintenant, l'endroit le plus typique).

Les hommes étaient donc devant Père éléphant, et le Chef des hommes avait grande frayeur en son cœur, car il voyait venir la mort. Il avait «froid», car qui a vu derrière la mort?

La mort est comme la lune. Qui a vu l'autre côté?

Le Chef des hommes avait froid! Mais Père éléphant dit: «Tu avoues donc ton péché?» —

Et le Chef des hommes répondit: «Je l'avoue! —

Alors, maintenant, tu vois la mort? —

Oh! Père éléphant, je suis petit et tu es fort. Pardon! Esa Nzoẋ, oh! ngongol, oh!» —

Et le Père éléphant répondit: «C'est vrai, je suis fort et tu es faible, mais Nzame t'a créé chef. Je te pardonnerai donc.»

Et le Chef des hommes répondit: «Merci (abora = grâce).» Et il sentit son cœur content.

Mais le Chef des tigres s'avance furieux: «Père éléphant, tu ne parles pas bien. Les hommes ont tué mon frère: je veux ma vengeance.» Et le Père éléphant répondit: «C'est vrai: il te doit payer vengeance.» Et l'homme paya les cadeaux au tigre. Et l'éléphant dit alors: «Maintenant, vous allez «faire frères» et la dispute sera finie.» Le Chef des hommes appela son frère et lui dit: «Fais l'échange du sang avec le tigre.» Et le Chef des tigres dit à son frère: «Fais l'échange du sang avec l'homme.» L'homme fit l'échange du sang, et le tigre fit l'échange du sang, et ils demeurèrent frères dans un même village.

Mais le Chef des aigles s'avança à son tour et fit la même palabre, et le Chef des sangliers, et celui des gorilles, et beaucoup d'autres, mais ils firent l'échange du sang, et la palabre fut terminée.

Et quand toutes les palabres furent ainsi réglées, le Chef éléphant dit à son tour: «Je veux faire frère avec le Chef des hommes.» On tua donc un cabri, car celui-là n'avait pas fait frère: il était esclave de l'homme; on tua un gros cabri mâle (miaẋ), et Père éléphant et Père des hommes firent frères. Père éléphant connut les fétiches de Père des hommes, et Père des hommes connut les fétiches de Père des éléphants. Et depuis ce temps-là, Père éléphant est devenu ototore des hommes, et c'est pour cela qu'on l'honore beaucoup. Ceux qui ne le font pas, ce sont les «sauvages». Amana. Ceci est la fin.

Et mon interprète Fidèle Békale, de la tribu des Mékux, entendant avec moi ce récit que sa mémoire étonnante lui permettait de me redire presque textuellement le lendemain, ajoutait: «Père, dans ma tribu (rameau Osyeba), c'est la même chose. Tous les «païens» disent que lorsque le chef de nos tribus vient à mourir, son âme (khun) erre pendant quelque temps, puis elle va «s'incarner» dans un éléphant, et le fait vivre longtemps, longtemps. Ces éléphants-là, on les reconnaît bien, parce qu'ils sont plus blancs que les autres, et souvent aussi, ils viennent près des villages. Pendant la nuit, leurs âmes s'échappent et viennent trouver l'âme d'un de leurs enfants restés au village, et elles lui disent de venir bien vite à tel endroit, qu'il trouvera des éléphants. Et le chef se lève, appelle ses hommes, et ils partent vers l'endroit désigné, et ils tuent les éléphants que »l'ancêtre» leur a amené, mais ils ont bien soin de ne pas blesser Esa nzoẋ[1]: ce serait tuer la tribu.»

Mon Fidèle, bien que chrétien, mais assez ignorant, avouons-le, m'avait l'air encore quelque peu convaincu de la réalité de ces faits; pour lui, me disait-il, il ne voyait pas pourquoi l'âme d'un païen n'irait pas commencer son enfer dans le corps d'une bête! — J'ai pu m'assurer que cette croyance actuelle, sorte de métempsycose, était en effet générale: après leur mort, dans certaines circonstances données, quelques hommes devenaient ainsi éléphants, mais surtout tigres, serpents ou vautours; c'était alors dans un but malfaisant, soit qu'ils fussent morts «sorciers» ou «mangeurs de cœur, vampires», soit qu'ils eussent été privés des sacrifices funéraires[2].

Pour en revenir à notre légende de l'éléphant, bien qu'elle diffère de celle du crocodile, elle s'en rapproche cependant comme idée et comme dénouement. On pourrait dire en somme que, dans un cas, c'est malgré tous les efforts de Ngurangurane, la prédominance de l'animal sur l'homme, jusqu'à la dernière épreuve, où l'animal est enfin vaincu; dans l'autre cas, au contraire, c'est la prédominance de l'homme sur la bête, de l'homme des forêts réduit à ses propres forces, jusqu'au résultat final où il est à peine vaincu, mais prend aussitôt sa revanche. Et la fin en définitive est la même: l'alliance étroite entre l'homme et l'animal, alliance de parenté réelle dans un cas, de parenté fictive dans l'autre; elle crée pour les descendants une parenté réelle, et aussi une protection réelle, et non pas feinte. Nous verrons un peu plus loin ce point particulier, en parlant du respect du totem.

[1] C'est-à-dire l'Eléphant ancêtre.

[2] Nous verrons ce point en parlant du Nagual.

D'après les légendes et récits de la race, telle serait donc l'origine du totem chez nos Fâñ; il semblerait bien qu'ils se montreraient ainsi partisans d'une filiation réelle, et non pas seulement spirituelle. Ces légendes paraissent au premier abord contredire ce que nous avons dit plus haut de la différence essentielle entre l'ésayôñ et le mvamayôñ. Cependant, on voit malgré tout la dissemblance qui, d'après les légendes, s'établit entre les deux ancêtres: l'ésayôñ est le père direct: le mvamayôñ est pour ainsi dire «introduit». Dans cette alliance ou échange de sang, le Fâñ recherche surtout à s'assimiler des qualités qu'il sent bien ne pas posséder lui-même, et à s'assurer une protection efficace contre les dangers mystérieux de la grande forêt. Mieux que personne, il en connaît les embûches et craint les pièges qui sans cesse se creusent sous ses pas. Il voit l'animal les éviter sans peine, il le croit tout au moins, et il envie leur sort. De là, à tenter de s'assimiler leurs qualités, il n'y a qu'un pas; l'échange du sang le réalisait pour l'homme: pourquoi ne pas essayer aussi bien avec l'animal? il l'a fait, et il a confiance en la protection de son mvamayôñ. A-t-il toujours tort? Souvent, au contraire, nous croyons qu'il a raison, et bien des cas sont là pour le prouver. Au respect du totem, nous examinerons cette question.

c) Survivances actuelles du culte du crocodile et de l'éléphant.

Nous avons parlé précédemment du totem national, et exposé comment on pourrait en quelque sorte reconnaître comme tel, soit le crocodile, soit l'éléphant, l'un plus spécial aux Méké, l'autre aux Bétsi. Nous avons dit, en même temps, comment, dans la pratique, chaque tribu et chaque clan, voir même chaque famille et chaque individu, ayant son mvame tutélaire, c'est celui-ci qui l'emporte et reçoit les hommages cultuels, suivant les différentes circonstances. C'est même ce qui a dû déterminer peu à peu la déchéance du totem national: chaque chef s'adressant de préférence à son totem de tribu ou de clan. Lorsqu'il s'agissait de guerres intestines, le fait était d'ailleurs très naturel; chaque chef accordait d'instinct beaucoup plus de désir de lui être utile, sinon de force vraiment intrinsèque, à son propre mvamayôń tribal, qu'au mvamayôń de la nation entière. Chaque clan pouvait en effet invoquer celui-ci avec des chances égales et des droit égaux à être protégé, ce qui ne pouvait laisser que de mettre le mvamayôń tribal dans un cruel embarras!

Dans une légende ou fabliau d'allure assez ironique, un conteur fâń mettait ainsi le mvamayôń national dans cette situation délicate; c'est une preuve, en passant, que tout en ayant grand peur, au fond, de son totem, et en accomplissant scrupuleusement, lorsque la chose est requise, les prescriptions du rite, le Fâń n'a nulle crainte de se montrer, en paroles, assez irrespectueux de son mvamayôń. S'il le faut, on l'apaisera par les sacrifices nécessaires.

Afin de ne pas allonger indéfiniment le cadre de cette Etude, nous donnons simplement l'esquisse de ce fabliau, en retranchant tous les détails inutiles et ne laissant que les plus caractéristiques.

«Ce jour-là donc, nous disait le conteur, le vieil Etûtû, chef des Esamvuń, aux sources de l'Aïna, ce jour-là donc, l'éléphant était dans sa case, et son cœur était très content, parce que, depuis deux jours, aucun de ses enfants n'était venu devant lui pour faire régler des palabres. Aussi il avait même un peu peur qu'ils ne fussent tous morts (sic!).

Il était donc assis tranquillement devant sa case et n'avait aucune pensée dans son cœur, quand soudain parurent à la fois devant lui l'envoyé du clan des tigres et l'envoyé du clan des léopards; parlant tous les deux à la fois, ils s'écrièrent: «Père éléphant, père éléphant, ouvre tes oreilles.» Et père éléphant répliqua: «Mes oreilles sont ouvertes, je vous entends fort bien, mais ne faites pas tant de «misères.» Toi, tigre, parle, et toi, léopard, tais-toi.»

Mais le tigre et le léopard, sans tenir aucun compte des paroles de l'éléphant, et se regardant avec des yeux terribles, s'écrièrent tous deux ensemble:

«Le tigre-clan veut faire la guerre et nous manger tous.»

«Le léopard-clan veut faire la guerre et nous manger tous.» Mais nous ne le souffrirons pas, car certainement, c'est nous qui avons raison, et toi, père éléphant, toi qui es notre étotore (c'est-à-dire mvamayôñ), tu ne peux souffrir pareille injustice.»

Mais le père éléphant leur donnant à chacun un grand coup de trompe, leur imposa silence à tous deux, puis dit:

«Toi, tigre, parle le premier: qu'y a-t-il?»

Et le tigre prend la parole, après avoir mis la poudre sur son front [1].

«Voici donc, père éléphant, dit le tigre; nous étions en paix avec ces gens-là! Mais comment garder la paix avec des sauvages! Impossible. Akoẋ da tobe akoẋ, Mvul mvul, ké yire munga. = La pierre demeure pierre, l'antilope, l'antilope. Ne frappe pas ta femme [2]. Dans le chemin que nous suivions pour aller à la chasse, ils ont donc creusé une fosse profonde, avec un pieu pointu au milieu, et nos chasseurs, en voulant courir après le gibier, sont tombés dans la fosse et s'y sont empalés. Deux des nôtres sont ainsi tombés.

---

[1] Allusion à un usage que l'on retrouve encore aujourd'hui: lorsque, dans une palabre particulièrement importante, un Fâñ veut mettre de son côté toutes les conditions de succès, il a soin de se prémunir d'avance, dans un petit sachet, d'un peu de poudre blanche provenant des os calcinés d'un sacrifice fait aux ancêtres. Cette poudre contient également un petit fragment d'os du crâne de l'ancêtre immédiat. Avant de parler, l'orateur touche la cendre du doigt et s'en met sur le front, sur la bouche et sur la gorge. Il veut s'assurer ainsi, pour bien parler, bien penser, et bien dire, la protection des ancêtres. Un Administrateur du district devant lequel, en ma présence d'ailleurs accidentelle, comparaissaient ainsi deux Fâñ qui lui apportaient un litige à juger, remarqua ce geste; il demanda à celui qui venait de le faire s'il était Chrétien, et s'il faisait son signe de croix, ajoutant d'ailleurs avec une raillerie non déguisée: «Ton signe de croix, mon garçon, n'y fera ni chaud ni froid. Si tu as raison, tu auras raison; si tu as tort, tu auras tort. Et gare à toi!» J'expliquai à l'Administrateur que l'individu, loin d'être un Chrétien, invoquait au contraire les mânes de ses ancêtres. Et les railleries redoublèrent devant un acte, en somme parfaitement compréhensible, et ne prêtant, ce me semble, nullement à rire! Ceci soit dit en passant pour faire comprendre combien, avec raison, les Noirs se montrent réservés sur leur religion devant les Européens, quand ils ont subi leurs moqueries ou entendu seulement parler de leur esprit . . . douteux.

[2] C'est-à-dire ne la frappe pas pour la faire changer de nature, tu n'y arriverais pas.

Nze a dige é yô, khul' a si. Le tigre regarde en haut, la tortue à terre[1], interrompt le léopard.

Le tigre veut se jeter sur le léopard, mais père éléphant, qui veille, lui donne un bon coup de trompe: Tô! tô: — puis:

«Continue, tigre, et sois calme.»

«Donc, père éléphant, deux de nos «hommes» sont tombés dans les fosses, où ils sont morts, et pendant la nuit, les léopards sont venus, et ils les ont enlevés, portés à leur village: les femmes leur ont arraché les moustaches, et après les avoir grillés, on les a mangés. Ceci se passait hier. Justice. (Coupe la palabre.) D'ailleurs, voici que j'ai apporté avec moi un cabri . . .»

«Bien, dit père éléphant, j'ai compris ton affaire.» Et appelant sa femme: «Prends ce cabri, lui dit-il, et réunis-le au troupeau.» Et sa femme vint, et fit comme père éléphant avait commandé.

«Bien, dit père éléphant, à ton tour, léopard, et dis-moi ton affaire.»

«Voici donc, père éléphant, dit le léopard; nous étions en paix avec ces gens-là! Mais comment garder la paix avec des sauvages! Impossible. Abo né akhul, méki, faÿelege. Mets ta main dans la patte d'un tigre, il t'en cuira[2]. Gare à toi.

Dans le chemin que nous suivions pour aller à la chasse, ces tigres ont donc creusé des fosses profondes: ils ont placé au fond des pieux pointus, et bien couvert la fosse: nos hommes sont passés par là, mais ils ne sont pas comme les tigres: ils regardent à terre, ils ont aperçu les pièges, et ils les ont évités. Mais les tigres, voyant que la ruse ne servait de rien avec nous, ont attendu nos hommes dans le chemin, et ils en ont tué un; puis la nuit, ils sont venus en se cachant dans notre village, ils ont brisé la porte d'une case, et se sont sauvés en nous emportant deux femmes.»

«Où sont ces femmes? dit père éléphant.

«Au village des tigres.

«Est-ce vrai, tigre?

---

[1] C'est-à-dire le tigre est sans réflexion; la tortue, au contraire, médite. Dans tout le folklore fàñ, la tortue représente les personnes sensées, et le tigre, les étourdis.

[2] Littér. Main et patte, sang, c'est-à-dire, évite ce voisinage.

«Oui, père éléphant, mais nous avons pris ces femmes à cause de nos morts.

«Bien, dit père éléphant, les léopards ont donc tué deux hommes; les tigres, un homme et pris deux femmes. C'est la même chose. Qu'ils les gardent. Mais il reste une chose. Quel est celui qui a commencé?

«Les léopards, c'est clair, dit le tigre.

«Les tigres, c'est clair, dit le léopard! Mais j'avais oublié une chose, père éléphant, je t'apporte un cabri . . .

«C'est bien, dit père éléphant, je pensais justement que tu «faisais menteur!» [1]

«Mais voici également une poule, père éléphant, dit le tigre.

«Voici de plus une poule, père éléphant, dit le léopard.

Et les cadeaux continuèrent encore; père éléphant était très content dans son cœur! Et quand ils eurent donné, l'un et l'autre, tout ce qu'ils avaient apporté et promis bien d'autres choses encore, père éléphant leur parla ainsi:

«Ecoutez, toi, tigre, et toi, léopard. Vous m'avez donné beaucoup de choses, et c'est bien. Vous m'en avez promis beaucoup, et c'est mieux. Maintenant, je vais «couper votre palabre». Vous autres, tigres, vous avez eu tort de tuer un homme aux léopards et de leur prendre deux femmes: vous autres, léopards, vous avez eu tort de tuer deux hommes aux tigres. Mais moi, je suis votre père protecteur mvamayôñ. Si je vous tue, vous tigres, je tue mes enfants: si je vous tue, vous léopards, je tuerai mes enfants. Cela n'est pas possible. Qui donc m'apporterait encore des cadeaux! Allez-vous en tous les deux: dites aux gens de votre village de ne pas aller dans les mêmes chemins, et partez. Je suis très content de vous, je suis votre père.»

Et le père éléphant leur donna un coup avec sa trompe, en répétant: «Kâña mvoÿe, allez sains et saufs.»

Et le vieil Etûtû me tirait bien la morale de cette histoire: «Un mvamayôñ comme cela et une pierre, c'est la même chose!» Mais ajoutait-il philosophiquement: Ntè, ntè! les palabres sont les palabres! (Il en faut pour nourrir les juges!)

[1] Idiotisme du fañ, c'est-à-dire: tu disais des mensonges.

Quant à parler ainsi de son propre étotore, mon vieil Etûtû ne l'aurait jamais osé: il eût craint un châtiment immédiat; il n'aurait d'ailleurs pas manqué de le voir dans le premier accident qui lui serait arrivé.

Ce fabliau, dont nous avons seulement esquissé les principaux traits, en élaguant tous les détails inutiles, montre bien, au fond, la déchéance nécessaire du totem national. A l'invoquer tous, chacun des implorants perd son temps . . . et son argent! Néanmoins, le culte du crocodile et de l'éléphant est resté vivace dans la nation, tout au moins en certaines circonstances. Evidemment, nous mettons ici complètement de côté les circonstances ordinaires de la vie de tribu ou de clan, où pour des raisons particulières ou intrinsèques, ces deux mvamayôñ sont invoqués; tels sont, en première ligne, les deux tribus ou clans où, soit l'éléphant, soit le crocodile, sont restés comme totem tribal. Ils rentrent alors dans la condition ordinaire du totem tribal dont nous avons parlé plus haut. Les sociétés secrètes qui ont adopté ces deux totems comme mvamayôñ particuliers sont également hors de cause.

Parmi les traces aujourd'hui survivantes du culte général ancien de l'éléphant et du crocodile, nous en choisirons cinq qui sont demeurées beaucoup plus vivaces et plus cultuelles. Elles sont intimement liées au phénomène religieux dont elles forment une manifestation, et on les retrouve dans toutes les tribus fàñ. Il est cependant assez difficile de les pénétrer, et surtout d'en saisir le sens, non pas en lui-même à proprement parler, car il est assez clair, mais surtout parcequ'il demeure profondément mêlé ou uni avec les cérémonies du culte des ancêtres. Presque toutes les manifestations totémiques, de quelque genre qu'elles soient, sont dans ce cas.

Les pages qui vont suivre eussent peut-être été mieux à leur place en parlant du totem national. Nous les avons rejetées cependant ici à cause des deux légendes que nous avons données, la légende du crocodile Ombure, et la légende de l'éléphant; elles permettront de les mieux comprendre; de plus, dans ces survivances, le totem national, bien qu'on en retrouve les vestiges, n'existe pas en tant que tel. La nation n'est pas constituée en nation: chaque tribu forme un tout homogène[1] et autonome; elle vit de sa vie propre, n'ayant avec les autres tribus d'autres liens que ceux assez vagues d'une origine et d'une langue communes.

De ces cinq traces, les trois premières se rapportent au culte du crocodile et de l'éléphant. Ces trois «survivances» du culte général sont: l'ékima, le nzoɔ́ békun, et le nzoɔ́ ba kuŷa.

L'ékima et le nzoɔ́ békun se rapportent au culte de l'éléphant, et le nzoɔ́ ba kuŷa au culte du crocodile.

Les deux autres, l'Edzû bitotore et les Tatouages, se rapportent au culte général totémique.

Nous ajouterons enfin un sixième paragraphe, le biyéma bétshit, qui ne fait pas partie de ces survivances, mais avec lequel il importe de ne pas les confondre, non plus qu'avec les rites du totem.

1° L'Ekima.

Lorsque nous aurons terminé la longue question de l'antiquité du totem, nous devrons envisager le totem «matérialisé» ou concrétisé en une représentation effective et surtout portative. Ce totem matérialisé est réuni avec un certain nombre d'objets qui se rapportent au culte des ancêtres, car les deux cultes se présentent presque toujours mêlés et unis. Il porte dans son ensemble le nom suggestif d'akamayôñ, c'est-à-dire «ce qui va avec la tribu», et constitue l'objet abrégé, mais nécessaire, auquel s'adresse le culte tribal.

En parlant de l'akamayôñ ou réunion des objets qui accompagnent le mvamayôñ ou en font partie intégrante, nous remarquerons la présence d'une sorte de sifflet nommé ékima. Le chef le porte suspendu à l'extrémité du baudrier de peau de tigre qui lui barre la poitrine. Il ne se sert de l'ékima que dans des cas spéciaux et particulièrement graves.

[1] Soit dit en passant, c'est cette solitude de chaque tribu qui assure le pouvoir européen. Le jour où les Fân seront groupés sous un seul chef, la domination européenne se verra balayée du coup; un chef du Congo nord a essayé, il y a une dizaine d'années, de réaliser cette union. Il avait déjà entraîné à sa suite de nombreuses tribus quand il fut tué par une de ses femmes.

Ainsi, dans le combat, le chef voit ses guerriers se débander ou prendre la fuite; il saisit aussitôt d'une main le mvamayôń, et de l'autre l'ékima, et siffle par trois fois: par là il appelle les esprits protecteurs de la tribu et ranime le courage de ses guerriers effrayés. Quand l'ékima résonne ainsi, l'appel s'adresse bien au mvamayôń ou au protecteur de la tribu, protecteur actuel. Cependant, d'après les dires assez contradictoires des indigènes, nous ne saurions affirmer s'il en est toujours de la sorte, et si l'ékima ne continue pas, comme jadis, à faire appel au secours de l'éléphant protecteur, dans le corps duquel réside l'esprit des anciens chefs de la race.

Du moins, un très vieux chant, que l'on retrouve dans toutes les tribus, semble en faire foi. C'est, en tout cas, un témoin précieux, et à ce point de vue, il trouve ici sa place toute naturelle. Ce morceau est connu sous le nom de «Chant de l'ékima».

Lorsque parfois, dans les villages, un conteur le donne, il le chante ainsi:

Chant de l'ékima.

Chanteur:	Ekima kom	Le sifflet de guerre retentit,
	Nzoż akom [1]	Appel de l'éléphant,
	Wôń amare	L'effroi de la fuite [2],
	Amare wôń	Fuite de l'effroi [3],
	Abora nzoż, oh!	Merci à l'éléphant.
Chœur:	Abora nzoż, oh! Yô, yô.

[1] J'ai entendu souvent aussi nzoż ékom, l'éléphant protège. Je croirais bien plutôt à ce sens qui est tout naturel, et attribuerais nzoż akom au mot précédent qui revient ainsi fautivement. Dans ces chants très-anciens, il arrive forcément qu'un certain nombre de mots se dénaturent et deviennent ainsi inintelligibles.

[2] C'est-à-dire l'effroi s'enfuit, ou les guerriers se reprennent.

[3] Les ennemis fuient à leur tour.

Chanteur:	Ekima kom	Le sifflet de guerre retentit,
	Nzoȯ ȯkom	L'éléphant vient,
	Akurè bɛ̄kun	Arrivée des mânes,
	Bitotore [1]	Les mânes protecteurs,
	Abora nzoȯ oh!	Merci à l'éléphant.
Chœur:	Yô, yô, Abora nzoȯ oh! Yô, yô.
Chanteur:	Ekima kom	Le sifflet de guerre retentit,
	Nzoȯ ȯkom	L'éléphant vient,
	Adzi bur	Festin des hommes [2],
	Ewume kiri	Réapparition de l'aube [3],
	Abora nzoȯ oh!	Merci à l'éléphant.
Chœur:	Yô, yô yô, Abora nzoȯ oh! Yô, yô.
Chanteur:	Ekima kom	Le sifflet de guerre retentit
	Nzoȯ ȯkom	L'appel de l'éléphant
	Nzoȯ aba	? Nom d'un grand fétiche de guerre
	Eba kuǧa	? litt. dépeçage de l'éléphant
	Abora nzoȯ oh!	Merci à l'éléphant.
Chœur:	Yô, yô yô, Abora nzoȯ oh! Yô, yô.

Chant de l'ékima.

[1] C'est le festin qui termine la victoire et où on mange les ennemis prisonniers.

[2] Probablement: Nous avions craint la mort, nous revoyons le matin.

[3] Nous retrouverons ce mot qui est synonyme de mvamayôṅ, l'ètotore est le protecteur, mais signifie plutôt l'animal protecteur individuel.

Chanteur.

E - ki - ma kom, Nzoẋ é - kom, A - ku - re bé - kun,

Bi - to - to - re, A - bo - ra nzoẋ oh! Yô, yô.

Chœur.

Yô, yô, A - bo - ra nzoẋ oh! Yô, yô.

Chanteur.

E - ki - ma kom, Nzoẋ é - kom, Ad - zi bur, E - wu - me ki - ri,

A - bo - ra nzoẋ oh!

Chœur.

Yo, yo, yo, A - bo - ra nzoẋ oh, oh! Yô, yô.

Chanteur.

E - ki - makom, Nzoẋ é - kom, Nzoẋ a - ba, E - ba ku - ŷa

Yô, yô, A - bo - ra nzoẋ oh! Yô.

Chœur.

Yô, yô, yô, A - bo - ra nzoẋ oh!

Chanteur.

E - ki - ma kom.

Chœur.

E - ki - ma kom, Yô.

Chanteur.

Nzoẋ é - kom.

Chœur.

Nzoẋ é - kom, Yô, yô.

Chanteur.

Wôṅ da ma - re, A - bo - ra nzoẋ oh!

Chœur.

Wôṅ da ma - re, A - bo - ra nzoẋ oh! Yô, yô.

Chanteur.

A - ma - re wôṅ, A - bo - ra nzoẋ oh!

Chœur.

A - ma - re wôṅ, A - bo - ra nzôẋ oh! Yô, yô.

Chanteur.

A - bo - ra nzoẋ oh!

Chœur.

A - bo - ra nzoẋ oh! Yo, yo.

Le Chanteur:	Ekima kom	Le sifflet retentit
Le Chœur:	Ekima kom, yô, yô	Le sifflet retentit, oui, oui.
Le Chanteur:	Nzaż ékom	L'éléphant vient
Le Chœur:	Nzaż ékom, yô, yô	L'éléphant vient, oui, oui.
Le Chanteur:	Wôñ da mare, Abora nzaż oh!	La frayeur disparaît, merci à l'éléphant, oh!
Le Chœur:	Wôñ da mare, Abora nzaż oh!	La frayeur disparaît, merci à l'éléphant, oh!
Le Chanteur:	Amare wôñ, Abora nzaż oh! yô, yô	L'ennemi s'enfuit, merci à l'éléphant, oh! oh!
Le Chœur:	Amare wôñ, Abora nzaż oh! yô, yô	L'ennemi s'enfuit, merci à l'éléphant, oh! oh!
Le Chanteur:	Abora nzaż oh!	Merci à l'éléphant, oh!
Le Chœur:	Abora nzaż oh! yô, yô	Merci à l'éléphant, oh! yô, yô!

Et chacun des couplets est ainsi repris successivement et par phrase, lorsque, une première fois, il a été chanté par tous les assistants. Le rythme, comme il est facile de le voir, est des plus simples, mais ne manque cependant pas d'une certaine grandeur. C'est celui des invocations; il ne diffère pas sensiblement, au moins comme idée musicale, du rythme des litanies, surtout des plus anciennes, que l'on retrouve parfois dans un coin perdu de nos campagnes, écho affaibli de quelques antiques traditions. Ce qui constitue surtout la grandeur de ce chant, vraiment parfois saisissante, c'est son exécution. Nous l'avons entendu maintes fois répété par quelque chanteur dans les villages, et repris en chœur par les assistants, mais sans aucune conviction: c'était un simple passe-temps, un intermède à quelque long récit. Nous l'avons entendu également répété par nos enfants dans leurs jeux, et nul, pas plus que nous, n'aurait alors soupçonné ce que peut donner ce chant dans son «cadre».

Mais il nous fut également donné de l'entendre dans de tout autres circonstances. Au cours de nos pérégrinations dans le nord, nous reçûmes un jour la visite de tous les guerriers d'un clan. Au plaisir de venir voir des «Blancs», chose si remarquable que pas un d'entre eux ne pouvait encore se vanter d'avoir eu pareille chance, se mêlait l'ivresse d'une victoire récente: la veille même de notre arrivée, ce clan avait complètement battu un clan voisin et fait de nombreux prisonniers; presque tous étaient destinés à être mangés, et le furent. Les vainqueurs arrivèrent donc pour nous voir dans le village où nous étions campés. Un peu avant d'entrer au village, ils reprirent leurs rangs, rompus par les chemins difficiles de la forêt où ils étaient bien forcés de passer seulement un à un, l'un derrière l'autre. Derrière la grande abéñe du chef du village, ils se reformèrent donc en masse serrée, puis, par six de front, ils parcoururent une première fois le village entier, en une marche cadencée très rapide, presque une course, mais en marquant très fortement le pas. Ils marchaient, brandissant tous d'une main leur fusil, de l'autre, agitant leurs longues sagaies au dessus de leurs têtes, et en même temps, avec un ensemble parfait, à l'unisson, et sans une note discordante, ils criaient à pleine voix le chant de l'ékima. Par trois fois, ils parcoururent ainsi le village, s'arrêtant parfois brusquement, tous ensemble, sur un yô final, plus strident que les précédents. Si, pris individuellement, leur accoutrement de guerre, avec les peintures hideuses qui cachaient leurs traits pouvait paraître ridicule, l'ensemble, loin de l'être, était vraiment terrifiant. Ainsi exécuté, le chant de l'ékima était d'un effet imposant: jamais nous ne l'avons mieux senti.

Ces remercîments adressés à Nzoẋ, Abora nzoẋ oh! (Merci à toi, éléphant!) pourraient cependant paraître à quelques-uns s'adresser à quelque héros légendaire qui eût porté ce nom et ainsi laissé sa trace dans les souvenirs populaires. Toutefois, cette explication est impossible, car outre que ce nom ne se retrouve dans aucune autre légende (fait qui à lui seul ne prouverait pas assez), un ensemble de faits particuliers montre bien qu'il s'agit là de l'éléphant totem ou étotore. C'est en effet le chant qui est exécuté avec beaucoup d'autres, dans le Nzoẋ békun dont nous aurons à nous occuper maintenant.

2° Le Nzoẋ békun.

Plus encore que l'ékima et son chant, le Nzoẋ békun nous paraît bien une survivance, et même une survivance toujours active et vivace, du culte de l'éléphant, en tant que culte jadis national. Ce Nzoẋ békun dont le nom signifie littéralement: «L'éléphant des âmes désincarnées ou revenants» nous apparaît d'autant plus curieux qu'il semble être la contre-partie du Nzoẋ ba kuÿa dont nous nous occuperons ensuite.

Voici en quoi il consiste.

a) Préparation du Nzoẋ békun.

Lors donc qu'un village se prépare à la guerre, ou encore, mais le cas est plus rare, que le village va commencer de grandes chasses, surtout celles de l'éléphant, il fait le «fétiche», ou plutôt comme ce mot nous paraît impropre, bien qu'il soit tombé malheureusement dans le langage courant, le village fait le «rite de l'éléphant des revenants».

Dans le premier cas, c'est-à-dire si le clan se prépare au combat, le chef, assisté de ses guerriers, désire attirer ainsi sur son village et sur ses hommes la protection des ancêtres, concrétisée comme nous l'avons vu, dans le Nzoẋ étotore ou éléphant protecteur. Dans le second cas, au contraire, c'est-à-dire celui des grandes chasses, il exécute le même rite afin d'attirer la protection des ancêtres sur la chasse; en même temps, il veut éviter que, par un regrettable malentendu, on ne vienne à tuer un éléphant où s'est réincarné pour un temps un des ancêtres. Nous avons déjà parlé plus haut de ce fait et devrons y revenir en parlant du rôle de l'âme dans la théogonie fàñ.

Pour procéder au rite du Nzoẋ békun, on agit ainsi.

Tout près du village, généralement à une des extrémités, mais en dehors des cases, le chef du clan convoque ses hommes. Les femmes sont soigneusement exclues et invitées à se tenir strictement renfermées dans leurs cases avec leurs petits enfants. Un manquement à cette prescription serait puni par un très sévère châtiment. Jadis, c'était la mort; aujourd'hui, la peine est atténuée: le chef, aidé de quelques hommes, parmi lesquels doit figurer l'époux, si c'est une femme mariée, le père, si c'est une jeune fille, ligote fortement la coupable; puis, avec le couteau (mfor), on lui trace de longues et profondes entailles sur la poitrine et sur le dos; on introduit ensuite dans la plaie béante de la poudre de piment recouverte de bois rouge, ce qui cause de terribles souffrances, et pendant un certain temps, on entretient la plaie ouverte au moyen de petites éclisses de bois d'ésŭn [1]. La plaie suppure et ne se referme que lentement: comme la femme doit continuer de se livrer à ses occupations habituelles, le soleil et les mouches causent de cruelles douleurs. La plaie se cicatrice en bourrelets indélébiles, qui témoignent publiquement du châtiment et de la faute [2].

Les hommes se sont donc tous réunis à l'extrémité du village, en dehors des cases. Tous, sabre en main, sous la direction du chef, commencent par couper tous les arbustes, enlever les herbes et nettoyer soigneusement le sol, où la terre doit apparaître nette de toute végétation et de toute plante. Dès que ce premier travail est terminé, on entoure ce même espace, généralement de forme elliptique, de branchages et de roseaux afin d'en intercepter complètement la vue à tout profane. Comme cette barrière doit plus tard être consumée, elle est généralement faite avec les tiges légères d'une sorte d'amome [3], fortement serrées les unes contre les autres, et liées avec des lanières fournies par les tiges de bananier. Les

[1] Hua gabonensis. L'ésŭn exhale une forte odeur alliacée.

[2] On désigne cette épreuve sous le nom de ètsile, graver: Emunga ñi é ne ntsilia, cette femme est stigmatisée. C'est également la peine des femmes adultères à la première faute.

[3] L'amome comprend trois espèces distinctes. C'est une espèce de grand roseau de la famille des Zingibéracées. A la base de la plante, se développe en épi une masse de fleurs blanches qui passent, suivant les espèces, au rose et au bleu, et dont l'aspect rappelle les fleurs de glaïeul. De ces fleurs naît un fruit oblong, gros comme une prune et recouvert d'une épaisse peau rouge. La pulpe, blanche et acide, est très agréable au goût et rafraîchissante dans deux espèces, l'amome Granum Paradisi et l'amome Meleguetta. Les graines de ces deux espèces renferment un principe âcre (paradol) et une essence. Les Noirs s'en servent comme condiment après les avoir écrasées. C'était autrefois, avant l'introduction du poivre en Europe, l'objet d'un commerce important. Ce poivre, connu sous le nom de poivre de Malaguette, a donné son nom à une partie des côtes de Guinée (Côte de Malaguette). Il entre dans la composition de plusieurs fétiches, et les graines en sont offertes souvent aux mânes. La troisième espèce, encore mal déterminée, donne des fruits douceâtres et non comestibles. C'est cette espèce qui est consacrée à l'éléphant.

interstices sont soigneusement fermés avec les feuilles d'un carludovica[1]. On n'emploie pas pour cet usage l'amome dont le fruit est comestible, mais un autre, très semblable d'aspect, dont les fleurs sont d'un bleu plus intense, et les fruits d'un goût insipide. Cet amome est consacré de façon spéciale à l'éléphant et porte le nom d'alâñ nzoɔ̀. On emploie cet amome de préférence à toute autre tige, car elle doit disparaître ensuite par le feu. Or, les tiges d'amome, remplies d'une espèce de résine qui s'attache fortement aux doigts, brûlent rapidement, une fois sèches, avec une flamme claire et brillante, mais qui ne dure que quelques instants. C'est dans quelques tribus, le seul luminaire connu.

L'espace ainsi renfermé dans la barrière d'amomes peut égaler deux cents mètres environ de pourtour, souvent un peu davantage, mais jamais beaucoup plus.

On ne laisse qu'une étroite entrée, surmontée d'une sorte de draperie en longues lanières de feuilles de bananier qui tombe jusqu'à terre et voile complètement le passage; pour pénétrer à l'intérieur, on doit l'écarter et elle retombe naturellement. Il est interdit à tout autre qu'aux guerriers d'y toucher. Dans un des angles, on édifie une petite case avec les mêmes éléments qui ont servi à construire l'enceinte, tiges d'amome et couverture en feuilles de carludovica. Dans les contrées où cette plante est moins abondante, on la remplace par les feuilles d'une sorte de borassus, repliées les unes sur les autres et imbriquées.

Cette première opération terminée, le chef va prendre dans sa case la boîte du biéri où sont renfermés l'akamayôñ, c'est-à-dire l'ensemble des objets qui se rapportent au totem, et les crânes des ancêtres. Sans les sortir de leur boîte, il les dépose dans la petite case préparée dans un des angles; la boîte du biéri est surmontée d'une statue de bois noir, représentation du fétiche inclus, ou symbole de la tribu. Cette statue porte entre ses mains une sorte de coupe grossière qu'elle semble offrir. Et telle est bien en effet l'idée de tout sacrifice: une part est mise dans cette coupe, la statue représente la famille ou le clan faisant l'offrande aux mânes des ancêtres. Le chef prend ensuite une poule, lui coupe le cou et parcourt l'enceinte, suivi de tous ses hommes, en aspergeant le sol de sang sur tout son parcours; il chante en même temps un chant magique destiné à éloigner les esprits malfaisants.

[1] Le Carludovica, très voisin du Pandanus, est une plante à port de palmier, de la famille des Cyclanthacées. Une espèce voisine, le Carludovica palmata, fournit la paille très fine qui sert à fabriquer les chapeaux de Panama. C'est cette feuille que les Fâñ emploient pour recouvrir les toits des cases de fétiche. Elles ont, disent-ils, la propriété d'éloigner les revenants, grâce aux petites épines dont elles sont munies. Tout objet piquant éloigne les bêkun ou esprits errants.

Voici les premières paroles de ce chant:

Avec tous mes hommes, j'ai construit cette enceinte,
Avec tous mes hommes, je l'ai placée loin des regards,
Avec tous mes hommes, nous avons préparé le sol.

Que les esprits mauvais s'éloignent,
Que nul esprit malfaisant n'ose entrer,
Que les béyèm (sorciers) restent au dehors.

Avec mes hommes, j'offre cette poule dont le sang coule etc.

Il rentre alors dans la case où est la statue, et fend la poule par le milieu avec un petit couteau renfermé dans une gaîne spéciale. Ce couteau sert aux sacrifices et aussi aux autopsies humaines. Il examine les entrailles, la position et l'aspect du cœur et surtout de la vésicule du fiel, et d'après leur position, prononce si le sacrifice a été accepté, et si l'endroit choisi est bon. Dans le cas où le sacrifice indiquerait que l'endroit est néfaste, on brûlerait immédiatement l'enceinte de façon à enlever toute trace de sang, puis, la nuit venue, le chef transporterait de nouveau son biéri dans sa case, et on recommencerait une autre enceinte à l'extrémité opposée du village, en prenant soin d'observer toutes les cérémonies rituelles, et après expiation préalable du chef. Cette expiation serait nécessaire, car le chef ayant seul agi jusqu'ici, à lui doit être imputé l'insuccès qui résulterait d'un nsèm ou souillure morale contractée par quelque faute, soit contre le totem, soit contre les ancêtres. Dans certains cas, le féticheur est alors appelé pour offrir un sacrifice au nom de tous.

Mais si la première cérémonie a été heureusement conduite, on pourra continuer sans crainte. Le chef prend alors du sang de la poule et en barbouille la statue du biéri (c'est une manière de l'offrir aux ancêtres), puis se retire en emportant la poule. Il n'est nullement nécessaire que celle-ci soit jetée dans la forêt ou brûlée; elle n'a plus aucune valeur, tout au moins au point de vue religieux, sa chair ne représente aucune idée hiératique et n'a contracté aucune importance rituelle par le fait du sacrifice; le chef s'en nourrira le soir même sans aucun scrupule: il ne faut rien laisser perdre.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Le lendemain, les guerriers, toujours conduits par le chef, reviennent de nouveau à l'enceinte désormais consacrée, la foulent bien en frappant du pied, et en marchant en tous sens. Ils quittent alors l'enceinte, et vont, le plus près possible, l'endroit n'a aucune importance, dans un endroit où ils trouveront de l'argile en abondance. On creuse une fosse, et les femmes sont ensuite convoquées; à elles de transporter toute l'argile retirée du trou et de l'apporter dans leurs paniers à côté de l'enceinte. Les guerriers surveillent cette opération. Les femmes apportent la quantité d'argile jugée suffisante par le chef, puis l'eau également nécessaire pour bien la pétrir et en faire une masse compacte et facile à travailler. Les hommes font passer l'argile de l'autre côté de l'enceinte. Dans les petites tribus où le culte est moins strict, et quand surtout les guerriers, moins nombreux, veulent s'éviter de la peine, ce travail est accompli par les femmes; mais, dans ce cas, comme le terrain serait souillé sous leurs pieds, lorsque toute la terre est transportée, le sacrifice de la poule est seulement alors consommé.

L'argile une fois transportée dans l'enceinte, on la recouvre de feuilles fraîches de bananiers, afin d'éviter sa dessication trop rapide. Il s'agit alors de se procurer un prisonnier. Dans certaines tribus qui ne sont entourées que de clans alliés, ce n'est pas toujours facile. De plus, ce prisonnier ne doit pas appartenir à la nation fàn, et les guerriers sont parfois obligés d'aller assez loin pour se le procurer. Ceux qui habitent non loin des frontières de la tribu se le procurent facilement, soit par achat, soit par vol. L'achat est facile du côté de l'ouest où chez les Bondjo, Batéké, Batélé et autres, on trouve presque dans chaque village des marchés de chair humaine, des esclaves mis en vente, morts ou vivants. Facile également l'achat vers le sud, soit au pays Aduma, Shéké, et surtout Eshira, grand producteur et exportateur d'esclaves. Facile, encore, vers l'est, où, par vol, cette fois, et non plus par achat, le Fâñ a vite fait de se procurer quelque Bulu ou quelque membre des faibles tribus de la Côte. Près des centres et sur le bord de l'Ogowé, il est plus difficile. de se procurer la victime. Aussi, dans ce cas, on remplace l'homme par un cabri. Un jour que je reprochais à un chef fâñ de la Tsini, aux environs de Libreville, cette horrible coutume de verser en ces circonstances le sang humain:

«— Oh! me répondit-il, ce sont les «sauvages» de l'intérieur qui agissent ainsi. Nous autres qui donnons nos fils aux Blancs, nous ne le faisons pas, et c'est toujours un cabri qui est employé. Mais ajoutait-il plus doucement, en regardant ses hommes et avec un soupir de regret, ce n'est plus la même chose!»

Et je n'étais pas très-convaincu!

b) Un «étranger» est nécessaire comme victime.

On s'est donc procuré l'esclave[1] ou l'étranger destiné au sacrifice. Cette loi de se procurer un étranger à la tribu est nécessaire. Comme il s'agit en somme d'un sacrifice à un totem national, protecteur par conséquent de chacun des membres de la tribu, lui offrir le sang d'un membre de la tribu ne pourrait, au contraire, que l'irriter: pareil sacrifice peut, il est vrai, être fait, et l'est effectivement dans certaines circonstances graves, mais alors ce n'est plus l'offrande, mais le sacrifice proprement dit. Ce cas arrive, par exemple, si la tribu est en grand danger; le chef, d'accord avec les guerriers de la tribu, sacrifie alors le plus âgé de ses frères. Naturellement, si celui-ci a vent de la chose, il préfère s'enfuir au plus vite.

Chez tous les peuples, on rencontre pareille coutume: telles les femmes carthaginoises offrant leurs enfants au Moloch, tels les chefs romains, aux temps héroïques de leur histoire, s'immolant eux-mêmes sur l'autel des dieux de la patrie.

[1] Quand nous disons «l'esclave» c'est toujours un homme étranger à la race: les Fâñ ne se laissent pas réduire en esclavage, ils se tueraient plutôt, et ils n'admettent pas non plus d'esclaves étrangers chez eux, ce que font toutes les tribus voisines: «Ayôñ afâñ é ne ngâña, ba ñèÿe tobe nsisi ké ñèÿe wuż élzü nsaÿa, la nation fâñ est une nation brave qui veut demeurer libre et n'aime pas entendre le mot esclave.» Ce sentiment fait réellement plaisir dans cette Afrique où il semble que l'esclavage soit inné!

Le prisonnier est gardé à vue, les pieds entravés par une énorme pièce de bois, près de la petite case du fétiche, dans l'enceinte consacrée.

Lorsqu'il s'agit seulement de se procurer une chasse heureuse, il faut noter cependant qu'on n'immole jamais qu'un cabri, à moins que, par suite de leur abondance, les captifs ne soient moins précieux que l'animal.

c) L'offrande du sang.

Au jour déclaré propice par les conjurations — et le soin de choisir ce jour revient au féticheur, car c'est là un fait de son domaine religieux particulier —, les guerriers se réunissent de nouveau dans l'enceinte consacrée, où ils entrent, l'un derrière l'autre, avec leurs armes. Le chef pénètre le dernier. On va droit à la case du fétiche: le prisonnier est désentravé et conduit au milieu de l'enceinte; là, est planté un fort piquet, mais dont la taille ne dépasse pas celle du captif. On l'attache à ce piquet par les pieds, les mains et le milieu du corps, de façon à ce que tout mouvement lui soit impossible. D'ailleurs, il est rare qu'il oppose de la résistance: on a pris soin de lui faire boire la veille, de gré ou de force, une décoction de fleurs de yam [1] et de sève d'élun [2]; elle amène une sorte d'ivresse suivie de prostration complète. Dès que le captif est attaché, le chef, ou à sa place un des principaux guerriers, et plutôt, de préférence à tout autre, son frère ou son fils aîné,

[1] Le yam est une sorte de chanvre. Les fleurs sont disposées en cymes courtes à l'aisselle de bractées foliacées. Ce sont en réalité ces bractées qui donnent le poison. Elles sont couvertes de poils sécréteurs qui fournissent un produit semblable au haschich oriental. Ce produit composé d'une résine, la Haschichine et d'une essence, la Cannabène, est un excitant du système nerveux: il produit une sorte d'ivresse, mais que suit une dépression profonde de l'organisme (BEILLE). C'est pour cette raison, bien remarquée des Fâñ, qu'on fait boire le poison à la victime la veille au soir.

[2] Elun Erythrophlæum sp. Afz., des Légumineuses. On a signalé un alcaloïde dans l'écorce, l'Erythrophlæine. C'est un des poisons d'épreuve le plus dangereux. Il agit sur le cœur par arrêt, et donne des convulsions tétaniques. On le mélange au yam à très petite dose, et en employant seulement la sève.

commence autour de la victime une danse sacrée, nommée: Adzèm Nzoẋ békun, sur un rythme lent et solennel scandé par les coups du tamtam de guerre. Dès que cette danse a pris fin, le chef s'approche de la victime, et avec la pointe du couteau des sacrifices lui pique, en les tranchant, les artères carotides. Le sang ne jaillit pas violemment, car l'élun, qui agit fortement sur le cœur, en a ralenti considérablement le cours, et c'est peut-être pour cette simple raison qu'on en fait boire à la victime. Le sang est aussitôt recueilli avec soin dans un vase de terre et mélangé au suc du ka [1], sorte d'Euphorbiacée en arbre, nommée aussi biloẋ bikèle ou plante des circoncis. On le met alors en réserve. Le corps de la victime est ensuite désossé, les chairs mises à part, et les os, soigneusement replacés, étendus à terre dans leur ordre naturel, mais à une assez grande distance les uns des autres. Sur les os ainsi disposés, le chef fait jeter l'argile mise à part précédemment; on l'amoncelle en tas énorme, de façon à simuler grossièrement un énorme éléphant. On le représente couché à terre, de manière à ce que sa tête recouvre la tête de la victime, le corps sur les os de la poitrine, et les jambes repliées sur les mains et les pieds. Dès qu'il a pris une certaine apparence de la bête, le chef va à la case du fétiche, ouvre seul la boîte du biéri, prend un fragment du totem et vient l'introduire dans la tête de l'éléphant d'argile, en chantant:

Ma kum we nlô, étotore	Je te façonne la tête, ô protecteur,
Nzoẋ békun wôñ esoğele	Eléphant des ancêtres wôñ (pour) esoğele !
Béngan oyo ke kure	(Les sorciers sommeil sans se sauver)
N'étar dzôm amare	Pour faire le paquet (que l'on mange) de la crainte.

Ces paroles, très anciennes, ne sont plus comprises aujourd'hui des Fân, qui répondent simplement: On disait ainsi autrefois.

Le chef retourne ensuite à la case du biéri, prend les crânes de deux ou trois de ses ancêtres, gratte avec le couteau quelques parcelles de la poudre de bois rouge ou du sang qui les couvre. referme la boîte, et vient mettre cette poudre ainsi obtenue, d'abord sur la tête du Nzoẋ békun, puis dans l'intérieur. Il a soin également d'y ajouter une partie de sa propre substance[1]. On recouvre de terre l'endroit où gîtent ainsi les fragments de l'étotore et des ancêtres, puis on façonne mieux l'animal de façon à l'amener au point de perfection voulue.

[1] Dichostemma glaucescens, des Euphorbiacées.

Quelques-uns des hommes ont, pendant ce temps-là, fait cuire sur la cendre les restes de la victime par petits paquets enfermés dans des feuilles de banane. Tous en reçoivent une portion et la mangent assis en rond tout autour de l'éléphant. Le chef prend alors le sang, en met une partie à part dans un vase, puis, avec le reste, asperge l'animal, en commençant par la tête, et en tournant tout autour. On observe avec soin comment et où tombent les gouttes, la forme qu'elles prennent à terre, et on en tire des pronostics pour la guerre et son heureuse issue.

Dès que ce rite est terminé, le chef prend le sang renfermé dans le vase mis à part, et marque tous ses hommes à la poitrine. Ainsi le Nzoẋ békun reconnaîtra les siens et les mettra à l'abri du danger. Chacun garde de plus un petit morceau des os de la victime, calcinés et réduits en cendres, et les renferme soigneusement dans un petit sachet de linge qu'il conservera toujours sur lui.

d) La bénédiction des armes.

Les guerrierrs prennent ensuite leurs sagaies et les lancent avec force sur l'animal: c'est une «bénédiction» des armes qui ne sauraient manquer ainsi de causer de mortelles blessures. C'est aussi un présage, d'après la façon dont les sagaies atteignent l'animal et s'enfoncent dans sa chair d'argile. Quand les sagaies sont épuisées, on enfonce également de longs éclats de bambou qui simulent les lances et rendent le même service. Un guerrier est alors constitué gardien du Nzoẋ békun: les autres partent, soit à la chasse, soit en guerre.

e) La destruction du Nzoẋ.

Au retour seulement, le Nzoẋ békun sera détruit, ce qui donne lieu à une nouvelle cérémonie. Devant tous ses guerriers, le chef enlève d'abord soigneusement les fragments de l'étotore et les replace dans l'akamayôñ, puis ceux des ancêtres qu'il enferme dans un sachet; ils serviront en d'autres circonstances pareilles. Ceci fait, on prend un cabri, on lui coupe le cou, et on asperge encore de sang le Nzoẋ békun; la chair, mise à part, sera mangée sans aucune cérémonie et comme tout mets ordinaire. Souvent même, pour épargner ses cabris, marchandise précieuse, le chef va à la chasse et s'efforce de tuer une antilope, un sanglier ou même un singe. Le sang sert alors de la même manière, mais dans tous ces cas, la chair, quelque soit l'animal, est absolument interdite aux femmes et aux enfants, et même aux étrangers. Après cette cérémonie, on ouvre le Nzoẋ békun pour retirer les os de la victime et on les dispose à part dans une marmite de terre où on les calcine séance tenante, après les avoir d'abord bien desséchés sur les charbons: chaque guerrier reçoit sa part des cendres. L'argile qui constituait le corps est alors dispersée à terre, de façon à ne plus offrir aucune forme (souvent même, et surtout dans les petits villages, cette dernière cérémonie est omise, et on laisse le Nzoẋ békun s'effondrer peu à peu), on met le feu aux clôtures et les femmes viennent enlever la terre.

[1] Fragments d'ongles, de cheveux, de sang, ou mieux encore de semen virile.

La cérémonie est terminée.

Les Fâñ sont tous unanimes sur la signification de ce rite: honorer le protecteur de la tribu, à la manière des anciens, par le sacrifice à son image figurée. Il y a donc bien là, nous semble-t-il, tout en y reconnaissant également une manifestation mânique, survivance du culte totémique de l'éléphant.

3° Le Nzoẋ ba kuïja.

Le Nzoẋ ba kuÿa[1] est un fétiche d'un genre analogue au Nzoẋ békun, mais beaucoup plus redouté. On le retrouve beaucoup plutôt dans les tribus du rameau méké, et également, pour quelques cas, dans les clans qui ont subi son influence, tels certains clans du rameau bétsi, noyés dans les tribus méké: l'opposé est également vrai.

[1] Ainsi, un serpent aquatique monstrueux a été l'objet de l'adoration des Mandé primitifs. Le grand géographe arabe du XIe siècle, El Edrizi, rapporte qu'au temps où les tribus nigritiennes étaient païennes, Dieu leur apparaissait sous la forme d'un serpent aquatique et qu'ils l'adoraient. Mais un étranger tua ce serpent et devint leur roi. De même, la plupart des peuples lybiens ont des dieux aquatiques.

Le Nzoẋ ba kuÿa est, on pourrait le dire, la contre-partie du Nzoẋ békun, et demeure une survivance du culte totémique du crocodile. C'est, à proprement parler, le grand fétiche de guerre. En parlant précédemment d'Ombure, nous avons indiqué que son culte était demeuré vivace encore, non seulement dans son clan éponyme, mais encore, comme culte national, dans certaines circonstances données intéressant la nation entière. Tel est le Nzoẋ ba kuÿa.

Un «chanteur» bien au courant des mœurs de sa nation, attribuait un jour devant moi les formes essentielles de ce rite à Ngurangurane, le héros national. Qu'elles se soient transmises à travers les âges, le fait est parfaitement possible: c'est tout ce qu'il nous est possible d'affirmer aujourd'hui. La meilleure preuve serait encore celle-ci, c'est que, dans un peuple, difficilement disparaissent les traces des anciens cultes, et notre religion catholique garde ainsi encore certaines coutumes provenant des rites ancestraux. Les mots, très-archaïques, employés dans le Nzoẋ ba kuÿa sont également une preuve indéniable de sa haute antiquité [1].

Quelle est tout d'abord l'étymologie de ce nom? Si, comme on peut l'admettre, il signifie: «On met en fuite l'éléphant», elle serait curieuse et demeurerait une trace de l'ancien antagonisme entre les deux mythes. Toutefois, nous la signalons sans en garantir la certitude, l'étymologie pouvant bien causer quelques erreurs. Quoiqu'il en soit, voici en quoi consiste le Nzoẋ ba kuÿa.

A une grande distance des habitations, au plus profond de la forêt, on réserve un bosquet sacré où il est absolument interdit à tout non-initié de pénétrer [2]. Ce bosquet porte le nom d'éli béngan, ou bois des féticheurs, car les béngan ou féticheurs y accomplissent également d'autres cérémonies cultuelles secrètes. Il y a pour les femmes qui se permettraient d'y entrer peine de mort portée, et le chef des féticheurs aurait, en cas de besoin, grand soin d'assurer l'exécution de la sentence, mais en veillant toutefois à ce que cette mort parût inopinée. De cette façon, outre que l'odieux n'en retombe pas sur lui, on peut l'attribuer au fétiche lui-même, jaloux de confirmer ses droits et prérogatives.

[1] Voir le chant cité page 238.

[2] Ce n'est pas cependant un fétiche de société secrète, car les guerriers font partie de droit de cette société dès qu'ils ont subi la première initiation à la vie des guerriers, et dont les marques consistent en incisions sur le cou, nommées bawu.

Au jour dit, les guerriers se réunissent au lieu indiqué, et avec les mêmes cérémonies, ou du moins presque identiques à celles que nous avons retracées pour le Nzoẋ békun, on édifie avec de l'argile, non plus un éléphant, mais un énorme crocodile. De même, on immole en son honneur une victime humaine, mais au lieu d'être consommée séance tenante, et d'avoir ses os enfermés sous la masse d'argile, la victime doit être jetée au fleuve; les crocodiles, frères éponymes de la statue, et protecteurs de la tribu, ou plutôt des tribus, se chargent de consommer eux-mêmes la victime.

Il y a donc bien là sacrifice totémique, d'autant que dans ce cas, ce n'est pas une tribu qui accomplit ce rite, mais bien plusieurs tribus, et pour cause de guerre générale, donc d'utilité publique. On ne saurait donc alors s'adresser à un totem tribal: les autres se trouveraient lésés, à moins de leur attribuer un rôle égal. C'est d'ailleurs ce qui a lieu en pratique, car chaque tribu apporte son totem, et tous les akamayôn sont tout d'abord déposés autour de la statue, semblant lui rendre ainsi un hommage de respect et de soumission, comme au temps où, simples totems de phratrie, ils devaient s'incliner devant le totem de clan.

La victime est donc immolée. Quelle est cette victime? Ce sera souvent un prisonnier de guerre; mais parfois, surtout dans les circonstances graves, le chef devra fléchir plus efficacement le protecteur en lui immolant ce qu'il a de plus cher, un de ses enfants; le sacrifice sera d'autant plus cruel pour lui que, d'une façon générale, le Fân aime beaucoup ses enfants, et que jamais, chez lui, on ne verrait, comme chez ses voisins, les Eshira, une mère vendre son enfant pour un sac de sel ou quelques verroteries.

On envoie donc l'âme du petit être rejoindre aux pays lointains les âmes des ancêtres, leur rappeler l'ancienne alliance mystique avec l'animal éponyme, leur redire combien leurs descendants ont besoin de leur secours. Pour mieux le signifier, leur sang innocent a coulé de toutes parts sur la hideuse statue, cependant que les guerriers, dansant et chantant tout autour, étouffent sous leurs hurlements forcenés les gémissements des victimes qui s'en vont vers l'Hadès, pâles ulves du fleuve des ombres, où il semble qu'on les voit et qu'on les entend avec le poëte:

> Continuo auditæ voces, vagitus et ingens
> Infantumque animæ flentes in limine primo:
> Quos dulcis vitæ exsortes et ab ubere raptos
> Abstulit atra dies et funere mersit acerbo [1].

Pauvres petits qui s'en vont, victimes d'une religion barbare à l'heure où le Christianisme s'avance chez eux avec ses immortelles espérances!

Pendant quatorze jours, c'est-à-dire une demi-lunaison, les guerriers se réunissent et exécutent autour du crocodile sacré des danses et des chants qui doivent le rendre favorable à la tribu. De tous ces chants, très variés, et dont l'inspiration est diverse, nous n'en citerons qu'un seul qui nous semble d'ailleurs en résumer l'esprit. Il exalte la défaite de l'éléphant qui s'est refusé à protéger les siens, et le triomphe du crocodile.

Le Chant du Crocodile.

Nzoż é sélléa añim.	L'éléphant a glissé, a glissé avec un refus.
Eli zi é vire:	Cet arbre penche [2]:
Bélege zo é gô,	Relèvez le en haut,
A ngen é vire va,	Il penche encore ici,
Tsinege zo méyal,	Poussez le à gauche,
A ngen vire va,	Il penche encore là,
Tsinege zo meyôm,	Poussez le à droite.
Ki zi zâ ntobe mmmne.	Que ta force ne demeure point silencieuse (inerte)
Nzila wi zilega wi.	Tournons ici, tournons à reculons.
Afon di é ne alèt.	Cette terre est dure (ne produit rien pour nous).
Mrame bésu, ké dhuge mélo,	Protecteur de nos pères, ne ferme pas tes oreilles.
Ebobôñe mrame.	Sois le protecteur de tes enfants.

[1] Enéide de Virgile.

[2] C'est-à-dire notre nation est menacée.

Nzila wi, zilepa wi,	Tournons ici et tournons là,
Nbos o mans lambo	Le piège est fini d'apprêter.
Bia kóme we bidzi,	Nous t'avons préparé des aliments,
Eourega é tsinée.	La pierre du foyer est repoussée.
Ké yane volege, Ngan Eza,	Ne fais pas attendre ton secours, ô père crocodile,
Ma yi tobe é usaz oõã.	Je veux rester au bord du rivage.
Bõãabur bètol ba kindbe.	Nos ancêtres ont eu la victoire.
Mélan me sojia ashé bépina.	Les fêtes d'initiation ont eu lieu pour les successeurs (?) [1].

Pendant tout le temps que durent les danses, dix hommes armés veillent constamment sur le fétiche dont la destruction serait considérée comme une menace des plus grands malheurs. Aussi, à la moindre alerte, le tamtam de guerre retentit; les guerriers accourent, et certainement mauvais parti serait fait à l'étranger qui se hasarderait en ces occasions près de l'éli béngan, surtout s'il y venait accompagné de forces armées, indubitable indice de fort perfides desseins. Egalement, si les éléments menacent, orage, tonnerre, pluie diluvienne qui arrive parfois et qui tombe des journées entières avec une violence que ne peuvent admettre ceux qui n'en ont pas été témoins, on met tout en œuvre encore pour éviter un désastre et conjurer un danger gros de malheurs certains.

Au bout des quatorze jours, on rappelle les gardes et après les conjurations et sacrifices nécessaires, les hommes vont au combat, sûrs de vaincre. La guerre une fois terminée, les combattants se réunissent de nouveau autour du crocodile, s'ils ont remporté la victoire. Ils exécutent encore de longues danses accompagnées de chants, puis tous les prisonniers qu'on a pu se procurer sont massacrés sans qu'il soit permis d'en épargner un seul. On les fait cuire dans de grandes marmites, mais hors de la présence des femmes et des enfants qui sont absolument exclus de ce festin, et on les dévore séance tenante en demeurant assis en rond autour du fétiche. Il ne doit en rester aucun morceau, et il est strictement interdit d'en emporter aucune portion au village: ce serait assurément attirer sur ce dernier les plus grands malheurs. Ce festin porte le nom d'adzi bur, manducation des hommes.

[1] Ce vers est très obscur: le mot mélan désigne les fêtes d'initiation auxquelles sont soumis les jeunes guerriers, et où on mange l'écorce narcotique de l'alan, sorte de strychnos. Les femmes stériles sont également vouées à cette épreuve destinée à montrer ce qui dans leur corps peut causer la stérilité, et par là même à y remédier.

Pour être complet, ajoutons un point qui montre jusqu'à quel point cette loi est stricte: pendant les neuf jours qui suivront le festin, il est défendu sous les peines les plus sévères d'aller dans la forêt pour satisfaire aux besoins les plus urgents: tout doit aller à la rivière, et être ainsi emporté au loin; c'est afin d'éviter la vengeance des mânes des hommes mangés.

4° L'Edzû bitotore.

L'Edzû bitotore est également une survivance du culte totémique à laquelle cependant il est impossible d'assigner une origine. Malgré son importance, nous ne nous y arrêterons pas longuement.

Voici en quoi elle consiste.

Le mot Edzû bitotore signifie: le nom des ancêtres protecteurs. Lorsque dans un village, on voit que pour une raison inconnue, la mortalité infantile croît dans d'inquiétantes protections, qu'une épidémie meurtrière les décime ou encore que les femmes n'ont plus d'enfants, le chef, car c'est toujours à lui que ce rôle revient, procède à l'Edzû bitotore, c'est-à-dire au changement de nom des enfants. On attribue en effet le malheur qui arrive à la tribu à une faute totémique, à quelque manque de respect envers les aïeux, et il importe d'y remédier au plus tôt.

On réunit donc au milieu du village tous les petits enfants qui ne portent pas un nom d'animal protecteur d'une famille du clan. Ils sont placés sur une feuille de bananier et dépouillés de tous leurs vêtements. On semble ainsi vouloir les faire rompre avec leur passé et leur imposer une individualité nouvelle. Ils sont lavés d'une eau lustrale dans laquelle on a fait bouillir certaines herbes, puis on apporte près de chacun d'eux successivement l'akamayôñ du chef, et le totem particulier du chef de famille, de façon à les faire entrer pour ainsi dire de nouveau sous la protection des ancêtres du clan, et de les relier à la fois à l'ancêtre réel et à l'ancêtre éponyme du clan. Après cette première opération, a lieu l'imposition du vocable nouveau sous lequel ils seront désormais désignés. Il est interdit à tous, et plus particulièrement à l'enfant, de jamais prononcer plus tard son ancien nom: ce serait indubitablement attirer sur lui les plus grands malheurs, les désirer même à moins qu'un sacrifice immédiat au mvamayôñ ne vienne conjurer le danger.

Nous apprîmes cette dernière condition par notre expérience personnelle. Dans un petit village, situé sur une rivière affluent de l'estuaire de la Mondah, aux pieds des monts Laval, nous avions baptisé, un jour que nous passions par là, un petit enfant en danger de mort; comme il arrive toujours en ces cas, nous avions soigneusement relevé sur notre carnet de baptême son nom indigène, celui de son village et de ses père et mère. A un an de là, nous repassions par le même village, et nous attendant bien à une triste réponse: «Où est le jeune Amôñe?»[1] disions-nous, en nous adressant au père et à la mère de l'enfant. Personne ne répond: on se regarde interdit; la mère, tout à l'heure si accueillante, prend la fuite vers sa case et le père me dit d'un air furieux: «Amôñe est mort.» Je m'explique alors la fuite de la mère et l'attribue au chagrin. Mais, rentré dans une case, voici bien une autre histoire. Le chef vient me trouver et me réclame une poule.

«Mais, mon ami, pourquoi une poule? Je viens dans ton village; il me semble que c'est à toi de m'apporter le premier un cadeau!

— Oh! cela, je le ferai; attends seulement un peu; mais si je te réclame une poule, c'est à cause de l'Edzû bitotore.»

Et comme je le regardais, étonné:

«Comment, tu ne connais pas l'Edzû bitotore!» Et il m'expliqua alors la cérémonie dont nous venons de parler. —

Après que le changement de nom est opéré, le chef amène un cabri au milieu des cases et l'immole solennellement en offrande au protecteur du village; puis, après avoir mis un peu de sang sur chaque enfant, il ouvre le corps de l'animal et met le cœur en réserve. Le cabri est partagé entre les familles de chaque enfant, et, en retour, chaque mère doit une poule au chef. Le cœur, mis à part, est brûlé en offrande aux esprits protecteurs de la race et [1] Nom significatif: l'amôñe est une sorte de patate amère.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

du village. Quand il est réduit en cendres, on partage ces restes du sacrifice en autant de portions qu'il y a d'enfants, et on les leur suspend au cou dans un petit sachet d'étoffe.

Si la mortalité continue, le village doit être évacué: c'est le seul moyen d'éviter les esprits malfaisants acharnés à la perte de la race. Le village, transporté dans un autre endroit, échappera à leur influence, surtout si le chef a soin de mettre plusieurs ruisseaux ou rivières entre son ancien village et le nouveau. Les esprits des eaux ne laissent point passer les âmes errantes.

Les filles sont évidemment exemptes de cette cérémonie, puisqu'elles ne peuvent porter de nom totémique.

d) Les mutilations, tatouages et signes ethniques.

1° Mutilations.

Les mutilations corporelles ont été signalées par la plupart des auteurs comme survivances totémiques. Mais il importe, tout d'abord, en parlant de ces mutilations, d'en soigneusement déterminer le motif.

Il y a lieu d'écarter:

a) les mutilations cultuelles,

b) les mutilations particulières que nous proposerions d'appeler «plastiques»,

c) les mutilations de châtiment.

a) Mutilations cultuelles.

Bien que «religieuses», un certain nombre de mutilations ne sauraient évidemment être rangées comme totémiques. Ainsi, il arrive fréquemment que pour obtenir un résultat quelconque, les Fàñ sacrifient aux mânes des ancêtres une portion de leur individu, sorte de messager vivant qu'ils enverront ainsi aux esprits des premiers de la race. Pour obtenir un fils, par exemple, après la naissance successive de plusieurs filles, le Fàñ se fera faire par le féticheur de profondes incisions sur le corps, particulièrement sur les bras. De même, en certains cas d'impuissance, aura-t-il également recours à une mutilation volontaire. Mais nous n'insisterons ici sur aucun de ces points qui nous semblent se rattacher au culte des ancêtres, beaucoup plus qu'au culte totémique. Nous en parlerons encore dans le chapitre suivant en traitant de la circoncision.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

b) Mutilations plastiques.

Nous entendons par ce mot les mutilations accomplies dans un but de beauté corporelle, réelle ou cherchée. Ainsi les déformations de lèvres, d'oreilles, de nez etc. Dans cette catégorie, rentrent les tatouages exécutés dans un simple but d'ornementation.

Rien dans cette sorte de mutilations ne nous paraît totémique, sauf peut-être, dans certains cas, la perforation de la cloison médiale du nez, permettant d'y introduire certains objets, par exemple, le cas est fréquent, des poils ou des épines de porc épic.

C'est afin de ressembler davantage à l'animal éponyme, d'imiter les moustaches raides de la panthère etc. Mais, presque toujours, dans ce cas, de même que dans celui des masques de guerre, l'idée religieuse se confond avec l'idée d'ornementation. Il s'agit d'abord d'«effrayer» l'adversaire.

c) Mutilations de châtiment.

Les mutilations de châtiment, pour fréquentes qu'elles soient, ne sauraient rentrer à aucun titre dans ce chapitre. Telles, par exemple, pour les femmes adultères, l'ablation des oreilles ou du nez etc. Nous ne nous en préoccuperons donc pas ici.

2° Mutilations ethniques; mutilations proprement dites et tatouages.

Nous rangeons également les mutilations ethniques au nombre des survivances totémiques. Ces mutilations peuvent se ranger sous deux formes distinctes: les mutilations proprement dites et les tatouages.

Les mutilations proprement dites sont de deux sortes 1° la circoncision, 2° la mutilation des dents.

Nous parlerons plus loin de la circoncision.

La mutilation des dents nous paraît également un reste totémique. Tout d'abord, il convient de remarquer que les dents ne sont pas limées en pointe comme on l'a dit souvent: les dents ne sont nullement «limées»: c'est au couteau qu'on les façonne ainsi en pointe; l'opération est d'ailleurs peu douloureuse; le patient étant couché à terre, le féticheur s'approche de lui, place son couteau de façon à ce qu'il porte de biais sur la dent à couper, et d'un coup sec, frappé avec un morceau de bois dur, fait sauter l'angle de la dent.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Il convient de remarquer, à l'appui de notre thèse d'ailleurs, que le féticheur, seul, a le droit de procéder à l'opération des dents. Un camarade ou un ami du patient ne saurait lui rendre ce service: l'opération est donc bien d'ordre religieux. De plus, les débris de dents sont soigneusement conservés et remis à l'opéré qui s'en sert dans certains «fétiches». Mais rien de totémique dans ce dernier point: pareil usage existe pour toutes les parties ou fragments ayant appartenu au corps à un titre quelconque, sang, cheveux, dents, ongles etc. Aussi prend-on toujours un soin tout particulier de les cacher loin de tout regard. Le sang menstruel, par exemple, est toujours dissimulé avec un soin extrême, et jamais une femme n'oserait l'exposer à être vu: ce serait à la fois commettre une faute des plus graves, et encourir les plus grands dangers.

Pourquoi les Fân se font-ils couper ainsi les dents en pointe?

Quelques voyageurs ou écrivains en ont donné une raison qui leur paraît très-simple: «Pour mieux déchirer la viande, car ils sont tous cannibales.» La raison peut être vraie; mais nous en doutons fortement. En tout cas, lorsque, interrogeant les anciens sur cette question de l'origine de la race, nous leur proposions cette explication, toujours nous les avons vus en rire à gorge déployée: «C'est vrai, me répondait un jour un vieux chef narquois, nous autres, nous taillons nos dents pour mieux déchirer, vous autres, vous les gardez donc larges pour mieux couper!»

Et les deux explications se valent!

Cependant, d'après les indigènes les mieux informés, la réponse a souvent été celle-ci: Nos ancêtres ont toujours agi ainsi, et c'est pour ressembler au crocodile, notre père.

J'admettrais volontiers cette interprétation, d'autant qu'elle m'a été donnée par les féticheurs eux-mêmes. En tout cas, la mutilation des dents est certainement une manifestation d'ordre religieux.

3° Les tatouages et signes ethniques.

En parlant du totem considéré comme emblème, signe figuratif, nous aurons à étudier plus longuement cette question du tatouage. Aussi, en ce moment, est-ce plutôt une simple remarque que nous faisons. Tout autant que les généalogies et au même titre qu'elles, les signes ethniques que l'on rencontre dans les différentes tribus nous paraissent être une marque de la haute antiquité du totem. Ainsi, dans certains clans de la même tribu aujourd'hui séparés par de vastes espaces, et qui, d'après des traditions parfaitement authentiques se sont détachés de la branche mère à des époques remontant à plusieurs centaines d'années, on retrouve sur les cases, sur les instruments de travail, sur les armes, sur les corps, la même figure et sous les mêmes traits, de l'animal totémique. Ce fait est particulièrement frappant pour le crocodile ou le lézard qui semble figé dans la même pose hiératique, et sous des lignes immuables; est d'autant moins surprenant ce phénomène tout d'abord que le lézard ou le crocodile est le totem de quelques tribus et se retrouve alors dans tous leurs clans; de plus, ainsi que nous le verrons en parlant de l'origine du totem, l'homme fut d'abord créé, disent les Fáń, sous forme de lézard; ce fait explique peut-être bien des points que nous avons rapidement esquissés plus haut.

Cette question des tatouages totémiques étant donc réservée pour plus tard, nous passons aux biyéma bétshit[1] qu'il ne faut pas confondre, ainsi que nous l'avons dit, avec les survivances totémiques.

e) Biyéma bétshit.

Après avoir traité des diverses survivances totémiques, nous avons déclaré plus haut qu'il était un cinquième ordre de faits avec lequel il ne fallait pas les confondre, bien qu'au premier abord ils puissent se mêler avec eux ou semblent devoir s'y rattacher. Ce cinquième ordre de faits porte le nom de biyéma bétshit, les représentations d'animaux, du verbe eyém, connaître, d'ou eyéma,

[1] Il ne faut pas confondre avec les biyéma bétshit certaines figures d'animaux que l'on rencontre parfois soigneusement dissimulées dans les cases ou dans la boîte du Biéri. Il y a bien là alors des fétiches totémiques et des représentations du totem ancestral.

(pl. biyéma) image, statue, représentation. Le mot eyèm a sa racine dans nlèm, le cœur, considéré par les Fâñ comme source de l'entendement, tandis que l'action repose dans le cerveau bo, d'ou ebo, faire, eba, sculpter, ebà, planter, ebi, planter, d'ou ebi, père, en méké.

Dans les villages de l'intérieur, on trouve très fréquemment dans les abèñe une quantité de petites statues d'animaux et d'oiseaux. Ces petites statues, confectionnées d'une façon grossière avec la moëlle du raphia, sont excessivement légères. On les suspend au toit de l'abèñe, et le vent, en passant, les fait balancer et semble leur donner une vie factice Nulle esthétique dans ces figurations, nul sentiment de la grandeur: un perroquet y sera plus grand qu'un éléphant, un tigre, de la taille d'un rat, et réciproquement. Il ne faudrait pas voir dans ces figurines, comme on serait peut-être tenté de le croire au premier abord, des vestiges de culte totémique. Ce sont simplement, soit des «ex-voto», pourrait-on dire, des preuves, de reconnaissance, ou encore de simples marques de désir, des souhaits. Avant de partir à la chasse, le Fâñ ne manquera pas de s'incliner devant son Biéri et tout au moins de le toucher, en manière d'offrande, de sacrifice aux ancêtres et aux mânes, leur demandant de faire une chasse heureuse. Tout au plus, pourrait-on voir également dans cette action un fait totémique, en ce sens que le chasseur demande aux ancêtres de ne pas tuer son animal protecteur, acte qui attirerait sur lui de grands malheurs. En revenant de la chasse, comme remercîments à son fétiche[1], et aussi peut-être pour apaiser la colère des esprits qui auraient pu résider dans l'animal qu'il a tué, le Fâñ lui assure une nouvelle demeure en en façonnant une grossière image.

Dans quelques villages de l'intérieur, on attribuait à ces représentations une grande valeur, nous interdisant strictement d'y toucher; dans d'autres, au contraire, on nous laissait toute latitude de les palper et de les prendre: Bivi bibôñe, nous disait-on, «ce sont jeux d'enfants».

Ce ne sont pas en tout cas, et c'était ici, le point essentiel manifestations totémiques, tout au moins avec les restrictions des indiquées et les réserves nécessaires que nécessiteront d'autres études plus complètes [1].

[1] Fétiche de la chasse, et non fétiche protecteur individuel.

f) Le sentiment populaire au sujet du totem.

Nous arrivons enfin à la cinquième et dernière source d'information au sujet de l'antiquité du totem fàñ, le sentiment ou la croyance du peuple lui-même au sujet de cette antiquité.

Ici, nous n'avons besoin évidemment d'aucun développement, puisque ce sentiment ressort avec netteté de tout ce que nous avons dit jusqu'ici du totem. Chaque totem est aussi antique que le fondateur de la fraction à laquelle se rapporte ce totem, comme le prouve d'ailleurs ce qui se passe encore aujourd'hui. De là, les propositions suivantes:

Le totem particulier n'a qu'une existence éphémère et révocable, et ne peut remonter plus loin que son détenteur actuel.

Le totem de clan remonte au fondateur du clan.

Le totem de tribu remonte au fondateur de tribu qui lui-même l'aura emprunté à un totem familial antérieur.

Ce totem familial antique, devenu, jusqu'à un certain point, totem national pour disparaître ensuite en partie devant les totems locaux, aura également pour antiquité, l'antiquité elle-même de la nation. Nous avons vu plus haut quelle époque nous pouvions, dans une certaine mesure, lui asseigner. Par le même moyen, nous connaissons l'ancienneté du totem de clan et souvent de famille. Tous ces points nous paraissent donc d'accord et marchent d'un pas simultané vers un but commun.

L'antiquité du totem, particulier à la race, et non rite importé ou emprunté à d'autres peuples, semble établie.

Par là même que le rite est écarté comme d'importation, mais doit être attribué au fondateur de la race lui-même, nous en arrivons tout naturellement à rechercher l'origine du totem.

---

[1] Dans certaines tribus du Centre-africain, ces biyéma, que l'on retrouve également, seraient bien totémiques. Ce serait alors, pour nos Fàñ, une rectification de détail à faire.

CHAPITRE IX.

L'ORIGINE DU TOTEM FÂṄ.

Comment étudier l'origine du totem fâṅ. — Le seul totem national ou tribal est à examiner.

§ 1. L'origine du totem d'après les Fâṅ. — Procédé d'interrogation; les diverses questions à poser.

§ 2. L'origine du totem d'après leurs légendes. — Légende du Créateur. — Légende de la séparation.

§ 3. L'origine du totem d'après les auteurs. — Diverses causes qu'ils donnent au sujet de l'origine du totémisme. — Opinions de quelques auteurs, tels ARCIN, REINACH, Mgr. LE ROY. — Discussion de ces opinions. — Notre propre opinion sur l'origine du totem.

En abordant ce chapitre, nous devons tout d'abord faire une remarque essentielle: il est nécessaire d'envisager uniquement l'origine du totem national ou tribal, qui seul est ancien. Comme nous l'avons fait remarquer, les totems de famille, les totems individuels et les totems de société secrète surtout, ne sont que des «dérivations» de ce dernier.

Nous avons essayé, dans le chapitre précédent, d'établir la haute antiquité des phénomènes totémiques, et de montrer qu'ils remontaient aux origines de la race. Le fait du totem étant ainsi posé comme fait «original», comment peut-on expliquer, ou à quelles influences peut-on attribuer, ce phénomène religieux? Telle est la question que nous avons à résoudre dans ce chapitre.

Le totémisme est un phénomène religieux que l'on retrouve dans la plupart des tribus africaines. Aussi a-t-il été étudié à ce point de vue de l'origine par quelques rares auteurs dont nous exposerons l'opinion, en tant qu'elle peut être applicable à nos Fâṅ.

[p. 248]

Ces auteurs peuvent se ranger sous deux catégories distinctes d'après le sujet qu'ils ont traité:

a) les peuples africains actuels,

b) les peuples africains du passé.

Nous les verrons donc successivement. Mais tout d'abord, nous envisagerons l'origine du totem animal, dont l'explication est plus facile et plus rationelle, pour atteindre ensuite les totems végétaux et minéraux.

Continuant le procédé que nous avons déjà employé pour «l'antiquité du totem», nous demanderons d'abord aux Fâñ eux-mêmes leurs données sur l'origine du totem; puis, passant de là aux autres peuples africains totémiques, nous suivrons la même marche, en donnant toutefois seulement ce qui peut convenir aux Fâñ; enfin, toujours avec les mêmes réserves, nous étudierons les auteurs dont nous venons de parler, tels Mgr. Le Roy, Arcin, Reinach etc.

§ 1. L'origine du totem d'après les Fañ.

On ne saurait, en cette matière, trouver meilleurs informateurs que les Fâñ eux-mêmes; pour arriver à identifier l'origine de leur totem, c'est à eux que nous nous adresserons en première ligne, en recourant, comme nous avons fait précédemment pour «l'antiquité» du totem, à leurs légendes religieuses et à l'interrogation directe. Nous nous efforçons de gagner leur confiance, chose difficile en pareille matière qui est d'un éki[1] absolu avec les non initiés, et d'une réserve très grande avec les initiés eux-mêmes. Mes meilleurs renseignements ont toujours été obtenus lorsque nous étions seuls à seuls, que nulle oreille indiscrète, pas même celle de nos enfants, n'était là pour recueillir des paroles dont le secret trahi (bien peu de chose souvent) eût pu néanmoins attirer de sérieux désagréments sur les contempteurs d'un sévère éki totémique.

Nous nous occuperons d'abord du totem tribal, car c'est en somme le plus important, puisque, de la façon que nous avons indiquée, découlent de lui les autres totems, et que l'origine de l'un expliquée, les autres en découlent tout naturellement.

[1] Défense rituelle.

L'interrogation directe.

Avant de passer aux légendes de la race, recourons à l'interrogation directe. Pour plus sûrs renseignements, entrons dans une tribu qui réunisse bien tous les caractères totémiques requis par les auteurs, c'est-à-dire portant le nom d'un animal, le reconnaissant comme ancêtre éponyme, et lui rendant un culte.

Nous sommes chez les Békwé, puissante tribu dont les ramifications et clans s'étendent fort loin; leurs principaux villages sont aux environs du nœud orographique d'où partent, dans quatre directions opposées, autant de grandes rivières, l'une, vers le nord, l'autre, vers l'ouest et l'Oubanghi, la troisième directement à la mer avec le Ntèm, la dernière enfin vers l'Ogowé avec l'Aïna, son principal affluent. De ce poste élevé, retranchés dans leurs montagnes, les Békwé semblent prêts à se jeter de l'un ou l'autre côté, suivant leur inspiration capricieuse, le gré de leurs fétiches, l'espoir d'un gain problématique, ou une occasion qui leur semble favorable.

Comme nous l'avons fait dans plusieurs villages [1], conversons avec les chefs, puis résumons leurs réponses, d'ailleurs identiques aux mêmes questions, sans aucunement les discuter. Interrogeons-les d'abord, comme si nous ignorions complètement le totem.

«Quelle est votre race, le nom des hommes de votre tribu?

— Tu le sais, puisque tu demeures depuis plusieurs jours dans nos villages; nous sommes les Békwé [2].

— Que veut dire ce mot?

— Rien. Cela veut dire: «Békwé» [3], c'est-à-dire: «Nous.»

— Mais ce nom dans votre langue, signifie également «les singes».

— Cela est vrai: ce nom signifie également «les singes».

---

[1] Villages d'Akurenzam, Elibéngon, Afurengon, Oyômetan etc. (Ht Ivindo).

[2] Békwé, corruption du mot: Ebikwé, comme dans les autres tribus méké.

[3] Ce nom signifie également, suivant l'accent, colimaçon. — Le kwé est un gros colimaçon dont les femmes emploient la coquille entière comme fétiche protecteur des récoltes. On le pique alors au bout d'une perche placée à l'orée du champ, et malheur au violateur.

On emploie également la coquille du kwé pour faire de jolies cuillers nacrées.

— Mais alors, vous êtes «frères des singes»? [1]

— Pourquoi viens-tu ici nous insulter! Nous ne sommes pas des singes, mais des hommes.

— Je ne veux pas vous insulter, loin de là. Je sais bien que vous n'êtes pas des singes, vous autres, mais des «hommes». Mais pourquoi vous nommez-vous ainsi Békwé?

— Nous ne le savons pas. Nos pères s'appelaient Békwé, nous nous appelons Békwé, nos enfants s'appelleront Békwé.

— Mais si votre famille se scinde, le clan séparé sera-t-il encore Békwé?

— Oui, ce seront toujours des «Békwé».

— Cependant ils prendront peut-être un autre nom?

— Oui, certainement, mais ils seront encore Békwé.

— Quel nom prendront-ils?

— Le père de la nouvelle tribu lui donnera son nom.

— Donnera-t-il toujours son nom?

— Cela dépendra de celui qui sera le père de la nouvelle nation.»

Ici, nous constatons donc un fait sur lequel nous avons déjà donné les explications nécessaires, le père du clan attribuant un nom au nouveau clan.

«Vous n'êtes pas frères des békwé (singes), dites-vous. Cependant, vous ne mangez pas la chair des békwé?

— Non, certes, nous ne mangeons pas la chair des békwé.

— Et pourquoi cela?

— Nous autres, Fâń, nous ne tuons pas les békwé.

— Non, cela n'est pas juste. J'ai connu beaucoup de Fâń qui tuaient et mangeaient des békwé... En voici près de vous!» Et en même temps je montrais les enfants qui étaient venus avec moi.

«Ces Fâń ne sont pas des Békwé!»

Cette réponse, qui leur échappe, leur déplaît évidemment, car ils veulent prendre congé de moi: je les retiens avec peine et continue:

---

[1] Bobeńáń békwé (alliés des singes). Ce mot bobeńáń indique une parenté ou filiation réelle et non d'adoption ou de frère de sang.

«Donc, vous, Békwé, vous ne mangez pas de singes, comme vos pères l'ont observé avant vous, et vous avez raison de leur obéir. Môñe a wùk mvèfie mézu béñabur: l'enfant doit écouter les paroles des vieillards.»

Cette approbation hautement manifestée de leurs usages, et en citant une de leurs maximes favorites, leur plaît évidemment beaucoup. Ils en concluent, et je me hâte de confirmer ce sentiment, que je suis loin de vouloir me moquer d'eux ou les railler en quoique ce soit. Ils deviennent immédiatement beaucoup plus ouverts. Seul, le carnet, où je prends des notes, les intrigue encore.

«Mais pourquoi vos ancêtres ne mangeaient-ils pas la chair des békwé? C'est assurément une très bonne viande!

— Très bonne!» est leur courte réponse.

Et les anciens gardent le silence, puis veulent parler d'autre chose, ce qui est loin de faire mon affaire; j'insiste donc.

«Mais oui, pourquoi vos ancêtres ne mangeaient-ils pas cette excellente viande?»

On se décide alors à me répondre. Mais tout d'abord, on me demande encore: «N'es-tu pas mvôma (initié)?

— Oh! comment ne le serais-je pas! Mé mana yèn Evôm! (phrase légèrement amphibologique qui signifiait aussi bien: je suis initié, que: j'ai vu l'initiation).

— Alors, puisque tu es mvôma, pourquoi cette demande?

— Mais parce que je suis Blanc. Je veux savoir si vous autres, Békwé, vous avez bien conservé les «mots» de l'ancêtre» [1].

Les chefs font alors éloigner les enfants.

«Eh! bien, voici pourquoi nous ne mangeons pas les singes (békwé).

C'est parce que la tribu singe est «vouée» avec la tribu «Hommes-nous». Bi ndzige di Békwé, édo é ne na ayôñ afan Békwé da tobe énâñéla né ayôñ bie Békwé.

— Bien, je vois que vous savez les «mots». Mais alors, les singes sont vos bénâñéla?»

---

[1] C'est-à-dire les mots sacrés que l'on ne doit pas dire. Ainsi, dans le «Livre de la Jungle», Mowgli, le petit d'homme, apprend de l'ours Baloo et de la panthère Baghéra, les «mots» sacrés.

Et la constatation serait importante, car l'énâńéla n'est autre que le nagual, ou animal voué.

«Oh! non, ce n'est pas cela du tout: les Békwé ne sont pas, tu le sais bien, nos bénâńéla: c'est l'ayôń afan Békwé (la nation des Békwé de la forêt), qui est énâńéla avec l'ayôń méfan Békwé (la nation des Békwé des plantations, c'est-à-dire hommes).»

Et avant de continuer, notons cette constatation qui est des plus importantes, car, en effet, il ne s'agit plus dans ce cas (et ce cas s'applique à tous les clans totémiques similaires), d'énâńéla particulier, ce que j'avais toujours cru jusqu'ici. En effet l'énâńéla esttou jours un «fait» particulier, l'animal isolé, «voué» à un homme, mais à titre particulier et faisant avec lui l'échange du sang. Il s'agit ici d'un énâńéla collectif: chaque kwé homme n'est pas l'énâńéla de chaque kwé singe, mais c'est l'ayôń kwé, d'une façon générale et collective, qui est énâńéla avec l'ayôń kwé de la forêt: il y a pas parenté particulière, mais parenté collective. Nous reviendrons tout à l'heure sur ce point, qui fait ici d'une race entière, dans l'un et l'autre cas, un tout unique et non divisible.

«Les békwé ne sont pas nos bénâńéla (animaux familiers obéissants), mais ils sont nos bitotore[1] (aides soutiens).

— Dans ma tribu, on n'emploie pas ce mot: bitotore. Nous disons: bémvamayôń. Est-ce la même chose?

— C'est la même chose, mais ce n'est pas tout à fait la même chose (!). Ta tribu ne parle pas bien. Voici ce que c'est qu'un mvamayôń et qu'un étotore. Le mvamayôń, c'est pour toute la nation. l'étotore, au contraire, c'est pour un seul individu »

Et comme il ne serait pas facile de faire comprendre la distinction assez subtile d'après les réponses du Noir, voici, en substance, ce qu'il en est, et que nous étudierons plus loin à fond.

Le mvamayôń est le totem collectif, considéré dans son ensemble, au point de vue parenté mystique, et également réel; l'étotore, au contraire, est le même totem, mais considéré au point de vue particulier, pour l'intérêt propre de chacun, et non plus au point de vue collectif. C'est, et ce qui peut tromper souvent, le totem individuel de chaque homme, mais en tant que cet homme fait partie d'une collectivité, et que ce totem fait partie également du totem collectif, mais alors considéré au point de vue particulier. Ce n'est donc pas le totem «particulier» qui peut, lui, être tout différent. Ainsi, car des exemples feront mieux saisir cette distinction, le crocodile est le totem de toute une tribu: ce sera le mvamayôñ de la tribu. On lui adressera des hommages: ces hommages, étant collectifs, seront donnés au mvamayôñ: le chef de la tribu rendra également son culte au mvamayôñ, car il représente, comme chef, une idée collective. Au contraire, un guerrier adressera ses demandes personnelles à son étotore, c'est-à-dire à ce même totem, mais alors considéré au point de vue particulier. Ces demandes au crocodile lui seront faites en tant qu'étotore: réussir à la chasse, par exemple, faire un heureux voyage. Elles seront adressées au contraire au mvamayôñ, si le guerrier agit ou invoque, non plus en son nom personnel, mais au nom d'une collectivité, par exemple, dans une fête de Nzoẋ ba kuÿa, telle que celle que nous avons décrite, ou bien encore si sa demande est faite en tant que chef de famille. Cette requête pourra même sembler au premier abord «individuelle» ou regarder les intérêts de l'individu, et s'adresser cependant au mvamayôñ, si, au fond, elle concerne la race, par exemple si un guerrier sollicite la naissance d'un fils.

[1] Etotore, de la racine eto, se tenir là, être. Etotore, celui qui se tient tout à fait là: c'est en somme la même idée que mvame ayôń, l'un signifiant le Protecteur, l'autre: Celui qui se tient là pour aider.

En un mot, le guerrier, en tant qu'individu, prie l'étotore comme parent réel et individuel. Il prie le mvamayôñ, au contraire, comme parent de race, ce qui peut avoir de beaucoup plus strictes obligations en certains cas. Un homme de la tribu du crocodile rencontrant un animal de cette espèce ne lui fera pas de mal, bien au contraire, car c'est peut-être un mvamayôñ, un descendant de celui en lequel s'est reposé l'esprit de l'ancêtre; mais ce n'est pas un étotore pour le cas présent.

En résumé, le mvamayôñ représente à la fois, dans ce cas du crocodile, et tous les autres cas peuvent lui être assimilés:

1° Le crocodile primitif en lequel est entré pour un temps l'esprit de l'ancêtre, ou avec lequel il a contracté une alliance effective de sang et de parenté.

2° L'ensemble des crocodiles issus de ce crocodile primitif et qui se sont succédés depuis ce temps, et qui ont contracté avec la descendance du père de la nation éponyme une parenté a) d'origine b) renouvelée par de fréquentes alliances (nous verrons plus tard comment). Notons bien ce point important, cet ensemble est alors considéré comme force ou comme essence. Si l'on préfère, la vie de la tribu crocodile humaine est alliée à la vie de la tribu crocodile animal: c'est un ensemble, une collectivité impersonnelle qui doit assistance à une autre collectivité, à un autre ensemble éponyme. Mais comme le crocodile, et non pas «un» crocodile, toujours s'il fait partie de la descendance du premier, n'est pas seulement mvamayôṅ, et en cela tenu à venir en aide à la nation parente et alliée, mais qu'il est encore étotore, un crocodile, disons-nous, s'il est de cette descendance, doit assistance particulière à son éponyme. Celui-ci, dans le doute, rendra ses devoirs à tout crocodile, rencontré en particulier, et l'invoquera, non comme mvamayôṅ, mais comme étotore.

En somme, et pour le cas le plus fréquent, on peut dire que le mvamayôṅ est le totem collectif si on le considère à ce point de vue général; il devient au contraire étotore, si on envisage l'intérêt particulier.

Ainsi, pour les Békwé, l'ayôṅ kwé est leur mvamayôṅ. Pour un homme des Békwé, un kwé (animal) est son étotore.

Reprenons maintenant notre conversation.

«Ainsi, tous les békwé animaux sont vos bitotore?

— Oh! non, quelques-uns seulement. Pas un, peut-être, de tous ceux qui sont dans la forêt autour de nos villages. Nos bitotore étaient loin. Qui sait s'ils ont suivi!

— Mais lesquels pourraient être vos parents?

— Comment poses-tu cette question, puisque tu es «initié»! Evidemment, il n'y a comme bitotore que ceux qui descendent du mvamayôṅ.

— Oui, je sais bien cela. Mais ce mvamayôṅ, qu'était-il avec votre ésayôṅ? ce ne pouvait être son mvamayôṅ à lui, puisque d'abord, à ce moment, votre ayôṅ (tribu) n'était pas formée, et qu'elle ne pouvait donc avoir ni ésayôṅ ni mvamayôṅ?

— Certainement, ce n'était pas son mvamayôñ, puisqu'il n'était pas encore notre ésayôñ!

— Mais ce n'était pas non plus son étotore, car l'étotore de chacun est forcément mvamayôñ de tous, et il est mvamayôñ pour pouvoir devenir étotore. Est-ce bien cela?

— Oui, c'est bien cela. Ce n'était pas certainement son étotore, puisqu'il n'y avait pas de mvamayôñ. Mais c'était son énâñéla.»

Je suis d'autant plus heureux de cette réponse qu'elle me confirme dans mes idées précédentes. L'énâñéla, en effet, nous l'avons déjà vu et l'étudierons mieux plus tard, en le distinguant du totémisme, est l'animal voué à un homme, mais à titre individuel. Par conséquent, le totémisme reposerait, à son origine, sur un rite fétichiste, ou, si l'on veut, sur un rite animiste, destiné à assurer à un homme la protection et les vertus d'un animal, protection et vertu qui de l'homme et de l'animal éponyme auraient passé à la race de l'animal et de l'homme. Par reconnaissance ou par hasard de naissance, ou simplement comme il se pratique encore aujourd'hui, pour porter «chance», l'homme aurait pris le nom de son énâñéla.

Dans l'origine, le chef de famille aura contracté lui-même le pacte d'alliance et l'échange du sang; aujourd'hui, ce rôle est, non pas dévolu, mais appartient au féticheur, ce qui confirme bien ce que nous avions dit précédemment en parlant des rôles divers de chaque ordre social: au féticheur, les rites fétichistes, au père de famille, les rites «domestiques», au chef de race, les rites «totémiques», ces derniers plus étendus, en tant au moins qu'ils concernent la race ou le clan.

Naturellement, il ne faut pas conclure de ce que nous avons dit que, seuls, les bitotore peuvent être choisir comme binâñéla. Ils peuvent l'être ou ne pas l'être; cela dépend beaucoup de l'étotore. Un élâñéla appartient toujours au règne animal: c'est, nous l'avons vu, indifférent pour l'étotore. Mais, une fois de plus, réservant cette question, constatons seulement ce qui seul a une importance pour nous, c'est que les Fâñ, comme je crois avoir pu le constater, tout au moins dans la majorité des tribus, admettent que le mvamayôñ était primitivement l'énâñéla du chef de race.

Toutefois intervient cette difficulté: l'étotore actuel est souvent un être inférieur, par exemple un végétal, un phénomène naturel. Comment l'expliquer? — Dans certains cas, il y a eu alors substitution; ou, encore, d'autres raisons sont intervenues, dont nous nous occuperons en parlant de la zoolâtrie, litholâtrie etc.

Après cette longue mais nécessaire digression, nous revenons à notre interrogatoire.

«Vos bitotore actuels sont donc les descendants de l'énâńéla de votre père, devenu votre mvamayôń?

— Oui, c'est bien ainsi, nos bitotore sont mvamayôń, et nos bitotore sont les fils de l'énâńéla du (ésayôń) père de la race. Mais, à toi, ton étotore n'est-il point le fils de l'énâńéla de ton père?

— Non, nous autres, nous n'avons pas tout à fait la même chose. Le père de notre race avait le Créateur, Dieu lui-même, pour frère de sang. Ou mieux, Dieu était son Père, et le Fils de Dieu était le frère de notre Père de race. Comme vous le savez, Dieu a eu ce seul fils comme descendant. Mais Dieu vit toujours et aussi son fils; il reste donc, non pas notre mvamayôń, mais notre ésayôń, et son fils est le frère de chacun de nous. Pour vous, c'est également votre frère. Je vous apprendrai cela plus tard.

— C'est très beau, mais pour nous, c'est cependant la même chose.

— Comment est-ce la même chose? Je ne le comprends pas très bien. Voulez-vous me l'expliquer?

— C'est facile. Notre Père à nous tous, c'est aussi Nzame, comme pour toi; mais Nzame a voulu rester avec ses enfants noirs; c'est pour cela qu'il a donné un élâńéla au chef de la race, et que les chefs de tribu et les chefs de famille font comme le chef de la race. Ils ont tous un énâńéla, pour que cet énâńéla devienne l'étotore de chacun; comme cela, le père de la race demeure avec nous; l'ésayôń demeure toujours avec son peuple (ayôń) puisque sa vertu et sa force sont passées après sa mort avec le mvamayôń.

— Mais pourquoi l'ésayôń ne donne-t-il pas sa vertu et sa force à ses fils, au lieu du mvamayôń? Il serait ainsi bien plus avec eux.

— Non, parce que lorsqu'un homme meurt, ses enfants ont déjà leur khun (âme) à eux, et aussi leur force et leur puissance; si le père les léguait à ses enfants, cela leur ferait deux khun et aussi deux forces et deux puissances, et à la fin, ils auraient beaucoup de *khun*s pour un seul homme. C'est impossible. Et il ne peut pas non plus les donner à ses enfants qui ne sont pas nés, puisqu'ils ne sont pas là! Tout cela, c'est un mystère (énzâñdzam) que nos pères savaient mieux, mais enfin les choses sont «ainsi au milieu»[1]. Et au fond, c'est Nzame, qui a donné tous les mvamayôñ.

— Tout à l'heure, je vous demanderai de me dire comment, parce que, à nous autres, nos pères nous ont aussi laissé les «récits d'autrefois», les mystères (énzâñdzam)[2] que vous avez également et les généalogies (mébara) de vos ancêtres. Mais dites-moi, le père de votre race, c'est Nkure-kwé, n'est-ce-pas? (C'est-à-dire Ekure, fils de kwé, celui qui a quitté le singe, ou encore Nkure, fils du singe)[3].

— Oui, c'est Nkure-kwé, le père de toute notre race.

— Mais Nkure était-il fils de kwé, ou seulement Kwé de la forêt était-il son énâñéla?

— Kwé afan[4] était son énâñéla. Nkure était fils de Nzame (c'est-à-dire descendant du premier homme, créé par Nzame, mais père de la tribu Békwé). Nzame a donné kwé à Nkure comme énâñéla pour en faire son étotore.

— Mais pourquoi cela?

— Ah! Mézu ménzame: ce sont les choses de Dieu!

— Et comment kwé, le singe, est-il votre étotore?

— Il est notre étotore à cause de ceci: il communique avec Nzame puisqu'il est mvamayôñ.»

J'aurais voulu continuer, mais lorsqu'on en arriva là, mes hommes, fatigués et peu habitués à tant raisonner ou «disséquer» leurs croyances, s'étaient peu à peu éclipsés doucement pour ne

---

[1] Traduction du mot indigène énzâñdzam qui signifie «mystère».

[2] Enzâñdzam, mot à mot «le milieu de la chose», la chose ultime, le pourquoi d'une chose, que l'on ne peut comprendre.

[3] Nous verrons plus loin, quand nous parlerons des fondateurs de tribu, pourquoi cette interrogation.

[4] Kwé afan, c'est-à-dire: Le singe de la forêt.

laisser en face de moi qu'un seul interlocuteur; il ne demandait, lui aussi, qu'à partir au plus vite et à cesser un entretien qui le fatiguait considérablement [1].

Il résulte donc, en somme, d'après cet interrogatoire, résumé de plusieurs tribus et de plusieurs chefs dans chaque clan, qu'aux yeux des Fâń, le totem tribal ou général n'est nullement l'ancêtre divinisé du clan, comme il a été avancé par certains auteurs pour d'autres peuples. Mais, pour notre part, il nous semblerait étrange que le système des Fâń fût unique et d'y trouver un fait particulier, quand, au contraire, leur langue, leurs coutumes, leurs traditions les rallient étroitement aux autres peuples bantous, et que, de plus, ils ont dû subir l'influence égyptienne.

D'après leur sentiment actuel, le totem ou mvamayôń n'est donc pas l'ancêtre divinisé ou héroïcisé du clan. Sans doute, on pourra parfois attribuer aux ancêtres un ensemble de faits plus ou moins merveilleux; nous avons vu ce cas avec Ngurangurane, et Ndôń-mba et autres sont dans la même situation; mais le mvamayôń, c'est-à-dire, le totem, est nettement séparé du héros, et on lui assignera une origine toute autre, ainsi que nous l'avons constaté avec le mythe d'Ombure.

Le totem est donc un être à part, généralement un animal. C'est en effet l'idée la plus naturelle; pour notre part, nous croyons que dans les autres cas de totem végétal, minéral ou céleste, ce choix a dû être inspiré par un autre sentiment, crainte, reconnaissance, désir, dont nous parlerons tout à l'heure. De cette conception de l'élâńéla devenant étotore, il ressort nettement que l'élâńéla ne peut être un autre homme, puisque Nzame le donne précisément au fondateur de la race afin que son âme, et surtout sa vertu et sa force, informant la race entière, demeure protectrice de tous les descendants. Les deux races éponymes forment ainsi une entité toujours vivante, car elle est indépendante de la mort d'un membre quelconque.

L'alliance de sang, la parenté réelle, a été contractée non pas avec un animal en tant qu'animal, mais avec un animal en tant que race. La parenté réelle résulte de l'échange du sang. Mais à côté de cette parenté, il y en a une autre, une véritable parenté spirituelle; de là, la race de l'animal éponyme doit aider la race humaine éponyme. Celle-ci doit respect et assistance à la race de son animal éponyme.

[1] Notre renommée était si bien faite à cet égard, qu'en certains villages, nous étions désignés sous le nom de Nsile, le Questionneur, et qu'on s'empressait, en nous voyant, de . . . parler d'autre chose!

D'où vient cette parenté? La plupart des auteurs pense qu'elle provient de l'alliance primitive, et que les animaux actuels éponymes sont parents, parce que descendants. Nous ne croyons pas que ce sentiment soit complètement vrai, au moins dans son ensemble.

L'opinion de ceux qui voient, dans le totem, le fondateur de la race divinisé, et dont les descendants animaux seraient, par conséquent, les descendants réels absolument au même titre que les hommes est donc écartée. Au fond, on s'explique fort mal cette dualité, car pourquoi le héros divinisé se transformerait-il en animal, c'est-à-dire en race inférieure, pour protéger mieux sa race, et aurait-il, ainsi transformé, procréé des descendants également protecteurs?

Nous préférons la conception fàn qui voit au contraire le père de la race contracter, sur l'ordre de Nzame, avec l'animal désigné par lui, une double alliance, mystique et réelle. Elle est réelle pendant la vie surtout du père de la race, pour mettre à son service des forces qu'il voit bien lui manquer, réelle, mais avant tout mystique, pour se perpétuer près de ses descendants. Ce n'est pas la métempsycose, rien n'est plus éloigné des conceptions fàn, c'est une réviviscence spirituelle. Le père de la race ne se transforme pas en l'animal allié, mais son âme errante y entre pour un temps, y vit et dirige alors l'intelligence de l'animal vers des actes spéciaux, mais sans aucunement détruire sa propre personnalité. L'ancêtre ne peut plus habiter son corps, tout au moins d'une façon active, bien qu'une partie de lui-même y reste attachée: il trouve un substrateur différent, et pour un temps seulement. Ce temps sera très variable, suivant que l'animal, où l'ancêtre a établi pour ainsi dire son logement temporaire, est choisi comme totem ou non. S'il est choisi comme totem par un clan ou une famille, son âme quittera seulement l'animal à la mort de celui-ci; elle n'émigrera pas alors dans un autre animal; désormais elle va quitter toute habitation ou substatum inférieur, animal ou autre; elle commence sa vraie vie d'âme, mais cependant elle ne s'éloigne pas de sa race, elle ne s'en désintéresse pas de façon complète, elle y demeure encore à l'état d'influence; et elle y reste tant que cette famille, ou cette tribu, demeure, puis rentre ensuite dans la condition ordinaire quand le clan s'éteint.

Dans le cas contraire, c'est-à-dire si l'animal «allié» n'est pas choisi comme totem, l'âme s'éloigne après un temps déterminé, sur lequel les Fàñ ne s'expliquent guère; il dépend surtout des sacrifices funéraires: s'ils sont suffisants, l'ancêtre récompense largement la tribu, puis s'éloigne vers les séjours heureux: dans les cas contraires, loin de récompenser la tribu, il cherchera de tout son pouvoir à lui faire du mal.

Cette conception de la crainte, que nous verrons tout à l'heure donner également naissance à certains totems, relie étroitement le totémisme par un de ses côtés, au mânisme et au culte des ancêtres.

Nous avons affaire, on le voit, dans ces conceptions, à un système fort embrouillé et surtout obscur, d'autant plus difficile à pénétrer que l'on a affaire à des gens peu habitués à raisonner. Par caractère, l'on a toujours remarqué cette tournure de l'esprit noir, et par désir de se débarrasser de vous, ou encore de vous plaire, ils sont toujours enclins à «dire comme vous», à approuver vos idées. Aussi, arriverait-on à des conclusions diamétralement opposées à la vérité en leur posant des interrogations directes. A une phrase posée ainsi: «Ce tigre est rouge, cette route est longue, n'est-ce-pas?» — infailliblement le Noir répondra neuf fois sur dix: «Certainement.» Et une minute après, demandez: «Ce tigre est bleu, ou cette route est courte?» — la réponse sera la même: «Certainement.» Tous les rapports militaires ou d'exploration signalent ce fait, en concluant que le Noir est un «fieffé» menteur. Pour nous, oui, mais pour lui, certes non, car il estime simplement que le Blanc désire une réponse affirmative, et il lui fait ce plaisir, qui lui est parfaitement égal. Mais nullement, dans son idée, il n'a répondu ce qu'il croit vrai, lui-même, et ne s'imagine pas qu'on réclame de lui la vérité telle qu'il la voit.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Aussi, dans ces interrogations, c'est le Noir lui-même qu'il faut «faire» parler, c'est sa propre pensée qu'il lui faut faire exprimer, et non un reflet de la nôtre.

La difficulté de ces concepts religieux ressort également de ce qu'ils peuvent varier de village à village, suivant les individus plus ou moins instruits des traditions. Peu à peu cependant, on arrive à dégager de toutes les réponses un ensemble que l'on ne s'attendait guère d'abord à trouver concordant. Ce manque de renseignements exacts, provenant de tribus et d'individus fort variés, est le défaut de certains auteurs, très méritants cependant, mais qui n'ont pu étudier l'âme noire que dans un faible rayon.

Après avoir constaté l'origine du totem d'après les réponses elles-mêmes des Noirs, passons maintenant à celles de leurs légendes[1] qui se rapportent à se sujet.

§ 2. Origine du totem d'après les légendes.

Nous avons donné précédemment, et il est évident que nous n'y reviendrons pas, la légende totémique du crocodile Ombure, à laquelle il est possible, avec quelque raison, de faire remonter l'origine du culte du crocodile. Bien que ce mythe puisse en être un des facteurs, il doit cependant remonter plus haut encore, tout à fait à l'origine de la race.

Sur la création de l'homme lui-même, les Fâñ ont en effet une légende curieuse, que nous donnons très-abrégée.

Au commencement, disent-ils, quand rien n'était encore, Dieu tira l'homme de l'argile. Bien qu'au premier moment, on puisse croire à une infiltration chrétienne[2] ou à l'influence des dogmes apportés par les missionnaires, nous ne le pensons cependant pas; outre que l'on trouve cette légende dans des clans où il est

[1] Nous n'avons pas donné ces légendes fort curieuses dans nos Etudes précédentes. La première, celle de la Création, a été également recueillie à Ndjolé par Mr. Largeau, et la seconde, celle de la Séparation, par Mr. Forêt, mort depuis administrateur de Porto-Novo, presque dans les mêmes termes que nous-même. Mr. Forêt l'avait transcrite chez les Pahouins du Sud.

[2] Par l'Ethiopie, ou au hasard des migrations à travers le Congo inférieur.

difficile de supposer cette influence, la suite semble démontrer qu'il n'y a là qu'une ressemblance fortuite ou un souvenir survivant des traditions primitives.

Voici cette légende:

I° Légende de la Création.

Esim bium bi mbé dia fe, Mébère a nga vel mur né Quand les choses elles n'étaient pas encore, le Créateur il a fait l'homme avec mètex ékon; a nga nôñ ékon, a nga vel zô né mur. Mur éto, les terres d'argile; il a pris l'argile, il a créé cela en homme. Homme celui-ci, ashuméga dia, a nga shum ñe ane nsüé. Nsüé éto, an'a nga commencement son, il a commencé lui comme lézard. Lézard celui-ci, mais il a bi ñe mélu métan, étam médzim oshü. Mélu métan ve lôn, an'a nga placé lui jours cinq, bassin d'eau la mer. Jours cinq mais passés, et il a ké né ñe étam médzim, an'a nga size ñe éti; mélu nzangwal a to été avec lui bassin les eaux, et il a mis lui dedans; jours sept il fut éti. Alu édi onwam, an'a nga ké dige ñe. Ñina: küge! An'a dedans. Jour le huitième, mais il a été regarder lui. Celui-ci: sors. Et il est nga kü, a to mur. An'a nga zu Mébère na: Abora.
sorti, mais c'était un homme. Et il dit au Créateur que: Merci.

Au commencement donc, avant qu'il n'y eût rien, disent les Fâñ, Dieu seul était là, sans commencement ni fin. Comment était ce Dieu: les Fâñ disent simplement que sa Force remplissait tout.

Nous expliquerons dans notre Etude sur la Religion cette doctrine très spiritualiste, et qu'on croirait à tort, croyons-nous, d'infiltration ou d'influence européenne. Ces traditions, qui nous rappellent les sept jours de la Genèse, sont néanmoins fort curieuses. Dieu s'ennuyait d'être seul: c'est pourquoi il fit d'abord la terre; puis prenant de l'argile, il façonna un être informe. Cet être informe est un lézard, un saurien terrestre. Pendant cinq jours, il le laisse dans une sorte de lente incubation, préparant les «autres choses», et «faisant la mer», me disait un autre récit, qui s'accorde d'ailleurs avec celui-ci, pendant cinq jours, creusant le bassin des eaux. Puis, le cinquième jour passé, la terre et la mer étant terminées (et c'est en somme le premier jour génésiaque), le Créateur plonge le saurien d'argile dans les eaux; il y séjournera sept jours

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

avant d'en sortir à l'appel divin, et d'en sortir «homme». Le Fâñ, dans sa concision extrême, nous semble vraiment très beau: «Celui-ci: Sors! et il sortit et il était homme, et il dit à Dieu: Merci!»

Exprimer en moins de mots et dépeindre plus nettement une scène aussi belle nous paraît difficile! L'ordre absolument impératif: Sors!, l'obéissance immédiate, et le premier sentiment qui s'échappe de l'homme: Merci!, sentiment de reconnaissance, mais aussi sentiment profondément humain: c'était un homme, ce n'était plus une bête.

Dans ces lointaines traditions, l'école évolutionniste et matérialiste pourra trouver peut-être une confirmation de ses idées, en montrant combien ces idées de transformisme datent de loin dans l'humanité. Nous y verrons pour nous, au contraire, une nouvelle trace des souvenirs antiques: Dieu tirant l'homme de la terre. Mais sans entrer ici dans ces considérations qui alourdiraient notre Etude, constatons simplement, à l'origine primitive de l'humanité, l'existence du saurien; et de là au crocodile, il n'y a qu'un pas: nsüé, en fâñ, désigne en effet le crocodile terrestre, vulgairement le grand lézard. De cette existence primitive, à lui rendre un culte, puisque en somme c'était l'être primitif, le prototype de l'homme, et, qu'à côté de la race humaine, la race du crocodile subsistait, la transition était facile. En tout cas, les Fâñ l'ont faite, et volontiers, à ce souvenir et à cette tradition qui a dû laisser des traces plus profondes que Ombure, j'attribuerais le culte primitif du crocodile remontant ainsi aux origines mêmes de la race. Le mythe d'Ombure ne serait qu'une confirmation de ce même mythe antique: le totem de la race qui, négligé pour une raison ou une autre, ou abandonné, se serait vengé de terrible façon.

Ce culte des animaux aquatiques se retrouve également dans la plus grande partie des peuples africains, aussi bien que jadis, avec nos Tarasques, dans les traditions européennes. Dans l'Afrique entière, on parle de redoutables amphibies des grands fleuves «qui n'existent probablement que dans l'imagination» [1]. Je serais beaucoup moins affirmatif à ce sujet, ayant de fortes raisons d'être moins sceptique [2]. De fait, le lamentin, l'hippopotame, le crocodile, sont regardés comme ancêtres par un grand nombre de tribus. Les Fáñ, eux, reconnaissent simplement le crocodile [1]. Nous admettons volontiers pour ce mythe les antiques traditions dont nous avons parlé.

[1] Opinion de plusieurs explorateurs et savants . . . en chambre.

[2] Voir article publié à ce sujet dans le Bull. de la Sté de Bordeaux en 1902.

IIe Légende de la Séparation.

«Autrefois, il y a longtemps, me raconta un jour Esun-mbé, chef d'Akule Nzam (la sortie du Marais), au pays de la rivière Karagwa [2], le Créateur venait de faire les hommes. Cette histoire, je ne l'ai pas inventée, mon père me l'a fait apprendre, et ce n'était pas lui qui l'avait imaginée. Les hommes de ma race la racontent à leurs enfants, et leurs enfants la tiennent de leurs pères: c'est Ndun, notre ésayóñ, qui nous l'a donnée. Et voici ses paroles.

Le Créateur avait fait les hommes, puis après eux le gorille, et puis le singe, et puis les Nains de la forêt, et puis les autres animaux, et tous vivaient ensemble dans de grands villages: la paix régnait parmi eux, et c'était Ndun qui les commandait tous. Lorsqu'il y avait une palabre, soit entre les hommes, soit entre les animaux, on comparaissait devant lui et il jugeait avec sagesse, car il était vieillard et prudent, et ses frères l'aidaient: Mézu béñabur, mvéye = Bonnes sont les paroles des anciens [3]. Souvent, le Créateur descendait au village, et on lui rendait l'honneur qui lui était dû,

---

[1] Nous avons trouvé une seule fois le lamentin, mońa, comme totem de clan.

[2] Importante rivière et affluent de la Hte Alna, près du pays des Dzèm.

[3] Bien plus tard, à deux cents lieues de là, on me contait ainsi la même légende dans une toute autre tribu. Nous ne citons que le commencement: il prouve assez l'antiquité de ce récit, presque identique, malgré l'éloignement des deux conteurs. «Et en ce temps là, il arriva» que les hommes n'étaient pas encore nombreux sur la terre. Non, ils n'étaient pas nombreux, et toutes les familles de la tribu habitaient le même grand village. Chaque matin, toutes les femmes prenaient la grande jarre de terre séchée au soleil, la mettaient sur leur épaule et descendaient à la fontaine pour chercher l'eau. Pour les premières, la difficulté n'existait pas: ayant rempli leur jarre dans l'eau qui courait rapide et claire, elles la reposaient vite au bord de la rive, puis s'accrochant aux racines des arbres penchés sur l'eau, elles trempaient leurs jambes, et riant et folâtrant, se baignaient à loisir. Mais quand les dernières arrivaient, car elles étaient dix et dix et dix au village et même encore beaucoup plus (je n'étais pas là et je ne les ai pas comptées, mon père tient de son grand'père, et encore bien avant, l'histoire que je vous raconte), les premières riant de toutes leurs forces, ne voulaient point céder la place, et elles se moquaient des autres etc.

et il s'entretenait avec Ndun. La paix régnait aux villages, et le Créateur était content.

Mais la dispute vint bientôt. Elle vint lorsque parmi les femmes, il y eut beaucoup de vieilles, et qu'il y eût aussi beaucoup de jeunes. En allant aux plantations, les vieilles femmes marchaient vite, vite, et les jeunes devaient suivre: et arrivant aux plantations, il fallait travailler, travailler beaucoup, les vieilles femmes chargeaient les jeunes, et celles-ci se plaignaient, mais leurs maris leur donnaient tort, et Ndun également: La femme doit travailler: Bisé bunga, bunga bésé = Travail pour les femmes, et pour toutes les femmes. Mais chaque matin, ce n'était plus la même chose. Dès que le vieux chef était sorti de sa case, lorsque le coq avait dressé ses plumes sur le haut du toit des cases et lancé son appel, toutes les femmes, suivant l'ordre qu'elles en avaient reçu, prenaient les vases et allaient à la fontaine chercher de l'eau. Cette fontaine était placée au fond de la vallée, car Ndun avait établi son village sur le haut de la colline, tout à fait comme celui-ci, pour être plus près du soleil qui réchauffait son corps déjà vieux. Le soleil est une très bonne chose: Dzô da fè[1], nzoẋ za byè = Le soleil brille, l'éléphant vient au monde.

Toutes les femmes allaient chercher de l'eau, les jeunes et les vieilles: les jeunes allaient vite, vite, et les plus vieilles, doucement, doucement (car elles craignaient de tomber). Dès qu'elles arrivaient à la fontaine[2], les jeunes femmes et les filles se hâtaient de puiser

[1] Dicton familier. On le dit souvent quand le soleil brille, et l'interlocuteur répond: Mveñ ze sôñ, la pluie vient et féconde.

[2] Ce qu'on désigne par fontaine en fàñ se rendrait plus exactement par mare. C'est en effet une dépression remplie d'eau, alimentée par une source, et bien éclairée par le soleil. Toute la journée, le soleil l'échauffe à loisir. Matin et soir, les femmes viennent à la fontaine puiser l'eau nécessaire à la journée, et pour ce faire, entrent dans l'eau jusqu'à mi-corps, écartent de la main les impuretés de la surface et prennent de l'eau. Elles reportent ensuite leurs vases sur le bord et continuent leur bain qui est beaucoup moins un souci de propreté qu'un agréable rafraîchissement.

Toute la journée, les enfants sont aussi à la fontaine et à la rivière. Mais les Fàñ ne sont nullement difficiles sur la qualité de l'eau. Pourvu qu'elle ne soit pas absolument polluée, ils se préoccupent assez peu qu'elle soit fraîche et pure. Peut-être leur opinion a-t-elle une certaine base: on a constaté, en effet, maintes fois, que les eaux froides, ou cachées dans la forêt à l'abri du soleil, sont dangereuses et remplies de microbes, souvent empoisonnées par les racines des arbres et détritus végétaux.

de l'eau plein leurs vases, puis entrant dans l'eau, elles se baignaient et dansaient dans l'eau; quand les vieilles femmes arrivaient, l'eau de la fontaine était trouble; comme elles étaient pressées de remonter, il fallait puiser l'eau et la terre; quand le mari voulait boire, il ne trouvait qu'une eau vaseuse, et il criait très fort. Les vieilles femmes avaient beau dire, il criait, et après quelques reproches aux jeunes femmes, tout continuait comme par le passé. Les vieilles femmes étaient méchantes le soir, et les jeunes encore plus le matin. Or, un matin, les jeunes femmes s'étaient plus hâtées que les autres jours; cette nuit-là, il avait beaucoup plu, et les vieilles femmes allaient doucement, doucement car le sol était glissant. Quand elles arrivèrent à la fontaine, les jeunes femmes avaient déjà puisé leur eau, elles avaient fini de se baigner; quand les vieilles survinrent, les jeunes chantaient[1] pour se moquer d'elles.

Et elles chantaient:

Bowa, Bowa, mur a ne oshua	Allez, allez, celui qui est le premier,
A dige bur bé mvuza	Qu'il regarde celui qui est le dernier,
Mvulléga, maréga	Courez-vite, hâtez-vous,
Bivès bilaréga ba wuż kważ, kważ[2]	Les jointures des os crient kwark, kwark[3]
Ah, ohé, hé, bibma bi tôleba	Ah! ohé, hé, les fruits sont mûrs.

[1] Les femmes fàñ ont l'esprit très caustique: dans leurs chants, elles savent dire les choses les plus piquantes sans en avoir l'air.

[2] L'air de cette chanson est demeuré encore aujourd'hui fort connu, et fournit même un rythme de danse.

[3] Les jeunes filles, arrivées les premières, se moquent des vieilles, plus lentes, et dont les jointures craquent.

[1]

ils ont fini de mûrir!

Elles se moquaient des autres, et elles chantaient: Bvwa, bvwa! Les vieilles femmes étaient furieuses! Elles avaient beau se hâter, elles étaient toujours les dernières, et quand enfin elles pouvaient descendre puiser l'eau, les jeunes femmes étaient déjà parties, l'eau était toute boueuse. Ah! les vieilles femmes n'étaient pas contentes! Et alors, elles remontaient au village:

Soulevez la charge

La colline est dure, Le soleil est chaud, je suis vieille!

Et quand les pauvres vieilles arrivaient en haut, tout essouflées, tout haletantes, au seuil des cases, les jeunes femmes, assises sur le kwa[2], se gaussaient d'elles, et chantonnaient l'ironique refrain:

Ah! ohé, hé, bibma bi toleba, ha! Ah! ohé, oh!
les fruits ont fini de mûrir, ah! ohé, oh!

Endurer pareil affront, subir journellement pareils outrages, les matrones s'en sentaient incapables, et bientôt les coups pleuvaient: Yi, yi, yi, kwas, kwas, yi, yi![3] et les cruches cassaient, le sang coulait, les unes pleuraient, et les autres boitaient . . . la situation

---

[1] Cette danse ressemble à notre polka, mais le deuxième temps est beaucoup plus rapide, le pied gauche partant le premier, et au deuxième temps, le pied droit exécutant un rapide jeté, avant de rejoindre le pied gauche: le danseur frappe des mains au premier pas de chaque mesure, et le tamtam frappe la première note fortement, laisse la deuxième, et donne deux petits coups à la troisième. Le hé isolé est «glissé» sur le tamtam.

[2] Sorte d'escabeau à trois pieds, taillé d'un seul morceau dans un bloc de bois, et qui fait partie intégrante du mobilier de toute case de Fâń.

[3] Yi, c'est-à-dire «les pleurs», kwas, les coups.

ne pouvait durer ainsi! Chaque jour, nouvelles disputes, chaque jour, nouveaux coups, et bientôt naturellement, les hommes se mirent de la partie. Les jeunes prenaient parti pour les jeunes, les vieux prenaient parti, qui pour les vieilles, qui pour les jeunes. Le chef du village dit: «Cela ne peut pas durer ainsi!» Tous les guerriers furent du même avis: «Cela ne pouvait durer ainsi», d'autant que les femmes, jeunes ou vieilles, perdaient maintenant tout leur temps à faire de nouvelles jarres, tant on en cassait! Pour aller chercher de la terre à poterie il y avait loin: les hommes n'étaient pas contents. Les femmes étaient encore plus fâchées.

Le vieux chef du village appelle donc le sonneur de trompe:

«Prends ton élana, lui dit-il, et parcours le village, en appelant les hommes.»

Le sonneur prit son élana d'ivoire et parcourut tout le village, en appelant les hommes. Ils vinrent tous dans la case du grand chef (maison commune) [1] et prirent place sur les bancs: les femmes vinrent aussi, mais on les fit rester dehors, comme c'est la loi, et elles regardaient par les fentes des bambous: elles écoutaient aussi.

La délibération fut longue: chacun prenait parti pour les siens; finalement il fut décidé ceci: à tour de rôle, chaque parti descendrait à son tour chercher de l'eau le premier. Le premier jour, les vieilles femmes devaient descendre d'abord, les jeunes ensuite; le second jour, les jeunes d'abord, les vieilles après. Et là-dessus, on se sépara.

Le lendemain matin, les jeunes femmes, jarre sur le dos, attendaient impatiemment . . . Au tour des vieilles d'abord . . . Et voilà bien une autre affaire . . . les jeunes attendaient, attendaient, et personne ne voulait plus être vieille! . . .

---

[1] Nous avons été témoins d'une scène toute semblable dans un village fáń du Ht Nùm: à notre arrivée dans ce village, le chef venait de faire appeler tous ses hommes dans la grande case centrale qui sert partout de maison communale dans nos tribus. Sept à huit cents hommes étaient ainsi groupés, assis sur des bancs, et écoutaient dans un profond silence l'orateur qui développait ses raisons. Il s'agissait d'une guerre à déclarer. A notre arrivée, nul ne sembla faire attention: nous prîmes place au milieu d'eux, et la séance continua sans que l'orateur se fût interrompu. Quand la délibération eut pris fin seulement, on nous demanda «rudement» ce que nous voulions et pourquoi nous étions venus troubler l'assemblée.

Et les disputes recommencèrent . . .

Si bien, que ne pouvant arranger la chose, le vieux chef résolut d'aller au village du Chef de la Race, du Créateur universel, pour lui exposer la palabre. Il ordonne donc à sa femme de lui faire cuire des bananes, les enveloppe dans les feuilles d'amome, y joint un morceau de sanglier, relève son pagne . . . le voilà parti. Bvé [1], bvé, il marche, bvé, bvé, il marche longtemps, et content dans son cœur, car les présages ont été favorables; en partant, l'oiseau mbva a chanté à sa droite [2], et les cigales fifé l'ont salué au passage de leur cri strident. Bvé, bvé, il marche: le soleil a dépassé le milieu du ciel; il monte la grande colline, il monte à grand'peine, car le chemin est dur, et il arrive enfin à la grande caverne du Tonnerre. Dans sa main, il tient le fétiche protecteur, et en même temps, il chante le chant consacré, le chant qui met à l'abri des fureurs de l'Esprit Nzalâń (Tonnerre):

[1] Imitation de sa marche pénible.

[2] Les Fâń attribuent une très grande importance aux présages et interprètent les cris de beaucoup d'oiseaux. Si, par exemple, partant en voyage, ils entendent le cri du grand-duc (ou d'un grand oiseau de nuit semblable à ce dernier) ils rentreront chez eux et interromperont leur voyage. De même, si en partant du village, ils voient un petit oiseau noir, c'est présage de mort. La cigale, au contraire, porte bonheur.

[3] Le Tonnerre n'est pas en général redouté des Fâń, et dans la forêt, ils s'en moquent plutôt, car ils se croient bien à l'abri de ses attaques. De fait, dans les bois, avec le nombre infini de grands arbres, qui attirent et déchargent vite la foudre, il y a peu de danger pour les hommes qui circulent dans les sentiers; il en est tout autrement dans la montagne dénudée.

«O Tonnerre, o Tonnerre, Père et Seigneur, Seigneur et Père, écoute favorablement les prières et accueille les dons. J'ai mangé le mélan[1] (= je suis initié) et je suis consacré avec les prêtres de la nuit. Ecoute, ô Tonnerre, ô Père, ô Seigneur.»

Ce refrain est repris par l'assemblée: le narrateur continue ensuite par un chant assez long dont les termes archaïques échappent en partie aujourd'hui à la compréhension des indigènes, évocation au Tonnerre, fils du Ciel et de la Nuit, roi de la Foudre et des Eclairs, chef des Morts au sombre visage.

Le vieux chef a dépassé la caverne: il arrive au village du Dieu Créateur, et le voici en sa présence.

«Ah! Mbola, lui dit-il[2].

Et Nzame lui répond: «Mbola, chef des Hommes. Tu es venu?

— Oui, je suis venu, et voici ma requête. Dans mon village, la paix s'est enfuie, les femmes ne veulent plus obéir, les hommes n'écoutent plus ma voix. Que faire?

Et Nzame lui demande: «Pourquoi les femmes ne veulent-elles pas obéir? pourquoi les hommes n'écoutent-ils plus ta voix?»

Et le vieux chef, appuyé sur son bâton, déroula sa barbe tressée[3] et commença son discours:

---

[1] Dans la fête d'Initiation (evôm) ceux qui doivent être initiés mangent encore aujourd'hui le mélan, écorce de l'Erythrophlœum Guineense, qui cause, à faible dose, une sorte d'ivresse extatique, et à haute dose, la mort. Deux espèces très différentes fournissent le mélan. Dans les fêtes d'initiation proprement dites, aux premières épreuves, on fait absorber aux patients une assiette pleine d'écorce râpée de mélan. C'est alors l'écorce du Tabernanthe Iboga (Baillon), arbuste de 1—2 mètres, dont l'alcaloïde, l'Ibogaïne est somnifuge et aphrodisiaque. Au contraire, dans les «épreuves» et initiations du 2e degré, sous le même nom de mélan, on emploie l'écorce de l'Erythrophlœum guineense, qui renferme un poison dangereux, l'Erythrophlœine; il provoque des convulsions, suivies de l'arrêt du cœur. L'Erythrophlœum est un bel arbre de 30—40 mètres aux belles fleurs blanches. En Casamance, il est connu sous le nom de deli et teli, et sert également de poison d'épreuve. A Madagascar, on trouve l'Eryth. Conminga, avec les mêmes usages et propriétés.

Le chant que nous venons de citer prouve l'antiquité de ces coutumes.

[2] C'est-à-dire: Puisses-tu devenir vieux. C'est le salut ordinaire des Fâû.

[3] Encore aujourd'hui, dans les tribus de l'intérieur, tous les chefs portent la barbe tressée en fines cordelettes réunies ensemble à l'extrémité par un fil de cuivre. Les Fâû ont souvent une barbe majestueuse. Nous avons ainsi pu photographier deux chefs différents: à l'un, une superbe barbe s'étalait à flots

«O Dieu, Créateur, Maître de tout, tu m'as créé chef du village des hommes, cela, c'est bien. Tu as créé les hommes, c'est bien; mais tu as créé les femmes, ce n'est pas bien. Les hommes gardent la paix entre eux, mais avec les femmes, le moyen n'existe pas. Femme et porc-épic, c'est une seule et même chose: Munga né ngôm, nga! biyô [1]. C'est toi qui nous as créés, à toi de nous rendre la paix.»

Et Nzame répondit: «Je te la rendrai.»

«Bien, répondit le chef, tu le peux car tu es le tout Puissant, mais sans cela . . .»

Et ce jour là, Nzame et le vieux chef des hommes demeurèrent ensemble. Ce qu'ils se dirent, il serait trop long de vous le raconter ce soir . . . et puis, je n'y étais pas.

Le lendemain, le vieux chef des hommes vint dire à Nzame: «Je m'en vais.»

Et celui-ci: «Je vais avec toi.»

Et ils partirent ensemble. Longtemps, longtemps, ils descendirent, et le soir enfin ils arrivèrent au village des hommes, et tout le monde y dormait.

Et Nzame dit au chef: «Ne réveille personne, n'annonce ma présence à personne, demain, je veux juger par moi-même des querelles des femmes.»

Et ainsi que Nzame l'avait ordonné, ainsi le fit le vieux chef.

Et ils dormirent.

Au matin, les femmes descendirent à la rivière chercher de l'eau. Les jeunes, ce jour-là, étaient descendues les premières, et les disputes recommencèrent bien vite.

Du haut de la colline, Nzame considérait le spectacle. Et le vieux chef lui dit: «Que feras-tu?»

---

pressés au dessous des genoux; à l'autre, la barbe, moins fournie, dépassait les pieds, lorsqu'il était debout, de plus de 15 cm. De pareils faits ne sont pas rares: cependant, d'une façon générale, les Fâñ ont soin de s'épiler le menton et la lèvre supérieure. C'est un sacrifice rituel sur lequel nous aurons occasion de revenir. Les descendants directs de familles princières ont seuls le droit de porter ainsi la barbe.

[1] Proverbe fâñ dont la signification littérale est celle-ci: Une femme et un porc-épic, n'est-il pas vrai? (a. e. sont même chose). Des épines. Le proverbe joue sur le mot nga qui signifie à la fois «n'est-ce pas» et «femelle».

Mais Nzame répondit: «Aké khu à ñhère ña! L'œuf de poule n'en remontre pas à sa mère[1]. C'est moi qui suis l'Ordonnateur de toutes choses.»

Et quand les femmes furent remontées au village, Nzame fit appeler le sonneur d'élana.

«Parcours le village, lui dit-il, et fais comparaître tous les hommes devant moi. Appelle toutes les femmes, et fais-les comparaître devant moi.»

Et tous les hommes vinrent, et toutes les femmes vinrent aussi. Et Nzame, apparaissant tout à coup au milieu de l'assemblée, le vent tomba, et chacun sentit le froid de la mort dans son cœur. Tous eurent très-peur.

Nzame prit la parole: «C'est moi, Ordonnateur de toutes choses.»

Et l'assemblée, toute entière, reprit: «C'est toi, l'Ordonnateur de toutes choses.»

«C'est bien, dit Nzame, et je suis venu mettre la paix au milieu de mes enfants.

— Tu es venu mettre la paix au milieu de tes enfants.

— Voici donc ce que vous allez faire.

— Voici donc ce que nous allons faire.

— Vous êtes devenus trop nombreux pour vivre sur la même colline, et vous m'avez désobéi: je vous avais dit: «Vous vivrez en paix et sans faire de disputes, vous n'avez pas obéi.»

Les hommes interrompirent en criant: «Ce sont les femmes qui ont désobéi.»

[1] C'est-à-dire un enfant n'interroge pas son père pour savoir ce qu'il fera: il doit obéir en silence.

Mais Dieu leur imposa silence: «Restez silencieux, c'est vous qui êtes les maîtres: Fam a ne fam, munga munga. L'homme est l'homme, la femme est la femme. Vous allez donc vous séparer, les uns iront à droite, les autres iront à gauche. Les uns iront en avant, les autres iront en arrière, et vous resterez en paix.»

Mais le vieillard Ndun, le chef de la race, eut beaucoup de peine dans son cœur en entendant ces paroles, et il tomba en arrière, et il était comme mort. Les femmes crièrent, et commencèrent les lamentations funèbres, et Dieu dit: «J'ai pris Ndun avec moi; parce qu'il est votre père, il doit rester avec vous: c'est moi, le Maître de la vie et de la mort.»

Et tous reprirent: «C'est toi, le Maître de la vie et le Maître de la mort.»

Mais le Créateur: «Ndun est encore vivant; mais il ne peut rester ainsi avec vous.»

Les Hommes ne comprirent pas. Le Créateur répéta: «Les uns iront à droite, les autres iront à gauche et ce sera la séparation: Akane bé kanege. Les uns iront droit devant eux et les autres s'en iront en arrière, et vous resterez en paix.»

Et les hommes répondirent: «C'est bien. Mais les animaux, que feront-ils? Resteront-ils aux villages?»

Et le Créateur: «Prenez avec vous ceux que vous voudrez.»

Et ils choisirent le chien et la poule. Et le chien et la poule restèrent avec eux. Pour les autres, le Créateur dit: «Je vais les renvoyer dans leurs forêts.»

Les hommes réclamèrent: «Ils nous feront du mal.»

Mais le Créateur répondit: «Allez dormir dans vos cases, car voici que la nuit est venue. Demain, vous verrez «les choses».»

Et le lendemain, ils virent ces choses, et elles étaient deux. La première, c'est celle-ci: Ndun, le père de la race, en rentrant dans sa case, eut froid dans son cœur, car son peuple allait le quitter, et il dit à sa femme préférée: «Je suis mort.» Il se couche sur son lit. Le lendemain, il était froid partout et les femmes dirent: «Il est mort.» Nzame dit: «Je le sais, c'est moi, le Maître de la vie, c'est moi, le Maître de la mort. J'ai pris Ndun. Faites les funérailles.»

On fit les funérailles. Les femmes commencèrent les lamentations et le chant de mort [1]. Ce chant de mort, vous le connaissez, nous l'avons gardé.

Chant des derniers moments.

O Tare, yi, yi! zi tare, wa kure dzi?	O Père, hélas, hélas, pourquoi, ô Père, abandonnes-tu ton foyer?
Mur a ngâ yü we, tare!	Un homme t'a tué, ô père!
Mine ké zèn ve ké yèn abhule [2] awn.	Vous chercherez la vengeance de sa mort . . .
Naissim o ké lur éfa ayar . . .	Ton ombre va passer sur la rive opposée [3].

[1] Mgr. Le Roy a également reproduit ce chant de mort dans la «Religion des Primitifs». C'est un des plus beaux que nous connaissions, au point de vue des idées.

[2] Le chant est adressé par les femmes aux hommes présents, d'où l'adjonction.

[3] Allusion au fleuve que les morts doivent passer.

O Tare, zi wa kure dzi, tare?	O Père, pourquoi abandonnes-tu ton foyer, ô père!
Dzô da yèn éndèndâń, mis mi vinéa.	Le ciel s'est éclairé[1], les yeux se sont obscurcis.
Médzim méshûé éli é yô, éfô za kûa	L'eau (la vie) est tombée de l'arbre[2] goutte à goutte, le rat est sorti de son trou.
Ta! é nda tare.	Voyez, c'est la maison du père.
Kolega bilox	Cueillez les herbes funéraires.
Efa méyôm, éfa méyal.	(Aspergez) du côté droit, (aspergez) du côté gauche . . .
Fam a yèn méshol'ba! . . .	Un homme voit maintenant les choses invisibles.

Après le chant de mort, le Créateur ordonna: «Prenez deux femmes, une vieille et une jeune.»

Et on les prit. Et le Créateur dit: «Faites couler leur sang, car c'est moi, le Maître.» On fit couler leur sang et elles moururent. (Maintenant, on ne fait plus ainsi.) Et quand elles furent mortes, le Créateur dit: «Creusez une grande fosse.»

On creusa une grande fosse. Puis le Créateur ordonna: «Mettez Ndun au fond.»

Et quand il y fût étendu: «Maintenant, brûlez les deux femmes.» Et on les brûla. Et quand elles furent brûlées, le Créateur dit: «Cela, c'est le sacrifice, zô to é ne atâń.» Et ainsi vous ferez encore quand je l'ordonnerai: «Je suis le Maître.»

Ils répondirent: «Tu es le Maître.»

Nzame dit encore: «C'est bien: prenez les cendres et gardez-les avec vous: c'est le signe du mystère (ndèm endzèndâń). Je vous protégerai. Prenez ce qui reste des femmes et jetez-le sur le corps de Ndun.» Et on le jeta. «Exécutez maintenant les danses funèbres.» Quand elles furent dansées, le Créateur dit encore: «La nuit où Ndun est mort, à quel animal avez-vous songé?» Et chacun avait songé un animal. Nzame l'avait ainsi voulu.

Et chaque homme nomma un animal. Nzame dit: «C'est bien.» Il leva le doigt et dit seulement: «Je veux.» Et les animaux vinrent, un de chaque espèce, comme chaque homme avait pensé,

[1] Allusion à la croyance des Fǎń: la vie est la flamme qui illumine l'œil: à la mort, celui-ci se ternit, et la flamme de la vie qui est immortelle, reste dans l'atmosphère, d'où encore la croyance aux feux follets.

[2] La vie est comparée à un rat qui s'enfuit de sa retraite.

et il y en avait une grande quantité. Chaque animal vint près de chaque homme, comme il avait songé.

Le Créateur dit: «Que le sang coule.» Chaque homme prit son couteau de sacrifice et trancha le cou de l'animal: le sang coula et couvrit la colline.

Mais les enfants de Ndun réclamèrent: «Pourquoi, nous autres, n'avons-nous pas d'animal?» Le Créateur leur répondit: «Votre tête est vide. N'êtes-vous pas les fils de Ndun et mes enfants? Votre père était le lézard que j'ai fait au commencement des choses, quand il n'y avait rien encore! Que réclamez-vous encore? Je suis fatigué!»

Et les fils de Ndun se turent, car le Créateur était très en colère, et parce qu'ils avaient les cendres de leur Père Ndun. Ils ne dirent plus un mot. Le sang des animaux coula et couvrit toute la colline. Mais des hommes se tenaient là, sans avoir eu aucun animal pour faire répandre le sang. Le Créateur leur dit: «C'est bien. Allez couper les arbres que vous avez vus en songe.» Ils allèrent les couper et revinrent avec le bois. Le Créateur dit: «C'est bien.»

Et ces hommes, en effet, n'avaient pas vu d'animal dans leurs songes, mais ils avaient vu des arbres, chacun un arbre, chacun un arbre. Et l'on mit tout ce bois l'un sur l'autre, un arbre sur un arbre, un arbre sur un arbre. Ainsi fut fait par les hommes, et les autres animaux étaient là, venus des villages. Puis le Maître de la vie dit encore: «Mettez les animaux sur le bois.»

On fit comme il avait ordonné, et tout d'un coup, la chose que nous appelons maintenant «feu» s'éleva, et voici comment. Lorsque tous les animaux furent placés sur le bois, et il y en avait beaucoup, le Créateur fit un signe, et le Tonnerre vint: il éclata, et l'Eclair vint aussi: l'Eclair brilla, et aussitôt on vit une grande flamme s'élever; et le bois brûla. Et le Maître dit: «C'est le Feu.» Les Hommes dirent: «Oui, c'est bien. Le Feu est bon», et le fils aîné de Ndun chanta le chant du feu, le chant que vous connaissez. C'est le fils de Ndun qui chanta le feu le premier[1].

[1] On chante encore ce chant, non pour s'amuser, mais seulement dans les cérémonies de ngola ou d'expiation. C'est surtout un chant après les funérailles, pour procurer le repos à l'âme errante. On le chante encore dans une cérémonie particulière, l'adzi nôme. Lorsque un vieillard est fatigué de la vie, ou accablé d'infirmités incurables, il déclare qu'il veut être brûlé. On Chant du Feu.

Harpe.

Ndua, ndua, ndua dzi ési, ndua dzi é - yô,
Feu, feu, feu du foyer d'en bas, feu du foyer d'en haut,

Myèl wa kũ é ngon, myèl wa kũ é vyè,
Lumière qui brille dans la lune, lumière qui brille dans le soleil,

Otiti wa lamba aluse, otiti wa sale éndèndâñ,
Etoile qui étincelle la nuit, étoile qui fend la lumière (étoile filante), Nsissim nzalâñ, dzis mvès o-kôs, Ndua dzô da yô én-dèndân.

Esprit du tonnerre, œil brillant de la tempête, Feu du soleil qui nous donne la lumière, Très lent. Harpe.

Ma lè we ngoĩa, ndua, ndua.
Je t'appelle pour l'expiation, feu, feu.

Ndua wa lur, méwua é mébo,
Feu qui passe, et tout meurt derrière tes traces,

Ndua wa lur, méñlña é mébo,
Feu qui passe, et tout vit derrière toi,

Bili bi dziga, ašu né ašu,
Les arbres sont brûlés, cendres et cendres,

Biloẋ bi nga fa, biloẋ bi nga wum,
Les herbes ont grandi, les herbes ont fructifié.

Ndua angom né bur, ma lè we ndua, ngoĩa.
Feu ami des hommes, je t'appelle, feu pour l'expiation.

---

construit alors un bûcher avec certaines essences d'arbres, dont l'une surtout brûle en donnant une chaleur extrême, et le cadavre, placé au dessus du bûcher, est vite consumé. Pendant que le cadavre brûle, on exécute au son du tamtam les danses funéraires et on chante en même temps le chant du feu que nous reproduisons ici. Ce chant est exécuté en chœur, le soliste donnant d'abord chaque phrase.

Ndua ma lè we, ndua nkam édzi,
Feu je t'appelle, feu protecteur du foyer,

Wa lur, bé kébana, ké mur édâñ édâñ,
Tu passes, ils sont vaincus, nul ne te surpasse,

Ndua dzi, ma lè we ndua ngoła.
Feu du foyer, je t'appelle pour l'expiation [1].

Lorsque tous les animaux eurent été consumés, les hommes, selon l'ordre qu'ils avaient reçu, recueillirent les os calcinés, et après les avoir broyés en poudre, les gardèrent avec les cendres de Ndun, chacun sa part, chacun sa part. Et le Créateur leur dit: «Cela, c'est l'Alliance de l'Union.» Tous les hommes dirent: «Nous l'aimons ainsi. Nous sommes frères de race.»

Après cela, on jeta les cendres sur le corps de Ndun, et quand la fosse fut comblée, le Créateur ajouta: «Allez chercher des pierres.»

On alla chercher des pierres, et on les mit sur la fosse, et les pierres s'élevèrent très haut, très haut. Le Créateur dit: «Voilà le signe. Quand, en voyage, vous verrez l'endroit où repose un homme, vous jetterez une pierre ou une branche ou une feuille, et vous ferez ainsi.»

Les hommes répondirent: «Nous ferons ainsi.»

Et le vieux chef ajoutait: «Nous avons toujours fait ainsi depuis lors, et c'est pour cette raison que nous agissons comme cela.»

Et quand les pierres furent montées très haut, très haut, le Créateur dit aux hommes: «C'est ainsi la Séparation où il faut se séparer: Akane bé karége.» Les Hommes partirent donc après, les uns à droite, les autres à gauche, les uns partirent en avant, les autres en arrière, et nul ne resta.

Et ceci est la première chose.

La deuxième, la voici. Elle arriva au moment où les hommes allaient se séparer. La deuxième chose, la voici donc:

---

[1] Les chants de ngoła ou d'expiation sont parmi les plus beaux sinon, toujours comme musique, du moins comme élévation poétique de sentiments et d'idées. Le chant du feu est un des plus remarquables.

Récit.

Le Créateur dit aux hommes. «C'est fini. Je ne m'occuperai plus de vous.»

Ils répondirent: «Pardon, oh! Pardon. Tu es notre Père et notre Gardien.»

Mais le Créateur leur répliqua: «L'Esprit de la Race demeurera avec vous, fort et puissant: il vous gardera.»

Tous dirent:

«Mais la nuit est venue.

— Vous irez donc dans vos cases et vous dormirez.»

Tous les hommes allèrent dans leurs cases et dormirent. Le lendemain au matin, ils revinrent dans l'abéñe, et le Créateur demanda:

«Vous avez eu les songes?»

Ils répondirent: «Nous avons eu les songes.»

Et le Créateur demanda: «Quel animal avez-vous vu dans votre songe?»

Et chaque homme avait vu le même animal qu'il avait immolé à Ndun; le Créateur l'avait voulu ainsi, car il dit: «C'est bien, je suis le Maître de la vie et le Maître de la mort. Sortez dans la cour du village.» Ils sortirent donc, et voici que les animaux vinrent aussi, chacun près de chaque homme, comme il avait rêvé. Les autres restèrent dans leurs villages.

Le Créateur dit: «Prenez vos couteaux de sacrifice et faites couler votre propre sang.»

Chacun prit son couteau de sacrifice et fit couler son sang.

Et il dit encore: «Prenez vos couteaux de sacrifice et faites couler le sang de l'animal.» Et ils firent ainsi.

«Prenez le sang de l'animal et mêlez-le au vôtre.» Et ils firent ainsi.

«Prenez votre sang et mêlez-le au sang de l'animal». Et ils firent ainsi.

Mais beaucoup n'étaient pas satisfaits[1]. Tous auraient voulu le tigre comme frère de sang. Mais le Créateur ajouta: «Ké dige

[1] Evidemment, comme la suite le montre, parce qu'ils avaient pris des animaux inférieurs comme frères de sang.

ékô, mur éki zia, mur éki zia. Ne regardez pas l'enveloppe: chaque chose a sa vertu particulière. Je suis votre Père.»

Et ainsi fut fait.

Et le lendemain, tous se séparèrent, chacun avec son animal particulier. Les autres animaux partirent dans la forêt, abandonnant le village où ils vivaient tous ensemble, et chacun fonda sa famille.

Chaque homme partit, emmenant avec lui sa famille, et personne ne resta au village, et chaque famille eut son mvamayôt[1]; c'est en lui qu'entre, après la mort, la Vertu de la Race, ékiayôt.—

Et voilà pourquoi, nous autres Ndun, nous avons le crocodile.»

La fin de ce récit fut bien un peu écourtée! Quand il touchait à son dénouement, à peu près tous les assistants s'étaient retirés, le connaissant déjà. Les autres dormaient, le vieux chef était fatigué, et ne demandait pas mieux que de s'en aller. Pour moi, de temps à autre, surtout aux interminables et monotones couplets qui de temps en temps émaillaient le récit et le prolongeaient de façon bien inutile, je ne jurerais pas de n'avoir pas été quelque peu inattentif. J'avais heureusement avec moi mon fidèle interprète Békalé, content de collectionner pour plus tard des récits qu'il ne connaissait pas encore dans sa race bosyeba; il se promettait bien de les redire plus tard dans la case, le soir, près des grands feux . . .

Nous n'insisterons pas sur ce récit, qui, entre plusieurs autres de même genre, montre cependant clairement l'idée de l'origine du totem d'après les Fàn.

C'est un échange de sang pour s'assurer la protection d'un animal donné pendant la vie, protection qui ne doit pas être mesurée à l'apparence de l'animal. Ce n'est pas un échange de sang pour que l'esprit de la race trouve, après la mort, un nouveau corps qui lui permette de se mouvoir et d'agir: ce serait la métempsycose: les Fàn ne l'admettent pas. C'est, après la mort de l'ancêtre, l'esprit de la famille ou de la race, ou, si l'on préfère, la vertu de la race allant reposer dans un animal, où le

[1] Le mvamayôt a donc seul fait alliance avec le tribu. C'est un parent humain, les autres restent animaux. Et voilà pourquoi aussi, comme nous le disions, on répète de temps à autre cet échange de sang pour «sacrifier» la parenté.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

rejoignent ensuite les émanations de cette vertu ou de cette force pour veiller efficacement sur la race qu'ils ont fondée, ou dont ils ont fait partie.

Aussi, quand Mgr. Le Roy[1] écrit en parlant des «frères de sang»: «Si cette parenté par échange du sang n'est pas tout à fait le totémisme, elle en est du moins «voisine», et nous aidera à le comprendre», nous le croyons plus près encore de la vérité qu'il ne le pense: la parenté par échange du sang, si nous nous en fions au sentiment des Fân, est plus que «voisine» du totémisme: c'en est un dérivé.

§ 3. L'origine du totem d'après les auteurs.

L'étude de l'origine du totem, d'après l'opinion actuelle des Fân, et d'après leurs légendes, relie le présent et le passé. Nous avons ainsi donné à l'origine du totem une cause qui pour être moins répandue que les motifs habituellement assignés, n'en offre pas moins des probabilités aussi grandes.

Les causes de l'origine du totem, ou ce qui est équivalent, du totémisme sont fort diverses, suivant les auteurs: les énumérer toutes serait impossible. Nous nous contenterons donc des principales, et encore seulement en tant qu'elles peuvent se rapporter au système fân. Les unes, nous les combatterons absolument. Pour les autres, nous indiquerons la part de vérité ou de vraisemblance qui peut s'y rattacher.

I° Cause du totémisme: La Crédulité populaire.

La première cause assignée que nous examinerons est celle-ci: la crédulité.

Pourquoi les Noirs ont-ils un totem?

Le totem est né de la simple crédulité des gens, disent les uns.

C'est la réponse la plus facile: ce n'est pas la plus scientifique.

C'est d'ailleurs la doctrine de ceux qui n'admettent aucun sentiment religieux chez les Noirs, et il y a de ces gens. C'est également la pensée de ceux qui, rejetant tout examen critique, attribuent, à priori,

[1] La Religion des Primitifs, op. cit.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

toute croyance religieuse à la pure naïveté des gens. Un croyant n'est autre chose qu'un naïf, un abusé, quelque soit sa religion. Ainsi dira au sujet du totem des indigènes du Niger, le Colonel Bruce[1] en s'appuyant sur le témoignage plus ou moins autorisé et assez peu probant des indigènes musulmanisés, c'est-à-dire, dit-il, déjà civilisés (ou dégagés de la superstition, ce qui est équivalent).

Ainsi, un homme qui a vécu longtemps parmi les Hottentots, Levaillant, par ailleurs naturaliste de valeur, écrit: «L'usage qu'on prête aux Hottentots de consulter les entrailles d'un mouton . . . et tous les contes de cette espèce, sont tout au plus dignes d'amuser le peuple. Là où il n'y a ni religion ni culte, il ne peut exister de superstition. Il n'y a ni médecins, ni prêtres, et dans l'idiome hottentot, aucun mot n'exprime aucune de ces choses. Il serait étonnant que ces peuples que j'ai si souvent fréquentés, avec lesquels j'ai vécu si longtemps, eussent été assez adroits ou assez faux pour se cacher de moi, au point que je ne me fusse jamais aperçu, ni par leurs discours, ni dans leur pratique de vivre, d'aucun signe ou d'aucun acte de superstition. Je me garderai bien de donner comme des usages religieux certaines privations qu'ils s'imposent d'eux-mêmes; par exemple, ils ne mangent jamais de lièvre, ni de la gazelle nommée duykers . . .»

Et si l'on en recherche la raison, Levaillant n'est pas embarrassé pour la trouver:

«Le lièvre est un animal informe (?) qui les dégoûte, la viande du duykers est trop noire, et ces animaux sont trop maigres.»

En somme, le Hottentot, sans aucun culte ni religion, mais «dans l'état de nature, est essentiellement bon» tandisque les Blancs n'ont que «des vertus factices dont les noms nous sont à peine connus, et le régime consenti par personne». On s'étonne que de semblables voyageurs puissent même noter un acte de superstition! Nous ne nous attarderons pas à réfuter Levaillant. Depuis longtemps, on a fait justice de ces assertions, et aujourd'hui, non-seulement on a reconnu une religion aux Hottentots, mais on l'a étudiée à fond. Nous sommes loin d'ailleurs de vouloir paraître même assimiler Bruce, qui est un savant de valeur, à Levaillant, voyageur remarquable, mais observateur médiocre, et surtout prévenu, en sa qualité de philosophe, hostile avant tout à n'importe quelle idée religieuse.

[1] Bruce, du Niger au Golfe de Guinée, t. II, Le totem.

«Ils conviennent à Kong, dit Bouza, que ceux qui ont imaginé la coutume des tewé [totem — nlèvé, et non téwé] étaient des gens bien simples, voir même des malins, disent-ils, car on ne trouve jamais comme tewé le bœuf, le mouton ou autre animal comestible, à moins qu'il ne soit d'une rareté telle qu'il soit introuvable, comme un bœuf absolument noir, n'ayant pas un poil blanc!»

De même, nous pouvons remarquer chez nos Fâñ, pareille restriction pour les totems qui au premier abord sembleraient trop communs, tel le sanglier, l'antilope, le mica, l'iguane: ils doivent alors réunir un ensemble de conditions qui les rendent vraiment dignes de leur qualité, et du respect que leur témoignera la tribu.

«Quelle douce privation en effet de se passer de la fantaisie de manger ou de toucher:

Un merle métallique.
Un vautour urubon.
Un petit sénégalais (merle d'oiseau).
Un bœ.
Un trigonocéphale.
Un lion.
Un légume sauvage qui ne rentre jamais dans l'alimentation courante.
Du lait de fauve.
Une certaine variété de mouches!

Les Dioula l'ont si bien compris qu'ils ont laissé tomber les tewé dans l'oubli.»

IIe Cause de totémisme: Survivances de l'ancien culte familial.

En rapportant le passage de Bouza, Ancze[1] propose une opinion diamétralement opposée, que nous ne pouvons d'ailleurs adopter pour les Fâñ, pas plus que la précédente. Pour lui, ce sont les restes de l'ancien culte familial; à la rigueur, on pourrait l'admettre, mais ces restes sont aussi le souvenir de l'ancien état de l'humanité errant par bandes dans les forêts, animaux plus ou moins perfectionnés, évoluant vers l'état actuel. Cette théorie évolutionniste place l'homme auprès, sinon au dessous du singe.

Evidemment nous ne saurions admettre, ni d'ailleurs discuter et réfuter ici cette opinion.

Mais laissons parler Ancze, bien que cette citation soit un peu longue; nous la donnons cependant, car à d'autres points de vue, elle est intéressante et, par certains endroits, pourrait s'appliquer à nos Fâñ.

[1] La Guinée française, op. cit., p. 249. Art.: Les Tewé.

«Les Dioula [1] l'ont si bien compris qu'ils ont laissé tomber les tonsi dans l'oubli, dit Bouche. Nous dirons plutôt que ces Dioula (Soninké) ne comprennent plus les touchantes légendes de leurs ancêtres, nous montrant l'animal humain errant par bandes, comme le chimpanzé actuel, et trouvant parmi les autres créatures, bestioles ou fauves, reptiles ou poissons, des ennemis ou des alliés. Ils sont, hélas, déjà trop civilisés. Comment ces marchands pour qui Allah représente la création entière (Allah! mot qui explique tout), comment ces marmotteurs de patenôtres peuvent-ils saisir les mystères étranges de la brousse! Il leur est désormais interdit de pénétrer les arcanes de cette nature, de communier avec elles. Plus jamais, ils ne vivront ce temps où «les bêtes parlaient», plus jamais ils ne connaîtront les secrets des plantes et des minéraux.

«Mais s'ils ne comprennent plus, ils savent que le ntiné existe dans leur famille, et il ne faut pas en croire leur renoncement. C'est la seule manière d'arriver à obtenir une réponse, à condition d'user d'une patience inaltérable. Il faut tenir compte aussi de la crainte superstitieuse qui s'attache à l'énonciation du ntiné. Car non seulement il ne faut pas toucher, ni manger l'être animé ou inanimé qui sert d'emblème à la famille, mais encore il est très souvent dangereux de le regarder, et il faut en parler le moins possible.

«Lorsque ces Dioula de Kong disaient que les emblèmes éponymes ont été choisis parmi des objets presque introuvables et lorsqu'ils donnaient comme unique conséquence de cette croyance la défense de manger le tiné, ils trompaient volontairement leur interlocuteur. Ainsi les Bamana ne construisent pas leurs toitures avec la paille qui est un ntiné pour eux. Or, la paille n'est pas rare, et de plus, ils se soumettent, ce faisant, à une gêne incontestable.»

Pareil fait existe chez les Fân: c'est ainsi que nous avons rencontré dans un village les cases faites en vannerie, en bambous entrelacés, au lieu de l'être comme partout ailleurs, en bambous ou en écorces d'arbres. Recherches faites, les bambous étaient en

[1] Les Dioula sont une fraction des Soninké, la grande tribu de la Guinée française dont le totem éponyme est le sané ou lamantin. La légende nous les montre sacrifiant au peuple des rivières.

La réflexion des Dioula citée par Bouche nous paraît d'autant plus fausse que nombre de leurs tribus ont, non pas des totems rares, mais des totems très que l'on se rencontre partout. Ainsi la famille des tribus Fofana s, d'après Bouche, les totems suivants: l'éléphant, le lion, la panthère, le serpent (sup.) et le bœ. Les Dioula ont eux-mêmes «la tête de chèvre». Les Soninké ont le lion et le caïman, les Bangoura le léopard, les Kamara le mange mil, les Touré l'éléphant et le serpent à deux têtes. Les Samoura, l'éléphant, dont ils portent le nom: Samou. La grande tribu des Malinké, l'hippopotame; ils se divisent en trois fractions ayant le rat palmiste, la panthère et l'iguane comme ntiné, le bœ, le campagnol et le serpent trigonocéphale. Les Bamana ou Bambara ont le caïman comme ntiné collectif et leurs subdivisions, les chiens Sidés, le chien, le lion, le lait de fauve (berlaba) le piment, le singe vert, le chien.

On voit la grande variété de ces totems ou ntiné.

effet rares dans le pays, mais en pleine forêt, rien de plus facile à trouver que l'écorce de l'arbre qui est toujours employé à cet effet, à cause de sa facilité à se détacher d'un seul morceau. A nos interrogations, le chef répondit simplement: C'est éki, c'est défendu pour nous, et il détourna la conversation, car on ne doit pas parler des éki, de même qu'au pays soso. Je sus plus tard que cet arbre était son niéné: il ne pouvait donc en employer l'écorce.

«Au contraire, s'il était défendu seulement aux Bamana de ne pas manger de paille, ce ne serait pas une cruelle privation, et les gens de Kong auraient parfaitement raison dans leurs conclusions.

«C'est donc une conception erronée que de représenter les croyances au niéné uniquement comme une défense de manger l'être symbolique. Elles sont basées sur des idées d'un ordre plus élevé qui ont peu à peu perdu une partie de leur signification» [1].

Nous retrouvons la syllabe ma dans la plupart des peuples de l'Afrique occidentale: Mandé, hommes de ma, Mandingo (Mandingues), Enfants de ma, Malara (hommes de ma).

«Ma est, à n'en pas douter, un terme qui désigne l'ancêtre commun divinisé. Cet ancêtre, Garama, a donné son nom aux Garamantes, peuples de Lybie, ancêtres de nos Africains actuels [2]. Garama était un homme blanc, venu par mer. Aussi, comme le Viracucha péruvien, ce Dieu paraît avoir été d'origine marine et nous savons que les Grecs prirent en Lybie le culte d'Okéanos. Là également, et non loin du pays des Garamantes, ils avaient fait naître le peuple des Tritons, Amphitrite etc. Or le terme ma désigne chez les Mandé les puissants animaux qui sillonnent les eaux des fleuves africains, animaux dont ils se disent parents, ma, le lamentin (mâba en fâ), bama, le caïman [ngan], mali l'hippopotame [nzok mâdzim, éléphant d'eau], d'où les Malinké et les Bamana qui forment la souche Mandé . . . En définitive . . . Garamantes signifie à notre avis Hommes de ma, tout comme ma-ndé, et ma-ndi-ké [3].»

Pour Ancin, le niéné n'est donc que l'ancêtre commun divinisé. C'est relativement facile à admettre lorsqu'il s'agit d'un animal ou

[1] Ancin, pp. 248, 249.

[2] Voir chez Ancin, l. c., p. 250 et m. la série de preuves.

[3] Ancin, p. 190.

ou d'un oiseau, voir d'un poisson ou d'un arbre, plus difficile lorsqu'il s'agit, par exemple, d'une calebasse brisée. Il est vrai que les Noirs l'expliquent alors par une punition infligée à l'ancêtre.

L'origine du totem pour cet auteur est donc assez simple: c'est l'ancien état de la tribu perpétué à travers les âges, avec les modifications nécessaires du temps. «Il semble que la société ait universellement débuté sous la forme du clan, qui représente la race[1]. Ainsi le clan aryen qui s'appelait gôtra, la vacherie. En se désagrégeant au profit d'associations plus restreintes, il a produit les différents types de familles. Le nténé du clan devint l'origine des cultes domestiques[2], les familles identifiant l'être éponyme à leur premier patriarche, puis à la longue l'associant seulement à l'existence de ce dernier. Le premier père de famille, la première mère de famille, suivant que la famille était agnatique ou cognatique devinrent des héros divinisés, et tous ceux qui pouvaient se rattacher en ligne directe à ces demi-dieux devinrent des patrons, chargés de perpétuer le culte de la famille et la famille elle-même.»

Nous avons déjà fait ressortir, en parlant de la formation du clan, que nous étions absolument opposés à ce mode d'origine. Quant à l'ancêtre divinisé, tout au plus pourrait-on concilier que Nzame, mot que nous employons pour désigner Dieu, fût le premier de la race fân, divinisé dans la suite des âges. Ce point fort douteux sera discuté plus tard en parlant de la religion des Fân.

Nous ne saurions donc admettre l'opinion de ces premiers auteurs et de toute l'école évolutionniste, lorsqu'elle dit par exemple: «Nous croyons qu'il y a dans ces légendes (totémiques) une tradition aussi vieille que l'homme, qui rattache son origine à l'espèce animale[3], d'où un grand respect pour les animaux.

---

[1] C'est-à-dire, comme l'explique l'auteur, les hommes ont commencé par errer en bandes, comme les animaux.

[2] Nous avons montré en temps et lieu le mal-fondé de cette opinion: le culte domestique est alors plus ancien, et le premier des cultes, au moins contemporain du culte de l'ancêtre éponyme.

[3] Cf. Les idées d'évolution dans l'Antiquité et dans le Moyen Age, par Fréd. Houssaye.

«Les théories évolutionnistes n'ont fait que revêtir cette antique doctrine d'apparences scientifiques, et nous cherchons à leur lumière, dans les Iles de la Sonde, les traces du Pithécanthrope. Ce que nous avons observé dans les croyances nègres nous permet d'être affirmatif sur ce point: l'homme pour le Noir est le parent des animaux: ceux-ci sont les ancêtres de celui-là.»

Ce point est complètement faux pour les Fàń qui distinguent nettement. Nzame créa d'abord les hommes, puis les singes, puis les animaux. Les animaux ont une âme, nsissim, mais non pas le khun, en qui est la partie essentielle avec le ki[1].

On leur prête les sentiments et les pensées humaines. Le singe est, toujours, le plus rapproché de nous. C'est un homme dégénéré, non en ce sens qu'il ait d'abord été homme, mais parce que Nzame l'a créé après l'homme. C'est le vieil homme, «l'ancêtre», traduirait un Darwinien. Il a, comme l'homme normal, sa famille et sa nation.

Le cynocéphale était pour les Egyptiens l'emblème de l'éloquence, de la sagesse de la raison. Le Nègre a les mêmes idées: pour lui, le singe est un «malin». Il sait très bien parler, mais il sait aussi que l'usage de la parole est funeste et que c'est une des causes de l'asservissement de l'homme. Aussi refuse-t-il de parler pour ne pas être obligé de travailler! Cette explication, on le voit, ne manque pas de saveur[2].

[1] Cf. 1ère partie: l'âme fàń.

[2] L'on se garde bien d'ailleurs de troubler la quiétude de ces heureux singes. Mais si par hasard l'un d'eux s'est laissé attraper et se trouve prisonnier d'un Blanc, tout en lui donnant à manger des bagatelles, ce sont des sarcasmes sans fin de toute la marmaille des environs. «Travaille, travaille», crie-t-on à la pauvre bête qui essaie de tromper sa nostalgie en allées et venues, aussi loin que sa chaîne le lui permet. «Nous savons bien pourquoi vous voulez tous ces chimpanzés, disaient les Noirs aux demandes qui leur étaient adressées d'en capturer pour les expériences de l'Institut Pasteur, nous savons bien pourquoi vous voulez tous ces chimpanzés. C'est pour les faire travailler à votre chemin de fer!» Il est certain que lorsqu'on a remarqué ce que ces animaux arrivent à faire quand on les éduque et même en observant leur genre de vie à l'état sauvage, on ne peut s'empêcher d'être surpris.

Une légende au sujet des singes est encore rapportée par Mr. Cuonier: Au début du monde, Dieu avait défendu d'aller à la pêche le samedi, mais une partie des anciens hommes dédaigna les ordres divins, et celui-ci les punit en les changeant en singes. De là, les fidèles observent fidèlement le samedi.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

«Beaucoup d'animaux possèdent plus ou moins les qualités que l'on reconnaît au singe. Non seulement le chien crie, mais il parle quand il aboie.

«La hyène est un «ancien esprit». C'est le Nama koro, le vieux Nama.

«Le respect du pasteur pour ses bœufs est très grand. On ne tue un bœuf que lorsqu'il est à toute extrémité: il est interdit de toucher à la vache. Jamais non plus un veau n'est immolé.»

De toutes ces traditions, et de beaucoup d'autres que l'on retrouve aussi bien chez les Fân que dans les autres tribus, l'école évolutionniste infère l'origine animale de l'homme; le totémisme n'en serait qu'une survivance. Nous y voyons bien souvent, au contraire, des lois d'utilité publique ou toute autre raison, et nullement l'origine totémique.

Mais passons à une autre cause, qui réunit également une certaine quantité de partisans, et que certains d'entre eux ont appelé le Métamorphosisme.

III° Cause du totémisme: Le Métamorphosisme.

Deux causes déjà de totémisme ont été étudiées: la naïveté des gens, puis la survivance ou le souvenir de ces temps anciens où l'évolution de l'homme n'étant pas achevée, le laissait encore au rang des animaux de la forêt, dont il partageait à la fois les instincts et la vie. Cette doctrine n'est, en aucun point, celle des Fân.

Une troisième cause se présente à nous: ce que nous pourrions appeler le «métamorphosisme».

Mgr. Le Roy[1] l'a décrit ainsi:

«Il est possible et probable que, en bien des cas, il [le totémisme] se soit rattaché, par assimilation, à d'autres origines.

«Si, par exemple, un ancêtre respecté ou craint comme sorcier émérite a annoncé, fait comprendre, ou manifesté d'une façon quelconque que, à sa mort, son âme passerait en telle ou telle créature, cette déclaration suffira pour créer le culte totémique chez ses descendants.»

[1] Cf. Religion des Primitifs, op. cit. Le Primitif et la Famille, p. 121.

Pour nous, malgré l'autorité du savant auteur, nous ne croyons pas que cette manifestation ou cette parolé de l'ancêtre crée le culte totémique chez ses descendants; il nous semble y avoir là une certaine erreur dans les termes, en ce qui s'applique tout au moins à la tribu fàñ et, par là, aux tribus bantoues. Il y a là confusion à la fois entre le totem tribal et le totem individuel, et c'est pourquoi nous avons beaucoup insisté sur cette distinction essentielle; il y a également confusion entre le culte totémique, et un culte totémique. Prenons, en effet, les faits, avec les circonstances les plus favorables. Un ancêtre, respecté ou craint, meurt après avoir annoncé à ses descendants qu'il renaîtra dans tel animal qu'il désigne: il arrive qu'après sa mort, par hasard ou par toute autre influence, un animal de l'espèce désignée apparaisse près du village: rien de surprenant à la chose.

Ainsi, nous avons été témoins du fait suivant. Dans la tribu des Ebifill, mourut un chef dont le totem individuel était le serpent noir. Or, deux jours après, une de ses femmes, allant aux plantations cultiver son champ, fut piquée au sein par un serpent noir en serrant une gerbe de tiges de manioc. Elle se traîna au village et mourut. On en conclut immédiatement que le totem du défunt était irrité par la violation d'un éki, et on fit les sacrifices requis. De peur qu'il ne restât encore quelque chose d'inexpié, il y eût immédiatement cette «substitution de nom» dont nous avons déjà parlé, et «changement de totem».

De même, il pourra parfaitement arriver, et il arrive de fait qu'après la mort d'un homme, tel ou tel animal, bienfaisant et utile, par exemple l'éléphant ou le sanglier, ou dangereux, comme le tigre, apparaisse et soit signalé près du village. Chez les Fàñ, il n'y aura pas pour ce fait changement de totem individuel, mais cela peut arriver dans d'autres tribus. Les Fàñ se contenteront de donner ce totem particulier aux enfants qui viendront à naître dans ces moments. De là, beaucoup d'hommes s'appelleront Nze, le tigre, ou Ngü, le sanglier. Dans ces noms, il n'y aura rien de totémique, rien non plus de dû à la parenté.

Mais, dans tous ces cas et tous les autres du même genre, qu'arrive-t-il? Y a-t-il établissement ou fondation du totémisme?

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Nous ne le croyons pas. C'est un nouveau totem individuel qui s'établit: ce totem ne deviendra même pas totem familial, sauf dans des cas rares, jamais tribal car il existe déjà, et de plus, ce serait un totem «double»: il y aura continuation et confirmation du culte, nouvelle manifestation totémique, et ce sera tout. Mais dire que la parole ou la crainte de l'ancêtre, confirmée par les faits, donnera naissance au culte totémique jusque là ignoré dans la tribu, et que ce serait là seulement «créer le culte totémique chez ses descendants» au vrai sens du mot, il nous paraît impossible de l'admettre.

De fait, et c'est là l'important, nous nous trouvons en face d'un phénomène patent. Dans toutes les tribus bantoues, dès qu'elles sont étudiées à fond, on trouve le totémisme existant, d'une façon plus ou moins développée. Il est ici très atténué comme le remarque Sir H. Johnston[1] à cause des guerres incessantes, là, au contraire, très étroitement maintenu. On le retrouve non-seulement existant actuellement, mais encore remontant, comme nous l'avons montré, aux origines mêmes de la race. Aussi, est-ce là seulement qu'il faut en chercher l'explication, et non dans un fait ou une série de faits, même comme en cite Mgr. Le Roy. Après ces faits, on se demanderait toujours comment une tribu aurait eu d'abord l'idée d'une telle protection animale. Cette idée serait l'explication même d'un totémisme antérieur dont il faudrait toujours ensuite donner les raisons. La difficulté se verrait simplement reculée. Il resterait encore à faire admettre qu'un clan, une famille ou une tribu acceptât ainsi un culte jusqu'alors inconnu, créât tout un ensemble de rites et de prescriptions, et les fît agréer par tous. Cela nous paraît difficile.

D'ailleurs, les Fân admettent déjà les faits de ce genre, et c'est bien là un développement du totémisme, ou mieux encore, un phénomène qui lui est connexe, et même étroitement joint. En particulier, les tribus Osyeba admettent une sorte de métamorphose, dont nous avons déjà parlé: les âmes des chefs, satisfaites des sacrifices funéraires reçus et désireuses de faire encore du bien à leurs descendants, iront, avant d'aller habiter définitivement l'au delà heureux, séjourner, pour un temps, dans le corps d'un éléphant (séjourner dans, mais non «animer») et procurer ainsi à leurs descendants, en amenant d'autres éléphants à leur portée, des chasses fructueuses, abondance de nourriture et de biens, c'est-à-dire d'ivoire, source de marchandises. Comme nous l'avons dit, l'âme s'échappe alors de sa demeure provisoire pour avertir pendant la nuit l'âme des descendants.

[1] The Uganda Protectorate. Voir ce qui est dit de chaque tribu différente au sujet de son totémisme.

Cette sorte de métamorphose de l'ancêtre en animal est quelquefois une cause de sa transformation en totem, ou plutôt, ce qui sera beaucoup plus vrai, en animal totémique, c'est-à-dire en totem particulier. Elle explique alors tout naturellement la vénération dont certains représentants de l'espèce sont l'objet lorsqu'ils portent les marques spéciales et nécessaires. Encore faut-il remarquer que ce «métamorphosisme» n'en est pas un véritable, mais une simple «cohabitation». L'homme n'est pas transformé en animal, mais son âme dirige un animal. De plus, cette croyance est particulière aux seuls Bosyeba, dans la nation fàń [1].

Ces marques expliquent la vénération dont on entoure ensuite les animaux de cette espèce ainsi désignés. Il faut cependant bien remarquer que, seules, les âmes des chefs de famille ou de tribu s'enferment ainsi (car on ne peut dire: «s'incarnent»), dans certains animaux pour y réaliser une vraie cohabitation.

Cette sorte de cohabitation d'une partie agissante de l'âme de l'ancêtre dans le corps d'un animal peut être une cause de sa transformation en totem. Ce sera encore, d'une façon plus vraie et surtout plus fréquente, sa transformation en animal totémique ou en totem particulier. Par là, s'explique tout naturellement le respect dont les représentants de l'espèce sont l'objet. Encore ne s'applique-t-il pas à l'espèce toute entière, mais aux seuls individus offrant certains signes particuliers, signes permettant de les apparenter de façon certaine à l'ancêtre.

Il n'est d'ailleurs nullement nécessaire que l'animal où va pour un temps reposer l'ancêtre, soit le totem du défunt ou de la tribu. Pendant notre séjour dans le nord, un chef mort deux ans auparavant s'était ainsi «reposé» dans un porc-épic, bien que son propre totem fût, comme je m'en étais assuré, le serpent d'eau. Mais c'était un excellent chef: rien que de très naturel à ce qu'après sa mort, il voulût encore faire du bien à sa tribu en lui donnant occasion de faire de fructueuses chasses. Il se «reposa» donc en corps de porc-épic, et on le reconnaissait, disaient les gens, à ce signe que ce porc-épic avait la tête entièrement blanche. Naturellement, on se fût bien gardé de le tuer! C'eût été attirer sur la tribu les plus grands malheurs. Il avait entraîné à sa suite de véritables bandes de porc-épics. De là, des chasses merveilleuses! Il s'agissait évidemment d'un fait tout accidentel et absolument indépendant de la mort du chef. Mais, pour ce cas, et pour bien d'autres similaires, la croyance des Noirs est toute différente de la nôtre!

[1] On retrouve même croyances dans les tribus de l'Est-africain. L'âme du roi défunt va «habiter» chez un lion.

Les Fân avaient donc attribué au vieux chef cette abondance de gibier; pour lui montrer leur reconnaissance, tous les enfants mâles nés dans les six premiers mois qui avaient suivi la mort du chef, avaient reçu le nom de Ngôm, porc-épic. La chose ne laissait pas d'amener une certaine confusion lorsque le nom du père était déjà le même: de plus, quelques enfants avaient le nom du père accolé à celui du grand-père encore pareil, Ngômengôm-ngôme! Ce gibier extraordinaire avait même causé la seule dérogation que j'aie vue à la loi totémique qui défend aux femmes, entre autres viandes, la viande de porc-épic, et elles s'en étaient donné à cœur joie. Cependant, au bout de deux ans de ce régime, tout le monde était fatigué!

«Mais pourquoi, leur disais-je en réponse à leurs plaintes, mangez-vous encore de cette viande dont vous vous prétendez lassés, écœurés! Mangez autre chose!»

«Et comment faire? me répondirent-ils, il n'y a plus rien dans nos plantations, plus de manioc, plus de patates, plus de bananes. Rien que des trous pour les porc-épics qui ont tout dévoré!»

Et lorsque nous nous éloignâmes, on commençait toutes sortes de danses et de sacrifices pour tâcher de persuader à l'ancêtre de s'en aller ailleurs, ou de quitter son séjour temporaire. Abondance de bien nuit! dit le vieux proverbe.

Et ainsi était née, mais se mourait aussi, une manifestation de culte totémique.

Ces mêmes traces de transformations temporaires, se retrouvent dans le mythe de Ngurangurane prenant la forme d'un aigle, du ndzü, bien qu'à sa mort, il n'y ait pas eu métempsycose. Ainsi en est-il, chez les Malinké, de leur grand chef Sundiata transformé par la légende en hippopotame, un jour qu'il se baignait dans le Niger. Tout probablement, il y avait simplement disparu noyé. Tel, nous rapporte encore la Chronique d'Eusèbe, le roi égyptien Ménès qui, en conduisant son peuple hors du royaume, fut changé en hippopotame et prit le nom d'Isp.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Les mythes fabuleux des races blanches abondent en ces sortes de transformations. Ovide et Virgile nous en ont laissé des exemples devenus familiers. On les trouve au contraire rarement dans la race noire, et dans les récits même merveilleux de nos Fâñ, je ne pourrais citer que très peu de faits de ce genre. L'âme d'un mort, en quelques circonstances particulières, vient bien habiter un animal, comme nous venons de le voir pour les tribus Osyeba à l'égard de l'éléphant, mais ce ne sera que pour un temps, et dans un certain but. Ni l'animal, ni l'âme, ne perdent pour cela leur individualité particulière.

Si, après sa mort, un homme ne se transforme pas en animal, le cas au contraire est fréquent pour les vivants. Les légendes fâñ abondent en faits merveilleux de ce genre, et les transformations des héros voulant échapper à leurs ennemis et prenant la forme d'animaux sont innombrables. De même, beaucoup de sorciers jouissent, paraît-il, de la faculté de se transformer à leur gré en animaux, et l'homme-tigre, ou l'homme qui se transforme en tigre pour mieux exécuter ses vengeances ou conquérir des richesses, se retrouve dans toutes les tribus. Mais, en ce moment, nous n'avons pas à discuter la réalité ou la non-réalité de ces transformations. C'est là le cas d'hommes vivants et, par conséquent, ne ressortissant pas de l'origine du totémisme. Nous les retrouverons en parlant des sorciers.

IV° Cause de totem: La Crainte.

«Dans certains cas, un sentiment très naturel, la crainte, donne également une cause de «totémisation». Le totem n'est plus alors cet animal éponyme choisi par l'ancêtre et considéré comme être bienveillant. On l'a au contraire choisi précisément parce que c'était un ennemi, dont on redoutait la colère, et dont on voulait éviter les représailles» [1].

Ainsi Ngurangurane, après avoir tué le Crocodile Ombure, lui offre des sacrifices, et ordonne qu'un culte lui soit rendu. Pour les totems de tribu, ce cas est beaucoup plus rare que pour les totems de famille ou surtout d'individu: il est fréquent pour les totems particuliers, mais alors il faut remarquer que nous sortons un peu du système général. Aussi sommes-nous assez peu de l'avis d'Arcin qui donne cette cause comme fréquente pour l'origine du totem parmi les peuples guinéens:

«On ne représente plus toujours le totem comme l'ancêtre. C'est au contraire quelquefois un ennemi. Le trigonocéphale, chez les Koaté, tua le fils aîné du patriarche de la famille pendant que la mère était aux champs. De là, on choisit le trigonocéphale comme totem. Ce choix nous paraît bien inspiré par la crainte. Une légende analogue que l'on met sur le compte du boa et de la panthère est racontée chez certains Kamara.»

Le choix est parfaitement compréhensible pour qui connaît la mentalité noire. J'ai entendu également la même légende racontée dans un clan fâñ. Fatigué des ravages causés par un tigre, me fut-il raconté en substance, tel de nos ancêtres du clan, et on me le citait comme fort éloigné, résolut de prendre ce tigre comme mvamayôñ. Il lui fit donc un grand sacrifice, lui offrit beaucoup de cabris, et devint son frère de sang [2]. Après cela, le tigre fut tellement satisfait qu'il ne causa plus jamais aucun mal au village. «Nous l'avons toujours depuis ce temps gardé comme étotore, ajoutaient-ils, et nous en sommes fort contents.»

La crainte, dans un certain nombre de cas, a donc pu déterminer le choix de quelques totems, soit végétaux soit animaux, particulièrement les plus dangereux; une fois le totem tribal établi, c'est ensuite probablement la cause de nombreux totems de famille ou de clan. Pour le totem tribal primitif lui-même, à supposer qu'il soit bien établi que ce soit le crocodile, la crainte a bien pu être, sinon le motif déterminant, tout au moins un des facteurs principaux de ce choix. Pour celui-là, comme pour les autres totems animaux, nous admettrions assez facilement ce motif. Ainsi encore, chez les Fâñ, comme un peu partout, on retrouve le serpent comme totem. Les Gaulois avaient déjà leurs serpents sacrés et les Kymris honoraient le dieu Uther à la tête de serpent.

[1] Arcin, op. cit.

[2] Il ne me fut pas dit comment. C'eût été le point intéressant avec un tigre «adulte».

Rien de plus compréhensible que ce dernier choix en voyant d'une part, la grande abondance et la variété de ces animaux, et de l'autre, le danger de les rencontrer, dans la forêt, dans la plantation, dans la case même, où ils aiment à se glisser, quittes à mordre à la première menace. Or, la morsure de beaucoup de ces serpents, serpent noir, serpent fil, serpent des bananiers, vipère cornue ou céraste, est souvent mortelle, toujours dangereuse. De là, à s'efforcer de se les concilier, il n'y a qu'un pas, car pour le Fâñ, le serpent qui vous mord ne le fait pas de lui-même, pour son plaisir ou sa défense: il le fait à cause de vous, et c'est une influence maligne, vertu méchante, esprit, âme d'ancêtre ou d'ennemi qui détermine ainsi son acte à votre grand détriment. D'où nécessité de se le concilier. Le sorcier et le féticheur le feront par des procédés à eux particuliers: ils sauront le charmer, comme jadis les Psylles lybiens, qui, au dire d'Ovide, connaissaient l'art de les conjurer et de les rendre inoffensifs:

> Spargere qui somnos cantuque manuque solebat
> Mulcebatque iras et morsus arte levabat.

Mais le pauvre Noir qui n'a point à son service les chants magiques:

> Nec mediæ Marsis finduntur cantibus angues, s'efforcera de se concilier ces visiteurs dangereux. Il les prendra comme totem, et leur prodiguera un respect qui les touchera moins, peut-être, que les marques effectives de sa reconnaissance, traduites en plantureux festins.

Par un sentiment semblable, la crainte a également contribué à la formation des totems appartenant aux règnes végétal, minéral, et aux phénomènes naturels.

Pour le Noir, nous l'avons fait déjà remarquer, la nature entière est, non pas vivante, comme l'ont dit quelques-uns, mais toujours agissante, sous l'empire de forces cachées ou d'esprits.

Ainsi, dans le règne végétal, certains arbres sont-ils sacrés: c'est la demeure d'un esprit, et non seulement quelques arbres, mais parfois des portions de forêts, de petits bois; tel l'Eli béngan, dont nous avons déjà parlé à propos du Nzoẋ békun, tels les bosquets où se cachent les temples d'initiation. Ainsi jadis chez les Romains l'antique forêt que nous dépeint Ovide:

Stat vetus et densa praenubilus arbore lucus.
Adspice: concedas numen inesse loco;
Accipit ara preces votivaque thura piorum,
Ara per antiquas facta sine arte manus.

Un Fâñ y reconnaîtrait son temple!

Aucun étranger au culte n'y est admis. Celui qui y pénètrerait est mis à mort, et si les Fâñ, redoutant de justes représailles ou la vengeance de l'autorité, ne le font pas toujours ouvertement, ils essaient bien d'arriver au même but par le poison.

Certains arbres sont reconnus comme méchants, non encore une fois qu'ils le soient par eux-mêmes, mais parce que, jusqu'ici, le Fâñ, comme tout Noir, a constaté les vertus mauvaises qui y sont renfermées. Les arbres qui produisent le poison d'ordalie sont dans ce cas: le malheureux condamné à boire la décoction n'est au fond qu'un sujet «d'épreuve». On lui fait avaler une substance, inoffensive en elle-même [1], mais dont l'esprit du mort, qu'il s'agit de venger, développera la vertu mauvaise et annihilera la bonne. Si le sujet est innocent, ses esprits protecteurs et le totem tribal qu'il ne manque pas d'invoquer, paralyseront la force mauvaise et développeront les bonnes qualités. Toutefois, l'influence nocive ne manquera pas de produire quelques petits inconvénients, étant absorbée avant que l'effet heureux ne puisse intervenir. Mais ce rôle néfaste, à peine commencé, n'aura que peu d'action. On conçoit donc que le Fâñ, désireux de se concilier ces forces mauvaises, de s'en mettre à l'abri et peut-être encore plus, de pouvoir s'en servir contre ses ennemis, ait choisi un «méchant» arbre comme totem. Ces influences demeurent, à un autre point de vue, si persistantes, que certaines écorces empoisonnées, jadis fétiches des flèches et des coutelas, chose très compréhensible, sont devenues aujourd'hui protectrices des fusils sur lesquels, à notre point de vue, leur action est nulle.

[1] Evidemment, cette substance n'est inoffensive en elle-même qu'au seul dire du Noir: en réalité, tous les poisons d'épreuve renferment de dangereux alcaloïdes.

Les minéraux, comme les végétaux, subissent également des influences intimes. Si, dans le sentier où passe le Fân, se détache un rocher qui le blesse et le tue, un esprit mauvais, un ancêtre qu'il aura offensé, peut-être sans le savoir, ou l'ancêtre d'une tribu ennemie de la sienne, ce sont trois cas possibles, aura détaché ce rocher, mais ce ne peut être un accident. De méchants cailloux se dressent partout, prêts à couper ses pieds nus, et Dieu sait si ces cailloux ferrugineux sont aiguisés! Aussi une entaille au pied est-elle considérée comme un mauvais présage. Si elle se produit au premier moment du départ, mieux vaut retarder son voyage. Le caillou a blessé. A qui la faute? Nullement au caillou, mais bien à l'esprit au totem offensé.

«Quel enfant, dit Mr. André Lefèvre dans son livre «La Religion» n'a pas été séduit et attiré par la forme ou la couleur d'un caillou? Qui n'a ramassé et conservé plus ou moins longtemps une pierre bizarre ou polie? L'impression du sauvage a été plus vive, mais du même genre. Qui de nous, buttant contre une pierre, n'a pas maudit, comme s'il pouvait l'entendre, le silex ou le granit malveillant? Le sauvage n'a pas seulement maudit, il a redouté. Qui enfin, dans le crépuscule, na pas pris certain rocher suspect pour un voleur embusqué au tournant du chemin? L'homme primitif n'a pas senti autrement.»

Toutefois, nous ne devons pas exagérer, par rapport au totémisme, la portée de pareils faits, d'autant qu'ils dépendent, pour la très grande partie, du culte des génies et des esprits. C'est là que plus tard nous retrouverons les pierres si redoutées des rivières, de même qu'au culte des ancêtres, et non au totémisme, nous rattachons les symboles phalliques et les traces laissées sur certains minéraux et certaines montagnes, vestiges d'animaux incrustés dans la pierre, ou empreintes vaguement humaines.

Parmi les totems que les phénomènes célestes ont pu inspirer et dûs à la crainte, le tonnerre est assurément le principal. Chez les Fân, ce totem, particulier d'ailleurs à un seul clan, a dû naître par suite d'une circonstance fortuite, peut-être une mort d'homme.

Dans tous les cas, les Fâñ d'aujourd'hui ne voient aucun mauvais présage et ne sont nullement effrayés en entendant les éclats de la foudre. Ce sont, disent-ils à la côte, les salves de coups de fusil tirés là haut pour fêter l'arrivée d'un mort illustre. Dans l'intérieur, c'est le résonnement d'un tamtam monstre frappé par les génies.

Les pierres qui tombent parfois du ciel sont désignées sous le nom de haches[1] divines et très vénérées. Elles passent pour jouir d'un pouvoir fécondant extraordinaire. Je n'ai jamais pu voir de hache de ce genre, bien qu'il en existe, paraît-il, un certain nombre. Il est défendu de les montrer.

Nous devons toutefois noter ici à propos du tonnerre une particularité spéciale: le tonnerre et l'éclair sont une arme aux «mains» des totems outragés, et ils s'en servent contre les violateurs et contempteurs de leur puissance. Ceux qui meurent frappés du tonnerre donnent lieu à une cérémonie curieuse: avant de les enterrer, il faut apaiser le totem et pour cela immoler une victime, généralement une victime humaine. Elle doit être brûlée sur un bûcher de bois provenant d'un arbre desséché, frappé lui-même par la foudre. Au contraire de tout sacrifice, les cendres n'en sont pas recueillies, mais jetées au vent.

V° Cause: La Reconnaissance.

En parlant toujours des clans de formation secondaire, puisque nous avons déjà vu le totem national, un sentiment plus noble que la crainte, la reconnaissance, a pu, dans certains cas, être l'origine de quelques totems, végétaux ou animaux.

Pour les végétaux utiles, particulièrement ceux qui dans certains cas de maladie grave ont guéri un chef influent, la chose se conçoit d'elle-même, mais encore avec cette restriction indiquée plus haut que ce totem a dû d'abord être particulier, pour passer ensuite familial et de clan: il ne peut donc s'agir que de cas vraiment exceptionnels. Une famille, un clan, une tribu ne peuvent jamais changer leur totem pour en adopter un autre: il faudrait pour cela le consentement du fondateur lui-même dont la «vertu» subsiste seule, mais non la volonté, puisqu'il est mort depuis longtemps.

[1] On retrouve les mêmes croyances en Guinée.

Là encore, en constatant chez une tribu un culte pour certains végétaux, il ne faut pas se hâter d'en conclure à un culte totémique: au contraire, ce sera presque toujours un ensemble de faits se rapportant au culte des esprits.

A la suite de certaines circonstances, on signale chez quelques peuplades l'adoption de totems animaux par reconnaissance. Le Dr. Rançon nous en rapporte un curieux exemple, recueilli de la bouche d'un indigène. «Les Sidibé, disait ce Noir, ont le mange-mil, une sorte de passereau, comme nténé. Un jour, mon grand-père (c'est-à-dire l'ancêtre) étant allé à la chasse de l'éléphant, s'égara dans la forêt, et malgré toutes les recherches, ne put retrouver sa route. Il arriva ainsi dans un désert au milieu duquel il marcha pendant trois jours sans rencontrer d'eau où se désaltérer. Mourant de soif, il s'était couché un soir, se demandant s'il serait encore vivant le lendemain. Au point du jour, il fut réveillé par un petit oiseau qui chantait sur l'arbre au pied duquel il s'était étendu. C'était un petit «mangeur de mil». A peine mon grand-père fut-il debout que l'oiseau se mit à voltiger autour de lui et devant lui, essayant de lui faire comprendre qu'il devait le suivre. Mon grand-père ne douta pas un seul instant que l'oiseau était venu là pour le sauver. Il le suivit donc partout où il voulait le conduire, et vers le milieu du jour, ils arrivèrent sur les bords d'un ruisseau où tous les deux se désaltérèrent. Puis l'oiseau reprit son vol et le conduisit jusque dans son village, où il le quitta dès qu'il l'eût vu en sûreté. C'est depuis cette époque que les Sidibé sont parents du petit «mangeur de mil», car, sans lui, notre père serait infailliblement mort. Aussi nous est-il interdit à tous de le tuer, de manger sa chair ou de souffrir qu'on lui fasse du mal en notre présence.»

Pareille légende est rapportée par les Fàñ, mais le mangeur de mil est remplacé chez eux par le mal ou oiseau indicateur du miel, sorte de coucou qui indique aux chasseurs le miel sauvage, sûr qu'ils lui laisseront sa part[1]. Nous n'avons pas rapporté cette légende fàñ afin de varier nos témoignages.

[1] Cuculus indicator. Cet oiseau existe également en Amérique. Il se nourrit de miel mais redoute les piqûres des abeilles. Aussi, lorsqu'il voit un chasseur, semble-t-il l'inviter par ses cris à venir prendre le miel. Les Fàñ, ainsi que les autres Noirs, ne manquent jamais dans ce cas de lui laisser une part abondante.

G. Tellier[1] rapporte également que d'après les légendes kamisokho, Santigi, l'ancêtre de la tribu, sur le point de mourir de soif, fut sauvé par un iguane; chez les Kanté, une lutte fratricide fut terminée par la mort de l'aîné des Kanté, grâce aux ergots d'un poulet blanc, animal vénéré depuis dans toute la famille.

L'on connaît l'histoire du célèbre conquérant Dénianké Koli Tenguéla, conduit sur les bords du Sénégal, aux pays du mil, par une perruche, d'où le choix de son totem. De même, les Fân sont unanimes à déclarer que telle ou telle de leurs migrations fut déterminée et conduite par un de leurs totems, souvent par un éléphant, parfois par un sanglier dont ils n'avaient qu'à suivre les traces dans la forêt. Le fait s'expliquerait facilement pour nous d'une façon toute naturelle avec l'éléphant qui laisse dans la brousse la plus épaisse une percée si nette et si franche, en se sauvant effrayé devant la horde. Mais, pour le Fân, cette fuite est-elle si naturelle, quand il croit que l'âme d'un ancêtre réside en cet animal!

On retrouve universellement ces traditions. Ainsi le Gaulois Sigovèse envahit la Germanie, guidé par le vol des oiseaux. Les Mexicains, rapporte le P. Petitot, furent conduits dans l'Anahuac par l'aigle Quetzal Cahuacl; dans mes «Contes et Légendes» des Fân, j'ai rapporté que, de même, Ngurangurane, d'après la légende fân, se changeait en ndzû (aigle) pour conduire ses guerriers à la victoire, d'où en certaines familles, le ndzû comme totem. Les Esquimaux suivent la mouette, et de nombreux peuples du Nord-Asie, Ostiaks, Samoyèdes et autres se laissent de même guider par le goéland ou par le pétrel-tempête. «Chez les Latins, dit Assier[1], qui nous ont cependant laissé le type le plus parfait de la famille agnatique, on observe les mêmes traditions. Les Picénins furent conduits par un pîcus (pivert), les Hirpins par un loup (Hirpinus), enfin les Samnites par un taureau sauvage jusque dans la montagne de Bénévent.»

A Rome, nous voyons des traces de ces croyances. «Le flamine de Jupiter, écrit Fabius Pictor, ne touche, ni ne nomme jamais, une chèvre, de la chair crue, les fèves . . .

[1] G. Tellier, Auteur de Rita, cité par Arcin: le Totem.

[1] Arcin entend ici que le totémisme est intimement lié à la famille agnatique et au clan, à défaut de la famille agnatique, ce qui est loin, et bien au contraire, de se trouver vérifié par les cas gabonais.

VI° Cause: La Bienveillance de l'animal éponyme.

Après la crainte et la reconnaissance, c'est parfois la bienveillance de l'animal éponyme qui donne naissance au totem.

L'animal éponyme a donné généreusement, attribué ou cédé à la tribu une partie du territoire dont il était maître. «Et cette opinion n'est pas complètement dénuée de raison, ajoute un auteur[1] car là où la nature vierge est dans toute sa vigueur, l'homme semble un étranger, et les propriétaires du terrain sont les arbres contemporains de la création et les bêtes fauves qui se reproduisent au milieu d'eux comme dans leur propre domaine.» Admettons-le volontiers, mais cette opinion a dû être vraie seulement alors, au temps où les bêtes parlaient. Dans ce temps lointain, au rapport également des Fàn, les bêtes et les hommes habitaient un même village et formaient une même famille, dual avori, dàà avori, nsama mbori! Mais c'était l'âge d'or, combien loin!

Un autre auteur a groupé à peu près toutes ces opinions, puis donné son avis personnel: reproduisons d'abord la citation entière, nous réservant de la discuter ensuite, de présenter nos objections, et d'établir notre propre opinion.

«Représentons-nous, dit Mgr. Le Roy dans sa Religion des Primitifs[2], l'homme primitif, marchant devant lui, et poussant toujours plus loin ses explorations dans un monde mystérieux qui s'étend davantage à mesure qu'il s'y enfonce. Nulle part, aucune créature qui lui ressemble, qui ait son attitude, son aspect, son langage, mais partout des êtres divers, qui rampent, qui marchent, qui volent, qui nagent, qui creusent la terre, et qui l'ont devancé dans la conquête du monde.

«Si, en beaucoup de rapports, il leur est supérieur, il sont vis-à-vis d'eux, en beaucoup d'autres, son infériorité. Ah! s'il avait l'agilité du singe, la force de l'éléphant, la ruse du léopard, la finesse du serpent, s'il était petit oiseau! . . .

«Cette idée qui naturellement se présente à l'intelligence infantile, l'homme-enfant l'a eue, il la conserve à l'époque actuelle, et mieux encore, il prétend l'avoir réalisée . . .

[1] Lemoyne, Histoire antique del Pérou, p. 44.
[2] Religion des Primitifs, p. 181 et ss.

«Mais il ne s'agit pas ici, seulement, de se transformer en un animal[1] de son choix, par fantaisie et curiosité. Comme l'homme primitif est poussé, autant par la nécessité du milieu dangereux dans lequel il vit que par l'instinct de sa propre nature, à se serrer contre sa famille, il est également porté par tous ses intérêts à étendre ses relations et ses alliances. Plus il en a, plus sa famille est forte.

«Or, ce qui, avant tout, constitue la famille, c'est la communauté du sang.

«On pourra donc, avec tels ou tels hommes dont on apprécie l'amitié, la puissance et la fidélité, faire un pacte d'alliance sanctionné par l'échange du sang[2] et consacré par un cérémonial approprié, après quoi on est de la même parenté, ndugu, dira le Noir de la côte orientale, ndégô, celui de la côte opposée, mots identiques qui témoignent à la fois de l'usage et de la communauté d'origine.

«Mais l'homme n'est pas le seul être avec lequel on puisse faire pareil pacte. Grâce à des pratiques mystérieuses qui sont le secret des initiés, mais qui comportent toujours échange de sang, il est possible d'appeler à soi un animal, chef d'un troupeau ou d'une bande, de se concilier ses faveurs, de bénéficier de ses forces comme de ses secrets, de se déguiser sous ses apparences, de se transformer, de s'en faire un «frère», de conclure une alliance avec lui et sa race . . .

«Ne nous y trompons pas néanmoins. Par cette alliance, l'homme n'a pas pour but seulement d'atteindre l'animal tel quel et d'associer sa famille à la sienne: il vise aussi et surtout cette famille animale, renforcée par la présence et l'action d'un esprit du monde invisible — âme de l'animal lui-même, esprit des ancêtres,

[1] Nous parlerons de cette transformation de certains hommes en animaux et de ce qu'il faut en croire ou en rejeter dans une Etude prochaine sur les «Fétichismes et Sorciers». Nous en emprunterons quelques traits plus loin à propos du cannibalisme.

[2] A propos de ce curieux usage, que l'on retrouve dans l'Afrique toute entière, nous dirons plus loin, en parlant des rites totémiques, comment l'alliance du sang, tout en ayant de nombreux points de contact avec le totem et en procédant souvent, se relie cependant de façon plus étroite aux rites sanguinaires.

on génie tutélaire d'origine extraordinaire. De sorte que ce pacte est par le moyen d'une créature visible, un pacte avec le monde invisible.

«Et lorsque, après avoir ainsi longtemps vécu, à la faveur d'un pacte magique, en relations intimes avec un animal, un chef va mourir, s'il rassemble ceux de ses enfants qui peuvent le comprendre, s'il leur communique son secret, s'il leur prescrit de maintenir le pacte conclu et s'il leur fait entendre que son esprit au sortir de son enveloppe humaine, aimera à revenir parmi eux sous le support de son animal-frère, voilà, pour les descendants de cet homme, le totémisme ou la parenté animale constituée.» Que cette famille s'étende, se multiplie, se disperse, ses représentants emporteront avec eux, sinon toujours le souvenir précis, du moins la trace de cette origine, par l'effet des divers interdits ou tabous qui se seront imposés vis-à-vis de la famille de la bête devenue sacrée: cette bête sera leur «parent». Souvent, ils en porteront le nom et la marque, ils lui rendront leurs hommages, ils croiront que, après leur mort, leurs âmes prendront place dans sa société mystérieuse, et cette croyance entretiendra la piété de leurs propres descendants.

Ce serait là, selon nous, le totémisme véritable.

«Mais il est possible et probable, que, en bien des cas, cette institution, une fois acceptée, se soit rattachée, par assimilation, à d'autres origines.

«Si, par exemple, un ancêtre respecté ou craint comme sorcier émérite, a annoncé, fait comprendre ou manifesté d'une façon quelconque que, à sa mort, son âme passerait en telle ou telle créature, cette déclaration suffira pour créer le culte totémique chez les descendants.

Nous avons vu, dans un fait précédemment cité, un cas qui va précisément à l'encontre de cette théorie, par rapport aux Fâ. L'ancêtre de la tribu, le père, demeure, après sa mort, dans un porc-épic, afin de faire du bien à ses descendants. Cependant, le culte totémique du porc-épic ne s'établit pas le moins du monde pour cela dans cette tribu. C'est précisément le contraire, car le père a adopté pour un temps seulement ce substratum, afin d'assurer le ravitaillement de sa tribu. Le ravitaillement fini, tout cesse.

Pareil fait arrive encore chez les chefs ayeba entrant après leur mort dans le corps d'un éléphant pour procurer d'heureuses chasses à la tribu. Nous avons vu précédemment, à un autre point de vue, que le totem individuel était strictement particulier: le pommeur une fois mort, on ne se fait nullement scrupule de céder ce totem à n'importe qui. Il n'a que sa mince valeur intrinsèque.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

De là naîtra souvent en effet le totem individuel, et transitoire.

«D'autres fois, on aura remarqué la familiarité d'un animal, son assiduité à fréquenter un endroit, sa manière de se présenter, et mille incidents pareils; on consultera le «voyant» et l'on conclura que ces manifestations viennent d'une sympathie particulière et surnaturelle à laquelle il faut répondre.

«En d'autres circonstances encore, une société secrète qui se forme, une famille qui se fonde, un individu qui veut arriver à percer, se choisit un totem qui devient un emblème et un symbole.

«On pourrait multiplier ces exemples. Mais toujours l'alliance totémique suppose, à sa base, un pacte explicite ou implicite, et un pacte implique réciprocité d'égards et de services. Or, de fait, l'animal allié, habitué aux soins de sa famille humaine, est pour ainsi dire «domestiqué» chez elle, et il lui témoigne souvent une familiarité étonnante, bien faite pour impressionner ces gens simples et les confirmer dans leur foi.»

L'autre besoin, qui, selon Mgr. Le Roy, aurait poussé l'homme primitif au développement du totémisme, aurait été la nécessité de se constituer en communauté séparée, puis de donner un nom spécial à cette communauté. Souvent, le meilleur qu'ils aient trouvé a été celui d'un animal dont ils avaient remarqué la force, l'adresse, l'agilité ou la beauté, d'une plante qui leur était utile ou qui affectionnait leur pays, d'un objet ou d'un phénomène qui les avait frappés. Et ainsi a pu naître l'usage de l'ancêtre éponyme, auquel une famille, un clan, une phratrie, une tribu, fait remonter son origine et son nom.

Ce nom aurait alors servi à fixer les généalogies et les mariages; le même but aurait été rempli par les différents tatouages, mutilations, danses, armes, en un mot par tout ce qui constitue un groupement social organisé et le différencie des autres groupements, amis, rivaux, jaloux, ou ennemis.

«Ainsi, d'un côté, besoin de se distinguer, et, de l'autre, besoin de s'allier. Voilà les deux instincts naturels qui ont poussé l'homme dans la voie du totémisme. Lequel a précédé l'autre? Il est difficile de le dire, et, du reste, il est inutile de le chercher. Qu'il nous suffise d'en constater la vraisemblance et la réalité.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

* * *

«Nous n'insisterons pas non plus sur la préférence donnée à l'animal dans l'alliance totémique. Aux yeux des Primitifs, il a certains pouvoirs mystérieux: il peut se rendre invisible, il sait prévoir les changements de temps, les accidents, les coups heureux de la fortune, il trouve toujours à vivre où l'homme mourrait de faim, il est en relations avec le monde des esprits. Tous nos intérêts nous portent donc à nous unir à lui, et, par lui, aux êtres mystérieux avec lesquels il est en rapports.

«Mais, en somme, le totem végétal, minéral et autre n'est que l'extension du premier, et l'homme peut y trouver les mêmes avantages; obéissant à d'autres inspirations, il a fait une alliance sacrée avec un arbre ou un objet remarquable par quelque propriété.

«A tous les enfants de la famille, au moment où ils arrivent à l'adolescence et peuvent être réputés pour des hommes, des initiations savantes révèlent cette parenté mystique, avec les avantages qu'elle confère, les obligations qu'elle entraîne, les interdits qu'elle impose, et les sanctions qu'elle exige de qui la méprise.

«Alors, d'ordinaire, une cérémonie spéciale assure le renouvellement du pacte avec le nouvel initié: des marques, spéciales à la famille, lui sont données, qui consacrent cette initiation et lui deviennent son signe de ralliement; des interdits lui sont imposés, et d'autres, qu'il avait dû garder jusque là, sont alors levés. Son enfance est finie: c'est maintenant un homme, et c'est un homme de la «famille».

«Sans doute, l'institution ne se retrouve pas, partout, dans la totalité et la pureté des phases qui l'ont primitivement établie, mais on peut la reconstituer dans son ensemble avec les survivances qui nous en restent, et qui, toutes, se rattachent à des conceptions identiques.»

Malgré la longueur de cette citation, nous avons tenu à la donner en entier, d'autant qu'elle reflète le sentiment d'un écrivain qui a observé les faits, de vieu d'abord, et qui a pu ensuite les étudier profondément. Mais le totémisme est un sujet tellement variable et complexe dans ses formes multiples qu'il semble échapper à toute appréciation d'ensemble: telle chose, tel détail, vrai ici, ne l'est pas plus loin. Cette note préliminaire donnée, nous ne saurions exposer ici tous les points qui, pour les Fân seulement, ne l'oublions pas, nous font parfois différer d'avis avec l'éminent auteur. Cependant, d'une façon générale, il nous semble que le totem particulier et le totem général ne sont peut-être pas assez différenciés: tout ce qui s'applique à l'un ne s'applique pas nécessairement à l'autre; au cours des pages précédentes, nous nous sommes efforcés de bien préciser la filiation, les détails et les différences de ces deux totems.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Une question plus grave se pose devant nous.

Est-ce bien l'homme dit primitif qui a inventé son totem? L'a-t-il fait parce qu'il voulait s'assurer les qualités de certains êtres dont il envialt pour lui-même la force, l'agilité, la ruse? L'a-t-il choisi pour d'autres motifs, sous l'empire de la crainte ou tout autre sentiment?

Pour nous, nous avons peine à le croire, tout au moins pour les totems généraux, ou, si l'on préfère, pour l'origine même du totem. Que, bien des fois, pareils totems aient été créés sous de telles préoccupations, qu'ils se créent même encore, non seulement nous l'admettons, mais nous l'avons vu faire et l'avons montré au cours de cette Etude. Mais le fait même du totémisme existait déjà: il y avait filiation ou imitation. Là, pour nous, ne serait pas l'origine proprement dite du totem, et l'homme primitif ne serait nullement celui que l'on veut si souvent nous présenter sous de si riantes couleurs, homme encore enfant, mais en marche vers la civilisation. Pour nous, le primitif est au contraire un dégénéré, un dégradé, perdant peu à peu le souvenir d'un ensemble antérieur de dogmes plus perfectionnés ou plus élevés.

En s'enfonçant dans les mystères de la grande forêt pour s'étendre progressivement sur toute l'Afrique, cette humanité dite primitive emporterait avec elle la mémoire de plus en plus effacée de ses croyances antiques, et s'efforcerait de les faire revivre sous la forme nécessitée par les diverses contingences.

En parlant de l'influence des doctrines anciennes sur la formation de ces dogmes, nous développerons plus longuement cette idée qui nous paraît d'ailleurs fondamentale.

L'alliance de sang nous semble également être plutôt un rite fondé soit sur l'intérêt de l'individu, soit sur l'amitié, cela peut dépendre des cas; nous hésitons à en faire résulter l'alliance avec l'animal qui nous paraît un rite similaire, et non dérivé. En tout cas, nous y verrions plutôt, comme le note d'ailleurs Mgr. Le Roy, un rite particulier de l'animisme, ou un rite du culte des ancêtres, plutôt qu'un rite totémique, avec lequel il a cependant de nombreuses similitudes. Nous en reparlerons à propos du nagual et du naguelisme, qui est bien «un pacte contracté par le moyen d'une créature visible avec le monde invisible» mais qui n'est pas le totem. Une grande différence les sépare essentiellement: le pacte naguelisté est transitoire, révocable à la volonté de l'individu, et meurt avec lui; le pacte totémique est durable, ne meurt pas avec l'individu, mais se transmet à la race. Un Fàn ne peut transmettre à ses descendants, comme totem, l'animal familier avec lequel il aura fait pacte de sang, car sa postérité a déjà son totem familial, aussi bien que tribal, héritage des ancêtres. Aussi, dans tous les cas, faudrait-il toujours remonter à l'origine même de la tribu pour retrouver le totem ancestral; là, après avoir écarté tous les faits connexes, incidents ou dérivés, il faudra toujours en arriver au fait primordial, base lui-même du totémisme. Mgr. Le Roy y parvient d'ailleurs également: c'est le pacte magique, explicite ou implicite: un chef ayant conclu un pacte mystérieux avec un animal et en ayant expérimenté le bien résultant, ordonne à ses descendants de faire de même, en leur promettant que son esprit restera dans cet animal et dans ses descendants. Pourquoi a-t-il cette croyance? Parce qu'il y a, avec cet animal, échange de sang, d'où communauté de sang qui implique communauté de vie. L'homme a cette idée de faire alliance de sang avec l'animal, et croit que les effets passeront à ses descendants, parce qu'il a fait auparavant alliance de sang avec un homme étranger à sa race: il a vu que les effets de cette alliance passaient à ses descendants.

Et pourquoi encore cette alliance de sang avec un étranger?

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Pour étendre sa famille, servir ses intérêts, fortifier sa puissance, et surtout se défendre contre ses ennemis nombreux.

Se défendre, défense personnelle, défense de la famille et défense du clan, serait donc en définitive la raison ultime du totémisme. On en revient finalement à ce que nous disions tout à l'heure: l'homme primitif, se sentant isolé et faible en face de dangers sans cesse renaissants, et cherchant un appui.

Et la question demeure entière, comme question de fait: cet homme primitif, dont nous admettons bien l'existence au point de vue de la situation, était-il bien un primitif? Ou bien, en s'avançant de plus en plus pour conquérir la terre, ces hordes errantes des premiers temps n'étaient-elles pas bien semblables au fond aux clans guerriers qui, aujourd'hui encore, se séparent de la tribu mère pour aller conquérir au loin, et emportent avec eux un faisceau de traditions, de légendes, de dogmes et de croyances qui vont s'altérant de plus en plus?

Les influences antiques.

Pour nous, en ce qui concerne au moins les Fàn, et peut-être par là-même toutes les tribus bantoues, l'influence antique de la religion égyptienne, ou celle d'un peuple ayant habité l'ancienne Egypte, paraît avoir joué un rôle assez considérable dans la formation des idées religieuses: ce que nous disons des Fàn, d'autres auteurs[1] l'ont encore constaté pour des peuples africains de race autre que les Bantous. Aujourd'hui encore, on peut constater cet apport dans la langue fàn. Sans doute, et surtout à priori, nous ne voudrions affirmer en aucune façon que la langue fàn est dérivée de l'égyptien: nous constatons simplement qu'il paraît y avoir eu, sinon infiltration, du moins influence. S'il y a eu apport pour la langue, il peut également y avoir eu influence pour la religion. Mais, pourra-t-on dire, il s'agit de ressemblances fortuites, ainsi qu'il s'en trouve dans toutes les langues? Signalons quelques-unes de ces ressemblances: il sera ensuite facile de juger.

[1] Aacin fait la même remarque pour les peuples du Guinée. «Le serpent est très vénéré. Etre bizarre, changeant de peau chaque année, il est le symbole du renouvellement continuel de la vie. L'admiration des peuples lui a donné une place au ciel: la Voie lactée. Il en est de même pour le taureau et la vache dont les noms chez les Peuls servent à désigner le soleil, souvenir évident des croyances égyptiennes, où l'immense Ptah était symbolisé par le taureau Apis, et où le taureau Osiris portait, entre les cornes, le disque solaire, tandisque les cornes et les oreilles d'Isis reproduisaient le croissant lunaire. La plupart des peuples lybiens reconnaissent des dieux equidiques, et les Egyptiens symbolisaient la déesse Hathor par un poisson du Nil.» La Guinée française, op. cit.

Egyptien [1]:		Fâ:
Ebo	période du débordement des eaux où tout est ravagé	Ebo	ravager (E est la marque de l'infinitif) piller
Bôl	détruire	Ebole	voler, cacher après avoir volé.
Ba-ba	honorer	Bame	honorer, Abame Nzame le respect dû à Dieu
Sole	couper	Sole	couper
Sam	herbe	Sam	fleur
Smi	ail	Ami	ail
Smam	poule de Pharaon	Khama	huppe, faisan bleu
Sole	effacer	Ebole	effacer
Sam	joindre, réunir	Nzame	(a agrégé) troupe
		Ezame	unir
		Ezame	réunion
Sôbe	circoncision	Bolle	circoncision
Sôfe	couteau	Mfe	couteau, mfor, fe etc. sortes de couteaux
Gaôf	reptile	Fi	vipère, céraste à cornes
Bôl	pourrir	Ebôle	pourrir et tous ses dérivés
		Abôle	pourriture, odôlée pourri etc.
Fa	élever	Efa	grandir
Fab	lien	Mfab	sac en cordes tressées et nouées
Abôe	celui qui plonge en mer	Nbôle	vague de la mer
Abôl	rainée	Abole	papaye, fruit à gros grains
Amen	main	Me	mains
Ae	doigt	Aen	le doigt
Ksor	parler	Eksor	parler,
		Abôô	flèche
Mabo	crocodile	N-kôm	crocodile
Nbo	rendre petit	Ebôor	affaiblir
Ksb	pierre	A-kob	pierre
Kob	écorser	Ekob	écorser les écorces pour les spécier
		Ebo	écorce
Zobor	danser	Dzôm	danse
Ebo	fleur	Ebo	vêtement (fourni jadis par le fleur du fromagier).

Soit 26 mots, pris parmi ceux dont les rapports sont plus grands entre eux, et qu'il serait facile de multiplier. Nous pourrions ainsi atteindre environ cent ethniques et plus. En les comparant, il semble plus facile d'admettre «infiltration», «influence» que hasard.

[1] Egyptien, d'après le dictionnaire de Pierret.

Parlant de l'origine[1] des Fân, nous avons montré que le plus ancien habitat qu'on puisse leur assigner, est la région des hauts plateaux du Nil; le L[r] Avmlot qui, depuis[2], a fait une étude approfondie de la question, partage le même avis.

Avant de peupler cette contrée, où habitaient les Fân?

Aucun monument écrit, aucune légende ne nous permettent d'élucider ce point. Il paraît tout au plus probable qu'ils demeuraient depuis longtemps dans ces régions, soit comme peuple constitué, soit comme restes d'anciennes tribus, soit comme clans en formation. Si cette hypothèse est réelle, rien d'étonnant, on peut nous l'accorder, à ce qu'ils aient subi l'empreinte des Egyptiens, dont les arts, les sciences, la religion et la civilisation leur étaient si supérieures. Or, précisément chez ces Egyptiens, nous trouvons, et en remontant à une époque très-reculée, des phénomènes religieux analogues à ceux dont nous voyons les vestiges, plus ou moins bien conservés, non seulement chez les Fân[3], mais encore, comme nous l'avons montré à dessein au cours de cette Etude[4], parmi les autres populations bantoues.

Nous ne sommes d'ailleurs pas le seul à proposer cette opinion. Un savant autorisé, Mr. Gaston Foucart[5], vient d'écrire (1909) ces lignes plus formelles encore que les nôtres:

«Au Congo, par exemple, il [un égyptologue] peut vérifier cette assertion [influence égyptienne] par des rapprochements avec tout ce que l'on sait de la vieille Egypte, expliquer les raisons du rituel de fondation d'un village, avec la plantation du pieu, la chasse aux esprits etc., alors que ni les indigènes, ni leurs traducteurs n'en dégagent aucun rapprochement, aucune preuve d'une loi générale. Il comprend l'importance du nom secret donné au nouveau-né; il définit

---

[1] Voir Bim. Cath. 1898. «Les Fân; d'où ils viennent et où ils vont.»

[2] Recherches sur les Migrations des peuples de la Guinée, Bull. Soc de Géo, Paris 1904.

[3] Cf. Ouvrage déjà cité de Dennett.

[4] Voir en particulier les rites de la naissance, des armes, du nouveau chef, de la mort.

[5] G. Foucart, Méthode comparative, p. 81.

les principes — ce dont les indigènes sont incapables —, sur lesquels leur magie fonde les cérémonies d'envoûtement, d'exorcisme, d'envoi ou d'enlèvement de la maladie, le pourquoi de la nécessité d'avoir, pour une incantation, des parcelles de l'individu enchanté . . .» etc.

Cette courte citation montre combien, pour Mr. Foucart, l'influence égyptienne a été prépondérante dans tous ces actes religieux des populations congolaises, actes que nous retrouvons identiques chez nos Fâô.

On la retrouve également, plus marquée peut-être encore, en se rapprochant du Nil et de la Hte Egypte; dans l'Ouganda, par exemple, et dans l'enclave de Lado, les totems de clan, aussi bien que les clans, seront précisément les mêmes que chez les Fâô[1]. Ainsi: «The Banyoro are divided into many clans which would appear to have «totems» as sacred symbols [c'est notre mvamayôô] or ancestral emblems [c'est le totem emblème que nous étudierons ensuite] like the similar clans in Uganda. This institution, however, like so many other customs connected with the Banyoro, has lately been much defaced and obscured by the appaling depopulation.

«The people of Unyoro are divided into clans which have as their totems — these totems being sacred [totem réel] or horrible objets [totems emblèmes] — beasts, birds, reptiles, fishes, insects, or vegetables which in some way or other are identified with the original founders of the clan.

«In Uganda there are twenty-nine clans with the following totems:

Nanzee	Green-hopper	Nyengi	Widow bird (Vidua chaca)
Mondo	Land-fish (Protopterus)	Mbwa	Dog
Fumbi	Lyncus dog	Kasimbe	Serval cat
Njovu	Elephant	Lubindo	Wild date palm
Ndiga	Otter	Kibe	Jackal
Ngo	Leopard	Kobobo	Small fish
Mpurugume	Lion	Endiga	Sheep
Butiko	Nightjar	Ŝoli	Crowned crane
Mwa	Ground-rat (Thryonomys swinderianus)	Ŝambe	Ox
		Lugurwe	Mantis (the only ant-eater)

[1] Sir H. Johnston, The Uganda Protectorate, T. I, où nous trouvons l'énumération ci-jointe.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Kubiane	Whitenosed monkey (Cercopithecus nefandrida)	Engeje	Colobus monkey
Mvulu	Hippopotamus	Kotamvuma	A small shrub or flowering bush
Kulu	Plant like a potato	Mjinefi	Harlent beans
Mpwo	Orbi antelope
Nkulungunge	Cephalophus antelope
Nyubi	Bushbuck (Tragelaphus)
Mbogo	Buffalo

The name for clan is Kiko for totem is Mazive
for place of origin Kiolo
(dual on Sic)-[1].

Chez les Fàn, comme chez les Egyptiens, nous trouvons à la fois comme bases religieuses: le culte des ancêtres, le culte des animaux, le totémisme. Or, comme nous allons le voir, du culte des ancêtres sont nés, mais sans se confondre avec lui, le totémisme et son dérivé, le culte des animaux. Si telle a été chez ce peuple la progression religieuse, passant ainsi, d'un culte et de notions plus élevées, à un culte et des notions plus ravalées, pourquoi n'en serait-il pas de même pour le Noir, à supposer même qu'il n'ait subi aucune influence et qu'il soit bien l'homme primitif réduit à ses propres forces en face de la nature?[2] Sans doute, et nous ne faisons pas difficulté de l'avouer, ce sentiment a pour lui de grandes chances de probabilités par lui-même, et comme a essayé de le démontrer Mgr. Le Roy. Toutefois, nous préférons nous rallier au totémisme égyptien, et aux causes qui l'ont amené, suivant en cela Vinay dans son dernier livre sur «la Religion de l'ancienne Egypte», dont, plus bas, nous analyserons rapidement les quelques pages qui s'y rapportent à l'origine du totémisme égyptien, mais en cela seulement qu'elles peuvent s'appliquer aux Fàn.

Cette opinion ne nous est d'ailleurs pas entièrement personnelle. Avant nous, en parlant de la race bantoue, Sir H. Johnston disait déjà[3]: «The Negro, in short, owes what little culture he possessed, before the advent of the modern Arab and the Christian white man, to the civilising influence of ancien Egypt; but this influence, (except a small branch of it in the Bahr-el-Gazel) travelled to him, not directly up the White Nil, but indirectly, through Abyssinia and Somaliland; and Hamites, such as the stock from which the Galla and Somali sprang, were the middlemen whose early traffic between the Land of Punt and the countries round the Victoria Nyanza was the main, almost the sole, agency by which the Negro learnt the industries and received the domestic animals of Egypt».

[1] Un certain nombre de ces noms de la langue de l'Ogande se retrouvent en Sic avec le même signification et à peine changés. Ainé Njaro = Yaub, Nye = Nye, Kubiane = Ekiane, Mvulu = Mvulu, Mbwo = Mbwo, Nyungi = Gnuo etc.

[2] Cf. Mgr. Le Roy, les Primitifs, passim.

[3] The Uganda Protectorate (1904), v. I, Preface.

Sir H. JOHNSTON favorise également ce que nous croyons être l'origine du totémisme chez le Noir lorsqu'il dit encore: «The negro race certainly is originated in Southern India, possibly in India».

En parlant de l'origine du totémisme égyptien, Mr. VIREY[1] écrit donc:

«Les tribus constituant les confédérations qui se dispersèrent et se partagèrent la possession du territoire égyptien étaient en fort grand nombre, et chacune avait son signe particulier de ralliement.

«Ce signe, emblème distinctif du clan, élevé sur une hampe ordinairement munie de deux banderoles, représentait soit un des outils ou une des armes plus spécialement en honneur dans ce clan, soit surtout un animal (ou encore un arbre) caractéristique du pays qu'il occupait ou du pays dont il était originaire.

«Comme exemples, nous mentionnerons l'enseigne dont le signe se compose de deux flèches croisées; celle dont le signe est un harpon; celle dont le signe est un épervier ou un faucon; celle dont le signe est un ibis; celle dont le signe est un chacal ou un chien; celle dont le signe est, d'après Mr. LOMET, un lévrier d'Asie; celle dont le signe est un éléphant. Nous pourrions en mentionner d'autres encore, mais il n'est pas nécessaire d'en considérer davantage pour constater qu'un grand nombre de ces emblèmes ont été des dieux officiels du panthéon égyptien. Le faucon ou l'épervier a été le dieu Horus; l'ibis a été le dieu Thot; le chien ou le chacal, le dieu Anubis; le lévrier d'Asie a été le dieu Set; le scorpion a été la déesse Selkit. Les flèches croisées ont été Neit, déesse de Sais, et la déification de cet emblème montre que ce n'est pas comme animaux, que bien des animaux furent divinisés en Egypte, mais comme personnifications des clans, ou comme totems, dit Mr. LOMET, comme emblèmes totémiques des clans...

[1] Religion de l'ancienne Egypte, p. 24 et ss.

«On a récemment protesté contre l'emploi fait depuis quelques années du mot «totémisme» pour définir un des phénomènes que nous a révélés l'étude de la zoölatrie égyptienne: le respect de certaines familles, de certaines tribus africaines pour des animaux auxquels ces familles ou ces tribus se prétendent unies par des liens de parenté. Le fait est bien certain ... Les uns y ont simplement reconnu du «totémisme». D'autres ont répondu ... «que cette croyance est, non du totémisme, mais une dégénérescence, une survivance déjà confuse de la zoölatrie. C'est donc seulement dans le développement des idées animistes qu'il faudrait chercher l'origine de la zoölatrie» [1]. Mr. Foucart n'a sans doute pas tort de vouloir rapporter à l'animisme une bonne part des phénomènes de la zoölatrie égyptienne. Mais ... elle a certainement aussi d'autres origines et d'abord ... le totémisme ... Ainsi l'image de l'animal ou de l'emblème totémique, dressée au sommet de la hampe à banderoles, dont nous avons parlé tout à l'heure, est le signe de ralliement de la collectivité, l'attribut ethnique du clan ... L'animal totémique devint dieu du clan lorsqu'il se confondit avec l'ancêtre patriarcal du clan, lorsqu'il fut le corps où s'incarna l'esprit de l'ancêtre. Mais jusque là il ne fut probablement que l'image de la collectivité».

Tout le reste du chapitre consacré à cette question serait à citer, mais nous entraînerait trop loin. Contentons-nous donc de cet extrait qui montre bien la question sous un nouveau jour.

Peut-être est-ce là la véritable origine du totémisme, et pour nous, en ce qui concerne les Fân, nous ne voyons aucune difficulté de nous y rallier. A l'origine de la tribu, l'influence égyptienne nous paraît probable, soit par conquête — et l'on sait combien à ce point de vue les Egyptiens étaient envahisseurs, comme tous leurs monuments le montrent dans leurs inscriptions —, soit par voie de commerce, d'infiltration ou tout autre moyen. En tout cas, il nous paraît tout naturel que les hommes d'un clan, indépendamment de l'ancêtre, aient désignés d'abord par un animal, ou par un arbre caractéristique de leur région. De là ils ont ensuite choisi comme totem par une association très facile et très compréhensible d'idées.

[1] G. Foucart, Méthode comparative dans l'Histoire des Religions, p. 74.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Cette opinion nous paraît d'autant plus digne d'être prise en très-sérieuse considération que le fait se reproduit encore de nos jours chez les Fân. Nous l'avons constaté, par exemple, en parlant du clan actuel des Abé.

* * *

Nous n'avons pas entrepris de discuter ici les autres opinions si diverses données de l'origine du totémisme. Disons seulement rapidement que pour HERBERT SPENCER, qui a intimement lié le culte totémique au culte des ancêtres, c'est le résultat d'une simple méprise. — D'après ROBERTSON SMITH, le culte a d'abord été familial, et par l'animisme, le dieu considéré comme ancêtre a été identifié à un animal, puis à une espèce, devenant protectrice du clan, quand celui-ci se développe. — JEVONS suppose que l'animisme seul a inspiré le culte des animaux: la fusion des clans et des totems donne naissance au polythéisme; les totems individuels sont des imitations des totems de clans et leur sont postérieurs. — Mr. S. REINACH admet le contrat comme essentiel. — Pour FRAZER, le lien entre totem et clan consiste dans un échange d'âmes. — Pour Mr. l'abbé BACO enfin, le totémisme suppose l'animisme: c'est une idée religieuse ayant un fondement social. — Nous avons déjà exposé et discuté plus haut la théorie de Mgr. LE ROY; nous n'y reviendrons donc pas ici.

Pour notre part, nous nous sommes efforcés plutôt de faire l'exposé impartial des faits que de présenter des théories plus ou moins hasardées et qui, d'ailleurs, vraies pour une tribu, peuvent, par suite de circonstances multiples, être fausses pour une autre. La seule remarque que nous nous permettons en finissant est celle-ci. A très peu d'exceptions près[1], tous les auteurs[2] qui ont jusqu'ici traité du totémisme l'ont fait d'après des documents plus ou moins certains, et plutôt en interprétant des phénomènes rapportés de façon généralement peu exacte, par des voyageurs ou écrivains assez peu au courant de la langue, des mœurs et de la religion indigène. Dans l'exposé du totémisme fâ, nous avons eu le double avantage de pouvoir tout d'abord connaître les ouvrages de ces auteurs, et en second lieu, de pouvoir vérifier et étudier sur place pendant longues années un peuple dont nous connaissions intimement la langue et les habitudes. Nous avons déjà montré fréquemment, au cours de cette Etude, et montrerons encore des causes multiples d'erreurs inévitables pour nos devanciers. Nous ne voulons en aucune manière nous prétendre plus sages qu'eux tous: nous espérons, grâce seulement à un favorable concours de circonstances, avoir été plus heureux, ou tout au moins apporter notre contingent de faits certains et intéressants. C'est plus que ce que nous aurions espéré jadis.

[1] Par exemple Mgr. LE ROY, qui a vécu plus de vingt ans au milieu des tribus africaines.

[2] On consultera avec fruit pour ce chapitre ce que Mr. l'abbé BACO dit du totémisme dans le chapitre de son ouvrage consacré à ce sujet, et peut-être mieux encore l'article de MARILLIER: La place du totémisme dans l'évolution religieuse, dans la Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, t. XXXVI, p. 224 et ss. (1897). L'auteur y analyse surtout les idées de ROBERTSON SMITH.

Voir également DURKHEIM, Année sociologique 1910, t. V, p. 92 et ss. — Mr. DURKHEIM base toutefois ses déductions sur un certain nombre de faits rapportés par des voyageurs peu intuitifs ou assez mal documentés. On peut en dire tout autant des opinions de Mr. S. REINACH.

* * *

Ayant ainsi donné notre idée sur l'origine, sinon probable, du moins possible du totémisme, nous revenons au totem actuel, tel qu'il existe aujourd'hui dans la tribu, et à sa «concrétisation matérielle» représentée par l'okamèyôô. Nous en avions déjà dit quelques mots: il importe maintenant de l'étudier à fond.

CHAPITRE X.

LE TOTEM «PRÉSENT ET TANGIBLE» ET L'AKAMÉYÔŃ.

I. LE TOTEM PRÉSENT ET TANGIBLE.

§ 1. Réunaité du culte.

Le culte matériel est abomaniée au Bûri: il concrétise mais ne spiritualise pas.

§ 2. Quel sera l'objet du culte totémique?

Les fragments choisis servent ceux qui rétrocèdent le mieux à l'idée charnelle. Sous ce forme matérielle, cette idée est cependant toute spirituelle.

§ 3. Qui recueillera le totem?

Ce rôle est réservé, non au Bûlûmor, chef du culte officiel, mais au chef de la famille, chef du culte familial en même temps que principal.

§ 4. Dans quelles conditions le totem sera-t-il pris?

Les conditions ne sont pas indifférentes, mais déterminées par la loi. Le totem n'est valable que pour le possesseur. — Peu d'importance de la vente d'un totem. — Les conditions du choix: A) Se procurer l'animal désigné. B) Les cérémonies rituelles. Le chant de présentation. — Rôle du Bûlûmor et du chef de famille. — Cérémonies semblables dans l'Oyono.

§ 5. Vertu du fragment choisi.

Conditions requises pour la valeur du choix.

§ 6. Où conserve-t-on le totem?

Le Nlé. — L'Ebuere. — Le Bûri. — L'Akamébôń.

II. L'AKAMÉYÔŃ.

Nature de l'Akamébôń.

Ce qui le constitue. — Les différents objets qui s'y rapportent sans en faire partie essentielle.

[p. 318]

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

I. LE TOTEM PRÉSENT ET TANGIBLE.

§ 1. Nécessité du culte.

Nous avons passé en revue dans un chapitre précédent les divers totems et constaté que suivant la diversité des familles, des clans et des tribus, ces totems ressortissaient des trois règnes de la nature. Ils donnent toutefois une place très prépondérante au règne animal. Cette constatation, loin d'être particulière aux Fân, est au contraire universelle: nous en avons cité plus haut de nombreux exemples. L'origine du totem nous fournira un peu plus loin les raisons de ce choix.

Ici se pose d'abord à l'égard du totem une question de fait. Les totems que nous avons examinés démontraient simplement l'existence de l'institution. Mais, pour pouvoir subsister, l'institution totémique, comme toutes les autres institutions religieuses, requiert nécessairement le culte. Or, ce culte ne peut, en réalité, être adressé d'une manière précise et toujours actuelle au totem, tel que nous venons de le voir. L'objet du culte, en effet, doit parler aux yeux, ou, si l'on préfère, revêtir une forme tangible et tomber dans le domaine des sens. Ainsi, même dans les religions chrétiennes, entièrement spiritualistes par leur objet, et où le culte et la prière s'adressent à un Être invisible et immatériel, il a fallu nécessairement recourir à des symboles figuratifs, à des images, à des tableaux qui mettent, pour ainsi dire, la chose spirituelle sous les yeux et sous les sens. Ils la matérialisent, pour pouvoir de là reprendre la pensée, et l'élever à l'idée et au culte spirituel.

Pour le Noir, les raisons sont les mêmes. Elles sont plus fortes encore avec une race qui vit surtout par les sens, et à laquelle les idées uniquement spéculatives échappent en grande partie.

Son totem, il est vrai, est purement matériel, sauf quelques exceptions dont nous nous préoccuperons ensuite, mais ce totem ne peut toujours non plus être sous sa main, sous ses yeux, à sa portée, quand il en a besoin. Il a un totem, surtout pour recourir à lui dans les cas de danger, car ce totem est en somme, au point de vue pratique, une alliance: c'est une force à son service. Il faudrait donc qu'il l'eût à sa portée immédiate toutes les fois qu'il est nécessaire. Pour certains totems, ce sera possible: pour d'autres, au contraire, ce ne le sera en aucune façon. Et si cette impossibilité est fréquente pour le totem de clan ou de tribu, elle l'est encore beaucoup plus pour le totem particulier. Il est évident, et nous ne nous attarderons pas sur ce sujet, que le Noir ne peut se faire accompagner partout de son totem. Si c'est un végétal, un arbre par exemple, c'est lui, au contraire, qui devra aller le trouver; si c'est un animal, un tigre par exemple, le spectacle, dans ce cas, serait assez singulier. De plus, le Fân aurait souvent fort à faire pour prémunir son totem contre les convoitises ou les craintes des autres guerriers pour lesquels ce totem n'est rien, sinon une proie, un gibier, ou un ennemi. Il lui serait tout aussi difficile de garder les autres contre les appétits de son totem, ce qui reviendrait pour lui au même point: la mort nécessaire de son protecteur.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Mais si le Fân, comme on le conçoit aisément, ne peut se faire suivre de son totem pour y recourir toutes les fois qu'il en aura besoin, un moyen bien simple semble s'offrir à lui: l'invocation, la prière, la simple pensée, l'appel mental. Ainsi, en cas de besoin, recourons-nous nous-mêmes au secours divin. Cette réflexion est très vraie pour le Blanc; elle ne l'est nullement pour le Noir qui a besoin de concrétiser, de matérialiser pour ainsi dire sa pensée et l'objet de son culte: il ne saurait s'adresser à un être immatériel qui ne tombe en aucune façon sous ses sens, et comme le Créateur, par exemple, est pour lui dans ce cas, il ne lui demande aucun concours, il ne lui rendra non plus aucun culte. Que fera-t-il donc avec son totem? La réponse est bien simple, il le concrétisera de manière sensible et tangible: pour cela, il aura recours au moyen le plus facile, et qui répond d'ailleurs à toutes ses idées religieuses sur l'animisme, idées que nous ne pouvons développer ici, mais qui sont suffisamment connues: il prendra avec lui et gardera soigneusement un «fragment» de son totem.

Nous devons tout d'abord noter ici qu'il s'agit ici seulement du totem réel, existant et vivant: ce fragment en est la réalité tangible. Le totem symbole et emblème sera ensuite examiné.

* * *

Par suite, cinq questions se posent:

1° Ce fragment sera-t-il quelconque, et n'importe quelle fraction, quel reste ou morceau de l'animal ou du végétal totem? auront-ils la même vertu?

2° Qui «prendra» ce fragment de totem? sera-ce n'importe qui, un indifférent, un parent, le possesseur du totem lui-même, ou un homme «sacré», le fétiseur?

3° Dans quelles conditions spéciales de temps, de lieu, de circonstances, sera choisi d'abord, puis ensuite recueilli ce fragment de totem? Le prendra-t-on sans se préoccuper des circonstances extrinsèques?

4° Ce fragment de totem aura-t-il la même vertu intrinsèque et la même puissance extérieure que le totem tout entier?

5° Où sera conservé ce totem et recevra-t-il des honneurs spéciaux?

§ 2. Objet du culte totémique.

La première question à laquelle nous avons à répondre est celle-ci:

«Ce fragment sera-t-il quelconque?»

La réponse à cette question nous amène à préciser l'objet du culte totémique.

Ce fragment ne peut être un fragment «quelconque», pris n'importe, où n'importe quand, et dans n'importe quelle partie du totem. Cette nécessité d'un choix particulier est la suite même de la conception du totem.

Cette conception repose en effet sur un pacte d'alliance conclu entre l'homme et l'animal. Nous disons l'animal, car c'est de beaucoup le cas le plus fréquent. Les conséquences sont les mêmes s'il s'agit d'un végétal ou tout autre être. L'homme ira, après sa mort, habiter, pour un certain temps et seulement d'une certaine manière, dans la race de son totem.

Nous employons à dessein ce terme indéterminé de «certaine manière», car les idées des Fâh sont assez confuses sur ce point.

Il est également difficile de les démêler de façon exacte au milieu des réticences des fétiseurs.

Tout d'abord, ce n'est évidemment pas le «corps» de l'homme qui ira se mêler avec celui de l'animal, ou de sa substance putréfiée donner naissance à un autre animal qui serait alors sa continuation sur la terre. Cette conception peut être celle de certaines tribus: ainsi M. van Gennep nous signale qu'à Madagascar, en particulier, les indigènes admettent que certains serpents «sortent» ainsi du cadavre humain[1]. Elle n'est assurément pas celle des Fân et de toutes les tribus voisines: tous savent parfaitement que le corps de l'homme disparaît assez rapidement sans laisser aucune trace; quand, après un mois environ, le fils aîné ou l'héritier du chef de famille enlève le crâne du défunt, il n'a aucun respect et ne témoigne aucune déférence pour les vers, fourmis, et autres insectes qui grouillent dans le cadavre presque décomposé. Les assistants, tous membres de sa famille, n'auront également aucune considération pour ces restes: tantôt on les laissera, le crâne enlevé, sur le bord même de la fosse, sans souci des animaux qui pourraient venir rôder autour; tantôt, on les rejettera sans aucune cérémonie dans la fosse qui sera ensuite comblée. Ce cas arrive lorsque la sépulture est placée près des habitations, et que la laisser ouverte pourrait amener des accidents, par suite des émanations. Si, dans certains cas, on peut voir un ou plusieurs des assistants respecter les fourmis, vers, ou serpents qui pourraient se trouver dans la fosse ou le cadavre, il ne faut pas en conclure à un culte général de ces animaux, mais bien que l'animal en question, ver ou fourmi par exemple, est le totem particulier de celui ou de ceux qui leur rendent alors un certain culte. Pareils faits superficiellement observés ont pu faire conclure, à tort, du particulier au général.

Nous pouvons cependant faire remarquer ici que les Fân, malgré leur anthropophagie bien constatée, se refusent absolument à manger les animaux qui se repaissent de cadavres humains. Mais il n'y a là rien de totémique.

Ce n'est donc pas le corps de l'homme qui se mêle au corps de l'animal. Ce n'est pas non plus le «principe de vie» qui l'anime. Ce principe est indépendant de l'esprit lui-même, bien que tous deux disparaissent ensemble au moment de la mort. Ce principe de vie est également lumineux par lui-même; après la mort, suivant que l'homme aura été bon ou mauvais, au sens de la théologie noire, il ira, soit dans le séjour lumineux d'en haut, soleil, étoiles et en particulier Vénus, pour y être toujours heureux, soit dans le séjour douloureux d'en bas, dans l'ekoloane, pour y souffrir toujours dans le feu.

[1] Du moins dans l'Ouyoro et l'Uganda.

7: Trilles F319 Fang

L'âme proprement dite, ou mvore ce que l'on a appelé parfois la «larve», unie ou y appliquant alors un sens restrictif d'esprit méchant, ne se mêle pas davantage au corps ou à l'âme de l'animal totémique. D'après les Fàn, en effet, l'âme a plusieurs formes distinctes: comme le dit bien Mgr. Le Roy [1], c'est . . . «une sorte de substance éthérée qui pendant le sommeil du corps, reçoit la visite d'autres esprits, qui va les voir, qui s'occupe, qui rêve. C'est la voix intime qui nous parle à nous-mêmes, nous inspire de bons et mauvais sentiments, nous porte au bien ou au mal, nous cause de la joie, ou du remords. — Elle est enfin, peut-être, représentée par cette extériorisation de notre personne qui s'appelle l'ombre, qui repose dans l'homme endormi et qui le suit dans la mort.»

Toutefois, et on ne l'a pas jusqu'ici remarqué, croyons-nous, cette âme n'est pas simple et ne constitue pas une seule entité. Nous examinerons plus tard d'une façon détaillée «l'âme» d'après la pensée fàn. Contentons-nous ici de quelques brèves indications.

Dans «l'homme», sans parler du corps, nous trouvons d'abord:

1° le principe de vie, principe lumineux par lui-même, qui accompagne l'âme proprement dite, soit pendant la vie, soit plus tard après la mort. Ce principe est indépendant, et l'âme peut s'en séparer quand elle le désire. Ainsi, dans certains cas, le rêve par exemple, ce principe de vie demeure lumineux et attaché au corps, tandisque l'âme peut l'avoir quitté momentanément.

2° L'âme nginwanto, qui réside dans le cerveau, détermine les actes intelligents et aussi la respiration. Cette âme demeure dans le corps, d'une façon permanente ou non, jusqu'à la mort.

[1] Mgr. Le Roy, Religion des Primitifs, p. 141.

3° L'âme que l'on pourrait appeler consciente, qui dicte les actes bons à faire, les actes mauvais à éviter, mais ne peut les exécuter, cette âme peut être enlevée à l'homme par une volonté supérieure, v. g. dans la folie ou la possession, sans que l'âme agissante disparaisse.

L'âme agissante s'extériorise dans l'ombre vivante et mouvante, ombre qui accompagne le corps et épouse sa forme. Certains auteurs[1] prétendent que les Noirs ne sont pas arrivés à s'expliquer l'ombre comme résultant de l'interception de la lumière par un corps opaque. Tous les Noirs, Fâh ou autres, que nous avons interrogés, savent parfaitement que l'ombre est dûe à la lumière, mais ils n'en croient pas moins que l'ombre est également l'image extériorisée de l'âme; ils le croient d'autant plus qu'ils en donnent une raison: les sorciers et les fétiseurs peuvent à volonté, dans certaines initiations, faire grandir, diminuer ou disparaître leur ombre; ce fait est indéniable, il arrive au moment où le sorcier est «possédé par l'esprit».

Après la mort, l'âme consciente accompagne le principe de vie. L'âme agissante, elle, a une autre destinée.

Cette destinée dépend tout d'abord de sa conduite pendant qu'elle a été dans le corps. Suivant cette conduite, bonne ou mauvaise, elle sera récompensée ou punie par Nzame. Mais, de plus, cette destinée est également «indépendante» de cette conduite bonne ou mauvaise, en ce sens qu'elle dépend en première ligne des sacrifices funéraires, accomplis ou non.

De là, deux sortes d'ombres, de larves si l'on préfère, bien différentes: 1° les âmes punies par Nzame et 2° les âmes ou les esprits qui attendent les sacrifices funéraires. Ces sacrifices pour les atteindre doivent passer par leur cadavre, tout au moins représenté.

Les âmes qui attendent les sacrifices funéraires se rappellent aux vivants soit par de bons, soit par de mauvais procédés, afin d'obtenir plus vite satisfaction. Elles agissent de préférence pendant la nuit.

---

[1] Voir à ce sujet Mgr. Le Roy, l. c., p. 148.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Les âmes punies se rappellent également aux vivants, ou plutôt s'efforcent de se venger d'eux, par de mauvais procédés. La durée de leur punition est vague: elles finissent par s'anéantir.

Mais, outre ces âmes diverses, ce principe de vie et cette extériorisation de l'âme comme ombre, système déjà si compliqué, il reste encore autre chose. Les Fân le désignent parfois, car ils n'aiment pas à en parler, sous le nom de bo, qui signifie également le cerveau matériel. Ce bo, matériel pendant la vie, devient «immatériel» après la mort: il constitue: «l'essence de la nature humaine». A son gré, il accompagne ou non l'âme, sort du tombeau quand il veut ou plutôt du crâne où il demeure. Souvent, il est alors suivi par «l'oiseau de la mort». Après le décès de son possesseur, il demeure, non pas éternel, mais avec une durée indéfinie: par des charmes puissants, et c'est là précisément le but des sacrifices totémiques, on le «fixe» dans le crâne qui lui a appartenu. Parfois encore, on le retient dans un crâne «représentatif» par des sacrifices appropriés. Le bo est ce que l'on peut appeler l'esprit de la race, l'esprit protecteur, d'autant plus puissant qu'au bo de l'ancêtre primitif, seront venus s'adjoindre d'autres bo de ces descendants.

Nous sommes loin, comme on le voit, du culte mânique, s'adressant aux mânes, aux âmes désincarnées, aux ombres. Loin également du culte des esprits. Nous nous rapprochons du culte des ancêtres, mais à un point de vue particulier.

Dans la conception totémique de l'alliance conclue entre l'homme et l'animal, alliance persistant dans les descendants après la mort des premiers contractants, il n'y a donc pas «identification» comme quelques-uns l'ont compris. En admettant l'identification, la personnalité humaine persiste après la mort, et se substitue, pour se survivre, à la personnalité animale dont la forme demeure seule. C'est donc, en ce sens, un homme réel à figure animale. Il y en a d'ailleurs véritablement, d'après la croyance noire, analogue à nos contes de fées. Les sorciers, par exemple, jouiraient de ce pouvoir de transformation, soit sur les autres, soit sur eux-mêmes. Telle encore la métempsycose des anciens, transformation de l'homme en bête, par un acte magique indépendant de sa volonté, acte révocable ou non, s'étendant à la race ou à l'individu. Les singes, qui au dire des Noirs sont des hommes véritables, rentreraient dans cette catégorie.

Dans cette alliance, il n'y a ni transformation, ni annihilation de l'animal, il y a cohabitation d'une part, et de l'autre, direction de la volonté, des facultés, des qualités diverses, dans un but donné: la protection de la race humaine. Il n'y a en aucune façon destruction de la personnalité de l'animal: il y a seulement ce que l'on pourrait peut-être appeler «surhabitation», toute différente, on le voit, des cas que nous venons de donner, et aussi de la «possession» au sens chrétien du mot, où un esprit vient habiter un corps et le diriger à son gré.

Il faut bien remarquer qu'en somme, dans cette union, l'animal ou le végétal gagne bien peu de chose, au moins à notre point de vue: en regard d'une sujétion, il aliène en quelque sorte sa personnalité et sa volonté, les fait servir à l'usage de l'homme et ne reçoit en échange qu'une certaine protection et immunité.

Nous disons «au moins à notre point de vue». Mais en est-il de même au point de vue noir? Nous ne le croyons pas. Maintes fois, nous avons interrogé les Noirs à ce sujet: ils s'en sont presque toujours tirés par des réponses évasives suivant leur habitude, ou souvent négatives. Un seul a bien voulu me donner leur sentiment à cet égard. C'était le chef des Esaméndoun, dans la rivière Abanga. «Ce que le clan animal gagne à cette alliance, me répondit-il, c'est de demeurer (A tobe tobe. Emién a wus ké wuwu né bo wuia. Il demeure toujours. L'animal lui-même meurt, mais sans que sa personnalité agissante périsse).»

C'est-à-dire, en somme, que de même que chaque homme disparaît ici bas en tant qu'individu, mais que sa personnalité demeure agissante dans la race qui lui survit, de même l'animal disparaît comme individu, mais sa personnalité lui survit, agissant dans la race inféodée à un clan humain. Sans cette inféodation, tout disparaît en lui sans laisser de traces.

L'esprit de l'ancêtre, sous cette forme particulière de force procréatrice de la race, réside dans l'animal totem et l'anime tout entier; mais certaines parties sont plus aptes à cette fonction, mieux reconnues pour telles: ainsi le cœur, en premier rang, car il est le séjour et le siège non seulement des affections, mais surtout de la volonté et des sentiments; puis le cerveau, siège de l'intellect actif; l'esprit de l'ancêtre y résidera de préférence, tandisque la vertu de la race affectionnera le cœur.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Viendront ensuite les os, et d'abord les os du crâne, car les os sont en effet ce qui demeure dans l'animal, et ce qui également, au dire des Fàn, constitue son être; dans ces os, ceux du crâne seront choisis en première ligne, car la tête est la partie la plus noble du corps, celle où réside la vie, et c'est pour cette raison que l'on gardera seulement le crâne des ancêtres, pour leur offrir les sacrifices funéraires. Sur cette enveloppe crânienne, où jadis résidait son moi, l'ancêtre défunt, dont l'esprit assiste invisible aux délibérations de ses descendants, saura trouver les sacrifices expiatoires, et de là veiller à l'avenir de la race.

Cependant, certains os seront parfois gardés de préférence au crâne: tels ceux qui expriment le mieux les qualités que le totem doit mettre au service de son possesseur, ou encore ceux qui symbolisent davantage l'animal. Ainsi, dans le tigre, on choisira d'abord les griffes ou les dents qui montrent mieux que toute autre chose la qualité que l'on désire se voir attribuer, la force, l'ardeur au combat, servie par de terribles instruments. Du serpent, on réservera les dents, et particulièrement celles qui lui servent à inoculer son venin, dents que les Fàn connaissent parfaitement bien[1]. De l'éléphant, on gardera encore les dents, et particulièrement celles de petit volume, surtout si elles sont creuses, car alors il sera plus facile d'y adjoindre ou faire entrer d'autres puissants fétiches. De l'éléphant, encore, on gardera les crins de la queue, qui seront portés en anneaux et en bracelets, d'ailleurs d'un assez joli effet. Dans l'antilope, au contraire, on préfèrera les os des jambes, par exemple l'osselet du genou, plus portatif, et dans lequel est censé résider la force de la jambe; ce sera en effet surtout la vitesse, l'agilité qui seront prisées dans ce totem, vertus dont le salut du guerrier dépend souvent dans le combat. Dans un totem végétal, on prisera davantage

[1] Dans bien des cas, on se gardera avec soin d'enlever le venin encore adhérent à ces dents, et il arrivera alors qu'au besoin leur morsure sera encore très dangereuse. Ce sera la preuve, pour le Fàn, que l'esprit, au sens que nous avons déterminé, y réside toujours.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

l'écorce où, de fait, réside le plus souvent la vertu active: dans certains cas, ce sera cependant le bois, et ce choix dépendra toujours de la qualité spécialement cherchée.

Lorsque le totem, au contraire, est de taille suffisamment réduite pour qu'on puisse le porter entier, on ne manquera pas de le faire, car, alors, il n'est pas permis de le partager en fragments.

Dans tous ces cas, l'usage et la coutume sont les grandes lois qui régissent la matière, beaucoup plus que la volonté propre de l'individu. Agir à sa guise ne lui viendrait pas à l'idée pour tout ce qui regarde un phénomène religieux, qui ne dépend de lui en aucune façon: son choix n'aurait aucune valeur, et ne pourrait qu'irriter le totem contre le violateur de lois précises et existant avant lui et sans lui.

§ 3. Qui prendra le totem?

Le fragment de totem, auquel s'adressera le culte, ne dépend donc pas de la volonté et du choix libre, spontané, et quelconque, du possesseur ou destinataire de ce totem. Celui-là seul qui en a le droit pourra prendre ce totem, et dans des circonstances et avec un cérémonial donné et prescrit dans ses moindres détails.

De là, suivant le totem lui-même, variera l'agent du culte. Toutes les fois qu'il s'agira du totem tribal, ce rôle reviendra au chef de la tribu qui, seul, représente le culte totémique, ou le culte de la race. Dans certains cas, par usurpation de pouvoirs parfois, ou encore dans les tribus trop nombreuses, l'agent cultuel sera le fétichéur en titre: là encore, presque toujours, il y aura cependant usurpation de sa part, et empiètement dans un domaine qui ne lui appartient pas. Lorsque, pour une raison politique ou autre, le chef ne peut remplir ce rôle, il est naturellement dévolu au frère qui vient immédiatement après lui en ligne successorale, et à défaut de frère, au fils aîné. Il est vrai que souvent le frère du chef, afin de mieux mettre dans sa main les deux pouvoirs civil et religieux, est également le fétichéur de la tribu, ce qui explique les empiètements de fonction dont nous avons parlé. En principe donc, toutes les fois qu'il s'agira du totem tribal, le rôle de choisir le fragment reviendra au chef de tribu.

De même, s'il s'agit d'un totem familial (rappelons bien qu'il s'agit du choix d'un «fragment» du totem et non de totem nouveau), ce choix reviendra au chef de famille qui, seul, a qualité dans l'affaire.

S'il s'agit enfin du totem individuel, ce sera à l'individu en tant que tel.

Quelque soit cependant l'agent cultuel et le cas, totem tribal, familial, ou individuel, chef de tribu, de clan, de famille ou simple particulier, ce choix aura lieu d'après des règles précises et déterminées, et sous le regard attentif du fétiseur. Si, en effet, le totem lui-même ne tombe pas sous son autorité et contrôle directs, en tant que personnage religieux, chargé d'ordonnancer les choses du culte et de veiller à leur observance minutieuse, il doit néanmoins surveiller les phénomènes religieux; ceux du totem sont utiles si étroitement aux autres actes religieux de toute nature, et particulièrement à ceux qui regardent le culte des ancêtres, que sa stricte surveillance s'impose, et par là même se justifie.

§ 4. Dans quelles conditions ce totem sera-t-il pris?

Le totem ne peut être pris indifféremment et à n'importe quel moment, de même qu'il ne peut être pris par n'importe qui, mais par celui-là seulement qui a droit et pouvoir de le faire. Là encore la loi est intervenue, et les rites de la cérémonie sont parfaitement déterminés. Le totem ne peut être pris qu'après un sacrifice où intervient, comme sacrificateur, le futur possesseur du totem, et, comme sacrifié, l'animal lui-même où réside l'esprit totémique. Si, au lieu d'un animal, c'est un végétal, la cérémonie est semblablement la même: le végétal remplacera simplement l'animal, les détails seront identiques.

Le futur possesseur du totem est le sacrificateur: de là, résulte une conséquence importante, et que l'on n'a pas toujours assez remarquée:

Le totem n'a de valeur que pour le possesseur seul.

Celui-ci vient-il à mourir, son totem n'a plus aucune valeur: elle disparaît avec le propriétaire et, au besoin, les héritiers le céderont très facilement. En parlant bientôt d'un fétiche tribal, l'akumáyôê, nous constaterons un fait de ce genre: un chef éingi, le chef même du clan, vend sans difficulté à l'explorateur A. Bennett le totem de son prédécesseur, également chef comme lui. Par le fait même de la mort du possesseur et de l'achat subséquent, ce totem est de nulle valeur.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

L'explorateur ou le voyageur achète donc le totem d'un décédé ou encore se le fait donner en cadeau. Il l'exhibe ensuite comme un «puissant fétiche». Rien de plus erroné! il n'est puissant que dans l'opinion du seul voyageur. De plus, celui-ci pourra s'étonner de la facilité relative avec lequel le Noir l'aura cédé; il en conclura, comme le fait se présente encore tous les jours et avec nombre de voyageurs, que le Fân, ou tout autre Noir, n'a en son fétiche qu'une foi très mince et qui cède à la plus faible considération d'argent ou de tout autre mobile. La conception du voyageur s'explique fort bien par l'ignorance presque absolue où il est de la religion et des croyances de ceux qui l'entourent et qu'il visite. Quand il les décrit, c'est avec la compétence d'un Chinois (et ce livre a été fait), qui, ne connaissant rien à nos dogmes et à nos croyances, entre dans une église, contemple les cérémonies du culte et en explique ensuite le sens à ses compatriotes d'Extrême Orient. On n'est pas surpris de trouver alors, en ce livre, une extrême fantaisie. Et ainsi en va-t-il de notre voyageur et de notre écrivain. En réalité, le sacrifice ne vaut que pour celui qui l'offre ou pour celui en faveur de qui il est offert: dans cette circonstance particulière, le totem n'a de valeur que pour ce dernier: vient-il à mourir, ce n'est plus son totem ni un totem: c'est simplement un fragment d'animal totémique, sans aucune valeur, si c'est un totem individuel, de valeur mince, si c'est un totem de tribu. En effet, avec la mort du possesseur, l'esprit de la tribu qui y avait été spécialement appelé, cesse d'y résider.

Les conditions du choix.

a) Se procurer l'animal choisi.

La première condition pour procéder à la cérémonie sera tout d'abord évidemment de se procurer le sujet requis. Nous avons, en effet, déjà dit que tout animal, même s'il appartient à la race du totem, n'était pas pour cela totémique. Prenons par exemple le clan des Yemvûû dont le totem est l'antilope: ce n'est pas la race entière des antilopes qui, dans ce clan, sera l'objet du culte: ce sera telle espèce précise d'antilope. Est-ce tout? Non; encore dans cette espèce, surtout lorsqu'elle est particulièrement nombreuse, on choisira, on sera désignée depuis longtemps, telle variété, offrant tels caractères distinctifs. Pour les connaître, et ne pas se risquer à des démarches et à des peines inutiles, un homme de ce clan consultera donc d'abord le «voyant», le dépositaire des secrets du culte, qui lui prescrira les démarches préliminaires, les sacrifices qu'il faut offrir, la ligne de conduite qu'il doit adopter pour obtenir une heureuse issue. L'importance et le prix de cette consultation, aussi bien que les démarches nécessaires, varieront étrangement avec la chose à obtenir. Ainsi, par exemple, pour déterminer quelle antilope doit être choisie, le «voyant» demandera une poule. Une deuxième poule sera requise pour déterminer l'endroit favorable à l'affût, car celui-ci ne saurait être indifférent; une poule encore pour désigner le jour convenable, car il y a des jours «heureux» comme il y a des jours «malheureux» et en ces jours-là, le totem ne saurait être choisi sous peine d'insuccès. Trois poules, quelques perles, un peu de poudre suffiront généralement pour ces premières démarches, s'il s'agit d'un totem individuel. Si le totem doit être familial, les prix augmentent immédiatement, et les poules seront remplacées par des cabris; poudre et perles devront aussi être données en quantités plus considérables. Si enfin il s'agit d'un totem tribal, et si, chose très importante également à considérer, le chef est riche, il faudra bien qu'il s'exécute: trois moutons, un fusil et parfois plus, deux ou trois tonnelets de poudre, trois pagnes, et trois masses de perles, tel sera le prix normal, mais qui admet, comme toute valeur raisonnable, la hausse et la baisse. Tout aussi bien qu'en pays blanc, le féticheur fûû sait faire rendre au client tout ce qu'il peut donner! et là-dessus le proverbe noir est charmant:

Abo nzox fo ve yèn mbil.

«Pris sous le pied de l'éléphant, le rat sait encore rentrer dans son trou.» Le client échappe aussi au féticheur.

Mais en quel état, souvent!

* * *

b) Les cérémonies rituelles.

Ces premières démarches une fois terminées, et l'animal désigné heureusement trouvé et mis à mort, un premier sacrifice est offert à la victime elle-même pour que ses frères et parents ne vengent pas ce meurtre nécessaire. Là encore, une poule ou un mouton font d'ordinaire les frais de la cérémonie. Une partie, la plus faible, la tête, le cœur, les pattes, est brûlée, et les cendres sont soigneusement mises à part: le reste est gardé par le fétiheur comme paiement particulier. Les cendres sont données à celui qui offre: elles lui seront nécessaires, et il les réunira, en entier ou en partie, au totem lui-même: c'est la preuve effective et formelle que le sacrifice a été offert.

Après cette cérémonie préliminaire, le postulant, s'il agit d'un totem individuel, se rend seul en un endroit désigné de la forêt: il y retrouve le fétiheur; si, au contraire, il s'agit d'un totem clanique, tous les hommes du clan, armés et portant leur propre totem, accompagneront leur chef: l'animal totem sera étendu à terre, ouvert avec le couteau des sacrifices, et l'intestin partagé en trois parties: suivant la quantité de matières contenues dans chaque partie et la position particulière de chaque fragment, on présagera bon succès ou malheur: même dans ce dernier cas, on ne doit cependant pas s'arrêter: la cérémonie totémique une fois commencée doit toujours s'achever, la laisser interrompue pour quelque cause que ce soit attirerait les plus grands malheurs sur les assistants. La conviction indigène est fortement établie sur ce point; ainsi, nous avons entendu raconter qu'une tribu étant un jour réunie dans la forêt autour de son chef apprit soudain qu'un clan ennemi venait de faire irruption dans son village, pillait les cases et emmenait les femmes captives. On continua cependant la cérémonie comme si rien ne se passait d'anormal. Quand tout fut terminé seulement, me disait le chef qui me répétait cette histoire, les guerriers, sautant sur leurs armes, coururent à l'ennemi. Leur confiance fut bien récompensée: non seulement ils remportèrent la victoire, mais encore reprirent leurs femmes et firent de nombreux prisonniers. Ce fut, ajoutait-il, un fameux festin!

On comprend combien ce fait était de nature à rendre indestructible leur confiance au totem.

Le cœur de la bête est également inspecté avec un soin minutieux pour en tirer d'heureux ou de funestes présages: il est détaché, mis à part, et enveloppé dans des feuilles d'amome, la plante consacrée. Après ces premiers préliminaires, la danse commence, scandée par les coups de tamtam, et se déroule tout autour du corps de la victime. Cette danse est accompagnée de chants qui tendent tous à attirer la bienveillance du totem sur celui qui va en recevoir la marque: ils sont toujours précédés, à chaque reprise de danse, du chant d'invocation à l'ahamɛ́yɔ́ŋ dont voici un exemple. Les premières paroles sont consacrées à une sorte de présentation ou d'introduction. Le postulant y décline ses noms et qualités; puis il a grand soin d'ajouter qu'il a le nlɛ́m mbɔ̀n, c'est-à-dire le cœur purifié, qu'il a accompli d'abord les sacrifices nécessaires et les rites préparatoires. Le chœur répète chaque phrase sur le même air, et quand le chant est terminé, le postulant termine en reprenant une dernière fois la présentation du commencement.

Chant de présentation au totem.

Postulant.

Chœur.

Postulant.

Chœur.

A he ve é - hé - kwé, é - hé - kwé mvi né ngu - re.

Postulant.

Chœur.

Di - gé - ge bie, né ntil, Di - gé - ge hé nôm a - lit.

Postulant.

Chœur.

Mvôô, a lé we, a lé ntin, o - via - ra, a lé we.

Le Postulant:	Mé ne Ovôn Elôye	Je suis Ovôn fils d'Elôye
	Mé ne mon' Eleie	Je suis un fils des Eleie.
Le Chœur:	A ne Ovôn Elôye	C'est Ovôn fils d'Elôye
	A ne mon' Eleie	C'est un fils des Eleie.

Le Postulant:	Mî mewu bôm ellim ewu mbîjî Mî mewu bôm	J'ai fini de bien disposer mon cœur.
Le Chœur:	A mewu bôm ellim ewu mbîî. A mewu bôm.	Il a fini de bien disposer son cœur, Il a fini de le disposer.
Le Postulant:	Ô'ôm, bôîî okumîpôî, Ma bôm ne ne bî mdîn.	Maintenant, remède de l'okumîpôî, je te prépare avec grande force.
Le Chœur:	Yô, yô, a bôm.	Yô, yô, il prépare.

Ici, tous les assistants, après avoir tourné en cercle, exécutent une danse rituelle, accompagnée de tamtam, sur un rythme lent et solennel. De temps en temps, on chante: Yô, yô, a bôm, puis le chœur reprend. Au bout d'un certain temps, la danse cesse, et le chœur reprend:

Le Chœur:	Nî bî mdîn, okumîpôî, A bôm ne nî bî mdîn.	Avec grande force, okumîpôî, Je te prépare avec grande force (c'est-à-dire: pour que tu aies une grande force).
Le Postulant:	Ma ne ne ekôwî, Ekôwî mwî nî ngwe.	Je te donne un crâne, Un crâne d'albinos[1] et de chimpanzé.
Le Chœur:	A ke ne ekôwî, Ekôwî mwî nî ngwe.	Il lui donne un crâne, Un crâne d'albinos et de chimpanzé.
Le Postulant:	Dîpîgo, mî ne mîî, Dîpîgo, bî ellim ellî.	Regarde, je suis pur, Regarde, mon cœur est docile.
Le Chœur:	Dîpîgo bîr nî mîî, Dîpîgo bî ellim ellî.	Regarde-nous avec complaisance, Regarde-nous nous calme.
Le Postulant:	Mvôô, ma lî ne, Ma lî ne, mîî, Oviaru, ma lî ne.	Mvôô, il t'appelle, Il t'appelle, ô mîî, Oviaru, il t'appelle.
Le Chœur:	Mvôô, a lî ne A lî ne, mîî Oviaru, a lî ne	Mvôô[2], il t'appelle, Il t'appelle, ô mîî[3], Oviaru[4], il t'invoque.
Le Postulant:	Mî ne Ovôn Eelyn, Mî ne mon' Eeiele.	Je suis Ovôn Eelyn, Je suis un fils des Eeiele.
Le Chœur:	A ne Ovôn Eelyn A ne mon' Eeiele	C'est bien Ovôn Eelyn, C'est un fils des Eeiele.

[1] Le crâne d'albinos est considéré comme un puissant fétiche: l'esprit des ancêtres de la race est censé y résider de préférence.

[2] Mvôô, peau de chat-tigre, où résidera le fétiche de l'astuce et de la finesse.

[3] Mîî, peau de chat-sauvage, où viendra le fétiche de la bravoure dans les combats.

[4] Oviaru, sifflet de guerre: il met en fuite les esprits malfaisants.

Ce rite solennel une fois terminé, le féticheur a fini son rôle, et le chef procède seul désormais à toutes les opérations.

Avec une torche d'okoumé[1], il met le feu au bûcher sur lequel repose le corps de la victime; les chants et les danses continuent, tandis que les chairs crépitent sur les charbons ardents.

Pendant ce temps, on a préparé à terre un lit de feuilles de bananiers. Le choix de ces feuilles, non plus que du bananier lui-même, n'est aucunement indifférent. Tout autour du village, derrière la ligne des cases, règne toujours une ceinture assez large de bananiers. Quand les cadavres des femmes ne sont pas jetés à l'eau, comme la loi l'ordonne en certaines circonstances, ils sont enterrés dans cette plantation. On doit veiller avec soin à ce qu'aucun cadavre n'ait été enseveli près du bananier désigné. Si ce cas arrivait, même involontaire et insoupçonné, le totem perdrait de sa valeur et exigerait de nombreux sacrifices pour racheter la faute matérielle commise. Le bananier doit être choisi tout près de la case de celui auquel est destiné le totem. Les feuilles nécessaires seront coupées par un homme et avec un couteau servant à son usage: les faire couper par une femme et avec un sabre d'abatis appartenant à une femme constituerait des fautes rituelles graves. Seuls encore les hommes doivent emporter les feuilles au lieu désigné: il est interdit aux femmes d'y toucher. Les hommes désignés doivent être «de même sang» que le destinataire du totem. Enfin, les feuilles ne doivent pas toucher terre et de plus demeurer entières pour ne contracter aucune souillure rituelle. Chaque infraction à ces rites, même involontaire, entraîne des peines graves.

Près de ce lit de feuilles, on place la peau écorchée de la bête, si elle est petite, telle un rat ou un singe: on dépose également à côté une peau de chat-sauvage ou asié que le chef suspendra ensuite à son baudrier. Si c'est un tigre, ou autre animal de ce genre, on placera seulement la queue. Le reste de la peau, y compris la tête, sera brûlé avec l'animal. Dès que les chairs sont suffisamment cuites, on les enlève du bûcher et on les place sur le lit de feuilles de bananier; elles ne doivent à aucun moment toucher la terre. Elles sont ensuite séparées en autant de morceaux qu'il y a d'assistants. S'ils sont trop nombreux, chacun s'approche tour à tour mais prend seulement un petit morceau. Quand tous ont passé, s'il reste encore de la viande, les principaux guerriers l'achèvent. Aucun morceau ne doit être jeté à terre: il y aurait là une sorte de profanation; tout doit être mangé, sauf les gros os, qui sont rejetés d'abord un à un sur les feuilles de bananier, en l'ordre qu'ils occupaient dans le corps de l'animal. Tous les os sont soigneusement nettoyés et replacés. On les enferme ensuite en tas dans les feuilles, après que le chef a détaché la boîte crânienne, ou un morceau de cette boîte, si l'animal est de trop grosse espèce.

[1] Okoumé blanneau, des Térébinthacées. On en recueille la sève résineuse pour la fabrication des torches.

7: Trilles F319 Fang

Le même cérémonial est suivi pour un végétal ou un minéral, en omettant évidemment les rites impossibles à observer.

S'il s'agit d'un totem ressortissant d'un phénomène naturel, les cérémonies sont alors complètement différentes. Ainsi, le tonnerre est «matérialisé» par le mica, ou mébi mémandé (excréments du tonnerre). Pour la spécialisation de ce genre particulier de totems, phénomènes célestes et autres, il en est tout d'abord de même que pour les animaux et végétaux parmi lesquels ce n'est pas indifféremment tout animal ou tout végétal de l'espèce qui peut être totem, mais bien tel animal ou tel végétal en particulier. Des notes distinctives, des marques spéciales les font reconnaître comme appartenant bien à la famille de l'ancêtre ou du mvamaydé, et dépositaires par conséquent de la vertu de la race. C'est au fétiseur, à l'homme du culte, de déterminer, dans ces cas, si les conditions sont bien réalisées. Tout morceau de mica, par exemple, ne sera donc pas totem, mais seulement le morceau présentant telles ou telles conditions. Dans ce cas de phénomènes naturels, l'esprit protecteur, car en cette circonstance, il nous semble bien y avoir véritablement croyance à l'esprit se manifestera parfois à son clan d'autre façon plus frappante, plus expressive. Si nous employons ce mot «esprit», c'est qu'il y a alors extension du totem ordinaire, même dégénérescence du système lui-même. Il est bien évident en effet que l'esprit de la race ne vient ni se reposer ni habiter dans l'esprit du tonnerre sur lequel il ne saurait avoir aucune espèce d'action, car ils ne sont pas de même monde!

Mais s'il ne peut habiter en lui, il repose cependant dans des objets qui lui sont «voués», et par lesquels il peut néanmoins avoir influence sur lui. Par là, le principe même du totémisme est conservé. Mais il se présente des cas où l'esprit du tonnerre lui-même se choisit un autre «représentant» qui, étant alors beaucoup plus directement en communication avec lui, remplace immédiatement le totem matériel dont nous avons parlé tout à l'heure. Ainsi, c'est ce qui arrive lorsque pendant un orage violent, la foudre éclate et frappe un arbre, un animal et surtout un homme. Tout d'abord, pour les tribus qui n'ont aucun rapport totémique avec le tonnerre, l'arbre, l'animal ou l'homme frappé, constitueront en eux-mêmes de puissants fétiches, et même, par analogie, ou parallélisme, entreront dans la composition du «fétiche» de guerre, afin de détourner les balles et les flèches. On emploiera de plus leurs restes dans la confection d'un autre fétiche destiné à protéger le village contre le feu, la foudre, les cataclysmes divers qui peuvent le menacer: dans ce but, si l'objet frappé a été un arbre, il y aura tout d'abord un grand sacrifice. On offrira un captif, ou à défaut de victime humaine infiniment préférable, un cabri, une chèvre. Si l'hostie est un homme ou un animal, après une cérémonie particulière que nous allons décrire, certaines parties du corps, particulièrement les os avoisinant la partie frappée, ou les os qui seraient déjà brûlés par le passage de la foudre constitueront le fétiche. Ce rite doit être déjà fort ancien dans la tribu des Fân, d'autant que nous le voyons presque textuellement décrit dans le livre déjà cité de Junker, à propos d'autres tribus bantoues de l'Est. Ce serait donc un rite de l'origine. Voici d'ailleurs, d'après cet auteur, la cérémonie telle qu'elle se pratique dans l'Unyoro, à l'autre extrémité de l'Afrique: telle ressemblance est particulièrement typique. Nous signalons toutefois quelques dissemblances entre les deux manières de procéder.

Une remarque s'impose d'abord. Dans l'Unyoro comme chez les Fân, nul n'admet que l'homme frappé ainsi par la foudre, le soit par accident. Dans aucun cas, et là moins qu'ailleurs, «l'accident» n'est considéré comme tel. Il est toujours une vengeance particulière d'un autre homme qui vous en veut et qui alors agit, soit par lui-même, soit par les esprits. Il est dû encore à un esprit outragé qui punit personnellement, par exemple les mêmes des sorciers irrités, ou enfin à la violation d'un dki. Si c'est le tonnerre qui frappe, cette violation est presque toujours la cause du malheur au dire des indigènes. Avant donc que le corps de l'homme frappé puisse être enseveli ou servir de fétiche, il faut tout d'abord que le fétiseur recherche les causes de cette mort et déclare quel dki a été violé, pourquoi cet homme a été frappé. Cette première constatation faite, deux sanctions s'imposent, une pour l'individu, et une autre pour la tribu, le clan et particulièrement la famille du mort. La tribu en effet n'est pas une réunion d'êtres vivant isolément et simplement unis par un lien de sang, d'affection et d'intérêts communs: au point de vue religieux comme au point de vue politique, tribu, clan ou famille constituent une «unité». Ce fait confirme bien ce que nous avons dit précédemment: la famille, et non l'individu, est la cellule sociale. Dans ce cas, en effet, la sanction n'est pas individuelle en ce sens que le plus proche parent du mort paiera pour la faute, et à son défaut un autre ascendant; la sanction n'est pas individuelle, mais familiale et tribale. La famille paiera, toute entière et également solidaire, représentée par son chef; la tribu paiera également, toute entière et également solidaire, représentée par le chef de la tribu.

Une deuxième sanction s'impose contre le mort. Puisqu'il a violé un dki, il doit être puni: déjà l'esprit a appliqué la sanction la plus forte qui puisse être infligée à un vivant; la conclusion est évidente: le crime ne pouvait être expié que par la mort. La tribu, à son tour, solidairement responsable, infligera la plus forte punition qu'elle puisse infliger à un mort, la privation des sacrifices funéraires d'abord, la privation des honneurs posthumes ensuite. Aucune danse, aucun chant n'auront lieu pour cet homme, seul les lamentations funèbres des femmes dans l'intérieur de la case. Son cadavre sera porté dans la forêt, sans aucune cérémonie funéraire spéciale le concernant, puis on l'ensevelira sous une fourmilière, afin que les fourmis détachent les chairs au plus vite. Parfois même, on ira le mettre sur le chemin de ces fourmis voyageuses qui parcourent la forêt en troupes innombrables[1], et qui en deux heures tout au plus se chargeront de rendre un squelette parfaitement nettoyé. Son crâne ne sera pas conservé non plus avec ceux de ses ascendants, et son souvenir, par conséquent, périra peu à peu. Tous ceux qui meurent par accident et dont on ne peut retrouver les crânes, subissent ordinairement le même sort. Aussi, dans le combat, le parti qui se sent vaincu, n'hésite-t-il pas à prendre la fuite au plus vite afin d'éviter un pareil sort. Le guerrier vaincu a deux alternatives à redouter: tomber au pouvoir de l'ennemi, mourir dans quelque fourré où on ne le retrouvera pas. Dans ces deux cas, privé des honneurs funèbres, il ne saurait prendre place parmi les ancêtres, à moins d'une cérémonie longue, coûteuse et compliquée. Aussi prend-il la fuite, non par lâcheté ou peur de la mort, mais par crainte de l'au delà.

[1] Il nous est arrivé de voir ainsi de ces colonnes de fourmis défiler sous nos yeux pendant plusieurs heures, cinq ou six consécutives, sans qu'une minute,

Examinons maintenant comment, dans l'Unyoro, et de même chez les Fân, on commence par détourner la colère de l'esprit ou du totem irrité. Le Fân croit d'autant plus à cette nécessité que certains faits, paraissant accidentels pour nous, mais non pour ces hommes éminemment superstitieux, semblent l'appuyer. Ces faits dont la renommée répand aussitôt le bruit au loin, viennent confirmer ou fixer ou dissiper ses doutes. Ainsi, il y a quelques années, un Fân avait été frappé par la foudre tout près de son village. Afin d'éviter des frais d'expiation fort onéreux, le chef du clan, lequel se en tenant, la marche fut interrompue. Les fourmis «défilaient» par sept ou huit de front, marchant bien les unes derrière les autres, sans désordre. Trois ou quatre soldats, des fourmis surveillantes, beaucoup plus fortes, se tenaient sur les bords de la troupe, et immobiles pendant un quart d'heure ou un peu plus, veillaient à ce que la marche ne fût pas interrompue, et que telle fourmi ne s'écartât à droite ou à gauche. Après ce temps, elles continuaient leur marche en reparaissant sur les flancs de la colonne. Un ruisseau, même assez large n'arrête pas ces fourmis, et elles savent fort bien le franchir. Elles montent pour cela en haut d'un arbrisseau de la rive, et s'efforcent d'atteindre une branche du bord opposé. Ne peuvent-elles y arriver, elles s'accrochent les unes aux autres, se laissent pendre en long cordon, et se balancent, soit par leur propre effort, soit au gré du vent. La ligne s'allonge jusqu'à ce que la dernière fourmi ait réussi à saisir une feuille, un brin d'herbe, une branche de la rive opposée. Aussitôt le cordon est doublé, triplé et plus, le pont aérien est bâti et le passage continue.

---

On comprend qu'une proie quelconque, morte ou vive, placée sur le passage de ces bandes, soit vite dévorée. C'était jadis un supplice réservé aux esclaves. On les jetait vivants et attachés au milieu des fourmis en marche.

réduisait à deux petits villages, renonça à consulter le féticheur, et quelque peu avare, ou ménager de ses moutons, fit disparaître secrètement pendant la nuit le corps du défunt. Quand, le lendemain, on voulut procéder aux cérémonies d'usage, le cadavre ne se retrouva point, et le chef fit répandre le bruit que l'esprit l'avait emporté, et qu'une telle expiation suffisait aux ancêtres irrités. Pour la forme, il offrit cependant une poule ou deux, et comme il était chef, toute la famille l'approuva, heureuse au fond d'être débarrassée à si bon compte. Mais, à quelques jours de là, divers malheurs, tous imprévus, semblèrent s'acharner sur le malheureux clan: deux hommes et une femme chavirèrent en pirogue sur la rivière et se noyèrent, le feu prit dans une case et brûla un enfant, enfin la petite vérole se mit de la partie. Le féticheur, consulté, déclara qu'il y avait certainement là une violation d'éki totémique, car tous ces malheurs affectaient la race, et que les ancêtres, irrités, retiraient leur protection au clan. De point en point, sans que nul ne lui eût rien dit, le féticheur découvrit non seulement la vérité, mais dans une sorte d'accès de somnambulisme, conduisit le clan tout entier à l'endroit où l'homme frappé par la foudre avait été jeté. On fit alors les sacrifices nécessaires, la renommée du féticheur augmenta considérablement, d'autant qu'il s'empressa de relater partout l'accident, la punition et sa propre habileté, le chef et la tribu furent entièrement ruinés[1], la maladie cessa pourtant, et les totems furent satisfaits: tout est bien qui finit bien!

Chez les Fân, comme dans l'Unyôro, la première partie de la cérémonie est «l'apaisement» de l'esprit irrité. Dans les clans «vomis» au tonnerre, la cérémonie totémique de consécration est exactement semblable.

[1] Il ne faut pas s'étonner si, dans les divers sacrifices dont nous avons déjà parlé, les Fâ immolent seulement une chèvre, un cabri ou un mouton dans les plus grandes circonstances. Les Fâ, peuple chasseur avant tout, n'ont presque aucun bétail. Le bœuf et la vache ne sont pas domestiqués, et tout le bétail d'un village se borne à quelques moutons ou cabris. Souvent le chef aura seul un troupeau, et quand dans un grand village, on peut compter 30 têtes de bétail, le fait mérite d'être signalé. Les bêtes errent la nuit à l'aventure dans le village et couchent près des cases: les bergeries sont inconnues. Pour les grandes occasions, on engraisse dans l'obscurité d'une case fermée un bouc châtré (nyaé).

«The ferocious thunder storms which occur in Unyoro, are not unnaturally associated somewhat specially with the manifestation of spiritual power. Cases of people being struck by lightning are far from uncommon, and whenever such an event occurs, it is a signal among the Banyoro for a great ceremony connected with the worship of the bachwezi (worship of ancestral spirits who is sometimes confused with the totem). The individual killed by lightning is not moved from where he fell dead, but nine witches or old women are sent for[1]. Then old women surround the body on all sides, each of there holding a spear[2] which is pointed, downwards towards the earth. The women take up a crouching position, squatting on the ground with their backs to the body. Then the special machwezi or priest of the tribe to which the dead man belonged is summoned. When he arrives, he brings with him a small gourd basin full of water. The crowd which has by this time assembled draws near, and the priest sprinkles most of the people with water as a sign of purification[3]. Then he announces, in a loud voice, that the bachwezi are angry because some wrong-doing has occurred either on the part of the dead man or on the part of members of his clan[4]. For this wrong-doing, the ancestral spirits have demanded a victim.

«The dead body is then wrapped up in the bark-cloth or skins carried out into the long grass. Amidst the grass, an anthill is sought for, and when one of the right shape is found, the corpse is placed on the top of it and left there unburied[5]. When this is done, the old women-witches together with the priest assemble to investigate the cause of the spirit's anger. If they can arrive at no clear decision as to the cause (and if they do, measures

[1] C'est la seule différence entre la cérémonie fàn et la cérémonie unyoro: chez les Fàn, toutes les vieilles femmes du village doivent aller à la cérémonie, et non pas neuf seulement.

[2] Chez les Fàn, chacun porte un bâton pointu.

[3] Chez les Fàn, le sorcier ne prend pas d'eau, mais une poule noire; il lui coupe la tête et asperge le peuple avec le sang.

[4] Le sorcier fàn dit à haute voix: «L'ôsi est blessé. Mvomeyôt (et non ôsoyôt) est fâché. Craignez, craignez.»

[5] Chez les Fàn, le cadavre est enseveli dans la fourmilière, et non placé dessus. Le résultat et identique.

are to be taken to remedy the wrong-doing) the priest of the clan demands as a sacrifice a cow without blunish and a sheep, a goat and a fowl which are one-coloured, without a spot [1]. These animals are then placed in the centre of a circle formed by the witches, after which the hags dance round the sacrifice, chanting a chorus to the effect of «O Bachwezi, accept these our offerings and let your wrath cease». It is scarcely necessary to add that the ceremonies conclude by the priest and the witches making a hearty meal of the sacrificial offering».

Au bout de quelques heures, on revient, chez les Fâń, chercher ce corps de l'homme auquel à ce moment il ne reste que les os. On l'emporte dans le bois sacré (éli béngan) et on procède comme nous avons déjà indiqué précédemment: le feu est également allumé, puis le corps, réduit à l'état de squelette, est complètement brûlé, puisque dans ce cas il ne saurait y avoir manducation. Pendant qu'il se carbonise, on jette en même temps dans le foyer l'ancien totem tribal qui va être renouvelé plus puissant. L'ancien, dès lors, n'aurait plus aucune importance. Dès que les os commencent à se carboniser, le chef s'avance et enlève la tête du cadavre, la pose sur le lit de feuilles, détache la boîte crânienne, en sépare autant de petits morceaux qu'il y a d'assistants présents et les distribue à chacun: il garde pour lui le fragment le plus considérable et le met avec les autres objets qui constituent l'akaméyôń, rejette soigneusement dans le feu, ce qui reste de débris avec les feuilles de bananier qui ont touché le fétiche. Pendant que le tout, soigneusement attisé, achève de se consumer, on exécute encore des danses et des chants en l'honneur du «protecteur», du mvamayôń. Ces chants et ces danses durent tant que les os ne sont pas complètement calcinés et le foyer lui-même réduit en cendres.

Lorsque ce résultat est obtenu, on creuse en terre un trou profond et on y jette toutes les cendres sans en laisser aucune trace. On repousse alors la terre dans le trou, et on laisse la végétation envahir et dissimuler toute trace de ce qui a été fait. La cérémonie terminée, chacun rentre au village sans autre chant et sans aucune autre cérémonie.

[1] Chez les Fâń, le féticheur demande un mouton et deux poules blanches sans aucune tache.

§ 5. Vertu du fragment choisi.

Le fragment de totem a-t-il la même vertu que le totem entier?

Lorsque toutes les cérémonies et consécrations successives ont été scrupuleusement suivies et bien observées, le fragment de totem est considéré comme entier, et, en cette qualité, est le siège de la vertu et de la puissance du totem réel.

Mais il faut noter qu'il n'a cette vertu et cette puissance qu'en participation, et encore en participation actuelle et transitoire, en vertu du sacrifice personnel qui le lui a, non pas conféré, mais attiré.

Il n'a cette puissance qu'en participation, c'est-à-dire que le totem de la tribu reste évidemment le même; c'est toujours, par exemple, telle variété de serpent, non en tant qu'animal particulier, mais en tant que race, qui conserve la qualité de totem. Mais, en vertu du sacrifice offert, le fragment ayant appartenu à un animal de la race, en revêt la personnalité toute entière, jouit des prérogatives qui y sont attachées, sert en quelque sorte de transmetteur, de support attitré, d'intermédiaire entre le totem visible et le totem invisible qui n'est autre que l'esprit et la force de la race. Ce n'est en somme, et nous l'avons déjà indiqué plus haut, que le totem spirituel matérialisé, concrétisé sous une forme visible, effective, et surtout apte à pouvoir recevoir le culte.

Toutefois, par le fait même du sacrifice personnel, cette qualité ne peut durer qu'autant que l'individu l'ayant offert peut invoquer la force du sacrifice. Le possesseur mort, la valeur du sacrifice par là même disparaît avec lui et, comme conséquence, la valeur de tous ses fétiches, y compris l'objet totémique qui en était le complément. Ce fait explique pourquoi nous verrons tout à l'heure, dans la description de l'akaméyôñ, un Fâñ se dessaisir facilement en faveur d'un étranger, d'un Européen, du «médicament ou biâñ» de son prédécesseur[1]. Ce cas est fréquent.

[1] Le mot biâñ est employé par les Fâñ d'un façon collective pour désigner soit les remèdes, soit les fétiches auxquels sont attachés des remèdes, dans un sens très large. Ainsi, on «guérit», au moyen de certaines plantes, un fusil qui tire mal.

§ 6. Où conserve-t-on le totem.

L'endroit où l'on conserve le totem varie d'après les différents totems, individuel, de famille, ou de tribu.

Le totem individuel, presque toujours de petite taille, et consistant en quelques fragments de l'animal ou du végétal choisi, ou encore d'un peu de cendres provenant du sacrifice de la victime, est renfermé dans une petite corne d'antilope, scellée par un peu de résine et portant le nom de nkô. Les enfants la portent, suivant les maladies que l'on craint pour eux, ou les esprits et influences mauvaises que l'on veut écarter d'eux, soit au cou, soit le plus souvent devant les parties génitales. C'est fréquemment, jusqu'à l'âge de sept ans, leur seul habillement.

Le nkô est spécial aux garçons qui, seuls, peuvent avoir le mvamayôñ ou l'étotore.

Ce mot que nous retrouverons plus tard, en parlant de l'antiquité du totem, désigne le totem individuel. Si l'on redoute pour l'enfant certains accidents auxquels il est particulièrement sujet, si, par exemple, il tombe souvent et se blesse, ou encore s'il a les pieds ulcérés, il portera le nkô suspendu par un cordon qui lui entoure la jambe droite, car c'est de ce côté que vient ordinairement la chance. Les jeunes gens, après l'âge de puberté, laissent presque toujours le nkô de côté, jusqu'au jour où, avec les premières initiations, ils auront de nouveau un autre étotore. Ils le renfermeront dans une corne plus grande, celle de la première antilope que le jeune chasseur aura tuée lui-même; comme en tout pays, il n'en sera pas peu fier. Parfois même, et ce sera grand honneur, on placera le nkô dans une petite dent d'éléphant si le jeune homme a eu la chance de tuer un de ces animaux, ou de contribuer à sa mort. Mais ordinairement, il reçoit plutôt cette dent ou défense pa rhéritage. Si la corne est toute petite, elle se porte suspendue au cou, à un collier de crins d'éléphants ou parfois de dents d'animaux tués à la chasse, parfois même de dents humaines, restes de sanglants sacrifices. On rencontre particulièrement ces derniers chez les Dzèm ou dans les clans des frontières de la tribu. Lorsque la corne est de grande taille, elle se porte sur le côté gauche, soit suspendue par un cordon, soit plus ordinairement soutenue par le baudrier.

Les Fâñ se dessaisissent très difficilement de ces cornes. Il m'est arrivé, pour les tenter, de leur en proposer un haut prix: ils ont toujours refusé; si parfois, particulièrement pour celles d'ivoire, ils semblaient enfin consentir, ils demandaient toujours à «exsécrer» au préalable l'objet, en enlevant soigneusement le contenu. Si on refusait, ils refusaient également. Toutefois, si le possesseur primitif est mort, même si l'intérieur du fétiche n'a pas été changé, on peut assez facilement se procurer ces cornes, surtout en n'ayant pas l'air d'y attacher un grand prix: sinon, le Fâñ, très habile commerçant, vous tient la dragée haute, et préfère ne pas vendre que de vendre à vil prix ce qu'il n'estime que très peu pour lui mais auquel il pense que le «client» tient beaucoup. Si l'occasion passe, peu importe: une seconde viendra bien avec un autre Blanc.

Lorsque l'étotore est plus précieux, plus difficile à se procurer ou de taille plus forte, par exemple un crâne d'animal, singe, écureuil, serpent ou autre et qui doit parfois, pour avoir toute son action, être conservé entier, on le dépose alors dans la boîte d'écorce qui renferme les crânes des ancêtres, retirée soigneusement dans un endroit spécial de la case du chef de famille, placée ordinairement sur une sorte d'escabeau ou de banc et surmontée d'une statue de bois. Il est absolument interdit aux profanes d'ouvrir cette boîte; les femmes doivent, sous les peines les plus sévères, en ignorer le contenu (que naturellement elles connaissent d'ailleurs parfaitement bien, ayant toutes cette curiosité de pénétrer le secret que l'on veut leur cacher) et même elles ne doivent pas en prononcer le nom. Le totem faisant alors partie de l'ensemble des objets renfermés dans la boîte, a également sa part des légères offrandes qui lui sont offertes presque journellement, mais qui ressortissent plutôt du culte familial des ancêtres. Nous ne nous en occuperons donc ici que pour les mentionner en passant.

Le totem du chef de famille et celui du chef de tribu sont conservés en temps habituel dans la boîte du biéri et reçoivent, à proprement parler, lorsqu'ils sont isolés, et considérés individuellement, le nom d'étotore ou protecteur. En fait, ils sont toujours joints à un certain nombre d'objets du culte familial ou religieux dont l'ensemble porte le nom d'akaméyôṅ, celui qui accompagne la nation. Cet ensemble est ainsi nommé, parce que le chef ne s'en sépare jamais lorsqu'il entreprend une expédition importante. Cette expédition peut concerner la guerre: c'est le cas le plus fréquent; elle peut également se rapporter à une palabre de mariage, chose fort grave, surtout pour les chefs, car c'est question d'alliances entre tribus et souvent de traité de paix après une longue période de dissensions et de guerre qui est alors en jeu. Ce peut être encore une question de commerce, lorsqu'on va vendre l'ivoire, affaire considérée à bon droit comme fort importante[1] par les Fäṅ.

De fait, l'akaméyôṅ est plutôt par sa destination le «fétiche» protecteur du combat; aussi l'appelle-t-on encore souvent le fétiche de la guerre. L'akaméyôṅ contient toujours le fragment représentant ou personnifiant le mvamayôṅ, dont il a été question dans les paragraphes précédents. Ce fragment est joint à de nombreux autres objets que nous allons énumérer et dont chacun joue dans l'ensemble son rôle particulier.

L'akaméyôṅ est renfermé, sans grand soin d'ailleurs, dans le mfeẋ. Le mfeẋ est un sac en cordelettes d'ananas finement tressées, à mailles très serrées faites avec une navette ressemblant beaucoup à la nôtre. Le point est cependant différent. Le mfeẋ ressemble beaucoup au «cabas» de nos grands'mères, mais l'ouverture est beaucoup plus étroite. Il va ensuite en s'évasant: la longueur totale est d'environ 60 à 80 cm. On le porte suspendu à l'épaule par deux bandoulières tressées avec le sac lui-même, dont elles font partie intégrante. Les guerriers seuls portent le mfeẋ; à côté du mfeẋ, avec le mfor ou fa, large couteau qui se porte sous le bras gauche, toujours prêt à être tiré en cas de danger, ils ont également un large baudrier, en peau de loutre ou de tigre, et qu'ils estiment à très haut prix. Le baudrier supporte diverses peaux d'animaux, représentant des fétiches de chasse dont nous n'avons pas à nous occuper ici.

[1] Un renseignement confirme ce fait: dernièrement encore, l'ivoire était vendu par les Fäṅ sur le pied de 15 à 18 francs le kilo, et ce prix augmente: une défense de 30 kilos équivaut donc à 4 ou 500 francs, à peu près le prix d'une femme.

Dans le mfex, le Fâñ enferme une quantité d'objets usuels, poudre, capsules, lime; toutefois il n'y met ni linge ni provisions de bouche. Le totem, enfermé dans son enveloppe grossière, ne saurait s'offenser de ce voisinage: le respect de l'objet, en tant qu'objet matériel, fût-il représentatif du fétiche le plus redouté, n'existe pas; le culte ne ressort pas des marques de respect telles que nous les connaissons, mais des faits eux-mêmes. C'est ce qui explique comment, en ne montrant aucune marque extérieure d'estime, de respect ou de crainte, le Fâñ ne craint nullement de vous offenser: c'est une chose qu'il ignore; pour lui, ces sentiments doivent se traduire en actes effectifs, non en paroles et en démonstrations passagères qu'il ne comprend ni n'apprécie. Aussi, est-ce avec grand tort qu'on le juge néanmoins, lui et bien d'autres Noirs, comme si ses sentiments et sa manière d'agir répondaient aux nôtres. Bien des guerres, de sanglantes rencontres et de sévères répressions ont été le simple résultat de l'ignorance européenne à l'égard des races noires, de leurs mœurs et de leurs usages [1].

[1] Ainsi un Fâñ ne comprend nullement pourquoi il lui faudrait se découvrir devant un supérieur, attendre ses interrogations etc.

II. L'AKAMÉYÔṄ.

Nature de l'Akaméyôṅ.

L'Akaméyôṅ [1] comprend l'ensemble des objets qui constituent le totem et qui se rapportent à lui.

Ici, transcrivons simplement une »interview» de chef fâṅ que nous rapporte un observateur consciencieux, Bennett, dans Journ. Anthropological 1899 déjà cité.

«Biâṅ-akaméyôṅ.

«This biâṅ is the protector of the tribe or nation (éyôṅ = tribe) [2]. Told me by Esôya-ovum, the headman of Fulabifôṅ [3] on the Nkomo [Komo des Européens] River [clan des Esisis], who told me the complete set of the biâṅ-akaméyôṅ belonging to the dead headman «Commisan» [4]. I present this biâṅ for your [5] inspection this evening. The tin canister was obtained from a white man and is used in place of usual basket [e biéri] to carry bones in. It contains portions of the skull of an albino (male), portions of the skulls of a mone «nguri», young chimpanze, red powder and a variety of native medicine.

«This biâṅ-akaméyôṅ is always carried by the headman of a town during war. A bell hangs from the bottom of the canister containing the bones: it rings when the headman walks.

«Nko.

«The small horn belonging to the biâṅ-akaméyôṅ has ngom (porcupine tail) in it, also native medicine. It is used to cure people having witches. A bowl of medicine is made. The ngom is dipped in the medicine bowl and the sick person sprinkled with the medicine. Then the witch departs.

---

[1] On dit indifféremment akaméyôṅ ou akamayôṅ, méyôṅ étant le pluriel de ayôṅ, nation.

[2] Bennett traduit comme nous littéralement le mot meame par protecteur, ou, si l'on veut, en fâṅ: Biâṅ-akaméyôṅ. Biâṅ éto é ne meam'ayôṅ.

[3] Littér. où les Fôṅ se réunissent. Nous avons déjà vu que les Fôṅ étaient le rameau fâṅ de l'intérieur.

[4] En réalité Ekomison ou Exo fils de Nson. Nouvel exemple de la défiguration fréquente des noms indigènes par les observateurs même consciencieux.

[5] Présenté à la Société royale de Géographie de Londres.

«At this point, the headman Esôya stopped talking. He said: «The children who have gathered around your house must go away; no real man dare talk about the biâń-akaméyôń before women or children.» I told the children to go; and Esôya continued.

«The whistle Ekima.

«This is part of biâń-akaméyôń; it has been cooked (boiled) in the medicine bowl and has great power when used by the head man in calling the men together after a fight.

«Mvul.

«This is the large horn with a piece of looking on top. This horn contains much medicine and next to the bones is the most important part of the biâń-akaméyôń.

«The two antelops horns, and the small bundles of medicine, are biâń e soli (hiding medicine); it makes the person carrying the biâń-akaméyôń invisible to the enemy.

«The skin of a bush cat is part of the biâń-akaméyôń, called nsîń.

«The mvâń.

«A triangular piece of iron filled with medicine used to keep away witches is also the part of the biâń-akaméyôn.

«Biâń-akôń or biâń-abal (war medicine).

«This is also part of the biâń-akaméyôń, and the shots from the guns of an enemy are of no avail.

«One other important fetish hangs with the biâń-akaméyôń. A piece of very hard wood. Only a certain kind of woman is selected to find this wood; she is called a special or selected woman on account of certain peculiarities connected with her, e. g. she always fails to catch fish, the husband of such a woman, after intercourse with her, fails to catch fish the next day, he also fails to work. This is the kind of woman always selected to find this wood; it is hard wood, she is a hard woman and she is called Emunenga a ne alert (the woman who is hard). This medicine is also called biâń-akôń, and shot from the guns of an enemy will not harm.

«This is the biâń-akaméyôń.»

Malgré la précision apparente de cette description, en réalité Esôya aurait très bien pu ne pas faire éloigner les enfants et les femmes comme l'y obligeait la loi du secret, car de ce qui constitue vraiment le totem réel il n'a rien dit. Reprenons toutefois cette description. Il s'agit là d'un totem de clan, appartenant à l'ancien chef des Esisis dont le mvamayôṅ est l'antilope mvul. Aussi y verrons-nous figurer un fragment d'antilope, pour «matérialiser» le totem comme nous venons de l'examiner dans les pages précédentes.

L'ensemble du biâṅ-akaméyôṅ comprendra donc:

I° Tous les «fétiches» les plus puissants destinés à assurer l'avenir ou la protection de la race. Ce seront:

1° La clochette ou alêṅe.

2° La petite corne, nkô.

3° Le sifflet, ekima.

4° La grande corne d'antilope, mvul.

5° Une peau de chat sauvage, nsiñ.

6° Une pièce de fer triangulaire, mvâṅ.

7° Un petit paquet renfermant le biâṅ-akôṅ ou fétiche de guerre.

8° Un morceau de bois dur, biâṅ abal.

9° Le nšu, oublié ou ignoré par Bennett.

Et enfin, II° le mvamayôṅ lui-même qui est renfermé dans la grande corne.

Neuf objets entourent donc le mvamayôṅ, tous destinés à en renforcer la puissance. En les reprenant rapidement, complétons ce que n'a pas dit l'auteur anglais ou ce qu'il n'a peut-être pas su.

1° Alêṅe, la petite clochette.

Elle est destinée surtout à écarter par sa vertu et son bruit les influences des esprits mauvais qui voudraient faire du mal au porteur du fétiche ou nuire à la tribu, en particulier en cas de guerre, et encore aux enfants, l'avenir de la race. Elle doit appeler en même temps les esprits protecteurs et leur rappeler par son tintement continuel que leur attention doit toujours être en éveil. Un dicton usuel rappelle ce devoir de la clochette: «Alêṅe da dhûṅ, éburebûṅ za lîṅ. La clochette retentit, l'esprit méchant s'enfuit.» Persuadés de ce résultat, les chefs aiment beaucoup entendre en marchant ce bruit continuel de leur clochette. Je demandais un jour à un chef si ce grelot incessant ne le fatiguait pas quelquefois. Il me regarda avec étonnement, puis finit par me répondre:

«Mé ne Nzue, mé ne mur akaméyôń. Je suis Chef, je suis gardien du totem de ma tribu, [ne dois-je pas le conserver!]»

On suspend également devant les petites filles un grelot de ce genre destiné à écarter les mauvais esprits.

2° Nkô, la petite corne.

C'est ordinairement une petite corne d'antilope: on y renferme les cendres de l'animal offert en sacrifice dont nous avons parlé plus haut, et l'extrémité est fermée par un peu de résine ou de cire noire qui y retient fixée une queue de porc-épic. Dans de nombreuses tribus, la queue de porc-épic passe pour un puissant remède ou préservatif contre les âmes méchantes qui errent la nuit afin de faire du mal. (Tout ce qui pique a ce pouvoir; ainsi, la maison où vient de mourir quelqu'un est recouverte d'épines afin que l'esprit du mort ne puisse y rentrer.) Le nkô sert également à guérir les personnes que l'on croit possédées par un mauvais esprit. Dans ce cas, on fait bouillir de l'eau dans laquelle on a fait infuser de la menthe (asep), une herbe odoriférante (esim), une labiatée (ava), un champignon à franges (duna), un tubercule de canna, et de l'écorce de deux arbres (sèp = Monodora Myristica) et ešôń. On plonge la corne d'antilope dans l'eau, et on y mêle une pincée des cendres qu'elle renferme; s'il y en a très peu, on introduit seulement dans la corne le piquant de porc-épic et on l'en retire aussitôt; on égorge une poule noire en lui arrachant la tête et on mêle le sang à l'eau bouillante. On asperge ensuite le malade avec cette eau, et on lui fait avaler la pâte qui s'est agglomérée au fond du vase, en y ajoutant le bec concassé de la poule (regardé également comme remède). L'esprit qui assiège le malade ne peut résister à ce traitement et s'enfuit aussitôt. Le chef qui me donnait ces détails m'assurait qu'il n'avait jamais eu d'insuccès. Je le crois d'autant mieux que les gens qui m'ont été signalés comme possédés par un esprit méchant, avaient en général un accès de fièvre pernicieux qui les faisait trembler et s'agiter fortement. Il est fort possible que la suggestion, la persuasion qu'ils vont être guéris, la boisson chaude et sudorifique qu'ils avalent, jointe à la vertu des plantes, effectue leur guérison. Toutefois, dans cet ordre d'idées, on ne saurait être trop prudent; on ne doit rien affirmer ou nier à priori, touchant les guérisons et les esprits: il est certain qu'il y a des cas fort curieux et qui défient toute explication actuelle.

On pend aussi de ces petites cornes au cou des garçons, ou parfois devant les parties génitales, pour éloigner également les esprits méchants. Le père de famille a soin, au préalable, d'y enfermer des cendres du totem protecteur de l'enfant, fétiche qui lui a été donné en même temps que son nom, aux premiers jours de sa vie.

Portant ainsi l'alêñe, spécial aux filles, et le nkô, spécial aux garçons, le chef réunit en un même symbole les éléments constitutifs de la famille future et de la race.

3° Le sifflet ou Ekima.

Le sifflet est le complément obligé de l'alêñe; tandis que celle-ci, par son tintement continuel, rappelle aux esprits protecteurs de veiller, et met en fuite les influences mauvaises, le sifflet ou ékima est surtout destiné à appeler le mvamayôñ en cas de danger. Il ne doit pas être confondu avec un autre sifflet, l'oviara, également destiné à des opérations magiques, mais qui ne concernent nullement le totem. L'oviara est en os, parfois en ivoire. Au moyen de trous diversement placés et que l'on bouche avec l'extrémité du doigt, il donne trois sons différents, du grave au très aigü. Lorsqu'il est en os, il est confectionné avec le tibia d'un ennemi vaincu et mangé. J'en ai vu cependant quelques-uns fabriqués[1] avec des os d'antilope. D'après les gens que j'ai interrogés, ces oviara n'ont jamais aucun rapport avec le mvamayôñ, mais servent à appeler les esprits dans le cas de certaines maladies.

L'ékima n'est jamais en os ou en ivoire, mais toujours en fer: il ne rappelle que de loin le sifflet que nous connaissons, sifflet rond avec un bec à l'extrémité pour laisser passer le souffle et tel que chacun de nous en a usé plusieurs pendant son enfance. L'ékima est ordinairement d'un seul morceau ou composé de deux plaques de fer artistement[1] soudées, réunies à leur sommet et qui vont ensuite s'évasant. Le son produit est d'une tonalité assez basse, dans le genre du sifflement des sirènes, mais s'entend de fort loin. Jadis les Fâñ forgeaient eux-mêmes l'ékima avec le fer natif qu'ils savent fort bien travailler. Aujourd'hui, ils se servent plutôt des vieux canons de fusil qu'ils ont facilement à leur disposition. Pour faire un ékima, on coupe un tronçon de canon de fusil d'environ dix centimètres. Une des extrémités est chauffée au fer puis écrasée au marteau de façon à se fermer et à se souder; dans cette partie écrasée, on perce un trou au poinçon afin de pouvoir le suspendre. L'autre extrémité est souvent laissée dans son état normal, et l'ékima est fabriqué. Souvent aussi, afin qu'il ressemble davantage à l'ékima authentique, ils forcent l'extrémité demeurée libre à s'aplatir et à s'évaser, à coups de marteau, et en à introduisant l'intérieur un poinçon trempé. Nous retrouverons encore l'ékima en parlant des survivances des rites totémiques chez les Fâñ.

[1] Les enfants, de même que les hommes, ne savent pas fabriquer des sifflets avec du bois ou des écorces, comme le font tous nos enfants blancs. Lorsqu'on le leur apprend ou qu'on leur en donne de facture européenne, ils ne s'en amusent pas. En revanche, tout comme nos enfants, ils ne se lasseront pas de battre du tambour sur leurs tamtams pendant des heures entières, ou de sonner du cor dans leurs trompettes de bois ou d'os.

Il est assez difficile de donner l'étymologie de ce mot ékima. Celle qui semble à première vue probable, ce n'est toujours pas la plus vraie en étymologie, est celle-ci. Le mot ma désigne «les richesses» et nous semble une abréviation du mot mam, les choses, les affaires. On dit, dans ce sens, d'un riche Fâñ: «A ne khuma, il a beaucoup de choses.» Ce mot ma, avec ce sens certain, entre dans la composition d'un certain nombre de mots fâñ, tels des noms de villages: Atarama, l'endroit où se réunissent les richesses (atar réunion), des noms de lieux: Ebirama, le rapide dangereux où se perdent les choses (ébira, gâter), de dignités, Khuma, un chef de village, un riche, celui qui est maître (khu) des choses. Ekima pourrait donc signifier: l'éki des richesses, la «chose sacrée» qui procure les richesses. C'est en effet le rôle de la guerre, et de l'ékima qui permet d'y être victorieux.

Notons enfin que pour être vraiment l'ékima, et jouir des privilèges qui y sont attachés, l'ékima doit tout d'abord être

[1] Les Fâñ connaissent fort bien la soudure autogène du fer et l'emploient souvent.

«voué» à l'esprit de l'akaméyôñ, ce qui nécessite un premier sacrifice. Il est ensuite bouilli pendant de longues heures avec une mixture composée des mêmes plantes que celles employées pour le nkô. On profite ordinairement d'une circonstance où cette dernière mixture est employée pour consacrer en même temps l'ékima. Malgré cette «consécration», la valeur de l'ékima n'est pas très considérable aux yeux du possesseur, car s'en procurer un autre est uniquement une question de travail. Pour le sacrifice et les préparatifs, l'ékima utilise une autre cérémonie, même faite dans un autre but, et enfin il ne renferme aucun biâñ particulier. On peut donc s'en faire céder un par le possesseur sans grandes difficultés.

4° Mvul, la grande corne d'antilope.

Comme le dit Bennett, le mvul est avec les os de ngure et de mvi la partie la plus importante de l'akaméyôñ. Le chef Esôya ne lui en avait cependant pas dévoilé le secret. Le voici. L'extrémité du mvul est fermée par un miroir, éyèn ou éyèna, qui est d'ordre purement fétichiste. Nous n'avons donc pas à nous en préoccuper ici: disons rapidement que c'est dans ce miroir que le chef. après les cérémonies et rites prescrits, regarde «les figures qui passent», soit qu'il s'agisse d'une initiation, soit de découvrir les voleurs, ou tout autre fait caché. Il sert dans de très-nombreuses circonstances, et on y a une grande confiance, bien que la plupart du temps ce miroir soit en si mauvais état ou si épouvantablement terni que l'imagination, violemment surexcitée par l'absorption de certaines substances ou alcaloïdes végétaux (ibogaïne, onabaïne, strophantine etc.), puisse seule permettre d'y voir quelque chose. Les Fâñ peuvent se procurer facilement les miroirs, grâce aux petites boîtes de pommade recouvertes d'une glace qui se vendent en masses à la côte. Ces miroirs ont partout remplacé les feuilles de mica qui servaient jadis, et dont j'ai pu me procurer seulement un unique exemplaire.

Dans l'intérieur de la corne, sont renfermés:

1° Un fragment de crâne d'un des ancêtres. Ces crânes sont très-respectés, et les briser porte malheur; aussi prend-on souvent, à la place de ces fragments de crâne, afin d'éviter tout accident, un peu de la poudre de bois rouge avec laquelle on les a enduits dans les grandes cérémonies de sacrifice ou d'initiation.

2° Un fragment du mvamayôń, ordinairement un morceau de crâne; ce fragment est celui qui a été pris au cours du sacrifice dont nous avons parlé.

3° Une partie des cendres provenant du sacrifice offert en cette même cérémonie.

4° Quelques fragments appartenant au porteur lui-même de l'akaméyôń, rognures d'ongles, cheveux et poils, sang et mucus spécial desséché. C'est afin de le mettre en communication intime et continuelle avec tout ce qui constitue l'akaméyôń. La perte de ces substances, surtout si elles tombaient entre les mains d'un ennemi, serait un grand malheur pour le possesseur. Il serait alors très facile de lui faire beaucoup de mal, et il ne pourrait en aucune façon échapper au mauvais sort qui lui serait infailliblement jeté. C'est également à cause de ces sorts que les Fáń ont grand soin de ne jamais rien laisser perdre de ce qui a appartenu à leur corps.

5° Un fragment d'écorce d'un arbre spécial, vulgairement nommé à cause de son fruit: le «saucissonnier». Dans des circonstances que je n'ai pu encore nettement définir, on enterre sous un jeune arbre de cette espèce, à la naissance d'un fils de chef, l'extrémité du cordon ombilical. Le fruit de cet arbre passe pour rendre invisible celui qui le porte, lorsque les cérémonies nécessaires ont été faites. Il est évident qu'en ajoutant foi à cette propriété les Noirs ne croient pas que le porteur devienne «réellement» invisible. Ils pensent simplement que cet homme, pendant une marche de nuit, par exemple, échappera à tous les dangers et qu'il saura, de jour, passer au milieu des villages ennemis sans se faire remarquer. Ce fait sera dû aussi à la vertu protectrice de l'étotore.

En raison de cette qualité, la corne d'antilope, dont nous venons d'exposer le contenu, porte souvent le nom de biáń ésole, nom qui pourrait aussi bien se traduire par «remède qui rend invisible» que par «remède qui permet de voler sans être pris». Les deux buts sont souvent dans l'idée du porteur.

Assez souvent, ce qui constitue le n° 5, ou autres écorces du même genre, est renfermé dans de petits paquets d'étoffe, cachés dans le mfex, près de l'akaméyôń.

5° Nsiñ, ou peau de chat-sauvage.

La peau d'un chat-sauvage accompagne l'akaméyôñ. Souvent aussi les queues d'un certain nombre de petits animaux de la forêt, écureuils, singes, lynx etc., y sont jointes. Le tout est attaché en faisceau au baudrier et porté sous le bras de façon à retomber jusqu'à terre. C'est une partie peu importante de l'akaméyôñ, et plutôt un acte de remercîment envers lui pour les heureuses chasses qu'il a procurées et procurera encore. C'est également afin de détourner les colères possibles des esprits qui auraient pu séjourner en ces divers animaux, et bien leur montrer que si le chasseur les a tués, c'est grâce à son étotore et que, par conséquent, lui-même n'étant pas responsable, on ne peut s'en prendre à lui.

6° Le Mvâñ.

Le mvâñ est une pièce de fer affectant une forme triangulaire, un peu supérieure à la taille d'une pièce de cinq francs, mais plus grosse, car elle est en réalité formée de deux pièces de fer soudées et réunies ensemble par le bas et les côtés. Comme ces côtés sont ordinairement arrondis, elle forme plutôt en réalité une sorte de cœur. Les deux extrémités supérieures sont percées ou aplaties en anneau, de façon à pouvoir être suspendues. Deux cordons retiennent le mvâñ sur le milieu de la poitrine, où il repose entre les seins. L'intérieur du mvâñ pourrait renfermer à peu près un objet de la taille d'une pièce de cinq francs. En fait, on y place les cendres provenant du sacrifice, et la plupart du temps, des cendres de victimes humaines. C'est un souvenir commémoratif, et à proprement parler, il ferait plutôt partie du culte des ancêtres. L'extrémité supérieure est fermée par un peu de résine noire dans laquelle sont souvent fixés de petits cauris. C'est un ornement, en même temps qu'un symbole et un désir de richesses à conquérir. Toutes les pensées des Fâñ sont tournées vers ce but.

Le mvâñ est également un signe distinctif des chefs et des féticheurs. Son but est de tenir à l'écart les esprits méchants qui voudraient nuire au porteur. Lorsque celui-ci se trouve en un danger quelconque, il prend le mvâñ en main en invoquant l'esprit au nom du sacrifice qu'il a offert.

7° Le Biâñ-akôñ ou fétiche de guerre.

Le biâñ-akôñ fait partie intégrante du mvamayôñ. Il l'accompagne toujours et le porteur ne s'en dessaisit à aucun prix. Il doit mettre son possesseur à l'abri non seulement des balles, mais encore de toute espèce d'atteinte d'arme de guerre. Les Fâñ y ont une grande confiance qui n'est dépassée peut-être que par celle des Sénégalais en leur «gri-gri». Il arrive néanmoins que le biâñ-akôñ remplit mal son office et que son possesseur est blessé; sa confiance n'en est nullement ébranlée. S'il a été blessé, c'est que le sacrifice de la victime dont les restes sont enfermés dans le biâñ-akôñ, a été mal fait: les rites ont été mal observés, la victime a été mal choisie, le sacrifice n'a pas eu la valeur suffisante, donc le biâñ-akôñ ne valait rien, et l'étotore n'avait contracté aucune obligation. Il faudra recommencer.

Dans le biâñ-akôñ sont renfermés: un peu de poudre rouge provenant d'une offrande aux ancêtres, un fragment de l'étotore, et des cendres d'un sacrifice spécial.

8° Un morceau de bois dur, Abîñ.

Ce morceau de bois dur provient, à la côte, d'un mimusops (Sapotacées) abîñ, dont le bois est en effet très dur. C'est d'ailleurs la seule qualité qu'on lui demande, et c'est plutôt un «figuratif». Dans l'intérieur du pays, où l'abîñ n'existe pas, il est remplacé par plusieurs autres espèces de bois durs (mbimn, akiñ, élax, mtex)[1]. Bennett a donné les notes essentielles sur le choix et le but de cette partie de l'akaméyôñ. Nous n'avons donc pas à y insister davantage. Notons toutefois qu'à notre connaissance du moins, l'abîñ ne reçoit aucune consécration particulière.

9° Nšu ou poison de cadavre (ptomaïnes).

Cette dernière partie de l'akaméyôñ, omise par Bennett, en fait cependant toujours partie, mais elle n'est pas mise dans le mfex, et n'accompagne pas le chef du clan à la guerre. Elle demeure renfermée dans une petite bouteille soigneusement fermée, ou encore dans une petite calebasse, là où les bouteilles de verre n'ont pas encore pénétré. Le nšu est la sanie de cadavre recueillie du corps de l'ancêtre ou du chef de la famille. Après la mort, le cadavre est déposé dans une fosse simplement recouverte de branchages, afin que les chairs puissent se détacher, et que trente jours après, le fils aîné puisse enlever sans peine le crâne du défunt qui sera désormais conservé dans le «chartrier» familial.

[1] Dyospiros Dendo, Welw. des Ebénacées (akiñ), Khaya Klainii, Pierre, des Méliacées (élax), Pterocarpus erinaceus, des Légumineuses (mtex).

Sous le cadavre, on place des feuilles fraîches de bananier, et quand, au bout de quelques jours, la sanie commence à découler, on en recueille une partie qui est ensuite exposée au soleil afin de se concentrer davantage. On a grand soin de l'exposer en un endroit où ni bêtes ni chiens ne puissent y toucher. Après quelques jours, elle forme une épaisse et infecte bouillie noire où les vers pullulent. On la renferme alors avec soin dans la bouteille ou la calebasse citée, et on la place dans la boîte qui contient déjà les crânes des ancêtres. Les feuilles qui l'ont contenue sont brûlées avec soin sur un feu spécial, et les cendres, au lieu d'être jetées comme les autres dans la bananeraie, sont recueillies et enterrées dans un endroit désert.

Le nšu constitue un poison dangereux: on en mêle une petite partie au poison d'épreuve, et on s'en sert dans le cas suivant. Si un individu meurt de mort inexpliquée, la famille est aussitôt rassemblée, le féticheur est appelé, et après les cérémonies ordinaires en pareil cas, le coupable présumé est désigné. Pour se justifier, il doit boire le poison des ordalies: la famille a soin de joindre au poison quelques gouttesde nšu afin que le défunt lui-même puisse encore agir.

Suivant son degré de fraîcheur, le nšu est plus ou moins virulent. A l'état complètement frais, ce qui arrive assez souvent, il offre, au dire des Noirs, de graves dangers d'empoisonnement ou de corruption de sang. Une huile végétale extraite des fruits de l'aza[1] serait, paraît-il, son contre-poison. Mais un bon cadeau au féticheur chargé d'administrer le poison, est encore la meilleure manière d'y échapper!

[1] Teighemella africana. Cette huile, blanche et de bel aspect, est très âpre au goût.

CHAPITRE XI.

LE MVAMAYÔṄ ET L'ESAYÔṄ.

Préliminaires. — Les différences entre mvamayôṅ et esayôṅ. — Les deux cultes se compénètrent sans se mêler, et sont complètement différents l'un de l'autre. — Ces différences proviennent des points suivants:

§ 1. L'objet du culte diffère essentiellement, l'un s'adresse au mvamayôṅ, et l'autre à l'esayôṅ.

§ 2. Dans le culte totémique, on ne se préoccupe que du mvamayôṅ et de ses descendants actuellement existants; dans le culte mânique, les seuls descendants désincarnés de l'esayôṅ demeurent l'objet du culte. — Le culte totémique s'adresse donc aux «vivants», le culte mânique les exclut. — Tableau résumant ces différences.

§ 3. Les cérémonies des deux cultes mânique et totémique sont différentes. I° Difficultés de la question. II° Exemples des différences entre les deux cultes. — Une cérémonie d'initiation. — Le chant totémique des Ye-mvuż. — Le chant totémique des Ebifam. — L'initiation en d'autres contrées du Congo. — Le Vwala des Inkimba chez les Baluba.

§ 4. Les ministres des deux cultes sont différents, sinon en fait, du moins en droit. — En fait, il y a dualité d'opérateur, unité de ministre.

§ 5. Les demandes sont d'ordre différent, les unes intéressant la «race» et tout ce qui s'y rapporte, les autres plus spécialement «l'individu» mais seulement comme individu, abstraction faite de tout ce qui pourrait se rapporter à la race.

§ 6. Les défenses sont d'ordre différent. — Les défenses tabuales ne sont pas les défenses totémiques.

§ 7. Résumé de ce chapitre. — L'esayôṅ agit surtout en vue de la vie future, le mvamayôṅ, pour la vie présente.

[p. 360]

Préliminaires.

«Each tribe or clan has its own ancestral spirit who is sometimes confused with the totem», dit Sir H. JOHNSTON, dans «Uganda Protectorate». Cette confusion est la raison de ce chapitre.

Nous avons dégagé dans les chapitres précédents la notion du totem «réel», son origine, son antiquité, son existence actuelle dans ses diverses modalités; et nous avons vu que ce totem prenait le nom de mvamayôń, c'est-à-dire Protecteur de la Nation.

De son ensemble complexe de propriétés, naissent pour lui des «droits». Mais avant de les étudier, nous devons encore faire ressortir les différences qui existent entre le mvamayôń et l'esayôń. Ces deux entités, les traditions, les chants, les légendes nous les ont presque toujours montrées ensemble, paraissant vivre toutes les deux dans la mémoire du peuple, et surtout dans le culte, d'une vie unie par des liens indissolubles. Et cependant mvamayôń et esayôń, si unis qu'ils paraissent au premier abord, sont en réalité profondément dissemblables. Nous avons vu en effet que l'un, l'esayôń, était le père «vrai» de la tribu, l'autre, le mvamayôń, le père «spirituel». De là, également, le culte différent rendu à l'un et à l'autre. A l'esayôń, s'adressera le culte ancestral, au mvamayôń, le culte totémique. Mais de même que dans la plupart des cas, tout au moins lorsque le mvamayôń a joui d'une existence terrestre, cette existence, tout en demeurant parallèle à celle de l'esayôń, et indépendante, lui est restée cependant profondément unie par des liens presque indissolubles: de même le culte ancestral et le culte totémique sont demeurés intimement attachés. Ils ne marchent guère l'un sans l'autre: toutes les fois que l'on s'adresse au mvamayôń, on ne manquera guère de s'adresser ensuite à l'esayôń. Si dans une cérémonie, le culte rendu à l'esayôń est venu le premier, celui qui sera rendu au mvamayôń le suivra immédiatement. En ne s'adressant pas à l'un après s'être adressé à l'autre, on craindrait fort de les offenser. De fait, si pour une circonstance quelconque, une cérémonie a été omise, tous les assistants, et surtout le chef, contractent une faute rituelle, un nsem, qu'il faudra expier, toute faute entraînant réparation. De même, si pour une cause qui peut même être involontaire, un sacrifice ou une réunion rituelle ont dû être interrompus, il y a également nsem, et par là même, réparation nécessaire. Dans une attaque subite de l'ennemi, par exemple, troublant une cérémonie totémique, le Noir ne verra pas une circonstance indépendante de sa volonté, mais bien une punition de son propre totem, irrité d'une négligence quelconque: plus le dommage qu'il aura subi sera grave, plus la négligence aura été grave, et par là même également, plus la réparation devra être considérable. Mais, dans aucun cas, le Noir n'aura à s'en prendre à son totem ou à l'esayôñ; cette pensée ne lui viendra même pas à l'esprit.

Les manifestations des deux cultes sont donc étroitement unies, et ne marchent guère les unes sans les autres.

Toutefois, de par le fait même de leur objet, les cérémonies qui se rapportent au culte de l'esayôñ sont plus visibles, plus tangibles, et par là même sont plus facilement remarquées des observateurs étrangers à la nation. De là, tandisque les unes étaient parfois soigneusement notées, les autres, demeurées incomprises, étaient purement et simplement laissées de côté et passées sous silence. Parfois aussi, elles disparaissaient, englobées dans les autres.

Ces différences sont en effet d'autant plus difficiles à saisir que presque toujours elles se compénètrent étroitement. Dans une même cérémonie rituelle, dans le même sacrifice, les «ministres» des deux cultes seront les mêmes, et s'adresseront tantôt au totem réel, tantôt au totem matérialisé; tantôt aussi ils invoqueront l'esayôñ, puis, à sa suite, les mânes des ancêtres, personnifiés, ou pour ainsi dire retenus et matérialisés dans les crânes présents, leur habitat actuel, tantôt enfin les esprits invisibles, désincarnés, et libres de toute attache matérielle. Ce sera toujours en somme la même dualité de culte, d'un côté l'esayôñ et ses descendants, de l'autre le mvamayôñ et ses descendants, avec l'union primitive et la parenté spirituelle et réelle des ancêtres transmise à tous leurs descendants, soit ayant déjà quitté la vie actuelle pour entrer dans le monde des esprits, soit vivant encore leur existence terrestre. Quelque soit l'objet auquel s'adressera le culte, que ce soit l'esayôñ ou le mvamayôñ, le ministre sera le même, mais seulement en tant que personne humaine. En fait, pour le sacrifice et pour tous les participants, il revêtira deux personnalités distinctes. Lorsqu'il s'adressera à l'esayôñ, il agira et opèrera comme représentant direct de la race, et ce sera alors le culte totémique. Dans ce cas, le chef de famille, de clan, ou de tribu, officiera toujours par lui-même, et si, à ses côtés, on voit apparaître le féticheur, celui-ci jouera simplement le rôle de maître des cérémonies, d'ordonnateur, de gardien des rites. — Nous excluons évidemment le cas où le chef de la race est en même temps le féticheur de la tribu: le rôle ne change pas, mais en devient plus complexe. — Le chef de race agira en d'autres circonstances comme sacrificateur et intercesseur, et ce sera alors soit le culte totémique, soit le culte mânique, successivement mis en cause. De cette dualité, résulte la nécessité de bien exposer, tout au moins autant qu'il sera possible, les différences essentielles qui se manifestent entre les deux cultes.

Ces différences peuvent se ramener aux paragraphes suivants.

§ 1. L'objet du culte du mvamayôn, et l'objet du culte de l'esayôn diffèrent essentiellement.

Dans le totémisme, le culte s'adresse tout d'abord à l'ancêtre éponyme de la tribu, ancêtre qui porte le nom de mvamayôn, ou «gardien» de la nation. Dans le mânisme, au contraire, ou culte ancestral, le culte s'adresse en première ligne à l'esayôn, ou ancêtre vrai, «père» de la tribu.

Les deux cultes ont leurs représentants actuels en quelque sorte matérialisés: dans l'un, ce seront les restes, ce que l'on aura pu conserver de l'animal éponyme, ou de tout autre être qui aura joué ce rôle à l'origine de la race. Ces restes n'appartiendront pas nécessairement à l'être éponyme lui-même: nous avons vu précédemment, au tableau des totems, la diversité très grande des mvamayôn: pour une partie d'entre eux, soit par suite de leur fragilité, soit par suite de leur entité particulière, il est impossible d'en avoir les représentants réels: tel est le cas, par exemple, pour une fleur, et surtout pour un phénomène naturel, un astre etc. Nous avons vu comment, dans ce cas, on «matérialisait» le totem. Il n'est pas nécessaire non plus que ces «restes» appartiennent effectivement au mvamayôn ou ancêtre éponyme lui-même. Nous avons vu également que si pour une raison ou une autre, antiquité, usure du temps et de l'âge, perte fortuite (par exemple dans le fleuve, dans un précipice etc.), le mvamayôñ vient à disparaître, on le «retrouve», au moyen de sacrifices et de cérémonies appropriés, dans la personne de ses descendants. Notons en passant qu'en parlant de perte, nous disons «perte fortuite», car si le mvamayôñ est perdu à la guerre, enlevé par l'ennemi, le cas devient tout différent: il ne peut, en aucun cas, être «remplacé», il doit être reconquis ou racheté.

Ces restes, enfin, sont ordinairement les os du crâne lorsque le mvamayoñ a appartenu à un être vivant. Les raisons de ce choix sont la noblesse plus grande de ces parties du squelette, considérées comme séjour principal de l'âme (bo et khun), et aussi une simple raison de durée plus grande. Toutefois, dans bien des cas, on s'attachera plutôt à la partie du corps qui réalise le mieux l'idée symbolique recherchée. Ainsi, de l'antilope, rapide ou prompte à l'attaque comme à la défense, on conservera de préférence la corne ou le pied; de l'éléphant, les défenses ou les poils de la quene, rares et que l'on ne peut conquérir que par la mort de l'animal; du tigre et des animaux carnassiers, les griffes; du fourmilier, de la tortue, du pangolin, les dents avec lesquelles ils mordent si fortement.

Ce culte totémique s'adressera donc à ces restes qui formeront, constitueront en somme, la matérialisation effective du totem. Mais à côté de ce totem matérialisé, il y aura encore tous les animaux ou êtres actuellement vivants et descendants de l'ancêtre éponyme, dépositaires de sa «force», de son «esprit», de sa «personnalité».

Dans le mânisme, au contraire, le culte s'adressera toujours en première ligne à l'esayôñ, ou premier ancêtre, personnification même de la race. Elle est en effet toute entière issue de lui, et ne peut en être indépendante: il l'a d'abord primitivement contenue dans ses flancs, de même qu'un arbre est le père de tous les fruits qu'il porte et des autres arbres nés de ces fruits. La «race» est sortie de lui; chaque descendant jouit d'une personnalité distincte pendant sa vie terrestre, mais cette vie n'est en somme qu'un épisode, un fragment de la vie de la race, de même encore que le fruit qui se développe continue à appartenir à l'arbre; une fois la vie présente terminée, l'être continue dans le monde des esprits son existence commencée ici-bas.

En même temps qu'à l'ancêtre primitif, le culte mânique s'adressera à tous ses descendants qu'il englobera dans un même ensemble de rites, de cérémonies, de prescriptions. Mais où sont ces descendants? Leur corps est aujourd'hui disparu, réduit en poussière. Que reste-t-il d'eux? Il reste «ce qui constitue à proprement parler notre personnalité spéciale, individuelle et distinctive; c'est ce qui, dans les langues de l'Afrique orientale surtout, est connue sous le nom de m-zimu, n-zimu, w-simo, mu-zimu, umu-d-zimu, mo-dimo, mu-limo etc.» [1].

Tous ces mots proviennent d'ailleurs d'une racine unique, ima «être vivant», que nous retrouvons plus ou moins modifiée dans toutes les langues bantoues. Nos Fâñ l'ont également conservée [2], et ces «mânes», car ce mot rend bien l'idée bantoue, portent chez eux le nom de n-sisim [3], très-voisin des m-zimu,

[1] Cf. Mgr. Le Roy, Religion des Primitifs, p. 154.

[2] Ainsi dans le mot a-mana, fin, terminaison, et dans beaucoup d'autres dérivés.

[3] Une des caractéristiques de la langue fâñ est de «raccourcir», d'abréger tous les mots qu'elle emprunte aux langues voisines. On dirait que ces rudes et sauvages enfants de la forêt n'ont jamais le temps de terminer leurs phrases. Ainsi, pour n'en citer que quelques exemples, les Fâñ raccourciront tous les vocables suivants pris dans les langues voisines:

De:		ils feront:
Añambyé	Dieu	Añam
Nzambi	Créateur	Nzâme
Atangani	Européen	ntâñe
Elénlé	canot	elèn
Nkori	pagale	nkop
Biali	pirogue	bial
Epélé	assiette	efèl
Nago	maison	nda
Mbaza	cabane	mba
Falansi	Un Français	fañ
Putu	Un Portugais	put
Ingèsi	Un Anglais	ngès
Bikondo	bananes	bikon
Nganga	féticheur	ngâñ

La chose ressort surtout dans les noms de nombre:

mbori	un	fo
mbani	deux	bè
ilali	trois	la
inaï	quatre	nè
itani	cinq	tan
isamu	six etc.	sam

Impossible d'être plus bref!

Le procédé est sensible même dans les mots d'im portation très-récente: la phrase fâñ finit comme le mot, le geste, et presque toujours la danse elle-même, sur une terminaison brusque et vivement arrêtée. C'est une des caractéristiques du fâñ.

Un Pygmée qui venait de voir un jour une de ses réclamations, pourtant parfaitement motivée, rejetée avec dédain par le chef fâñ, son protecteur, me définissait ainsi les Fâñ:

«Les Fâñ, ce sont des gens qui coupent brutalement: Fâñ, mur a kiz kruk», et comme idée, geste, expression, impossible de trouver mieux!

w-simu, n-simo etc. des autres tribus, des imizimu des Kirundi, habitant les animaux et les bosquets sacrés.

Où habite cette personnalité? Elle demeure dans un monde qui n'est plus le nôtre et que nous ne connaissons pas, qui est sombre et noir, où l'on vit au milieu des ténèbres, dans le froid. «Ba wux avô, avô. Ils endurent le grand froid«. croyance toute naturelle d'ailleurs en voyant le cadavre refroidi et glacé.

Mais les mânes des chefs, des principaux de la race, des ancêtres honorés qui ont reçu les sacrifices funéraires et les offrandes expiatoires échappent à ce sort. Ayant conquis des pouvoirs supérieurs à l'homme, dégagés de la matière, ils peuvent s'intéresser à ceux qu'ils ont connus, prendre part à leur prospérité, la vouloir et y aider, en un mot vivre encore de la vie de leur tribu. A côté du principe obscur qui va se perdre dans la nuit, il en est un autre lumineux qui va, plus tard, rejoindre la lumière de l'étoile du soir. Et ce monde invisible où vont les âmes ayant rempli sur terre leur devoir, c'est le monde du Créateur suprême [1].

Mais au lieu de s'en aller dans ce monde, où elles n'ont plus d'action sur les vivants. ces âmes peuvent être retenues sur terre, et elles en sont d'ailleurs contentes, à condition:

1° D'avoir eu à leur mort, les sacrifices funéraires, les fêtes de la mort, les grandes danses funèbres, le fanki [2];

2° De trouver, grâce à leurs descendants, un habitat qui remplace leur corps détruit, et auquel on pourra encore adresser les sacrifices prescrits. Tant que cet habitat demeurera, l'âme désincarnée y restera attachée, pour le plus grand bien des descendants, pour l'honneur et la force de la race.

Ces croyances ne sont pas d'ailleurs absolument particulières aux Fâñ. On les retrouve, très-peu modifiées. chez tous les Bantous. Ainsi, chez un peuple voisin, les Baluba, les idées religieuses concernant les âmes paraissent au premier abord un peu différentes de celles des Fâñ, mais s'en rapprochent beaucoup cependant comme fond:

[1] Ainsi au Nyassa: «Le mzimu reste vivant quand l'homme meurt; l'âme vole, vole, elle va là où sont allées les âmes de tous les hommes etc.» Cf. Mgr. Le Roy, p. 158.

[2] Très probablement, un reste d'un culte ancien rendu au grand Esprit chef des morts, Fankita, dont le culte est encore existant au Bas Congo. Les Fâñ l'auront emprunté dans une de leurs nombreuses migrations.

«Que devient l'âme au moment de la mort? Je crois être dans le vrai en disant que l'âme continue à résider, vivante, dans le cadavre, avec la possibilité de s'en dégager, non pas librement et à découvert, mais associée à quelque chose d'indéterminé, d'impalpable, une sorte de fantôme, de spectre, qui est l'apparence exacte du corps décédé, mais n'en a pas la réalité. C'est sous cette forme macabre, qui est en somme le corps immatérialisé, que l'âme vivra désormais dans l'empire des morts. Pour nos Noirs, l'âme est un principe distinct du corps, et doué d'une nature plus subtile, mais inapte à subsister seul, indépendamment d'un fantôme quelconque. Ce fantôme n'a pas toujours la forme exacte d'un corps humain: les malheureux dont les chairs ont servi aux festins des anthropophages (et ils sont nombreux) auront l'apparence d'un squelette desséché; ceux dont le corps aura été réduit en cendres, auront éternellement la forme d'un peu de fumée mêlée à de la cendre» [1].

Ces fantômes, spectres ou ombres, ne sont pas loin des âmes désincarnées de nos Fân, et l'idée qui semble les avoir inspirées provient bien d'un fonds commun à toute la race bantoue.

D'où l'a-t-elle reçu, où l'a-t-elle trouvé? La question est plus complexe, et ne ressort pas d'ailleurs du cadre de notre présente Etude. Ce qu'il est important de constater, c'est cette croyance générale à l'existence après la mort des âmes désincarnées, leur influence bonne ou nocive, sur les vivants, la nécessité pour elles d'un «support» quelconque, la relation étroite, en un mot, et nécessaire entre le monde des vivants, transitoire, et le monde de l'au-delà, durable.

§ 2. Dans le culte totémique, on ne se préoccupe que du mvamayôn et de ses descendants actuellement existants; dans le culte mânique, les seuls descendants désincarnés de l'esayôn demeurent l'objet du culte.

L'objet du culte mânique diffère donc déjà, au simple point de vue «objet», du culte totémique.

Mais nous devons noter une seconde et essentielle différence. Dans le mânisme, le culte s'adressera donc aux mânes désincarnés, mais en tant qu'ayant conservé leur habitat terrestre dans les crânes ou fragments qui sont soigneusement gardés. Cet habitat est déterminé par un ensemble de sacrifices et de rites accomplis par les féticheurs. Ce rôle constitue une de leurs principales fonctions. Toutefois, il est à noter ici que par suite de leur pouvoir occulte, les sorciers, et non plus les féticheurs, peuvent également retenir à leur service les âmes désincarnées pour les employer à leurs mauvais desseins. Dans ce cas, ce ne seront pas les âmes des morts ayant reçu les honneurs funèbres qui pourront ainsi leur être asservies, mais seulement celles de tous ceux qui n'ont point reçu cet honneur, et qui errent à l'aventure, âmes de disparus, de captifs, pauvres hères dont personne ne s'occupe, descendants isolés de familles éteintes, vagabonds etc. Toutes ces âmes désincarnées portent le nom général de békhun, mânes ou revenants. Les Fâñ en ont une peur horrible, car dans les apparitions qu'ils ont ou croient avoir, ils ne sont jamais sûrs à quels békhun ils ont affaire. En effet, si ces békhun sont de leur race, ils leur seront propices; si, au contraire, ces békhun sont d'une race ennemie, ils chercheront à leur faire du mal. Et «en fait de békhun, comme me le disait un jour un brave chef, comme ni sabre ni fusil ne peuvent «rien» contre un être qui n'est «rien», le mieux est de se sauver à toutes jambes. D'autant qu'au lieu d'avoir devant soi de simples békhun, chose déjà très désagréable si l'on a affaire à des ennemis de son sang, il peut fort bien arriver que ces «fantômes» soient non plus des békhun, mais des engungur, c'est-à-dire des ogres, avides de chair humaine, ou tout simplement des âmes tombées au pouvoir de «sorciers» malfaisants.

[1] Revue «Le Congo» 1906, p. 226, art. du R. P. Colle, des Pères Blancs.

Et, au fond, békhun ou engungur ne valent guère mieux les uns que les autres. Les vivants avec les vivants, les morts avec les morts.»

Le mânisme envisage donc les seuls mânes désincarnés, ayant conservé leur habitat terrestre.

Dans le totémisme, au contraire, on ne se préoccupera évidemment pas des mânes désincarnés des descendants du mvamayôñ. Ces mânes, à la mort du corps terrestre qu'ils habitaient, retournent à la terre et meurent comme lui. Leur trace disparaît, et rien d'eux ne demeure, au point de vue matériel.

Ce qui reste, cependant, c'est la personnalité même, c'est la force du mvamayôn, et cette personnalité, au lieu d'être localisée dans les restes de ses descendants disparus, sera perpétuée et conservée dans ses seuls descendants vivant actuellement, et qui reproduiront, intacte, la personnalité de l'ancêtre. Ainsi un arbre reproduira exactement, dans ses qualités nocives ou salutaires, ce que l'arbre qui l'a lui-même produit, renfermait avant lui. Si le mvamayôn «matérialisé» a disparu ou a été détruit pour une cause quelconque, sa force, sa personnalité protectrice n'est pas perdue pour cela. Les êtres qui descendent de lui et sont actuellement vivants l'ont conservée intacte et vivante. On ira donc, sur les indications du ministre du culte, chercher un de ses descendants et on l'offrira en sacrifice à l'ancêtre: c'est un des cas particuliers où il est permis de sacrifier le totem; par là, on le reliera à celui-ci, et on localisera de nouveau la personnalité ancestrale dans le nouvel habitat qui lui est offert. Si, au contraire, le crâne de l'ancêtre primitif, de l'esayôn, a disparu, peu importe: ses descendants ne font qu'un avec lui; au lieu d'être offert au crâne réel, les honneurs et sacrifices seront offerts au nom qui perpétue, lui aussi, non seulement le souvenir du défunt, mais encore le défunt lui-même. D'ailleurs, comme nous l'avons indiqué, même celui-ci disparu, et son âme désincarnée étant allée vers le séjour heureux, faute d'habitat terrestre localisé, sa «personnalité» n'en reste pas moins vivante et agissante, tant que sa race, sa tribu, son clan demeurent constitués, vivant et agissant. Ce qui démontre une fois de plus combien, dans toute la conception bantoue du système mondial, l'individu n'est rien, la collectivité organisée, au contraire, demeure l'être proprement dit, ayant seul sa véritable existence. L'un est l'être, l'autre l'accident; le premier demeure, le second, passe.

Pour résumer rapidement cette différence dans l'objet honoré, le culte mânique s'adressera donc en première ligne à l'esayôn ou premier ancêtre et aux âmes désincarnées de ses descendants. Ces âmes (békhun) seront localisées dans leurs crânes (bikwékwé) soigneusement conservés dans la boîte du biéri (evora biéri). Le culte s'adressera enfin à la force, à l'esprit, à la personnalité de la race elle-même, perpétuée dans les descendants. Cette dernière notion demeure toutefois fort confuse et assez mal définie.

Un court tableau fera mieux ressortir cette idée, très-complexe, et qu'il est toujours difficile de distinguer dans les cérémonies cultuelles:

Le totémisme ou culte du mvamayôñ s'adresse donc	1° Au mvamayôñ, ancêtre éponyme de la tribu ou du clan, au sens que nous avons indiqué. 2° A l'akamayôñ, matérialisation du mvamayôñ nécessitée par les besoins du culte. 3° Aux seuls descendants en ligne directe du mvamayôñ, en excluant à la fois 1° tous les descendants morts, 2° tous les êtres semblables et appartenant à la même race, mais «non» descendants de l'ancêtre éponyme. Ainsi, par exemple, tous les tigres animaux ne seront pas totems du clan «homme» Ebinze, mais seulement le clan «tigre» issu de l'ancêtre éponyme. 4° A la force, à la personnalité du mvamayôñ, perpétuée dans ses descendants directs, et y demeurant localisée, dans chacun d'eux.
Le mânisme ou culte de l'esayôñ s'adresse	1° A l'esayôñ, père de la race. 2° Aux mânes désincarnés. 3° A l'habitat de ces mânes, mais en tant que simple objet matériel, localisation temporaire de ces mânes désincarnés. 4° A la force, à la personnalité de l'esayôñ, perpétuée dans ses descendants directs, et y demeurant localisée, pour en faire un tout, agissant et vivant, en tant que collectivité organisée ou organisme social, mais non en tant qu'individu.

L'objet du culte totémique et celui du culte mânique diffèrent donc essentiellement, comme on vient de le voir, et se rattachent à deux idées de marche parallèle mais d'origine complètement autre. Par suite de cette divergence d'objet, les cérémonies qui accompagnent le culte, les rites qui le déterminent, les sacrifices qui seront offerts à l'un ou à l'autre de ces objets, diffèreront également de façon complète.

Mvamayôṅ et esayôṅ, descendants éponymes de l'ancêtre également éponyme, descendants directs mais aujourd'hui désincarnés, auront droit chacun à des honneurs divers, à des rites particuliers, à des ministres différents.

§ 3. Les cérémonies des deux cultes mânique et totémique sont différentes.

I° Difficultés de la question.

Il est d'autant plus difficile de reconnaître les différences, pourtant essentielles, entre ces deux ordres de cultes, que dans la plupart des cas, pour ne pas dire presque toujours, les cérémonies totémiques sont le «prélude» ou la «suite» des cérémonies relatives au culte des ancêtres. Ce phénomène est d'ailleurs nécessité par tout ce que nous avons déjà dit dans les pages précédentes de l'union intime et nécessaire qui existe entre mvamayôṅ et esayôṅ, et également entre leurs descendants.

De plus, une seconde difficulté se joint à cette première. Tout autant que le culte des ancêtres, le culte du mvamayôṅ demeure très fermé aux non-initiés. Cette ignorance en fait la force; la loi du secret est une des plus fidèlement observées, et les féticheurs surtout y tiennent très fortement. Presque toujours la violation en est punie de mort. Nous en avons déjà parlé.

Ces deux ordres de cérémonies totémiques et mâniques ont donc entre eux un rapport très étroit de parenté qui les pourrait facilement faire mêler ou prendre l'un pour l'autre. Ce serait néanmoins un grand tort. Un exemple fera mieux ressortir comment parfois ils semblent ainsi se confondre, sans que toutefois il n'en soit rien.

II° Exemple des différences entre les deux cultes.

Dans les cérémonies particulières qui célèbrent la fin de l'adolescence et l'initiation des jeunes hommes au rang des guerriers de la tribu, le néophyte subit tout d'abord, dans la forêt, en un endroit écarté, et sous la direction du féticheur, une réclusion sévère. Privé pendant ce temps d'une foule d'aliments qui lui sont habituels, soumis à un régime à la fois excitant et débilitant, il commencera par subir les premières épreuves. Puis, au jour reconnu favorable par les présages, tous les chefs de famille, ainsi que les guerriers reconnus comme tels et ayant subi les épreuves, se réunissent dans la forêt en un endroit déblayé d'avance. Au centre à peu près, s'élève une cabane grossièrement construite, et dont le devant est caché par un rideau de feuillage. Le néophyte est amené devant cette cabane, et assis sur un siège de bois creusé dans un tronc d'arbre, presque toujours un Musantha, ou Parasolier [1]. Le tamtam fait rage. Tous les assistants exécutent une danse spéciale. Puis, soudain, le rideau s'écarte et trois masques apparaissent. Le jeune homme subit une série de demandes concernant son âge, ce qu'il désire, ce qu'il a fait pour le mériter, ses «rêves» précédents, les animaux on autres êtres qu'il aurait vus en songe. A peine a-t-il terminé ses réponses que le rideau se referme; le tamtam se tait; devant le néophyte, le chef de la famille apporte la boîte d'écorce, evora biéri, où sont renfermés, avec divers objets et ingrédients (la plupart amulettes ou fétiches familiaux, et encore le nsu ou poison de cadavre), les crânes des ancêtres, de père en fils aîné, à l'exclusion de tout autre. Devant les guerriers du clan, avant d'ouvrir la boîte des crânes, on commence par une longue invocation à l'esprit protecteur de la race, ou mieux encore à la personnalité toujours vivante de l'esayôñ.

Toi, père, qui ne meurs pas,	Wéni, Esa, wâ yèm dia awu,
Qui ne connais jamais la mort,	Wa tobe ké yèméyèm awuwu,
Et dont la vie est toujours vivante,	Wa ñiñ ké yème fe éniñ,
Sans jamais voir le froid du sommeil,	Ké wuże avô, ke wuże oyô,
Tes enfants sont venus tous ici.	Ebo bia bé mana sho va.
Ils sont rassemblés autour de toi;	Bé nsulana ésama we,
Enveloppe-les de ta force, o père,	O ké ve bie ki zia, wéni, Esa,
Que ton «ombre» pénètre en eux,	O ké tobe né bo né nsissim,
Toi, père qui ne meurs pas,	Wéni, Esa, wâ yèm ké yèm awu,
Toi, père de notre race.	Wéni, Esa ayôñ dia.

[1] Il y a à ce choix une double raison. Tout d'abord, le bois du Parasolier est très-tendre, et se laisse tailler facilement. De plus, la sève est employée dans les opérations magiques. Très-abondante, elle remplace l'eau pure, et est assez agréable à boire.

Après cette invocation, suivie de beaucoup d'autres, du chef en l'honneur toujours de la race, on commence les chants et les cérémonies en l'honneur des ancêtres. Leurs crânes, préalablement frottés d'huile et de bois rouge, sont tous étalés au grand jour.

Les chants et les cérémonies sont toujours accompagnés de danses d'un caractère tout particulier; à l'encontre des danses du soir qui sont toujours de pur amusement, les danses en l'honneur des ancêtres ne sont presque jamais lascives: du moins elles ne le sont pas au regard des Fân, et si parfois on y remarque des cérémonies ou attitudes phalliques, c'est uniquement pour rappeler le culte de la génération. Bien à tort, quelques voyageurs ont voulu y voir une idée de mariage ou de culte obscène: il n'y est en rien question, comme quelques-uns l'ont prétendu, d'amour plus ou moins lascif, de poursuite de la fiancée ou de la femme, ou toute autre chose en ce genre. L'esprit de la cérémonie y est complètement opposé: pour peu que l'on connaisse la religion et la langue, il est facile de voir combien ces idées sont loin, dans cette occasion, de l'esprit du Noir.

Ces danses sont toujours des danses de jour: d'ailleurs, la plupart des cérémonies qui se rapportent au culte des ancêtres se passent ainsi en pleine lumière, à l'encontre des cérémonies des sorciers et des assemblées de sociétés secrètes. Celles-ci sont toujours nocturnes.

Après les danses et les chants, les crânes sont aspergés d'eau lustrale; le féticheur l'a préparée lui-même auparavant avec un rite tout spécial: onze espèces différentes de plantes, d'écorces d'arbres ou végétaux y ont bouilli. Parmi eux, on remarque l'asèp, sorte d'arbrisseau à odeur de menthe, le champignon (vyo), l'écorce de l'esün (Hua gabonensis), et plusieurs autres, de préférence ceux qui sont employés comme substances stupéfiantes, soit pour empoisonner le gibier, soit pour prendre le poisson, soit plus souvent encore dans les ordalies. A ce titre figure en première ligne l'élun et l'iboga, dont nous parlerons plus tard.

Après l'aspersion d'eau lustrale, le chef, suivi de tous les guerriers, tourne lentement tout autour de l'enceinte, en scandant sa marche sur les coups rythmés du tamtam; puis il rétrécit le cercle de plus en plus de façon à le terminer en ellipse autour des estrades où sont étalés les crânes. A ce moment, le chef fait une nouvelle aspersion d'eau lustrale, et commence un nouveau chant que tous les assistants reprennent après lui. Cette partie de la cérémonie est ordinairement fort longue et semble assez fastidieuse, même pour les assistants. Aucun n'ose cependant s'asseoir pour se reposer, mais plusieurs ne se gênent nullement pour quitter l'enceinte, quitte à revenir quelque temps après.

Lorsque ces chants sont terminés, les suit une seconde danse à rythme très-rapide et beaucoup plus accentué, une sorte de battement de pied, presque sur place. Le chef s'approche alors de l'estrade, prend chaque crâne dans sa main, l'invoque par son nom, énumère en quelques mots sa vie et ses hauts faits, puis passe au suivant. Quand la série est terminée, les crânes sont placés sans ordre devant le néophyte, et il doit les distinguer tous les uns des autres, et, sans se tromper jamais, les appeler par leur nom. Une erreur serait de très mauvais augure. Aussi est-il aisé de concevoir qu'ils ne s'y exposent point. Jusqu'à ce moment, le culte comme on le voit, est exclusivement mânique. Tout s'y rapporte au culte des ancêtres. Lorsque le jeune homme a terminé l'énumération des crânes, le chef de la famille les remet tous dans la boîte destinée à les contenir, la transporte un peu plus loin devant une sorte d'établi ou d'étagère grossièrement constitué avec des branches d'arbre, et range de nouveau, dans leur ordre respectif, les crânes des ancêtres. Quand il arrive au premier, c'est-à-dire au crâne du premier ancêtre, soit du clan, soit de la tribu, il le prend dans ses mains et invoque alors le mvamayôn ou ancêtre éponyme; l'ancêtre réel porte souvent le même nom. Nous avons dit précédemment les circonstances où ce fait se réalise.

Cette invocation est ordinairement précédée ou accompagnée d'une cérémonie particulière, le baza. Avec une épaisse bouillie rouge, obtenue en broyant le bois du mbèl (Pterocarpus angolensis) dans l'huile extraite du fruit du palmier des marais, on peint en rouge le crâne du premier ancêtre. C'est le symbole ou le souvenir des sacrifices sanglants d'autrefois. Jadis, en effet, un prisonnier de guerre était toujours immolé dans ces circonstances, et son sang coulait pour «réjouir le cœur du premier ancêtre». «Méki ma béra biè ve bo nlèm nayoa esayôṅ, me disait un jour un chef», le sang régénère et réjouit le cœur de l'esayôṅ. D'ailleurs, dans certaines circonstances plus solennelles, mort du chef principal par exemple ou calamité publique, morts successives etc., cette coutume des sacrifices humains est toujours suivie, et le sang coule encore sur les crânes des ancêtres.

L'invocation est accompagnée d'un chant particulier, au rythme lent et solennel. Tel celui des Ye-mvuẋ, tribu jadis puissante mais aujourd'hui fort réduite, établie près des sources de la Mvûṅ. C'est un cri plaintif, dans le genre de celui de la hyène. La fourrure du mvuẋ aux poils rudes et d'un jaune sombre, est remarquable par une touffe de poils blancs, située juste au milieu du dos.

Le mvuẋ est un animal nocturne, dans le genre de l'AÏ ou Paresseux. Il gîte dans les creux et il est fort difficile de le trouver, car il a soin de choisir une retraite qui lui offre plusieurs issues. La nuit, il rôde autour des villages, et son cri lugubre et caractéristique est des plus faciles à reconnaître.

Chant des Ye-mvuẋ.

Tout le chœur.

Oh! hè, yé - lé! o - hè oh! yé yé - lé, oh! yé, hè!

Chef de la tribu.

Oh! Mvuẋ, o hè, o tar' oh!

Oh! oh! Mvuẋ, o hè, o tar' oh, oh!

Tout le chœur.

Oh! hè, yé - lé! o - hè oh! yé yé - lé, oh! yé, hè!

Chef de la tribu.

Mvuẋ a - fan, yè Mvuẋ a - tan yè.

Tout le chœur.

Oh! hè, yé - lé! o - hè Oh! yé yé - lé, oh! yé, hè!

Chef de la tribu.

Mvuẋ é - ti, Mvuẋ é - li, Mvuẋ é - ti, Mvuẋ é - li yè.

Tout le chœur.

Oh! hè, yé - lé! o - hè oh! yé yé - lé, oh! yé, hè!

Chef de la tribu.

O Mbar' o oh! Khum' oh! oh! Mbar' o né Khum' oh!

Tout le chœur.

Oh! hè, yé - lé! o - hè oh! yé yé - lé, oh! yé, hè!

Chef de la tribu.

Mé - ki né mé - yô - m oh! Mé - ki né mé - yôm oh!

Tout le chœur.

Oh! hè, yé - lé! o - hè oh! yé yé - lé, oh! yé, hè!

Chef de la tribu.

Oh! Mvuẋ, oh oh! Oh! tar' oh! Oh! oh!

Tout le chœur.

Oh! hè, yé - lé! o - hè oh! yé yé - lé, oh! yé, hè!

Tout le chœur.

Oh! Mvuẋ, oh oh! Oh! tar' oh! Oh! oh!

Traduction [1].

Le chœur: Oh! hè, yélé (cri de joie et d'appel)! ohè oh! yé, yélé, oh! yé hè!

Le chef: Oh! Mvuẋ, o hè, ô père, oh! Oh! Mvuẋ, ô père, oh! oh!

Le chœur: Oh! hè, yélé! ohè oh! yé, yélé, oh! yé, hè!

Le chef: Mvuẋ dans la forêt, oui, Mvuẋ dans l'interieur (s-e: de cette boîte).

Le chœur: Oh! hè, yélé! ohè oh! yé, yélé, oh! yé, hè!

Le chef: Mvuẋ à l'intérieur, Mvuẋ dans l'arbre et ici, Mvuẋ vraiment ici et là bas[2].

Le chœur: Oh! hè, yélé! ohè oh! yé, yélé, oh! yé, hè!

Le chef: O Gardien (s-e: de la race). Oh! Chef suprême, Gardien et Chef.

Le chœur: Oh! hè, yélé! ohè oh! yé, yélé, oh! yé, hè!

Le chef: Sang et semence humaine, oui.

Le chœur: Oh! hè, yélé! ohè oh! yè, yélé, oh! yè, hè!

Le chef: Sang et semence humaine, oui.

Le chœur: Oh! hè, yélé! ohè oh! yè, yélé, oh! yé, hè!

Le chef: O Mvuẋ, ô père de la race, oui, oh!

---

[1] Dans ce chant, nous avons tenu à reproduire de notre mieux la mesure indigène. On n'y recherchera donc pas la mesure de notre musique «blanche».

[2] Le sens des mots éti et éli est double.

Cette traduction m'a été donnée par le chef des Ye-mvux̌, Ovôñ-Esula, dont les villages s'étendent entre l'Aïna et la Karagwa, affluents de l'Ogowé.

* * *

Ce chant s'exécute en tournant tout autour du crâne de l'ancêtre. Le chef regarde successivement la forêt, où est censé résider le mvux animal totem, et la boîte où est le crâne de l'ancêtre; il en s'adresse, suivant le cas, à l'un ou à l'autre.

Le chef actuel de la race chante le premier en s'adressant d'abord au crâne de l'ancêtre: «O Mvux, ô père», puis en s'adressant au Mvux totem: «O Mvux, ô père.» Celui-ci était représenté, non seulement d'unemanière figurative par l'invocation tournée vers la forêt, sa résidence, mais encore d'une manière expressive et réelle par des ongles et un os du crâne, provenant d'un mvux, très ancien, m'assura le chef (même à son dire, contemporain du crâne de l'ancêtre [?]), et renfermé avec de la poudre de bois rouge dans un petit sachet, déposé tout près des ossements.

Nous avons donc là affaire à une cérémonie totémique nettement caractérisée, et néanmoins mêlée intimement au culte des ancêtres.

* * *

Souvent, dans des circonstances analogues, nous avons ainsi rencontré dans les boîtes renfermant les crânes (evora biéri) de petits ossements d'animaux soigneusement enveloppés dans des linges ordinairement fort sales. Il ne faudrait pas, croyons-nous, y voir le fétiche particulier du chef, mais bien comme nous avons pu nous en assurer souvent, et comme dans le cas précédent, le totem de la tribu. Ce qui d'ailleurs tend à le prouver est que, si par hasard ce totem est perdu ou détruit, le chef le remplacera lui-même. Si c'est au contraire un autre fétiche qui a disparu, c'est au sorcier de le remplacer.

Il pourra par exemple être perdu dans un combat. C'est toujours un très grand malheur: pour le recouvrer, s'il est tombé aux mains de l'ennemi, le prix ordinaire est d'une jeune femme. Néanmoins les enfants de celle-ci appartiendront à son ancienne tribu, même si le père est de la tribu vainqueur. S'il veut les garder, il devra payer. Pour les garçons, la somme sera assez minime. Mais, souvent, devenus grands, ils retourneront néanmoins à leur tribu primitive, car ils n'occupent jamais qu'un rang inférieur dans leur nouvelle tribu. Pour les filles, c'est le même prix que si on les achetait pour femmes.

* * *

Ce chant, et tous les autres semblables qu'il serait facile de multiplier, remonte certainement, croyons-nous, à une haute antiquité, et très probablement tous dérivent d'un chant unique, composé à l'origine de la race, et avant l'ère des migrations. Ainsi, à 400 km. des Ye-mvux̌, dans la tribu des Ebifam, sur les affluents de la Ngoko, nous trouvons un chant presque semblable. Or, les Ebifam appartiennent au rameau Méké de la tribu fân, tandis que les Ye-mvux̌ ressortent du rameau Bétsi. La séparation est donc très-lointaine.

Les Ebifam, nous l'avons vu au tableau des différents totems de clan et de tribu, reconnaissent le fam comme totem. Ce mot fam, qui désigne également un homme (vir), s'applique dans le cas présent à un coléoptère des plus remarquables du genre Lucane, de la famille des Lamellicornes. Il est très-voisin du Goliath [1] (mvame) et, après lui, les plus gros des coléoptères congolais. On pourrait se demander à quel titre le fam peut être totem d'une tribu?

D'après une curieuse légende que m'a rapporté un des anciens de la tribu, Sube, fils [2] de Nzame, le Créateur, et ancêtre de la tribu, était un jour poursuivi par ses ennemis. Pour leur échapper, il se réfugia dans le désert, et après y avoir longuement erré, il était sur le point d'y mourir de faim et de soif. Tout à coup, un fam vint s'abattre lourdement près de lui. Sube veut s'emparer de cette pauvre proie, mais le fam lui échappe. Il le poursuit: l'insecte s'envole plus loin; de vol en vol, il parvient à un arbre desséché et se cache dans une cavité du tronc. Sube

---

[1] Goliathus micans.

[2] Fils dans un sens très-large, c'est-à-dire «descendant».

creuse le bois mort, l'arbre tombe, une caverne s'ouvre, Sube y pénètre, et au fond découvre une source souterraine qui lui sauve la vie. De ce jour, il prit le fam sauveur pour totem, et ses descendants l'ont conservé.

Au pays des Soninké (Soudan), un certain nombre de tribus ont ainsi adopté un totem à la suite de circonstances semblables. De même que Sube, elles ont pu parfaitement y voir une manifestation de l'esprit protecteur. C'est ainsi que nous lisons dans Arcin [1].

Les Sidibé ont le «petit sénégalais», appélé quelquefois «mange mil» (sorte de passerau), comme ntêné. «Un jour mon grand-père [2], le premier des Sidibé, étant allé à la chasse à l'éléphant, s'égara dans la forêt et malgré toutes ses recherches ne put retrouver sa route. Il arriva ainsi dans un désert au milieu duquel il marcha pendant trois jours sans pouvoir trouver d'eau pour se désaltérer. Mourant de soif, il s'était couché un soir se demandant s'il serait encore vivant le lendemain. Au point du jour, il fut réveillé par un petit oiseau qui chantait sur l'arbre à l'ombre duquel il s'était étendu.

«C'était un petit sénégalais. A peine mon grand-père fut-il debout qu'il se met à voltiger autour de lui et devant lui, essayant de lui faire comprendre qu'il devait le suivre. Mon grand-père ne douta pas un seul instant que l'oiseau était venu là pour le sauver. Il le suivit donc partout ou il voulait le conduire et vers le milieu du jour ils arrivèrent sur le bord d'un ruisseau où tous les deux se désaltérèrent. Puis l'oiseau reprit son vol et le conduisit jusque dans son village où il le quitta dès qu'il l'eut vu en sureté. C'est depuis cette époque que les Sidibé sont parents des petit sénégalais, car sans lui notre père serait infailliblement mort.

«Aussi nous est-il interdit à tous de le tuer, de manger sa chair ou de souffrir qu'on lui fasse du mal en notre présence.»

«Ce récit naïf rapporté par le Docteur Rançon se retrouve plus ou moins modifié dans certaines familles.»

* * *

[1] A. Arcin, La Guinée Française. Organisation sociale. Les Familles p. 248 § 5um et p. 249.

[2] Mon grand-père, c'est-à-dire un des ancêtres.

Mais revenons au chant totémique des Ebifam, un des plus caractéristiques que nous connaissions. Les parties différentes s'exécutent de la même manière que celui des Ye-mvuɨ, en s'adressant successivement à l'insecte et au crâne, c'est-à-dire au mvamayôn et à l'esayôn.

Chant des Ebifam.

Le chœur.

O bur, o bur, yé - lé, hè E - bi - fam oh! yè!

Le chef.

E - bi, o fam, oh! E - bi - fam, oh! yé - lé, oh! yé - lé.

Le chœur.

Nzaga, nzagan' - o, oh! Nzaga, nzagan' - o, oh! oh!

Le chef.

Oh! E - bi - fam, és'-o! nzage, nzage van' oh, é - bi, oh!

Le chœur.

Nzaga, nzagan' - o, oh! Nzaga, nzagan' - o, oh! oh!

Le chef.

Oh! fam à ku - re mišū, nzaga, nzaga van' oh!

Le chœur.

Nzaga, nzagan' - o, oh! Nzaga, nzagan' - o, oh! oh!

Le chef.

Fam a to é-to-to-re, a to ayong é-to-to-re, oh! oh!

Le chœur.

Nzaga, nzagan'-o, oh! Nzaga, nzagan'-o, oh! oh!

Le chef.

A to khu-ma né bur n'-éb-wa mi-vo-re, oh, fam, oh!

Le chœur.

Nzaga, nzagan'-o, oh! Nzaga, nzagan'-o, oh! oh!

Le chef.

A to é-bi né bye, ve ye esa né bur E-bi-fam, oh!

Le chœur.

Nzaga, nzagan'-o, oh! Nzaga, nzagan'-o, oh! oh!

Le chœur: O bur, o bur, yélé, hé, Ebifam, oh, yé.
O hommes, o hommes, chantez, hé! voici le père Fam, oh! oui vous autres Ebifam [1].

Le chef: Ebi, o fam, oh! Ebifam, oh! yélé, oh! yélé.
O Père, o fam, oh! Ebifam, oh! chantez, oh! chantez!

Le chœur: Nzaga, nzagan'oh! Nzaga, nzagan'o, oh! oh!
Venez, venez ici oh! Venez, venez ici, oh! oh!

Le chef: Oh! Ebifam, és'o, nzage, nzage van'oh, ébi, oh!
Oh! Père fam, père [2], viens, viens ici, oh! protecteur, oh!

---

[1] Double signification.

[2] Dans la première invocation.

Le chœur: Nzaga, nzagan'oh! Nzaga, nzagan,o, oh! oh!
Venez, venez ici oh! Venez, venez ici, oh! oh!

Le chef: Oh! fam à kure miśü, nzaga, nzaga van'oh!
Oh! le fam a quitté l'intérieur des bois, venez, venez ici, oh!

Le chœur: Nzaga, nzagan'oh! Nzaga, nzagan'o, oh! oh!
Venez, venez ici oh! Venez, venez ici, oh! oh!

Le chef: Fam a to étotore, a to ayong étotore, oh, yé.
Le fam est demeuré le protecteur, il est le soutien de la nation, oh! oui.

Le chœur: Nzaga, nzagan'oh! oh! nzaga, nzagan'o, oh!
Venez, oh! venez, oh! venez, venez ici, oh!

Le chef: A to khuma né bur n'ébwa mivore, oh! fam, oh!
Il est le chef des hommes pour chasser les soucis, oh! homme, oh!

Le chœur: Nzaga, nzagan'oh! Nzaga, nzagan'o, oh! oh!
Venez, venez ici oh! Venez, venez ici, oh! oh!

Le chef: A to ébi né bye, ve ye esa né bur Ebifam, oh!
Celui-ci est le père de notre race, et celui-là le fondateur des fils de fam, oh!

Le chœur: Nzaga, nzagan'oh! Nzaga, nzagan'o, oh! oh!
Venez, venez ici oh! Venez, venez ici, oh! oh!

Les rites purement totémiques sont donc mêlés de très près avec les rites du culte des ancêtres, et il n'est pas toujours aisé de les distinguer. D'autant qu'après ce chant, commence pour le récipiendiaire, les interrogations sur le mébara ou généalogie de ses ancêtres, mébara qu'il doit connaître et réciter sans aucune hésitation. S'il est chef ou fils de chef, il doit de plus connaître les généalogies des autres chefs alliés à sa race.

Tous ces chants et cérémonies doivent, croyons-nous, provenir d'un fonds commun à toute la race, plus ou moins déformé par le temps, les circonstances, et aussi peut-être, tout au moins pour les points secondaires, par la fantaisie des féticheurs.

Un récit curieux et peu connu du P. Colle[1] nous fait assister à ce qui se passe tout près des Fân, au Bas-Congo, lors de la cérémonie semblable de la première initiation. Il est intéressant de rapprocher les deux ordres de faits.

[1] Le «Congo», 26 Mai 1907, p. 182 et ss.

«Sur tout le territoire du Congo, sous des noms divers, nkimba ou nkisi dans le Bas-Congo, ndembo chez les Batéké, sikita dans l'arrière-pays du Moyen-Congo, lukundu chez les Baluba, bugabo dans l'Urua, il existe des association secrètes qui, dans leurs grandes lignes, semblent organisées de même chez les diverses peuplades. — Nous les retrouvons tout aussi bien en Gabonie, sous le nom de yasi, chez les Mpongwé, très voisin du nkisi, ngil ou ngit chez les Fâñ, plus près du Sikita qui peut-être signifierait mieux «les choses défendues», comme éki en fâñ, orunda en Mpongwé, orote en Banda, gebisi en Ndumu, tous mots ayant une origine commune. — Dans le Bas-Congo, le recrutement des initiés du nkimba se fait une fois par an, parfois tous les deux ans, par le féticheur qui désigne impérativement, parfois à la suite d'incantations, les jeunes gens de 12 à 18 ans destinés à faire partie du nkimba. Seuls, des membres du sexe mâle peuvent être initiés, et les jeunes adeptes désignés doivent se trouver la nuit, un peu avant le lever du soleil, au rendez-vous fixé. Dès leur arrivée, on leur fait avaler un stupéfiant [chez les Fâñ, ce stupéfiant est obtenu au moyen d'une décoction d'emblen]. Pour les réveiller, on leur fait boire une infusion de salsepareille (smilax). Quand ils se réveillent, le féticheur leur déclare qu'ils étaient morts et qu'il les a ressuscités: il leur ordonne de dépouiller leurs vêtements, d'oublier leur langue natale et toute leur vie passée. On leur rase la tête et on enduit tout leur corps d'argile blanche. Ils ceignent ensuite leurs reins d'une sorte de jupe faite d'un cerceau en osier auquel pendent de larges franges de fibres végétales ou de nervures de feuilles de palmier. Ils ne peuvent revêtir cette sorte de crinoline que lorsqu'ils sortent du quartier du nkimba; à l'intérieur de celui-ci, ils doivent être nus, mais badigeonnés de blanc. L'initiation absorbe une période qui varie entre trois mois et deux ans. Pendant tout ce temps, le jeune homme vit retiré dans un endroit secret de la forêt, désormais réputé «fétiche» — c'est-à-dire interdit à tout autre qu'aux initiés — et où des huttes spéciales ont été construites.

«Il porte sur lui une clochette dont le son avertit les indigènes d'avoir à s'écarter. En effet, pendant la période d'initiation, les profanes ne peuvent voir les inkimba — membres du nkimba — ni leur parler. Ceux-ci apprennent une langue nouvelle, perdent jusqu'à leur nom, car le maître leur en impose un nouveau, et semblent réellement sous l'influence de la suggestion du féticheur.

«Le siège de l'association du nkimba se trouve toujours à proximité d'un village, ou d'une forêt: dans le Bas-Congo, les chemins qui y conduisent sont tracés de façon à se couper en angle droit au point de former une grande croix. Le haut de la croix est formé par le quartier général proprement dit de la secte, lequel s'appelle le vwala. (Une des associations fàn porte le nom de bwala.) Au bras gauche est le village, au bras droit se trouve la partie de la forêt réservée aux initiés, laquelle est appelée zinkimba. Au bas de la croix est l'endroit où on célèbre la première initiation . . .

«Le postulant arrive avant le lever du soleil au lieu du rendez-vous, au bas de l'espèce de carrefour en croix. Dès qu'il s'est dépouillé de ses vêtements, le maître-féticheur l'étend par terre, et le frappe trois fois du poing en le roulant trois fois par terre. Se penchant au dessus du récipiendaire, il prononce ensuite dans la langue secrète du nkimba, et en scandant chaque syllabe, le nouveau nom de l'initié.

«Le postulant se relève alors et s'assied. Se tournant ensuite du côté d'où l'adepte s'est levé, le sorcier (non le sorcier, mais le féticheur) prononce une nouvelle suite de paroles inintelligibles (pour l'Européen ou le non-initié!). Après quoi, ses aides enduisent et frottent tout le corps de l'aspirant avec de la terre blanche, si bien que ce corps noir devient bientôt aussi blanc qu'un mur badigeonné. Toute cette cérémonie d'initiation au bas de la croix s'appelle dibandugulu.

«Tous les novices étant badigeonnés, on entoure leurs reins du jupon de fibres ou de feuilles: cela fait, le féticheur leur indique brièvement quelques points essentiels du règlement de vie à suivre au vwala, et il les initie aux mêmes secrets de l'association. Ensuite, il saisit un des élèves par une feuille de sa ceinture de verdure, et tous se tenant par la main, en silence et les yeux baissés, il conduit processionnellement les jeunes gens au village voisin. Pendant le trajet, pour lequel on a attendu les premières clartés du soleil levant, les candidats-initiés, aidés de leurs aînés, rompent de temps à autre le silence pour chanter un hymne à l'esprit:

Eseke eseke zingangu zavuila vana ntima,
Amingwa la kebelenda zo wa ko,
Ano befwa enkimba, bezai zignangu za nkimba.

«Les petits oiseaux ont de l'esprit plein le cœur. Les mingwala (c'est-à-dire ceux qui n'ont pas passé par l'école du nkimba) ne peuvent comprendre est esprit. Mais les Inkimbas reçoivent l'esprit du nkimba.

«Arrivés au village où toutes les femmes sont accourues et se tiennent strictement silencieuses, le féticheur s'adresse solennellement aux assistants et leur dit: «Voyez, ils étaient morts, et ils sont ressuscités: les voilà qui arrivent.»

«Alors le nganga serre successivement son petit doigt autour du petit doigt de chaque novice et élevant ainsi leur bras, il prononce leur nom nouveau. Il prend ensuite du sel mêlé avec du piment, et à l'aide du pouce, il dépose un peu de ce mélange sur leur langue. Alors seulement, c'est-à-dire vers onze heures, ils peuvent prendre de la nourriture, car jusque-là ils étaient à jeun.

«Pendant toute cette cérémonie, la moindre familiarité avec les femmes est défendue: le premier qui aurait le malheur de lever les yeux sur une personne du sexe faible serait immédiatement tué.

«Du village, les Inkimbas se rendent au vwala, où est établie la salle d'initiation du nkimba. C'est un grand chimbeck (case) en paille où trône contre une des parois, et dans un panier, le fétiche des Inkimbas. Y étant arrivés, les novices jettent leur robe de verdure, car le fétiche ne veut pas qu'on se permette d'entrer dans son sanctuaire à moins d'être en état complet de nudité. Là, le nganga leur apprend enfin l'entièreté du règlement qu'ils auront à suivre: pendant tout le temps de leur séjour au vwala, il leur interdit de consommer viande, poisson et manioc sous peine d'être tués; ils ne pourront user d'eau que pour se rincer la bouche, mais ils sont libres de boire du malafu (vin de palme); tous les jours, avant leur repas, ils doivent enduire leur corps de terre blanche: parfois il leur est permis de manger seulement tous les deux jours; il leur est strictement défendu de parler à aucune femme, ni d'en regarder, fût-ce même leur mère, sous peine de mort; ils ne peuvent même pas parler entre eux de femmes sous peine de mort; en passant dans le village ou devant des personnes étrangères, ils doivent parler la langue du nkimba, cela toujours sous peine de mort.

«L'habitant du village apportant la nourriture aux novices doit être un ancien Inkimba, ceint d'une crinoline en verdure. Aucune femme ne peut s'approcher du vwala ou parler à un de ses pensionnaires, sinon le nganga la fait immédiatement étrangler, à moins d'être désintéressé par une forte indemnité.

«Le temps laissé libre par l'étude, les novices le consacrent à la fabrication de menus objets qui sont vendus. La grosse part du prix est remise au féticheur, le reste sert à acheter des étoffes, et de quoi célébrer dignement la fête de clôture.

«Les jeunes gens sont très durement traités au vwala, mais on considère comme une honte de rester un mingwala, un profane n'ayant pas passé par l'école du nkimba.

«La cérémonie de clôture de la session du nkimba se célèbre avec solennité. De grand matin on met le feu au vwala au moyen d'immenses bûchers d'herbes sèches. C'est le signal de la fête. Aussitôt les Inkimbas courent à l'eau, se lavent soigneusement jusqu'à ce que leur peau reprenne sa couleur sombre naturelle. Ils mettent des anneaux brillants à leurs jambes et à leurs bras et s'entourent les reins d'un nouveau pagne. On les conduit ensuite en grande pompe à leur village, les fils de chefs transportés dans des hamacs, les autres montés sur le dos d'anciens Inkimbas. Le village est en fête. Les femmes, assises par terre, se cachent la face dans leur pagne ou derrière une feuille, car elles ont encore peur de rencontrer le regard d'un habitant du vwala.

«Les Inkimbas prétendent venir d'un autre monde et en paraissent persuadés. Ils ne veulent d'abord reconnaître que les indigènes précédemment initiés aux mystères du nkimba. Ils semblent ignorer leur propre mère, feignent de ne pouvoir marcher, de ne pas connaître les usages de la vie, mangent par terre, font des grimaces, mordent. Le public pousse des exclamations de pitié et les excuse. Ne viennent-ils pas d'un autre monde? Enfin, on se reconnaît: on présente le fils à sa mère, le frère à sa sœur, le fiancé à sa promise! La joie devient frénétique, le vin de palme coule en abondance; partout on allume des feux de joie, puis a lieu un festin suivi de danses qui se prolongent plusieurs jours. Après quoi, chacun regagne son logis emmenant son fils, son frère, devenus Inkimbas. Ceux-ci se font porter et restent comme paralysés pendant plusieurs mois, sous prétexte de réparer les forces perdues au vwala!» —

Comme nous retrouvons ces mêmes cérémonies dans la plupart des tribus bantoues, aussi bien aux bords de l'Ogowé que sur les rives du Tanganyika, il nous semble inutile d'insister davantage. Toutes ces initiations, quelqu'elles soient, ont toujours pour but de renouveler l'esprit de la race dans les nouveaux initiés, et de les rattacher à la source commune par un ensemble serré de rites et de prescriptions toujours très-sévères. La peine de mort, en particulier, souvent prononcée et appliquée, est toujours là pour bien rappeler à «l'individu» que sa vie, loin de lui appartenir, est toujours domaine de la collectivité.

§ 4. Les ministres des deux cultes sont différents, sinon en fait, du moins en droit.

Par le fait même que les deux cultes, adressés l'un au mvamayôn et l'autre à l'esayôn différent comme objet, comme rites et comme cérémonies, les ministres seront également différents, sinon en fait, du moins en droit. Souvent, ce sera seulement en droit. En fait, comme la plupart du temps les deux cultes se mêlent intimement, ayant lieu au même endroit, dans le même lieu, et pour un but qui tout en restant double, conservation de la race, conservation des individus, s'adresse cependant à une même entité collective, les ministres seront les mêmes. Suivant qu'ils s'adresseront à l'un ou à l'autre des ancêtres primitifs, réel ou éponyme, ils joueront un double rôle. Ce dualisme de fonctions dans le même personnage se représente dans d'autres rites et n'a rien d'étrange.

Ainsi, le nganga (féticheur-médecin) appelé près d'un malade, entrera dans la case, se revêtira des oripeaux nécessaires, puis, tout d'abord, commencera par les invocations et incantations rituelles: viendront ensuite l'appel aux esprits, puis la consécration des remèdes. Ayant achevé la partie religieuse de l'opération et joué son rôle de ministre du culte, le nganga opérera alors à proprement parler comme médecin, préparera le remède, fera bouillir les herbes salutaires, procédera à l'administration du remède; puis, immédiatement après, cessant son rôle de médecin, il reprendra celui de ministre du culte pour appeler à l'aide du remède naturel les influences des esprits favorables, et écarter au contraire les esprits méchants, désireux de le contrecarrer. Nos missionnaires ne procèdent pas autrement: avant d'être prêtres, et dans le même cas de maladie, bien souvent, ils sont médecins!

De même, le ministre du culte totémique, l'esa de la famille ou de la tribu, s'adressera à l'ancêtre vrai de sa tribu, agissant en vertu de son rôle de père de famille; en vertu du même rôle encore, il invoquera les esprits des ancêtres localisés dans leurs crânes: comme féticheur, il procédera aux sacrifices, aux incantations; changeant alors d'objet, il s'adressera ensuite à l'ancêtre éponyme, appellera ses descendants, déterminera s'ils sont vrais ou faux: il y aura «unité» de personnage, mais «dualité» de culte, et «dualité» d'opérateur. Et cette dualité existera sans que les assistants y prennent attention aucune. Les phénomènes religieux sont si étroitement mêlés que souvent, en fait, il est fort difficile de les distinguer pour tous ceux qui sont non-initiés. Les adeptes, au contraire, savent parfaitement, à n'importe quel moment de la cérémonie, s'ils s'adressent au mvamayôn ou à l'esayôn, et c'est tout ce qui est nécessaire. Les distinctions que nous venons d'établir n'ont en effet pour eux aucun but d'utilité pratique.

Nous aurons donc, suivant qu'il s'agira de l'ancêtre vrai de la tribu ou bien de l'ancêtre éponyme, c'est-à-dire de l'esayôn ou du mvamayôn, un double culte; chaque culte, ses rites particuliers, forcément aussi ses sacrifices particuliers, sanglants ou non sanglants autour desquels converge le culte, et par là même également ses ministres particuliers.

Dans le premier cas, celui de l'esayôn, ce sera au chef de la tribu en tant que chef, c'est-à-dire au point de vue de l'autorité familiale que reviendra ce droit d'exercer. En fait, ce droit sera délégué au féticheur, représentant rituel et subrogé au chef, homme du culte public et gardien des traditions rituelles de la race.

Dans le second cas au contraire, celui du mvamayôn, ce sera au père de la tribu en tant que représentant direct du père du clan que reviendra ce rôle d'invoquer l'ancêtre éponyme; il devra l'exercer lui-même, car il ne pourrait d'aucun droit, comme il est évident, le transmettre au féticheur. Dans le premier cas, en effet, celui de la puissance ou de l'autorité, il s'agit tout d'abord d'un pouvoir que l'on peut déléguer et que, de fait, on délègue souvent, car l'autorité est essentiellement transmissible par son essence même. De plus, il ne faut pas oublier que le chef actuel est, en somme, l'incarnation vivante du chef de la race, mais non pas d'une façon effective comme chez d'autres peuples. Ainsi, par exemple, au Thibet, le Dalaï-Lama sera considéré comme la réincarnation vivante de Boudhha. De même encore dans l'Unyoro. Chez les Fân, le chef a sa personnalité propre qu'il ne perdra même pas après la mort, mais il est animé et inspiré réellement par l'esprit des ancêtres. L'autorité est donc essentiellement transmissible, et l'esprit ou le dieu invoqué ne fera aucune différence entre le chef et celui que le chef aura revêtu transitoirement de son autorité.

Dans le second cas, au contraire, il s'agit non plus de l'autorité, mais du sang; c'est pourquoi, si le chef ne peut alors accomplir lui-même les rites, il ne pourra pas se faire remplacer par le féticheur, car si l'autorité se délègue à un étranger, le sang n'est pas dans le même cas; mais il pourra et devra se faire remplacer par un héritier direct, de même sang que lui-même, son frère ou son fils, et il le fera dans toutes les circonstances exigées par la loi. Dans ce cas, il confiera à son délégué la boîte où sont renfermés, avec les crânes de la famille, les fragments du totem primitif qui peuvent encore subsister; cette possession sera de la plus grande importance pour le délégué, comme preuve de son autorité et aussi de sa délégation.

Tels sont donc les deux autorités en présence, le chef de famille ou de tribu agissant de sa propre autorité familiale ou faisant agir un délégué de son sang; dans l'autre cas au contraire, le féticheur, délégué du chef, mais pouvant parfaitement n'être pas du même sang. En fait, nous avons vu que dans bien des cas le chef est lui-même le féticheur de sa tribu, on tout au moins tient à conserver ce pouvoir dans sa famille.

Principe du sang, et délégation en vertu de ce principe d'autorité, et délégation en vertu du sang, telles sont donc les deux causes qui créent les deux ministres que nous venons d'étudier sommairement.

§ 5. Les demandes au mvamayôn sont différentes des demandes à l'esayôn.

Le culte adressé soit à l'esayôn soit au mvamayôn se rapporte à un double objet, suivant les cas, ou, si l'on préfère, à une double cause. Culte, sacrifices, chants, danses et prières ont pour but «l'expiation» ou bien «la demande».

Le Fân comme tout Noir bantou, ne connaît pas le sacrifice, le chant ou la prière offerts aux êtres supérieurs ou désincarnés sans but «pratique» pour lui-même. Aussi le culte exclue-t-il ce grand principe que nous retrouvons dans nos communions chrétiennes: le respect au Créateur. Pour le noir, «respect» est un mot vide de sens: le Bantou ne regarde pas l'Etre supérieur en lui-même; il ne s'adresse à lui qu'en regard de sa propre personne, et en somme, l'expiation elle-même converge vers la demande, car il s'agit au fond moins «d'expier», d'effaçer une souillure, que surtout d'éviter pour lui-même un châtiment, une punition. Offrons donc ce sacrifice, se dit-il, pour obtenir rémission de cette faute.

Mais pour le point qui nous occupe présentement, les demandes que les adeptes adressent sont d'ordre plus important que la différenciation des ministres. Ces demandes sont faites, soit au cours des grandes cérémonies rituelles qui constituent le culte public, qu'il soit en secret pour les seuls initiés, ou à découvert pour toute la tribu, soit simplement dans le culte familial de la case et du foyer domestique. Là, il s'agira de la prospérité de la famille, des champs, des plantations, des pêches et des chasses. Dans le premier cas, ce sera la vie sociale, dans le second, la vie familiale. Par là même aussi, ces demandes seront beaucoup plus faciles à différencier.

S'adressant à deux entités dont le but et les prérogatives sont tout dissemblables, il demeure évident que les demandes adressées à l'esayôñ ne seront pas les mêmes que celles adressées au mvamayôñ.

L'un en effet se préoccupe beaucoup plus de la race en elle-même que de l'individu: l'autre, au contraire, beaucoup plus de l'individu que de la race elle-même. Tout ce qui intéresse la race, sa puissance, sa vitalité sera demandé à l'esayôñ. C'est à lui que le chef de famille ou de village s'adressera pour que ses femmes soient fécondes, que sa famille s'accroisse. Tous les sacrifices, les «fétiches» faits dans ce but se dirigeront vers le père de la race. Une part de tout sacrifice lui sera offerte; toutes les fois que le père de famille s'adressera aux esprits, il aura grand soin d'invoquer tout d'abord le père de sa race, ou tout au moins d'en rappeler le souvenir. Dans toutes les questions qui regardent l'enfantement, l'esa ne sera pas oublié. Qu'il s'agisse d'obtenir des enfants, de prévenir la femme de tout danger quand elle est enceinte, d'avoir un heureux accouchement, d'écarter tout malheur ou accident qui pourrait arriver aux enfants tant qu'ils sont encore jeunes, cela est affaire de l'esayôñ, se rapporte à lui, soit directement, soit par les esprits de la race, âmes de ses descendants, qui, demeurant à ses côtés, ne font plus avec lui qu'une seule et même entité. Aussi, à lui s'adresseront encore les fiancés pour voir arriver le terme de leurs désirs: à lui, ils demanderont que leur demande soit agréée. Avant de partir de leur village pour aller trouver leur futur beau-père, les jeunes gens tendront une corde en travers de la grande allée, au long de laquelles sont bâties toutes les cases. Afin de ne pas porter malheur à leur dessein, nul ne devra passer dessous, mais faire un détour par un autre chemin. Ils tapisseront ensuite l'extérieur de leur propre case avec de longues lanières fournies par les feuilles desséchées des bananiers voisins. Puis, à l'abri de tout regard indiscret, pendant de longues heures, ils danseront en l'honneur des ancêtres, autour de la boîte contenant leurs crânes. Leurs longues, interminables mélopées, seront toujours adressées dans ce cas à l'esprit de la race, au père de leur famille, au fondateur du clan.

A l'esayôń s'adressera le chef du clan ou de tribu pour tout ce qui regarde la prospérité du village, du clan ou de la tribu. Il s'agira, par exemple, de déterminer l'emplacement d'un nouveau village. Ce sera à lui de voir si le lieu choisi est propice, et il le dira après qu'on lui aura immolé une poule noire, sans aucune tache, et surtout, point important, qui n'ait pas encore pondu d'œufs. De la position du foie, des entrailles, de la façon dont le sang sera tombé à terre, on concluera au choix bon ou mauvais, et ce sera toujours, non pas le féticheur, mais le père de famille qui aura à déterminer ce point.

Les anciens territoires de chasse ou de pêche sont-ils épuisés? Faut-il aller à la recherche d'un pays plus giboyeux, plus poissonneux? — A l'esayôń, seront offerts le dernier animal pris, le dernier poisson pêché, à l'esayôń encore le premier gibier capturé dans les nouveaux territoires, le premier poisson enlevé du fleuve, du ruisseau ou du lac: cette offrande tombe sous la loi du totem, et il est défendu d'y toucher, d'en manger, sinon les plus grands malheurs menaceront la tribu. Tout contrevenant à cet ordre serait impitoyablement sacrifié. Il nous souvient d'avoir vu ainsi empoisonner dans un nouveau village une jeune femme coupable d'avoir mangé un poisson de sa pêche avant que la première offrande eût été faite.

S'il faut quitter le village par suite de la mort d'un grand chef, ou encore parce que les décès d'enfants y sont trop fréquents, tout cela ressort de son pouvoir.

A lui encore, et c'est le cas le plus grave pour la tribu, on s'adressera avant une guerre, afin d'obtenir qu'elle soit heureuse, qu'on fasse beaucoup de prisonniers, et surtout qu'on n'en laisse pas soi-même aux mains de l'ennemi. Enfin, à la mort du guerrier, c'est encore l'esayôń que l'on invoquera pour que les présages soient favorables et que l'esprit du mourant aille rejoindre les âmes des ancêtres.

Tel le demande le chant des pleureuses au lit de la mort:

Chant des pleureuses.

Chœur	Le fils est allé aux champs voir si les arbres ont fini de mûrir[1]. Il est allé.
Répons I	Les arbres ont mûri. Les esprits des ancêtres sont errants. Ils viennent et cherchent (s-e. le mourant). La nuit commence, le prisonnier est libre.
Reprise	Le fils est allé aux champs voir si les arbres ont fini de mûrir. Il est allé.
Répons II	Le prisonnier est libre. Il passe sur la rive opposée, sans regarder derrière lui, il retrouve les siens.
Reprise	Le fils est allé aux champs voir si les arbres ont fini de mûrir. Il est allé.
Répons III	L'ombre a frôlé le foyer de la case . . . Je vois une étincelle qui passe comme une luciole, qui tourne, qui vole autour d'un rotang . . . L'ombre a retrouvé les siens.
Reprise	Le fils est allé aux champs. Les arbres sont mûrs[2].

Au mvamayôṅ, au contraire, on s'adressera de préférence pour tout ce qui regarde «l'individu» ou les «individus», pris d'une façon générale. Ainsi, dans les cas les plus importants d'abord, pour la guerre, on invoquera solennellement le mvamayôṅ de la tribu afin qu'il garde de tout danger, non pas la tribu elle-même, collectivité organisée, ou ensemble d'hommes, de femmes, d'enfants, mais les guerriers combattants, pour qu'il donne à chacun d'eux la force, le courage, l'agilité. Le chef de la famille invoquera le totem de sa famille surtout pour conserver les individus mâles qui en constituent l'essence. Chaque individu enfin s'adressera à son totem pour qu'il lui donne les qualités nécessaires pour bien s'acquitter de son rôle, de ses fonctions. En un mot, on s'adresse à l'esayôṅ pour ce qui regarde la «race», soit dans la vie présente, soit dans la vie de l'au delà, où on ira un jour le retrouver, et constituer désormais, à l'exemple de ce qui se passait sur cette terre, une autre collectivité, dégagée cette fois et pour toujours des liens de la matière.

Au contraire, le mvamayôṅ n'a rien à voir en cette vie future dans laquelle il n'intervient en aucune façon: il s'intéresse seulement aux «individus», à leur conservation, à leur prospérité. On ne l'appellera donc que pour les faits qui se rapportent à cet ordre d'idées. Une fois mort, le guerrier n'a plus rien à voir personnellement avec son mvame individuel, pas plus qu'avec le mvame de sa tribu ou de son clan: tous n'étaient destinés qu'à lui assurer la protection nécessaire durant sa vie terrestre. Son esprit désincarné n'éprouve plus aucun besoin de cette protection. Nous avons d'ailleurs vu que le mvame cesse, quand l'être lui-même qui en est dépositaire vient à mourir. Il n'y a plus de mvame dans l'autre vie. Tout mvame, quelqu'il soit, nation, clan, famille ou individu, n'existe, et n'agit qu'en fonction de la collectivité ou de l'individu pour lequel il a été consacré. Il est de la vie présente.

[1] C'est-à-dire voir si la vie du père est mûre.

[2] Les pleureuses chantent cet appel sur un ton strident, le plus élevé possible. La première femme du mort n'y prend pas part et se couche sur le cadavre.

A la mort, au contraire, l'esa de tribu, de clan, ou de famille, conserve tout son pouvoir.

Le mvame se transmet et meurt, définitivement, dans la vie présente et pour la vie future. L'esa se transmet, et ne meurt qu'à la vie présente: il demeure dans la vie future.

§ 6. Les défenses du mvamayôṅ et de l'esayôṅ sont d'ordre différent.

Les défenses rituelles du mvame, et c'est un des points les plus importants, ne sont enfin pas les mêmes que celles qui concernent l'esa. Dans un cas, nous aurons les défenses totémiques, qui sont immuables, et ne changent pas, car nul n'a le pouvoir d'y toucher, et elles se perpétuent depuis l'origine de la race. Dans l'autre cas au contraire, nous aurons les défenses tabuales, prises dans l'intérêt de la race, soit par les chefs anciens, soit par le chef actuel. Dans ce dernier cas, elles sont révocables, soit à la volonté du chef, soit, nécessairement, lorsqu'il vient à mourir.

Nous aurons à revenir sur ce dernier point; disons dès maintenant que totem et tabou, défenses totémiques et défenses tabuales diffèrent entre elles en ce point essentiel que les premières ressortent du mvamayôṅ ou ancêtre éponyme de la race, les autres de l'esayôṅ, ou ancêtre primitif, et également de ses descendants.

C'est un point que peut-être on n'a pas assez distingué: presque toujours on prend défenses tabuales et défenses totémiques les unes pour les autres: c'est pourquoi nous aurons à les examiner plus longuement en un paragraphe spécial. Ce qui probablement a amené le plus de confusion est que les défenses totémiques peuvent souvent être les mêmes que les défenses tabuales: chaque défense sera par là même renforcée par un double lien: dans l'esprit du noir, il n'y aura pas confusion.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Le fait se passe exactement le même dans nos communions chrétiennes. Ainsi, dans l'Eglise catholique, il est interdit aux fidèles de manger de la viande le vendredi: cette défense pourra être renouvelée et sanctionnée, soit pour une raison personnelle, ou encore en vertu d'une défense particulière, par exemple une règle d'ordre religieux. La défense, restant identique et unique, sera cependant sanctionnée par un double lien d'origine différente. De même, en vertu du totem de la tribu à laquelle il appartient, tel Yebikon, par exemple, ne pourra jamais manger telle espèce de bananes: en vertu du totem de sa famille, il ne pourra pas manger les autres espèces de bananes si elles sont seulement bouillies ou cuites à l'étuvée: elles devront toujours être rôties. En vertu de son totem particulier, il ne pourra manger ces bananes rôties que dans certaines circonstances particulières, ou encore après avoir prononcé certaines paroles.

De même, tel Noir aura défense totémique de manger de l'antilope, défense tabuale d'en manger, défense de par la société secrète dont il est membre d'en manger. Il enfreint cette triple prescription: il a par là même contracté un triple nsèm ou souillure effective dont il devra se laver par une triple expiation envers qui de droit. Remarquons le bien, sa faute sera triple, mais non pas triplée: la gravité résultera pour chaque faute, non pas de «l'acte», mais de «l'objet» lésé, soit dans le cas, totem de clan, de famille, de société secrète. Une de ces prescriptions levée n'entraînera pas évidemment la permission pour les autres.

Dans la vie courante, ces prescriptions se mêlent par la force même des choses. En droit, elles sont parfaitement distinctes, et le demeurent, de fait, quand il s'agit d'effacer la souillure contractée. Les Noirs s'en plaignent, mais n'osent pas pour cela en soulever le joug; tout s'y oppose. Comme me le disait un jour un chef que j'interrogeais sur ces matières: «Il y a beaucoup de défenses, on fait beaucoup de misèm [1] (souillure): mais comment y échapper!»

Quand il s'agit d'expiations, au fond, le féticheur y trouve toujours son compte, et il est toujours là!

§ 7. Résumé de ce chapitre.

En somme, malgré cette complexité apparente, il est facile de résumer assez rapidement tout ce que nous venons de dire de l'esayôṅ et du mvamayôṅ.

Nous avons affaire à deux entités complètement distinctes. Elles diffèrent tout d'abord par l'objet de leur culte, puisque les deux ont une existence entièrement séparée, parfaitement distincte l'une de l'autre, tout en demeurant unie par des liens très-étroits.

L'objet du culte, étant différent, entraîne, par là-même, diversité de cérémonies. Chaque rite a sa fonction propitiatoire distincte, étant toujours ordonné pour un effet à obtenir, effet déterminé d'avance. Tel sacrifice doit procurer tel ou tel effet et non pas tel autre.

Les ministres seront également différents par suite de cette dualité de culte et de ces cérémonies de but tout autre. De même, les demandes et les défenses, suite nécessaire du culte, seront totalement dissemblables.

D'une façon générale, on peut affirmer le point suivant, qui ressort de tout ce que nous venons de dire et qui constitue la différence capitale entre le mvamayôṅ et l'esayôṅ.

L'esayôṅ s'intéresse à tout ce qui regarde la race, et embrasse à la fois les vivants et les morts pour les relier en une seule et même famille.

L'esayôṅ agit surtout en vue de la vie future.

Le mvamayôṅ s'intéresse à tout ce qui regarde les individus: il ne se préoccupe que de leur conservation actuelle, de leur prospérité, de les mettre à l'abri de tout danger, et cela qu'il soit mvame de tribu, de clan, de village ou d'individu.

Le mvame agit en vue unique de la vie présente.

[1] Les livres religieux ont traduit le mot «péché» par nsèm. — Ce n'est pas très-exact. Nsèm est l'infraction à une défense, ce n'est pas toujours une faute.

CHAPITRE XII.

LES MINISTRES DU MVAMAYÔŃ.

Les droits du totem lui donnent des ministres, des rites et des lois.

Le chef de famille est le ministre du mvamayôń à l'exclusion de tout autre. Catégories distinctes ou individualités qui pourraient revendiquer ce rôle. On doit écarter 1° l'individu, 2° le conseil des guerriers, 3° le chef de tribu, 4° le féticheur, 5° le sorcier.

§ 1. Le ministre réel du mvamayôń est le chef familial.

§ 2. Le féticheur ne peut être ministre du mvamayôń dans le culte public tout au moins d'une façon générale.

Il peut l'être dans certaines circonstances exceptionnelles.

§ 3. Circonstances exceptionnelles où le féticheur exerce ce rôle.

§ 4. Seul, l'héritier de sang peut être «délégué».

§ 5. Le féticheur peut être délégué du mvamayôń: le sorcier ne le peut pas en tant que sorcier. Distinction nécessaire entre ces deux personnages.

§ 6. Le féticheur et le sorcier sont ministres du totem dans les sociétés secrètes qu'ils dirigent.

Le mvamayôń ou totem, de par le fait même de son existence, a des «droits».

Ces droits peuvent se résumer dans les trois points suivants: le totem a droit à des ministres, à des rites ou à un culte, à des lois. Ces dernières comprendront devoirs, défenses, pénalités. Chacun de ces trois points donnera lieu à un chapitre distinct.

La première question qui se pose est celle des ministres du totem.

Quel est le ministre du mvamayôń, c'est-à-dire quel est l'homme qui a tout d'abord le droit de le choisir, puis de l'attribuer soit à un individu isolé, soit à une collectivité organisée, puis d'en déterminer le culte et les observances, d'en faire respecter les rites, de porter les pénalités ou tout au moins de les appliquer.

En vertu de la constitution même de la tribu et de la formation de la famille telle que nous l'avons développée précédemment, nous avons vu que ce rôle revient de droit au père de famille, à l'exclusion de tout autre individu, quelqu'il soit, mais au père de famille pris d'abord d'une façon généralisée, c'est-à-dire au père du clan et mieux encore de la tribu.

Ce rôle revient de droit au père de famille. Pour examiner d'où lui vient ce droit, et prouver en même temps qu'il ne revient et ne peut revenir qu'à lui, examinons quelles sont les catégories distinctes auxquelles, dans la tribu, pourrait être attribué ce rôle.

L'individu, en tant qu'individualité distincte et isolée, le père de famille, le chef de clan ou de tribu, le conseil des guerriers ayant subi les épreuves de l'initiation et admis à siéger pour régler les intérêts vitaux du village, le féticheur chargé du culte public et reconnu, le sorcier avec lequel on le confond si souvent, telles sont les seules catégories distinctes auxquelles pourrait être attribué ce rôle.

Nous devons immédiatement écarter «l'individu». Il n'a en effet aucun droit sur le mvamayôñ qui appartient à toute la tribu, et existe avant lui: de même pour le totem de clan et de famille. Tout au plus l'individu pourrait-il se choisir son propre totem, et ce choix ne pourrait encore se réduire en somme qu'à une simple «élection». Il lui faudrait encore la consécration officielle et religieuse. En outre, comme nous l'avons déjà vu, le totem, même individuel, de par le fait même de son existence propre, et antérieure à l'individu, ne peut être soumis à l'élection de son «protégé». C'est, au contraire, à lui «protecteur», de choisir, et à la suite de son choix, déterminé par les offrandes du futur «protégé», de se manifester à lui, ou à l'agent du culte, quand, de la manière, et dans les circonstances qu'il préfère lui-même.

Le conseil des guerriers n'est, en somme, qu'un conseil délibératif. Son autorité est toute déléguée; elle ressort complètement du chef de clan ou de tribu. Le conseil des guerriers a, en définitive, une autorité semblable aux fils majeurs dans une famille: le père les consulte, ils discutent ensemble, puis le père se range à leur avis, s'il le veut, le juge bon, ou bien prend une décision diamétralement opposée à leur avis, et à laquelle cependant ils seront forcés de se soumettre.

Le père de famille, le chef de clan, le chef de tribu, représentent, pour le cas qui nous occupe une seule et même autorité. Nous l'avons vu, en effet, le chef de tribu n'a de pouvoir qu'en tant que chef de la famille primitive, première cellule sociale, noyau du clan ou de la tribu, successivement développé, et formant actuellement la tribu entière. Dans la tribu, les chefs de clans et de famille, dans le clan les chefs de famille ont exactement le même rôle et le même pouvoir délégué que les fils dans la famille sous l'autorité du père.

Restent donc trois autorités possibles: le père de famille ou chef de tribu, le féticheur, le sorcier.

Ecartons pour un moment le sorcier, nous aurons à y revenir plus loin, en notant toutefois déjà que féticheur et sorcier sont deux êtres complètement distincts au point de vue des fonctions, des prérogatives et surtout du rang social dans la tribu. Voyageurs, explorateurs, écrivains, missionnaires même emploient couramment ces deux mots l'un pour l'autre. Or, rien n'est plus faux. Pourquoi et comment, c'est ce que nous dirons tout à l'heure brièvement, et en tant que cette distinction se rapporte au mvamayôn.

Seuls, donc, le père de famille, ou plutôt le père de la tribu, et le féticheur restent en présence. Des deux, quel sera le ministre du mvamayôn?

D'une façon générale, seul, le «père de la tribu» peut être ministre du mvamayôn, déterminer l'objet précis du totem.

Ce rôle pourra-t-il également être dévolu au «féticheur»? Dans certaines circonstances, par exception, le féticheur pourra parfois exercer cette fonction. De façon permanente, et en quelque sorte officielle, en vertu de son. De rang et de ses attributions parfaitement localisées et déterminées, il lui est impossible d'assumer ce rôle.

§ 1. Le ministre réel du mvamayôṅ est le chef familial.

D'après tout ce que nous avons dit précédemment, il est facile de concevoir que c'est aux dépositaires de l'autorité du totem, et aux seuls dépositaires de cette autorité, qu'il appartiendra toujours de déterminer où, quand, comment, et dans quelles circonstances ou dispositions préalables doit être trouvé le totem. A eux de dire les marques qu'il doit présenter, à eux de le rejeter si les conditions nécessaires ne sont pas réalisées, à eux enfin d'établir et surtout de garder le culte et la forme des traditions ancestrales.

Or, ce rôle ne peut appartenir qu'au seul dépositaire de l'autorité totémique, c'est-à-dire au chef, ou, si l'on préfère, à l'esayôṅ actuel, représentant vivant et dépositaire de l'esprit de l'ancêtre fondateur de la tribu ou du clan.

Ce rôle appartient donc au chef familial. Nous disons à dessein chef «familial» afin d'écarter tout d'abord les autres chefs de différentes sortes qui pourraient se rencontrer dans la tribu. Tel est, par exemple, le chef de guerre, que ses hauts faits ont distingué et qui ménera les hommes au combat. Le chef de guerre ne sera pas nécessairement le chef de la tribu. Il pourra l'être: en fait, souvent ce sera un chef secondaire, un fils du chef principal. Son titre ne lui conférera aucun rang, ne lui donnera aucune prérogative par rapport au mvamayôṅ.

§ 2. Le féticheur ne peut être le ministre officiel du mvamayôṅ.

De même que le chef de guerre, le féticheur, chef du culte, ne peut être le ministre officiel du mvamayôṅ. Ce rôle sort en effet complètement de ses attributions. Le féticheur est l'homme du culte public, des mânes et des esprits, l'homme chargé de démêler les influences bonnes ou mauvaises des agents extérieurs, mais ce n'est jamais l'homme du culte familial. Toutes ses prérogatives s'y opposent. Seul, le chef de famille peut remplir ce rôle.

§ 3. Circonstances exceptionnelles où le féticheur est ministre du mvamayôñ.

Parfois cependant, dans les tribus très importantes, dans celles surtout qui sont restées groupées en masse compacte par suite de circonstances géographiques spéciales (île, presqu'île, montagne, situation isolée), ou encore par suite de l'autorité d'un chef plus énergique, et qui par là même a su s'assujettir les tribus voisines, Ce rôle de ministres du mvamayôñ est dévolu transitoirement aux féticheurs.

Quelquefois encore, ils l'ont pris d'eux-mêmes et le gardent en raison de leur valeur ou habileté personnelle.

Dans les deux cas, c'est toujours par une sorte d'usurpation, ou de confusion de pouvoir, rarement par substitution. Le féticheur agit alors, non pas en son nom propre, en vertu de son rôle et de sa propre autorité, mais comme pouvoir délégué. Il agit au nom, au lieu et place du chef de famille, c'est-à-dire du chef de tribu, puisque le chef de tribu est nécessairement le descendant et représentant direct de la famille souche. Si celle-ci est éteinte en transmission directe, il l'est, tout au moins, de la famille secondaire. Nous avons étudié plus haut ce point en traitant de la constitution et de l'organisation de la tribu.

Dans les tribus très importantes, où le chef se trouve absorbé par les soins de la politique générale, ce rôle peut être dévolu par substitution au féticheur, ministre officiel du culte. Mais c'est plutôt là une sorte d'accaparement, de transmission par héritage. Le chef suprême, en effet, est pris par les nombreuses affaires temporelles qui occupent son temps. Ce cas est très rare dans la tribu fàñ, très républicaine ou même très socialiste et égalitaire sous une apparence de constitution hiérarchique développée. Au point de vue «autorité», le chef y joue un rôle fort effacé, sauf dans certaines tribus où il a su conserver son rang par son prestige ou valeur personnelle; son influence est fort diminuée, en présence de guerriers dont chacun se prétend son égal en force et en courage, et ne lui rend que la déférence dûe au chef de la famille. C'est là le fondement unique de son pouvoir, et les guerriers ont soin parfois de le lui rappeler.

Toutefois, bien que cette influence soit diminuée par le fait même des circonstances, elle n'en reste pas moins incontestée. Il nous souvient d'avoir vu ainsi dans une grande palabre des Amvom un fait typique. Un individu refusait de se rendre aux ordres du chef. Il s'agissait d'une guerre, acceptée par l'ensemble de la réunion: le chef se leva, et ayant pris son fusil, tira à bout portant sur le guerrier qui bravait son autorité. L'homme tomba, la tête en bouillie, et nul ne réclama. A la côte, où la famille et la tribu sont très affaiblies aujourd'hui au point de vue de l'autorité du chef, de tels actes seraient impossibles, et d'ailleurs seraient aussitôt réprimés énergiquement par les autorités compétentes.

Mais si, à la côte et dans un rayon déjà assez étendu [1], l'autorité du chef de tribu a subi une forte diminution, ce pouvoir au contraire augmente, à mesure que l'on se rapproche de l'intérieur et de l'hinterland du Kamerun. Là, encore, le pouvoir du féticheur semble plus fortement constitué, surtout en raison de la puissance qu'il a su acquérir dans les sociétés secrètes. Ainsi, nous avons vu précédemment le pouvoir absolu, sans contrôle et sans conteste, qu'il exerce chez les Baluba tout le temps que les Inkimba sont dans le vwala. Ce pouvoir se continue évidemment, après les épreuves, sur tous les initiés, mais alors d'une façon plus mitigée, plus restreinte, et surtout plus occulte. La situation est la même chez les Fân et les autres tribus bantoues.

Dans un certain nombre de cas déterminés, le chef politique du clan laisse donc au féticheur le soin d'exercer le culte religieux, même à l'égard du totem. Toutefois ce rôle n'est qu'un rôle dévolu, et cela est si vrai que lorsqu'il s'agit d'interroger le totem, dans les circonstances graves, le féticheur disparaît, et le chef reprend son droit: à lui alors d'accomplir les actes rituels, à lui de faire les sacrifices. Même, et l'on voit combien notre thèse se trouve confirmée, il pourra arriver que pour une raison ou une autre, le chef ne puisse remplir son rôle, en cas de très-grave maladie par exemple. Un sacrifice sera alors offert au totem qui est intéressé directement à la question. Dans cette occurrence, sera-ce le féticheur qui sera mis en cause? Nullement. Le féticheur sacrifiera d'abord aux génies et aux mânes; puis il interrogera les esprits pour savoir les influences mauvaises qui ont déterminé la maladie et connaître l'homme qui, suivant l'expression consacrée, aura fait «fétiche» contre le malade. L'héritier de sang interviendra à son tour pour invoquer les esprits protecteurs de la famille en faveur de ce même malade, pour invoquer son totem, et dans ce cas, les invocations et le sacrifice auront un double objet: invoquer d'abord les ancêtres directs, représentés par leurs crânes conservés dans la boîte du biéri, et c'est le culte de l'esayôñ, puis, en second lieu, le totem représenté lui aussi par un fragment réel ou symbolique, et c'est le culte du mvamayôñ.

[1] Jusqu'à ces dernières années, l'autorité française ne s'exerçait, au Gabonais, que sur les rives de l'Ogowé, et ne s'étendait guère en profondeur, à plus d'une vingtaine de kilomètres, et encore, de chacune de ses rives. Aujourd'hui, on commence l'occupation de la partie nord, du bassin du Woleu et du Ntem.

§ 4. Seul, l'héritier de sang peut être délégué comme ministre de l'ancêtre réel et éponyme.

Seul donc, l'héritier de sang peut exercer ce double culte envers l'ancêtre réel et l'ancêtre éponyme. Ce droit lui est acquis par suite de sa filiation avec l'ancêtre, droit qui, par là-même, exclut le féticheur.

Cet héritier est tout d'abord le frère puîné du malade. A son défaut, les autres frères, puis son fils aîné, et enfin les autres fils, d'après la loi du matriarcat, qui régit la nation fâñ. On conçoit facilement combien un tel état de choses entraîne de difficultés. Pour peu que le frère ou le fils désire prendre la place du défunt, hériter de son pouvoir, de ses richesses et surtout de ses femmes, le totem, avec la plus grande facilité, répondra qu'il est temps pour le malade de rejoindre ses pères. Cette constatation une fois faite et rendue bien publique, qui donc alors pourrait rendre l'héritier responsable de la mort! Elle devient toute naturelle! Mais, d'un autre côté, pour peu que le chef vivant soupçonne de tels desseins chez ses héritiers, il s'empressera, soit de les faire disparaître par le poison, soit, et c'est ce qu'il préfère dans la plupart des cas, les envoyer en avant avec quelques guerriers, de préférence des jeunes gens, fonder un nouveau clan. Si le premier cas nuit à la vitalité de la race, le second lui est éminemment favorable. En effet, la horde dissidente ne se compose presque toujours que de guerriers non mariés: il leur faudra bien trouver femmes. Ils le feront aux dépens des tribus voisines, mais rarement, par une sorte de solidarité farouche, aux dépens des tribus fàñ de même race qu'eux. Les tribus voisines sont attaquées, les hommes mangés sans autre forme de procès, et les femmes captives deviennent les femmes des vainqueurs.

Ainsi vient sans cesse à la grande tribu un apport de sang nouveau, qui explique à la fois et la vitalité profonde de la race, lançant sans cesse en avant de nouveaux envahisseurs, et aussi les traces de croisements successifs. Il est aisé de les reconnaître, surtout dans les villages arrivés près de la côte et des Blancs, villages fondés par les premiers envahisseurs. A la côte d'ailleurs, les anciennes populations ont aujourd'hui presque complètement disparu devant le flot envahisseur. De certaines tribus, on ne retrouve plus que quelques femmes, ayant à peu près oublié leur langue primitive. Tels les Banoko, Balengi etc.

§ 5. Le féticheur peut être délégué du mvamayôñ: le sorcier ne le peut pas en tant que sorcier. Distinction nécessaire entre ces deux personnages.

Le féticheur, dans certaines circonstances données, par exemple par usurpation, délégation ou dévolution, peut donc exercer ce rôle de ministre du mvamayôñ. En tant que sorcier, le sorcier ne le peut jamais.

Nous avons en conséquence ici deux personnages distincts: le féticheur et le sorcier.

Le féticheur revêt plusieurs formes: il sera devin, médecin, prêtre: ce seront diverses modalités d'un même sacerdoce, et toutes ces modalités seront légales. En un mot, le féticheur est l'homme du culte reconnu.

Le sorcier revêtira également plusieurs formes, les mêmes d'ailleurs que le féticheur: il sera devin, médecin, prêtre etc., mais ces diverses modalités ne seront ni légales, ni admises: elles seront toujours exercées de façon secrète, et le sorcier sera l'homme du culte secret et non-reconnu, du culte extra-légal.

De même que nous trouvons deux personnages distincts, et presque toujours opposés l'un à l'autre, de même nous les voyons présider à deux formes très distinctes de sociétés. Malheureusement, de même que l'on a confondu presque toujours «féticheurs et sorciers», de même on a confondu les sociétés secrètes proprement dites placées sous la direction des féticheurs, et les sociétés secrètes également constituées dans la tribu, très-différentes des premières, luttant souvent contre elles, et placées sous l'autorité des sorciers, créées par eux, et n'agissant que par eux. Les premières seront fondées en vue du bien de la tribu, tout au moins à leur origine, et encore actuellement dans leurs principales dispositions. Les autres, au contraire, seront établies pour l'avantage particulier des membres et contre la tribu.

D'une part, donc, on voit combien ces notions et ces diverses formes de réunions peuvent amener, et amènent de fait, de profondes et regrettables confusions si l'on ne les distingue avec grand soin; d'autre part, combien elles peuvent causer d'erreurs sur le véritable esprit d'une tribu. Ainsi, pour n'en citer qu'un fait, maintes fois au cours de nos voyages, nous avons eu affaire à la secte des Akhûñ, ou Mangeurs de chair humaine: nous avons dû nous défendre, nous et nos hommes, contre leurs attaques. Or, elles ont toujours eu lieu dans les petits villages. Terrorisés et eux-mêmes victimes, les habitants n'osaient rien dire et demeuraient complices forcés. Cependant, nous avions là uniquement affaire à une société secrète dirigée par les sorciers: en conclure à l'anthropophagie habituelle des sociétés secrètes dirigées par les féticheurs et attribuer à toutes ce qui n'est le fait que de quelques-unes, inspirées par les sorciers, serait absolument faux.

De même, et c'est là surtout ce qui nous occupe ici, les totems de sociétés secrètes dirigées par les féticheurs, et les totems de sociétés secrètes dirigées par les sorciers sont complètement différents. Nous verrons même plus loin combien ce terme de totem est impropre quand il s'agit des sorciers. Tandis que les premiers sont institués pour le bien seul de l'individu qui les acquiert, sans se préoccuper de leur effet sur les autres, les seconds, au contraire, seront choisis en vue du possesseur par rapport au mal qu'il peut avec eux faire aux autres. D'où une différence profonde dans leur choix: les premiers pourront, comme ceux du clan ou de la tribu, appartenir en droit à toute espèce d'être vivant: en fait, ce seront des animaux, des oiseaux, des insectes, des arbres, mais seulement des êtres utiles, car il s'agit de bénéficier de leurs bonnes propriétés. Rien de semblable pour les seconds: il s'agit de faire du mal aux autres: c'est le but unique, la raison d'être: aussi on choisira des êtres malfaisants: le tigre, le serpent, le sanglier seront en première ligne.

Pour démêler cette question difficile, nous avons donc à examiner d'abord les féticheurs et les sorciers, comment les reconnaître et les différencier. Une deuxième question en découle naturellement: celle des sociétés secrètes fondées par les uns et par les autres. Enfin la question des totems suit d'elle-même celle des sociétés secrètes.

Dans certaines circonstances données, avons-nous dit, le féticheur peut exercer le rôle de ministre du mvamayôn. Partout, et toujours, ce rôle sera interdit au sorcier.

Nous distinguons donc nettement, on le voit, entre ces deux termes: féticheur et sorcier: loin d'être deux synonymes, ce sont deux antithèses. Or, d'une façon générale, les Européens s'y trompent constamment. Cette erreur est possible et très compréhensible chez les divers voyageurs ou explorateurs qui passent, sans connaître la langue des peuples qu'ils traversent, ou ne la connaissent que très imparfaitement. Ils ne peuvent en effet expliquer les cérémonies dont ils sont témoins, sinon avec l'aide de leurs interprètes. Ceux-ci sont souvent ignorants, et toujours désireux d'en finir au plus vite avec ces conversations qui les fatiguent et les rebutent. Si c'était ici le lieu, combien nous pourrions dire de jolies choses sur ces explications ultra-fantaisistes, pourtant imprimées aujourd'hui![1] Mais les Blancs, même les plus sérieux, confondent également ces deux termes. Ainsi, dans une Etude d'ailleurs très recommandable sur l'Uganda, Sir H. JOHNSTON commence tout d'abord par bien distinguer entre mvamayôñ et esayôñ, ancêtre vrai et ancêtre éponyme. C'est un de ceux qui ont le mieux étudié cette question. «Each tribe, dit-il, or clan, has its own ancestral spirit [l'esayôñ] who is sometimes confused with the totem [le mvamayôñ].» Mais, ensuite, il semble bien mêler quelque peu ces deux notions, pourtant si différentes, de «sorcier», et de «féticheur».

[1] Signalons à ce propos un article fort judicieux publié par le Commt. Lemaire dans Le Congo (13 Mai 1906, p. 146) sous le titre «Baptêmes géographiques». Il y déplore les noms absolument fantaisistes dont nos cartes regorgent. Ce qui est vrai de la Géographie l'est encore bien plus de la Religion, plus difficile à atteindre.

«Each tribe or clan has its own muchwezi. This word is translated by the missionaries as «High priest». Muchwezi, however, really seems to mean two things, or the same thing with two meanings. It indicated originally both the ghost of an ancestor or chief, and the individuals of the superior, light-coloured Gala race of almost Caucasian stock, which entered the lands at different periods in remote and relatively recent times, and which in the modified and more negroid form of the Bahima constitutes the aristocracy to-day of all the lands between the Victoria Nile, on the North, and the Tanganika on the south. The muchwezi or priest, who conduits this worship of ancestral spirits (each tribe or clan has its own ancestral spirit, who is sometimes confused with the totem) [nous nous sommes efforcés d'en bien faire ressortir la différence] is equivalent to the sorcerer or medicine man, or witch doctor so common everywhere in Negro Africa. But besides the accredited priest of the clan, many individuals may set up to be doctors in white or black magic.»

Ces mots «féticheur» ou «sorcier» sont donc impropres et fautifs quand on les applique indistinctement à toutes sortes de personnages, et pour nous, nous ne pouvons admettre, comme Sir H. JOHNSTON, nous allons le démontrer plus loin, que le muchwezi ou prêtre «is equivalent to the sorcerer or medicine man, or witch doctor».

Si les Blancs s'y trompent, les Noirs ne s'y trompent pas. Ils leur donnent des noms différents, et savent fort bien que le sorcier n'est point le féticheur, ou que, s'il l'est, c'est par suite de circonstances exceptionnelles que nous mentionnerons plus loin. Arguer de ces circonstances pour les confondre et en faire un même personnage, ce n'est point œuvre de critique. De ce qu'un juge, par exemple, peut devenir, parfois, un criminel, dira-t-on que les deux rôles se confondent habituellement?

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Entre féticheur et sorcier, la différence et la relation sont les mêmes.

La grande majorité des erreurs commises sur ce sujet et bien d'autres, provient souvent de connaître insuffisamment les langues africaines. Surtout, elles sont le résultat de n'avoir pas vécu assez intimement au milieu de ces peuples[1]. Ainsi, après avoir donné le sentiment de Sir H. Johnston, ne pouvons-nous davantage nous rallier à celui de l'abbé Bros[2]. «Il serait extrêmement difficile de distinguer le prêtre sous le sorcier[3]; la plupart du temps, il y est caché, comme la religion est enveloppée de magie: c'est le même individu qui accomplit les obligations du sacerdoce et de la sorcellerie. Ce n'est guère que dans certains aspects des fonctions du sorcier que l'on retrouve le prêtre.» Nous comprenons parfaitement cette difficulté de Mr. l'abbé Bros à démêler entre sorcier et féticheur d'après les documents mis à sa disposition. Nous espérons, pour plus tard, lui avoir facilité la tâche.

M. Marillier ferait plutôt de la dignité sacerdotale, une spécialisation de l'office du sorcier: «Lorsque la société a acquis des organes assez nombreux et assez perfectionnés pour que le sorcier soit confiné dans son ministère, à ce moment cette charge devient sacerdotale. Il n'y aurait donc pas de distinction radicale entre les deux ministères... Le prêtre est pour nous celui qui dirige les cérémonies religieuses et inspire les croyances, le sorcier exerce la magie. Ce sont là deux ordres d'idées bien différents auxquels correspondent des modes d'action dissemblables. Bien qu'en réalité, chez le sauvage, le sorcier et le prêtre n'aient pas d'existence

[1] Nombre d'Européens, même parmi ceux qui écrivent plus tard leurs impressions, n'ont que très-peu de rapports avec les indigènes. Dans tous les fonctionnaires du Congo, nous ne croyons pas qu'il y en ait un seul parlant correctement et couramment la langue de ses administrés. Ils en savent parfois quelques mots, parlant «petit-nègre». Ce qu'ils écrivent est le résultat de ce qu'ils ont vu, traduit par leurs boys ou leurs femmes. Or, en particulier pour la religion, boys et femmes ne sont pas «initiés»!

[2] Bros, Religion des peuples non-civilisés, p. 170 et ss.

[3] Prêtre désigne ici l'homme du culte religieux, celui que nous avons appelé «le féticheur», et «sorcier» le médecin, le devin, le voyant etc.

séparée, la confusion naturelle chez eux de ces concepts ne saurait nous empêcher de découvrir les linéaments de deux organisations différentes et de deux idées distinctes. En fait, le sacerdoce se greffe sur la sorcellerie lorsqu'elle est devenue une organisation permanente, un office social . . . Ces deux fonctions ne sont distinctes que pour notre esprit.»

A s'en tenir à ces lignes, on voit combien il serait difficile de distinguer réellement entre prêtre, féticheur, médecin, sorcier, devin etc.! En réalité, il n'est pas juste de dire que «ces fonctions ne sont distinctes que pour notre esprit.» Loin de là! certaines tribus les ont, au contraire, conservées parfaitement distinctes. Ainsi, chez les Barundi, les devins constituent une caste particulière. Ils ne sont pas au rang des prêtres, et le pouvoir est héréditaire dans la famille. Lorsqu'un devin n'a pas d'enfants, il se choisit un successeur dans une autre famille, et l'initie à son art pendant de longues années avant d'en faire son successeur. Les devins ont pour fonctions principales de prédire l'issue d'une guerre entreprise, de trouver les voleurs, et surtout de déterminer les «sorciers». On voit par là combien sorciers et féticheurs sont différents! Chez les Fâñ, nous trouvons de même des féticheurs spéciaux pour prédire l'issue de la guerre, et surtout ceux qui seront tués ou blessés; ils opèrent au moyen d'une sorte de glu qui s'attache fortement: avant le combat, ils passent devant les hommes rangés en longue ligne, s'arrêtent devant quelques guerriers qu'ils considèrent plus attentivement, murmurent quelques invocations, puis lancent la glu. Si la boule retombe à terre, sans s'attacher, l'homme mourra. Maintes fois, nous avons vu confirmation de ce fait. Il peut d'ailleurs s'expliquer tout naturellement. Sûr de sa mort, le guerrier s'expose aux coups avec indifférence.

De même le fétiche Asiléfira doit déceler les voleurs, et le Nkal, les sorciers.

Le devin des Barundi donne également des fétichés pour préserver des maléfices des sorciers: ils consistent en une poudre spéciale et une amulette. Celui qui les a achetées porte alors le remède près de la maison, sur le chemin par où le sort est venu; il met trois piquets en terre, place un vase de terre dessus, fait bouillir le contre-sort dans l'eau, et jette le tout à terre; il laisse le pot en place. Les passants se gardent bien d'y toucher, de peur que le sort ne se retourne alors contre eux-mêmes.

De même encore, chez les Fâñ, tous les féticheurs n'ont pas le même pouvoir. Ceux, en particulier, qui ont le pouvoir de circoncire les enfants, sont assez rares. Il faut les faire venir de loin et les payer cher!

Nous sommes heureux d'ailleurs de n'être point seul à nous élever contre cet abus des mots «féticheur» et «sorcier» pris ainsi l'un pour l'autre, par suite d'une certaine ignorance des choses africaines.

M. H. Junod est certainement, dans ces dernières années, un des écrivains les plus compétents et les plus consciencieux en matière de sciences bantoues. Dans une des meilleures Etudes d'Ethnographie africaine qui aient paru, et des plus fouillées, celles des Baronga, cet auteur est absolument de notre avis, et s'élève avec force contre l'abus du mot «sorcier».

Nous le citons, car il décrit de façon très précise les diverses modalités du féticheur et du sorcier.

«Je viens de faire allusion à la confusion que l'on fait constamment dans le parler ordinaire entre devin, thaumaturge, médecin, exorciste, jeteur de sorts etc. Tous ces différents personnages sont uniformément qualifiés de «sorciers» par le public et même par des écrivains sérieux dans des ouvrages scientifiques. A mon avis, c'est une grave erreur, et l'ethnographie africaine doit se garder avec soin de cette confusion. Sans doute le même individu peut être à la fois prêtre, médecin, devin etc. mais la langue indigène leur attribue à chacun un nom spécial.

«Le terme le plus général, c'est celui de mongoma, qui désigne le médecin mais surtout en tant que thaumaturge, et particulièrement les possédés guéris qui ont obtenu l'initiation et peuvent en soigner d'autres [ngengâñ en fâñ].

«Ngâña, c'est le médecin [ngâña en fâñ, ou ngâñ] mais en tant que soignant avec les drogues plus ou moins secrètes qu'il détient. C'est l'homme des médecines, wa-mori [mimbiâñ]. A lui la charge de préparer aussi les herbes miraculeuses qui rendront invulnérables à la guerre. Ngâña et mongoma, médecin et magicien, sont fortement apparentés, comme on le voit [1].

«Gobela, c'est l'exorciste, celui qui expulse les esprits.

«Wa-bula [a-va en fâñ], c'est le détenteur des osselets, le devin par excellence, le conseiller des familles, l'interprète du sort.» [Chez les Fâñ où les osselets sont peu connus, on devine surtout avec les nkwé ou coquilles d'escargots, suivant qu'elles tournent et retombent dans tel ou tel sens. Un peu haut dans l'intérieur, tout en continuant à se servir des mikwé (pl. de nkwé), les devins se servent plutôt de jetons particuliers. Dans un livre récent, «La Mission Cottes au Sud-Cameroun» (Paris 1911), l'auteur dit à ce sujet: «Ces jetons semblent être les cartes à jouer d'un jeu spécial aux Fâñ, le bélo (cf. avec wa-bula). Ce sont des fragments du

[1] [Comme le fait remarquer l'auteur, si la confusion entre médecin et thaumaturge est générale chez les indigènes, cela provient de ce que la notion de m-biâñ, médecine, remède, est elle-même très large. Le m-biâñ, ce n'est pas seulement la racine médicinale, le «simple» qui guérit, ce sont aussi les moyens magiques de toute sorte, et c'est aussi l'ensemble des deux. Un ngâña qui donne un m-biâñ à son malade, en augmente la force par des moyens magiques, des incantations, des chants; tout cela, c'est m-biâñ. Aussi, dans nos postes militaires, un des grands étonnements des malades qui se font soigner est-il de voir que le médecin, le ngâña nitâñe, le médecin blanc, administre simplement le remède, sans employer ni chants, ni exorcismes, ni conjurations d'aucune sorte. «Rien d'étonnant à ce qu'un pareil remède n'agisse pas, me disait un jour un brave homme de Noir, qui comprenait un peu de français, le médecin n'a rien dit, ni avant, ni après. Ou plutôt si, ajoutait-il, il n'a dit qu'un mot: Avale, sale Nègre. Alors, tu comprends, çà n'a pas produit d'effet!»

Bien des fois, les Européens se sont étonnés et indignés de voir les Indigènes qu'ils avaient ainsi soignés, loin de leur en être reconnaissants, leur en demander au contraire le paiement. Malade et médecin ont raison, chacun à leur manière; le médecin, avec nos idées européennes et chrétiennes, s'indigne avec raison de voir son dévouement, presque toujours désintéressé, ainsi méconnu; le malade, lui, a également raison: il croit avoir été, dans la circonstance, un simple sujet d'expériences! Alors! . . .

Nous avons connu et eu pour ami un brave médecin qui donnait toujours ses consultations et opérait ses malades en chantant quelque gai refrain. Cela les amuse, disait-il. Les Noirs avaient en lui grande confiance! «Celui-là, au moins, me disait un jour l'un d'entre eux, n'est pas comme les autres! Il chante comme nos féticheurs!» Si le médecin avait su la cause de la popularité dont il s'enorgueillissait et qu'il attribuait à sa science! Pour nous, c'était mérité, mais pour les Noirs!]

péricarpe d'une graine de grandes dimensions analogue comme couleur à nos marrons d'Inde, mais plus allongée. Sur ces jetons de forme plus ou moins régulièrement ovalaire et dont le grand axe a de 0.03 à 0.04 centimètres, sont gravées au couteau des figurines diverses. Ce sont des hommes debout ou accroupis, des groupes de personnages, des indigènes armés de leurs sagaies et de leurs boucliers, des antilopes, des éléphants, des léopards, des crocodiles. Ce sont aussi des ornements de forme nettement géométrique, des croix de Malte, des cercles concentriques, des losanges etc.» En réalité, il ne s'agit là ni de jeu, ni de cartes à jouer d'aucune espèce. Ces jetons portent le nom de mbélœ (et non bélo) et sont faits avec les graines de l'Ogagumé ou Tétrapleura [1]. Le Tétrapleura est très-commun dans la forêt, et son écorce ainsi que l'embryon des graines sont employés comme narcotique pour tuer le poisson. Les féticheurs dessinent en effet sur les graines les figures des différents totems des familles du clan ou de la tribu (et non des cartes à jouer). Suivant les différentes formes, places ou manières que prennent ces graines en rotombant, ils en augurent bien ou mal pour les consultants. Ainsi la figure tombant à plat du côté de la terre est signe de malheur; de même si elle se présente la tête en bas etc. On consulte également les mbélœ pour la chasse.]

«Le Tčinusa, c'est celui qui devine par hallucination ou par extase. Quant au mot «sorcier», il faut le réserver pour indiquer les baloyi, les jeteurs de sorts, les ensorceleurs, si l'on veut, ceux qui vont, de nuit, répandre leurs charmes, tuer par leurs maléfices. Ces individus n'ont aucun rapport avec les précédents. Ces baloyi ont un chef, le hosi wa baloyi.

«Enfin, le prêtre, c'est le muhahli. Chaque père de famille l'est pour le compte des siens. Il peut n'être que cela, mais il est possible aussi qu'il joigne occasionnellement d'autres fonctions à la sienne. En tout cas, il n'est pas juste de prétendre d'une manière générale, comme le fait Mr. Réville dans son Histoire des Religions, que le sorcier dérive du prêtre. Il n'y a aucune relation nécessaire entre ces deux personnages [2].»

---

[1] Tetrapleura Thonnjngii Benth., de la famille des Légumineuses Mimosées.

[2] Les Ba-Ronga, par H. Junod, Neufchâtel 1898, p. 145 et ss.

Pour conserver le mot «sorcier», qui leur paraissait nécessaire, quelques-uns ont proposé de désigner les sorciers de magie noire par les noms de théurges ou de goëtes. Ces noms répondraient peut-être mieux en effet à la chose, et seraient, nous n'en disconvenons pas, d'allure plus scientifique, et surtout plus rébarbative. En attendant qu'ils soient admis par la généralité des auteurs, nous croyons beaucoup plus simple et plus conforme à l'usage reçu de réserver le nom de «féticheur» à l'homme du culte reconnu et public, celui de «sorcier», pris déjà en mauvaise part dans nos langues européennes, à l'homme du culte non-reconnu et secret.

Sorcier et féticheur ne peuvent donc être pris comme termes synonymes. Le prêtre et le féticheur proprement dit peuvent à la rigueur se confondre, parce que souvent le même homme remplit successivement les deux fonctions dans une même cérémonie. Il n'en est pas ainsi du féticheur et du sorcier, tel au moins que nous l'entendons.

Quelle en est la raison?

Comme l'a fort bien fait remarquer Mgr. Le Roy dans sa Religion des Primitifs (p. 340 et ss.), il y a magie et magie! Il y a la magie naturelle, reconnue, et il y a la magie noire que l'on pourrait appeler magie anti-naturelle. Or, si parfois le même individu peut être magicien de magie naturelle, c'est-à-dire féticheur, et en même temps sorcier de magie noire, c'est-à-dire goëte, jamais, et c'est une note essentielle, il n'exercera les deux rôles dans une même cérémonie. Le fait est absolument impossible: les deux rôles s'excluent mutuellement. Aussi ne peut-on donner le même nom à l'un et à l'autre, et comprendre leur rôle et leurs opérations sous le même nom de sorcier et de sorcellerie.

Afin de bien comprendre le rôle joué dans la tribu par le féticheur et le sorcier, il importe donc de bien saisir la différence entre ces deux personnages, ou encore, le cas arrive, entre les deux rôles joués par le même personnage. Cette dualité dans un être unique se représente assez souvent chez nos Fân, nous l'avons déjà vu, et dans le cas présent, complique fort les difficultés.

Pour distinguer entre ces deux rôles, nous devons, c'est le seul moyen, examiner leurs fonctions.

Agir sur les «esprits» bons et mauvais, c'est l'affaire des féticheurs. Appeler les bons, comme on le voit par exemple dans les invocations des chants de mariage, écarter au contraire les méchants esprits, mânes, larves ou fantômes, les forcer à quitter le village, pour s'en aller au loin et laisser par conséquent les vivants tranquilles, en somme protéger, d'une façon quelconque, ceux qui s'adressent à eux, c'est le rôle des féticheurs. Ce résultat sera obtenu par des honneurs et des sacrifices appropriés, soit directement, en protégeant l'intercesseur, en le mettant à l'abri des mauvais coups et des mauvaises rencontres, soit indirectement, en mettant l'ennemi hors d'état de nuire, qu'il soit esprit, mâne, homme ou chose. Tout cela, c'est le culte, c'est la religion, c'est le féticheur.

Mais, en revanche, s'emparer de ces esprits et de préférence des mauvais, capturer les mânes et forcer les uns et les autres à commettre le mal, ce n'est plus le culte, ce n'est plus la religion, c'est la magie, et c'est l'affaire du sorcier.

De même, et nous aurons à le développer en parlant du fétichisme et des fétiches, tandisque le féticheur opère en public, et de façon reconnue, au moyen des fétiches tutélaires et des fétiches mânistes ou familiaux, le sorcier, lui, se sert des fétiches magiques.

D'une façon générale, le père de famille est le premier ministre du culte: à lui de s'adresser aux mânes des ancêtres, à lui de leur rendre les honneurs nécessaires. Mais en même temps qu'il sera le prêtre de la famille, il en sera aussi forcément le «médecin», dépositaire des secrets de jadis, des rites ancestraux.

Par là même qu'il est en même temps prêtre et médecin, le père de famille entourera l'exercice du culte d'un rite plus ou moins compliqué: le costume, les chants, les actes revêtiront une forme particulière, destinée à attirer et à retenir l'attention, à frapper l'imagination des assistants, du malade. Nos docteurs du moyen âge ne procédaient pas autrement.

Mais à mesure que la famille s'étendra et deviendra tribu, à mesure aussi que grandira la renommée du médecin, grâce à ses connaissances spéciales, à son habileté réelle ou feinte, à ses succès, ou tout simplement au hasard, de plus en plus son cercle d'action s'élargira. On l'appellera au dehors. Mais toujours le féticheur restera l'homme du culte public, avoué, officiel. Et ce culte demeurera «officiel», même dans les sociétés secrètes constituées par les féticheurs, car, et il est très important de le noter, ces sociétés secrètes sont constituées, non pas en marge, en dehors de la société, mais dans la tribu. C'est le culte avoué, reconnu, bien que secret. Il en est tout autrement des sorciers et des sociétés secrètes fondées par eux, en dehors, en marge, et contre la société.

De là, nous pouvons établir les propositions suivantes:

Le féticheur est l'homme du culte reconnu: le culte reconnu est tantôt public, tantôt secret.

Le sorcier est l'homme du culte non-reconnu: le culte non-reconnu est toujours secret.

Tous les deux, féticheur et sorcier, sont chefs ou membres de sociétés secrètes[1].

Les sociétés secrètes dirigées par les féticheurs sont dans la tribu.

Les sociétés secrètes dirigées par les sorciers sont en marge de la tribu ou dirigées contre elle.

Enfin, le féticheur, suivant qu'il exerce telle ou telle fonction de son rang, est prêtre, médecin, guérisseur, voyant. A ce titre encore, il consulte les sorts, appelle les esprits etc. Dans les cérémonies du culte public, par exemple, il sera prêtre, voyant, faiseur de pluie: il sera l'intermédiaire reconnu entre le monde des vivants et le monde de l'au-delà: il agira en somme pour le bien de la tribu ou de quelques-uns de ses membres. A ce dernier titre, on le verra opérer comme sacrificateur à la naissance de l'enfant; il sera agent principal dans la circoncision, les fêtes de la puberté, de l'initiation des guerriers, du mariage, de la mort. On l'appellera dans toutes les maladies, afin d'écarter les esprits méchants qui, seuls, les peuvent causer: aussi, comme médecin, commencera-t-il d'abord par les incantations magiques destinées à dégager les «influences« bonnes contenues dans les remèdes qu'il va administrer; ensuite, il écartera les «esprits» méchants; il appellera à son aide les esprits favorables, ancêtres de la race; alors seulement, il procèdera à l'administration du remède; puis il appellera de nouveau à son aide les esprits propices, et chassera les mauvais. Cette façon d'opérer se retrouvera dans tous les actes de ses fonctions, mais qu'il agisse comme médecin, voyant etc., c'est toujours, on le voit, l'homme du culte reconnu, le féticheur. Dans beaucoup de ces cas, par exemple lorsqu'il opère comme médecin, guérisseur, consulteur des sorts, les Européens l'ont appelé «sorcier»: c'est un tort, et un mot absolument impropre, comme nous l'avons dit plus haut.

[1] Au lieu de ce mot: société secrète, qui prête à confusion, il serait beaucoup mieux, comme quelques-uns l'ont proposé déjà, de réserver cette dénomination aux sociétés constituées par les sorciers, et de réserver celle de confréries aux sociétés dirigées par les féticheurs.

Nos Fâñ donnent au féticheur un nom particulier: c'est le ngâñ: ce nom est commun à toute l'Afrique bantoue; on retrouve le même phonème dans toutes les tribus avec ses diverses modifications, m-gâña, n-gâña, m-hâña, gâña, ngâñ, et à peu près partout il est conservé presque intact. Tandisque le nom du Créateur est variable[1], celui de n-gâña se retrouve partout, marque indéniable de l'influence profonde qu'il exerce et a toujours exercé sur la race. Un autre vocable lui correspond: biâñ, m-biâñ etc., remède, et un verbe de même racine, qui, lui, signifiera réparer, voir, raccommoder.

«Selon[2] les régions, ce mot n-gâña possède plusieurs synonymes qui tous affirment la haute considération dont jouit le médecin. Dans plusieurs pays, on lui donne un titre qui est l'équivalent de celui de «chef», mfume, mu-fume[3] etc., l'homme à la lance, celui qui a la lance du commandement. Ailleurs, on l'appelle guérisseur. Parfois aussi sa fonction de «devin» ou voyant est attestée par des épithètes spéciales».

---

[1] Le nom du Créateur varie non comme vocable, mais comme sens. Ce sera «le Créateur, Celui qui anime, le Grand Esprit, l'Esprit d'en haut etc.»

[2] Cf. Mgr. Le Roy. Les Primitifs, op. cit.

[3] Chez les Swahili, les Barundi, et d'une façon générale, les tribus de l'Afrique orientale. En Afrique équatoriale et occidentale, c'est généralement «l'homme des remèdes».

D'une façon générale, le féticheur porte donc le nom de ngâñ, c'est-à-dire «l'homme au remède». Parfois aussi, de même que chez les Swahili il est désigné sous le nom de m-fumu, l'homme à la lance, chez les Fâñ, on l'appelle nkôñe[1], qui a la même signification. Ce nom, dit Mgr. Le Roy signifie «celui qui a la lance, c'est-à-dire qui a le commandement».

Cette explication n'est peut-être pas très juste pour les Fâñ et tout au moins pour certaines tribus bantoues. Nous traduirions plus volontiers encore m-fumu «l'homme à la lance», par «l'homme du culte«. Chez les Fâñ, en effet, le féticheur porte presque toujours une lance ou une sagaie, sinon dans tout l'exercice du culte, au moins au commencement et à la fin de l'acte religieux. Faut-il y voir une arme d'attaque ou de défense? Nous ne le pensons pas, bien que souvent il ait besoin de s'en servir dans ses fréquentes et souvent dangereuses opérations nocturnes. Tous les Fâñ que j'ai pu interroger sont unanimes sur ce point: c'est, disent-ils, l'arme sacrée, il est défendu d'en parler. Ainsi cette conversation que j'eus jadis, après avoir assisté à une cérémonie fétichiste, avec le chef des Monts Ntembo, aux sources de la Mvûñ:

«Dis-moi, ami, pourquoi le ngâñ portait-il une lance (akôñ)?

-- C'est le signe (ndèm) de sa fonction.

— Est-ce pour s'en servir? pour tuer les gens?

— Oui, s'ils le méritent.»

De fait, dans certains cas, par exemple lorsque le féticheur rencontre sur son chemin, dans l'exercice de son culte, des non-initiés, par exemple des femmes, qui n'ont pas le droit d'y assister, souvent il les tue d'un coup de cette lance, et nul n'a le droit de toucher au cadavre, avant qu'il ait été racheté[2].

«Mais alors, c'est son arme?

— Oh! non, je t'ai dit déjà que c'était son «signe». C'est le signe sacré (ndèm éki). Il est défendu d'en parler. Ndèm é ne éki.

— Mais à quoi cette lance lui sert-elle?

— C'est pour honorer l'Esprit — ésème Ndâña — et l'empêcher de nous tuer.»

[1] Celui qui porte la lance ou A-kôñ (N désigne l'agent).

[2] Dans ce cas, le cadavre doit être racheté comme si la femme était vivante.

Quel est ce Ndâňa? Le chef n'a pas su ou voulu me le dire, non plus qu'aucun Fâň. Littéralement, le mot signifie: celui qui surpasse. — J'y verrais volontiers un reste de culte oublié. La lance, au lieu d'être l'insigne du commandement est, en réalité, l'insigne du culte. Or, et c'est ce qui confirme bien cette idée, nous retrouvons ce même culte chez un peuple bantou du centre africain, les Kirundi, et non seulement chez eux, mais encore dans nombre d'autres tribus. Murungu, l'Esprit d'en Haut, a créé Imana, le premier des esprits, chef des mânes. Kirâňa, le deuxième esprit-chef créé, roi des esprits subalternes, a la garde des objets matériels: ses prêtres portent le même nom que lui et sont possédés par lui. Ryangambe est le troisième des esprits-chefs. C'est un esprit méchant, protecteur des Watwa ou Pygmées. Il est de plus le protecteur des sociétés secrètes, ou confréries religieuses, les Awawandwa qui le vénèrent sous l'arbre Umuko.

Or, Kirâňa, des Barundi, a pour symbole une lance, de même que Ndâňa des Fâň. Son culte est d'ailleurs également conservé chez les Watwa sous le nom de Kumomeka, qui est d'origine bantoue. Toutes les fois que le grand rite est célébré en l'honneur de Kirâňa, le prêtre apporte la lance sacrée, et lui rend les honneurs dûs au Créateur. En parlant des rites du mvamayôň, nous aurons à revenir sur cette curieuse ressemblance entre les deux peuples, et nous verrons le féticheur fâň commencer également les cérémonies rituelles du culte des ancêtres par le rite de la lance.

Le ngâň est donc l'homme des remèdes, le féticheur. Le sorcier, l'homme de la magie noire, porte un nom tout différent, tantôt général, tantôt désignatif de ses fonctions, de ses rites, de ses actes. Suivant les différentes races, et différentes langues, le sorcier sera le m-logi, m-rogi, m-lozi, mo-lo, mo-loki, m-loo, e-loroĭ, wa-swazi [1] etc.

Suivant Mgr. Le Roy, tous ces mots seraient dérivés d'un verbe correspondant dont le sens général est «ensorceler, jeter un sort». Bien que cette signification soit acceptable, nous préférons, et peut-être au fond en est-elle dérivée, nous rallier à la signification donnée par le P. VAN DEN BURGT (Dict. Kirundi). Pour lui, wa-swazi signifie ceux qui se polluent ensemble (qui coïtum habent). Les langues noires sont coutumières de ces mots plutôt énergiques. Les Fâñ désignent souvent les sorciers, ou tout au moins une catégorie de sorciers, sous un nom absolument équivalent: bézüa, ceux qui sont pollués, dont le verbe racine est é-zü forniquer, ce qui tendrait bien à prouver l'universalité de cette coutume. La pollution solitaire, puis mutuelle, est une des conditions de l'initiation.

[1] Ce dernier mot en ki-rundi; la sorcellerie ou théurgie noire s'y appelle uwu-rozi. C'est la même racine.

Un autre verbe primitif, loa, prendre à l'hameçon, se rapproche de celui-ci. Les Fâñ l'ont également conservé, et pour eux le sorcier est surtout le nlèm (plur. béyèm) celui qui jette l'hameçon. Ce vocable est encore mieux gardé chez leurs voisins, les Musoko, où nous trouvons le verbe ku-loka, jeter un sort, et le sorcier désigné sous le nom de mu-loke, l'homme aux sorts, dérivé très proche de u-ako, l'hameçon [1].

Le nom du «sorcier» a des synonymes: m-chwawi litt. «le veilleur mauvais», m-wanga «le rôdeur de nuit», mo-lemba l'empoisonneur. Les Fâñ lui ont donné un surnom tout aussi énergique. Pour eux, le nlèm est surtout le ndzi bur, le mangeur d'hommes, le détrousseur de cadavres, celui qui s'en va la nuit, dans l'ombre, et y entraîne sa proie pour la dévorer tout à l'aise.

La position sociale du sorcier.

Avec ces données, il est facile de répondre à la question suivante: Quelle est la position sociale du sorcier?

La position sociale du sorcier est facile à déterminer: non seulement il n'a ni rang ni place, dans la tribu, mais donner simplement, soit le nom de sorcier, soit une des épithètes que nous avons énumérées à un indigène est plus qu'une insulte, c'est une grave imprudence. Appelez un Fâñ: ngân ou ngenngâñ, féticheur, vous lui ferez honneur: s'il ne l'est pas, il vous tiendra cependant compte de votre bonne intention et de votre politesse. Appelez-le nlèm: la situation change. Tout d'abord, il regardera autour de lui pour voir si quelqu'un ne vous a pas entendu: si

[1] Même racine en fâñ: Nyop, ou nyô hameçon, dérivé de é-yô, épine. Les Fâñ se servaient autrefois d'une épine d'acacia pour pêcher. Aujourd'hui, ils ont ont des hameçons, mais le mot a-kó, crochet, a conservé la vieille racine bantoue.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

vous êtes seul avec lui et si vous êtes le plus fort, ou s'il craint des représailles, vous aurez chance d'échapper au coup de fusil ou de couteau qu'il vous donnerait bien volontiers, ou encore au poison qu'il vous administrera, s'il le peut, le plus vite possible; si c'est en compagnie de plusieurs, dans le village, c'est une grave accusation qui peut lui coûter la vie, le moins qui puisse lui arriver est d'être forcé à boire le poison d'épreuve, on y échappe rarement, surtout quand on a des ennemis.

Le sorcier, en effet, est l'être détesté et craint par excellence, l'être malfaisant, que l'on consulte seulement quand on y est forcé, car il détient les pouvoirs occultes, et on connaît sa puissance. Le mieux encore, car on en trouve toujours assez, est de s'en débarrasser quand on le peut sans danger. Aussi, on n'y manque pas! Tantôt le sorcier meurt dans la forêt, comme par hasard: c'est une vengeance particulière. Tantôt il est tué et brûlé dans le village: c'est la vengeance de la tribu. Et comme on veut être sûr que non seulement il ne réchappera pas, mais encore que son âme errante ne viendra pas tourmenter les vivants, on a soin que nulle partie de son corps ne subsiste: aussi on emploie pour le bûcher le bois d'ébène ou celui d'éfirfira, ce sont ceux qui brûlent le mieux et le plus complètement.

Cependant, malgré tout, le sorcier existe: bien longtemps encore, il saura se maintenir. Et cela tient à deux raisons:

1° la position sociale qu'il occupe dans la tribu, non pas comme sorcier, nous venons de dire qu'il n'en a pas à ce titre, mais par sa propre personnalité;

2° la crainte qu'il inspire, crainte qui amène finalement sa mort, mais aussi l'aide à se maintenir.

Evidemment, dans la vie courante, et par la force même des choses, féticheur et sorcier se confondent souvent dans un même personnage. Tel ou tel individu, ministre religieux respecté dans sa famille, médecin et féticheur estimé dans le public, sera également sorcier, mais alors dans le plus grand secret, à moins que sa position ne lui permette d'afficher cette qualité, mais alors il sera universellement craint, haï, ne se maintiendra que par la terreur et le meurtre, et tremblera sans cesse pour sa vie.

Mais comment un féticheur, un chef, peut-il ainsi «descendre», le mot n'est pas trop fort, à ce rôle de sorcier? Par une pente très facile à saisir. Les sorciers dressent en effet dans l'ombre autel contre autel, culte contre culte, défenses rituelles contre défenses rituelles, et leur influence grandissante ne tient à rien moins qu'à ruiner l'autorité légitime du chef de tribu et du féticheur. Aussi, pour peu qu'ils aient l'ambition de dominer, ceux-ci se feront-ils facilement initier, et une fois dans l'engrenage, il faut bien marcher. Leurs engagements et leur puissance demeurent jusqu'à un certain point inconnus pour les non-initiés, mais c'est là en somme secret facile à percer! On les soupçonne, mais on n'ose rien dire: ce serait se révolter contre l'autorité des chefs, et ceux-ci n'hésitent pas à punir. D'ailleurs, peu à peu, les mécontents disparaissent, et s'ils ne veulent le faire de bonne grâce, on les y aide «un peu»; on les invite à aller voir ce qui se passe de l'autre côté . . . et à vivre et laisser vivre en paix les vivants!

Et par là même, le sorcier, ainsi revêtu d'une position sociale qui le met à l'abri des particuliers, inspire une terreur très justifiée. Dénué de toute espèce de scrupule, il se débarrasse successivement de tous les gêneurs, élimine sans pitié tous ceux qui lui portent ombrage par leur fortune et leur influence, et arrive ainsi, toujours craint et redouté, au but de ses désirs.

Si, au contraire, le sorcier n'occupe point une situation personnelle ou sociale qui le mette à l'abri, son sort est vite réglé. Dans tout pays d'Afrique, nous l'avons vu, traiter quelqu'un de sorcier est lui faire une grosse injure. L'en accuser ouvertement est presque toujours son arrêt de mort: parfois, si l'accusé a des amis «puissants», il sera seulement invité à boire le poison d'épreuve, et le cas est très fréquent: il est si facile de se débarrasser ainsi d'un ennemi! Ayant bu le poison, à moins d'accommodements avec la justice, on a bien des chances d'y laisser sa peau!

Mais dans la plupart des cas, la justice noire est plus expéditive: l'accusé est tout simplement brûlé vif. S'il était sorcier, tant pis pour lui, c'est bien fait; s'il ne l'était pas . . . tout homme est faillible, et si nuisible bête est le sorcier qu'il faut bien hasarder quelque chose!

C'est la justice noire!

Sentiments des Fâń à l'égard des sorciers et des fétiheurs.

De là, également, le sentiment que les Fâń et tous les Noirs éprouvent pour les fétiheurs et les sorciers.

Dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions religieuses, les chefs de famille ou de tribu, les fétiheurs, leurs remplaçants ou délégués, jouiront du respect universel. Les vêtements dont ils se revêtent, leurs oripeaux, leurs masques ne sont bizarres ou ridicules que pour nous: le Noir, lui, n'y voit rien de risible, et nos railleries, la plupart du temps, ne proviennent que de notre ignorance. Le fétiheur, dans l'exercice de son culte et presque toujours dans la vie habituelle de la tribu, est respecté; il le mérite la plupart du temps par la place qu'il occupe: nous savons que ce rôle sort rarement de la famille du chef. Il le mérite également par le sérieux avec lequel il opère, la gravité imperturbable dont il ne se départit jamais dans l'exercice de ses fonctions.

Est-il réellement convaincu lui-même? C'est toute une autre question. Dans beaucoup de cas, nous n'hésiterions nullement à l'affirmer. Dire que parfois, intérieurement, il n'est pas très convaincu, nous le croyons volontiers. La question est d'ailleurs peu importante: le fait même du respect qui entoure ses actes, l'exercice rituel de son culte et, en dehors de là, sa personne elle-même, demeurent acquis.

Quant au sorcier, la question est toute autre, et ne soulève aucune difficulté: nous avons vu qu'à son égard un seul sentiment se manifeste: la crainte. Celle-ci lui est presque toujours funeste; à moins d'une situation sociale éminente, il est bien rare que le sorcier finisse autrement que par le feu. Si sa position lui épargne cette mort, il est presque sans exemple que le sorcier meure chez lui, tranquillement. Malgré les précautions minutieuses dont il s'entoure, les vengeances particulières savent bien l'atteindre, et dans les sentiers de la forêt, la flèche empoisonnée passe sans laisser aucune trace. Elle ne pardonne pas. Le sorcier le sait, et avec la résignation habituelle des races noires, content du présent, il envisage l'avenir, sinon sans effroi, du moins sans chercher à y échapper.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

§ 6. Le féticheur et le sorcier sont ministres du totem dans les sociétés secrètes qu'ils dirigent.

Le féticheur n'exerce donc son culte et n'est ministre du totem qu'en vertu d'une sorte de dévolution, de transmission de pouvoir du chef de famille. Nous l'avons vu à ce titre, dans les grandes cérémonies totémiques, agir aux côtés du chef de la tribu, régler les rites sous sa direction, en un mot être son ordonnateur, son maître de cérémonies, son aide-sacrificateur. Souvent, en pratique, il arrivera à le supplanter, et à transmettre ensuite à ses descendants le pouvoir religieux qu'il aura usurpé.

Si prédominant que soit ce rôle, le ngôôa ne s'en estimera pas encore assez satisfait. Il lui faudra dominer de façon complète: il y arrive par les sociétés secrètes, où il est seul maître, sociétés qui peu à peu ont envahi l'organisation de la tribu et tendent à en évincer le pouvoir familial d'autrefois. Là, il est bien ministre et unique ministre du totem de ces sociétés.

Mais à côté du ngôôa, à côté des sociétés secrètes qu'il dirige et gouverne, nous trouvons, cachés pour ainsi dire dans les bas-fonds de ces sociétés, les sorciers ou béyém également ministres des totems qu'ils ont donnés aux sociétés secrètes qu'ils dirigent, ministres, sociétés et totems qui ne sont, au fond, que la contrefaçon des premiers.

De là, nous sommes amenés à étudier les sociétés secrètes dirigées par les uns et par les autres, et le rôle profondément différent, bien que souvent confondu, qu'y jouent féticheurs et sorciers, béngôô et béyém.

CHAPITRE XIII.

FÉTICHEURS ET SORCIERS. LEURS SOCIÉTÉS SECRÈTES.

§ 1. Les sociétés secrètes des féticheurs.

Question à étudier. Sentiment de M. DE JONGHE. Auteurs qui ont traité la question au point de vue général, FROBENIUS et SCHMITZ. Ce que nous pensons de leurs idées. L'origine des sociétés secrètes d'après notre propre opinion. Totems de sociétés secrètes. A côté des féticheurs, on trouve les sorciers. Différences entre ces deux ordres. Les initiations, les réunions, les totems ne sont pas les mêmes. Tableau de ces différences.

§ 2. Les sociétés secrètes de féticheurs sont distinctes de celles des sorciers.

1° Le nom générique diffère.

2° Les sociétés secrètes des sorciers ont une existence absolument distincte de celle des féticheurs.

§ 3. Sorciers et féticheurs ont des réunions secrètes distinctes.

1° Les réunions de sorciers et celles de féticheurs ont chacune un nom distinct: Fanno et l'efefola. Signification de ces deux noms.

2° Les réunions des sorciers. a) Le temps et l'époque des réunions. b) L'endroit des réunions. c) Quelques témoignages au sujet de ces réunions chez les FÁ. d) On retrouve ces réunions chez les autres peuples bantous, souvent avec des noms analogues, ainsi chez les Mpongwé, Benika, Balsha etc.

§ 4. Conclusions relatives à ces réunions.

Le loi du secret est un grave obstacle à la divulgation.

§ 5. Le mode de convocation aux assemblées de sorciers.[1]

Différents modes de convocation. Témoignage d'un chef noir.

§ 6. Le mode de transport des sorciers.

Divers témoignages, MACDONALD, Mgr. LE ROY, JUNOD, Mgr. BULÉON. Notre propre sentiment.

§ 7. Les initiations.

1° Le loi du secret.

2° Les initiations chez les féticheurs et les sorciers. Témoignages divers.

[p. 425]

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Au commencement de cette Etude, nous mentionnions parmi les faits, phénomènes, et corps de doctrine étroitement connexes au totémisme, mais devant cependant en être nettement séparés, les «sociétés secrètes» Quelques auteurs, en effet, ont voulu y voir le fondement même du totémisme, la source originaire d'où cette doctrine ou cet ensemble de faits sont sortis tout entiers. Cette opinion nous paraît difficilement soutenable. En tout cas, ce que nous voyons chez les Fân s'y oppose formellement. Nous avons montré par ailleurs l'union étroite qui relie nos Fân aux autres tribus bantoues, et l'origine lointaine du totémisme. Mais cette opinion nous amène à nous préoccuper ici, tout au moins de façon assez sommaire, de la grande question des sociétés secrètes, considérées surtout au point de vue de leurs totems.

Nous avons d'abord à étudier les sociétés secrètes dirigées par les féticheurs. Plus loin viendront celles des sorciers.

§ 1. Les sociétés secrètes des féticheurs.

La première question qui se pose devant nous est celle-ci:

Nous devons traiter tout d'abord des causes qui ont déterminé l'établissement des sociétés secrètes, le fait même de leur existence étant indubitable et reconnu par tous.

Quand il s'agit des sociétés secrètes, «on se heurte, dit Mr. DE JONGHE dans son Etude des sociétés secrètes au Bas-Congo, au silence obstiné sur tout ce qui touche à l'éducation religieuse des jeunes générations, et cette éducation elle-même s'entoure généralement d'une mise en scène qui déroute les recherches et donne l'impression d'une initiation dans une société secrète. Mais, s'il existe un certain rapport entre les rites de la puberté, d'une part, l'éducation religieuse, les sociétés secrètes d'autre part, au Congo le lien entre ces diverses institutions devient très étroit . . .»

Deux auteurs ont traité, à un point de vue général, la question des sociétés secrètes, et nous y renvoyons pour plus amples développements. Ce sont FROBENIUS dans ses „Masken und Geheimbünde Afrikas" [1], et SCHURTZ dans ses „Altersklassen und Männerbünde" [2].

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

SCHURTZ, et nous nous inspirons ici de l'analyse qu'en a donnée M. DE JONGHE, a voulu exquisser une théorie nouvelle de l'origine des sociétés. A la base de toute évolution des formes sociales, il place une opposition radicale entre les instincts de l'homme et de ceux de la femme. Le mobile principal de l'activité de la femme et qui inspirera la plus grande partie de ses actes est l'amour: la femme constitue le centre de la famille, et tout, à ce point de vue repose sur elle. L'homme, au contraire, tend plutôt à vivre en dehors, et se laisse entraîner par une sorte de penchant à la vie extra-familiale, que SCHURTZ désigne sous le nom de „Geselligkeitstrieb". De ce penchant, est née la vie sociale. Le développement de ces penchants a créé le développement des formes sociales.

Mais ces penchants existent-ils bien réellement, et ce „Geselligkeitstrieb" suffit-il pour expliquer l'évolution sociale? Y a-t-il vraiment «opposition» d'instincts entre l'homme et la femme, la vie familiale et la vie sociale? Pour nous, et avec beaucoup d'autres, nous croyons que l'une est au contraire le développement tout naturel de l'autre.

Il n'en est pas ainsi pour SCHURTZ: pour lui, le groupement le plus primitif est l'association humaine dirigée par le „Geselligkeitstrieb". Il rattachera à ces associations primitives les classes d'âge considérées par quelques-uns comme les formes les plus antiques de classification sociale. Elles seront placées au même rang que les rites de la puberté, les groupements à caractères de clubs, les sociétés secrètes. La forme la plus simple dérivée du „Geselligkeitstrieb" est la forme des rites de puberté: les sociétés secrètes en sont le développement ultérieur. Au sujet des coutumes de la puberté et autres, SCHURTZ a des idées moins arrêtées. Tantôt, ce sont pour lui des sociétés secrètes en voie de formation: «La plupart des sociétés secrètes africaines se rattachent aux rites de la puberté dont elles constituent un développement ultérieur» (p. 102), tantôt ce sont des sociétés en décadence. «Aux environs de Boma,

[1] Berlin, G. Reimer 1902.

[2] Dans Abhandlungen der K.-L.-C. Deutschen Akademie der Naturforscher zu Halle, LXXIV, n° 1, 1898.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

les circoncis emploient entre eux une langue secrète, ce qui montre déjà une tendance vers la société secrète» [1].

Pour nous, les sociétés secrètes africaines, en particulier celles des Fâñ, ne se rattachent que de façon incidente aux rites de la puberté.

Elles n'en constituent le développement ultérieur que par ce que les fétiheurs admettent seulement dans leurs sociétés les jeunes guerriers ayant subi les premières épreuves. Chez les Fâñ, celles-ci sont d'ailleurs assez indépendantes des rites de la puberté. A la base de toutes ces cérémonies, Schurtz admet un fait d'ordre psychologique, le besoin naturel de célébrer les grands actes de la vie, et, pour cela, de transformer une joie d'un moment en une fête de plusieurs jours. De là, à établir pour les fêtes de la puberté une série de fêtes destinées à montrer au jeune homme qu'il a traversé une époque importante de sa vie, qu'il est soustrait désormais à l'influence de sa mère, n'est plus un enfant, et qu'admis au rang des jeunes guerriers, il doit désormais faire acte de guerrier: il n'y a qu'un pas.

De là encore, ayant vécu pendant quelque temps uniquement avec les jeunes gens de son âge, et goûté pendant un temps plus ou moins long les joies de la liberté, il ne désire qu'une chose: les renouveler de temps à autre, d'où l'institution des sociétés secrètes.

La circoncision qui se pratiquera souvent au même moment, rite de reproduction en même temps que d'hygiène et les épreuves que subira le jeune homme pour entrer dans la société secrète, constituent autant de signes destinés à lui montrer qu'il fait partie désormais de la classe des guerriers.

De même, lorsque l'enfant se présente aux cérémonies de la puberté revêtu d'un costume de femme qu'il changera à la sortie pour un costume d'homme, Schurtz y voit un symbolisme marqué: l'enfant échappant à la tutelle de sa mère pour devenir véritablement homme. Pour nous, nous croyons que c'est bien loin chercher un symbolisme auquel, peut-être, le Noir n'a jamais pensé. Lorsque le petit Fâñ, dans les cérémonies de la puberté, porte pendant quelque temps une sorte de jupon fait avec les lanières d'écorce desséchée de bananier [1], il porte bien en effet un vêtement de femme. Mais faut-il y voir du symbolisme? A notre avis, c'est tout simplement que ce vêtement ample et flottant ne lui blesse pas les parties génitales: le vêtement collant des hommes les irriterait, une fois guéri, le jeune homme reprend les vêtements de son sexe, c'est tout naturel. Lorsque Schurtz admet le même symbolisme et voit un commencement de société secrète dans la retraite des jeunes gens au fond des bois, loin de tout regard féminin, nous croyons également qu'il va trop loin.

[1] Ce sentiment provient d'un renseignement erroné. En réalité, la langue secrète fait partie de l'initiation aux sociétés secrètes. Ce point est aujourd'hui hors de doute. V. p. e. l'ouvrage du Commt Lenfant, La découverte des Grands Lacs du Centre de l'Afrique, Paris 1900, sur la langue des Lobi.

Pour Schurtz, loin d'être en opposition avec le régime social de la tribu, la société secrète en est au contraire le développement nécessaire: l'enfant y acquiert un esprit nouveau, entre en communication avec les esprits des ancêtres, s'initie aux traditions de la tribu, et reçoit toute la culture intellectuelle, morale et physique qu'il lui faut pour exercer dignement les droits d'un bon citoyen et en accomplir les devoirs. Ces sociétés secrètes seront donc une garantie de l'unité ethnique, une force de cohésion sociale de premier ordre.

Nous ne ferons ici aucune critique détaillée de ces interprétations: elles nous paraissent exister plutôt dans l'esprit du savant que dans la réalité. Elles méconnaissent de plus le rôle très important joué par le féticheur, et les totems donnés à cette occasion, qui en sont peut-être en définitive la dernière raison d'être.

Schurtz nous paraît bien encore se tromper en cherchant la cause du manque de sociétés secrètes chez les femmes dans les raisons suivantes. Chez elles, les rites de la puberté sont moins compliqués, moins importants que chez l'homme, le temps de l'instruction plus court, les épreuves plus courtes si elles existent, pâles imitations de celles des jeunes gens. L'explication est toute trouvée. Les rites de la puberté symbolisent moins le fait de la puberté que son importance sociale. Or, le nerf de tout développement social véritable est le „Geselligkeitstrieb", et celui-ci est le privilège exclusif de l'homme. Dans le domaine social, la femme est dépourvue de toute initiative: elle ne saurait rien créer, elle imite, et s'adapte.

[1] Même coutume, non-seulement chez les Fâñ, mais chez tous les peuples congolais.

Ces considérations toutefois nous paraissent reposer sur des bases bien fragiles. Un fait fondamental semble tout au moins s'y opposer dans toutes les tribus bantoues que nous connaissons. Si partout, ou à peu près, nous trouvons la circoncision des jeunes gens ou des jeunes filles, partout aussi nous voyons que les jeunes gens, seuls, sont tenus à l'écart pendant les rites en question. La circoncision des jeunes filles se fait sans préparation, sans éducation préalable, sans séquestration, et une fois l'opération faite, la jeune fille rentre dans la case maternelle.

En outre, on trouve des sociétés secrètes de femmes: comme celles des hommes, elles ont leurs rites et leurs totems, mais on n'y admet que les femmes mariées et pas de jeunes filles. Aussi les rites de la puberté n'y jouent-ils aucun rôle. Ces deux constatations, circoncision des jeunes filles sans séquestration ni retraite, et sociétés secrètes de femmes, vont donc droit à l'encontre des idées de Schurtz.

Schurtz s'est contenté pour résumer les sociétés secrètes africaines de résumer les idées et les renseignements contenus dans le livre de Frobenius, „Die Masken und Geheimbünde Afrikas".

Pour Frobenius, trois éléments se retrouvent dans la civilisation africaine: au fond, le mânisme, ou culte des morts, qui deviendra ici ou là culte de l'eau, des arbres, des crânes etc.; puis des survivances d'un passé lointain, totémisme, mythes, fables d'animaux; enfin, des produits d'une époque plus récente, mythologie solaire et cosmogonique.

De même que pour Schurtz, nous ne nous étudierons pas à réfuter ces doctrines, bien que parfois ingénieuses: nous avons exposé, d'après les faits recueillis sur place et d'après les indigènes, leurs croyances à ce sujet, et également les nôtres.

D'après cet auteur, les sociétés secrètes se trouvent en germe dans la séparation des sexes qui a lieu à la puberté. Chaque groupement est soumis à un tabou déterminé: tous les membres sont égaux, et c'est le lien qui les réunit. Le serment des sociétés secrètes s'accompagnait autrefois de sacrifices humains, remplacés aujourd'hui par des offrandes de tortues, d'oiseaux etc. Mr. DE JONGHE a prouvé que le renseignement sur lequel s'avançait FROBENIUS pour établir ce point était controuvé: nous avons vu également que les sacrifices humains existaient toujours chez les Fâñ.

L'initiation, dit encore FROBENIUS, se fait au fond des bois parce que les ancêtres sont ensevelis dans les bois, que les esprits habitent la forêt et la hantent: le culte des arbres est du mânisme. Rien de moins prouvé! Chez les Fâñ, et chez beaucoup de Bantous, les morts sont enterrés près des habitations[1]. Ainsi, beaucoup de chefs sont enterrés à la porte ou devant l'entrée de la case principale du village. D'ailleurs, l'endroit de la sépulture est de peu d'importance: le cadavre ne compte pas. Seul, le crâne, où repose l'esprit de la race, est important, et il est détaché du squelette pour être gardé dans la famille. Quant au culte des arbres, nous avons montré qu'il avait un double objet: totémique, quand l'arbre était un totem, mânique quand y résidait un esprit ou une vertu mystérieuse. Cet esprit n'est toutefois pas l'esprit d'un mort, sauf dans quelques tribus. Tels les Mpongwé.

Enfin, le phénomène le plus important serait la „Vergeistigung" ou transformation en esprit. Ceux qui se masquent sont possédés par les esprits, et ne dispose de leur puissance que celui qui est „vergeistigt", transformé en esprit, par des tabous, la privation d'aliments, de femmes etc. pour ressembler davantage aux êtres spirituels. Pour nous, cette conception nous paraît bien trop élevée pour le Noir, sensuel et matériel. La vérité nous paraît beaucoup plus simple. Si l'on se masque dans les sociétés secrètes, tout au moins chez les Fâñ et tribus voisines, tous ne se masquent pas, mais seulement les chefs. Pourquoi cela? A notre avis, pour ne pas être reconnus, pour éviter des vengeances ultérieures. Nombreuses en effet sont les déprédations et nombreux aussi les meurtres perpétrés par les chefs contre les initiés récalcitrants ou les non-initiés. — Une deuxième raison, peut-être la principale, est

[1] Quelques tribus les enterrent dans le lit des ruisseaux après en avoir détourné pour un moment le cours. La raison de cette coutume est d'éviter toute profanation ultérieure et surtout l'enlèvement du cadavre.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

celle-ci: chaque société est gouvernée par un esprit supérieur: il s'agit de le matérialiser, de lui donner une forme tangible et corporelle: de là, le masque. Aussi, quand de tels individus masqués parcourent les villages, tous les initiés les accompagnent à visage découvert, mais ont grand soin de chasser, à renfort de coups parfois mortels, ceux qui ne sont pas initiés. surtout les femmes et les enfants [1].

Il nous souvient d'une aventure de ce genre, où je n'échappai que par miracle. Le Ngil, un des chefs de sociétés secrètes était un jour entré dans un village lorsque j'étais en train de causer avec mes catéchistes. Ses acolytes me sommèrent de fuir et de me cacher: je ne voulus pas y consentir, et par trois fois le Ngil, masqué, me lança ses flèches empoisonnées. Plus tard, dans la soirée, je le reconnus parfaitement parmi mes assistants; le dénoncer eût été inutile et dangereux.

Toutefois, de tous ces faits, et avant de donner, telle que nous la croyons vraie, l'origine et la constitution des sociétés secrètes, ressort une constatation évidente: leur existence. Elle n'est d'ailleurs niée par aucun auteur sérieux.

Mais ici se dresse un fait des plus importants, et qu'à notre avis, on n'a pas encore signalé, sauf toutefois, en quelques mots, Mgr. Le Roy [2]: «De même qu'il y a féticheur et sorcier, et que ce sont deux individualités distinctes, souvent confondues par les voyageurs, et par les savants européens, de même il y a deux sortes de sociétés secrètes; les unes ressortent des féticheurs, les autres, des sorciers.»

Ces deux sortes de sociétés sont souvent confondues, et pourtant sont fort dissemblables. Très souvent, on attribue aux unes ce qui appartient aux autres: ainsi, par exemple, les sacrifices humains, en

---

[1] Lorsque Frobenius a écrit son livre «Die Masken», il ne connaissait encore que les travaux d'un seul missionnaire protestant, le Rd Bentley, de la Sté Baptiste de Londres. Il ignorait sur ce sujet les travaux nombreux et importants des missionnaires catholiques dont Mr. de Jonghe donne une bonne énumération dans son livre des Sociétés secrètes. Frobenius s'est ainsi privé, mais certainement sans aucun parti pris, de documents intéressants, qui, peut-être, l'auraient amené à modifier profondément sa thèse.

[2] La Religion des Primitifs, op. cit. p. 343.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

général, appartiennent aux deux rites, mais dans les sociétés secrètes dirigées par les féticheurs, ils sont réservés à certains cas d'expiation, de calamité publique, de mort du chef ou de guerre: ils font également partie de l'initiation des féticheurs, et parfois revêtent un caractère particulier d'horreur. Dans ces derniers temps, au Gabon, il y a eu ainsi, particulièrement au pays Eshira et Apindji, plusieurs meurtres d'Européens: c'était une vengeance de tribu, un meurtre imputable aux féticheurs, non aux sorciers.

D'un autre côté, on signale souvent des disparitions d'individus, que l'on sait ensuite avoir été mangés, on parle d'hommes-tigres (nous les verrons plus loin) qui se jettent sur les passants pour les déchirer: ces faits sont imputables aux sorciers et à leurs sociétés, et non aux féticheurs. Pour ceux-ci, les sacrifices humains sont un acte rituel, accompli devant tous, et suivi de la communion à la victime. Pour les sorciers, au contraire, l'anthropophagie est presque toujours (sauf dans certaines initiations calquées sur celles des féticheurs), un acte de pur cannibalisme, sans aucun rite ou cérémonie religieuse.

De même qu'il y a des sociétés secrètes dirigées par les féticheurs, et d'autres dirigées par les sorciers, de même chaque société, et chaque individu en y entrant a son totem (ou mieux son animal protecteur, du moins quant aux sorciers), totem qui joue à son égard exactement le même rôle que le mvame dans la famille, le clan, la tribu et pour l'individu.

Enfin, et ce dernier point complique étrangement la difficulté, très-souvent les sociétés secrètes fondées et commandées par les sorciers, portent le même nom que les sociétés secrètes commandées par les féticheurs: les rites et les observances diffèrent du tout au tout, mais le nom reste le même. On conçoit que les sorciers usent fréquemment de ce stratagème. Pour eux, c'est une sûreté de plus qui leur permet de dissimuler à la fois leur existence et surtout leurs déprédations, plus souvent leurs crimes, sous le couvert de sociétés puissantes, reconnues, et ayant pour ainsi dire une existence légale.

Donc, pour nous résumer rapidement, lorsqu'il s'agit de sociétés secrètes, il faut toujours, tout d'abord, savoir de quelle société il s'agit: société secrète de féticheurs ou société secrète de sorciers.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Dans les faits qui leur sont imputés, il faudra encore examiner si ces faits se rapportent à une société secrète «vraie» de féticheur, ou une société secrète de sorciers, dissimulée sous un nom identique.

Sèules, une très longue pratique de ces peuples, une attention très particulièrement dirigée sur ces points, permettent d'y parvenir. Et encore, les erreurs doivent-elles être fréquentes. Les indigènes s'y trompent, à plus forte raison les Européens. Nos successeurs feront mieux que nous.

* * *

Nous avons vu au sujet de l'origine et de la cause des sociétés secrètes, les idées de Schurtz et de Frobenius. Faut-il voir avec eux dans cette institution une suite nécessaire des rites de la puberté? Nous avons démontré le contraire et indiqué qu'agir ainsi était attribuer, peut-être, la cause à l'effet, et expliquer les phénomènes après coup.

A notre avis, la société secrète dérive de l'organisation même de la tribu. La place prépondérante qu'a su y prendre le féticheur est née du rôle qu'il a été nécessairement appelé à y jouer par la force même des choses. De même, les nouveaux totems qui y sont donnés aux adeptes après l'initiation ne sont qu'une imitation de ceux qui leur ont été attribués par le père de famille lors de leur naissance.

La société secrète dérive de l'organisation même de la tribu.

En effet, avant d'admettre les jeunes gens à faire partie des guerriers, il semble tout naturel de les éprouver par une suite d'épreuves destinées à montrer si réellement ils sont aptes à jouer leur rôle et à rendre les services que la tribu leur réclame. Par suite déjà, élimination des jeunes filles et des femmes, au profit de l'élément masculin. Cette série d'épreuves ne peut se faire au village, devant tous: les éliminations forcées, pour ne pas donner d'autres raisons, susciteraient contre les chefs de terribles rancunes suivies d'inévitables vengeances. De là, nécessité de se retirer à l'écart. Le chef pourrait déléguer un représentant quelconque, un guerrier renommé par exemple, mais nul mieux que le féticheur n'est apte à exercer ce rôle et à y prendre une place prépondérante et bientôt exclusive. La religion en effet doit jouer, dans ces réunions, un rôle important, nécessaire. Ne faut-il pas consulter les mânes des ancêtres, les intéresser à leurs jeunes continuateurs, faire entrer leur esprit en eux, attirer les influences bonnes, écarter les nocives! Tout cela est l'affaire de l'homme du culte, lui seul s'y entend. Aussi, tout le temps que les jeunes guerriers seront sous sa direction, il aura sur eux un pouvoir absolu. Ce pouvoir, il ne demandera qu'à le conserver dans la suite. Mais, de retour au village, les jeunes gens, devenus guerriers, retomberont sous l'autorité commune du chef de tribu. Qu'à cela ne tienne! Parmi ceux qui lui ont été le plus dévoués, le féticheur recrutera facilement de nouveaux adeptes: avec eux, il constituera une société plus fermée que la précédente, surtout permanente par son but même et par le fait de son institution. Devant cette société dont le gouvernement lui échappe forcément, le chef de tribu devra s'incliner et obéir. Presque toujours, il se résignera à y entrer lui-même, espérant, mais à tort, y reconquérir l'autorité en partie perdue. Cette tentative de main-mise du pouvoir civil sur les sociétés secrètes n'est pas seulement africaine: elle est de tous les temps et de tous les pays. Ainsi, au siècle dernier, pour n'en citer qu'un exemple, Napoléon III nommait le maréchal Maignan grand-maître de la franc-maçonnerie française. Les sociétés secrètes, africaines aussi bien qu'européennes, acceptent ces nominations ou ces tentatives de main-mise plus ou moins forcées, mais évidemment le chef occulte n'en reste pas moins le véritable chef. Dans les tribus bantoues, les chefs ont maintes fois tenté de réagir, tantôt par la ruse tantôt, et le plus souvent, par la violence et le poison. Ils ont toujours échoué.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Telle est, réduite à sa plus simple expression, l'origine de la société secrète. Peu à peu, elle est devenue légale, et par la force même des choses, un des organismes les plus vivants de la tribu. Evidemment, au cours des âges, et par suite des diverses modalités, elle subit de profondes modifications. Elle n'en reste pas moins constituée telle quelle dans ses grandes lignes.

A l'imitation de la tribu, du clan, de la famille sur laquelle elle est calquée, elle aura aussi ses totems de société, de subdivisions, de chefs, d'individus: le féticheur aura pris le rôle du chef de tribu; il le remplacera pour tout ce qui regarde ces totems particuliers. Toutefois, notons-le bien, comme la principale force de ces totems réside dans le secret, ils n'envahiront point la tribu, ne lutteront ni contre le totem tribal, ni contre les autres totems. L'individu qui entre dans la société secrète y cherche simplement une augmentation de force et de pouvoir ou un gage de sécurité personnelle de plus.

Non seulement les individus auront leur totem, mais de même que la tribu se subdivise en clans et en familles, de même la société secrète se subdivisera en classes qui auront chacune leur totem.

Cet usage existe chez les Fân, et aussi chez les autres tribus bantoues. Ainsi, chez les Baluba que nous avons déjà cités, une des sociétés secrètes, les Bahayo, se subdivisent en cinq classes ayant chacune leur totem:

1° Ceux qui sont désignés sous le nom de Mulumba; ils ont pour totem l'oiseau kasozo;

2° ceux appelés Kileme, qui ont pour totem l'oiseau kiminga;

3° les nommés Tundulu dont le totem est l'antilope tundu;

4° les nommés Mulenda, qui ont pour totem l'oiseau tuba;

5° ceux enfin qui portent le nom Luhele[1] dont le totem est la tourterelle ou le crocodile. Chacun d'eux honore son totem, et ne consentira jamais à se nourrir de sa chair[2]. Cette loi est universelle.

De tous ces totems, le ministre naturel est évidemment le féticheur. C'est lui qui en a déterminé les rites, à l'imitation des rites similaires pré-existant dans la tribu.

Nous avons là affaire à un culte reconnu, bien que secret, culte admis, qui s'adresse aux esprits, et surtout, ce qui est fort important, aux esprits des ancêtres. Sur ce point, le féticheur marche parfaitement d'accord avec le chef et les traditions de la tribu.

Mais à côté de la magie naturelle où se cantonnent à proprement parler les féticheurs, «il en est une autre, dit Mgr. Le Roy[3]

[1] Ces totems sont, on le voit, en général des totems d'oiseaux: nous dirons pourquoi plus tard. V. p. 485.

[2] Bulletin des Pères Blancs d'Anvers. 15 Août 1908.

[3] La Religion des Primitifs, p. 340, la Magie.

qui prétend emprunter sa puissance et ses moyens d'action aux êtres du monde invisible, aux mânes désincorporées, mânes des hommes et même des animaux, aux esprits indépendants . . .

«Cette anti-Religion a, comme la Religion, son culte, ses incantations, ses évocations, ses rites, ses fétiches, ses offrandes, ses sacrifices, ses ministres, ses fêtes, ses lieux de réunion.»

Tout d'abord, elle a ses ministres, et ces ministres ne sont autres que les sorciers. C'est pourquoi, dans les pages précédentes, nous nous sommes efforcés déjà de tracer la figure du sorcier, et de le distinguer nettement du féticheur en délimitant les principaux traits de sa personnalité, en démêlant un ensemble complexe où bien des points se touchent, bien des lignes se croisent et se pénètrent mutuellement.

A l'exemple des féticheurs, les sorciers ont fondé des sociétés secrètes. Ces sociétés secrètes sont nombreuses; toutefois, elles ne sont nullement constituées sur un plan uniforme ou similaire: elles sont au contraire hiérarchisées, et divisées, non-seulement en grades dans chaque société, mais encore en sociétés distinctes, dépendantes toutefois les unes des autres. L'on n'entre dans les sociétés supérieures, plus fermées et plus secrètes, qu'après avoir passé par les grades et sociétés inférieurs et subi les épreuves nécessaires. Chaque société a un nom particulier.

Calquées sur le modèle de la société proprement dite ou société constituée par les féticheurs, ces sociétés particulières lui ont emprunté une grande partie de ses rites et de ses cadres: souvent elles tendent à l'envahir.

Toutefois, entre ces deux espèces de sociétés secrètes, les différences sont grandes.

Laissant de côté tout ce qui n'intéresse pas le sujet que nous traitons spécialement ici, nous aurons seulement à examiner les points suivants, qui montreront à la fois les ressemblances très grandes et aussi les différences notables qui existent entre ces deux ordres de faits, au point de vue totémique.

1° De même que les féticheurs ont établi, pour se relier entre eux et consolider leur puissance, un certain nombre de sociétés secrètes, de même les sorciers se sont groupés en sociétés secrètes destinées à assurer leur vitalité et leur pouvoir.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

2° Les fêtes et cérémonies d'initiation ont de nombreux points de contact. Toutefois, celles du culte des sorciers présentent un caractère beaucoup plus marqué d'horreur, de cruauté, et surtout d'immoralité profonde, de hideuse obscénité. Le culte du sang et de la génération détournée de son but primordial y dominent.

3° Les sociétés secrètes de féticheurs ont toutes un totem particulier, totem protecteur de leur association. Ce totem remplira à leur égard le rôle de l'étotore ou du mvame de tribu, de clan et de phratrie. Toutefois, tandis que le mvame de tribu, de clan ou de phratrie appartient indifféremment aux trois règnes animal, végétal ou minéral, ou même parfois au monde sidéral et des esprits, le totem de société secrète sera toujours un totem animal. Ce sera un animal proprement dit, parfois un reptile ou poisson, souvent un oiseau.

Les sociétés secrètes de sorciers, au contraire, et c'est là une différence essentielle, n'auront jamais de totem de cette espèce. Leur mvame ou protecteur sera toujours un esprit, un être appartenant au monde spirituel ou désincarné. Cet esprit pourra se manifester, et le fera souvent de fait (nous parlons au point de vue indigène) sous une forme animale, mais ce ne sera pas un animal véritable, et tous les sorciers sont unanimes à affirmer ce fait. «L'esprit» se manifeste, diront-ils tous.

4° Chaque «féticheur» reçoit, le jour de son initiation et de sa réception dans la société secrète, un totem particulier et individuel. Ce totem est en général un animal ou un oiseau. Mais aucun lien physique ne les relie l'un à l'autre: de même qu'avec le mvame individuel qu'il a reçu à sa naissance, il y a simplement, entre les deux, parenté spirituelle et mystique.

Chaque «sorcier», au jour de son initiation et de sa réception dans la société secrète, contracte également alliance avec un animal. Mais cette alliance est d'un caractère tout particulier, il y a parenté réelle et physique, contractée par échange de sang, et alliance réelle, de sorte qu'à partir de ce jour l'animal obéit à l'homme et l'homme à l'animal: leur vie est liée l'une à l'autre.

A proprement parler, cet animal n'est donc pas vraiment un totem, au sens que nous avons défini: les indigènes le désignent d'un nom particulier; c'est un élâñéla. Les auteurs européens, ethnographes ou autres, ont désigné cet animal sous le nom de «nagual». L'ensemble des phénomènes qui se rapportent au nagual porte le nom de «nagualisme». On l'a confondu presque toujours avec le totem individuel: rien de plus impropre, et même de plus faux [1].

En somme, pour tout résumer, et avant de passer à l'étude plus détaillée de chacun de ces points, nous pouvons établir le tableau suivant qui fera mieux ressortir ce que nous venons d'énumérer:

Féticheurs.	Sorciers.
Béngâñ — Ngâñu.	Béyèm — Ndzi bur.
1° Sociétés secrètes de féticheurs.	Sociétés secrètes de sorciers.
Akôza Béngâñ.	Mfûñ Béyèm.
2° Réunions secrètes en ce sens que les non-initiés n'y sont pas admis, mais réunions connues dans la tribu.	Réunions secrètes soigneusement dissimulées à tous les non-initiés, peine de mort pour ceux qui les surprennent. Réunions obscènes.
Esama.	Efufula (litt. mélange de semence) Azüa.
3° Initiation secrète non obscène.	Initiation secrète toujours obscène.
Ayème mindzâñdzâñ.	Azüa mimfûñ.

Les initiations comprennent: a) les épreuves, b) le sacrifice, c) le choix du protecteur ou totem, d'où, par rapport à ces initiations:

4° Anthropophagie proprement dite inconnue.	Anthropophagie ordinaire. Souvent on déterre les cadavres pour s'en repaître. Cannibalisme sans aucune idée religieuse.

[1] Par exemple M. van Gennep, comme nous le dirons plus loin en traitant du nagual.

5° Sacrifices humains rituels. Communion à la victime, dans un intérêt général. Athune.	Sacrifices humains pour composer des maléfices, jeter des sorts etc. Adzi bur.
6° Totems généraux de classes et de sociétés semblables aux totems de tribu et de clan. Bémvame — Bétotore.	Totems généraux de classe et de sociétés semblables aux féticheurs pour les sociétés dirigées par les sorciers. Pas de totems pour les sociétés composées exclusivement de sorciers. Esprit protecteur invisible. Engungure.
7° Totems individuels en tant que féticheurs. Un animal ou un oiseau de préférence. Mvame.	Pas de totems individuels en tant que sorciers. Ils sont remplacés par le nagual ou animal voué. Elâñéla.

§ 2. Les sociétés secrètes de féticheurs sont distinctes de celles des sorciers.

I° Le nom générique diffère pour les sociétés secrètes suivant qu'il s'agit de féticheurs ou de sorciers.

Chaque société constituée, qu'il s'agisse de féticheurs, ou de sorciers, a un nom spécifique distinct. Mais ce qui est important, c'est que le nom générique diffère, suivant qu'il s'agit de féticheurs ou de sorciers.

Tandis que les féticheurs portent le nom de béngâñ ou ngâña, les sorciers ont celui de béyèm, ceux qui savent, ou encore celui de béndzi bur, les mangeurs d'hommes.

Ce dernier nom est plutôt un qualificatif, un surnom que leur donne le peuple d'après leur coutume de «manger les hommes», qu'il leur attribue d'ailleurs avec raison. Leur vrai nom est Béyèm: Ceux qui ont pénétré (v. éyèm, connaître), qui devinent le secret des choses. Le mot ngâña, qui désigne les féticheurs proprement dits, signifie littéralement, d'après une vieille racine bantoue, ceux qui ont appris. Les ignorants, au contraire, sont les les Vanga, ceux qui ne connaissent pas. Ces ethniques se retrouvent encore aujourd'hui dans plusieurs langues du Congo belge. Batéké et autres.

De même, pour désigner les assemblées de féticheurs, et celles de sorciers, le nom est complètement différent. L'akôza bengâń, assemblée des féticheurs, est un terme générique qui peut s'appliquer à toutes sortes de réunions, quelles qu'elles soient. On dira aussi bien par exemple akôza bisoze, une réunion de soldats, akôza békrétyen, une assemblée de chrétiens. L'akôza est une simple assemblée, sans but déterminé, sans idée préconçue, répondant ou non à une convocation. Parfois, on désigne encore les sociétés secrètes constituées dans la tribu sous le nom du totem général. Ainsi, chez les Fâń, la société du Ngil, qui s'appellera simplement Ngil, par abréviation, du Ngil, leur totem général. Dans beaucoup de tribus, ainsi que nous l'avons vu chez les Baluba (p. 435), les sociétés secrètes portent des noms distincts, mais sans aucune signification obscène. C'est presque toujours le nom du fondateur.

Au contraire, le mot qui désigne les associations secrètes de féticheurs, mfûń, emporte une idée d'obscénité particulière et implique l'idée de certaines réunions ou contacts sur lesquels il nous est difficile d'insister: le mfûń comporte la communauté sexuelle et l'union temporaire, surtout nocturne. On voit immédiatement la différence qui sépare les deux vocables.

II° Les sociétés secrètes de sorciers ont une existence absolument distincte de celles des féticheurs.

Nous venons de voir que dans la tribu elle-même, les féticheurs ont partout fondé des sociétés secrètes destinées à consolider leur pouvoir; ils y jouent, en somme, le rôle du père de famille, du chef de clan, et de tribu.

Mais afin de mieux dissimuler leur existence, et surtout de consolider leur puissance occulte, les sorciers ont imité cet exemple, et calqué leur propre organisation sur celle de la tribu. Si, à l'imitation des féticheurs, les sorciers opèrent individuellement pour lancer leurs maléfices, ils se sont donc aussi organisés en sociétés secrètes, qui ont leurs réunions et leurs conseils. Toutefois, et c'est ce qui les distingue d'abord des premières, ces sociétés sont beaucoup plus secrètes. Les Fâń, et tous les autres Noirs les désignent, nous venons de le dire, sous deux noms différents. Pour éviter des confusions fréquentes et très-graves [1], il serait fort à désirer que la science anthropologique, après avoir distingué entre féticheurs et sorciers, distinguât également entre confréries et sociétés secrètes de l'une et l'autre espèce, au lieu de les désigner sous un ethnique similaire.

Le fait de l'existence des sociétés secrètes est prouvé non pas seulement par le nom et la chose, mais surtout par les réunions qui en sont la démonstration évidente. Aussi passons-nous sans tarder à cet ordre de phénomènes.

§ 3. Sorciers et féticheurs ont des réunions secrètes distinctes.

I° Le fait du nom.

De même que les sorciers et féticheurs fân ont leurs sociétés secrètes distinctes, de même ils ont leurs réunions parfaitement séparées. Ces réunions, à l'exemple des sociétés, portent un nom particulier.

L'esama est la réunion des féticheurs et de leurs adeptes: elle est secrète, en ce sens que les non-initiés, les femmes surtout, n'y sont pas admis: mais elle est connue dans la tribu: les jours de réunion sont fixés d'avance, tous les connaissent, et en somme, on peut dire qu'elle est légale.

Rien de pareil pour l'azüa ou l'efufula des sorciers. Là, tout demeure secret, se passe dans l'ombre, connu des quelques rares initiés, et le nom lui-même azüa, ou efufula, mélange de semence, démontre immédiatement à quel genre de fête et d'occupations on entend bien se livrer. Le mot efufula désigne bien toute espèce de «mélange», mais non de réunion comme le esama. Il faut un mélange de «liquide», et le mot azüa qui signifie également fornication vient enlever toute chance d'erreur ou de fausse interprétation.

[1] Ainsi, par exemple, dans sa brochure, d'ailleurs à tout point de vue fort remarquable, sur les «sociétés secrètes au Bas-Congo» Mr. DE JONGHE confond souvent féticheurs et sorciers, et sociétés secrètes de féticheurs et de sorciers. Il est fort excusable d'après les documents mis à sa disposition. Le R. BENTLEY fait la même confusion.

De même encore, le mot ayème mindzâñdzâñ qui désigne les initiations secrètes de féticheurs signifie simplement «la connaissance des mystères», des choses qui sont au milieu, au centre.

Au contraire, le mot azila mimfûñ qui désigne les initiations secrètes de sorciers signifie littéralement la fornication des choses associées. On désigne encore parfois ces associations sous le nom de nkûñ méyal qu'il nous est difficile de traduire, mais qui implique un acte particulièrement obscène.

Certaines réunions de sorciers se désignent aussi parfois sous un nom temporaire qu'il ne faut pas confondre avec le nom général. Ainsi l'on dira adzèm bikwékwé, la danse des crânes, adzile mvi, l'approche de l'albinos etc. Ces noms indiquent plutôt ce qui se fera dans la réunion: adzèm bikwékwé, la danse des crânes: il y aura plusieurs morts à manger, adzile mvi, il y aura un noyé à manger. Mvi, l'albinos, désigne souvent dans ce cas particulier les noyés, car on sait qu'après deux ou trois jours de séjour au fond de l'eau, le Noir devient d'un blanc livide par suite de la disparition du pigment. Souvent aussi mvi désigne, dans le langage secret des sorciers, l'homme que l'on aura tué pour le manger plus tard mais que l'on aura d'abord caché dans l'eau pour attendrir la chair. C'est un mets très recherché.

Le but des deux réunions est donc bien résolu par les appellations elles-mêmes, et il ne saurait y avoir erreur.

Mais, du nom, passons à la chose.

II° Les réunions des sorciers.

Les féticheurs ont leurs réunions secrètes; les sorciers, à leur exemple, ont aussi les leurs. Le but est double: tantôt ils se réunissent pour une fête proprement dite, tantôt pour discuter des intérêts de leur société. On conçoit, en effet, parfaitement que les sorciers, sans cesse menacés dans leur vie individuelle, aient cherché à fuir cette hantise perpétuelle par l'association de leurs forces occultes.

a) Le temps et l'époque des réunions.

Chez les sorciers fâñ, comme dans de nombreuses tribus, ces réunions ont toujours lieu la nuit, et au moment de la nouvelle lune. La raison de ce choix est double. Tout d'abord, les sorciers adressent un culte particulier à la lune, considérée comme principe de la fécondité sexuelle. Au début de la réunion, un chant particulier lui est adressé, et une danse exécutée en son honneur. On la supplie de consacrer et de favoriser les unions temporaires qui vont tout à l'heure être faites dans le secret, et d'aider, par sa puissante intercession, aux efforts de ses adorateurs.

Nous ne pouvons donner ici ce chant à cause de son immoralité profonde. On y parle à la lune «absente», puisque nous sommes en nouvelle lune, et on la compare à une jeune fille qui quitte furtivement la case maternelle pour aller, dans le secret de la nuit et des bois, retrouver le jeune homme qui l'attend. Le halo lunaire, fréquent à cette latitude, y est comparé à la ceinture qui se dénoue. On nous permettra de ne pas en citer davantage. Le Fàñ ne recule devant aucun tableau, aucune explication [1].

Les féticheurs rendent également un culte particulier à la lune, mais à un point de vue différent, la considérant plutôt comme protectrice. Rappelons ici qu'en fàñ, Ngon, la lune, désigne également une jeune fille nubile et dont la poitrine est déjà formée. Dans toutes les tribus africaines, la lune est considérée comme le principe fécondant et reçoit un culte spécial.

Le moment de la nouvelle lune est encore choisi par les sorciers à cause de l'obscurité profonde de la nuit à cette époque,

---

[1] Ces chants sont fort difficiles à comprendre, car presque tous les mots y sont détournés de leur véritable signification, et changent leur accord et leur préfixe. Ainsi Bi bé yèn mimeul bédzol, au lieu de Bi bé yèn bémeul mèdzul, littéral.: Nous irons voir les antilopes de la plaine, signifie en réalité: Nous ferons l'amour avec les jeunes filles du village. Tous ceux qui ne sont pas initiés ne peuvent évidemment comprendre ce langage. Cet usage n'est pas seulement réservé aux Fàñ. On retrouve une langue secrète chez tous les peuples africains, et une même langue secrète sert souvent à plusieurs peuples de race et d'origine fort différentes. Nous attirons dans cet égard l'attention de nos lecteurs à l'ouvrage du Commt Lenfant «La découverte des Grands Bourns du Centre de l'Afrique», Paris, Hachette 1909.

Cette langue, disons-nous, est comprise des seuls initiés. Il est curieux, à ce propos, de voir la traduction littérale d'un chant de Ngola, donné par Mr. Largeau dans son Encyclopédie fàñ, ouvrage d'ailleurs rempli d'inexactitudes et d'erreurs. L'interprète de Mr. Largeau, un bòy nommé Christophe, que nous avons bien connu, était non seulement d'une ignorance profonde, mais certainement non-initié. La traduction est fausse d'un bout à l'autre!

et par là même du secret plus grand qui enveloppera les réunions. Tandisque la lune brille à l'horizon et déverse sur nos contrées équatoriales sa vive et blanche lumière, tous les villages sont en fête. A peine le repas du soir est-il fini que les jeunes gens disposent tout pour la danse. Les femmes remportent en hâte les corbeilles où elles ont offert aux hommes réunis dans l'abéle, les mets préparés depuis la chute du jour, bananes et manioc, poisson, gibier, sauces diverses. Dans leurs cases, elles revêtent leurs pagnes multicolores, leurs bracelets de cuivre soigneusement fourbis, à leurs pieds elles ajustent les grelots de bois où tintinnabulent les cailloux ronds, et les graines dures des cannas[1]. Bientôt, sur la place publique, le tamtam fait rage, les danseurs succèdent aux danseurs, et il en sera ainsi jusqu'au matin, tant qu'au ciel brillera la blonde Phœbé, tant que dans le village, il y aura, pour illuminer les coins sombres, les torches d'okumé[2] ou les tiges d'amome[3].

S'absenter dans ces conditions serait particulièrement dangereux, car on serait immédiatement remarqué, et pour peu qu'ensuite une fête de sorciers fût signalée dans les environs, les soupçons s'élèveraient vite. Du soupçon à l'épreuve, de l'épreuve à la mort, nous l'avons vu, il n'y a souvent qu'un pas!

Au contraire, dans les nuits sombres, sans lune, les Noirs redoutent fort les ténèbres et les esprits errants qui vaguent autour des villages, à la recherche d'une proie, d'un mauvais coup à faire, d'un maléfice à lancer. Aussi ne se hasardent-ils pas volontiers hors des cases et surtout des villages: le hameau, dans ces nuits, dort tranquille, sans que l'on y entende le moindre bruit. Les sorciers peuvent alors s'esquiver facilement de leurs cases solitaires[4], courir à leurs réunions, répondre au cri de ralliement que donnera

---

[1] Canna ou Balisier, plante aujourd'hui acclimatée et très-répandue dans tous nos jardins. (Canna coccinea, guineensis etc. des Marantacées.)

[2] Okumé blanchâtre, des Térébinth. Le résine abondante de cet arbre sert à faire les torches.

[3] Amomum cibratum. La tige séchée brûle avec une vive lumière.

[4] Dans la famille polygame, chaque femme a sa case où le mari va dormir de temps à autre. Chaque chef de famille a sa case particulière où ne dorment pas les femmes. Il peut donc s'absenter sans être remarqué.

le cri de la chouette, l'hululement du hibou, ou l'appel strident du mouk [1]. Pourvu qu'au matin ils soient de retour, nul ne remarquera leur absence nocturne.

b) L'endroit des réunions.

Les lieux de réunions des sorciers, choisis dans des sites déserts, souvent presque inaccessibles, sont ordinairement fort éloignés de toute habitation.

Parfois, c'est au plus profond de la forêt, dans les parties où les défrichements n'ont jamais pénétré.

Les Noirs désignent ces endroits sous le nom d'avil abi, litt. trou de pangolin, et ont grand soin de s'en écarter, si par aventure, ils s'aperçoivent, au cours d'un voyage, qu'ils en sont arrivés tout près. Ces mêmes réunions ont aussi lieu sur quelques montagnes. Le Mont Khamendzok [2] par exemple, et surtout le Mont Nsas [3], du sommet duquel, d'après les traditions fân, Nzame s'envola après avoir créé le monde, sont entre tous réputés comme lieu de réunion. Le Chef des Esénaran, dont le village-capitale est le plus rapproché du pied du Nsas, me disait avoir compté une nuit sur le haut du mont plus de deux cents feux, représentant autant de sorciers ou de réunions de sorciers. Ayant eu au matin la curiosité de monter, il ne trouva que l'herbe rare brûlée, le roc calciné ici et là et aucune autre trace. Le lendemain, l'aîné de ses fils mourut, puis pendant six jours consécutifs, six de ses parents. Non sans quelque raison peut-être, il attribuait ces morts successives et inexplicables à quelque sorcier, désireux de prévenir pour une autre fois une curiosité qui aurait pu devenir dangereuse. De fait, le bruit de l'événement s'était répandu dans tout le pays, et les sorciers n'avaient plus certes à craindre aucune intrusion indiscrète.

Les endroits où les sorciers se réunissent sont ordinairement éloignés des habitations: ils ne peuvent guère partir de leur village

---

[1] Nous avons déjà cité le mouk, sup. de mammifère.

[2] Khamendzok, littéralement Chef éléphant, Père de la horde. Les cartes françaises portent Gamindzoque, orthographe absolument fautive et fantaisiste.

[3] Du haut du Mont Nsas, on découvre une vaste étendue circulaire de pays, de plus de 70 km de rayon. De là, probablement, la légende du Dieu créateur.

avant une heure assez avancée de la nuit: ils doivent être rentrés, pour éviter tout soupçon au premier chant du coq. Comment concilier ces deux faits qui paraissent bien contradictoires: d'un côté l'éloignement souvent fort grand, d'un autre, le peu de temps dont ils disposent?

c) Quelques témoignages au sujet de ces réunions.

Notre unique témoignage pourrait paraître insuffisant; faisons donc appel à d'autres écrivains. Leur propre récit apportera au nôtre leur confirmation.

Nous marchons ici en effet sur un terrain mouvant, particulièrement difficile, au milieu d'une série de phénomènes encore mal expliqués, et où le magnétisme, le somnambulisme conscient ou inconscient, la dissociation de la matière, la téléphonie et les divers phénomènes de gravitation et de transport à distance jouent un rôle important.

L'Evêque protestant Nassau qui demeura au Gabon plus de 40 ans, consignait naguère le résultat de ses études et de son expérience dans un livre profondément étudié, et où, en général, il se montre plutôt sceptique. Le premier, il nous apporte son témoignage précis, à la fois sur le fait même de l'existence des sociétés secrètes de sorciers, et sur le mode étrange employé par ceux-ci pour se rendre à leurs réunions nocturnes.

«Ces réunions, dit Nassau[1], en parlant des assemblées des sociétés secrètes de sorciers, se tiennent de préférence au fond des bois, à quelque distance des villages, pendant la nuit. On est persuadé que les sorciers laissent leurs formes corporelles dormir dans leur case, et qu'ils s'en échappent sans être retenus par les murs, les toits ou tout autre obstacle matériel. Ils peuvent ainsi passer rapidement dans les airs, au dessus des arbres. A leurs réunions, ils sont en communication avec les esprits mauvais, qu'ils voient, qu'ils entendent, qu'ils touchent. Ceux-ci (souvent sous la forme d'animaux) partagent leurs fêtes et leurs festins. Le morceau de choix est le cœur de quelque être humain qui, en

[1] R. H. Nassau, Fetichism in West Africa, p. 133.

conséquence, tombe malade à ce moment même, et ne tardera pas à mourir, à moins que le maléfice ne soit conjuré. Le premier chant du coq est le signal de leur dispersion. L'apparition de l'étoile du matin les force à se hâter pour rentrer dans leurs corps; si le soleil se lève sur eux avant qu'ils aient regagné leurs demeures, leurs plans échoueront, et eux-mêmes tomberont malades.»

A ce témoignage si net sur l'existence des réunions secrètes de sorciers chez les Fâñ, il est facile d'en ajouter d'autres pour les peuples voisins. Ce qui se passe chez les Fâñ se retrouve dans les autres tribus bantoues.

Nous ne nous trouvons pas en effet en face d'un phénomène isolé, propre aux Fâñ: cette organisation se retrouve également chez les nations voisines, et souvent sous le même nom: ces peuples sont aussi bien à l'est qu'à l'ouest des Fâñ, au nord ou au sud: nous nous trouvons par là même en face d'une vaste association. Comme ces sociétés n'ont cependant aucun rapport entre elles (du moins nous n'avons pu le constater jusqu'ici), peut-être serait-il plus vrai de dire qu'elles se sont copiées mutuellement les unes sur les autres, ou plutôt qu'elles remontent à une haute antiquité, à l'origine de la race bantoue.

Ainsi, parmi les diverses sociétés secrètes de sorciers, nous en trouvons une, chez nos Fâñ, particulièrement immorale. Elle porte le nom de ndjém. Or, la même, avec des rites similaires, se voit également chez leurs voisins de l'ouest, les Mpongwé, où elle fleurit sous le nom de ndjémbwé. La danse, très-caractéristique, qui commençait toute réunion, est même aujourd'hui fort connue, et malgré son degré de lascivité très marqué, plutôt peut-être précisément à cause de cela, tombée dans le domaine public. On la danse très fréquemment à Libreville et à la côte.

Si nous allons à l'autre extrémité du pays fâñ, vers l'est, nous trouvons encore une société semblable, et avec un nom similaire, dans la tribu des Bateké. Un de nos confrères, qui vient malheureusement de mourir prématurément, le R. P. Le Gouay, nous avait transmis sur cette secte et sur ce peuple une foule de faits curieux qui corroborent de la façon la plus formelle tout ce que nous avons dit sur les Fâñ.

Cette société porte chez les Batéké le nom de ndembo. «Les rites, lisons-nous dans une Etude publiée sur cette question [1], y sont les mêmes que dans une autre secte identique, celle des nkita [2] (cf. avec éki des Fàn, ailleurs nkila) répandue assez loin dans l'arrière-pays du Stanley-Pool. Les adeptes du ndembo sont amenés par les magiciens, (!) au moyen d'une sorte de suggestion, à se croire tombés dans un prétendu état spécial d'accès frénétique. Ils sont alors portés en dehors du village dans un enclos spécial et sont dits «mourants ndembo». Contrairement au nkimba, les femmes peuvent faire partie des pratiquants du ndembo. Celui-ci forme ainsi peu à peu un groupe où dominent les filles et les garçons, mais où l'on voit aussi souvent des hommes et des femmes. Le magicien réunit ainsi de vingt à cinquante sujets. Parmi les candidats à l'initiation, les uns feignent naturellement d'éprouver l'accès frénétique, mais d'autres atteints réellement de contagion, ressentent des attaques d'hystérie. Ceux qui sont convaincus de n'être pas tombés dans l'attaque d'hystérie, sont renvoyés.

«Leur quartier général porte le nom de vela [3]. Dans la croyance populaire, les «mourants ndembo» meurent réellement et s'en vont en poussière. Il ne reste de leur corps qu'un os que le féticheur conserve pour les ressusciter au moment voulu.

«Bien qu'on les suppose morts, leurs parents et amis fournissent les aliments qui leur sont nécessaires, et après une période variant, d'après les coutumes, de trois mois à cinq ans, le magicien se prépare à leur «rendre la vie». Les honoraires de ce docteur ayant été payés, avec un bon surplus pour une fête, les gens du ndembo sont rappelés à l'existence, et, vêtus de neuf, ramenés au village natal au milieu de fêtes et de réjouissances publiques.»

---

[1] Journal «Le Congo», 26 Mai 1907, n° 137, p. 166 et m.

[2] Rappelons une fois encore que dans cette Etude, comme dans les autres travaux similaires, l'auteur confond les diverses sociétés secrètes de féticheurs et de sorciers.

[3] En Fàn, nous trouvons un mot presque analogue pour désigner ces lieux de réunion, mvila. Un certain nombre de villages portent aussi ce nom dont le radical est peut-être éela, l'éléaier, lieu abondant en éléaiers. Plus probablement, rapprocherions-nous ce mot d'evil, que nous avons déjà signalé comme donné aux lieux de réunions des sorciers: evil ebi, trou de pangolin.

Sur les confins orientaux de l'Etat du Congo belge, aux abords du lac Tanganyika, les Pères Blancs ont réussi en partie à percer le mystère de l'existence d'une autre société occulte, ayant ses initiations, ses rites, ses réunions, sa hiérarchie. Elle s'appelle bugabo, ou bukabo, (bubabo), mot à mot «compagnonnage», et la licence est ici, encore, un des principaux éléments de cette association... Les affiliés ont des réunions dans les bois, la nuit, et jamais un mot de ce qui s'y passe ne transpire au dehors.

Dans le sud de l'Etat, chez les Baluba, sévit une secte mystérieuse, plus nocive encore. Elle porte le nom de lubuku. Elle se réunit à certains moments de la lune nouvelle (comme l'akhûñ des Fâñ). Dans ces convents, on fume le chanvre (lhiamba). — En Fâñ, nous trouvons même coutume, et presque même nom pour le chanvre: yam[1]. — Sous l'influence de cette coutume dégradante, on se livre à des orgies sans nom. La première règle des adeptes est la communauté des femmes et des hommes, et le communisme. Tous les biens des membres de la secte sont communs. Les hommes peuvent se marier, mais les trois premières nuits, leur femme doit être livrée en public à celui qui le premier la réclame...

Dans le Bas et le Moyen-Congo, d'autres associations dont le nombre d'adeptes est maintenu à un chiffre très restreint, existent dans le plus grand secret. Leurs membres sont voués tantôt au crocodile, tantôt au léopard. — Nous retrouverons ces animaux en parlant des naguals. — Ce sont de véritables sociétés d'assassins. A certains jours, les initiés se réunissent et désignent celui d'entre eux qui est obligé de mériter le nom d'homme crocodile ou d'homme léopard. Le membre désigné doit tâcher de saisir à l'improviste un être humain à la manière de l'animal auquel il est voué et rapporter aux initiés la preuve de son forfait. On n'a pu surprendre l'existence de ces sociétés que par les actes de leurs membres.

---

[1] Rappelons l'habitude des Fâñ que nous avons déjà signalée, de «recouvrir» tous les mots qu'ils empruntent aux autres langues: Nnemi = Nnemi, Bhiamba = yam.

§ 4. Conclusions relatives à ces réunions.

De tout ce que nous venons de dire, et d'après d'autres témoignages nombreux qu'il serait oiseux de reproduire ici, ressortent nettement les points suivants:

1° Les sorciers, à l'exemple des féticheurs, ont constitué et constituent encore des sociétés secrètes:

a) dans la tribu fàn toute entière,

b) dans les tribus voisines de race bantoue.

Nous devons signaler ici que nous n'avons jamais rencontré ces associations dans les tribus d'autres races, telles les Négrilles.

2° Ces sociétés secrètes se réunissent la nuit, dans le plus grand mystère.

3° Elles sont toujours licencieuses au premier chef, au point que, pour plusieurs, auteurs, l'obscénité la plus effrenée en serait le but principal. A notre avis, c'est surtout une circonstance concomitante, destinée à mieux retenir et enchaîner leurs adeptes par les plaisirs les plus érotiques et les plus dégradants.

Toutefois, et c'est le dernier point que nous signalerons ici, un fait se présente, qui maintes fois déroute les observateurs les plus consciencieux et les plus désireux de connaître la vérité. Joint à la loi absolue du secret, il complique étrangement la question. De même que les féticheurs, dans leurs sociétés secrètes, admettent des grades et une hiérarchie, de même les sorciers ont constitué, eux aussi, des grades et une hiérarchie parfaitement organisée. De là, plusieurs sortes de réunions. Tantôt, c'est une sorte de réunion générale où sont conviés tous ceux qui font partie de l'association, et le but est alors une fête, presque toujours d'une obscénité et d'une cruauté révoltante. Nous avons vu combien tous les témoignages concordent sur ce point.

Mais à côté de ces fêtes «générales» où sont conviés tous les associés, il en est d'autres d'un caractère beaucoup plus secret, où sont appelés les seuls sorciers, les uniques et vrais chefs de ces réunions. Convoqués par un mot d'ordre dont nous allons parler rapidement, ils se rendent à l'endroit désigné, et, là, a lieu une fête d'un genre tout particulier, sur laquelle il nous est difficile de donner des détails très précis. On conçoit en effet combien ceux qui font partie de ces associations se tiennent sur la réserve. La loi du secret est absolue et inexorable; de plus, leur propre intérêt est en jeu: il sera toujours très difficile, sinon impossible, d'éclaircir nombre de faits et de points dont la divulgation serait cependant des plus importante, au point de vue de la religion.

§ 5. Le mode de convocation aux assemblées de sorciers.

Les sorciers proprement dits se réunissent à certains jours. A ces assemblées prennent part les sorciers de différentes tribus, et aussi de diverses sociétés qui, au premier abord, paraissent ennemies. Au fond, il n'en est rien. Il peut y avoir entre elles lutte d'influence, parfois divergence d'intérêts, mais lorsqu'il s'agit d'atteindre le but commun, immédiatement tous les efforts convergent au même point. Bien des soulèvements contre la domination européenne pourraient et doivent ainsi être expliqués.

Si même, dans certains cas, les tribus sont ennemies les unes des autres, et se font une guerre acharnée, il n'en est point ainsi des sorciers appartenant à ces tribus: ils lutteront peut-être les uns contre les autres en tant que guerriers du clan, mais en tant que sorciers, ils resteront unis pour un effort commun.

A certains jours donc, les sorciers se réunissent à un endroit déterminé. Dans la plupart des cas, cette convocation a été décidée d'avance à la précédente réunion. Mais il peut arriver aussi que le chef suprême veuille à l'improviste convoquer ses sujets. Comment le fait-il alors?

Le mode est des plus mystérieux.

Un chef que j'interrogeais un jour à ce sujet me répondait qu'il entendait l'appel pendant son sommeil, qu'une «voix» l'avertissait du jour, de l'heure et de l'endroit, et qu'il en était ainsi très souvent. Que faut-il penser de cette réponse? Nous devons avouer que nous n'en savons rien. Ce que l'on peut affirmer, c'est qu'en fait de transmission de pensée, même à longue distance, certains sorciers sont très forts: pareille difficulté n'est pas faite pour les surprendre.

Un autre jour, je fus témoin du fait suivant. Je causais familièrement dans une case avec un Fâñ qui se disait de nos amis, et nous rendait, de fait, beaucoup de services. J'étais assis sur son lit de bambous, et lui, sur une escabelle devant moi. Tout à coup, j'avise un petit paquet de bûchettes, les unes peintes en rouge, les autres en blanc, quelques-unes épointées, les autres pas. Ce qui m'étonnait le plus, c'est qu'il me semblait bien que ce paquet, assez volumineux d'ailleurs, n'était pas là un instant auparavant. Je m'empresse de le faire remarquer à notre ami qui ne pouvait l'avoir vu, car il lui tournait le dos.

«Qu'est ceci? lui dis-je en montrant le faisceau de bûchettes. Jamais je n'avais encore vu cela chez toi.

Mon homme détourne la tête, et se montre évidemment fort contrarié.

— Ce n'est rien, me dit-il enfin, ne fais pas attention.» Et prenant le paquet, il le dissimule avec soin, ajoutant: «Surtout, n'en parle à personne, tu me ferais avoir beaucoup de mal!»

Sa réponse ne me satisfaisait pas beaucoup. Aussi voulais-je avoir plus amples explications.

— Non, non, me répondait-il sans cesse, c'est un grand secret! (endzâñdzâñ éki, litt. le mystère défendu).

Enfin, après beaucoup d'instances, il se détermina à m'avouer, me faisant promettre de n'en jamais rien dire à personne, qu'il était sorcier du rite Ngil, et que c'était là le mode de convocation pour la prochaine réunion.

— D'après la couleur peinte sur les bûchettes, me dit-il, je sais où je dois aller: le nombre de morceaux de bois m'indique combien de jours je dois compter avant de me rendre à la réunion, les morceaux blancs désignent les chefs qui y assisteront, chacun ayant sa marque spéciale. C'est tout.

— Mais pourquoi, parmi ces bois, les uns sont-ils pointus et les autres pas?

— Oh! ceci, non, c'est un grand secret: si je te le disais, je serais puni de mort à la prochaine réunion.

— Mais qui le saurait?

— L'esprit connait tout: je ne pourrais le regarder en face; il saurait tout et me tuerait.

— Et qui t'a apporté ces bois: ils n'y étaient pas à mon entrée dans la case.

— Non, ils n'y étaient pas.

— Alors?

— Je ne puis te le dire. Et puis, parlons d'autre chose. Tout cela est défendu.»

Je n'obtins pas d'autres explications. Tout ce que j'appris, c'est que ce mode de convocation est souvent usité, du moins au dire de mon individu. Je n'ai jamais été témoin d'autre fait semblable, obtenu aucune autre explication, ni de mon homme, ni d'aucun autre. Cependant, maintes fois encore, j'ai eu connaissance de semblables convocations. Plusieurs de mes confrères m'en ont également parlé.

§ 6. Le mode de transport des sorciers.

Le fait de l'existence des sociétés secrètes, et de leurs réunions à certains jours désignés, est ainsi hors de doute pour les Fâñ. Il l'est non-seulement pour eux, mais encore pour toutes les autres tribus qui leur sont apparentées.

Reste le phénomène curieux que nous avons signalé: l'éloignement, souvent fort grand, des lieux de réunion.

Comment les sorciers se transportent-ils ainsi loin de leurs demeures?

Notons bien encore que nous ne parlons ici que des sociétés composées de «seuls» sorciers, et non de celles qu'ils dirigent, et où sont admis, après les épreuves nécessaires, de nombreux initiés, non sorciers eux-mêmes.

Au Moyen-Age, on admettait sans difficulté que les sorciers d'alors étaient transportés au travers des airs, soit par les esprits infernaux eux-mêmes, soit en vertu d'un pacte magique. Chez nos Fâñ, chez tous les Noirs, nous retrouvons mêmes croyances, mêmes procédés attribués aux sorciers. D'après leurs dires universels, les sorciers jouissent du pouvoir, plus ou moins étendu, de pouvoir ainsi se transporter rapidement à de grandes distances, soit avec leur propre corps, soit sous des formes mystérieuses et étranges: feu follet, globe de feu, oiseau, animal. En retranchant de ces faits les fortes exagérations de la crédulité populaire, et aussi, pour une part peut-être encore plus considérable, l'intérêt que les sorciers eux-mêmes avaient à les amplifier et à les accréditer, faut-il, pour cela, les nier d'une façon absolue? Pour notre part, nous le ferions volontiers. Cependant, nous avouons sans peine avoir été témoin d'un certain nombre de faits qui nous laissent fort perplexe. En abandonnant à tous les facteurs différents d'erreur la part qui leur revient dans ces phénomènes, il faut bien avouer qu'il en reste encore un certain nombre d'inexplicables, tout au moins dans l'état actuel de la science et de nos connaissances.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Mais recourons à d'autres témoignages.

«Pendant que le sorcier se promène ainsi sous une forme ou sous une autre, dit Mgr. Le Roy[1], globe de feu, oiseau, animal quelconque, si on le frappe, si on le perce d'un fer pointu[2], si on tire sur lui, le sorcier se trouve roué de coups dans sa case, si même il se réveille jamais: en atteignant son âme excorporée, on a frappé son corps. Nombre de faits et de noms nous sont cités par les indigènes à l'appui de ces dires.»

Nous avons donné plus haut le témoignage de l'Evêque protestant Nassau: «Les sorciers laissent leurs formes corporelles dormir dans leurs cases, et ils s'en échappent sans être retenus par les murs, les toits ou tout autre obstacle matériel. Ils peuvent ainsi passer rapidement dans les airs, au dessus des arbres.»

Pour notre part, nous n'avons jamais été témoin de pareils faits. Mais, plusieurs fois, des indigènes nous ont rapporté avoir assisté la nuit précédente à des fêtes fort éloignées sur lesquelles ils nous donnaient des détails très circonstanciés. La science actuelle traite tous ces phénomènes, soit de subterfuges, soit de simples hallucinations. Il n'est pas toujours possible de les expliquer ainsi.

---

[1] op. cit. p. 343.

[2] A rapprocher des faits que l'on rapporte s'être passés au presbytère de Clérville, dans la Manche. Cf. de Mirville, dans son livre sur les Esprits et leurs manifestations fluidiques.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Nous avons relaté quelques faits de ce genre dans notre livre: «Fleurs noires» [1].

A l'appui de ces dires, nous pouvons encore donner le trait suivant que nous tenons de Mgr. Buléon, notre ancien confrère et ami au Gabon, mort récemment Evêque du Sénégal. Ce récit, dont il nous garantissait l'authenticité matérielle, confirme bien les paroles de Mgr. Le Roy.

Un soir, Mgr. Buléon, alors supérieur de la Mission du Fernan-Vaz, prenait le frais, assis sur la vérandah avec tous ses confrères. Tout à coup les enfants accoururent vers lui, montrant un globe de feu qui s'approchait des toitures de pailles de la Mission. Tous étaient unanimes à déclarer que c'était un des sorciers voisins qui avait pris cette forme pour venir incendier la maison. Le P. Buléon, bien que très peu convaincu, prit son fusil et l'ayant chargé soigneusement, tira à tout hasard sur le globe de feu. Celui-ci disparut aussitôt. Le lendemain, de grand matin, les hommes du village voisin venaient chercher le Père pour aller voir un mourant et tâcher de le guérir. Il le trouva en piteux état, criblé de grains de plomb, suites évidentes d'un coup de feu reçu tout récemment. Or, les grains de plomb étaient exactement pareils à ceux dont s'était servi le Père. Au Fernan-Vaz, le plomb de chasse n'est pas précisément commun! L'individu mourut presque aussitôt, au grand regret du Père, qui aurait bien voulu plus amples explications. Les Noirs, eux, n'hésitèrent pas. Tous déclarèrent que le globe de feu était bien un sorcier, et que c'était lui qui avait reçu le coup de fusil du P. Buléon.

Evidemment, le fait n'est pas absolument probant. Mais quoiqu'il en soit, il est assez curieux de retrouver à l'autre extrémité de l'Afrique et sur le versant de l'Océan Indien, chez les Ba-rongu, les mêmes croyances au sujet des sorciers qu'en Gabonie.

«Ainsi, écrit Mr. H. Junod [2], la théorie d'après laquelle un être humain, encore vivant, peut jeter un sort, un maléfice à un autre, repose sur une doctrine psychologique étrange, mais dont les Ba-rongu sont absolument convaincus. La voici: Il est

[1] Fleurs noires et Ames blanches, par le P. Trilles, chez Desclée 1911. Voir en particulier le récit intitulé «Une aventure stupéfiante» p. 200 et ss.

[2] Les Ba-rongu, op. cit. p. 438.

certains individus qui ont la faculté de se dédoubler, pour ainsi dire, durant leur sommeil. Tandis que leur tête repose sur leur oreiller de bois, dans leur hutte, et que leur corps est endormi, leur esprit ou plutôt l'esprit malin qui est en eux et que l'on nomme noyi (pl. ba-loyi, ce sont les jeteurs de sort), se détache d'eux, sort de la hutte en traversant la couronne tressée qui se trouve au sommet du toit et s'en va commettre le crime de sorcellerie (ku-loya, bu-loyi) durant les heures ténébreuses de la nuit. D'après les uns, ces ba-loyi volent avec de grandes ailes, et un homme de Chérindja me disait qu'on les entendait passer au dessus des sentiers, dans l'obscurité. Ils portent avec eux des drogues mortelles (psidjuédjué, miri), qu'ils vont administrer nuitamment à leurs victimes, en leur inoculant ainsi les maladies graves (tchéla tingati). D'après d'autres, ils se couchent comme des vampires sur ceux qu'ils ensorcellent, leur causent ainsi la sensation angoissante d'être écrasés et leur donnent des cauchemars affreux. Enfin on dit aussi qu'ils apparaissent au sommet des arbres, dans des flammes de feu. Quand ils se sont attaqués à un enfant, celui-ci commence à être plein de la vermine qu'ils lui ont jetée[1] et on ne peut plus l'en débarrasser.

«L'esprit malin, ayant tué enfin sa victime, emporte sa chair, va la cacher dans des endrois retirés, et durant les nuits suivantes, il s'en repaît, il s'en régale car les ba-loyi sont avant tout des mangeurs d'hommes: c'est pour se procurer de la chair humaine qu'ils accomplissent ces ténébreuses pratiques. Vers le matin, ils rentrent dans leur enveloppe corporelle, et quand ils se réveillent, ils ne savent absolument rien des horreurs qu'ils ont commises la nuit. Tous leurs crimes se perpétuent dans l'inconscience la plus complète.

«Une énigme populaire, fort expressive dans sa brièveté, rend bien cette idée du sorcier-flamme:

Njito bo?
Noyi lwe.
Ce feu?
Le sorcier-feu.»

[1] Cette croyance était commune encore en Champagne au siècle dernier. Les bergers passaient pour avoir ce don!

Il est curieux de rencontrer le même sentiment chez les Fâñ: Ndua béyèm, le feu des sorciers, disent-ils; ce sont les feux follets que l'on voit errer çà et là et qui accompagnent parfois les sorciers dans leurs courses nocturnes, mais ce ne sont pas les sorciers eux-mêmes, mais Béyèm ndua, ce sont les sorciers en feu. D'où le dicton:

Ndua béyèm, otsha béyèm,
Béyèm ndua, béyèm ndua, littéralement: Le feu follet, c'est la torche des sorciers.

Les sorciers qui sont feu, ce sont les sorciers-feu [1], et ce sont deux choses différentes.

Pour nous, quelque soit la réalité ou la non-réalité de ces apparitions ou transformations, illusion, fantasmagorie ou autre, nous n'avons pas à les discuter ici. Très-probablement, à un peu de vrai, s'y mêle beaucoup de faux . . . Mais avant que nous ne connaissions tous les mystères de l'au-delà et du monde supranaturel! . . .

Quelle que soit cependant l'explication que l'on veuille donner de ces transports à distance, fêtes, apparitions etc., il ne reste que trois explications possibles.

1° Les nier purement et simplement. — Cela nous paraît aussi anti-scientifique qu'imprudent. Nous marchons, en cet ordre de choses, sur un terrain difficile et peu exploré encore.

2° Admettre ces faits, au moins pour une certaine part et avec les réserves nécessaires. — C'est possible.

3° Les attribuer, avec plusieurs, non pas aux sorciers eux-mêmes, mais à des esprits qui les possèderaient et se sépareraient d'eux à volonté, les réduire en un mot à une sorte de possession. — La chose pourra, à quelques-uns, paraître admissible.

Aussi, en attendant un contrôle nécessaire, et des faits plus nombreux et mieux étudiés, réserver son opinion, c'est bien probablement le plus sage.

---

[1] C'est-à-dire: Les feux follets sont les torches qui éclairent les sorciers dans leurs courses nocturnes, mais certains autres feux fétiches sont des sorciers changés en feux, et non des feux follets.

§ 7. Les initiations.

Aussi bien chez les sorciers que chez les féticheurs, nous trouvons l'initiation. Elle est évidemment nécessaire. Pour les uns comme pour les autres, elle comporte une série d'épreuves. Nous avons peu à nous en occuper ici: elles concernent plus spécialement la «Religion», qui doit faire partie d'une autre Etude.

Dans les sociétés secrètes, nous rencontrons tout d'abord, pour les unes comme pour les autres, un point commun, la loi du secret.

I° La loi du secret.

Une loi est commune aux initiations soit de féticheurs, soit de sorciers, c'est la loi du secret. Toutefois, cette loi n'a pas la même gravité pour les deux ordres. Beaucoup plus sévère pour les chefs, elle l'est beaucoup moins pour les simples initiés. De même, elle est beaucoup plus stricte pour les sorciers que pour les féticheurs. Dans les sociétés organisées par ces derniers, ce sont surtout les chefs qui y tiennent, pour mieux maintenir leur autorité. Les manquements à la loi du secret y sont sévèrement punis, mais pas toujours de mort. Au contraire, la violation du secret des sorciers entraîne toujours la mort, donnée soit par eux-mêmes, soit par l'esprit qui les commande. Il y a là en effet une question d'intérêt vital: nous avons vu qu'à part certaines circonstances dûes à la position de l'homme lui-même, presque toujours le sorcier découvert est condamné à mort et brûlé. On conçoit que dans ce cas, la loi soit beaucoup plus stricte, que tous soient profondément intéressés à la maintenir de la façon la plus rigoureuse, et de plus à veiller les uns sur les autres. Toutefois, dans certains pays et dans plusieurs tribus, à mesure que le clan se désagrège, et que la civilisation pénètre, les vieilles institutions s'effondrent, et la loi du secret disparaît. Il y a trente ans, par exemple, le Yasi gabonais était en pleine prospérité. Une femme osant prononcer ce mot, un enfant imitant dans ses jeux le geste de reconnaissance des initiés du Yasi, auraient été immédiatement massacrés. Ce geste consistait à placer la main droite étendue, les doigts réunis, sur le haut du bras gauche, en disant en même temps Yasi. Les premiers, les enfants de la mission catholique osèrent imiter ce geste et prononcer le mot rituel. Les anciens de la tribu se fâchèrent: il y eut des coups et même des morts. Aujourd'hui, tout est oublié, et si l'on danse encore la danse sacrée du Yasi, c'est par manière de jeu ou de distraction: le Yasi a disparu, et pour le retrouver dans sa force, il faut maintenant aller loin dans l'intérieur. Ainsi en arrivera-t-il un jour de toutes les institutions païennes à mesure que gagneront la civilisation et le christianisme.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

II° Les initiations proprement dites.

Pour les deux ordres de féticheurs et de sorciers, existent des initiations, composées d'une certaine série d'épreuves. Presque semblables à certains égards, elles diffèrent surtout en ce sens que les initiations de sorciers présentent un caractère beaucoup plus marqué, soit d'obscénité révoltante, soit de pratiques qui nous paraissent répugnantes au premier chef.

Les initiations de féticheurs ou les initiations dans les sociétés secrètes dirigées par les féticheurs comportent toujours des épreuves successives et graduées. Tous les Fâñ, parvenus à l'âge viril, doivent affronter ces épreuves qui les consacreront guerriers. Elles portent le nom de bawu, et la preuve qu'elles ont été subies consiste en cinq entailles tracées sur le cou (bawu béñabur).

Une de ces épreuves consiste à passer nu au travers d'une longue fosse creusée dans le sable, remplie d'épines, et recouverte de terre. On conçoit dans quel état et combien déchiré se trouve le jeune homme au sortir de la fosse.

Les épreuves des sociétés secrètes de sorciers sont d'un ordre différent. Citons-en une, par exemple, que nous trouvons chez les Baluba et que nous rapporte le P. Colle, des Pères Blancs [1]. Une épreuve presque similaire se retrouve chez les Fâñ.

Nous prenons le récit au moment où l'auteur nous décrit la 2° initiation, et dans cette initiation, la deuxième épreuve: le bakayv, ou bahayo:

«L'aspirant glisse à travers une ouverture, pratiquée préalablement dans le toit à l'aide d'une hache, d'une houe et d'une lance, et tombe derrière le foyer. Les confrères y pénètrent par la porte, pendant que l'un d'eux s'en va demander des perles à la famille du jeune Muhabo, et vient les lui remettre. Ce dernier demande alors la permission de se laver, et pour cela paie dix perles; puis à ce qu'on lui rase la tête, et paie encore dix perles. Il rachète ensuite ses habits, laissés dans la cabane avant d'aller dans sa fosse. Enfin le chef lui frotte le front de poudre rouge et blanche prise dans Kabwelulu. Ainsi remis à neuf, il réclame à son tour un cadeau; chaque confrère, voire même chaque membre de sa famille lui donne alors un objet quelconque, et il sort avec la troupe, au milieu des spectateurs qui ne manquent jamais d'accourir, tout en se tenant prudemment à une certaine distance. Le chef initiateur se badigeonne à son tour le bas du dos avec de la terre blanche, saisit des dents une peau de genette, met aux reins une chaînette de perles, et s'avance en se dandinant, le corps penché en avant. Le jeune Muhabo saisit les perles, et imite en tout l'initiateur, mais recouvert d'une natte. A ses côtés marche une petite fille qui a pour office principal de lui adresser les insultes les plus grossières. C'est sa Kaïambi, généralement sa parente. Ils s'avancent ainsi en chantant: «Mulumyangulungu, nyemene lubilo kayeba — Fils d'antilopes (boschbok) fuyez vite le kayeba», c'est-à-dire la scène qui se déroule. Après avoir fait un tour de la sorte, l'aspirant jette sa natte, s'assied sur un siège renversé, prend entre ses genoux le fétiche Kabwelulu, et se penchant au-dessus, il le regarde fixement. Près de lui, le chef se tient debout, tenant de la main un pilon planté dans le sol, et fait tournoyer tout autour une poule en disant:

[1] Bulletin des Pères Blancs, Anvers, 15 Août 1908, p. 229 et ss.

— Fils du buhabo, quel nom choisis-tu?

— Je ne connais pas les noms du buhabo.

— Veux-tu le nom de . . . (et le chef cite un nom, propre aux membres de la secte).

«Ceux-ci répondent à la place du récipiendaire: Non, non, jusqu'à ce que soit prononcé le nom convenu d'avance. A ce moment le chef fracasse sur le pilon la tête de la poule, puis le jeune muhabo va embrasser celui des confrères qui porte le même nom, et lui fait un léger cadeau. Ce sera désormais son nguli

(angom en fàn). Les autres au contraire se mettent aussitôt à l'importuner:

«— Quels sont les objets de ta maison dont nous puissions user à notre guise?

«Le jeune muhabo leur détermine ce sur quoi ils auront droit: sa hache, sa lance, ses flèches etc. C'est le communisme en tout: dès ce jour, tous les bahabo ont droit de se servir de tout ce qui lui appartient. Malheur au récipiendaire qui se montrerait trop chiche: le poison ou d'autres moyens peu avouables l'auraient vite envoyé dans l'autre monde. On cite encore le fait de plusieurs récipiendaires trop avares, brûlés sous la fausse inculpation d'avoir lancé le mauvais sort. Si le cas se présente, la famille du malheureux est elle-même condamnée, sans recours, à payer un esclave qui deviendra membre de la secte à la place du défunt.

«Vient ensuite une cérémonie que j'ai quelque peine à vous décrire. Mais enfin, puisqu'il est convenu de démontrer par le menu détail la honte de cet esclavage diabolique, je vous prie de faire un petit effort sur votre délicatesse. Le chef donc apporte un pot neuf, où des écorces de musye et de kifombe nagent dans un liquide composé de farine et de bière. Chaque confrère se penche à tour de rôle au dessus du vase, et . . . y dépose un crachat. Le chef en dernier lieu saisit gravement ce répugnant breuvage, et dit au récipiendaire: «A présent, bois!» Et celui-ci de s'exécuter, non sans faire la grimace. Après quoi le chef reprend: «Tu as bu quelque chose de nous-mêmes. Sache que désormais tu ne saurais nous atteindre de tes maléfices, attendu qu'après notre mort nous aurons le pouvoir de nous venger et de venir te saisir.» Il brise ensuite le pot, prend la poule dont il a fracassé la tête sur le pilon susdit, et la mange avec ses confrères. Les tessons, les plumes, le bois du foyer qui a fourni le feu pour la cuisson, tout est porté dans le trou d'une termitière, sur laquelle on pique une corne sacrée.

«On prépare ensuite un copieux repas dont le jeune muhabo paiera d'ailleurs les frais, et les tambourins font rage pendant plusieurs jours et plusieurs nuits. L'aspirant est initié, il est muhabo sorti».

Nous avons cité à dessein cet article, car dans une des sectes fâñ nous retrouvons exactement même coutume; seulement, en plus de la salive, on ajoute un tout autre liquide.

Mais souvent, au lieu d'une pratique révoltante, nous en trouvons d'absolument obscènes. Ainsi, pour n'en citer qu'une, parmi les épreuves du Ngil, nous voyons celle-ci. Chaque néophyte doit successivement se coucher nu sur la statue d'argile d'Omoreu, femme du Ngil. La scène qui se passe ensuite, lorsque tous les récipiendaires ont accompli l'acte obscène, répond à ce que nous venons de dire des bakayo. On nous permettra de ne pas insister.

III° L'anthropophagie des féticheurs et des sorciers.

Différence entre les deux actes.

Toutes les sociétés de féticheurs admettent le sacrifice rituel. Dans de nombreux cas, il y a immolation de victime humaine, participation à cette victime. Ces sacrifices revêtent souvent un caractère de cruauté et d'horreur qui nous paraissent révoltants. Nous aurons occasion de traiter plus amplement ce point en parlant du sacrifice.

Ces sacrifices sont rituels: on n'y immole pas pour le plaisir de tuer, pas plus qu'on ne mange la victime pour le plaisir de manger de la viande humaine. Cela est si vrai que jamais on n'y immolera une femme. «Munga hé dzamadzam, hé kie ve nsissim: une femme n'a pas d'importance (au point de vue sacrifice), dit le proverbe fâñ, elle est sans force sur les esprits, car elle est sans âme.»

Dans les fêtes de sorciers, au contraire, et dans les sociétés constituées par eux, on mange de l'homme pour le plaisir de manger de la viande humaine.

Tout d'abord, au dire de tous les Fâñ, et de tous les Noirs, les sorciers s'excorporent pour aller manger le cœur des autres hommes pendant leur sommeil. De là, leur nom de bendzi bur, les mangeurs d'hommes. Tantôt ils le font directement, par eux-mêmes, tantôt par un esprit qui les possède. Nous admettons volontiers qu'il n'y a rien de vrai dans ces accusations, tout au moins au point de vue de la façon dont ils s'y prennent. Mais un point reste indéniable, le fait de cannibalisme.

Ces coutumes sont communes aux peuples voisins.

«Chez les Balubu [1], dès qu'un chef est mort, en attendant le jour des funérailles, le cadavre est placé sous un petit toit de chaume. Cela peut durer quatre, cinq jours et plus; le cadavre en décomposition exhale une odeur insupportable, mais cela ne gêne guère nos Noirs ... Au soleil couchant, la famille députe deux hommes pour procéder à l'enterrement; l'un reçoit une houe, l'autre une hache. Ils suspendent le cercueil à une longue perche, et l'emportent en silence, suivis seulement de quelques proches parents; ils s'en vont ainsi dans la brousse ou la forêt, au milieu des ténèbres, évitant de tout leur pouvoir les regards étrangers. Là, à la lumière indécise d'un feu de paille, ils creusent prestement la tombe, et après y avoir déposé leur fardeau, ils égalisent soigneusement le sol afin que l'on remarque au premier coup d'œil si la tombe est intacte ou violée. Cette précaution n'est pas inutile. Les anthropophages, en effet, sont toujours aux aguets pour découvrir une sépulture récente et en ravir le corps à la faveur des ténèbres. Mais malheur à celui qui se laisserait surprendre dans son harcin ... les parents peuvent le mettre à mort sans crainte de représailles.»

Il nous serait facile de donner d'autres témoignages, et même en nombre considérable. On peut affirmer avec vérité que l'on retrouve ces coutumes et ces sociétés chez tous les peuples bantous.

Chez les Fân, la principale secte, ou société de mangeurs d'hommes, porte le nom d'Akhûâ. Ce nom est tiré de celui d'un oiseau nocturne, l'akhûâ. C'est une sorte de chouette ou de hibou, au cri strident: les affidés s'appellent la nuit au moyen de ce cri qui leur sert de ralliement pour se réunir et se reconnaître. Ainsi, jadis, faisaient les Chouans de Bretagne.

Maintes fois, dans nos courses au Congo-Nord, mon confrère le P. Tessmann et moi avons été exposés à leurs attaques. Souvent il nous a fallu les écarter de vive force.

[1] Bulletin mensuel des Pères Blancs, p. 434 année 1903, p. 114 année 1904.

CHAPITRE XIV.

LES TOTEMS DES SORCIERS ET DE LEURS SOCIÉTÉS SECRÈTES.

NAGUAL ET NAGUALISME.

Sommaire. Les causes des nombreuses confusions entre Bûcheurs et sorciers. Points à-traiter dans ce chapitre. La constitution des totems.

§ 1. Les différents totems de sorciers.

§ 2. Nagual et nagualisme.

1° Notion du nagual. Le nagual d'après Mr. van Gennep. — Pourquoi nous n'adoptons pas sa définition. — La véritable notion du nagual.

2° Notre première rencontre avec un nagual.

3° L'origine du mot nagual. Le mot et la chose. Les auteurs qui ont traité les premiers du nagual. Quelques faits rapportés par ces auteurs.

§ 3. L'initiation au nagual.

1° Initiation du jeune guerrier.

2° L'initiation du Bûcheur. Le choix du totem. La cérémonie d'initiation.

3° L'initiation du sorcier et le nagual. L'initiation au nagual.

4° Résumé des différences entre le nagual et le totem.

5° Le totem du fondateur d'une tribu est souvent son nagual.

6° Différence entre le nagual et le sorcier transformé en animal. Ce qu'il faut penser de cette transformation.

§ 4. Les confréries des sorciers et leurs totems.

[p. 465]

Les pages précédentes ont montré les relations étroites mais aussi les différences profondes qui existent entre féticheurs et sorciers. Les relations proviennent d'un personnage souvent identique, les différences sont dûes à un lot complètement différent et souvent opposé.

Si nous avons autant insisté sur ce point, ce n'est pas en vue d'une étude plus ou moins approfondie de ces deux ordres: elle n'aurait pas sa place indiquée ici. Ces observations étaient nécessaires à cause de leurs totems, très différents d'esprit et de nature, et sur lesquels on nous paraît avoir fait souvent quelques erreurs, les prenant à tort indifféremment les une pour les autres. Or, rien n'est moins juste que cette conception.

Ces erreurs sont dûes d'abord à la confusion entre féticheurs et sorciers, termes pris à tort l'un pour l'autre. Nous ne nous en préoccuperons plus désormais. Elles sont attribuables ensuite à une connaissance imparfaite du sujet, sur lequel nous nous efforcerons d'apporter quelques données nouvelles. Une grande source des confusions qui surgissent ainsi sans cesse, provient, nous semble-t-il, des divers totems qui peuvent appartenir à un même sorcier, à plusieurs titres différents. De plus, cette transformation du sorcier en animal qu'on lui prête souvent, à tort ou à raison, joue un grand rôle.

De là, les points suivants, utiles à faire remarquer:

Les différents totems de tout sorcier appartiennent à trois catégories distinctes:

1° En tant qu'il fait partie d'une tribu.

2° En tant qu'il peut, en même temps que sorcier, être aussi féticheur.

3° En tant que sorcier proprement dit.

* * *

1° En tant qu'il fait partie, comme tout guerrier, de la tribu, chaque sorcier a les totems suivants: 1° totem tribal, 2° de clan, 3° de phratrie, 4° de famille, 5° individuel.

Nous avons déjà étudié ces divers totems et fait remarquer qu'en somme ils peuvent se résumer et se résument souvent, de fait, en un même totem.

II° En tant qu'il peut être féticheur, le sorcier aura par là même deux totems: 1° un totem individuel, 2° un totem de classe.

Rien n'empêche que ces totems soient encore similaires, ou également les mêmes que les totems de la première catégorie. Dans ce cas, ils se fortifient les uns les autres: la puissance augmente d'autant, et si les défenses totémiques sont plus strictes, l'observance est aussi plus facile. En fait, les féticheurs donnent souvent aux nouveaux adeptes comme totem individuel le totem de clan ou de famille, à condition que ce soit un totem «animal». Le totem de classe, existant déjà, est par là même indépendant de la volonté individuelle du féticheur «recevant», ou initiateur, aussi bien que du «récipiendaire».

III° En tant que sorcier:

1° le sorcier n'a pas de totem individuel, mais «un animal voué». Nous donnerons les différences profondes qui existent entre «totem» et «animal voué».

2° à l'imitation des classes de féticheurs, les classes d'initiés dirigées par les sorciers ont des totems de classes. Ces classes se recrutent chacune dans leur tribu.

3° les sociétés exclusivement formées de sorciers, se recrutent dans plusieurs tribus différentes, et au besoin, quelque soit l'état politique des tribus, ennemies ou non. Elles englobent la nation toute entière. Un sorcier est toujours l'allié de tout autre sorcier, ou moins au point de vue de la fédération, car souvent la lutte, au point de vue influence, est implacable entre eux.

Ces sociétés de sorciers n'ont point de totem, mais obéissent à un esprit.

Enfin, nous avons déjà parlé des diverses transformations de sorciers. Nous y reviendrons rapidement pour montrer qu'il ne faut pas les confondre, comme on l'a fait souvent, avec le nagual ou «animal voué» au sorcier.

Nous avons traité suffisamment des totems nationaux et autres pour n'avoir pas besoin d'y revenir ici en parlant du sorcier. Il les possède seulement en tant que guerrier faisant partie d'une collectivité organisée.

En tant que féticheur, il peut avoir deux totems, un totem individuel, un totem de classe. Nous les avons déjà étudiés. Quelques-uns méritent donc ici.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

§ 1. Les différents totems de sorciers.

Les féticheurs, ayant calqué leur organisation sur celle de la tribu, et élevé en quelque sorte pouvoir contre pouvoir, ont tout d'abord chacun leur totem individuel, qu'ils reçoivent à leur entrée dans la société. Ils ont également donné des totems à leurs collectivités organisées.

A son entrée dans la société, le jeune homme recevra donc un totem. Ce totem, nous le savons déjà, sera généralement un animal ou un oiseau dont les qualités sont de nature à être utiles au protégé.

De même que chaque individu reçoit son totem, de même chaque classe de féticheurs possède son totem: pour les mêmes raisons que nous avons déjà citées, c'est également un animal ou un oiseau. Ce protecteur porte le nom de mvame ou d'ètotore.

Pour les sorciers, la situation est toute différente.

A l'imitation des féticheurs, pour mieux se dissimuler, ou encore unir leurs efforts en vue d'un but commun, ils ont donc, eux aussi, constitué des sociétés. Mais, chose très importante à remarquer à ce point de vue du totémisme, ces sociétés sont pour ainsi dire «doubles».

Tout d'abord, dans les sociétés secrètes dirigées par les féticheurs, il y a les chefs, qui sont féticheurs, et les adeptes ou initiés, ayant subi les épreuves, qui, eux, ne sont nullement féticheurs. De même, dans les sociétés fondées et dirigées par les sorciers, nous trouvons deux grades ou deux sortes différentes d'individus: 1° les sorciers: ils se recrutent en dehors de la société, au moyen d'enfants longuement formés dans ce but; 2° les initiés, obéissant aux ordres des sorciers, et participant aux fêtes anthropophagiques.

Cette formation est calquée sur celle de la tribu ou sur les formations similaires des féticheurs. De là, chaque société aura son totem particulier de «classe». Ce totem sera encore un animal; on lui rendra d'ailleurs les honneurs habituels; le culte sera le même; en somme, rien de changé. Ainsi, chez les Baluba, où l'organisation des sorciers, beaucoup plus forte, tend à envahir les confréries de féticheurs, et à les dominer en se mêlant avec elles, nous trouvons les sorciers Bahayo partagés en cinq classes, ayant chacune leur totem protecteur: 1° les Mulumba avec l'oiseau kasozo, 2° les Kileme avec l'oiseau kinnga, 3° les Tundulu avec l'antilope tundu, 4° les Mutendu avec l'oiseau tuba, 5° les Lubele avec la tourterelle et le crocodile.

De même, chez les Fàn, les Ngil auront le poisson ngil, les Akkàà, l'oiseau akkàà ou chouette, les Wòè le crocodile, les Voda[1] le serpent noir. Tous ces totems rentrent dans la loi générale, c'est-à-dire que, par exemple, si dans une tribu où les Wòè n'existaient pas encore, une société de ce genre se fonde, par le fait même, elle aura le crocodile pour totem. Ce ne sera pas tout crocodile, mais seulement les crocodiles, issus et parents des crocodiles déjà totems de la société mère dont la nouvelle société ne sera qu'une filiale. Dans ce cas, au fondateur de déterminer à quels signes et de quelle manière on pourra reconnaître le totem crocodile protecteur de la nouvelle secte. Dans cette formation, nous ne trouvons donc rien qui déroge à la loi générale.

Si les sorciers étaient ainsi restés constitués, il n'y aurait là en somme qu'une lutte d'intérêts et de pouvoirs. Mais de même que les féticheurs se sont constitués en associations où les seuls féticheurs sont admis, de même les sorciers se sont constitués en sociétés, en associations, d'où tout initié non sorcier est soigneusement exclus. Là, nous entrons dans un domaine beaucoup plus mystérieux.

Lorsque, plus haut, nous parlions de ces réunions de sorciers, où, venus de loin par des moyens inconnus, ils se rassemblaient en quelque lieu écarté, nous parlions des seules réunions de sorciers proprement dits, qui excluent les simples adeptes.

* * *

Ayant ainsi écarté tous les totems qui n'appartiennent point au sorcier en tant que tel, nous restons en présence des points suivants:

1° Au premier abord, chaque sorcier paraît avoir son totem: c'est un animal, un oiseau, un reptile, auquel il rend des honneurs particuliers.

[1] Cf. avec les l'endroit des Antilles, société noire secrète adorant le serpent.

La plupart des auteurs désignent cet animal familier sous le nom de nagual, nyarong etc. L'ensemble des faits qui se rapportent au nagual prendra naturellement le nom de nagualisme. Or, ces auteurs ne voient dans le nagual, nyarong etc. et dans le nagualisme, qu'une forme particulière de totems et de totémisme. Cette opinion est-elle fondée? Le nagual est-il un totem?

Nous sommes d'une opinion complètement opposée.

Nous entrons ici dans un domaine tellement particulier que nous serons forcés de nous étendre assez longuement.

2° Si les confréries ou associations dirigées par les sorciers ont des totems protecteurs, animaux ou oiseaux, les associations de sorciers proprement dites n'en ont pas. Tous sont unanimes à le dire: ils obéissent à un esprit que les Fân désignent sous le nom d'engangore.

3° L'animal voué, ou nagual, ne doit pas être confondu avec le sorcier lui-même, si tant est que ce dernier ait le pouvoir, comme les Noirs l'affirment, de se transformer lui-même en animal, oiseau etc.

§ 2. Nagual et nagualisme.

En parlant de la notion du totem[1], nous avions mentionné le nagual et le nagualisme, comme devant être différenciés du totem et du totémisme. «Ce sont, disions-nous, des faits qui tout en se rattachant au totem par des liens étroits, paraissent néanmoins devoir en être séparés comme ne venant pas de la même source et ressortissant d'un autre ensemble culturel»[2]. Et plus loin[3]: «Quantité de faits qui se rapportent au nagualisme et, par conséquent, d'une certaine manière au culte de l'animal fétiche sont à rejeter complètement en dehors du totémisme . . .» Ailleurs encore[4]. «Nous ne pouvons souscrire à l'opinion de VAN GENNEP écrivant: «Avec A. LANG, je réserve le nom de totem à l'allié animal, végétal etc., d'un groupe de parents, clan, phratrie etc., et préfère voir conservé aux alliés et protecteurs animaux etc. d'individus leur nom local (nyarong, nagual etc.). Sinon, il n'y a plus moyen de s'entendre.»

[1] Chap. II, p. 34, en note, et p. 34 et 35.

[2] p. 34. [3] p. 34. [4] p. 34.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

I° Notion du nagual.

Dans les pages précédentes, nous avons examiné la genèse du totem, et montré comment, pour nous, totem individuel, totem de famille, de phratrie, de clan, de tribu et de nation ressortissaient d'un même corps de doctrine: comment ils avaient tous, pour même origine, le totem du fondateur de la tribu, du premier père de la première famille, cellule sociale qui par examination successive avait donné la nation avec toutes les collectivités que nous y trouvons aujourd'hui.

Il est évident qu'à la rigueur, s'il ne s'agissait que d'une «question de mots», d'une appellation à donner à un ensemble de faits, on pourrait parfaitement appeler nagualisme l'ensemble des faits se rapportant au nagual, et conserver le nom local de nyarong, nagual etc., pour désigner l'allié et le protecteur animal des individus.

Malheureusement, il n'en est pas ainsi. Le mot nagual a déjà son appellation reconnue: ce n'est pas un totem individuel: c'est «l'animal voué».

Le nagual, dit VAN GENNEP [1], après LANG [2] est le nom local du totem individuel.

Nous ne saurions, pour les Fâh, admettre cette opinion, et toutes les recherches que nous avons pu faire, tant dans les tribus voisines que pour celles de Madagascar, dont parle VAN GENNEP, nous confirment dans notre idée. Le nagual n'est pas le nom local du totem individuel, mais «d'un» totem individuel, ou bien mieux encore, car nous n'admettons même pas qu'il y ait là «totem», d'un «animal voué» à certains individus, peu nombreux qui, dans l'espèce, sont les sorciers. De là, les propositions suivantes:

1° Le nagual n'est pas le nom local du totem individuel: c'est le nom local du protecteur animal de «certains» individus: ce sont deux conceptions différentes répondant à des buts divers. Et nous ne disons pas «totem», mais «protecteur animal», ce qui n'est pas la même chose. Profonde est la distinction entre ces deux mots: le totem individuel et le totem de certains individus, distinction qui, au premier abord, paraît si peu importante.

[1] VAN GENNEP, Tabou et Totémisme à Madagascar, p. 300.
[2] A. LANG, Social Origins, p. 133—134.

2° Nagual et nagualisme se «rapprochent» étroitement du totem et du totémisme, en ce que, dans les deux, nous trouvons un protecteur animal et un ensemble de faits se rapportant à ce protecteur, mais ils sont «différenciés» complètement en ce sens que:

a) Le totem, considéré dans sa forme essentielle, c'est-à-dire comme totem familial ou tribal, n'est pas un être vivant actuellement, mais un être ayant vécu autrefois, ayant transmis ses qualités, et surtout la vertu de son alliance, à tous ses descendants, ou fait à ses seuls descendants vivant actuellement.

Le nagual, au contraire, n'existe pas en tant que nagual familial ou tribal. Le nagual qui semble protecteur d'une collectivité (telle une société secrète) est le protecteur «du chef» de cette collectivité, et non de la collectivité.

Si l'on veut admettre avec Lang et van Gennep que le nagual est le totem individuel, on nie par là même le totémisme. En effet, au dire de tous les auteurs[1], le culte est totémique, lorsqu'il s'adresse, non pas à un individu, mais à une collectivité. Nous nous rallions pleinement à cette opinion. Or, l'animal protecteur, ou plutôt, puisque ce peut être toute autre chose qu'un animal, l'être donné comme protecteur, à tout individu ou du moins à la plupart des individus à leur naissance, représente une collectivité, et non pas un être isolé. Un individu qui aura pour totem individuel le tigre, aura pour totem non pas tous les tigres, mais seulement «les» tigres offrant telle particularité, donc une collectivité. L'individu, au contraire, qui aura «un» tigre comme nagual aura «ce» tigre-là «seul» comme nagual: il n'en pourra changer, et les autres tigres ne lui servent rien. Ce tigre, comme tous les autres naguals, quelqu'ils soient, constituera donc une unité, et non pas une collectivité. Donc, il n'y aura pas totémisme.

D'où cette deuxième conclusion:

b) Le nagual constituant une unité, et non pas une collectivité, ne saurait être totem, et le nagualisme est par là même tout différent du totémisme.

Enfin, par suite même de ce que nous avons dit, le totem individuel ne saurait disparaître: la mort en effet de tel ou tel tigre peut affecter, ou non, la tribu, le clan, la famille, ou l'individu dont il est, non pas le totem, mais un totem. Mais la mort de ce tigre ne sera en aucune façon la mort du totem, puisque le totem tigre est une collectivité, aussi bien pour la tribu que pour l'individu.

[1] cf. Frazer, Religion des peuples non civilisés, p. 288.

Au contraire, la mort de tel ou tel tigre, nagual de tel sorcier, l'affectera profondément. Là, en effet, il n'y a pas collectivité, mais unité. Jamais le nagual mort ne peut être remplacé. Tant pis pour le sorcier! il perd par cette mort de son animal voué l'agent le plus actif de son autorité et de sa puissance. Souvent, sa propre vie est liée à celle de son nagual et réciproquement: s'il est lui-même malade ou s'il meurt, son nagual meurt ou souffre: de même, si le nagual meurt ou souffre, l'homme également meurt ou souffre.

Donc, en résumé, si un sorcier a pour totem individuel, le tigre, c'est le clan-tigre, c'est telle ou telle collectivité tigre offrant telles ou telles particularités qu'il a pour totem et non une unité. De là, peu importe pour lui que tel ou tel tigre de cette collectivité vienne à mourir. S'il n'y a eu aucune faute de sa part, il ne s'en préoccupera en aucune façon. Si, au contraire, il y a faute, ce sera une faute rituelle qu'il devra expier par des sacrifices déterminés d'avance.

Mais si un sorcier a pour nagual un tigre, ce tigre est une unité: ce n'est pas le clan tigre qui est nagual, ce n'est pas la collectivité. Le totem individuel se remplace: le nagual ne se remplace pas.

II° Notre première rencontre avec le nagual.

Ce fut en 1896 que nous rencontrâmes pour la première fois chez les Fâ̂t, un nagual et son «propriétaire». Nous nous trouvions alors dans un village de la rivière Tsini[1], nommé Ongek.

Voici ce que j'écrivais quelque temps après:

«En ce village d'Ongek, nous avions été reçus par un vieux chef qui, très libéralement du reste, nous avait offert la moitié de sa case, se réservant un seul coin de la grande chambre d'entrée.

[1] Cette rivière coule au nord de Libreville, et va se jeter dans le Mondah. Le territoire qu'elle arrose est assez peuplé: on y trouve les Fâ̂t des tribus Tsaverbé, Ekangi, Abé etc., les Bulu, les Benga et plusieurs autres peuples, mêlés à la mer et presque détruits.

Nos catéchistes couchaient, les uns près de lui, les autres avec moi, dans la petite chambre où reposait ordinairement le vieillard.

La nuit s'écoulait tranquille quand, soudain, vers les deux heures du matin, je suis réveillé par un froissement de feuilles sèches tout près de moi. J'écarte les plis de ma moustiquaire; j'écoute: rien, je me serai trompé. Je referme la moustiquaire et me dispose à dormir de nouveau: le même bruit se renouvelle; n'y tenant plus, je saute à bas de mon lit et allume ma torche. Horreur . . . Jugez de mon effroi: un énorme serpent noir, long de près de trois mètres, de l'espèce la plus dangereuse, se tenait immobile, lové dans un coin, la tête dressée, les yeux brillants, sifflant de fureur, prêt à s'élancer. Instinctivement, je bondis sur mon fusil, mettant l'animal en joue. Le coup va partir: déjà les enfants, réveillés en sursaut, ont poussé un cri de terreur folle; mais, au même instant, la torche est éteinte, mon arme relevée d'un coup sec: la charge s'est perdue en l'air.

«— Ne tire plus, minizé[1]; ne tire plus, je t'en prie, s'est écrié le vieillard, qui soudain a surgi à mes côtés, car c'est lui qui a relevé mon fusil, ne tire plus. En tuant le serpent, c'est moi que tu aurais tué: ne crains rien; le serpent est mon éléélé.»

Cette scène s'était passée bien plus vite que je ne saurais le retracer ici. Et déjà, le chef s'était jeté à genoux près du reptile, l'entourait de ses bras, le serrait sur sa poitrine. L'animal se laissait faire tranquillement, sans révolte, ne manifestant ni colère ni frayeur. Le vieux chef l'emporta ainsi, le coucha près de lui dans l'autre case, me recommandant bien de ne plus avoir peur, et surtout de ne jamais parler de la chose.

Cependant, les enfants et moi, fortement impressionnés, nous ne dormîmes plus de cette nuit-là, et j'attendais le jour avec impatience pour demander à mon hôte de plus amples explications.

«— C'est mon éléélé! s'était-il écrié, et les enfants me disaient, de leur côté: «Prends bien garde, minizé, c'est le bon Dieu qui nous a protégés tous. Le vieux coquin avait envoyé son animal pour nous tuer: sois-en sûr. C'est son éléélé.!

Sur le moment, j'avoue que je restai assez sceptique! Malgré mes instances, le vieux chef ne voulut me donner aucune explication, prétextant la loi absolue du secret de l'éléméla. Plus tard, je compris d'autant mieux son mutisme que, n'ayant pu me tuer une première fois, il essaya, avec un certain succès, il faut le lui reconnaître, de m'empoisonner. J'étais cependant sur la voie: après maintes recherches ultérieures, il me fut facile de constater, à bien des reprises, l'existence des éléméla et d'étudier leur initiation. Éléméla et nagual étaient une seule et même chose.

[1] Minizé, corruption du mot anglais «minister» = missionnaire.

Mais avant de revenir à notre éléméla, commençons par transcrire de nouveau ce que nous écrivions en 1898 [1], au sujet du nagual, longtemps avant que Mr. van Gennep ne se fût à son tour occupé de la question.

III° L'origine du mot nagual. Le mot et la chose.

Le mot nagual, aujourd'hui assez fréquemment employé, est dû aux langues indiennes caraïbes des Antilles. Dans sa forme première, nakual, il désigne un animal devenu frère de sang d'un homme par inoculation réciproque; c'est là le sens primitif. D'autres auteurs ont voulu y voir le génie familier. C'est un tort, à notre avis. Le nagual se rapproche, à certains points de vue, du nyarong malgache. Le premier auteur, pensons-nous, qui ait parlé du nagualisme, date du XVII° siècle. C'est Barroso de Mendoza, évêque missionnaire de l'Amérique centrale, cité dans la Carta pastoralis, de Nuez de la Vega, évêque de Chiapas. Vient ensuite le P. Benzoni, dans sa «Description géographique de S° Domingue», plus tard, l'abbé Brasseur dans ses «Antiquités mexicaines». Actuellement, ce mot est devenu d'usage courant.

Ouvrons le livre publié par l'abbé Brasseur, sous le titre d'Antiquités mexicaines. Nous y trouverons le récit de cérémonies qui ressemblent étrangement aux nôtres et complètent admirablement les lignes précédentes.

«Les missionnaires, dit-il, ont trouvé un grand obstacle à la conversion des indigènes dans le nagualisme (nakual, génie familier, Satan). Tout enfant recevait le nom correspondant au jour astrologique qui l'avait vu naître. On le voyait au protecteur visible ou invisible de toute sa vie, à celui qu'il devait regarder, selon l'expression de l'évêque de Chiapas, comme les catholiques regardent

[1] Voir Missions Catholiques 8 Juillet 1898.

leur ange gardien. Le maître ouvrait à l'enfant une veine derrière l'oreille ou sous la langue, en tirait, à l'aide d'une lancette d'obéidienne, quelques gouttes de sang qu'il offrait au démon comme une marque de servage et le signe d'un pacte contracté avec le nagual. Ensuite, le maître désignait au père de l'enfant la caverne où, arrivé à l'âge de raison, celui-ci devait se rendre, afin de ratifier en personne, avec son nagual, le contrat tenu en son nom.»

«A son entrée dans la vie, dit à son tour le P. Benoa (Description géographique de Saint-Domingue, p. 222), le néophyte est voué à un animal quelconque. Au jour désigné, l'initiateur vient chercher son disciple pour lui présenter l'animal qui lui a été indiqué au jour de sa naissance et dont il doit partager le sort et la fortune. Au milieu de la nuit, il offre un sacrifice au démon qui fait venir son nagual sous la forme de l'animal dont il porte le nom, lion, serpent, crocodile, mais qui se montre alors si doux, si privé, si docile, que le jeune homme ne peut s'empêcher de le caresser et de lui parler comme à un ami intime. Cette entrevue, pleine de tendresse, est comme le sceau du pacte conclu avec le démon. Dès ce moment, leur sort est tellement lié que, par une permission de Dieu et par un châtiment positif du Ciel sur ces hommes aveugles, ils sont abandonnés entièrement à l'ennemi du salut: ils se livrent à lui avec une volonté si complète que Satan leur fait sentir le contre-coup des blessures reçues par l'animal, leur ami et nagual.»

«Le P. Dénoe, dit plus loin Benoa, était un religieux de beaucoup de courage et de sang-froid. Malgré son âge avancé, rien ne l'intimidait. Il reprenait sans crainte, quand ils commettaient quelque chose de répréhensible, tous ceux qui l'entouraient. De ce nombre fut un Indien coupable d'une faute très grave. L'indigène en éprouva un vif ressentiment. Pour se venger, il alla se poster dans une rivière qui sort du lac et que le religieux devait traverser pour aller confesser un moribond. Le P. Dénoe prit un des chevaux du couvent et partit tranquillement en récitant son office; à peine fut-il entré dans la rivière avec sa monture qu'il se sentit arrêté, son cheval faisant de vains efforts pour avancer. Ayant baissé la tête pour reconnaître la cause de cette résistance, il aperçut un caïman qui cherchait à entraîner l'animal au fond de l'eau.

«A cette vue, le P. Dáso lança son cheval avec tant de vigueur qu'il entraîna le caïman hors de la rivière. Les ruades de la monture et quelques coups d'un bâton ferré sur la tête de l'animal le forcèrent à lâcher prise et le religieux continua son chemin, laissant la bête étendue sur le rivage. En arrivant au lieu où il était attendu, son premier soin fut de raconter ce qui venait d'arriver. Mais, au moment où il achevait de confesser son malade, on lui annonça que l'Indien, puni quelques jours auparavant, venait de mourir «des suites, avait-il dit, des coups qu'il avait reçus du cheval du P. Dáso». Le religieux alla aux informations: on trouva le caïman mort sur les bords de la rivière et l'on constata que l'Indien portait effectivement les marques des blessures dont son nagual avait dû périr.»

De son côté, un autre écrivain du XVIIIe siècle, Nunez de la Vega, évêque de Chiapas, écrit dans sa Carta pastoralis ces mots bien significatifs:

«Outre les communications particulières avec leurs naguals, les maîtres pouvaient à leur gré se transformer sous la figure de l'animal qu'ils avaient pris pour génie tutélaire. Les démons revêtaient également toutes les formes qui plaisaient à leurs amis pour la satisfaction de leurs désirs» [1].

Non seulement ces coutumes existent en Amérique, mais on les retrouve aussi bien dans les autres parties de l'Afrique, à Madagascar, par exemple, où le crocodile-nagual est fréquent [2], chez les Baluba et dans les nombreuses tribus du Centre africain. Nos Annales apostoliques du St Esprit ainsi que le Bulletin des Pères Blancs d'Afrique ont cité à maintes reprises de nombreux faits se rapportant à cet ordre de phénomènes.

Les explications varient: la chose demeure certaine. Il est étrange de retrouver mêmes croyances, mêmes transformations en Amérique et en Afrique.

§ 3. L'initiation au nagual.

L'initiation qui donne un animal voué au nagual à certains individus (sorciers), est et ne peut être que toute différente de l'initiation habituelle au totem, soit de guerrier, soit même de fétiseur.

[1] Nous n'insistons pas sur ces «formes» particulières.
[2] Voir aux Notes justificatives la Note III.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Ainsi, lorsque le jeune homme, arrivé à l'âge viril, est appelé à faire partie des guerriers, il subira une série d'épreuves, en même temps qu'on lui fera «connaître» le totem de la tribu; bien souvent, il recevra après les épreuves le totem qui sera désormais, à proprement parler, son totem individuel. Nous avons déjà vu quelques-unes de ces initiations. Décrivons brièvement, pour mieux en faire ressortir la différence avec le nagual, l'initiation du jeune guerrier et l'initiation du féticheur, puis le choix de leurs totems.

F' L'initiation du jeune guerrier.

Par suite de l'esprit qui a présidé à leur formation, les premières initiations du jeune guerrier constituent pour ainsi dire une sorte de seconde naissance. En en retraçant les principales cérémonies, on pourra donc y retrouver facilement une partie des rétrogressements dûs de la naissance[1].

Lorsque le temps de l'initiation est arrivé pour les jeunes gens, le chef du village ou de la tribu réunit ses guerriers dans l'abéke et appelle tous ceux qui doivent prendre part aux épreuves. Chacun s'approche tour à tour et remet un cadeau dans une corbeille préparée d'avance. Cette corbeille est ensuite pendue dans l'abéke en l'honneur des esprits[2].

Ce cadeau consiste en un pagne, un anneau de cuivre, deux bracelets et un collier du même métal, parfois de fer, et deux colliers de perles, de la poudre, des balles, une provision de bois rouge écrasé destiné à la toilette du chef le jour de l'initiation, et un peu d'huile. Le féticheur aura les mêmes cadeaux et de plus, il recevra de chaque associé, ou tout au moins de plusieurs, s'ils sont pauvres, un fusil par tête, un cabri et deux poules noires. Dans l'intérieur du pays on doit y ajouter un chien châtré destiné au repas final et spécialement engraissé à ce sujet. Le don du fusil et du cabri est facultatif, mais l'omettre serait s'exposer à la colère du féticheur: on s'en garde bien. Le jour de l'épreuve arrivé, les jeunes gens sont emmenés dans la forêt et y restent pendant un mois sous la direction du féticheur pour y recevoir les enseignements nécessaires. Les chefs de famille y sont également admis pour transmettre les traditions du clan. Les épreuves diverses, destinées à voir si le jeune aspirant est vraiment apte à subir les fatigues inhérentes à sa nouvelle position, durent un mois. Lorsque la lune est nouvelle, les épreuves prennent fin. Les jeunes gens sont alors conduits dans une clairière au milieu de laquelle on a creusé de vastes et profondes fosses. On les a ensuite comblées avec des épines, feuilles de rotangs acérées, régimes de palmiers privés de leurs noix et dès lors fort piquants. On les piétine, on les recouvre de sable, en y laissant seulement une étroite ouverture. Ces fosses portent le nom de bibi bjyô. Au signal donné, tous les jeunes gens s'y précipitent en se tenant par la main. S'il y a un ou plusieurs fils de chefs, ils ont droit à l'honneur (!) de se frayer les premiers un passage à travers ces fosses, longues au moins de 8 ou 10 m. Aussi est-il facile de concevoir en quel état les jeunes gens en sortent. On les conduit au bain. Le féticheur leur entaille (etsile) alors sur le cou, avec un instrument spécial (mfor), cinq marques parallèles, nommées bawu. Dès lors, les jeunes gens ont le droit de manger la chair du sanglier (ngâ) et de l'antilope rouge (mvin) qui leur était jusqu'alors interdite.

[1] Voir pour plus amples informations: Les Rites de la Naissance chez les Fân, par le P. Trilles. Bull. Soc. de Géo. de Neuchâtel, vol. XX, 1919—11.

[2] Cf. Sacquepée, Notes ethnographiques sur les Fân, op. cit., p. 2.

Après cette cérémonie, les jeunes gens sont ramenés dans la forêt pour y recevoir leur totem. Chacun est alors renfermé dans sa case. Pendant la première soirée toute entière, on lui donne à boire la sève fermentée du raphia dans laquelle on a fait infuser une écorce amère et excitante, l'owalé. En même temps, il fume le chanvre (yam)[1].

Bientôt, le jeune homme s'endort comme abruti. On l'étend alors sur sa natte, et le lendemain, au réveil, il déclare au féticheur qu'il a vu en songe tel animal ou arbre, minéral etc. Il doit le décrire soigneusement, avec toutes ses marques, son aspect, l'endroit où il l'a vu etc. Cette épreuve recommence trois jours de suite. Le troisième jour, le féticheur qui a présidé à l'initiation l'appelle de nouveau, et lui fait répéter ses trois songes. Il l'envoie ensuite chercher l'un des trois objets, à son choix rêvés, en employant les paroles suivantes:

---

[1] Voir dans Missions catholiques (mai 1896) notre article: L'initiation au Bwiti.

Va chercher cet objet (ou cet animal),
Va le chercher avec confiance!
L'esprit de tes pères t'accompagne[1],
C'est lui qui guidera tes pas
Et te préservera de tout danger.
Que le soleil, père des choses, soit ta lumière,
Que nul ne se dérobe devant toi!
Va, et sois plein de confiance.

Le féticheur bénit alors le jeune homme avec le miam rituel, c'est-à-dire en mâchant l'amome (miam), et en crachant ensuite sur la tête du jeune homme.

Si le rêve du jeune néophyte lui a représenté un animal, oiseau ou reptile, la «bénédiction» solennelle du fusil ou de l'arc doit précéder cette cérémonie. Cette «bénédiction» est plutôt une «consécration» au soleil qui l'aidera à découvrir sa proie. Le jeune homme part alors en chasse ou à la recherche de l'objet: il ne doit pas revenir au campement de la forêt sans rapporter l'objet exact qu'il a rêvé. Défense à lui d'emporter aucune provision, de quelque nature qu'elle soit, de pénétrer dans un village, de boire autrement que dans sa main, d'absorber une liqueur fermentée, de manger le fruit de l'asia[2], de parler à qui que ce soit dans le chemin.

Lorsqu'il a rapporté au féticheur l'objet rêvé, celui-ci l'examine attentivement, et s'il est conforme de tout point au rêve, cet animal ou cet objet sera désormais le totem du jeune homme. Toutefois, par un sacrifice spécial, il devra tout d'abord être «consacré». Le jeune initié, devenu guerrier, conservera soigneusement par devers lui les restes calcinés (s'il est possible) de ce premier sacrifice. Ce sera pour lui un puissant préservatif qui interviendra dans une foule de circonstances rituelles. Très à tort, on dit parfois que c'est son «fétiche» personnel. Ce n'est nullement son fétiche: nous aurons occasion de revenir sur ce mot, c'est son totem, son mvame particulier, qui répond exactement au mvamayôô général de la tribu.

[1] Preuve, soit dit en passant, de l'union intime entre le totémisme et le culte des ancêtres.

[2] Asia = Pachylobus edulis, des Térébinthacées. Le fruit, de la grosseur d'une prune est de couleur violette et de saveur très-amère, qui disparaît à la cuisson. Son goût devient alors fort agréable. L'huile est très-connue des Mpongwés, Fiotis etc. sous le nom de safo.

II° L'initiation du féticheur.

Le féticheur, lors de son initiation, subit des épreuves d'un autre genre que le jeune homme. Ces épreuves se distinguent par leur degré plus marqué de cruauté et surtout par l'offrande d'une victime. Cette victime sera tout d'abord consacrée par des rites spéciaux. Puis, seulement après les épreuves, et lorsque le féticheur, néophyte a été jugé capable d'entrer dans le corps sacerdotal, a lieu le choix du totem. Mais ce choix ne revient pas au récipiendaire. C'est le féticheur «recevant» qui le donne au nouvel adepte. Celui-ci est tout d'abord soumis à un jeûne sévère, de sept jours au moins. Pendant ce temps, il lui est absolument interdit, sous aucun prétexte, de sortir de sa case. Cette case est à l'écart, dans un coin de forêt réservé aux féticheurs, et nommé dli bingue. Nul ne doit en approcher. Tout rapport avec une femme, même un simple regard, déterminerait l'exclusion perpétuelle. De plus, la femme serait elle-même mise à mort, sans que le père ou l'époux ait droit à aucune compensation, pécuniaire ou autre.

Pendant la réclusion du néophyte féticheur, son «recevant» a choisi le totem. Presque toujours, ce qui évite bien des complications, il prend le totem de classe, auquel est déjà consacré la confrérie.

De quelle nature sont ces totems? Jamais ils n'appartiendront au règne minéral; jamais, non plus, ce ne sera un phénomène céleste, un esprit quelconque, matérialisé ou non, ainsi qu'il arrive dans les totems de clan ou de tribu.

Le totem de classe est en général un oiseau, un animal rapide à la course, rarement un animal redoutable, et encore ce dernier sera-t-il pris par rapport à ses propres qualités et non en vertu de son pouvoir nocif. La société secrète, en effet, recherchera plutôt, comme totems protecteurs, ceux qui lui assureront en cas de danger, une bonne, prompte et sûre retraite: d'où choix symbolique d'oiseaux rapides, l'hirondelle de fleuve, le koulyèbe qui file comme une flèche, l'aigle ou le vautour que leur vol puissant met à l'abri de leurs ennemis, la tourterelle ou le ramier qui savent si bien dissimuler leur nid, de sorte qu'il échappe à tous les regards. Ce sera encore l'antilope aux jambes agiles et à l'ouïe fine, celle qui surtout sera la plus difficile à saisir. Enfin, parfois on verra figurer le crocodile comme totem, non parce qu'il est méchant et mange les hommes, mais parce qu'à la moindre alerte, sans cesse aux aguets, il plonge et disparaît au fond du fleuve, ou, encore que sa carapace d'écailles le rend invulnérable aux flèches et aux javelots.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Telles sont les qualités que requiert pour elle la société secrète.

Le «consécrateur» a donc choisi le totem, généralement celui de la classe. Il doit alors s'en procurer un lui-même, mais le prendre «vivant». Il l'amène dans la case du «consacré», et pendant une nuit entière, celui-ci doit le conserver sur sa poitrine, au moins autant qu'il est possible. Au matin, dans une cérémonie solennelle, le totem est amené au milieu de la clairière, aspergé d'eau lustrale; les fétiheurs présents tournent en dansant autour de lui, puis chantent l'hymne au totem. Le récipiendaire le répète avec eux. Cet hymne exalte la force du totem, sa vaillance, sa rapidité à la course, et surtout le renverse de la protection qu'il apporte à la société. Puis, après cet hymne, le futur fétiheur va prendre la victime qu'il doit offrir. Il la conduit devant le totem. C'est ordinairement un esclave étranger, car pour éviter toute faute rituelle possible, il ne doit pas faire partie de la nation fàn[1]. Toutefois, il est permis, et le cas est fréquent, de prendre une femme fàn. L'esclave, ou la femme, est solidement garotté. En général, il n'oppose d'ailleurs aucune résistance, d'autant plus que la veille au soir, on a eu soin de lui faire boire l'alèmand, décoction d'herbes et de champignons ligneux qui ont la propriété d'abolir la mémoire. Le néophyte le fait marcher ou le pousse, devant lui, et par trois fois tourne autour du totem. Puis il le renverse à terre, l'attache devant le totem, et, avec le mfor, lui tranche d'un coup sur les carotides: le sang est recueilli dans un vase de terre qui sera religieusement brisé après la cérémonie et enfoui dans le sol. Dès que le sang a fini de couler, les fétiheurs s'avancent. Le chef le premier, les autres ensuite, le néophyte le dernier, tous trempent la main dans le vase et aspergent le totem en dansant tout autour.

[1] On choisit un esclave étranger ou une femme parce que l'un ou l'autre n'ont pas de totem, et dès lors aucun offenser ritualité n'est à craindre.

Immédiatement après, le chef fétiseur s'en approche à son tour, lui barbouille le cou du sang de la victime, puis, d'un coup sec, lui tranche également les carotides: le sang qui jaillit est soigneusement recueilli, car pour éviter toute profanation, aucune goutte ne doit tomber à terre. Le sang de la victime est ensuite mêlé à celui du totem: chacun plonge la main dans le vase et l'agite; quand le mélange est bien opéré, on place le vase sur le feu préparé à cet effet, et dès que le sang commence à se coaguler, chaque assistant s'approche et en boit une partie. Le néophyte passe le dernier et doit absorber tout ce qui reste, quelque soit la quantité.

La victime et le totem sont alors transportés sur un bûcher spécial. Souvent, on commence par ouvrir le corps de la victime; on lui enlève le cœur, et à la place, on introduit le totem. Dès que le feu a suffisamment rôti les deux corps, on les prend, et la victime est mise à part pour être consommée. Le totem est replacé sur le feu et entièrement détruit. On met seulement à part les cendres des os calcinés et broyés. De même, on garde les os de la victime, et on les réduit en cendres pour les mêler à celles du totem. Ces cendres sont ensuite partagées entre tous les assistants: la plus grosse part est donnée au nouveau fétiseur: elle constituera son fétiche «initiatique», et il s'en servira dans toutes les occasions où il aura recours à son totem. En particulier, lorsqu'il assistera à la «consécration» d'un nouveau fétiseur, après l'immolation du totem dont nous venons de parler, il déposera une pincée de ces cendres sur le corps du totem; tous ses confrères, l'imiteront, afin d'unir, dans une alliance mystique, tous les totems au sacrifice commun.

La cérémonie est achevée. Avant de rentrer au village, le nouveau fétiseur doit en faire disparaître tout vestige, veiller avec soin à ce qu'aucune goutte de sang, aucune parcelle de cendres ne soit profanée. Il dispersa le bûcher, enlève le vase du sang à l'écart, et revient alors seulement chez lui, honoré d'une dignité nouvelle.

La cérémonie a été absolument secrète en ce sens que nul profane ne doit y assister, mais elle reste cérémonie légale, et tout le monde, au village, ne fût-ce que pour s'en abstenir, sait où et quand elle a lieu. Toutefois, il est interdit à quiconque d'en parler. Celui ou celle qui le ferait devrait payer une amende, généralement une poule ou une chose d'une valeur équivalente.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

L'initiation au totem rentre donc, pour le fétiheur, dans les conditions ordinaires.

Toute autre est celle du sorcier.

III° L'initiation du sorcier, et le pagnai.

Dans un livre[1] publié il y a déjà quelques années, l'auteur, Mgr. Buléon, mort récemment Evêque du Sénégal, retrace ainsi de vive l'initiation du sorcier[2]. A cette époque, le futur évêque construisait une nouvelle mission dans une des parties les plus fétichistes de la Gabonie, et la plus soumise à l'empire des sorciers, le Fernan-Vaz. Ce qu'il y a vu, c'est ce que nous avons vu nous-même plusieurs fois, et son témoignage vient singulièrement corroborer le nôtre.

«Se faire initier sorcier, c'est se faire initier, par des cérémonies secrètes, à certains rites au moyen desquels on doit obtenir quelque faveur insigne d'un esprit dont on reconnaît la puissance. Les grâces qu'on demande sont aussi signalées que les conditions qu'on impose sont parfois monstrueuses: on devient fétiheur[2] pour se débarrasser de ses ennemis, vivre longtemps, acquérir de la puissance et des richesses... On comprend que la tentation soit puissante et que plus d'un s'y laisse entraîner.

«Guidé par la vengeance, l'avarice ou l'ambition, un Noir quitte un jour son village, où il ne compte revenir qu'armé du pouvoir mystérieux et redoutable, qui lui permettra de donner satisfaction à ses désirs. Le lieu de son voyage peut être éloigné: il n'a souvent que trop raison d'aller chercher au loin, et très ordinairement en dehors de sa tribu, celui qui doit lui conférer les merveilleux privilèges. Son absence se prolonge quelquefois plusieurs

[1] Sous le Ciel d'Afrique, Récits d'un Missionnaire, par le R. P. Buléon, de la Congr. du St Esprit, p. 99 et s.

[2] Par une confusion déjà plusieurs fois remarquée, l'auteur emploie indifféremment sorcier et fétiheur. Observons toutefois à ce désavantage que dans ce contrée, beaucoup de fétiheurs sont également sorciers.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

mois: car la longueur de l'initiation dépend de la nature du fétiche et de l'importance de la faveur à obtenir.

«Les cérémonies se font toujours pendant la nuit, dans une case qui n'a été construite que pour abriter les scènes de fétichisme. Tout y prend, les personnages et les actes, un aspect grotesque, quand l'horrible ne s'y ajoute pas, avec je ne sais quoi en plus de cabalistique et d'infernal.

«L'initiateur est debout: revêtu d'une peau de singe et de feuillage, tatoué de rouge et de blanc, la tête surmontée d'une immense coiffure, il exécute des danses en chantant. La musique est très belle et on y sent respirer un souffle puissant, quoique mélancolique: mais comme les paroles ne sont pas très variées et qu'elles reviennent toujours les mêmes à brefs intervalles, on comprend que le chant puisse produire une impression de monotonie, surtout (ce qui peut arriver) quand il dure la nuit entière. Quelquefois, d'ailleurs, on varie les airs. — Les autres initiés présents chantent toujours le refrain.

«Le patient est assis par terre, un simple pagne autour des reins et plus tatoué encore que les autres. Souffrant de privations cruelles dont la continuité augmente le danger, soumis à des exigences graduées avec un art savant, prenant part à des cérémonies qui frappent son imagination, tout en le fatiguant par leur longueur, il s'affaiblit graduellement, il se sent envahir par le côté sombre et mystérieux de l'initiation, il devient une sorte d'halluciné.

«Au fond de la case, il y a une statue grossièrement sculptée. Sous la statue, on a déposé un paquet contenant des ossements d'un homme mort depuis longtemps, et devant elle on a accroché un miroir dont la face réfléchissante est tournée vers les spectateurs. Toutes les fois que l'on procède aux cérémonies de l'initiation, on amène le postulant fétichiseur devant le miroir et on lui demande: «Que vois-tu?» Pendant longtemps il est obligé de répondre: «Je ne vois rien.» Tant que sa réponse est négative, l'initiation n'a pas réussi. Mais un beau jour le signe attendu apparaît: devant lui, dans le miroir de l'instrument, il aperçoit l'image d'un homme. Aussitôt on l'amène à l'écart, on lui fait décrire l'homme dont il vient de contempler la figure. Jamais il ne l'avait vu, il n'avait pas pu le connaître, et pourtant il en fait le portrait avec une netteté parfaite et il peut donner toutes les particularités de sa physionomie. Il n'y a pas là de supercherie possible. Au portrait qu'on lui trace, et il en peut juger la ressemblance, l'initiateur reconnaît l'homme dont les ossements sont recouverts par la statue. Cette épreuve lui permet de conclure que l'œuvre de l'initiation est en bonne voie.

«Quelquefois l'initiateur demande une coopération plus personnelle et plus active de la part de celui qui veut se faire initier. S'il s'agit de quelque grand fétiche, il exigera qu'il lui apporte le crâne et quelques ossements d'un de ses parents au premier degré. Libre à lui de choisir les moyens d'action, l'heure et le moment de son crime. On comprend du reste qu'il prenne toutes ses précautions pour écarter de lui tout soupçon; seulement on entend parfois dire qu'un oncle ou un autre parent de l'absent a mystérieusement disparu au même qu'il a été nommé.

«Ce n'est que lorsqu'il apporte les preuves matérielles de son crime qu'on accomplit les dernières cérémonies. Les ossements sont jetés dans une marmite avec des herbes et d'autres objets fort malpropres. Quand cet horrible mélange a reçu une cuisson suffisante, on en fait boire un verre au malheureux; tous les assistants chantent en même temps. On se partage ensuite ce qui est resté dans la marmite; chacun en a son lot. On enferme les petits os dans de vieux lambeaux d'étoffe et on remet ce paquet à l'initié; c'est le talisman qu'il portera sur lui, qui le préservera des dangers qu'il redoute et lui procurera les faveurs qu'il désire.

«Il n'a plus, semble-t-il, qu'à payer l'initiateur et à emporter son trésor si cher et si criminellement acheté. Il reste encore pourtant une dernière cérémonie à remplir. L'initiateur et l'initié y sont tous deux acteurs et témoins d'une scène étrange que nous ne voudrions pas décrire si elle n'était aussi véridique qu'elle paraît incroyable. La vie du nouvel initié sera unie, dans un rite sanglant, à la vie d'un animal qui sera désormais sa bête familière. Il ne s'agit pas d'un animal domestique ou apprivoisé, mais d'un de ces fauves dangereux qui peuplent l'épaisseur de la forêt ou les eaux des fleuves. L'initiateur a pris son serment; il donne un signal; d'abord aucun bruit n'y répond, mais bientôt à la vive clarté de la lune, on voit s'avancer un nouveau personnage vers l'endroit de la forêt où il est attendu: tantôt c'est une masse énorme avec une tête monstrueuse; tantôt une forme fêlée qui rampe plutôt qu'elle ne marche; parfois aussi un corps long qui se déroule et ondule: l'animal, quel qu'il soit, hippopotame, panthère ou serpent, oublie la timidité ou la ferocité qu'il ressent en présence de l'homme, et se prête docilement à l'opération à laquelle on veut qu'il prenne part. Alors a lieu l'échange du sang. Comment se fait-il? nous n'avons pas à le chercher. Mais ce qui est hors de doute, c'est qu'on fait couler le sang de l'animal et le sang de l'initié, et qu'on inocule à chacun d'eux le sang de l'autre. L'oreille de la bête est fendue (ou serpent on fait une blessure équivalente), pour être le signe du lien qu'elle contracte avec l'homme; à celui-ci on ouvre le bras, et il est à son tour marqué du signe de la bête[1]. Une véritable union existera désormais entre eux. L'animal sera à la disposition de celui qu'on lui a donné pour maître. Nous pourrions nommer (serait-ce une indiscrétion?) tel Noir qui reçoit chez lui, la nuit, un vautour et une panthère à l'oreille fendue, et un autre qui admet le soir dans sa case et jusque dans son ekuka, (lit.) un serpent boa qui reconnaît son autorité. Le jour venu, et leurs œuvres achevées, les animaux rentrent dans le lac ou dans la brousse, aussi terribles, plus terribles souvent pour tous ceux dont ils n'ont pas reçu le sang.

«Cette union est tellement étroite, entre la bête et l'homme, que la vie de l'un dépend de la vie de l'autre.

«Que d'exemples on pourrait citer! Avez-vous tué une panthère qui porte le signe, vous ne tarderez pas à apprendre la mort de quelque fétichseur. Le fétichseur a-t-il succombé le premier, ne soyez point surpris de trouver près de son village, le cadavre de son familier.

«Le fétichseur rentre enfin dans son village. Mais combien sa situation est devenue différente! Combien de privilèges il apporte

[1] Ici nous n'avons pas à tout dire: sur bien des points, le fétichisme rappelle la sorcellerie du moyen âge et de l'époque qui a suivi; les marques qu'il imprime sont vraisemblement celles que portait Urbain Grandier, le grand sorcier de Loudun, du moins nous dirons de certaines pièces du procès.

avec lui, et avec quelle facilité il peut donner satisfaction à tous ses désirs. Il se croit invulnérable, et les faits les plus invraisemblables seraient de nature à faire penser qu'il ne se trompe pas; il acquiert bien vite de l'influence et des richesses, et il voit disparaître ceux dont il désirait la mort ou convoitait les biens.»[1]

Depuis mon aventure avec le vieux chef et son serpent, bien souvent j'ai été témoin de faits pareils. Dans les cases des Noirs, à la veillée, on m'a redit plus d'une fois ces scènes sauvages d'initiation; on m'a montré du doigt, tout en se cachant, tel ou tel qui était soupçonné de porter les marques des sorciers. Et, peu à peu, j'ai senti mon scepticisme diminuer et disparaître, surtout en voyant d'un hémisphère à l'autre, des faits pareils, des observations identiques, preuves d'une religion, multiple sans doute en ses formes, en ses aspects, mais unique au fond en son essence.

* * *

Au contraire des totems, hommes et femmes peuvent avoir leur nagual, puisque les uns comme les autres peuvent être sorciers. Cependant ces naguals ne sont pas les mêmes pour les deux sexes.

Chez les Fân, les naguals des hommes sont, à de très rares exceptions près:

1° la panthère, improprement appelée tigre, nze;

2° le serpent noir, ekom et parfois le serpent python, mvom;

3° le crocodile, nkôm; rarement le ngôô ou caïman, jamais le sauriens de terre;

4° l'hippopotame, ngube ou ngube;

5° le sanglier, ngô;

6° le vautour nkôô, mais très-rarement.

La panthère est le nagual de beaucoup le plus fréquent; on pourrait dire 90 fois sur 100. Vient ensuite le serpent noir, puis les autres animaux dans l'ordre indiqué.

Les naguals féminins sont:

1° le serpent noir, Angôlakagôlo, différent du mvom;

2° le vautour, nkôô;

[1] Sous le Ciel d'Afrique, par le R. P. Bulcioni, pp. 88 et ss.

3° le saurien de terre, rarement le crocodile;
4° une sorte de chouette ou d'oiseau nocturne, akûñ;
5° le serpent vert des bananiers, fôl;
6° une sorte de vipère cornue, (eéraste à cornes) fl.

IV° Résumé des différences entre le nagual et le totem.

Pour résumer rapidement les faits qui se rapportent au nagual et le différencient du totem, nous pouvons donc maintenant établir les points suivants, en comparant de préférence le sorcier au féticheur.

Chaque féticheur a un totem, presque toujours animal. Mais ce totem est une collectivité, et jamais une unité. De là, toute unité appartenant à son totem-clan est bien son totem, mais la mort d'une unité n'entraîne en aucune façon la mort ou la perte du totem, pas plus que la mort du féticheur.

Le féticheur n'a aucun pouvoir sur son totem: celui-ci ne lui obéit en aucune façon.

L'alliance du féticheur avec son totem est une alliance toute mystique; c'est une simple parenté spirituelle.

En général, ce totem est un animal, mais de préférence, un animal léger à la course, habile à saisir sa proie, un animal en un mot doué de certaines qualités que le féticheur tient à s'assimiler.

Les lois du totem des féticheurs sont les lois générales du totem.

Au contraire, le sorcier a pour totem un animal familier nommé éléñéla (nagual). Cet animal est toujours une unité, jamais une collectivité.

La mort du nagual entraîne la perte définitive de cette alliance. Dans bien des cas, elle entraîne en même temps la mort du propriétaire.

Le sorcier a tout pouvoir sur son nagual; celui-ci lui obéit, répond à son appel, exécute les ordres donnés. Au dire de quelques-uns, le nagual obéirait même à une simple transmission de pensée, à un appel secret de son maître. Pour nous, nous ne croyons guère à ce pouvoir, tout au moins nous n'en avons jamais été témoin. Un jour même, un sorcier qui exerçait tout pouvoir dans le petit village dont il était chef, furieux du baptême de sa femme, nous menaça ouvertement de son éléléfa, une panthère, et nous déclara qu'il allait l'appeler pour nous faire dévorer. Il se retira, et bientôt le tamtam résonnait de coups particuliers. La panthère vint en effet la nuit au village, mais probablement satisfaite du rapt d'un chien et d'un mouton, ne nous fit aucun mal. Ce fut peut-être une simple coïncidence, mais tel n'était l'avis ni des gens, ni du sorcier, furieux contre son éléléfa et déclarant hautement que c'était la première fois que pareille chose lui arrivait!

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Le nagual, au lieu d'être un animal rapide à la course ou habile à se cacher est toujours un être méchant, et le sorcier s'en sert pour nuire à ses ennemis et les faire périr. Ainsi la panthère, le serpent noir, le crocodile. L'hippopotame fait chavirer les pirogues dans l'eau et écrase sous ses pieds les malheureux voyageurs. Comme certains sorciers ont pour nagual l'hippopotame, il paraît difficile d'admettre qu'ils n'ont pas au moins un certain pouvoir sur lui. Vient enfin le sanglier. Celui-ci ravage les récoltes des ennemis du sorcier. Dans son livre des Primitifs [1], Mgr. Le Roy cite un fait de ce genre, en l'attribuant, non sans un certain scepticisme, d'ailleurs très-fondé, à une transformation d'homme en animal. Si la chose est bien réelle, nous l'attribuerions plus volontiers à un nagual.

Les naguals féminins sont plutôt des serpents ou êtres venimeux. Jamais on n'y trouve la panthère; nous ne savons pourquoi. Nous ignorons également la raison du choix d'une sorte d'oiseau nocturne. Nous l'avons constaté chez la mère d'un de nos catéchistes [2]. Elle se refusa toujours obstinément à nous en donner aucune explication; même, d'après ses dires, si nous en avions parlé à ses voisines, elle se serait tuée immédiatement!

Si l'alliance du féticheur avec son totem est une alliance purement mystique, contractée à la suite d'un sacrifice, l'alliance du sorcier avec son nagual est réelle et effective: il y a échange de sang. Lorsqu'il s'agit d'un serpent, on lui prend du sang un peu au dessous de l'oreille, on fait de même pour l'homme, et on mêle ensuite les deux liquides, de même que pour les autres animaux.

[1] p. 344 La Magie.
[2] Fidèle Bikalé, fils du chef des Fié Mékuk, à Bénito.

Le sorcier porte, de plus, certaines marques spéciales au bras et aux parties génitales.

Si, au premier abord, et par suite de rapports erronés, on a pu confondre nagual, idhiosi, nyarong, ôlôéla, en un mot, animal vrai, avec le totem individuel, il est facile de voir maintenant les différences profondes qui séparent ces deux ordres de faits.

L'ôlôéla peut être un animal faisant partie du clan-totem.

L'ôlôéla peut parfaitement faire en même temps partie du clan animal auquel appartient soit le totem individuel, soit le totem classique ou tribal, ce qui peut amener de nombreuses confusions. Les sorciers, gens particulièrement désireux de se cacher, et en même temps d'affirmer leur puissance, ont souvent cette habileté. Par là, ils peuvent en effet dissimuler la qualité réelle de leur nagual: c'est mon totem, disent-ils, si quelqu'un les surprend avec leur ôlôéla. Savoir ainsi faire venir leur soi-disant totem au gré de leurs désirs leur donnera souvent une autorité particulière, et ils pourront s'en servir utilement en certaines circonstances. On conçoit en effet le prestige obtenu par un féticheur, qui, au cours d'une cérémonie rituelle, fait ainsi appel à son totem, en réalité son nagual. Mais, d'habitude, il s'en garde bien: par là même, en effet, il dévoile sa qualité de sorcier: à moins d'être tout puissant, et à l'abri de toutes représailles, il n'y tient nullement! Qui peut répondre de l'avenir!

V° L'ôlôéla était primitivement le totem du fondateur de la race ou du clan.

D'après certains chefs, en particulier chez les Békwé, le totem du fondateur de la race ou du clan était primitivement son ôlôéla. Le fait est parfaitement admissible. Si par un moyen ou par un autre, le fondateur d'une tribu ou d'un clan a su réussir jadis à plier ainsi un animal à ses volontés, à s'en faire obéir, ou tout au moins à le persuader à ses hommes, ce qui est presque la même chose, très facilement ceux-ci, après la mort du fondateur, auront choisi son ôlôéla pour totem. Mais ce choix, dicté par les circonstances ou la volonté du chef mourant, n'implique en aucune façon qu'il soit demeuré ôlôéla. Au contraire, cette qualité disparéussit par le fait même qu'il devenait totem et cessait d'être une unité pour devenir collectivité en ses descendants.

En effet, dans aucun cas, les descendants du nagual ne sont eux-mêmes nagualo pour l'homme par le fait de leur naissance. Un sorcier, dont l'ébéélé était le serpent noir, nous avouait une fois qu'à certaines époques il laissait toute facilité à son «ami» de s'occuper, mais que s'il pouvait, sans être vu, détruire la compagne et les petits de son «ami», il le faisait sans aucune hésitation: ils seraient été aussi dangereux pour lui que pour tout autre. Toutefois, dans ce cas, il avait grand soin de dissimuler toute trace ou toute odeur: «Mon «ami», me disait-il, me tuerait, s'il me soupçonnait!»

Le métier de sorcier a bien ses petits désagréments, même avec les nagualo!

VI° Différence entre le nagual et le sorcier transformé en animal.

Dans un certain nombre de cas, il a pu arriver que le nagual ait été confondu avec le sorcier lui-même. En effet, au dire des Noirs, il arrive fréquemment que les sorciers se transforment en animaux. «La puissance mystérieuse des sorciers leur vient d'un pacte qu'ils ont fait avec les esprits dans les formes rituelles et secrètes, connues des seuls initiés.

«Souvent, pour accomplir leurs mauvais dessins et exercer leurs vengeances, ils se transforment en animaux et deviennent un objet de véritable terreur pour le pays. C'est ainsi qu'au Gabon, «l'homme-tigre» est assez souvent signalé. Le soir, après le coucher du soleil, on l'aperçoit rôder autour des villages, dans les chemins isolés, ou sur le bord des champs. Qu'un enfant ou une femme vienne à passer, il se jette dessus et l'égorge. On a vu ainsi dix, vingt et trente personnes disparaître à Bata dans l'espace de quelques mois. Ailleurs, c'est l'homme-chacal, l'homme-caïman etc.

«Ces meurtres sont réels, et absolument constatés.

«D'où proviennent-ils? Parfois d'une bête véritable, qui a pris le goût de la chair humaine et devient bientôt un redoutable fléau. Parfois aussi d'un homme qui se revêt de la peau d'un léopard ou d'un autre animal: les traces de ses pattes (et aussi de ses griffes sur le corps de la victime) restent sur le sol et donnent l'illusion du passage de la bête. Cet homme, alors, obéissant à une sorte de diabolique impulsion, saisit les gens sans défense, et tue . . .

«Parfois, enfin, ces séries de meurtres sont restées sans explication.

«D'autres sorciers, sous une forme ou sous une autre, se contentent de causer des dommages matériels. C'est ainsi que pendant mon séjour au Gabon, je fus appelé un jour au Cap Estérias par toute une population dont les plantations de manioc étaient ravagées par une bande mystérieuse de sangliers, commandés par une sorte de capitaine, sanglier lui-même. Ce fantastique animal était insensible aux balles, évitait tous les pièges, et n'était autre, d'après les découvertes qu'on avait faites, qu'une vieille sorcière qu'on me désigna, et qu'on voulait décharger. Ce ne fut pas sans peine que je lui sauvai la vie . . .[1]»

On retrouve dans tout le Continent africain, tout au moins dans les tribus bantoues, cette croyance aux transformations d'hommes en animaux. Ainsi, au Moyungu, l'homme qui se change en lion porte le nom de Kimungoko. Que faut-il en penser? Dans l'état actuel de nos connaissances, et jusqu'à plus ample informé, il est plus sage de dire avec l'éminent auteur cité plus haut: «Parfois ces séries de meurtres sont restées sans explication.»

Presque toujours, croyons-nous, on peut les attribuer à des hommes déguisés en animaux, soit pour satisfaire sans danger leurs instincts de meurtre, soit pour se procurer des victimes destinées aux festins de chair humaine.

Dans certains cas, ces hommes agissent sous l'influence mystérieuse d'agents inconnus. Il y a là, peut-être, une sorte de possession inconsciente. Ils se croient et se disent véritablement transformés en animaux. Ce sont des cas analogues aux loupsgarous du Moyen Age, et l'explication demeure la même.

Souvent enfin, et quand ce n'est pas l'homme lui-même déguisé ce qui est presque toujours le cas, on a affaire, non pas au sorcier transformé en animal, mais à son nagual lui-même, obéissant à ses instructions et à son impulsion, tout au moins les premières fois. Après que l'animal a goûté à la chair humaine, il y revient facilement de lui-même. Il nous souvient que dans un village de l'intérieur, une panthère[1] avait ainsi dévoré en l'espace d'une année trente-sept personnes. Un sorcier fut accusé de l'avoir à ses ordres et, en conséquence, après aveux, exécuté lui-même. Le lendemain, la panthère fut trouvée morte dans la forêt. Simple coïncidence? Peut-être le sorcier l'avait-il envoyée lui-même la première fois, mais pour le reste des meurtres, nous avons bien quelques doutes. En tout cas, cette panthère avait cependant l'oreille fendue, de main d'homme, comme nous pûmes le constater. C'était, sans préjuger des résultats, la marque évidente qu'il était «tué».

[1] Mgr. Le Roy, op. cit., p. 242.

§ 4. Les confréries de sorciers et leurs totems.

Dans leur ensemble, les confréries de sorciers sont calquées sur celles des fétiseurs. De là, pour les uns comme pour les autres, deux catégories distinctes de confréries ou sociétés secrètes, les unes composées d'adeptes dirigés et gouvernés par les fétiseurs et les sorciers, les autres composées uniquement de fétiseurs ou de sorciers.

I. Les sociétés composées d'adeptes dirigés par les sorciers, ont de même que les sociétés similaires dirigées par les fétiseurs chacune leur totem. Ce totem est toujours animal. On retrouve à peu près partout[2] cette coutume, nécessitée d'ailleurs par la conception même du totem.

II. Les sociétés secrètes uniquement composées de sorciers n'ont pas de totem: elles obéissent à un esprit.

«A leurs réunions, dit Nassau en parlant des sorciers[3], ils se mettent en communication avec les méchants esprits, qu'ils voient, qu'ils entendent, qu'ils touchent. Ceux-ci (souvent sous la forme d'animaux) partagent leurs fêtes et leurs festins.»

Sur ce dernier point, nous croyons qu'il s'agit souvent de leurs nagualz. Que faut-il penser de ces réunions et de cette

[1] On connaît à ce sujet les tristes ravages causés dans l'Inde chaque année par les tigres man-eaters.

[2] Cf. Bulletin des P. Blancs, Les Baluba par le R. P. Colle, Avril 1908.

[3] R. Hamill Nassau, Fetichism in West Africa, p. 123.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

communion avec les esprits apparaissant aux sorciers sous une forme visible? Tous les sorciers l'affirment: jusqu'à ce que leurs témoignages soient sévèrement et scientifiquement contrôlés, on est forcé de s'en rapporter à leurs dires et d'y ajouter foi ou non. Mais jamais, on peut en être sûr, ni les sorciers, ni les esprits ne se prêteront à ce contrôle scientifique. D'après nos renseignements personnels, voici ce qui arriverait alors. Parfois, le ou les esprits apparaissent sous une forme vague et indéterminée. C'est, nous disait une fois un sorcier, lorsque nous sommes réunis tous ensemble, que l'esprit apparaît. On sent alors une sorte de vent froid qui passe et qui vous souffle au visage, c'est une lueur qui brille et qui disparaît. On entend sa voix, tout le monde sait qu'il parle, on le comprend, mais on ne sait pas où il est. A sa lumière, nous nous voyons tous, et on est content, content . . .

D'autres fois, l'esprit se transforme, paraît-il, en animal. Un sorcier de Batz, converti, nous affirmait un jour avoir maintes fois assisté à des fêtes de ce genre. A un signal donné, tout l'intérieur de la case où il se tenait avec ses confrères s'illuminait, et l'esprit apparaissait sous la forme d'un bouc. Chacun allait l'adorer à tour de rôle, lui offrir ses présents, et recevoir la «marque» . . .[1]

Nous pourrions nous étendre longuement sur ce sujet, mais il ne rentre qu'indirectement dans le cadre de cette Etude. Il nous suffit de constater que, à l'inverse des sociétés de fétiseurs, les sociétés de sorciers n'admettent pas de totem protecteur: elles obéissent à un esprit, souvent transformé en animal.

Cet esprit porte alors le nom d'engangure. C'est aussi le nom des Akan ou revenants, ou encore des âmes des morts après les épreuves post-funéraires, et leurs dernières transformations.

[1] Il nous est impossible de décrire ici l'adoration et la marque: elles sont abominables.

[p. 496]

CHAPITRE XV.

LE TOTEM DANS LA VIE FÁŃ.

LES RITES GÉNÉRAUX.

Sommaire. La vie fáń est imbrouée par la religion.

§ 1. Le droit du totem aux rites cultuels. L'opinion de Sir H. Johnston. Le totem a droit au culte en tant que mvumgbó, père éponyme de la race. — Ce culte est dérivé de celui de l'evungbó, père et ancêtre réel de la race.

§ 2. Les rites totémiques généraux ou rites du mvumgbó. Partie commune à tous les rites cultuels totémiques.

1° Le sacrifice totémique. — Opinion de MM. Smith, Hubert et Mauss. a) Le sacrifice «au» totem. — Tuer le totem est interdit en principe. Quand est-il permis de faire le sacrifice? Comment se fait le sacrifice. — Quand y a-t-il sacrifice? L'immolation et l'échange de sang, la communion à la victime. b) Le sacrifice «du» totem. — Les divers sacrifices.

2° L'eau lustrale: son qualité. — Comment on la conserve. Son usages totémiques.

3° Le jeûne: comment il se pratique. — Sa durée. — Le pourquoi du jeûne.

4° Les danses totémiques. — Danses religieuses, de circoncision, funéraires, totémiques. Cette danse est un caractère commun de diverses. Le rythme de la danse.

§ 3. Les rites totémiques généraux. Détail de ces rites.

1° La Circoncision. — Le fait de la circoncision. a) Est-ce un rite religieux? La circoncision n'est pas dûe, au moins essentiellement, à une cause hygiénique. Opinion de Renan. Opinions médicales. — b) La circoncision est-elle un rite totémique? Frazer, le R. P. Lagrange, Mr. l'abbé Bacq. — Ce qui peut s'appliquer aux Fáń. — c) Le fait même de la circoncision. Ce qu'en disent les Fáń. α) Le fait et le nom. β) L'âge de la circoncision. γ) L'époque de la cérémonie. δ) Les préparatifs. ε) La cérémonie. — d) Les résultats de la circoncision. — L'opinion de Mgr. Le Roy sur la circoncision. Notre propre sentiment.

3° L'Initiation du jeune homme. — Les épreuves avant d'être admis comme guerrier. La consécration et le chant du feuil, l'épreuve au soleil.

4° La Consécration du Chef. a) La cérémonie. — Le chant de consécration. Le sacrifice et la victime. — b) Le rôle de la tasse chez les Mavandi et chez les Fâ. Le but de ces cérémonies. — c) Comparaison entre les rites de l'initiation et de la consécration avec le rôle religieux du Pharaon. — d) Erreur de l'administration européenne nommant un chef en dehors de la famille souche. — e) Changement de totem de clan. Quelques exemples.

5° La Guerre et les Palabres. — Le sacrifice de guerre et la victime. La cérémonie. Le sacrificateur. La consécration à la victime.

6° Les Grandes chasses. — Le sacrifice. La raison de ce sacrifice.

6° L'Etablissement d'un nouveau village. — Pourquoi on construit un nouveau village. Les rites préparatoires. L'établissement du village.

7° Les Ordalies. — Différentes espèces d'ordalies. Quand a-t-on recours aux ordalies. Epreuves du feu, de l'eau bouillante. Le poison d'épreuve.

8° L'Echange du sang. — Comment se fait l'échange du sang chez les Fâ et dans diverses tribus africaines.

Toute la vie du Fâ, comme la vie de tout Noir, Bantou ou autre, est intimement pénétrée par la religion.

Tantôt elle informe ou détermine les actes principaux de sa vie familiale et sociale, tantôt elle en constitue l'essence même et la raison d'être. C'est alors la vie religieuse proprement dite.

Ces actes cultuels sont exercés par des ministres spéciaux, le père de famille pour les rites de la vie familiale, le chef de clan ou de tribu pour les phénomènes sociaux, le fétiseur ou ministre proprement dit pour la vie religieuse. Souvent, toutefois, le fétiseur s'est substitué, en fait mais non en droit, au père de famille, et surtout au chef de clan et de race. Aux côtés du fétiseur, luttant dans l'ombre contre lui, s'est élevé le sorcier, l'homme du culte extra ou contra-légal.

L'acte religieux s'adresse aux esprits, aux mânes, aux ancêtres, aux forces inconnues de la nature etc. Il s'adresse également au totem, tel que nous l'avons défini. Ce totem est rattaché à la religion par des liens étroits qui l'unissent, pour les Fâ tout au moins, de façon indissoluble au culte des ancêtres, et déterminent son droit aux rites cultuels.

7: Trilles F319 Fang

§ 1. Le droit du totem aux rites cultuels.

Le totem réel a ses droits aux rites cultuels parfaitement déterminés, en tant que père de la tribu, souche de la race.

En employant ces deux mots «père» et «souche», nous ne voulons nullement dire, ainsi que nous l'avons fait remarquer déjà, que l'animal éponyme est le véritable père de la race, la souche par génération effective. Nous employons ces mots comme le disent les indigènes, pour nous servir de leurs propres expressions. Elles ont été fréquemment mal comprises[1].

On a souvent confondu parenté réelle et parenté de sentiment, de parole, d'usage. Toutefois, certains auteurs, étudiant sur place, ont hésité:

«I have never been able to ascertain from Banyoro or Baganda that their forefathers at any time believed the clan to be descended from the object chosen as a totem. The matter remains very obscure. It may be remotely connected with ancestor-worship, which is certainly the foundation of such religious beliefs as are held by the Banyoro, as by most other Negro races»[2].

Comme on le voit, d'après ces paroles de Sir H. Johnston, l'assimilation entre mvumaydé et ntaydé résultait beaucoup plus de l'opinion préconçue de l'écrivain ou des paroles mal comprises de l'indigène, que des paroles elles-mêmes et du fond de la question.

Par suite de cette reconnaissance de parenté, qu'elle soit réelle au vrai sens du mot, ou résulte simplement de l'échange du sang, quels sont les droits du totem?

En tant que père de la tribu, mvumaydé, et de souche de la race, le totem a droit au culte et, par conséquent, à des rites spéciaux, déterminant les circonstances, les lieux, et la manière de lui rendre ce culte.

Mais le mvumaydé peut et doit être considéré sous un double aspect: il est protecteur du clan et de la tribu, c'est alors, à proprement parler, le mvumaydé; en cette qualité, il a droit à un culte public, national ou tribal. Mais il est également protecteur de la famille et de l'individu, et c'est sous l'éfotore, et en cette qualité, il a droit à un culte familial et particulier. Pour saisir et comprendre la signification de nombreux faits totémiques, cette distinction est absolument nécessaire.

[1] Cf. S. Reinach, Orpheus en mat totem, p. 39 et pass.

[2] Sir H. Johnston, The Uganda protectorate, préface.

Le mvamayôô aura donc droit au culte rituel, et non à un culte quelconque, ce qui suppose l'intervention du *fétiche*ur représentant du chef, ou du chef de famille ou de tribu lui-même; et non seulement il aura droit au culte collectif public dans les circonstances déterminées par la loi, tels la fondation d'un nouveau village, mais encore, en qualité d'éfotore, il aura droit à un culte privé particulier, ce qui nécessite l'intervention de l'individu et du chef de famille, et non plus du fétiche*ur* ou chef de tribu.

Mais, remarquons-le bien, ce culte du totem, qu'il soit privé et particulier, ou qu'il soit tribal et général, ne rentre pas, à certaines égards, dans le cadre général de la vie religieuse, en tant que religion, ou, si l'on veut, il ne constitue pas la religion de la nation ou de la tribu. De la religion, en effet, le fétiche*ur* est, de droit, le représentant, le gardien, et le sacrificateur attitré, non par choix mais de par sa fonction même.

Dans le culte totémique, au contraire, qui n'est pas la religion, mais un ensemble de faits religieux, ce rôle revient au chef de famille ou de tribu, et si, par exception, le fétiche*ur* l'exerce, c'est par simple délégation.

Le culte du mvamayôô sera en effet un culte dérivé, fondé en principe sur le culte de l'esayôô, sans lequel il n'aurait aucune raison d'être. L'esayôô, en effet, est le vrai père de la tribu, et sans l'esayôô, il ne saurait y avoir mvamayôô: l'un ne peut évidemment aller sans l'autre. Mais le culte de l'esayôô, ou culte ancestral, est indépendant du culte religieux proprement dit ou reconnaissance de la divinité et culte des esprits. Il s'y rattache simplement en ce sens qu'il y puise sa source, et, au sentiment des Fâh, en tire son origine ultime et sa raison primordiale. Le culte de l'esayôô est donc avant tout un culte familial dans le principe, si l'on considère l'ancêtre de chaque tribu prise en particulier. Il est national si l'on considère le ou les ancêtres primitifs de la tribu entière; il se rattache enfin définitivement au culte vraiment religieux et divin, en ce sens que dans beaucoup de tribus bantoues, et très probablement chez les Fâ, le ou les ancêtres primitifs de la tribu entière sont aujourd'hui divinisés et élevés au rang de dieux nationaux, ou tout au moins d'esprits protecteurs de la tribu.

7: Trilles FH9 Fang

Le totémisme n'a donc au fond dans les conceptions religieuses des Fâ qu'une importance relative, et ne marche, si l'on peut s'exprimer ainsi, qu'en troisième ligne, après le culte des esprits d'abord, puis le culte des ancêtres, dont il n'est qu'une dérivation.

